Verplanck, and we have noticed, with a feeling amounting to regret, his avowed de tion not to enter into a discussion of the principles of the bill. What may be the issue of this project of ma. differtion in our tariff law, is a question, still involved in tainty of the future: but should we rely on the gleanings of opinions current at the capital, its advocates have reason to expect a decided majority of the representatives, with hopes of a trifling one in the senate. The utlesten Mercary, which has a trenchant way of settling the most momentous questions, speaks in very guarde terms of the bill—consuring some, and approving others of its provision. From this cautious language of the organ of nullification, an inference may be legitimate, that should the bill receive the force of law, the disunionists would be, if not satisfied, at least hemmed within a vicious

The Express.—Commenting on the fact, that an express was despatched from Washington to Charleston, and returned in the space of five days, the Editors of the National Intelligencer give it as their opinion that there was so object on the part of government, in this unusual despatch, but a view to ascertain by experiment, with what of emergency. This may be satisfactory to our friends of the Intelligencer; but we cannot realize the idea of the head the Intelligencer; but we cannot realize the idea of the head ever obtained enduring fame, which was prepared solely, of the post office department, sending on an express with even chiefly, with a view to immediate applause, and with should despatches, for the purpose merely of learning how our reference to the universality of the principles of critispeedily intelligence may be conveyed. This would be deen, by aboving an additional million, which would cover, not only extra expenses in time of peace, but meet those of indian warfare, if such should arise, as well as those of increased navel expenditure, from temporary collision with Foreign jewers, short of permanent warfare. We are not, therefore, justifiable, in raising more than 15,000,000 dollars as a permanent revenue. In other words, at least 13,000,000 dollars of the revenue that would have been collected under the Tariff of 1928, may now be dispensed with; and in

Draffic.—The following is an extract of a let-try received in town this morning: it narrates a dreadful-murder in a simple style, which is more impressive than a longthened narrative:—

GUERN'S County, Nov. 30.
I haston to inform you that another victim has been offer I hanten to infogm you that another victim has been offered at the shrina of the nightly legislators. A man of the name of Deegan, from Ballydavis, adjoining the Heath Chapel, with some more of his neighbours, went on yesterday to Maryborough to wincess the result of the commission. When Deegan and his neighbours witnessed sorie convictions they consulted with each other, and came to the determination of paying the amount of tithe against them to avoid the expenses attending on a conviction. Unfortunately for poor Deegan he separated from his neighbours, and on his way home (not far from Maryborough) was waylaid and left a lifeless corpse for a wife and four children to mourn his loss.

Although the mudder came to the hearing of several at an ealier period than this hour (three o'clock), yet not one of them would communicate it to me (though the sister of one of them is married to a brother of the gratest indifference: you would hear in other counties more regret expressed for the death of a neighbour's lamb than in this

The Address of Thomas Metcalf, Esq. to the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Brown University, has a character of novelty and boldness in the design and topics, which recommends it strongly to our favor. He discusses "the influence of popular opinion, taste and feeling on the character and pursuits of men of talents and learning," and shews how that influence is prejudicial in too many instances. He thinks—and not without reason—that "the tendencies of the present day are to regard the possession of extraordinary intellectual endowments as an odious monopoly, and the exercise of them, if contrary to the humors of a numeration and interesting the present day are to regard the possession of extraordinary intellectual endowments as an odious monopoly, and the exercise of them, if contrary to the humors of a numeration and overmatchthe exercise of them, if contrary to the humors of a numerisal majority, as a assurpation to be resisted and overmatched." Mere practical, in chanichal talent and production, are certainly magnified and exalted beyond their right; but among the tendencies of the day, in our country, might also be signalized that of overrating the qualities and performances of intellectual and literary mediocrity. We subjoin a few of Mr. Metcalf's apophthegma.—Nat. Gaz.

"By a mere glance at the lighter literature of modern times, we shall perceive that those works, which have retained the longest and deepest hold on public regard, were apecially designed to satyraze the vices, or ridicule the lolies, which prevailed among those to whom they were first addressed."

"It believe it may be truly asserted, that no literary work ever obtained enduring fame, which was prepared solely, or

"When preferment is the spontaneous gift of an intelli-gent community, acting on a considerate and impartial es-timate of moral worth, practical wisdom, unvielding firm-sess and intellectual superiority—it is an honor, to which as generous heart can be insensible. Its 'quality is not strained,' and it blesses the givers more than the receiver. But when it is purchased of a wheedled or maddened pop-alace, at the expense of dignity, consistency and principle; when it is conferred on creeping parasites, and boisterous ray and sciontifick journals of Europe. Its foundation of ten years' standing, has been marked by an equal period of processive improvement, until it has reached its present will-descrived popularity, among the great mass of readers, who draw both announcement and information from this species of publication.

These remarks are elicited by the appearance of a new series of the Albion, got up in a style of execution, which renders it a beautiful specimen of typography. While the materiof has been eminently improved; the intellectual portion is made up, with the same cultured taste, which has ever marked the articles of the Albion. There is more of sterling literature, genuine poetry, and useful science, in one columns of its selections, than in all the Atkinsoneisms, the Willesians and Morrisisms of your Lady's Books, and the position of the popular sufficiency in the popular sufficiency is composited in the history of their lives and of their unhonored and horrent end. And if I were called upon to select the least justifiable passages in the voluminous writings of Sir Walter Scott, I should point to the paffiations, or too gentle consumes, of the filth and profaneness of those writers, contained in his biographical sketches of poets and novelista, After readering all that is due to this wonderful man, and benefictor of our age, it must be asserted that the case of morals demanded from him a sterner rebuke of these abbaninations, than his good nature has given them."

Gen. Handlest.—The Washington correspondent of the N. Yo.k Daily Advertiser relates the following anecdote of this distinguished actor in the nullification party of South Carolina. "It is said the character of the man is often developed." Carolina. "It is said the character of the man is often developed in the boy. General Hamilton, when a boy, was impatient of control, hair brained, and given to the trial of bold, but inclusive rate experiments. When a lad, and at actool at Providence in Rhode Island, he took into his head one day, to test the power of gun powder on himself. For this purpose, he londed a pistol, and diliberately holding it against the middle finger of his hand, he shot it off, and the officer was that, which almost any boy of common sense wound have anticipated—the finger was blown off with the cords, and bones, to the palm of his hand. Many have probably seen the mutilation of his hand without knowing the cause of it." the cause of it."

question of the incidence or bearing of taxation, together with other not isses important theories of political economy, might be now discussed. But, for myself, I feel that after the years which congress, and public men elsewhere, an well as the mess, have discussed these points, and especially effect the simple discussion which has taken place during the present congress is would be presumption for me to think that I could now contribute any new general views, that would eslighted the house or the nation. In making these remarks, I speak not only my own unfeigned opinion, but, as I am fully authorised, that of them of my colleagues on the committee of ways and means, who have joined with me in reporting this bill.

Practical Pun.—Yersterday morning, a colored man was seen wending his very glong. Ninth street, bending under the weight of a large belief of heeftallow, but evidently at a loss as it regarded the end of his journey, till discovering on a dose plate the name of the writeriof this paragraph,* he made a dead halt, and set himself to the business of spelling out the name. The correspondence was exact—that would eslighted the house or the making these remarks, I speak not only my own unfeigned opinion, but, as I am fully authorised, that of them of my oblicagues on the committee of ways and means, who have joined with Practical Pun.
