TWESDAY (MORNING,) DECEMBER 14, 1830.

The business of Revolution goes successfully on in Europe; and judging by the proclamation of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland and Mr. O'Connel's letter, we doubt not that that country is ripe for resistance to English government; the letter was written to say nothing less of it in a very lawyerlike style; and whilst he, ostensibly, recommends tranquility and order to all orders, he holds out to them the certainty of their triumph in a certain season, which is approaching : we do not believe this epist'e will obtain for Mr. O'Connell much credit either from his friends or opposers, the first will complain of his want of frankness, and the latter of his actual duplicity-with respect to England we are assured, there is nothing in the handbill circulated, in London and Brighton, to give the least that a well regulated conspiracy is never preceded by handbilly or printed declarations; all is a like dark and silent, and the blow is struck before its voice is beard, or a pen is employed -besides if the committees favorable to revolution, intended to act, upon the public mind per force of handbills; the large manufacturing towns of Birmingham, Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield. Coventry &c. would have been overspread with them—this does not appear to be the case; besides the habits of the people of England are more passive than their Irish brethren; they are more contented with their laws which though severe are admitstered with purity and impartiality; add to this, the King is popular and if any measure obnoxious to the great body of the people, should be proposed by the Duke of Wellington and his Calanci; we doubt not that William the III; would soon take the seals from them and call in the aid of abler and more patriotic men: and that certainly, with his experience, he would not permit the noble Duke or any other man to lace him in the predicament that the conduct of Prince Polignac plunged Charles the Xbefore we give credit to the fact of any revoluti mary movements having taken place in England, we shall wait for European intelligence in confirmation of it.

AMERICAN THEATRE.

We have read to day of the arrival of Mr. Caldwell and his Company in this city; we wish to however, when the language of the proprietor of a Theatre is submitted to our judgment, we shall, like the public, wait for convincing proofs that he may not be under a mistake himself; in talking of police, Mr. Caldwell states that his Theatre 'obtained, last season, the preeminent name of being the best regulated Theatre in the Union;" we think it strange that no such report has, 'till to day, reached our ears, and intimate the Orleans Theatre, the Park, the Philadelphia and Boston theatres, we conceive that some insincere friend has flattered Mr. Caldwell into a belief of the reality of this part of his statement. For ourselves, we are friendly to the Camp-street Theatre and, in making criticisms on the performances which may take place in it during the theatrical season, we shall endeavour to hold the balance fairly between the public and the manager: and "nothing extenuate nor aught set down Southern Mail.-Yesterday We had notice hat a part of the Southern Mail which had been missing for fourteen days had been received. This day there is another omission, or an entire failure of the mail from beyond Philadelphia. We upon the arrival of the hyperborean defenders of find that it was received in that city, as the papers of last evening contain extracts from southern papers as far as New Orleans, consequently the neglect must be between Philadelphia and this city. We believe it will be conceded by all concerned, that more failures have taken place on the great southern route, within twelve months, than, on any other, for several years. The Post Master General should cause an invesigation, and apply the remedy.

Williams, the only survivor of the three who esptured Major Andre, has arrived in town to attend the celebration of the French revolution on Thursday, and will be a guest at the public dinner in the Ninth Ward on the day. He is in his 77th year, with his faculties in perfect preservation uneasiness to the King or the Cabinet; the fact is and his constitution subroken by age. He was attracted to the city by the russour of the extensive preparations for the celebration, which may well appear magnificent to those who see our city newspapers so craimined with the account of them, that little room is left for any thing else. A messenger has also been despatched from the Ninth Ward for Enock Crosby, the prototype of Harvey Birch; to desire his presence at the festivity. A public address, we learn, will be de-livered in the Ninth Ward. (Ev. Post.) (Ev. Post.)
