By the treaties which they made with him, Austrian and Prussian Poland-that is, the provinces of the last partition—were partially released from the grass of those plunderers. It has been said that the treaties made between Napoleon and the military despots whom he crushed with their own weapons, were extorted from them by feer, and were no longer binding than so long as he had power-to enforce them. Then of what validity were the obligations incurred by Poland herself under the several treaties of partition? Was she a free ugent in accepting them? What virtue was here in the treaties of 1814-15, which reforged the chains of Poland, and settled Europe by enslaving it? > UNION HALL-Yesterday Mrs. Mary Ash, wife of a tradesman at Deptford, was charged with having committed an assault on Major John Purdy, an officer in the army of the United States.

The complainant stated, that on the precee ing evening, as he was walking along Depthord, he met the defendant, and merely said to her as he passed, in a low tone of voice, "Will you take me home with you. Miss?" when she, without further provocation, struck him a severe blow on the face with a jug she had in her hand. Mr. Chambers-That was a rost improper question to put to a decent woman. "Pray, Sir." said the magistrate, addressing the comlainant, "who, and what are you?"

The complainant in reply said, that he was an officer in the army of the United States of America, and was now residing in this country on his property.

Mr. Chambers, -If that is the mode in which you address respectable women in your own country, Sir, I must tell you that it will not do quite aufficient to arouse the feelings of any but an abandoned female.
