Moments of Truth

- At every customer interaction with a company, there is at least one "moment of truth" an interaction that can disproportionately positively or negatively affect the customer experience.

... In The Hands of Consumers

The image displays three overlapping screenshots of consumer review websites:

- Yelp: The top section shows the Yelp logo with the tagline "Real People. Real Reviews." and a navigation menu including "Welcome", "About Me", "Write a Review", "Find Reviews", "Invite Friends", "Messaging", "Talk", "Events", "Member Search", "Account", and "Log In". Below this is a "Yelp Chicago" header with links to other cities like Boston, San Francisco, New York, San Jose, Los Angeles, and Palo Alto. A central message states, "Yelp is the fun and easy way to find, review and talk about what's great – and not so great – in your area." with a "Sign Up" button.
- Get Satisfaction: The middle section features a "GET SATISFACTION" banner. The main headline reads, "Customer service doesn't have to suck." Below this, it says, "Real conversations with company employees and other customers who will answer your questions about the products and services you use. Get heard." It lists "6,873 companies, 6,708 products and services and counting..." and provides two buttons: "Find a product" and "Find a company".
- Angie's List: The bottom section shows the Angie's List logo and navigation menu (Quick Tour, How It Works, FAQ, Tips, Penalty Box, Buzz, Contact Us, Join). A central image shows a room with a quote: "They were very careful to consider problem spots that might be harmful for our toddler." Below the quote is a "Take a quick tour >>" button. To the right, a "Browse by Destination" map highlights regions like Canada, Europe, Asia, Middle East, Africa, South America, and South Pacific.

Thoughtful Actions: Rules of Engagement

Customer Experience Management (CEM)

→ Basic Principles:

- Transparency of Offering
- Relevancy of Communication
- Ease of Interaction
- Value of Incentive

→ Key Elements⁽¹⁾

- Discipline. CEM is not about creating slogans like “this is the year of the customer.” It needs to be a set of ongoing activities like a well-established voice of the customer program
- Increasing loyalty. CEM is not about an altruistic belief that customers should be treated better. It needs to be linked to more profitable (or strategically improved) long-term behaviors of customers
- Customers’ needs and expectations. CEM needs to be calibrated from the perspective of target customers
