mong ourselves. In many respects, it must be admitted, the British peri odical writers are apt to treat us as dogs: but, in this instance, the fault is all our own. In general, they have a very mean opinion of our genious and our intellect. We are in their estimation, mere nation of shop-keepers, upon whom it is not worth the while to throw away eloquence or argument-it would be throwing pearls before swine This feeling was, however, rapidly wearing away; but i will acquire years to restore that degree of confidence is the stability of our institutions which has been ferfeited by the infurated ravings of the nullisers. The degradation is which they have sunk our national, we trust, will prove their least soil consequence.
