AU BUREAU DE

B. Z. CANONGE,

that while a Senator from Virginia he would no more accept office under the general Government, than if he were our minister to England he would accept a commission in the King's Army. I was never more pleased, nor ever admired him so much. It is incredible here that any man should refuse office, and people stare to hear of such a thing. Mr. T. will hereafter be as conspicuous for his political integrity as he now is for his splendid talents.

We were perfectly aware of the lofty spirit which actuates Mr. T. In wishing to see him in the Cabinet, his State nothing for herself—for she has conceded, not for office, but for principle—She asks nothing from him; but those who know his transcendent talents and his lofty spirit, wished to see him in the Cabinet, for the sake of his country. The disinterestedness which he expresses is honourable to him and to the state, but suppose him to refuse; and suppose all men like him to refuse and what will follow? That Gen. Jackson will fill his Cabinet with characters of the 2d or 3d rate, instead of men of the first order of heads; and the country will suffer in proportion.

The Postmaster General, it will be seen, is to be a member of the Cabinet—and to follow after the Secretary of the Treasury—that taking rank of the War and Navy departments. As there is no law specifying who shall or may constitute the Cabinet, we presume the President has a right to admit into it whomsoever he pleases—and in this manner, perhaps, to arrange their respective order of precedence—the question, is another question.

This, as will be seen, is precisely the selection published in this and other city papers on the 23d—and in allusion to which the Evening Post, of the next day, had a ludicrously solemn paragraph about letter writers from Washington, ending with the following specimen of ignorance, affecting superior accuracy and knowledge. The Italics are ours.

"We also might have advised our readers with conjectures, and perhaps, with respect to one or two of the departments, have come nearer the mark than any of the letter writers for the daily prints in this city. Yet, as we have made it a point throughout the whole of the late political contest not to mislead our readers by substituting conjecture for information, we think it will be wise to pursue the same course still.

One thing, at least, we believe our readers may depend upon, namely, that whatever may be the fact as to certain departments, the entire composition of the future cabinet is not yet settled. As the fourth of March is approaching, and as the reasons for any reservation in this subject diminish in force every day, we shall probably shortly give our readers some information upon which they may rely."

But the cabinet, the cabinet—what is to be said of such a piece of patch-work? New-England—all New-England, slighted—Virginia and S. Carolina slighted—the universal West, save only the favoured Tennessee, (for the Postmaster remains by his own strength, and not by favor, where he is)—all, all slighted—and the whole now admitted to be the work, the choice, the uncontrollable, though not by any means enshrouded decision of General Jackson himself.

What Virginia expected, and what she will feel, under her disappointment, may be in part gathered from the annexed paragraph from the Richmond Enquirer. Referring to the names named as those of the future Secretaries, and which are now admitted to be so, the Enquirer says—

We give this rumour as it has reached us. But we cannot believe that any definitive arrangements have been made. This first measure is the most important step in the whole administration. It will give its color to all the rest.—So M. Madison felt and said on the very day of his inauguration—and so experience proved to him. We trust that Gen. J. will not take any step of this description, therefore, without the deepest consideration, and the fullest advice of his ablest friends. We trust that he will at last present us with a cabinet, every man of whom is not only among the purest and most patriotic of his political friends, not so much personal friends; as friends of his election and of reform—but among the ablest men in the nation.—Every man of them the first in character the first in qualifications. Gen. J. has scarcely been long enough in the city to select and sound the wishes of such—and we shall therefore, receive with due caution every rumor which is wafted on the passing breeze for several days to come.

The same paper thus speaks of Mr. Tazewell:—

A friend has favoured us with the following extract of a letter from Washington, dated Feb. 20th.

"Rumor makes a new Cabinet almost every day.—Until yesterday, Mr. Tazewell was always embraced in it. He yesterday said, almost in terms,

NOVELTY AND VARIETY.
Entertainment in experimental Philosphy, Mechanics, Chemistry, Combination, and Optics;

By Mr. MARTIN,
AUTHOR of the Theatre of Novelties at Paris, & who has obtained the most complete success in all the principal capitals of Europe, and in the principal cities of the United States which he quitted in 1814.

To create this species of entertainment which has never yet been equalled. Mr. Martin has put in requisition, mathematics and all the physical sciences. His cabinet, the most complete and most interesting ever known, gives him the power of varying his exhibition every day as the number of pieces of mechanism is infinitely great and all appear so by themselves although apparently isolated.

He gives experiments in electricity, chemistry, hydraulics, all of the most elegant and novel kind; feats of combination and surprise, in a style remarkable for their ingenuity, and which are well deserving the attention of persons acquainted with the sciences.

The Entertainment will take place in the Ball Room, at the corner of Bourbon and Orleans streets, which has been properly disposed for the reception of respectable society.

But notice will be given of the first representation.
