The Escape of the Bark Adriatic.

The Belfast papers contradict the story that Capt. Dunham was retaken by a French war steamer and carried back to Marseilles in irons. By the last arrival letters were received by his friends, announcing that he had completely eluded the search of the steamer sent after him, and had reached Spezzia, where he had taken in provisions, and was on the eve of sailing for New York. The following extract is from a letter received by his brother:

SPEZZIA, Jan. 20, 1858.—We arrived here on the 18th from Marseilles, after giving the Frenchmen the slip. I went on board the Adriatic at 9 o'clock on the evening of our departure, and with four men beat the topsails, and then hauled out through the ships down to the mouth of the harbor, and made sail. Before daylight we were out of sight of the city. I was obliged to slip both anchors, and put to sea without them. It was a pretty good night's work considering the circumstances. I am now safe in regard of being seized by the French authorities, as they cannot take me here. The Sardinian government will not allow me to land, and as I cannot get anchors I shall have to come on without them. The United States storekeeper here has furnished me with stores enough to reach the United States. I don't know what sort of a scrape I shall have next. J. B. DUNHAM.

Raising of the Steamboat Stephen Decatur.

We learn from the St. Louis Republican, of the 4th inst., that the hull of this steamer, sunk some weeks ago by collision with the wreck of the steamer A. L. Shotwell, has been raised by the unremitting and scientific exertions of the Western River Improvement and Wrecking Company. The boat and cargo—valued at $60,000—are now afloat. The Republican says:

Steamboatmen considered the Decatur gone beyond the possibility of recovery. Her position was very bad for raising, the breaks were very awkward ones to stop, and she had nine feet of water on her deck. These facts did not, however, discourage Captain Nelson. He immediately dispatched the Submarine No. 8 to the wreck, in charge of his brother, Edwin B. Nelson, a man of great experience and energy, who has raised some twenty steamboats in the past few years, the D. C. Tyler among the number. These gentlemen suffered many disappointments, having to meet with repeated failures in their attempt, until on the first of March they had the satisfaction of seeing the Decatur, with her cargo, afloat once more. The pumps of the No. 8 were, however, tried to their utmost, discharging at the time the boat was floated the incredible amount of one thousand barrels of water per minute. We should be doing injustice to the inventor of this pump were we to omit his name in this place. Mr. J. Stuart Gwynne, of New York, has the honor of having invented this wonderful machine, and the Western River Improvement and Wrecking Company have the exclusive right to use it for wrecking purposes on the Mississippi and all its tributaries. Eads & Nelson, of this city, own the patent for the western half of the United States.

We are informed by river men that at certain stages of water the wreck of the Shotwell is exceedingly dangerous to navigation; the wreck, as well as the stump on which it sank, lying almost directly in the channel. The same remark applies to the wreck of the Allegheny, fifteen miles below this city, several steamboats have already been seriously injured, and one, the Ben Franklin, has been knocked off the deck of the Shotwell by the Ben Franklin in consequence of that boat striking it last January. Several dangerous wrecks are standing in the river, and it is almost impossible to escape hitting one or the other of them. The Brunner, sunk just below the mouth of the Ohio, is also a very dangerous wreck. All three of these boats will be saved new wrecks, having been sunk within the last few years, and go to swell up the number of steamboats now lying at the bottom of the Mississippi. Captain Nelson informs us that he has never been long in a longer depth of water than that of the Mississippi between Cairo and New Orleans, the obstructions consisting

C. FORREST.

WASHINGTON, March, 3, 1858.

Senate.—Mr. Hunter offered a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay the officers and seamen of the expedition in search of Dr. Kane at the same rate allowed in Dellaker's expedition.

The hour of one having arrived, the special order of the day, the Kansas bill, was taken up.

Mr. Seward delivered a lengthy speech, on the subject of Kansas, discussing the following points:

That first wherever, in the beginning, the ascendancy of the slave States was absolute; it is now being reversed.

Second. That wherever, heretofore, the national government favored the change of the boundaries from the slave States to the free States, it has now reversed this policy, and opposes the change.

Third. That national intervention in the Territories in favor of slave labor and slave States, is opposed to the natural, social and moral developments of the republic.

In arguing these propositions, Mr. Seward said: Missouria was first admitted to the slave labor, without a struggle, and Kansas became a theatre of the first actual national conflict between the slaveholding and free labor emigrants met face to face in organize, through the machinery of Republican action, a civil community. In this hour of trial, the new system of popular sovereignty signally fails, because if it impossible to organize, in one day, a community perfectly free, perfectly slaveholding, and perfectly constituted, out of elements unassimilated, unarranged and incongruous. Free labor rightfully won the day, but slave labor wrested the victory to itself, by fraud and violence.

Speaking of the opinion pronounced by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case, he said in this ill-omened decision it had forgotten its own dignity, which had always been maintained with fraternal jealousy. They forgot that the province of a Court is simply jus dicere and not all jus dare. They forgot that one foul sentiment does more harm than many foul examples; for the last do but corrupt the stream, while the former corrupt the fountain, and they and the President alike forget that judicial usurpation is more odious and intolerable than any other among the manifold practices of tyranny; and so far from argument, he added no wonder that the question before us excites alarm and apprehension.

There is at least a North side of this chamber, a North side of the House of Representatives, and a North side of the Union, as well as South sides of all these, and each of these is watchful, zealous and hostile. If it be true, as has so often been asserted, that the Union cannot survive the decision by Congress of a sectional question, leaving the adoption of a free State into this Union, which will establish the ascendency of the free States under the Constitution, and draw after it the restoration of the influence of freedom in the domestic and foreign conduct of the government, then the day of dissolution is at hand. Further, he said, let the Supreme Court recede, but whether it decide or not, we shall reorganize the Courts, and thus reform its political sentiments and practices, and bring them into harmony with the Constitution and the law of nature. And in doing so we shall not only reassume our own just authority, but we shall restore that high tribunal itself to the position it ought to maintain; since so many inalienable rights of mankind, and even of States themselves, depend upon the impartiality and its wisdom. If you attempt to coerce Kansas into the Union under the Lecompton Constitution, the people of that Territory will resort to civil war, if necessary. You are pledged to put down that revolution by the sword. Will the people listen to your voices amid the thunders of your cannon? Let the seas drop of the blood of a free citizen be shed there by the Federal army, and the countenance of every Representative of a free State, in either House of Congress, will blanch, and his tongue will refuse to utter the vote necessary to sustain the army in the butchery of his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Thomson, of New Jersey, alluding to Kansas, said now was a favorable opportunity to end her long agitation, by admission into the Union. He contended that the Lecompton Constitution was the expression of the will of the people of Kansas. Replying to many arguments against that instrument, he instanced the cases of fourteen States, whose Constitutions were adopted without submission to the people. Kansas had been scattered by the opponents of the Lecompton Constitution, that wrong was the consequence of their own boldness, and therefore they have no right to complain. If the free State party have a large majority as pretended, they can change any obnoxious features in the Constitution, but if in the minority, they must submit like good citizens to the will of the majority. But this party don't want peace; they desire agitation. The affairs of Kansas, he contended, will be infinitely worse if not admitted. He was impatient to learn that Congress had relieved from consideration of the question, and that the people be left to settle their own difficulties in their own way, and under their own State government. Then we shall hear no more of bleeding Kansas.

Adjourned.

House.—The House resumed the consideration of the Senate resolutions relative to the Naval Retiring Board.

Mr. Whitely argued in favor of the resolutions, severely criticising the proceedings of the Naval Board.

Mr. Boocock opposed, contending that the proceedings of the Board of Inquiry were, and even if reversed, that many of its supposed victims now expecting to be received back into the navy would find themselves mistaken.

Winslow and Seward both advocated the resolutions.

Passed by a majority of 71. Adjourned.

FROM THE PLAINS.

LATE AND IMPORTANT NEWS.

The Kiowas — The Comanches Determined for Peace—Bloody Fight between the Arapahoes and Pawnees—Pawnee Dead Bodies Found.

Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

WESTPORT, Mo., February 23, 1858.

Mr. Kitchen, the trader, arrived here on the 22d inst., having started from Tecolote, New Mexico, on the 20th of January. At the time of starting, there was no news of importance in the Territory. The Indian tribes were all quiet and looking to trade. Mr. Kitchen comes in this early to get goods to New Mexico in time for the heavy spring trade anticipated.

He came down the Cimarron route, along which good dry grass for animals and willow twigs for fire. At the upper Cimarron Spring he met about one hundred and fifty Kiowas. They were friendly, and after a short time change of good relations, passed on up the river to where the great body of the nation was encamped.

At the lower Cimarron Spring he met a large war force of Comanches. A long Indian talk ensued. They expressed the best feelings for the white brother. Said they had heard there would be a heap of trade carried on by the white men across the Plains next season. So far as their people were concerned, the trains would not be disturbed, neither would any demands ever be made again upon the white people. If the Great Father chose to send them on presents they would gratefully receive them, but would not think hard if they were neglected.

What seems to have softened down these Indians was, that they heard much "big talk" about the white soldiers going to wipe out the Mormons.

Coming on the Arkansas river, and when within fifteen miles of Pawnee Fork, he suddenly met about 250 Arapahoe warriors, all armed with lances, guns and pistol. Never were Indians better equipped. He was ordered to halt, which he did with dispatch. Storm, the Chief, with a few chosen, gathered around on the ground, lit the calumet. Kitchen in their midst, and then talked a la savage. Storm related that he had just had a big fight with the Pawnees, on Pawnee Fork, the day before. The contest was a bloody one. Ten Pawnees were killed, some taken prisoners, and almost every one who escaped was wounded. Ten bleeding scalps were displayed by Storm to prove his assertion. Storm was well known and esteemed by Wm. Bent, a trader, in which he was considered as a popular and brave Indian in the Arapahoe tribe, worthy of the bounty of travelers. Mr. Kitchen was thus finally compelled to release himself of a great part of his provisions. He was then permitted to pass on. That night he camped at Pawnee Fork. Some of the boys, in hunting wood to build the camp fire, found many dead horses lying about, dreadfully gashed, and also picked up two Pawnee Indian heads that had been lopped off in the fight. It was the battle-ground described by Storm.

Mr. Kitchen found in the Little Arkansas river, further on, ten dead Pawnee bodies. Some of them were submerged in the water and hidden, others on the verge were in a state of putrification. It is supposed they were killed by the Kiowas.

The weather from New Mexico to Pawnee Fork was summerlike—from thence to this point cold, snowy and extremely disagreeable, but not so snakes. G. W. H.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—In a former dispatch it was stated, on authority of Democrats, that the Lecompton bill in the House bill would pass the House by fifteen majority. On the contrary leading anti-Lecomptonites are sanguine of its being defeated, and are working industriously to that end.

Gen. Ripp has been appointed United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, in the place of Davidson, removed.

DEATH OF GAPT. SUMMONS.

We learn from our dispatches that Capt. Silas Hall Summons died at the Spencer House, in Cincinnati, on Sunday morning. Every body familiar with the history of steamboating in the West is acquainted with either the person or character of Capt. Summons. From before the application of steam to river navigation he was connected with either the keel boat or flat boat service in the parish jail.
