TO COTTON PLANTERS.—The subscribers are now having for sale the improved Cotton Press lately invented by De Newell, of Grand Gulf, and manufactured by Messrs. James Wilson & Co., of Cincinnati; and are prepared to fill orders for any number wanted.

The threads of both screw and nut being cut by lathes out of solid iron, fit each other with great accuracy; and having an equal bearing on all the threads at the same time, and not liable to strip or break, but work true and with remarkable ease and power—a single horse being sufficient to press a bale as hard as desired.

Since the introduction of Dr Newall's press, many alterations have from time to time been made, by which the weigh of the irons and the strength of the press have been much increased, and its operation rendered as easy as possible. With the assistance of the drawing and description, any carpenter can easily construct one. The press being suspended to the joist of the gin room, takes up but little room, especially when two horses are used with short levers. Much time and trouble are saved by having the bale pressed in the same room as the lint room, as the packers never have to go below.

It makes a very handsome bale, and works with equal ease and expedition, and three hands can press twenty bales in a day.

All who have seen the press, and of the manner in operation in the neighborhood of Grand Gulf and Natchez, decide it to surpass all others in simplicity, strength and durability, and in saving time and labor. The price of screw and casings, without forpgne, is $200 cash on delivery, purchaser paying freight and commissions. Apply to
