PAUL W. COLLENS,

Lamented Emperor.

Upon, this letter the New York Sun comments as follows:

Maximilitan's Death in Europe.

It is not unlikely that the brutal marder of the Austrian Emperor's brother may yet bring back to the Maximilitan's a blitter return. It is now understood that Francis Joseph has reconsidered his determination not to visit Paris, on account of Maximilitan's death, and that he will specify become the quest, if not the confiders, of the French Emperor, and, if general conclusions are not much at fault, two leading Christian Powers, of their position and influence, carrying with them the moral condemnation of the United States, and the world, against the late bloody deed, can hardy fail to demaind some marked Maximan punishment.

We add a communication from a late British resident in Maxico, who gives further interest.
