The Sun speaks of General Harrison as having first received office from the elder Adams, as a reward of his black-cockade principles. If this were so, why did jarrameen and Madison continue him is office? They were apostles of democracy; but it seems they never made the marvelloug discovery that Harrison was a black-cockade federalist. The truth is, General Harrison has held office under every president, from the elder to the yourger Adams. Such was the purity of his life; the soundness of fits principles; the fervor of his patriotism; the strength of his intellect, that he felicited the confidence of them all, and was only displaced when General Harrison's authority is better than that of his traducers. He distinctly states in a leiter to Jadge Burriary, of Ohio, that he was rearred in the principles of democratic faith, and that when elected a delegate to Congress, the people of his territory knowing his unalterable aversion to the federal measures of John Adams' administration, exacted from him a promise not to speak in opposition to him.
