FROM THE INTERIOR.—We take the following from the News, of the 120d:
By the mail, on yesterday morning, we received papers from Washington and Hautswile, but nothing beyond. The Washington Ranger of the 16 h mat, easy, heavy rains have failed in that section, washing the soil in some places and damaging the cope. The same papers asys the crops are growing fixely, and the prespects of the planters very flattering. The Brazos was very high, and in evertail places out of its banks. We have a report from travellers that the Brazos was several miles wide at Washington, and continued rising. This intelligence has led to apprehensions of a serious loss of preperty on the bottom land plantations.

Fassatore, the liaisan brigand, is dead. He was the leaster of the band that recently took possession of the theatre at Forlimpopoid during the performance and robbed the saudience. A few days before his death, on the 23d of March, Passatore appeared in the public equate of Frada, a small town in the diocese of Taenza, while the inhabitants were going to church.—He was barefoot and stopped every passenger until he found one whose shoes fitted him. He took possession of them and paid their value. This could only have here done in a country whose people are deprived of every weapon of delener, and who therefore have no very ardent with to oppise the entenies of those who so deprive them.

Fassatore's death was striking. He, with his band, were in a certain house in the country, to which the Austrians and Pontifical troops betook themselves. But the banding, hearing of their approach, ambushed itemselves upon the road and saudenly surprised them with a sharp volley, killing two gens affirms, it was night, and the robbers made off. But in exit day the police hearing that two were concealed in a certain house, suproached it, and were received with a volley, wounding a brigadier of the gens darmes. The two then took to the dide, pursued and fired upon by the soldiers. They were wounded, but one excepted across a fiver, while the nilet, desperately fighting to the last, left dead. It was Steiano Fellone, surnamed If Fassatore.

The Screetary of the Treasury has, in conformity with a determination which I herto-fore referred to, commenced a searching reform in the administration of the several barroaux of his department. It is to be hoped that his measures will result in an improvement of his immeasures will result in an improvement of his measures will result in an improvement of the efficiency of the department, and secure the prompt dispatch of besiness.

There continue to be deep-toned complaints of the Mexican awards. Those who are discontented with their awards are all eager, however, to draw the amount from the Treasury-Affer that, a number of claimants will unit in representations against some of the decisions of the Black the Board. They talk of instituting a new and unofficial Board, who will, under their instructions, make a report to Congress of the management of the transport of the carries of the form of the form of the part first. Wress at Sea—Corpse Lashed on Board.—Captsin A. It. Poole, of the ship Lockmaber Castle, from Liverpool, March 19, reports that on the 4th of April, at 6, P. M., in lat. 45 27 and longitude 28 5 West, he fell in with and boarded the wreck of a vessel, water logged. To the stump of her muzzen man, of which about only eight feet remained, was leshed a body of a man, with fragments of clothing hanging from the legs. He had on sea boots, and appeared to have been dead two or three days. The vessel was apparently an English built bark, of about 502 tone, and was loaded with mahogany, some logs of which were washing out of the siern. She had probably been taken suddenly aback and damasted, as part of her nesis and spream which were redde—Her belify was sianding, from which Captain Proofe's men took the brase bell. There was no name upon it. This was the only article taken from the wreck. The yould not release the corpse, as the sea was breaking heavily over the after part of the ressel. The wind was blowing from the southwest. On the 5th of April, in lat. 45 lon. 32 10 W., Captain P. spoke ship Brooksby, of and from Glasgow, bound for New York, 17 days out. On the 15th of April, in lat. 45 lon. 32 W., the L. C. carried away ber muzzen up mat and top gallant yard.—N. Y. Commercial Identities.
