A boy who stut-tered and a girl who lisped Once played at the lov-er's
Now the boy who stut-tered and the girl who lisped Be-neath the old oak tree game. It was hard for the boy to— tell his love, But he sat. And the girl blushed red at his words of love, And her

And I'll thay thum words that thure - ly will thur - prise you,

I lul - lul - lul - lul - lul - lul - lul - - love but you!"
I will be your thweest-heart, and I'll thtick to you!"

(Business)

NOTE: At  marked "business," the stuttering boy whistles and snaps his finger before he is able to conclude. The doting girl, at this point, pauses while she twists her tongue to pronounce the word "stick."
