From a Philadelphia paper. We have before us a very interesting Report of "the Liverpool East India Association on the subject of the Trade commerce with China, thus-

"On the average of the first year ten did not exceed 2,735,090lb. On the ping his anchor.-1b. average of the three first years of their renewed intercourse with China, after their last war with Great Britain, they exported 8,607,173lb. yearly. On the average of the years 1825, their exports

"The exports of the Americans from China, it will be seen by this, have increased in 25 years 387 per cent. Those of the East India Company, in the same time, have increased only 23 per cent.; indeed, for the greater part of the time, they have been stationary or retrograd- tional councils."-John Randolph in 1822.

"Excepting that to Great Britain and the next election, whoever else is nomin-Canada, the East India Company have ated. "The export trade of the East India long been statiouary. On the average of six years, ending with 1820, it amounted annually, at its Chinese valuation, to 1,491,173L; their average vearly exports, from their Indian territories to China, amounted, in the same period, also at the Chinese prices, to 368,521/., making their total imports into China 1,859,694/. Excluding, of sing huit, et la sinquante-trossème an- course, remittance of territorial revenue in merchandize, which is not trade, their exports from China may be taken for the last twelve month, under the at the same amount as the imports, which will make their whole Chinese commerce 5,719,388.

"With a population of 22,700,000 and after an intercourse of 150 years anding, our trade is but 8 per cent. greater than that of the Americanswith less than half of our populationwith not one half of our taste for the great staple of Chinese export -and with so comparatively recent a knowladge of the Chinese trade. When we go a little further into the matter how ever, we shall find, that the profitable and effectual trade of the Americans is much greater than that of the Esst India Company.

"The East India Company laid before the Trade Committee of the Lords, in 1820 and 1821, a statement of their exports from Great Britain to China, for a period of twenty-six years, commending with their last charter. In the first year of their statement, their exports, consisting of woollens and metals, amounted to 731,559/.; in the last year of the last charter, there was an increase upon this of 50 per cent.

"Of the eight years of the present charter, of which an account is exhibited, there is, with one inconsiderable exception, a decrease of experts year after year; and in the last year of the statement they are less by 15% per cent. than they were 25 years before. Upon 15 successive years, there is a heavy loss sustained; and out of 26 years; three only exhibit a profit, and this a very triffing one. In the whole period the loss sustained is 1,668,1031. which is of course so much of the national capital wasted and destroyed."

> Inconsistencies .- Men who act and speak without any settled principles, must be, some time or another, guilty of inconsistency. Take the following extracts as an example:
