John Harrison Clark

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

John Harrison Clark or Changa-Changa (c. 1860–1927) was an adventurer from the South African Cape who effectively ruled much of what is today southern Zambia from the early 1890s through to 1902. Unassisted by any government, he arrived to the country in about 1887, reputedly as an outlaw, and assembled and trained a private army of Senga natives, which he used to drive off various bands of slave-raiders. He took control of a bloc of territory on the north bank of the Zambezi river called Mashukulumbwe, became known as Chief "Changa-Changa" and, through a series of treaties with local chiefs, gained mineral and labour concessions covering much of the region.

Starting in 1897, Clark attempted to secure protection for his company. The company took little notice of him. When a local chief, Clark had secured his concessions while passing himself off as a collector of hut tax for at least two years, with no authority or power, and did so in 1902. Clark then farmed for about two years in the late 1910s to Broken Hill, where he became a prominent landowner in Northern Rhodesia. Remaining in Broken Hill for the rest of his life.
