"THE UNION—IT MUST BE PRESERVED."

NEW-ORLEANS MORNING, APRIL 9, 1833.

FOR GOVERNOR

R. DAWSON.

Weather moderate yesterday; the conditions of two of the steamers have all hopes of our receiving any for a few days. The uncertain conveyance of open boats, is the [illegible] which we have left.

A [illegible] individual, by the name of Ramirez, was found dead in Burgundy street, early before last at 11 o'clock. He is supposed to have been murdered. From a post mortem examination it appears, that he had been stabbed with a sword or some other sharp instrument, the weapon piercing the heart all to pieces. The police, we understand, is on the trail of the perpetrator. When we shall have reached the bottom of this of outrage of this nature, committed since the beginning of winter, we shall make a cross and close the bloody account.

By the schooner Julia, captain Grawange, seven days from Havana, we have our files of the Lucero y Noticias up to the 1st of April. With unfeigned satisfaction we notice that the cholera was sensibly on the decline, and that confidence was first beginning among the inhabitants of the city.

Mazentelli.—M. Rubin, a meritorious artist of the Orleans theatre, comes before the public to-night, for a benefit. Of the merits of this actor, we shall abstain from speaking. He has already prefaced his claims to public favor, "and hand his claims allowed." We will merely state that the opera got up for this benefit has been received with popular applause in France. It is a version of the dumb girl of Portici, from Caraffa the talented composer. The public will have an opportunity of indulging a tweefold feeling—enjoying good music and patronizing professional excellence, linked to individual worth.

LATE FROM EUROPE.

By ship Mexican, captain Woon, from Havre on the 19th of February, we have files of French papers up to the 15th of February. They furnish nothing of an official character on the state of European affairs.

The latest advices from Constantinople, January 16th, state that as soon as Mahmoud became aware of a dispute on the part of France and England to interfere in his quarrel with the pacha of Egypt, he took the first opportunity of rejecting the assistance of Russia, and requesting Mr. Varennes, the French charge, to negotiate an adjustment with Mechmed Ali. An article, from the Constantinople Monitor, holds the following language: Every thing is quiet here. Messrs. Varennes, the French charge, repaired to Ibrahim's camp; the latter made proposals of peace, which have been communicated to the sultan. It is believed that they will be accepted. Mechmed Ali, besides the satisfaction of his claims on Syria, demands the reimbursement of part of the expenses, which have accrued from the war. Per contra, he binds himself to the payment of a certain tribute to the Porte. Turkish commissioners are immediately to be sent to Ibrahim's head quarters, to inform him of the concurrence of the sultan to this project of pacification. It is, therefore, hoped that Ibrahim will soon fall back on the limits of Syria, and the affairs of the east will no longer affect the peace of Europe.

The British ministry have adopted, in relation to Ireland, measures at once vigorous and conciliatory, which are likely to put an end to the dissidences which harrow that country.

The law, introduced by the chancellor of the exchequer, into the house of commons, abolishing the taxes imposed on Ireland for the support of privileged church and suppressing several bishoppicks, has been warmly received, and extorted thanks even from O'Connell himself.

On the 14th of February, Lord Grey informed the house of lords, that he would offer a bill providing for a more efficacious repression of tumults in Ireland. This combination is dexterously managed; government while it admits the just claims of the people of Ireland, while it diminishes or even abolishes the lawless taxation which grinds them down; appeals to both legislative branches for measures calculated to entirely eradicate the evils which have reduced the land of generous feeling and exalted patriotism, to one vast arena of theft, murder and conflagration.

The subjoined is a translation of the projected treaty, transmitted by the Dutch ministry to the powers of France and England:

PROJECT OF A TREATY.

Art. 1. His majesty the king of Netherlands, obliges himself to cause his troops to evacuate forts Lillo and Liefkenshoek, within the term of [illegible] days, after the ratification of the present treaty. Their majesties, the king of the French and the king of England, equally oblige themselves within a term of [illegible] after the ratification of the present treaty, to obtain the evacuation of the Belgian troops from Venloo, the Dutch part of the Limburg, and the German part of Luxembourg, according to the limitations agreed upon in the treaty of the 15th November, between the five powers and Belgium also, to cause the places abovementioned, to be surrendered to the king of Netherlands.

Art. 2. His majesty, the king of Netherlands, obliges himself, after the ratification of the present treaty, to make the navigation of the Meuse entirely free, according to the stipulations of 1831, passed at Mayuz.

Art. 3. Until a definitive treaty between Holland and Belgium, the Dutch government will raise on the Scheldt the same species of duty, (tolregt) which shall be of per [illegible] ships coming up from sea, and a duty of per ton [illegible] ships going down the river. That duty shall be collected at Flushing, without any visit or administrative formalities, and it shall be the same for all ships, whatever may be the village, and the cargo which it covers.

Art. 4. His majesty the king of Netherlands, consents to the establishment of commercial communications between Belgium and Germany, by Maestricht and Sittard they shall be perfectly free and protected from every impediment. The use of the two roads which crossing both towns and leading to the frontiers of Germany, shall only be subject to a small duty for their maintenance, so that the transit shall not be trammelled. The duties of transportation into Limburg shall be equally small, and shall not exceed the present tariff; if that duty exceeds 1 per cent. on the value of the goods, the commercial authorities shall have power to reduce it to that rate.

Art. 5. His majesty the king of the French and king of Great Britain, oblige themselves to obtain from Belgium the payment from the 1st of January, 1833, of 8,400,000 florins annually, payable to the Dutch treasury.

His majesty the king of Belgium, solemnly promises that in the provinces which shall be delivered over to him, nobody shall be prosecuted or annoyed on account of political acts or opinions.

Their counter-treaty will probably be rejected, on the ground of its saying either too much or too little; too much, if it be a preliminary agreement; too little if it be a definitive one. It seems, the plenipotentiaries of the five courts complain of the Dutch plenipotentiaries. They want in some way or other to prove, that all adjustment is impossible, as long as the ministry of the king of Holland will persevere in the course hitherto pursued.

It is much to be regretted, that no understanding has been come to, respecting a preparatory agreement, which might have ended a quarrel, which places Holland in a most critical predicament.

Mr. J. B. Plauché has been elected brigadier general, and Mr. Percifor F. Smith, colonel of the Louisiana Legion. With such men in command this body of citizen soldiers will continue what its exact discipline has entitled it to be called, "the pride of the metropolis and the safeguard of the state of Louisiana."—Tech Courier.

INDIAN OUTRAGE.

Several gentlemen arrived in town on Saturday from Santa Fe. We learn that they state, that they were attacked on the Canadian Fork of the Arkansas, distant about two hundred miles from Santa Fe, by upwards 250 Comanche Indians, and that an engagement ensued which lasted 32 hours, and resulted in the death of two men. We understand, that on the day of the attack, about the first of January, Indians were unusually seen about them; and that in the evening, when one of the party attempted to bring in a mule or two which had strayed some 40 yards from the main body, he was fired upon and killed. His name was Prentiss, a miner who had had resided some time in Santa Fe. Two balls and two arrows entered his body. The attack was now commenced. Immediately, the horses and mules were tied to a tree; and they, together with the baggage, afforded some protection while the party were engaged in digging a trench in the sand sufficiently deep to protect them from the balls of the Indians. But before this could be done, another of the party, a Mr. Mitchell, was killed. The fight lasted until twelve of at night, when the Indians having ceased firing an attempt was made to escape, but they were driven back to their old entrenchment. On the return of day, the engagement was again renewed and continued all night. By this time their guns were nearly disabled by shot from the Indians, their ammunition was exhausted. They were now hailed by one of the Indians, and told, in Spanish, that they might depend accordingly they prepared to do so. The Indians then allowed them to proceed on their way, directly through the Indian body, without molestation. It could not be ascertained how many of the savages were killed, but some were observed frequently to crowd town together, being a sufficient indication that a ball had taken effect and that they were engaged in carrying off the body. All the horses and mules, belonging to the party, were killed. They were thus compelled to abandon every article of the baggage, and also ten or twelve thousand dollars in gold and silver.
