He told me to give this letter into the very first letter and found it to be, from its date, one of the last if not the very first letter written by Gent Hannson. It bears date of the day when his illness commenced. The reader will see, from a perusal of it, that amidst all the cares and troubles of his high possibility and the content and him come to the dimeritable with the great folks, and when he hesitated and internated that he had better go below for his direction, ner, the General anid, "Tucker you and I have been shipmates, and a long time together, You are a nine of the content o of these measures point to a very different conclusion. The letter itself is an exceedingly interesting document, and we regret that its extreme length (nearly four columns) prevents our inscring it in full; we shall however, again revert to the principal topics, and presents an abstract of the same to our readers.

Makeria Monkar Gotte-Chark takes a benefit this exceing at the St. Louis Bull Room, the proceeds of which have to be devoted to defraying the expenses of his musical collection in Europe. He is a child of rare talent, and his parents have wisely determined to give him the benefit of the best instruction in the develope:

rections, and start you have been to him don't forget to write to me that you and your wife and children are happy again."

Turker easy he had no money to come home by land, but he did not let the general know that, for he knew he would give it to him in a minute, and he did not wish to take money from the good old man who had been so kind to him. And we Turker went on board the schooner L. L. Sturgis, at Alexandria, and worked his passage home to New York. When he came to the Custom house he had not been ashore their minutes, and having first head the sad now of the death of his kind benefactor as he passed up the Oll Slip fork, the abundant tears that fell down his hardy check testified that his is no ungreatful heart.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Custus immediately appointed Mr. Tuckes an inspector of the cust ms.

The attraordinary success of Mrs. Firawillian at the American, is the best vidence that the people of this city are not indifferent to the claims of genuine and high histrionic talent. This lady is now fulfilling, if we mistake not, her sixth engagement in one season, and we truly believe, that during tully forty nights performances, she has not once played to a thin house. She has left us repeatedly, and been as often wood to return and won to remain by the contuniance is plaudits of brilliant and crowded audiences. Some folks may mourn as much as they please, and groan and lament over the decay of theatricals and perversion of public taste, but the wonderful success of Mrs. Firzwillian proves their jetemials to be groundless. It is not, however, this lady alone who has attracted the million to the theatre. company fail to draw good houses, and we have proved the million to the theter. Other ear gegements have proved profitable alike to the managers and the actors, when contracted with real talent, and when that talent was adequately and efficiently sustained. Mr. Powen, at the St. Charles, put money in his own and the proprision's pocketa—and why?
Because Mr. Powen is an actor of extraordinary merit—he took immense pains in drilling the corps of the St. Charles into something like activity—he compelled them to sustain him, and such was his matchless art, and his power of filling the early to the less art, and his power of filling the step; as it is terimed, and dispensing with the services of the inferior performers, that when the latter balked and blundersel, he covered with infinite tact their failures, and almost prevented the audience from perceiving that things were going wong.

Tolerably accurate and careful observation has convinced us that it is the merest humbug in the world to accuse the public of spothy and insensibility to the chaims of the drawn. We have never yet seen a good company fail to draw good houses, and we have never seen a performer of sterling ability deserted by
