From the Lundon Morning Post, of January 1. The Whig Ministers have carried all their measures and yet the Whig Ministers papear to be as week, as divided, and as for from discounting public confidence as ever.—
They have balled the Throne and the Peerage; they have passed the Reform Bill; they have virtually disfranchized the respectability of the continutry, by giving an unfair predominance to those sections and chause of the community which they theanth there exalls most easily influences they tire respectability of the country, by giving an unfair predominance to those sections and characs of the community which they thought they could most easily influence; they have secured as ally in France, on the easy terms of sacrificing the interests of Britain, and the two nations, by uniting their mintary and naval puissance, have most herbicically succeeded in capturing Antwerp from the Dutch.— They have rearm the Conservatives (they say so at least; we are not questions after the mock bill; and are certain of tremandous majorities, and yet, strange to say, they seem nurther than ever from the groat goal of their ambition, the efficient Government of the country. How happens this?
Their policy is uniformly antier a lonal, and this the country perceives; their system has been based upon selfshness and fraud, and this all parties have detected; they have consequently, no real support from any influential portion of the community, and this becomes more manifest every day, whe will not undertake to say, that these men cannot govcent the moon, but we will tell them now, as we have told them before, that they are utterly incompetent to govern the may do a considerable quantity of mischief before public indignation shall make retirement inevitable we admit, on we deny that any conceivable combination of circumstances can enable them permanently to govern the country. The treason of the reform bill scens to have done its worst in disfranchising property and intelligence, and preventing the sense of the country from being fairly represented in its partiament. But is the parliament, therefore whig. Certainly not. Perhaps we shall be sufficiently exact to the purposes of general reasoning if we regard the new lease of commons as one-third conservative, one-third whig, and one-third free, from the trainnels of party, but having a bias towards radicalism; and, we ask, with such a hause how can the whigs get on? They must lean either the conservatives or to the destructives, or they will be in the slough of despond upon every great question. If they should adopt conservative principles, which would be their be at and wissest course, they would doubtless accure the huest support of the great conservative parity but, indiging from their pact can inct, we cannot-believe that they will have principle or wisdom enough to do this. From what we know of the vacillating unsteady obstancter of the men, and the awkwardness of their position, we should no wond when we would be induced by the isopardy of the exigen you do the monent, in the hope of keeping both parties at bay, and so doating on aglong are they can from one quanter-day to another. The interest first felt isbeut multification, says the Philadelphia Pennsylvanian, seemid to be very rapidly subsiding in this part of the country. At first, it was considered a very dangerous and malignant political disorder; threatening the much of the states and the pages of the country. It may goosees these symptoms still, but we are much assishes if we imagine that the nullifices of South Carolina can lay stolent hands spon the peace of the country, with impunity. There is in that state a streng, able, determined, and patriotic party—nearly as numerous as the nullificerand to their effects and sacrifices is the country indebted for the patient stull enjoys. The union party in South Carolina, is compassed of the most talented men in the state—the most inflaential—the most talented men in the state—the most inflaential—the most virtuous—and the most putriotic. For neveral years they have sustained the bitter and unreleasting hoptility of the nullifiers—they have noticed their seting hostility of the nullifiers—they have noticed their presents—and are still watching their insidious attacks on the constitution and union of the states. Throughout spen the constitution and union of the states. Throughout the whole neath, a party, identified with the union party in floath Garolina, is rapidly forming, having for its object the preservation of the union, the integrity of the government, and the destruction of multification. In another election, it is expected that even is Bouth Carolina, the strength of the nellithers will be dissinished, if not broken down entirely. At present, they strut about and say, "We are the state," but by effect, and perseverance, the saion party expect to plack this out, of their mouths. They will leave them, however, the blue cockade and the button, by way of a keepakte—pothing more.
