words sufficient to settle the matter, and in fact as much the M. remittle gave un yesterday a long article of at est a column and a half, headed "our next governor." which would puzzle any body but the crudite editor of that understand; we made several attempts to read it It had the effect of an opiate upon us, and as we age con-vinced that itimest have had the same affect upon others, we think it useless to abrice it particularly; few, very few, indeed, excepting, perkeps, certain office lumiers, and syco phants could have had the patience to grope through it. As far as we are into it, however, we detected not an attemptat wit, that really a very witty thing about the "honried ascent of a searp, which wasp, lest our readers should ot detect the point of the satire, we will state is nothing case then our own respectable journal, the Bre. Very neatly done that, is at it Besides this keen cut, we believe there was a great deal of rigmarble about the Linjon, and two (nameless) party leaders, great men in denuise, against whom him of the Merpantile seems very wrathy; and a great deal of sulsome palavering about the vigorous facul. tics of D. P., the labors which he has performed, his ferrid WONDERPUL extent and variety of knowledge, to which may be added an "imagination unopressed," combined with the powers of the scholar and the reasoner," and whose "inndesce is Phovensias," and whose justice is well (7) 11 Now we ask our readers is not this ridiculous? Person himself must have blushed to read such stuff if he did soud it, which we do not believe; indeed, eve-17 one must be with us, while we apply to this, the epithet of diagonting and fulsome flattery.

The liberal, and generous aflicer of the Mercantile re-pub lishes in imother part the letter of the proprietor of this pa per to the editor of the Courier, headed by some strictures that he was not authrized to make, and which are such as cannot give pleasure to Mr. Bayon, who prides himself up on the independence of his paper. Mr. B. disclaims our first article only as to the personal allusions which he thinks first article origins to the personal altusions which he timbs updated and hand, and we appeal to him for the truth of what we take the present and upon a frank comparison of opinions, they will generated. We eare not however, whether the Manager of the present and however, whether the Manager of the present and the harmony, welfare and success of the democrate party; but with a single eye to those interests; and the democrate party; but with a single eye to those interests; and upon a frank comparison of opinions, they will generated. We care not however, whether the Mercantile jects. itself with proper decorum, or we may notice it in a manner that shall make it repent its temerity. Besides, we never knew that its willingness to answer one was an honor, but are quite of another opinion. Our object in writing is not ship to attract the attention of or get into a discussion with any and morals, the political body would neither have esteem more seriabler whatever. We have higher aims; we address ourselves to the people—on them we hope too make a favorable impression, both of our stallity and our honesty—to them we hope to make a sown the superior qualifications of our stallity and our honesty—to them we hope to make a sown the superior qualifications of our stallity and our honesty—to them we hope to make a sown the superior qualifications of our stallity and our honesty—to them we hope to make a favorable impression, both of our stallity and our honesty—to them we hope to make a disappear from the dark news of ignorance: To form the length into the quantity into the painful but august duties of instructor, if he understands the importance of his situation, and is capable of fulfilling it, is deserving a double acknowledgement from this country. The Mayor, siterwards acominated Mr. Hubert again to the same office, wish the intension, probably, of allowing him to regulate his own asomination, in firnishing eccurity within the delay preservined. But of the ten votes gives in, Mr. H. obtained soily foor; one v. to being for blanc, and the other five he gain against him. The rules of the city council requires that elections should be quarted by a majority of the members present; according to that, it ought to be supposed, thus a new balloting should have been had. But it was not done in this manner.
