Whig, addressed to a gentleman of that eity. The oditor remarks, "the author will be recognized without the publication of his na.se"—and adds, "it was written with no atpactation of its meeting the public eye." Since, however, it has met the public eye. We have obtained the concent of the writer to annex his name. In design so we are directing the attention of the popole to one who has never hetrayed them, and whose judgment never deceives hismself. Mr. Tallmadge has been a true prophet—be enjoys great advantages for forming a correct estimate of the course of political events—and, in every instance for the last three years at least, his predictions have been verified. They will be in the present case—we subscribe to his sentiments and calculations fully—every thing justifies his anticipations. There is nothing in the bragging and bullying of the Richmond Enquirer—the editor of that paper knows nothing of the popular feeling abroad, and his boasting of carrying Virginia at the late election was proved by the result to be an evidence of the utter ignorance of even the people of his own state. Mr. Tallmadge's letter being written in the fresdom and familiarity of friendly private correspondence, without intending it for publication, gives it additional force.

Wassinsrow, May 19th, 1840.

My Dear Sir: Your lotter of the 2fth inst. was duly received. It is surprising to me that Ritchie's bragging in the Richmond Enquirer about New York, should give our friends one noneal's uncessiness.
