"THE UNION—IT MUST BE PRESERVED."

TUESDAY MORNING, OCT. 28, 1834.

At the request of several officers of the Legion, we announce BERNARD MARIGNY, Esq., as a candidate for the office of Major General of the first division, vice the late General P. Lacoste, deceased.

Doct. James S. McFarlane will be strongly supported at the ensuing election to represent the first ward in the city council by MANY VOTERS.

In future, auction advertisements by order of courts, will be published every Tuesday; and those of the Register of Wills, on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Marshal's, judges and sheriff's advertisements of other parishes, will be published in the intermediate days.

The mail of to-day, will bring us most probably the result of the Philadelphia elections. Should we succeed, as unquestionably we will, in Sutherland's district, it will be all strictly speaking, what we have a right to expect. But if we carry the Northern Liberties, and elect Ash, which is more than probable, it will be so much clear gain on the side of republican principles against an odious monopoly, which has attempted to pollute the purity of the elective franchise.—Some of our friends have hopes to carry even the city itself, the seat of bank power, and although we are disposed to consider this calculation as rather too sanguine, we must confess that we should not be much surprised at such a result. An unexpected revolution in the public sentiment in Connecticut and elsewhere.

The Knickerbocker for October is before us. It is replete with interesting and amusing articles.

We are pleased to see that WILLIS GAYLORD CLARK, an exquisite poet, and a man of taste and judgment, will be connected in the future with the editorial department of this useful periodical. His talents cannot but enhance its value, and render it still more worthy of public patronage.

We commend the following article from the Globe to the candid and impartial reader. No department has been so outrageously abused as the general post office, and in none do we believe have there been greater exertions made to serve the public. In fact, the interested zeal of Mr. Barry to afford the greatest facilities to commercial men, has unaccountably been tortured into a heinous offence, for which he should be disgraced. In no place is there a greater illustration of the injustice and illiberality of his detractors, than in New Orleans. It is a matter of notoriety, that this city, during the term of his predecessor, was furnished with a tri-weekly mail only, and that in place of receiving corresponding dates from New-York with those of other cities, as we do at present, we were entirely dependent upon Charleston, (S. C.) for whatever intelligence might transpire in that great commercial emporium retarded by the delays consequent upon a mode of communication so indirect and uncertain. It has never been shown, that the receipts of the department, justified the expenditure which Mr. Barry laudably was willing to incur in order to gratify this community with a daily mail, nevertheless he completed the arrangements for the purpose, thinking as a matter of course, that congress would sanction the measure, and if, as was probable, there should be any want of funds caused by this and similar other undertakings, that body, actuated by motives of public spirit, would provide for the deficiency. In this reasonable expectation, Mr. Barry found himself disappointed—the senators from Louisiana, the very state whose interests he would have thus benefitted, were found in opposition to him, refusing to make provision for a measure that was of paramount importance to their own constituents.—In this unforeseen and most unexpected dilemma, Mr Barry had but one course to pursue: it was to lop off all the new arrangements, and to restore things to an economical standard, suited to the precise revenues of his office. He did so, and New-Orleans, as a matter of course, fell under the former regulation. For this, and this alone, has he been made amenable to the censure of a whole host of scribblers, and their efforts have so far proved successful to blacken his reputation as an officer, that individuals are daily met with, railing out against him, who cannot give one rational reason for their hostility. It is true, that in the writings of his calumniators, there is much said about his great patronage and sundry undefinable charges made about corruption and favoritism, which never have been substantiated, in a style of mock indignation, calculated to deceive those who never take the trouble themselves to investigate public matters, but who form their opinions upon the jaundiced and prejudiced statements of over-heated partizans, whose talents, whatever quantum they may possess, are devoted to falsehood and misrepresentation. The cry against him is "crucify him," "crucify him," and when the question is put, what harm has he done? it is answered by the same savage yell. If it can be shown that he is at fault in the present regulation by which New-Orleans is deprived of what she ought to have, a daily mail, we say condemn him. But in the absence of any thing like proof, and when the presumption is so favorable, not only to his zeal but to his integrity, we cannot see the propriety of such harsh and undeserved treatment. Let those who have been deluded by the hubbub raised against an injured man, investigate for themselves, and we do not for one moment apprehend but that they will lay the blame at the door of those who are properly chargeable with it.

MAIL RETRENCHMENT.

We have lately seen complaints, in some of the opposition journals, of the retrenchment of mail service, which the Postmaster General has been ordering at different points in the United States. Are those who make these complaints aware, that they are entirely indebted for this favor to the course pursued by the United States Senate towards the Post Office Department? If not, a brief statement will be sufficient to show it.

During the last war, and for some time subsequent, a revenue was raised from the Post Office Department for the general support of Government. But as soon as the Treasury was relieved from the embarrassments of that crisis, it became unnecessary to continue this tax upon correspondence for the purpose of general revenue, and the rates of postage were accordingly reduced by law. The policy, thus marked out for the Department, was to expend the whole amount of its revenue for the transportation of the mail—a policy loudly called for by the wants and demands of the People for mail facilities. And at certain periods in the administration of the Department, as for instance, at the time of putting in operation the laws enacted by congress for the creation of new post routes, and of making corresponding improvements and extensions on the old routes, it was found that the current receipts of the Department were inadequate to the current expenditures, and an anticipation of its future proceeds was resorted to. This was done by Mr. McLean and by him recommended as a proper course of administering the Department to his successor. Mr. Barry has followed this example and advice, in a liberal and enterprising spirit.—He has met the wants and wishes of the People in every quarter of the Union with mail facilities; and in the short space of five years, nearly doubled the amount of mail accommodations in the United States. The consequence of thus anticipating the revenues of the Department has been, that a debt which commenced accruing as far back as in Mr. McLean's administration, (a portion of which had, until latterly, been out of view, on account of the defective manner in which the books had been kept,) has accumulated against the Department. The majority of the Senate's committee very fallaciously estimated it at 800,000 dollars: the minority of the committee, with a better disposition to arrive at the truth, report it to be about 300,000 dollars. It should be borne in mind, that this debt was incurred for the benefit of the People, and that they have had a full equivalent of it in the greatly increased extent of mail advantages.

To aid the Post Master General to discharge this debt, and at the same time to keep up all the existing mail accommodations, the minority of the committee proposed to the Senate, in their report, to authorise a loan from the Treasury of 500,000 dollars, until moneys hereafter paid into it by the Post Office Department, to be repaid in three instalments, the last on the 1st of March, 1837. This proposition of Mr. Grundy found no favor, however, with the majority of the Senate. The leading members of the opposition declared, in debate, their strong repugnance to it, and refused to act upon the suggestion. Let it be observed, that at that time they were sanctioning the loans made by the cities of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria, for the construction of their canal, not by a moneylean, but by an actual payment out of the Treasury of the large sums of interest due to the bankers in Holland. But they refused to take any step for continuing those mail improvements which the people had claimed from the Department, but which the latter had not the means, from its resources, sufficient to defray the expenses; and through the report of their committee, condemnation ... the expenditure of the mail to the Western States, through Pittsburg and Wheeling, and the daily mail to New-Orleans. The inevitable consequence was, that the Postmaster General was forced to withdraw a portion of this mail service, and to enter upon a course of retrenchment ... reducing the expense of mail transportation within the means of the Department...

Those who have enjoyed the mail advantages which are now withdrawn, cannot fail to understand that their misfortune is owing to the circumstances of the Senate...

United States being under the control of the opposition—that its majority is composed of men, who, in defiance of the general sense of the nation, and of the special instructions of their constituents, in some instances, are exerting their utmost powers to embarrass the operations of the Government, and who are not checked in their course by any considerations of inconvenience or injury, that the People may suffer in consequence. They have strove to their utmost to prostrate the Post office Department. Witness their numerous efforts to reduce the postage on newspapers and magazines, for the benefit of monopolizing publishers in the large cities, when they knew that the resources of the department were already inadequate, and the mails were breaking down under their excessive weight; their profuse and importunate recommendation of improvements, and their subsequent condemnation of the department for granting them; the abuse of the franking privilege, and their efforts, through the misrepresentation of the Ewing report, and other falsehoods multiplied without end, to excite disobedience among contractors and distrust throughout the community. They fondly hoped, through the agency of this multifarious and merciless assault, to bring about, on the eve of the elections, a total stoppage of the mail—so that the Bank could operate among the people in another new capacity, that of conveying intelligence, as well as printing and publishing it, at the expense of the People's money in her vaults. But to their great disappointment, the mails continue in operation with a regularity and skill that has never been surpassed; and at the same time the Postmaster General has made extensive progress in a deliberate and cautious retrenchment of that portion of the mail service which can be withdrawn with the least inconvenience to the community. It is gratifying to know that he can do this to an extent that will relieve his department of its indebtedness, and still retain successful operation a vastly greater amount of mail accommodation, than what the public enjoyed when he came into office.

To introduce the views of a man like THOMAS JEFFERSON whose predictions have so often been verified, needs no apology. His opinions, as he is emphatically the founder of the democratic party, should pass current as the sober conviction of the highest order of intellect joined to the greatest experience. They should be invoked upon every proper occasion, when they can cast light upon the posture of affairs in our country, and should be received with the highest respect and consideration. We shall affix no comments upon the following letter addressed by him in 1804, to Mr. Granger, in which he predicts, after describing a scheme attempted to be executed in his own day, events that are now in a train of developement. The present co-alition of parties has nothing in view but "a bastard system of federo-republicanism rising upon the principles of true democracy."

TO GIDEON GRANGER.

MONTICELLO, April 16, 1804.

Dear Sir,

* * * * * * *

In our last conversation you mentioned a federal scheme afloat, of forming a coalition between the federalists and republicans, of what they called the seven eastern States.—The idea was new to me, and after time for reflection, I had no opportunity of conversing with you again. The federalists know, that, eo nomine, they are gone for ever. Their object, therefore is, how to return into power under some other form. Undoubtedly they have but one means, which is to divide the republicans, join the minority, and barter with them for the cloak of their name. I say, join the minority; because the majority of the republicans, not needing them, will not buy them. The minority, having no other means of ruling the majority, will give a price for auxiliaries, and that price must be principle. It is true that the federalists, needing their numbers also, must also give a price, and principle is the coin they must pay in. Thus a bastard system of federo-republicanism will rise on the ruins of the true principles of our revolution. And when this party is formed, who will constitute the majority of it, which majority is then to dictate? Certainly the federalists. Thus their proposition of putting themselves into gear with the republican minority, is exactly like Roger Sherman's proposition to add Connecticut to Rhode Island. The idea of forming seven eastern States, is moreover clearly to form the basis of a seperation of the Union. Is it possible that real republicans can be gulled by such a bait? And for what? What do they wish that they have not? Federal measures? That is impossible. Republican measures? Have they them not? Can any one deny, that in all important questions of principle, republicanism prevails? But do they want that their individual will shall govern the majority? They may purchase the gratification of this unjust wish for a little time, at a great price; but the federalists must not have the passions of other men, if, after getting thus into the seat of power, they suffer themselves to be governed by their minority. This minority may say, that whenever they relapse into their own principles, they will quit them and draw the seat from under them.—They may quit them, indeed, but, in the mean time, all the venal will have become associated with them, and will give them a majority sufficient to keep them in place, and to enable them to eject the heterogeneous friends by whose aid they get again into power. I cannot believe any portion of real republicans will enter into this trap; and if they do, I do not believe they can carry with them the mass of their States, advancing so steadily as we see them, to an union of principle with their brethren. It will be found in this, as in all other similar cases, that crooked schemes will end by overwhelming their authors and coadjutors in disgrace, and that he alone who walks strict and upright, and who, in matter of opinion, will be contented that others should be as free as himself, and acquiesce when his opinion is fairly overruled will attain his object in the end. And that this may be the conduct of us all, I offer my sincere prayers, as well as for you your health and happiness.

TH JEFFERSON.

From the Pennsylvanian.

The Bank press in this city crowed loudly yesterday on strength of a postscript to the New-York Mercantile Advertiser. The following from that paper of yesterday puts another face upon the matter:

"CONNECTICUT.

"Our information in regard to the vote in Hartford county, published yesterday, was altogether erroneous, and it turns out that the county has only given a whig majority of about 70! This again changes the face of things, and renders the result of the election somewhat doubtful."

Chateaubriand and Talleyrand.—A French writer thus institutes and carries out a comparison between the two great Frenchmen of the day.

"Chateaubriand is the heir of Bossuet, the preserver of the religious principle; Talleyrand, the heir of Voltaire, who has never bowed down but to doubt. The one regards the past with a view to the future, the other holds to the present as the sole master of the future; the one an enthusiast, and convinced—the other an ironist, and always ready to be persuaded; the one eloquent in the tribune, and in his books—the other nowhere but in a tete-a-tete in his arm chair by the corner of his fire; the one a man of genius and who proves it—the other, one who has made all the world believe him a man of intellect; the one full of love and humanity,—the other less wicked than he would wish to appear; the one advances by bounds and springs, impetuous as the der or a torrent,—the other limping, and always arriving first; the one shows himself whilst the other hides, speaks where the other is silent—the other arriving in the nick of time, hardly ever seen, hardly ever heard, but every where present, who sees all, knows all; the one intelligent by his heart, the other intelligent by his head; the one a gentleman among the people, the other a gentleman among the gentlemen; the one has partizans, enthusiasts, admirers—the other has only confidants, flatterers, relations and valets; the one always beaten, the other always victorious; the one the victim of ruined causes, the other the hero of causes triumphant; the one will die, no one knows where—the other will die as a prince in his house, with an archbishop by his bedside.

'WHIGGERY.'

It is said that the Secretary of the Hartford Convention will shortly publish a genuine history of the NEW WHIGS, giving a particular and authentic account of the party from its commencement in 1775, down to the present time. It will contain the history of 1775 when they were called TORIES.
