In New Oriogan in thirty years. We don't know to what degree the mercary in the therm-meter fell at an early hour, or before sunrise, but we do know that at 9 A. M., in a sheltered situation, it descended as low as 21. As the cold was considerably sharper just at daylight, we have no doubt the mercury must have fallen to at least 18. This sort of Lapland weather is something entirely novel here. Fancy in the streets of New Orleans the guirants from whatever quarter it might be the first of the free city or port of the free city or nonly a decrease from the torrid zone.
