BOUBEE'S ANTI-GOUT SYRUP.

No. 38 Dauphine Street, at Paris.

[Extract from the Hospital Gazette, of April, 1847.]

If what has been explained be well understood, no one can doubt that the decrease and particularly the suppression of the insensible perspiration is the sole and single cause of gout. But, gouty persons will ask, your theory may be true, but does practice confirm your opinions, and have you found a remedy which at once mitigates pain, and recalls the interrupted functions of the skin? The discovery is made—it is Boubee's Anti-Gout Syrup. We, who have so often tested this remedy, we can affirm that none has so well fulfilled our object, and has so completely confirmed our views of the gout given above. This preparation, administered at the beginning of a paroxysm of gout, arrests its progress with marvellous rapidity; its first effect is immediately to assuage suffering, and this being accomplished without danger, there follows a mild transpiration which terminates the paroxysm. What is remarkable about this preparation, is that it never fatigues the patient; it has therefore, appeared to us, superior to any other hitherto presented. We who have followed the effect of this medicament, may declare that it possesses something of the virtue of a specific against the gout. Already some of the most eminent practitioners, such as Messrs. Andral, Velpeau and Leroy d'Etioles, have prescribed it with success, and prefer it to every other preparation. Gouty persons, according to Sydenham, are people of intelligence and good sense; the innocence of the remedy we offer them, must compel them to give it a trial, and its success, to continue its use.
