visions may be heard by the witnesses and all other persons presert, and if it appear to be in regular form the execution of it shall be ordered, and it shall be recorded. The original of the will thus proved, remains in the court, and is deposited with the trecords, after being marked by the judge with the word ne varietur at the bigning and end of each page.

Testaments made before a notary do not require to be proved, that their execution may be ordered; they are full proof of themselves, unless they are alleiged to be forged. Nuncupative testaments under private signature, cannot be executed until they have been proved by the declaration on eath of at least three of the witnesses, who were present when they were made. The declaration of the witnesses, who were present when they were made. The declaration of the witnesses, who were present when they were made. The declaration of the witnesses required for such proof must state in substance, not only that they recognize the testament presented to them as being the same that was written in their presence by the testator his witnesses are may be; but also trait they recognize their segnatures and that to them contained jak last will, as the case may be; but also trait they recognize their segnatures and that of the testators at the food of the instrument, if they have signed it, or the signature of him who signed for want of knowing how.

mous, made use of in attaining office.

Great political parties, by which the nation has be often pointed and convulsed, would be avoided.

Two years is too brief a time to allow of their forma-tion and proper combination. The country would again, would operate auspiciously upon persons holding office. Finding it difficult, if not impossible, to determine upon the successful candidate. They would refrain from interference in the canyas further than by depositing their votes. No longer holding office as the price of parisina service, they would learn to look to the people as their real employers. The president, thating nothing to promote but the public would reasualt it alone in the choice of officers, and remortals for political causes would become unknown.

The argument that such frequent changes of the president, would be attended by unsteadiness of action, is considered by the writer erroneous. Slight oscillations there would be, but these would give more requisitive of more requisitive for the provident would be attended by unsteadiness of action, is considered by the writer erroneous. Slight oscillations there would be, but these would give more requisitive formorement than a change very eight or ten years. The senate is changed by thisfis every two years—thence it assadiances. Were it tastly revolutionized every six years, its influence in maintaining the steadineess of legislative action would be greatly impaired.
