LONDON, April 11 .- The debate on the second reading of the reform bitl is again adjourned. It would apear that some expectations were entertained by minis ters that the discussion might terminate last night, for earl Grey, in a circular to the supporters of the bill, present a full attendance in anticipation of a division. Att sorts of reports are in progulation on the subject of the division. Some think that the motion of the doke of Buckingham will have the effect of depriving numsters of several votes. The general persuasion however is, that ministers will carry the second reading by a small majority. Provided only there be a majurity, the smaller the better, as it will render it the more necessary to secure the bill against any institution in its subsequent stages. The duke of Buckingham, by strengthening the minority, may thus unaptentionally be the means of promoting real reform.

The motion, of the dake of Buckingham was to be made only in case the second reading should be negatered to the more distributed and restricted in the control of the control the 16th April, to bring in a bill for giving two repre-sensatives in parliament to those large towns which, by their opplence and commercial importance, were cut-tled to be represented. This would be the first object of the bill. A second object of the bill would be to conjunt and consolidate certain boroughs, each of conjunt and consolidate certain boroughs, each of which now returned two members to parliament so as to return two members for the consolidated boroughs; the purpose of this being to prevent the members of this being to prevent the members of the holls of the return two members of the being to prevent the holls of t an addition to the present members of the house of positiveness, but his feelings were strongly excited positiveness, but his feelings were strongly excited commons by the introduction of members for places not before represented.
