one of the ciordinate branches of the Government, decision, energy and vigor have marked its course, and the determination appears to exist to prepare the country for the last and gover alternative which the question presents. How will Great Britain set when she is made acquainted with these demonstrations!—
If we possessed the gift of prophecy which some of our cotemporeries, from their round and positive assertions, would seem to enjoy, we might attempt a predictions, but reduced as we are to the simple deductions of human reason and perspicately, we cannot hazard a conjecture which time and the result may eventually prove groundless. We are too remote from the theatre of action; the information farmished by the British press upon the state of public opinion in that country as too scanny; the zentiments so which the British press upon the state of public opinion in that country as too scanny; the zentiments so which the British press upon the state of public opinion in that country as too scanny; the zentiments on which the British press upon the state of the action of Congress will produce rurarked, and profound excitement, in Great Britain, whose people are little accustomed to witness difficult and complete and energy, and who may be somewhat astounded at the rapidity with which party fecting in this country has disappeared before the impulse of a genetous phariotism. We shall come in for more than our usual share of the scurribry, bravado and menace, with which British editions are wont to regale their readers whenever the American people exhibit a disposition to their may be raused, but will the Government be common to repulse their pretentions of England to universal dominion. The populace may be denome us, and the cry of "war" may or raused, but will the Government be common between the care.

pretensions of England to universal dominion. The populace may demonie us, and the cry of "war" may or raised; but will the Government be carried help levely on by the current of public feeling! with Sic Rosart Pext., as ottate, cautious and penetrating as he is, consent to involve his government in the certain persist and dubious issue of war, for the possession of a terrary which he cannot but know mays, in the end, form part and persel of the American Confidence! And in the worst of his hesitating to describe an egge rupture, and preferring a schaporary policy, will have power and influence, immense as they may be suffice to resist the despotasm of public opinion? These are problems which the inture alone can solve. In quantum like the one is form as, the solution to often affected by, if not absolutely dependent upon, causes that cannot always be happreciated. In the present instance, the gravest is unfortunately the most plaus?

This glance at the future naturally leads the mind back to the measures which have resently been adopted, and provokes the enquiry whether they might not have been averted. Here public opinion varies. We have heard many prudent and profound thinkers declare that the President and acted too precipitately in closing the nectointion, after offering to England less than she had previously refined; that have dispensed with the recombinedation to give notice of the termination of the joint commandig; that this was a dernier report to which recommended the way had always be had. They tell us that a status in the own we and masterly inactivity—sended entirely to our advantage; that American entigration would have rapidly filled the territory, absorbing the sear-tered handful of Ericitate access. have rapidly filled the servicey, absorbing the seattered handful of British colonies, and bringing that vast region necessarily ander the control of our Goveerument; that it would have been sufficient to extend to our countrymen she presection of our laws and institutions—in other words, effect to their behalf precisely what Great Britain has taken care to becompitals for her subjects residing in Oregon. It would have been time enough for ulcerior measures whenever ever direct opposition was attempted. The condition of the joint occupancy exposes us to the inconfectisec of placing our rived on the year twist giving her an opportunity of provoking a rupture and of assailing us while our preparations for defence are yea, inChere is doubtless some relassibilities to a the.

and comparishing of provoking a rupture and of asserting us within our preparations for defence are yet in complete.

There is doubtless some plausibility in this views arguments, however, are not wanting to these who behold in the action of the Government the desurantiation in the action of the Government the desurantiation in the action of the Government the desurantiation of the control of
