FOR PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

HENRY CLAY

NEW-ORLEANS:

FRIDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 6, 1843.

☞ The Mail failed yesterday beyond Columbus, Georgia.

We perceive from the tone of the disaffected locofocus, that the tyranny and injustice of the Syracuse convention are not the sole causes of complaint. Mr. CALHOUN's friends do not confine their objurgations to the inequality or iniquity of the general ticket system as carried out by New York—though this be one of the principal grounds of a schism which is now inevitable. They find other and graver causes of censure in the doctrines maintained by the New York politicians, which the southern branch of the democracy consider utterly hostile to their principles. The resolution in favor of a discriminating tariff which shall afford adequate protection to the manufacturer, is particularly obnoxious to the free trade utopians of the Calhoun school! We have not seen a single Calhoun press willing to endorse this resolution. On the other hand, all with which we exchange, are loud and emphatic in their denunciations.

Thus in the outset there are irreconcilable differences between Calhounism and Van Burenism. Firstly, the Calhounites will never consent to obey the dictates of a convention organized upon any other basis than the district system and the per capita vote—consequently the admission of the New York delegates into the convention will be the signal of the disruption of the locofoco party, and the secession of the whole southern free trade branch of that party. Secondly, if even the Van Buren men should give way—a supposition highly improbable—and the convention should be organized to suit these irreconcilable allies of locofocoism, and Mr. VAN BUREN should then be nominated, the Calhounites will not support him, while the resolution of the Syracuse convention favorable to a protective tariff remains recorded as the deliberate sentiment of the locofoco party. We deduce this opinion from the language of the Calhoun press. We have quoted the Charleston Mercury on the subject. We will now cite the Mobile Tribune:—

"The intensity of the selfishness of these people is not the least characteristic portion of the display made at Syracuse. The people had an interest in one great question—a question identified with individual rights and personal liberty—a question involving national harmony and peace—a question linked to the progress of civilization of the age—a question flowing out of the benign precepts of christianity. We refer to the question of FREE TRADE. What reception did this great cause meet with among the sudden humanity at Syracuse, who discovered they rightfully represented New York, and that New York was every thing to the Union, and the Union of all valued to New York? This great cause—the cause of the people, the cause of civilization, of christian benevolence—as might have been expected, met with shameful and scandalous abandonment of its advocates. Why? Because it did not their own ends, and hence its stage come to a bad end.'

"We speak the calm and settled opinion of hundreds, nay, of thousands of our people, that the democratic party cannot hold out to the support of the principles and practices manifested and declared at Syracuse. We appeal to them at this time—we protest. If need be, we shall oppose uncompromising hostility."

This citation speaks for itself. The Calhoun men are now marching every hour more independent. They can neither be driven nor cajoled into submission. To our mind the alliance between Calhounism and locofocoism has always been a monstrous and unnatural union, brought about temporarily for purposes of instant interest, but liable to be dissolved whenever the aspirations of the leaders came into collision, or necessity required the exposure of their principles. Both those exposures have now arrived. Mr. CALHOUN's party, it seems to us, are as distinct from locofocoism as they are from whiggery. They are primarily, emphatically, impracticably and unconditionally the champions of free trade. They constitute the only free trade party in this country. Free trade is their ultimatum, their be all and end all. It was this that awakened resistance to the tariff of 1828, that engendered nullification, and that placed South Carolina in an attitude of open revolt to the general government. Entertaining these peculiar opinions, how can Calhounism properly amalgamate with locofocoism? The locofocos of the north and west are tariff men, and those of the south who are in favor of free trade are not, strictly speaking, locofocos—they are Calhoun men. Hence they must, in the nature of things, continue isolated, having little in common with either of the two great political parties of the day. This made, visible truth is beginning to be understood, and therefore we hazard no doubtful prediction, in anticipating a rupture between locofocoism and Calhounism—a rupture based upon a radical diversity of principle in relation to the policy and powers of the general government.

MR. WEBSTER'S SPEECH.

We take advantage of the mail failure yesterday to lay before our readers the greater portion of Mr. WEBSTER's speech delivered at the Agricultural Supper at Rochester, N. Y. Like all that Mr. Webster says, this speech is of itself a terse, condensed and connected argument, to which little can be added, without diluting it to weak ness, and from which less can be abstracted without injuring the symmetry and integrity of the whole. Mr. WEBSTER's pure and vigorous English, almost far free from provincialisms or interpolations as any land, always stands in remarkable contrast to the rant and froth, the inaccuracies and misapplied phraseology of a large number of our popular orators.—There is nothing in his speeches of that constant straining after effect, that fondness for startling metaphor—brilliant yet turned periods, and show all, that invetterate propensity to present the same hackneyed and worn out thoughts in a variety of forms, which distinguish many of those shallow-thinking theoricians who are, forsooth, called eloquent. His oratory, like himself, is plain, strong and massive.

EXTRACTS FROM MR. WEBSTER'S SPEECH.

"But there is another cultivation of the fields, appropriate to tropical climates, which has received the usual denomination of the plantation—the planting interest of society. Now, gentlemen, what has most forcibly struck my attention, suggested by what I have heard and witnessed to-day, is the vastly superior advantages to individuals and to society of the truly agricultural over the plantation interest. I desire no better exemplification of the truth of the general sentiment which I have advanced than that suggested by the comparison—if we may not more properly call it a contrast—exhibited by those who cultivate the fields of Western New York and those who cultivate equally rich soils which lie beneath a tropical sun. I would compare the agriculture of Western New York with the agriculture of the West Indies. Now, does any plantation interest of the West Indies. Now, does any plantation interest offer a broader contrast between different pursuits—both dedicated to the cultivation of the land, both rearing products for human consumption—than we find in the comparison of the land, both rearing products for human consumption—than we find between your sterile and those fertile in the plantation tracts of Cuba and Jamaica, not only as affecting individual happiness, but as touching the riches, the strength, the order, the power, the intelligence of human society, which the southern branch of the democracy consider utterly hostile to their principles. The resolution in favor of a discriminating tariff which shall afford adequate protection to the manufacturer, is particularly obnoxious to the free trade utopians of the Calhoun school! We have not seen a single Calhoun press willing to endorse this resolution. On the other hand, all with which we exchange, are loud and emphatic in their denunciations.

"The difference appears to be this: Tropical cultivation, as applied to sugar, rice, coffee, for example, is rather a matter of commerce than of agriculture. It consists mainly in the production of one article, which is to be exchanged for all the rest, and the success of this exchange depends on the expense incurred for soil and labor, of that sort appropriate to its cultivation; and this is all capital. Whenever one would enter upon tropical culture he invests his capital in the soil—and, as we all know, a portion of it also in labor.—Upon these, therefore, rather of the nature of a commercial undertaking, than the plain and homely, but healthy and beneficent, field cultivation. The consequence is such as a philosophic inquiry would lead us to expect. One is uncertain, precarious, changeable, partaking of the vicissitudes of trade and commercial enterprise. The other is a home interest, always substantially the same—liable, it is true, to the ordinary vicissitudes which attach themselves to all human concerns, but securing to him who enters upon the cultivation of his own lands, by the labor of his own hands, a competence, and providing to guard him against the accidents of life as far as is possible for the most fortunate human being. The contrast is evident when we examine carefully the condition of him who trusts to tropical cultivation for his money and peace—a question linked to the progress of civilization of the age—a question flowing out of the benign precepts of christianity. We refer to the question of FREE TRADE. What reception did this great cause meet with among the sudden humanity at Syracuse, who discovered they rightfully represented New York, and that New York was every thing to the Union, and the Union of all valued to New York? This great cause—the cause of the people, the cause of civilization, of christian benevolence—as might have been expected, met with shameful and scandalous abandonment of its advocates. Why? Because it did not their own ends, and hence its stage came to a bad end.'

"We speak the calm and settled opinion of hundreds, nay, of thousands of our people, that the democratic party cannot hold out to the support and practices manifested and declared at Syracuse. We appeal to them at this time—we protest. If need be, we shall oppose uncompromising hostility."

This citation speaks for itself. The Calhoun men are now marching every hour more independent. They can neither be driven nor cajoled into submission. To our mind the alliance between Calhounism and locofocoism has always been a monstrous and unnatural union, brought about temporarily for purposes of instant interest, but liable to be dissolved whenever the aspirations of the leaders came into collision, or necessity required the exposure of their principles. Both those exposures have now arrived. Mr. CALHOUN's party, it seems to us, are as distinct from locofocoism as they are from whiggery. They are primarily, emphatically, impracticably and unconditionally the champions of free trade. They constitute the only free trade party in this country. Free trade is their ultimatum, their be all and end all. "Should any nation, contrary to our wishes, suppose it may better find its advantage by continuing its status of prohibitory duties and regulations, it behooves us to protect our citizens, their commerce and navigation, by counter prohibitions; also, free commerce and navigation are not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations; nor are they likely to produce a relaxation of them."

Whereupon the Journal remarks:—"Here is some wisdom for you, Messrs. Loco, from that fountain of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson. Is it not awfully Whiggish in its tone? Do you believe in the doctrine it teaches in reference to the tariff, or not? If you do why are you so unfaithful to your opinions as to oppose the Whig tariff? If you do not, either you are not or Mr. Jefferson was not Democratic on this subject.—In running against the tariff, gentlemen, you will, in all probability, so bruise your toes and shins that you will be able to make but a very poor race next year."

NEW BOOKS.

Our thanks are due the publishers, through the politeness of J. H. STEEL, Camp street, for the following new publications:—

The Poetical Works of Walter Scott, with a Life of the Author, complete in one volume. This is a very beautiful edition, got up in a single volume, in 18mo. The paper, printing and binding are faultless, and each poem is adorned by tasteful engravings. To those who desire a valuable and elegant edition of SCOTT, we recommend the volume before us.

Productive Farming, by Joseph A. Smith. This is a neat little volume, containing a familiar digest of the recent discoveries of Liebig, Johnstone, Davy, and other celebrated writers on Vegetable Chemistry. We have no doubt of its being a useful work, especially to those who cannot be expected to familiarize themselves with the abstruse treatise of the more scientific writers on the subject.

The Farmer's Manual. This is a practical treatise on the nature and value of manures, with a brief account of the recent discoveries in Agricultural Chemistry, by F. Falkner, Esq.

The above works are from the press of D. APPLETON and Co., New-York.

HEALTH OF MOBILE.—The Board of Health of Mobile reported on the 3d inst., 12 new cases of Yellow Fever, as having occurred within the preceding twenty-four hours.

DISTRIBUTION OF BANK NOTES.—During the last month the Directors of the State Bank at Tuscaloosa (Ala.) in the presence of the Governor and Secretary of State, issued $3,124,240 of the Bank Circulation of the State, which with the amount destroyed in June last, makes an aggregate of five millions, six hundred and forty-six thousand, one hundred and thirteen dollars of circulation, burned since the adjournment of the Legislature.

JEFFERSONIAN DEMOCRACY.—The Louisville Journal extracts the following passage from a Commercial report of Mr. JEFFERSON, the whole of which may be found in the 1st vol., page 433 of American State Papers:

"Should any nation, contrary to our wishes, suppose it may better find its advantage by continuing its status of prohibitory duties and regulations, it behooves us to protect our citizens, their commerce and navigation, by counter prohibitions; also, free commerce and navigation are not to be given in exchange for restrictions and vexations; nor are they likely to produce a relaxation of them."

Whereupon the Journal remarks:—"Here is some wisdom for you, Messrs. Locos, from that fountain of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson. Is it not awfully Whiggish in its tone? Do you believe in the doctrine it teaches in reference to the tariff, or not? If you do why are you so unfaithful to your opinions as to oppose the Whig tariff? If you do not, either you are not or Mr. Jefferson was not Democratic on this subject.—In running against the tariff, gentlemen, you will, in all probability, so bruise your toes and shins that you will be able to make but a very poor race next year."
