PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATE HENRY CLAY,

OF KENTUCKY.

Upon the election of Gen'l Jackson to the president v. Mr. Kendall, thus self condemned of the most ne arious practices against a man to whose kinds owed his start in the world, was promoted to office. He had helped to throw down the administration of Mr. Adams, and that was a sufficient claim to distu Mr Adams, and that was a sufficient claim to distinguished place in the confidence of the late president, and needed not the auxiliary influence of "honesty and cayability," to secure the advancement of those was presented it. From the moment he was installed in the office of fourth auditor, his cumping and sage city in the arts of lattery and trucking sycophane, there exists the unit of the "fifther of the control of the city in the tree or namery and trucquing sycophane, have enabled him to keep the ears of the "lifteerious and test and the "follower in the feotsteps" assid its storms that have scattered cabinets, and prostrated the nore unyielding and high minded supporters of the roaring hon and his jackal. After one of those outbreaks of presiden-tial wrath which were wont to end in the sacritice o-some intractable office holder, the lank lean figure of ndail was to be seen, in the night seas and at unwented hours, approaching the white hour to hatilf the honey of flattery into the care of powe and in a soft and bondsman's key insinuate himse

The senate had at one time resisted his most his want of character and general unworthmen And has appointment to his present office was a show and of but alas! the complexion of that but ve been sadly changed, the "knights of the blas sontment.
One of Mr. Kendali's first acts upon assuming the management of the post-office department, was to ad-dress a circular to the various postmasters, in which exhorted them to attend to their duties and no or country to assest them in singing meannas to its after. The whig party regarded it as an artifice-in-nited to find the public to the purposes to which he is resolved to apply his new gotten power. It was a active his system to seem the same where most be juried the devit and the very fact of his making a paractic devit, and the very fact of his making a paractic activity and positivities and medding of a builders was a certain indication that he intended to the terry thing against which he so piously demand. It has been amerited that he has used the part of the very time against which he so piously demand. It has been amerited that he has used that night is own up to the most corrupt and flay indication management of its concerns, and it has been sures than a structed that emberglement of its means has someware mached its chief officer. Too well persuaded am I of the great advantages to leave to a bolished, even with all its inconvenues.

I purpose briefly to examine, and sacretain in the not possible to enjoy these advantages without he not possible to enjoy these advantages without he abuses and delay, which leng practice has shown are attendant upon the requisition of an unanimous restrict. It is this unanisaty on which I intend to comment to work and as more of the abusefulies, and it or a while, as an arrangement, at no distant day, was are attendant upon the requisition of an amount of confirmation of the absurdities, and it comment, to point out some of the absurdities, and it possible, show that it is as little necessary to the administration of justice as are the gowns and wigs of the barristers of Westiminer Hall.

Perhaps in cases teaching life and limb, I would, anote in mercy than in justice, require an unanimous verdict only. But in minor offences, unademsanoral, and in all civil cases to require twylve men under outs to make up the same opinion on knetty points of law, is as absurd, as the attempt of the monarch of Spain, to make a dozen clocks keep time exactly together,—But I will be told that juries do often agrees in complicated cases, aye, it often happens that one, two or three sacrifies, their oats and consciences to a majority to small their imprisonment. that a Mexican minister plenspotentiary was to be des-patched to admiral Baudin. For the purpose of settling the difficulties existing between the two countries. t is not improbable that the central government it self has caused these reports to be circulated, to pre-pure public opinion for the inversible reception of some proposed arrangement.

Another runer was, that a despatch from admiral Baudin had been communicated to the government by Mr. Packenham, in which the admiral menaced the Mexican government with a renewed of hostilities, assignment since the affair at Vera Cruar in case the atter should persist in its obstituate rejection of the French clause; it was added, that as the firunces of the French admirat was well known, this document

That Justice delayed is justice deinad, is almost an axiom, and the suitor on the right side, had better at once lose his case, than waste his time, and throw his money into the bottomiess pit of chancery, without the least idea of a speedy termination to his suit, and the inevitable consequence is the gradual abelition of the sacred right of trial by jury. Such as who advantages, when a jury is composed of all honest and inteligent men, disposed to see and do right. But take a case so clear that twelve men could instantly determine, you have only to suppose one corrupt, stupid. Copy of a circular addressed to the different foreign commiss by admiral Bandin.

14. M. frigate Narciet, Auton Lizardo, Feb. 17, 1839.

Sir,—In the present cofitest between Mexico and Franca, the government of his majority netter seeks, nor has ever sought any timing bit to secure justice and protection to its subjects. As that justice and protection appear to be extended towards them in times portions of the Mexican states which have declared ser the jederal constitution, confirming the ports of Matsanesa, Tampeo, Solo-la-Marina and Luxjan, I have raised the bleckade from these pirits, massimuch as France entertains no hostility for those who free not hostile to her.

ges, when a jury is composed or an mones and interigent men, thisposed to see and do right. But take a care so clear that thelve men could instantly determine, you have only to suppose one corrupt, stupid or obstinate man on the jury, and his opanism, if perstated in, defeats, and consequently is more powerful than elever infinest and intelligent men. This is no exaggeration of fancy, but a case which every day of the jurymen drawn, and unless much valuable times a in the selection, and the danger that one man in twelve shall be an improper juryman, is certainly not improbable. Buddes, after having examined a juror, lawyers dislike to aflow whin to sit on their case, as some prejudice or dislike hight arise in the juror's mind against the examining lawyer.

That the members of the bar in this state figel and know this defect in our jury system, is clear from the fact that a large graportum of causes are tred, by the court, and not by a jury. In the country, with the exception of criminal cases, the trial by jury is growing fast obsolver.

A defendent with a very bad case, or one desifous of delay, occasionally prays for a jury, trusting that some single juryman may be mystified into a disagreement and thus preduce a mistrai.

The dispensing with the jury in so large a number of intercenting civil causes, has done very such to depress the eloquence of the bar; the argument assumes a colloquial style, which may be very legal but which has no claim to eloquence.

(Signes) CHARLES BAUDIN. We may add to the preceding news the following information derived from an unquestionable source.

Mr. Packenham, minister plenipotentiary from England, had been authormed by the British government to act as intermediator in bringing about an ami-cable adjustment between France and Mexico. To the overtures of this functionary, admiral Baudin replied, that he was willing as accept the intermediation, at the same time explaining the conditions, upon which he would consent to a pacific arrangement. Mr. Packenham had applied himself with great seal to his mission, and at the last accounts, February Aid, he was expected at Vera Cruz, together with
