On the same occasion, Sir John Newport gave this testimony.

In a debate in this House soon after the union, I charged the then Lord Castle reagh with having broken faith with the great with of the frish people upon the that indignation which a noble mind na- portance of blocksding the Dardanelnée de l'Inde sendance des Etats-Unis tion of faith-on being charged with hav-H. I beg the House to attend to that word pledges, for it is upon that word that the distinction furns. The noble lord denied my charge, and appealed to his right henourable friend, Mr. Elliott, who then sat by the side of his lordship, to confirm him in the declaration that no pledges del been given. The right honourable tieman said that the noble lord was Eght that, in fact, no pledge had been given. The Mouse cheered, and the noble lord himself was peculiarly loud in calting out John 'hear, hear!" Mr. Elligtt, hewever, as soon as he could proceed said-"If the poble lord will hear me out, I will explain. myself. No pledges were given-but if. no pledges were held out, suggestions were made, and hopes excited that the immediate consequence of the anion would light wi be the granting of the claims of the Ca. Scurate tholics, and but for those hopes and ex- tified, pectations that union would never have harbout been carried. (Cheers.) "And the noble lord did not, in fact, attempt to deny the statement, but contented himself with letting it pass without an answer. (Hear!) I ask the House to take the question on the real merits of the union that was so effected; I have the authority of Lord Castlereagh himself, for saying that it was so effected; for he did in his presence by wy right honourable friend, than whom a man more indued with high principles of honour never lived. A consideration was thus given for the claims which are now made, and when it is said that the pledges we speak of, if given at all, were given without consideration, I say that we have the United Parliament for the consideration, and I will declare that it is my belief, that if the union had not been so effected (wher the Treaty of Amiens, and when the war broke out afresh) Ireland would no longer have been in the possession of England."

"This is not the place to discuss the merits of the 'unexpected' and 'untoward' event of Navarin, in which, we will not permit ourselves to doubt Sir Edward Codeington acted, or thought he was acting, conformably with his instructions: but we may be allowed to observe, that Lord Collingwood, with the feelings above expressed, would have put in practice every effort at conciliation, before proty there, to proceed to the capital of ceeding to extremities. In every point of view, therefore, to say nothing of the waste of life, the affair of Navarin was, a most untoward event; or, as the admiral calls it, a 'disastrous extremity.' " We are e 6 communicate to our readers, f most interesting discoveries have recently been made in the interior of the important, but hitherto little known, island of Madagascar, through the laborious and indefatigable exertions of captain Barnes, late owner and commander of the Minsuel. This ties on the 19th day of April, 1819, jointly with gentleman (who was employed by gov- Pierre Despan and Louis Chenevert, as securi ernment to settle the new established ties on the 20th day of June, 1820, jointly with settlement of Melville Island) had the ties-on the 17th day of December, 1821, jointly misfortune to lose his ship, which, with with Arnaud Beauvois and Etienne Simon, as se the government brig Lady Nelson, em- curities on the 7th day of March, 1822, jointly ployed on the same service, was cut off with Southene Allain and Etienne Simon, as se by the Malays at one of the Molucca inintly with Pierra I amin 1823, islands. It was not without considerable difficulty that he obtained permission from the chief who was in authori and morasses of indescribable difficulty, he effected in safety; and on reaching July 23 the capital he was received with great courtesy by Rahama, with whom he became so great a favourite that he remained with him for upwards of five months, in the course of which period he acquired a mass of information, of the most useful description, relative to that extraordinar country and people.

"Rahama is described as a Prime of great talent and power, governing an immense population with the most despotic authority. The capital is of very considerable extent, partaking much of the Arabian character, to which origin also Captain Barnes considers the natives of the island may be deduced. Iron, copper, and silver ores, of the richest quality, abound in every part of the interior; and the country possesses every capability of becoming, when civilized, of the utmost importance. It takes, of which there are many in the interior, are under the influence of tides, the waters rising and falling regularly several inches on the tide hours. We shall endeavour to communicate to our readers further particulars relative to this interesting island. Capt. Barnes proceeds in the Hawes to Sydney, as is western coast of New Holland, into which the River of Swans (as it is call led) empties itself; and, from his observations, he considers it quite practicable to pass from thence to Port Stevens, on the east coast, which he purpose to attempt if he receives proper encouragement, which there can be no doubt that the Sydney Government will abundantly and cheerfully afford."

In the church yard of Aldworth near Newbury, Berks, is a yew-tree which, according to the best information, is not less than 800 years old. The girth of one part of the trunk is above nine yards, and its branches extend over the graves beneath to an immense extent. - Eng. Paper.
