A king the same chirry from or advetenes which we were witting to extend to them, we discrete all accidencion of past animovities. There have been advetenes which we were witting to extend to them, we discrete all tectification of past animovities. There have been adversor to our course, that would justify us in harsh and evero replica. But if we smart contest it, we feel too good natured to harri back bitter and vindictive retoris. As far as the destrines of our adversaries are concurred, we shall ever oppose them, but as regards the form in which those doctrines have been lead at our doos, theretakets upon our more tives have been lead at our doos, theretakets upon our more tives and the character of the party to which we are proud to belong, we are willing that the past should be an moltang. As victors; it is our provinge to other thems we have offered are not fair and homorables. We belong to that party which in the recent contest, has been signtatured as the collar party. It has been said that we were handed ender a few loaders who gave the word of comment, and that we hindly and implicitly obeyed it, without enquining into the reason or its justice. In our review of the struggle through which we have passed, it becomes us to take a passing notice of this charge, and to offer in reply to it; a few facts. Not many months age, there was at Tummany Hall, a man, who was the pride, the idul, the potchied of the party. Favors and honors were showered on him. He betd, as he sow hould, a furnities when at Tummany Hall, a man, who was the pride, the idul, the potchied of the party to which he might not have aspired. His moral character was personal unsported; the biening was usually but bland and topset of the people, there was not one among thous all who outshood him, he was a keeder as 'Temmany Hall. The timed and time serving counted his favor. They guided their acts by his.—the tred and faithful looked upon him as one of the trifts. Hi into the cause in which as not emanated, but hey tooked on hish as heart of trusted, so long as he proved homesty woring of that trust. His influence was graduated by his faithfuences. to Dr. McNeven, a gentleman generally popular on account of his respectable private character, and his eary career, and supposed to possess an overwhelming influence over the minds of naturalized hishmen. He too was a leader at Tammany Hall, and he too in an evil hour juned ivatier at Tanimany Hall, and he top in an evil hour juned inmostif to men against whose principles he had ben contending for years. Dr. McNeven, the frish patriot, the idol of his cointrymen; their leader, and a leader at Tammany Hall, apostatised and descript his old tried and true friends. "Now," said the leaders of the opposition, "the Tammany party must give it up. Doctor McNeven has left Tammany Hall and has brought over with him every one of his countrymen." And yet the same positical history which tells us that Ogden Hallman took, no use but himself away from Tammany Hallman took, no use but himself away from Tammany Hallman took, no use said. Dehisself away from Tammany Hall—also tells us that Dr. McNeven found when he was on the other side that he was "alone in his glory." None of his countrymen eried "God bles him." None followed him. He st ed a one—the ides him." None followed him. He stied a enc.—the solitary representative of trish degeneracy. It has been the fashion of the opposition to stigmatus naturalized brishmen as the most grossly blind, the most firmly fettered of all political bondom in the willing variable of masters who lead them wherever it piesses their will. The fate of McNeven for not having sacrificed his gains and wasted his powers to attraction for the brack of attraction for the brack of attraction for the brack of the Pour; and the writers were true to him so long as he was true to them. We have so ected two men of popular personal popularity, and peculiar influence at Tammany Hall, as evidence ify, and peculiar influence at Tommany Hall, as evidences of the truth of our r-mark, that the democrate of New York are true to their leaders only so long as their leaders are true to them, that they are firmly and devetedly attached to certain political principles, and the moment a leading man among them proves recreant to those principles, they cast him off. Can such a party be called a collar party? Can the men who compose it be stigmatized as duped and blinded followers who are attached to the leading men and not the leading measures of the democratic [4,17]
