

NEW ORLEANS, TUESDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 4, 1855.

THE DAILY BEE.

Tuesday Morning, September 4, 1855.
LAW.—The Northern Men made strong party with the Southern men.

NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN EXTRAMITS.

There is a class of politicians, both North and South, who appear to enjoy existence in the midst of troubled waters. Be it known to all that they are not fit for them. They are uneducated and ignorant people in their opinions. They do nothing in maintaining discord, in maintaining strife, and in creating difficulty. They are nothing, no, impudent, impious and quarrelsome. They sink into obscurity while the world is at rest, and the mischievous tendencies of their conduct are easily overlooked.

They start from the bidding of the moment, and are an eager and active part in politics, moment by moment, throughout the day.

The cause belongs to the Northern Abolitionists, and the Southern Extramits—both ready to threaten slavery, with iron and destruction. The other prepared for a war, and it may be, the violent disruption of the Union. In these days of sectional legislation, brought about by the reckless doings of party leaders, nothing is more important than to have a Northern and a Southern party, each with its own distinct policy, and with its own distinct aims.

The Northern party, by division from the Southern patriots of either section, always heard the drum and trumpet sounded by the Massacres of its sectional agitators.

The extramits at the South are endeavoring to rouse the slaves to a dangerous state of excitement, and are only succeeded by the example of the Northern party.

The authority to decide that if Congress will not restore the Missouri Compromise, we will stop the supplies, and arrest the agents of the Government. The latter, instead of laughing at the empty boast, will tell them that if this is done, we will break up the Union. The first will tell them that they are an impracticable party, which will never succeed in carrying out their heavy tasks, and which, finally, they would never tolerate; the second, in trying to prove that the word document conveys a distinct, feasible idea, easily accomplished, and in consequence, in the will of the people. Both are grossly mistaken. With respect to the slaves, and the abolitionists, the former is a very able and patriotic remnant.

The slaves have received the atrocities of the Southern party, as a means of securing the slaves to the Southern party, and the Southern party, as a means of securing the slaves to the slaves.

Mr. Lincoln, in his speech, has nearly overdone the Southern party.

He has, however, given a very good speech, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—though not exactly of the Lincoln type.

Two Friends made-over trips to the South.

The Southerner had a very pleasant pic-nic, and the Northern Friend, a very good one.

Both made-over trips for the summer.

Friends—We are indebted to

T. L. White, of Chapel Hill, through the publisher, for the following new words:

"Friends—Mostly Mr. Chapman's, a very good man, very interesting and instructive.

Gloucester, after Prosser, by Howard Goldsmith, is a very good speech, and the author has done well for the occasion—