The following extract is from the speech of Mr. Clay ton, in the senate. Independently of the beautiful structure of language, it contains a keen thrust at Mr. Calhoua in an admirably applied quotation:

The honorable senator from South Carolina, (Mr. Cal-houn) has told us, that all human institutions, like those who form them, contain within themselves the elements of their own destruction, and that our own Government is now exhibiting their operation. To the general philosophic remark I would not have objected, but for its application.—All the works of man are destined to decay; but while the grey body of the people shall remain the to themselves, are the destructions. Altere works of man are destined to decay; but while the green body of the people shall remain true to themselves, our Government can never be destroyed, for it contains within itself endliss and ever never the destroyed, for it contains being it out in triumph against every effect to destroy it. From freigh force it can have nothing to feer. It dreads nothing now from any section of the Union which shall ever sick to protect itself from the just operation of our laws by firight intervention. Yes, sir, a foreign alliance, sought by any member of this confederacy, for the purpose of making war upon er, would be the means, under leaven, of immediately rabying every patriot, of every political party, under the bread banker of the republic. I age; howeve, sir, it it the mertal blow to our liverties may be struck by a hand which has been indebted to us for existence.
