TRICMPH OF THE CORN BILL.

TRICMPH OF THE CORN BILL.

Wilmer's European Times says:—The Peers have made short work of the Corn Bill. On Monday week it was read for the first time in their House, and the accord reading, after a debate of three nights, was cassed by a majority of FORTY-SEVEN. This places the success of the measure, in its future stages, be-the success of the measure, in its future stagers, beyond the probability of doubt.

Last week the public pulse was at a low ebb relative to the bill. Political croakers prognosticated its defeat, and business, which has been sadly impeded by the uncertainty of the future, was even more dult than usual. But the result of the meeting at Lansdown House on Saturday, where the Whig Perial met and discussed their differences on the subject, endally a resolution to sungert in its integrity the meamet and discussed their differences on the subject, ended in a resolution to support in its integrity the measure of the Government. From that moment all apprehensions vanished. The bill is now perfectly safe and will, probably, be the law of the land before another month has elapsed. The Committee is fixed for

On Monday, the 25th, the great battle on the Corn Bill commenced in the House of Lords. The second reading was moved by the Earl of Ripon, who, like its colleagues, can lay claim to no consistency on like subject. The two crack speeches of the night were those of Lord Stanley and Brougham.

The first named nobleman, whose name has been oprominently before the public in connection with his hostility to the bill, acquired himself ably, so far of noveity to some of the old threadbare arguments of the monopolists, by the light in which he put them, and there was a sufficient dash of personality and bitterness in his speech to make it piopant. But he spoke not with the air of trumph. His language and his whole bearing denoted a foregone conclusion—defeat.

Lord Brougham followed, and was delivered of some sound truths, mixed with much nauseous stuff about the talents of the aristocracy and the purity of their motives. He wound up with a labored pane-gyric on Sir Robert Peel and his personal sacrifices for the benefit of his country. "On the Same evening, the most notable affair in the Commons was the release of Smith O'Brien, who was discharged by the House, when the Committee of Selection that moved for his committal had brought its duties to a close.

In the morning the troops entered the gorges, and encountered the enemy which at times showed a force of 2,000 men all armed with muskes. The Caffers were repulsed wherever they could be met, and through took 1800 head of cattle and encamped. It is a fermion they were attacked by bodies of the Caffers and during the night were surrounded on all sides. Major Gibson, the Commander, sent for a reinforcement to Coi. Canales published an order a few days before Wilson reached Reinoss, calling the critizens to their allegistics and commanding them to hold no communication with the Americans. He, it as believed, was in, or near the town, and had expressed limited dearons of having a "talk" with Wilson, nothing more. The supposition is that his band is within the immediate vicinity of Reinoss, and should an opportunity present itself, would co-operate with such of the raicheron as might wish to dispute the progress of the Colonel's march.
