You can search for particular information throughout this library.

On some occasions, typically when the search string you specify is imprecise, the number of 'hits' returned to you can be too large to be useful. To make the search results more immediately useful, you can:

- Make the search string as specific as possible.
- Modify your 'Acrobat Search Preferences'.
- Exclude irrelevant books from the search by removing their indexes from the 'Index Selection' box.

Be aware that the Acrobat search function treats all attached indexes separately; if you have selected both the whole-library index and a book-specific index, hits in that book are returned twice in the search results window.

If you have Adobe Acrobat Catalog™, you can create your own searchable indexes for groups of books that you refer to frequently.
