CLAY CLUB

The WHIG YOUNG MEN will bear in mind the meeting announced for the evening at the Clay Club. It is expected that the attendance will be general. We trust that our friends will not fail at the appointed session. Little more than two weeks is left us to prepare for the July struggle. We must be up and doing.

MR. SLIDELL AND THE SUGAR DUTIES IN 1827 AND 1828.

The Courier, of Tuesday, contained two long communications and a memorial to Congress upon the Sugar interest, which we are told were written by Mr. SLIDELL—the two first in 1827 and published in the Louisiana Advertiser, and the latter in 1830 written at the request of a number of sugar planters. These documents are reproduced to establish Mr. SLIDELL's friendly dispositions towards the planting interest—and as a consequence his pretensions to the suffrages of the sugar planter, at the coming congressional election.—We intend to examine some of the propositions contained in these publications but, before doing so, we must express our regret that the limits of a newspaper article, do not permit us to give them at once that thorough examination and extensive review which the intrinsic merits of the composition and the importance of the positions assumed would otherwise claim from our hands. It is the necessity of the case which compels us to treat them piecemeal. It might be more candid towards Mr. SLIDELL as it would certainly be more agreeable to us to go fully into the subject and present our views upon them in one article, embracing the whole argument and presenting in a connected form and comprehensive light the exact position of that gentleman in relation to the sugar interest, as we understand it, thus to discuss them in searches; but as this cannot be done we will pursue the only method of examination that is left to us, taking care not to attribute to him opinions that are not fairly deducible from the text.

The first article signified to Mr. SLIDELL's pen—that published on the 31st May, 1827—begins in these words. The reader will bear in mind that Mr. ADAMS was then President of the United States.

"The partisans of the Administration in this State have for quite time past been most industriously employed in attempts to rallie under their banner the planters of Louisiana, by an artificial appeal to their interests and their fears. It is a common topic of declamation with them, that if the opposition succeed, the impressive duties upon the products of our soil will be taken off or reduced, and our agricultural population involved in one general ruin."

Mr. SLIDELL then goes on to state, that whilst the administration party (then whigs) confined their declamation upon this theme to corners of the streets and private circles, they required no answer, but that recently they have taken a more open course of proceeding and that Mr. BENT in a speech delivered in Opelousas gave it as one among many reasons of his preference of the existing order of things.

"He, (Mr. BENT) says (continues Mr. SLIDELL) that "the opposers of the present administration in the councils of the nation and in the halls of the national legislature are the avowed enemies to planters, importers, and the very men who are constantly threatening and trying to take off the protecting duties upon the sugar and cotton of Louisiana."

The first communication of Mr. SLIDELL is merely confined to a refutation of the remark quoted from Mr. BENT and the declarations of the whig party that the opposition obtained power the protection he claims given to the Louisiana planter would be rep-aled—for this is the gist of the argument.

Here then we perceive that in 1827, the whigs assumed the ground that the democracy is opposed to the duty upon sugar, and that if that party succeed the "protecting duties upon the products of our soil [as quote the language of Mr. SLIDELL] will be taken off or reduced, and our agricultural population involved in one general ruin". This assumption was combated by the Louisiana Advertiser, and it is important now to enquire which of the two was right.

The democratic party did succeed. Gen. JACKSON was inaugurated on the 4th of March, 1829, and before the expiration of the first term of his service, the duty was repealed. Did not subsequent events justify the prediction of the whig party in 1827? Did not the very thing come to pass which they foretold? And would not the "ruin" have been more overwhelming, complete and sudden, had not Mr. CLAY interposed and saved the interests of the country so nearly bartered—wrecked, by the wickedness of a licentious congress a concession of nine years repeal and gradual reduction, during which time the designers of that party might be tested by experience?

"But (continued Mr. SLIDELL with an air of triumph) let us see what authority Mr. BENT has for his assertion that the opposition are constantly threatening and trying to take off the protecting duties upon the sugar and Cotton of Louisiana. I assert most boldly, that it is mere declamation, that the alarm is groundless and that, if it is absolutely without any foundation whatever, in fact."

Having proceeded to argue the fallacy of whig predictions, from propositions which we will hereafter examine. Can any thing be more positive or peremptory than this so called opinion—amounting to a common assertion. And yet how illusory were the prognostications of Mr. SLIDELL based this confident assertion—as in 1830, Mr. SLIDELL, in his letter to Mr. [illegible], then editor of the Courier, republished above, [illegible] last, calling for information on the culture of sugar cane, says:

"We will observe, that this letter has been written in consequence of a resolution of the House of Representatives, calling for information on the culture of the sugar cane, and the manufacture of sugar. We are calling for information on the culture of the cane, and the manufacture of sugar. We are calling for information on the culture of the cane, and the manufacture of sugar. We are calling for information on the culture of the
