LATE FROM LIVERPOOL. To the politeness of Capt. Buntin, of ship Adeline, we are indebted for Liverpool papers to the 13th Oct. inclusive—from the Courier of that date, we make the following extracts;

THE REPRESENTATION OF LIVERPOOL, -- Sir R. Peel has declined the honor intended him by those gentlemen who invited him to offer himself as a candidate for the representation of Liverpool. The right honorable baronet did not wait the presentation of the requisition, which was in the course of signature, put embraced the marliest opportunity that afforded itself to state to the requisitionists, that The pressure of his public duties as a Minister to the Crown would render it impossible for him to discharge, with satisfection to himself, the duties of a representative at Liverpool, and that he must, therefore forego the honor of being put in nomination; that he assures the requitionists he is gratified in the highest degree by this proof of their good opinion and confidence, and that it adds mother to the many motives which will ever inducation, though not its representative, to take the warmest interest in the welfare of Liver-

An answer has been returned by Mr. Charles Grant to the same effect. The reply of both these statements, although disappointing to the expectation of the gentlemen, who conceived it their duty to solicit them to offer themselves for the representation of the borough, are yet couched in very respectful terms, equally creditable to the promptness and good taste of Sir Robert, and the rarm and manly feelings which characterizes melancholly event occurred which has rendered talked of arrangements.—John Bull, the interrogation necessary. much roused in Paris to-day, on account of an important and interesting debate that took place last night, in the Chamber of Deputies, respecting nothing less than the total and immediate abolition of capital punishment. This momentous question originated in a motion of M. de Tracy, an honest and enlightened Member, something of a disciple of the La Rouchefoucalt School," and son of the count de Tracy, one of our Peers, and author of several works on Metaphysics. The author of the motion proposed a total and completo abolition. This was sent to a Special Committee for consideration. The opinion of the committee was that the motion ought to pass; but that the question was so new and important, and had so many bearings, that the decision of the House ought to be postponed till the next Session. This of course, disappointed M. de Tracy and his friends.—The debate took place yesterday. The speakers on the side of the original question were numerous and powerful. A most remarkable speech was delivered with an accent of the most impressive conviction, by M. Keratry, a man of a firm, honest mind, and one of our best writers. He proposed, that the house should address the Crown, in order to obtain from the King the proposition of a law abolishing the pain of death for a great many offences. and especially for political crimes. He was supported by our old veteran of every liberal humane idea, General Lafayette. M. Girob de L'Ain, Prefect de Police of Paris, went still further, and restort de l'olice of l'aris, went still further, and insisted on a total abolition, on the ground of his personal knowledge (having been twenty years personal knowledge (having been twenty years to turn our undivided attention to that a magistrate,) of the complete instificacy of the an address was agreed upon, demanding Governrkable result. The House is to be prorogued during a month, in order to give the people time so complete its number, about 100 Members having for various canaca vacated their gests. The trial of the ex-ministers Polignac and Co, will not begin until the 1st of Novomber; so that, if the Government come down to the House with the measure demanded about that time, the guilty Ministers will at least escape sense of the House is, that our present Cabinet will have time to propose and carry this measure before sentence of high treason is passed. The consequence of this debate will then be, evidently, saving the impeached Ministers."

At Meerholz and Wachtersbach, the Count of senburg's country residences have been attacked by the peasants and destroyed. In the pro vinces of Hanau and Fulda, all the custom hous have been closed by force, and no duty can be collected. It is reported that the Prussian custom-houses at Eckartsberg and Lutxen have crees of the Provincial Government, are preparlikewise been attacked, and set on fire; but this rumour requires confirmation." We learn from Berne, that on the 20th ult. M. Fisher, the provost, was attacked in the streets of the town and obliged to take refuge in a guardhouse. The Government of Berne have called in troops, and on the 30th twelve pieces of cannon were planned before the Hotel de Ville.

Discontent is said to prevail in Switzerland, and disturbances had taken place at Zurich. Some changes in the Russian Ministry seemed to be expected—that Power, it is said, had not yet recognized the new order of things in

We are happy to state from authority, that the most satisfactory assurances continue to be received by the Ministry from the French Government relative to their intentions, and that the Duke of Wellington has behaved so cordially to Prince Tallevrand since his arrival here, as to have induced the French King to observe last week in a company, that Talleyrand was delighted with his reception (a été churmé de son uccueil.) -- Court Journal.

So complete is the separation, already from the House of Nassan, that, when the Prince of Orange wished to concert measures with som members of the Provincial Government, for time the Belgians, it was replied, that they could not recognize the authority, either of the King or of the Prince, and that they must be instructed by the National Congress, who alone could treat with him.
