[CONTRIBUTED TO THE NEW ORLEANS BEE.]

From Memphis.

Memphis, March 21.—A scouting party of the First Ohio Infantry reports that the Tickfaw bridge, seven miles from Pontchatoula, has been rebuilt by the rebels.

Information has been received this morning, from Corinth, that the Yankees are reinforcing in the Tennessee river.

From Norfolk.

Norfolk, March 20.—The Minnesota, which arrived here as convoy to the Ric Rapp, is badly disabled, but not much.

Four transport steamers, full of troops, are in the Roads. It is supposed they are designed to reinforce Burnside.

The rebels have evacuated large Federal trenches at Fort Magruder. A number of vessels destroyed by confederate storms burnt to ashes yesterday.

From Augusta.

Augusta, March 21.—A private dispatch, just received from Savannah, says our troops are advancing from Cheraw. The enemy have left Marlboro.

From Norfolk.

Norfolk, March 21.—Nineteen large transports, steamers and sailing ships came into the Roads yesterday. The most of them left this morning. It is supposed they are bound south.

The St. Lawrence is at anchor in the Roads, with Burnside on board.

The 23d Pennsylvania, on which the Union flag has been placed, would not be seen from shore yesterday.

Information that came to us to-day from Hampton Roads, and is of undoubted truthfulness, and from departure.

From Augusta.

Augusta, March 21.—The Savannah Journal of this morning learns that the Federals landed yesterday at Red Bluff, eight miles from Savannah. It is supposed there were about 7000.

The Republican says official information has been received that 1000 Federals landed on Hilton Head early the morning.

Beaufort reports that 12,000 had landed from transports and are preparing to march on the mainland.

Great activity prevails among the Confederate troops and the Carolina and Georgia coasts.

The Republican copies a dispatch from the Richmond Examiner, dated Wednesday, March 19th, which says Brig. Gen. McClellan, to-day, assumes command in the General-in-Chief, and Secretary Stanton will act under him during the change. It is said that Gen. Halleck is to be the Generalissimo of the Union armies.

THE LINCOLN PROCLAMATION.

A proclamation was communicated by the Southern people, of old governor has been the subject of the comments of the journals of the Confederate States. We have not yet had time to read these documents, and we cannot form any opinion of them. We have not yet had time to read the address of the President himself, but we cannot help entertaining the opinion that Mr. Lincoln would have done wrong to abridge the Executive, and that President himself has quite naturally denounced our duty in making light of Black Republican threatenings. Mr. Lincoln himself is not a man to be despised. It is true his intellect is questioned, but he possesses an immensely cunning mind, and a singularly tenacious will. He is possessed of that kind of cheek who, when they wield authority, can issue a most dangerous weapon. Lincoln was the candidate of the Chicago Convention for the Presidency. He was elected by a sectional minority, and he came in by sectional, but unconstitutional majority, in connexion with treason to the good principles of the Union to which he is indebted for the universal discontent he occasions. He says nothing beyond the Chicago platform. This fundamental epitome of anti slavery doctrines is for him paramount to every thing. It is not to be abandoned or modified in cases concerning the interests of the country, the nature of war, the principles of genuine republicanism, the sovereignty of the people, or the great questions of humanity and justice. His words are these, He can go nowhere and be honest consistently in the Chicago platform. Truly would this have induced him to surrender it, and with them not obtain a single jot of his determination to enforce it.

The unconstitutional obstinacy of ABRAHAM LINCOLN does not, however, explain the entire boldness of a cruelty spirit. He is par incapable to the discovery of impracticable measures, or to the creation of compromises and reconciliatory things. He is willing to rule on the line's bible with the fool's dance. He thinks the labor of overcoming the resistance of the Confederate States would be materially facilitated, if he can only split division and discord among the slaveholding and non slaveholding States. He is not only still divisions and discord among the slaveholding and non slaveholding States. He is not only still divisions and discord among the slaveholding and non slaveholding States. He is not only still divisions
