NEW-ORLEANS.
SATURDAY MORNING, APRIL 26, 1845.

ARRIVAL OF THE GREAT WESTERN.

The steamship GREAT WESTERN, Capt. Mathews arrived at New York on the morning of 16th instant, having left Liverpool on the 29th March. She brings Liverpool papers to the 29th and London evening of the 29th. The Great Western experienced very rough weather during almost the entire passage. The political intelligence is not particularly important, but the commercial advices are more so, and we regret to see some falling off in our great American staple. The duty on the raw material has been repealed, and the effect has been to lower prices 5/16d—the actual amount of the duty—in addition to which there has been a further decline of from 1/8d to 3/16d, which after all, is the only real decline that has been experienced.

The packet ships from New York had arrived out, after very long passages. The news of the annexation resolutions, and the inaugural of Mr. Polk were both received in England about the 25th ult. The latter was the subject of severe criticism, and the success of the Texas resolutions had excited a lively sensation, amounting almost to astonishment, as it was not previously believed in England that they could pass the Senate.

The new customs act, reducing the duty on a great number of articles and repealing it entirely on others, had gone into operation, "and," says Wilmer's Times, "a great number of free entries were passed in consequence for goods which have for a considerable time been housed in the bonded warehouses, but which are now free of duty, and the officers of the warehousing department will be no doubt very busy for a time, until the goods on hand, now declared to be free of duty, are delivered, when it is expected that the bulk of the free goods imported from the present time will be delivered direct from the quay at the side of the importing vessel, thus doing away, with the necessity of placing them at all in the bonded warehouses."

The same paper notices what it calls the "Recall" of Mr. WHITE, our consul to Liverpool, whose resignation or appointment was rejected by the Senate, and makes some sensible remarks on the impropriety and disadvantages of such frequent changes in the consular depart. At the same time it speaks in very kind complimentary terms, of the manner in which Mr. WHITE has discharged the duties of his office since his arrival in England.

The agitation of the Repeal question was evidently subsiding in Ireland, though a great dinner had been given to O'Connell and a portion of his "tail" in the city of Kilkenny, at which all the old topics were made over.

The Queen's visit to Ireland, during the summer, appears to have been determined on, and Mr O'Connell and his followers trust they must have their breath re-stablished for a lusty exhibition of groans for "Peel and his associates," whenever they could be caught by themselves; but the repealers must be careful not to groan when the Queen or prince consort, Lord Peel, and Graham could be found separated from majesty; they must have plenty of "cheek music."

The Dean of Westminster has been appointed to the Bishoprick of Ely.

TEXAS, &c.

We have been considerably amused at the tone of the British press in reference to the Texas resolutions. They are of course excessively astonished, and monstrously indignant; and abuse the United States with more than the average proportion of hatred and malignity. The London Times, the Tory—comments upon it in the following extra satirical strain:

From the London Times of March 27.

The consent of Congress to the annexation of Texas is an event so long expected, that the question of its justice has gradually merged in the vision of its certain accomplishment. There can now be no reasonable and thoughtful man of the Union could venture to entertain a strong moral objection against it; and their arguments are on record. It was, in fact, the policy of the cause of the Union, the newest and most active elements, were in favor of the measure. Their eyes were always reverting to Texas. Texas unappropriated, like independent Mexico, was the point of danger to which the pressure of the Union; but that there are other eyesores to the ambitious gaze of that people. Whatever they see they love, whatever they love they covet, and whatever they covet they endeavor to obtain.—But Texas was the first thing in their way, and formed the bold fore-ground of their hopes. Texas adjacent, bold, independent, well furnished and tempting to the weak and impolitic rulers whose yoke it had broken, already peopled and governed by the citizens of the Union, offered to them the same happy prospect. Texas, was an acquisition absolutely necessary, not so much to the happiness, as to the very comfort, the ease, the sleep, the digestion, of certainly more than half the republic.

The only part of the business, therefore on which there could be any surprise, will be the particular time and manner in which republican wisdom and taste would select for the acquisition. To an European understanding there is something quite grotesque in the time and manner actually adopted. The Congress of this moment, the creation in the very point of time between the two presidentships. Mr. Tyler completes his career with a determination which he cannot have the smallest share in carrying into effect, which will be engaged throughout the whole term in the arduous execution of a project imposed upon him at the first moment of his official existence. Mr. Polk
