TO PERSONS WEARING SPECTACLES

THIS is not a personal matter, but merely a friendly advice to my customers and all those who wish to preserve their right sight. The visual organs are of sufficient importance to require the great care in the selection of glasses whose use is constantly accompanied by apprehension. We must consequently guard against high-sounding advertisements published in Sunday papers, and offer themselves to the eyes of purchasers, and whose only object is to sell as many spectacles as they can at extravagant prices. Purchasers must not suffer themselves to be deceived by a pair of spectacles which make things look larger beyond nature. Our sight is affected in ways injured, sooner or later, by our seeing too clearly. The glasses must be sufficiently strong, and adapted to the sight, so that the eyes do not strain or become painfully be strained.

I am satisfied that physicians, and competent persons generally, concur in the fact, that my spectacles are the best.
