WAR NEWS.

[From Western papers.]

A Hanoverian Legion.

Paris, July 21—Evening.—The Government of France has organized a Hanoverian Legion.

France's Supporters and Enemies.

Paris, July 21—Evening.—Le Prespais says that the French Government is in receipt of highly satisfactory intelligence in connection with the war question, from the governments of Austria, Denmark, and Spain; but, from all information that can be ascertained, it is very apparent that the sympathies of Russia are unmistakably with Prussia, and, that demonstrations of a positive character to this effect are daily looked for from Russia.

The Troops Are Passed.

London, July 21.—The Times this morning eloquently deplores the death of M. Prevost Paradol. The Times lauds his "gifts, genius, treasures of knowledge and thought, his mastery of the English tongue, English institutions," etc.

The Prussian Headquarters.

The Prussian headquarters are now at Kreuzenach, eight miles north of Bexrin, on the river Nohor.

The War.

Washington, July 23.—The Prussian and French Ministers here both regard the cable telegrams said to have been received in Wall street from Europe that peace is now on foot to secure a peaceful solution of the difficulty between France and Prussia, as entitled to no credit. They say that the absence of more definite news is caused by the course of the French Government in suppressing, as far as possible, all intelligence on military movements. They, however, look for a battle before another week rolls round.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

About 12½ o'clock yesterday, a boy [illegible] Dan Sullivan, by Charles W. Pratt, residing at No. 109½ Camp street, was run over by carriage No. 107, at the corner of Camp and Bella streets, and was seriously injured. He was taken home and the [illegible] driver, [illegible] arrested.
