Translation from French papers. 7 June. THE FLICHT OF DON MIGUEL

The report was spread yesterday, that Don Miguel, (to fled from the danger that threatened his lie) had taken vingt-hu c, et la cinquante troisième an refuge with 200 of his adherents on board of the English frigate Primrose, and that he had been immediately conducted to Portsmouth, seems to be plainly confirmed.

> Phare of Havre, June 5. Our private correspondence confirms the report of Don Miguel's flight to England; more than 20 regiments have joined their brothren at Aporto, or ma nifested the same principles.

Accounts from Malta to the 4th of May, have been received at Portsmouth; it is stated that the ports of Navarino, Modon, and Alexandria were blockaded by the Allied squadrons. The Russian squadron which was waiting for a reinforcement of six ships of the line from the Black Sea, had made sail for the Archipelago. The Ocean with Admiral Codrington on board was at Malta. Admiral de Rigny was at Corfu; the Warspite and a few french ships were to leave the harbour of Navarino in order to go and take communications of Count Capo d'Istria. The English ships the Glasgow and the Dryad were off Alexandria; the Isis having on board the Vice Admiral Sir Thomas Steins, was at Carabosa and continued her cruise against the pirates. The same reports give the astonishing news that a French frigate had been taken by an Algerine privateer and carried into Bona.

- The English journal (Glebe,) affirms that Sir E. Codrington is called back to be tried by a court martial, which is to examine his conduct in the battle of Navarino.
