It is estimated that the profit of printing the Post Office accounts lone, will amount to ten thousand follars; and there is alone, will amount to ten thousand dollars; and there is hardly a probability that a tenth put of the 30,000 copies ordered to be printed at the public expense will ever be read by any one—because every one who feels interest enough to wade through those long documents, will have liad an apportunity to do so through the public press, long before they will be translated by the muric printer. before they will be furnished by the puglic princer.

One of the strongest objections to the C. S. Bank, is, that while it exists we can have no lagislation but such as is calculated and intended to promote the interest and political intrigues of that institution and its corrupt adported.
