twelve feet further north-eastward, where it was broken down and destroyed. And sinking deeper there, they came to another floor of terras, four feet five inches below the surface of the first, and running all the way under it; for they presently discovered that there was a large cavity between them, and that the upper floor was supported by rows of brick pillars, which stood upon that beneath. Clearing the earth away from off the second, or last mentioned floor, they came to a wall of hewn stone, rising within about two feet of the surface of the ground, at the distance of fifteen feet from the broken edge of the upper terras, which latter, it was evident, had originally extended to this wall. Here seems to have been the boundary of the works on the north-east side. Soon afterwards they came to another upright wall on the south-east side, which joined to, and made a right angle with the former. These appear to be the north-east and south-east walls of a vault, whose dimensions are not certainly known, as the other two walls are destroyed. In each wall were observed five massy stones, forming the crown of an arch, the cavity of which lay almost intirely below the top of the second terras. In order to examine these arches, a small part of the under floor was beat up along the sides of the walls, and at the depth of thirty-four inches, there was a third strong floor of terras, running under the second, the space between being filled with rough stones, thrown together in a promiscuous manner. This last served as a floor to the arches, which had nothing in them but rubbish, and at bottom a bed of wood-ashes about two inches thick.

A large hole was made through the south-east wall, about eight feet from the angle where the two walls join. This wall was found to be forty inches thick, yet it was only a partition; for on the south-east side of it was another vault, with floors and brick pillars, on the same level, and exactly corresponding with those in the first-mentioned vault, but in a more imperfect state.

The ground was then carefully opened from the surface, on the south-east side of the partition wall, about twelve feet from the angle where the two walls join, and at the depth of three or four feet, there were found vast quantities of flat bricks, of different sizes, like those used in the construction of the first-mentioned vault, intermixt with broken funnels and other rubbish, but the vaulting had been totally destroy'd. However, the greater part of the partition wall remained, and twenty feet distant from the north-east end of it, was an opening three feet wide, with square quoins, but its height is not known, as the top was broken down. This aperture served for a communication between the two vaults, and having an arch on each side, exactly at corresponding distances, (about four feet) seems to indicate a regular building, and makes it probable that this wall was divided into two equal parts by it, and consequently that the whole extended forty-three feet. The arches are all upon the same level, and of like dimensions, thirty-five inches wide, and thirty-seven from the crown to the floor, and therefore too low for door-ways.

The great strength and stability of the vaulting are remarkable: The two lower floors of terras, with the bed of stones between them, were designed by the architect as a firm basis to support the brick pillars, and the massy floor that lay upon them. The upper floor of each vault is fourteen inches thick; the pillars thirty-nine inches high, and eight inches and a quarter square, made of courses of entire bricks of the same superficial dimensions, and about an inch and three quarters thick, except that each pillar has a large brick of eleven inches square for its base, and another of the same size by way of capital. They stand in rows fifteen inches asunder, and are covered with wide bricks at top twenty three inches square, upon which the terras is laid. What now remains of the upper floor in the first mentioned vault, is supported by twenty-two pillars only, arranged in seven rows one way, and six the other; and where the pillars are deficient, the gardener has taken care to support the floor with timber.

The under part of this floor, (which, as already observed, consists of broad bricks) and all the pillars, are very much burnt, so that but few of the latter are perfect, occasioned in some measure, perhaps, by the force of long continued fires; but I apprehend they have suffered much injury also by other accidents, such as knocking off pieces from the sides and angles with iron instruments used in stirring the fire, and placing the fuel, which must sometimes have happened unavoidably. There were found dispersed all over the second floor, which I shall now call the hearth, a very considerable quantity of wood ashes, intermixt with coals, and consolidated into a hard mass, by length of time and natural humidity; whence it appears sufficiently evident, that fires have been kept burning uniformly all over the hearth, to heat the floor above, but not for the purpose of a bathing-place, as sir Robert Atkyns conjectured, whose opinion I had adopted before I saw the ruins. And still less probable is Dr. Stukeley's opinion, that 'these are the foundations of a temple;' but they appear very evidently, to me at least, to be the remains of two Hypocausts.

It may be observed, from the dimensions of the pillars, and the distance by measurement which they stand from each other, that in a space of 50 feet long and 40 broad, as the building formerly discovered is said to have been when intire, there must have been near four times the number of them mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns; yet as he does not pretend to have seen them, and as no great accuracy can be expected from hearsay accounts, I have not the least doubt but these are the the remains of the same building taken notice of by the two last mentioned authors.

Hypocausts, (from the Greek, υποκαυτω, to burn under) were a kind of large, subterraneous ovens, which the Romans made use of for warming their houses. Palladio, the great Italian architect, gives a short account of them. The antients, says he, made a fire in a small subterraneous vault, from which many funnels of various sizes were carried to the several rooms in the house, and the heat ascended in them in the same manner as it is found to pass through the narrow neck of an alembic, one end of which, tho' very distant from the fire, is not less warm than the part nearest to it. Thus, the heat so equably diffuses itself into all parts, that it fills the whole house. This is not the case with chimney-hearths, near which if you stand, you are scalded; if at a distance, you are chilled; but where these pipes are carried, a mild air diffuses itself around. These funnels which conveyed the heat had not open mouths, so they did not emit flame nor smoak, but only a hot vapour, and perpetual warmth. A small fire in the vault, provided it were continual, was sufficient. At the mouth of the vault they dressed their victuals. Pots and vessels were placed on every side in the walls, full of hot water, to keep their victuals warm; a very great advantage without expence, liable to no danger, no filth, nor smoak, and free from a thousand inconveniencies which accompany other kinds of fires.

Hence it appears, that the hypocausts of ancient Rome, as described by Palladio, were something different from those which have been found here. For as this country is much colder than Italy, so the Romans in Britain found it convenient, in this cold country, to make their hypocausts immediately under their parlours and lower rooms; and both their vaults and fires were larger than those in use at Rome. But, probably, in all other respects they were alike. Many fragments of earthen funnels have been found among the ruins of our Hypocausts, and one piece has the cavity intire, of an oblong form, six inches by four; and in several parts of the partition wall, particularly in the large stones of the arches, are a great many holes, in which were fixt, and are still to be seen, the ends of iron hooks or staples, [as may be supposed,] to support the earthen funnels, and lead them to the upper rooms, in the manner described by this author. The mouths of both Hypocausts, where they were supply'd with fuel, which were probably on the north-west and south-east sides, are both destroy'd.

The editor, from repeated inspection of these ruins, being enabled to give a more perfect account of them than he had ever seen, could not resist the pleasure which he promised himself of obliging the public with it; and therefore, since the original publication of his work in 1779, he has printed this additional sheet, to be fix'd in his books in the room of the leaf pag'd 345, 346, which contained the old account, and is now to be cancelled. [March 6, 1782.]

Fragments of Roman pottery, and small cubical stones of different colours, which are undoubtedly the ruins of some tessellated pavement, are continually found in these gardens; but the upper floors of the Hypocausts do not appear to have been tessellated. A portion of a large pillar, and the capital of a pilaster of the Corinthian order, which were formerly dug up there, among other ornamental parts of buildings, and perhaps the very pieces mentioned by Dr. Stukeley, are now in good preservation, in Mr. Bush's garden in Cirencester: The shaft of the pillar, when intire, must have been ten or twelve feet long, independent of the capital and other members.

There was a fine figure of Apollo, in brass, about the height of eighteen inches, found in the same gardens about forty years since, and is now in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, by the favour of Mr. Master, who presented it to the university. And a small altar, about seven inches high, was thrown up among the rubbish a few years since, but there is no inscription on it. This is now in Mr. Bush's possession, and was probably the portable altar of some poor man, used only in the offering of incense, or salt flour, such as Camden mentions in his account of Lancashire, adding, that the Romans raised altars not only to their Gods, but out of a servile flattery, to their Emperors likewise, under the impious title of Numini Majestatique eorum. At these they fell on their knees and worshiped, these they embraced and prayed to, before these they took their oaths, and to be short, in these and their sacrifices the whole of their religion consisted; so that those among them who had no altar, were supposed to have no religion, and to acknowledge no deity.

There is also a monumental stone, now placed in a building in the garden belonging to Siddington house, which was dug up, about fourteen or fifteen years since, at Watermore common, just without the city wall. It has a pediment at top, with a crescent in low relief, and the following inscription:

D M
P VICANAE
P VITALIS
CONIVX (')

Lying by the stone was an urn, with ashes and bones half burnt. This stone may be referred to the same age with that taken notice of by Dr. Stukeley.

There was also a glass urn, of a green colour, dug up, about fifteen years ago, in Kingsmead, which lies about half a mile from the town, on the side of the Irminstreet. This urn, which contained many ashes and pieces of burnt bones, was placed in a stone, chiselled out in a hollow form proper to receive it, and a flat stone covered the top. All these were deposited in the midst of a piece of ground about twenty feet square, inclosed with a stone wall which lay below the surface of the ground. The relics were further secured by a pavement springing from the wall on every side, and rising in the middle over the urn, in the form of a very obtuse cone. This was undoubtedly Roman, but unaccompanied with coins, unless the workmen concealed them on the first discovery.

About the same time, a large stone coffin was dug up on the side of the road leading to Tetbury, at a quarter of a mile from the town. A human skeleton was found within it, with the scull between the legs, and a sword lying on the right side of it.

On the east side of the town, lies Tor-barrow-hill, which is undoubtedly a tumulus, as the name signifies. This must certainly be the hill said to stand in Colton's-field, near Cirencester, and of which there is a strange account" in a paper printed by William Budden, 1685, and preserved in the Bodleian Library, among Dr. Rawlinson's papers.

Westward of the town also, a little within lord Bathurst's park, is a large round mount of earth, thrown up to the height of about twenty feet, according to tradition, by Godrum the Dane, who is called Gurmundus in the British annals; whence, by vulgar corruption, the place hath obtained the name of Grismund's-tower, and Christmas-tower. There was probably a wooden watch-tower erected on it, according to the custom of the Danes, the better to explore the country, and to guard against a sudden surprise from the enemy. Upon opening the mount, about fifteen years ago, several large earthen vessels, full of ashes and burnt bones, were found in it, and the earth and stones very much burnt for a great space in one part of it. But that a leaden vessel, with some ashes and bones of an uncommon size have been found on the mount, I have read no where but in Busching's Geography. Indeed Leland speaks of such a vessel, with ashes and pieces of bones, having been found where the castle stood, which Busching mistook for this tower. Who were the proprietors of these bones, and what bodies these ashes are a part of, are questions above the reach of antiquarianism; but it is probable that they belonged to some persons of eminence among the Danes, who fell in battle against the Saxons and Britons in these parts.

What gave rise to the practice of burning the dead is uncertain: some have conjectured that it was to avoid a visible degeneration into worms, and to leave a lasting portion of their composition after death; whilst others have thought it an expedient to escape the malice of enemies. But whatever was the occasion, the practice is of great antiquity. Homer has given many beautiful descriptions of the funeral obsequies of Patroclus, Achilles, Hector, and other chiefs among the Greeks and Trojans. At first they burnt the bodies of those only who were most eminent among them, but denied that honour to such as had laid violent hands on themselves, or had betrayed their country, because they conceived them enemies to the gods. The funeral pile was composed of rosemary, larynx, yew, cypress, and fir, Coniux (for Conjugis) is the true reading on the stone. But there must have been a mistake in the stone-cutter, who might be an ignorant man, as many of them were, making frequent blunders by omitting letters, and sometimes adding others; more particularly when they were not immediately overseen by the person whose office it was to direct them. There are many instances of omissions and redundancies in ancient coins and inscriptions; thus we often find COS for CONS, or CONSVL; DEIA IOVIS for DEA IOVIS, IDEA PALATINA for DEA PALATINA, &c. &c. More of this may be seen in Mr. Hearn's Dissertation on the Stunsfield Tessellated Pavement, at the beginning of the 8th Vol. of Leland's Itinerary.

The story is to the following effect: Two men digging a well-pit at the foot of this hill, having sunk four yards deep, discovered an entrance into the hill, where they found several urns with their furniture, which being touched, crumbled to pieces. In one of them were several images and urns, some with Latin inscriptions on them, and in another, they were surprized at seeing the figure of a man in armour, having a truncheon in its hand, and a light, in a glass like a lamp, burning before it. At their first approach, the image made an effort to strike, so at the second step, but with greater force; but at the third it struck a violent blow, which broke the glass to pieces, and extinguished the light. Having a lanthorn, they had just time to observe, that on the left hand [I suppose of the figure] lay two heads embalmed, with long beards, and the skin looking like parchment, when hearing a hollow noise like a groan, they hastily quitted those dark apartments, and immediately the earth fell in, and buried all the curiosities. Camden was informed by credible persons, that at the suppression of monasteries, there was found a lamp burning in the vault of that little chapel wherein Constantius Chlorus was thought to be buried. Lazius, says that antiquarian, tells us, that the ancients had an art of dissolving gold into a fat liquor, and of preparing it so that it would continue burning in the sepulchres for many ages. Camden, v. 2, col. 880, in his account of York city.

by which, being trees of perpetual verdure, it has been thought they intended to convey some hints of a resurrection.

The Romans adopted the practice from the Greeks, and so it came into use among the Celtæ in the western world. In Britain, urn-burial was not confined to the Romans, for we learn from Pomponius that the druids used to burn and bury; and it is affirmed, that Bellinus, brother to the British king Brennus, was burnt. Cæsar says that burning was practised in Gaul; and since we learn from Tacitus, that the Britons were soon brought to build temples, to wear the gown, and study the Roman laws and language, it is no improbable conjecture, that they soon also conformed to their customs in burial.

The Saxons, Jutes, and Angles came from parts where burning was antiently practised, and the Germans, from whom they descended, used it, as Tacitus affirms.

In Denmark and Norway many urns have been found, very different from those of the Romans, as may be seen in Wormius; whence it should seem, that the Danes very antiently burned the dead; indeed Frotho the Great made a law, that princes and great commanders should be committed to the fire, tho' the common sort had grave-interment. It was also the custom of those people to distinguish the remains of the most noble among them, by placing large stones in circles about them.

The urns we find are neither uniform in figure, nor of one capacity; the largest contain about three gallons, some not much above half that measure. Some have handles, ears, and long necks, but most are of a circular form; many are red, some black, some covered with brick or tile, and some have earthen covers adapted to them, whilst great numbers have no covering, but the earth pressed into them. Some have lachrimatories, or tear-bottles, attending them, either as sacred to the Manes of the deceased, or passionate expressions of their surviving friends, who, with hired tears, solemnized their obsequies.

Where we find D. M. [Diis Manibus] we commonly meet with Pateræ, and vessels of libation, upon old sepulchral monuments. An urn preserved by cardinal Farnese contained the heads of several gods and goddesses, an ape of agate, a grass-hopper, an elephant of amber, a crystal ball, three glasses, two spoons, and other things, which probably the deceased took pleasure in; and in some urns we find money, rings, darts, and pieces of broken armour. It has been conjectured, that the money was intended as a fee for old Charon; but whatever was the design, the putting coins in urns, and the present practice of burying money in the foundations of noble buildings, are laudable means of chronological discovery, and posterity will applaud them.

As the time is uncertain when the practice of burning the dead began, so is that of its ceasing also. Macrobius affirms that it was disused in his days. In Minutius's time, it was objected against the Christians, that tho' they did not hesitate, for the cause of religion, to give their bodies to be burnt when alive, yet they condemned the practice of burning after death; so that we may conclude with great certainty, that it ceased about the time of the conversion to christianity; and as the Romans confessedly practised it after they possessed Britain, the urns we find here are generally attributed to them, or to the Britons romanized. But to return from this digression to my former subject.

There was a Roman tessellated pavement found in a garden in Dyer-street, belonging to a house the property of Mr. Joseph Small; another was lately discovered in digging a cellar in Mr. Cripps's house, belonging formerly to the family of the Georges; and another was found, a few years ago, in digging the vault under the shambles at the Boothall; and without doubt many more are left for future ages to discover. These probably belonged to the halls or principal rooms of some great officers under the prætor, or chief magistrate that governed the town. The tessellated pavements were of two orders. Those of the nobler kind, which had usually the figure of Apollo, or some other deity upon them, were called Megalographia, in contradistinction to the other sort of them, on which were representations of most inferior beings. This sort was stiled Ropographia. But what those were, of which I have just been speaking, is uncertain, as there is no drawing of them, and the works themselves are destroyed, to the regret of the lovers of antiquity.

The coins that have been found here are chiefly those of Antoninus, Dioclesian, and Constantine.

Three Roman consular ways meet at this place, the great Foss-way, the Irminstreet, and the Acmanstreet.

The Foss comes from Scotland, and enters this county from Warwickshire, by Lemington. It passeth thro' Moreton-henmarsh and Stow, by Bourton on the Water, and Northleach, and crossing the river Coln at a place called Foss-bridge, leads directly to Cirencester.

The Acmanstreet-way, but sometimes called the *Ickenild-way, crosseth Oxfordshire, and coming to Broadwell-grove, where it is very high and perfect, enters this county at the parish of Eastleach, and joins the great Foss-way about a mile north-east of Cirencester. Four miles and a half westward of the town, it leaves the turnpike-road, at a place called Jacuments-bottom, but more truly Acman's-bottom, and enters Wiltshire near Kemble, in its straight course to Bath, the Accmannercearpen of the Saxons.

Another of the great Roman ways, supposed by some to be the Irminstreet, leads from Caerleon in Monmouthshire, through Gloucester and this place, to Cricklade, and so on to Southampton. Mercury was thought to preside over the highways, and the Germans worshipped him by the name of Irmunful, whence, according to Mr. Camden, this Roman way derives its name.

The notion which some have entertained of these roads having been thrown up by one Mulmutius, long before the birth of Christ, is now generally exploded. Isidore's testimony, that highways were made almost all over the world by the Romans, in which they employ'd the soldiery and the people, that they might not grow factious by too much ease, goes a great way in determining to whom they ought to be attributed; but further, there are antient records, which say, that In the days of Honorius and Arcadius there were made in Britain certain highways from sea to sea. And here it may be proper to observe, that we derive the custom of placing mile-stones on our turnpike-roads from the Romans, for at the end of every mile, along their great roads, pillars were erected by the emperors, with figures cut in them to signify the number of miles. Hence Sidonius Apollonius,

*Antiquus tibi nec teratur agger,
Cujus per spatium satis vetustis
Nomen Cæsareum viret columnis.*

Nor let the antient causeway be defac'd,
Where, in old pillars, Cæsar's name's express'd.

By the sides of them were also the graves and monuments of famous men, to put the traveller in mind of his own mortality; whence arose that usual apostrophe, Siste Viator, in monumental inscriptions.

The learned antiquary before mentioned, in his account of Radnorshire, has shewn, that large heaps of stones, confusedly piled up together, are common in Wales, Scotland, Ireland, in the north, and probably in other parts of England, and are called by the British name Karneu, Karned-beu, and Kairn, which he understands to be a primitive word, signifying a heap of stones. He is of opinion, that most of them were intended for memorials of the dead, not only because he observed, near the summit of one of them, a rude stone monument in the form of a coffer or chest, but also, because it was antiently the custom to throw up large heaps of stones for sepulchral monuments, and in later times, more particularly over the graves of malefactors: What led me to this observation, is a piece of ground on the south-west side of the town, just without the old city wall, which goes by the name of the Querns, or Kairns, full of such large heaps of stones, but now, in length of time, covered with herbage. Large monumental stones have been dug up there, as already taken notice of from Dr. Stukeley, who concluded from thence, that the Querns was the common burying-place of the antient city of Cirencester; but, notwithstanding the name, I am far from thinking those heaps of stones are so many funeral piles, but rather, that they are heaps of rubbish, made by digging for stone to raise the city wall, or some other large buildings.

I must not, however, leave the Querns, without first taking notice of a plot within it, of an elliptical form, called the Bull-ring, the longest diameter of which is sixty-three yards, the other forty-six. Round it is a mound or wall of earth, thrown up to the height of about twenty feet, sloped on the inside with so much exactness as to manifest the hand of care and design; and I am of opinion, that there were originally rows of seats, or steps, one below the other, from top to bottom; but time has much defaced them. There are two avenues to this area, (east and west) and on the north side also is another strait approach, between two stone walls, lately discovered by people digging for stone. It is directed to the centre of the area, and about thirty inches wide between the walls, which were designed to keep up the high bank of earth on each side. Probably this is a Roman theatre, or else one of those places where antiently people met at the *Gurimawrs*², which were held in spacious places, inclosed with earthen banks, having room sufficient for thousands of people within. But tradition is silent as to the use of it; nor do I find the place itself taken notice of any where in history. Mr. Camden mentions one something like it in Westmoreland, called King Arthur's Round Table, which he thinks might possibly be a justing-place.

In an essay concerning the four great Roman ways, at the end of the 6th Vol. of Leland's Itinerary, I find Mr. Camden has taken notice for his observation, (p. 240) that 'Several towns lye on the coast near the last mentioned causeway, that retain the word arn in their names, as Sbarncote and South Sarney, between Cricklade and Cirencester, and North Sarney about two miles above the latter upon the river Churn, and Sbarnton about three miles from Gloucester. All which have taken their appellations from the British word Sarn, which imports stratum, or mountain, and in Wales we have such an one called Sarn antient to this day.' But I differ in opinion from that learned antiquary, respecting the names of the above places, for the following reasons: The C in those names had originally a hard sound, as the same letter in Cornwall, Cornwallis, also had; for

I apprehend that the name of the town and of the villages had one common source, that is, Corin, or Churn, the name of the river on which both the Cerneys are situated: Cerney, therefore, is only a small deviation from Churn-ey, i. e. the water Churn. And as to Sbarncote, which is adjoining to South Cerney, on the contrary side of it from the Roman road, I suppose it to be nothing more than Cerney-coed, so called from the British word coed, which signifies wood, as having been antiently a woody place.

² Guiredd, in the British language, signifies truth, and mawr, great; so that the word may signify the scriptures, or great truths. It is generally agreed that these circular places have been appropriated to religious purposes, and probably some parts of the scripture history were usually represented in them, for the instruction of the people.

2. Of Military Affairs, and other memorable Events.

This town hath seen many great events and memorable transactions. From Orofius's manner of expressing himself, one might be induced to think it a place of note in the time of Julius Cæfar. The third battle, fays he, which that general had with the Bryttas, was near the river which men call the Temefe, near those fords which are called Wallingford; after which, not only all the inhabitants of Cyrnceastre submitted, but the whole island.

Some fay the emperor Constantine was crowned king of the Britons here, whilst others insist that York has a better claim to that honour; however it is certain, that Cirencester was a very considerable place in that emperor's time.

Under the Heptarchy, it lay within the kingdom of Mercia, which, as it appears by Ethelwerd, was divided from that of the West Saxons by the river Avon; but in the year 577, this city was won from the Britons of Mercia, who had 'till then defended themselves in these parts with great bravery against the West Saxons, by whom they were totally routed that year at Deopham, [Dyrham] under two of their leaders, Cuthwin and Ceaulin. Three British princes, Commeil, Condidan, and Fariemeiol were slain in battle, and the cities of Cirencester, Gloucester, and Bath fell into the hands of the enemy; and soon after, Cirencester was made a frontier garrison against the Mercians.

About fifty years afterwards, anno 628, Penda, king of Mercia, endeavoured to recover this place from the West Saxons, and meeting Cynegils and Cwichelm, (the king and his son) near Cirencester, with great forces on both sides, a bloody battle ensued; when, according to Huntingdon, both armies having abjured flight, they were parted only by the darkness of the night; and this engagement not being much in favour of either party, they made peace the next morning, which continued but for a short time. The West Saxons, however, remained masters of Cirencester, 'till Peada, the first christian king of Mercia, and son of Penda, retook it from them in the year 656.

From that time, either no very interesting transactions happened here, for a space of two hundred years, or our historians have taken no notice of them. But in the year 879, the Danes, under their leader Godrum, having been routed by king Alfred at Ethandun in Wiltshire, surrendered their castle in that neighbourhood, and made peace with the king, on condition that they might have leave to quit the kingdom; and accordingly they came immediately from Chippenham to Cirencester, and remaining here one whole year, went afterwards to the eastern parts of the kingdom. This Godrum, or Gothrum, is probably the same that Polydore Virgil and others call Gormon and Gurmond, an African tyrant.

It is mentioned in the British Annals, that the same Gurmundus, after besieging this city a long time in vain, at last ordered wild-fire and combustible matter to be tied to the legs of sparrows, and letting them fly, they lighted on the houses and set them on fire, by which stratagem he took the city; whence Giraldus calls it the City of Sparrows. Alexander Neccham, from the same annals, writes of it thus:

Urbs vires experta tuas, Gurmunde, per annos Septem.

A city that experienc'd Gurmund's power
For seven long years.

But it should be remembered, that poets are not always good historians; nor is there the least reason to believe that Gurmund, if he be the same with Affer's Godrum, was longer here than one year, unless we suppose it to be before his convention with king Alfred.

The next memorable thing taken notice of to have happened here, was in the year 1020, when king Knute, after his return from Denmark, held a general council of the kingdom, at Easter, in this town, in which Ethelwold was outlawed.

Here was a castle on the south-west side of the town, and tho' I have not been able to discover when nor by whom it was built, our histories give us a more certain account of its destruction; for in the year 1142, the town having been made a garrison for Matilda the empress, against king Stephen, he came so suddenly and unexpectedly upon the castle, as to surprize and burn it. However it was soon afterwards rebuilt, and held out against the king by the earl of Leicester's comitible, who at length surrendered it, to procure better terms for his master on his submission. This castle was garrisoned by the barons who took up arms against king Henry the Third; but that king soon recovered it, and caused it to be immediately demolished.

When the barons took up arms against king John, in the 16th year of his reign, the royal army was drawn together at this place; and again, upon a like occasion, this was the rendezvous for the army which king Edward the Second assembled, to crush the confederacy formed by the earl of Lancaster and the lords of the marches, against Hugh le Despencer the king's favourite.

But this place is more remarkable for the suppression of the rebellion raised by the dukes of Aumerle, Surry, and Exeter, and the earls of Gloucester and Salisbury, and their adherents, in the 1st year of king Henry the Fourth. This signal service was effected by the bravery and conduct of the mayor, as he is called in our histories, and about 400 of the townsmen only. Those noblemen had formed a conspiracy to seize and assassinate the king, at a tournament at Oxford, to which he was invited. The plot was committed to writing, and each conspirator had a copy, signed and sealed by all the confederates. Afterwards, Aumerle being at dinner with his father the duke of York, the latter observ'd a paper in his son's bosom, seized it, and reading the contents, order'd his horrid be saddled immediately. Suspecting his father's intention, Aumerle rode full speed to the king at Windsor, and discovering the conspiracy, obtained pardon before the duke arrived. The other conspirators suspecting themselves discovered, raised a numerous army to surprize the king at Windsor. But Henry having also assembled 20,000 men, marched to give them battle, which so discouraged them, that they retreated to Cirencester, and encamped without the gates. The chiefs quartered in the town, but the mayor perceiving that the gates and avenues were unguarded, assembled 400 men in the night, seized the gates, and attack'd the four noblemen in their quarters. The duke of Surry, and earl of Salisbury were taken, and beheaded on the spot; but the duke of Exeter, and the earl of Gloucester, escaped by the tops of the houses to the camp, which the soldiers had abandoned, and fled; imagining, from the noise and tumult of fighting in the town, which had been set on fire by the rebel party, that a detachment of the king's troops had entered it. The duke of Exeter and earl of Gloucester were taken some time after, and lost their heads in the sequel. The heads of Surry and Salisbury were sent to London, their bodies having been buried in the abbey; but the head of the latter was restored, and his body removed to Bustlesham, now Bisham in Berkshire, where he had founded a priory for canons of the order of St. Austin, dedicated to Christ Jesus and the virgin Mary, valued at the dissolution at 327*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*

The king, for this great service done him by the men of Cirencester, granted them all the rebels woods, and four does in season out of his forest of Redon, and one hoghead of wine out of his port of Bristol. And to the women, he granted six bucks in right season, and one hoghead of wine out of the same port. See Appendix, N^o. 1. Afterwards, in the 4th year of his reign, the same king granted to the town, a court of Staple for merchandize, erecting a corporation of a mayor and two constables, and others the commonalty, for the encouragement of trade, by the execution of the Statute Merchant. But this charter, after long suit in the Exchequer, was decreed to be cancelled, 37 Eliz.

All these events shew the town to have been large, and of great account, in the times of which have been speaking; but even in later ages, it has been the scene of remarkable transactions; for here, as I find it in Corbet's History of the Military Government of Gloucester, was the first forcible opposition to king Charles the First, in the year 1641, by insulting lord Chandos, then lieutenant of the county, who was at that time executing the commission of array. The rabble compassed him, and forced him to sign a paper, promising that he would no more attempt to put in execution. His lordship escaped unhurt in his person, but his coach was cut in pieces.

This place was garrisoned, soon after, by the parliament's forces, and about the first of January, 1641, was threatened to be stormed by the main strength of the king's army, which came before it; but after staying two days, withdrew to wait for a reinforcement of horse and artillery, and returned again on the 30th of the same month, under the command of prince Rupert, who assaulted the town on the 2d of February, of which action the following is a short account, drawn from one published by his highness's chaplain. The prince had two eighteen pounders, and four field-pieces; and a mortar-piece to throw granades. Proper dispositions being made, the attack began at an inclosure between Mr. Poole's house (now the site of lord Bathurst's house) and that of the Barton. The assailants being twice reinforced, beat the townsmen from the hedge, to the garden wall of the Barton. Mean while, a strong body, under general Wilmot and colonel Usher, attack'd and burnt the Barton house, whence the townsmen were driven, and afterwards pursued by 500 of colonel Kirk's men, to the first turnpike, (a kind of barricado) by Cicely hill. Lord Wentworth, who had the command of the right wing of the army, was to have fallen to the southward, on the right hand of the mount, now called Grismund's Tower; but being misled on the left hand of it, was flanked by a battery of two six pounders, erected on the mount, and annoyed by the musquettry from a high wall before them; which thinking it difficult to force, they drew to the left, into the lane leading to Cicely-hill, and joining colonel Kirk's men there, entered the barricado, or turnpike, together. Colonel Scrimfour, with a party of horse, then pushed into the town, and drove all before them. Colonel Fettiplace, who was the governor, captain Warneford, and Mr. George, one of the members for the borough, with many others, were taken prisoners in the town, and together with such of the fugitives as were taken in their flight, were secured in the church. Great numbers of arms were found in the houses, and drawn out of the river, to the amount of upwards of 3000, for this place had been a magazine for the country.

This town was afterwards made quarters, sometimes for the king's army, at others for that of the parliament. After the siege of Gloucester was raised, the earl of Essex beat up the king's quarters here, and drove sir Nicholas Crisp and colonel Spencer, with their two regiments of horse, out of the town. In this action he took 400 horse, and 30 cart-loads of provisions, which was a seasonable supply to his army.

Here also was the first bloodshed in the last revolution, in the year 1688, when lord Lovelace, being on his march to join the prince of Orange with a party of horse, was attacked by captain Lorange of the county militia, animated by the duke of Beaufort, who was a zealous man for king James. The captain was proprietor of Haymes in this county, and tho' both he and his son lost their lives at that time, his men overpowered lord Lovelace, took him, and carried him prisoner to Gloucester jail, having slain some unfortunate gentlemen at the same time.

The

The summer assize for the county was held here, by lord chief justice Scroggs and sir Robert Atkyns, on account of a pestilential disorder being at Gloucester, in the year 1679.

3. Of the antient and present State of the Hundred of Cirencester, and its Subdivisions; of the Borough, the Manor, and other Estates.

This place very antiently gave denomination to a hundred, which, at different times, was more or less extensive. Soon after the conquest, as we find in Domesday-book, it included the following places, viz. Achelic, Benwedene, Circestre, Duntelborne, Hunlafesed, Nortcote, Penneberie, Prestetune, Stratone, Sudintone, Torentune, Turfberie.

In the ninth year of the reign of king Edward the First, the sheriff of the county returned, that in the hundred of Cirencester are the under-written vills, viz. Baudinton, Cirencester, Cotes, Daglinworth, Down Ampney, Dryfeild, Duntelburne, Hampton Moysey, Preston, Sodington, South Cerney, Upampney.

By comparing the two accounts, it is observable, that Cotes is a new name, and stands, in the sheriff's return, in the room of Hunlafesed, Torentune, and Turfberie, as we find them set down in Domesday-book. Achelic, Nortcote, and Penneberie, specified in the Domesday account, are not mentioned by the sheriff, because, at that time, they were considered as members only of some of the vills set down in his return. Daglinworth, in the latter account, is substituted for Stratone in Domesday, which latter is not set down as a vill in the above-mentioned sheriff's return; whereas the former is no where to be found in the general survey; I conclude, therefore, that both those places, especially as they join together, were, 'till some time after the sheriff's return, reputed to be one vill or parish only, which took denomination, at first from Stratton, but afterwards from Daglingworth, 'till it came to be divided into two parishes. It is also remarkable, that both the Ampneys, Dryfeild, and Hampton Moysey, which in Domesday-book are placed in Gersdon hundred, are returned by the sheriff as belonging to that of Cirencester.

Afterwards, another very material alteration took place in this hundred. In the fourth year of the reign of king Henry the Fourth, the town was erected into a kind of corporation, and two constables placed over it, whereby it became a distinct jurisdiction. The out-parishes, with Minety, were severed from it, and held a separate Torn or court, which for distinction was probably called The Out Torn and Minety, but now vulgarly, and as I conceive corruptly, Crowthorne and Minety. The hundred was the property of the abbat, who chose rather to have the people of his house under the jurisdiction of the constable of the Out-Torn, than subject to the officers of the borough, or In-Torn, which alone retained the name of the hundred of Cirencester. Thus the abbey and all its precincts and offices became distinct from the borough, and have continued so ever since.

From that time the hundred and the borough have been commensurate.

The borough is divided into seven wards, i. e. Dyer-ward, Cricklade-ward, Castle-ward, Godditch-ward, Dollar-ward, St. Lawrence-ward, and Instrip-ward. To each ward two wardsmen, or petty constables, are annually appointed at the leet, where also two high constables are appointed, whose authority extends over the hundred and borough.

This borough sent representatives to a great council 11 E. 3. and by the grant of queen Elizabeth, in the thirteenth year of her reign, it sends two members to parliament. At first, only the free burgeses were electors, but on the occasion of a contested election, in the reign of king James the First, it was determined, that the inhabitants householders, not receiving alms, should make the election; but the house of commons, Nov. 4, 1690, resolved, That the inhabitants of the borough of Cirencester, being inmates, have no right to vote in electing burgeses to serve in parliament; and by their resolution of Dec. 1, 1709, the inhabitants of the Abbey, the Emery, and the Spiringate-lane have not a right to vote in such election. The number of electors is between six and seven hundred.

The arms of the town are, A Phoenix in Flames, alluding to its having risen out of the ashes of the antient city, as the young phoenix is said to proceed from the ashes of the old one.

Cirencester gives the title of baron to William duke of Portland, whose ancestor, by letters patent dated Apr. 9, 1689, was created baron of Cirencester, viscount Woodstock, and earl of Portland.

Richardus Coriniensis was so called because he was born here. He was a monk of Westminster, and is famous for collecting an Itinerary, in the 14th century, of Roman Britain, from some remains of records drawn up between the years 138 and 170, by the authority of a Roman general, supposed to have been Lollius Urbicus, governor of Britain under Antoninus Pius; which work was a long time lost to his native country. Mr. Bertram, an English gentleman, discovered the manuscript at Copenhagen, in 1747. A copy having been transmitted to the late Dr. Stukeley, he published a translation of the Itinerary, part with a comment, in 1757, and in the subsequent year the whole work was printed at Copenhagen, and a few copies sent to England as presents.

Here are three fairs in the year, viz. on Easter-Tuesday, July 18, and Nov. 8. The two cloth-fairs mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns, one in the week before Palm-Sunday, the other in the week before the feast of St. Bartholomew, are both discontinued.

The property of the hundred descended with the principal manor, which is next to be considered.

The manor of Cirencester is of the antient demesnes of the crown, of which Domesday-book gives the following particulars:

‘ King Edward had five hides of land in Cirencester hundred. There are five plow-tillages in demean, and thirty-one villeins, with ten plow-tillages. There are thirteen servi, and ten bordars, and three mills of 30s. some meadow, and two woods of 50s. And there are two free men who have two plow-tillages. The queen hath the wool of all the sheep. In the time of king Edward, this manor paid three bushels [modios] and a half of corn for bread, three bushels [modios] of barley, and six sextaries and a half of honey, and 9l. 5s. and 3000 loaves for the dogs. It now pays 20l. 5s. and twenty cows, and twenty hogs, and 16s. instead of the taves, and 20s. for the new market, of which St. Mary hath the third penny.’ D. Book, p. 67.

The church of St. Mary held two hides in the hundred, which will be taken notice of in its proper place; and there were two other manors in the vill, thus particularized in the record;

‘ A free man held two hides of land in Cirecestre, and paid 20s. and did service to the sheriff throughout all England. Earl William put this land out of farm, and gave it to one of his men.’

‘ William the son of Badcron held two hides in Cirecestre, and Hugh holds them of him. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and one villein and a half, and four bordars, with one plow-tillage. There are two servi. It was worth 100s. now 70s. Aluui held this land.’ D. B. p. 73.

It is impossible, at present, to distinguish between the two last manors with any degree of precision; but I conjecture that the first of the three continued in the crown till it was granted, with the jurisdiction of the seven hundreds, by king Richard the First, to the abbat and convent of Cirencester. Sir Robert Atkyns is imperfect in his account of these manors and their appendages; which is the more remarkable, as he himself claimed to be the proprietor of some of them. I will give the best account I can of them, from the materials in my possession.

When the townsmen of Cirencester suppressed the rebellion against king Henry the Fourth, they petitioned the king to be incorporated; whereupon the king directed his writ to the escheator, to inquire what damage others might sustain if he should comply with their request. The escheator returned the king's writ, the petition, and the inquisition, which he had taken at Gloucester, 4 H. 4. into the court of chancery, where they were exemplified, and whence I have extracted the following particulars: ‘ The jurors say, that the town of Cirencester and the town of Mynety, with the appurtenances, make and are the manor of Cirencester, and were so in the time of king Richard the First. That the church of St. Mary of Cirencester is of the foundation of king Henry the First, and within his patronage. That king Richard the First gave to God, and the church of St. Mary of Cirencester, his whole manor of Cirencester, with all and singular the appurtenances, and with the town of Mynety, which is a member of the said manor, and with the seven hundreds to the same manor, and to his farm belonging, and with all other the appurtenances, to be holden of the said king and his successors for ever, at the rent of 30l. a year, with ‘ Soca, Saca, Thol, Them, Infangthcof, and Outfangthcof, Hamfoca, and Girthbriche, Blodewite, Murder, Forestall, Flemsfleet, Ordeal, and Orest, within time and without, and in all places and with all causes which may be. And that the rent of assize of the said manor of Cirencester is 143l. 4s. 8d. yearly, payable to the abbat. And that the said seven hundreds are but as one hundred, and time out of man's memory have ' been used as one hundred before the making the ' aforefaid deed, and belonging to the faid manor

' of Cirencester, and are holden at the town of ' Cirencester, from three weeks to three weeks, in ' a certain house called the Tolsede^d, situate in the ' middle of the faid town. That the manor of ' Cirencester is the antient demean of the crown,
' and that to the faid manor belong two free te' nants, William Erchbald and the holder of the ' court, and that all other tenants to the faid ' manor, in the aforefaid town of Cirencester and ' Mynetie belonging, hold all their lands and ' tenements according to the custom of the manor
' of Cirencester.'

Hence it is evident that this is the same manor with that mentioned in Domesday-book to have been held by king Edward; which, with the hundred of Cirencester, the seven hundreds, and other particulars granted to the abbey of Cirencester, were part of the possessions of that abbey 'till it was dissolved. Yet, according to sir Robert Atkyns, Ela, countess of Warwick, held the hundreds of Cirencester and Bristwoles Borough 11 E. 1. and the abbess of Lacock in Wiltshire was seized of the hundred of Cirencester 12 E. 1. But 15 E. 1. the king's writ of Quo warranto was issued against the abbat of Cirencester, for the liberties of the seven hundreds, and his claim was allowed. At the dissolution of the monastery, all these particulars reverted to the crown.

The hundred of Cirencester, Crother', Brightweldes barrowe, Respegete, Bradley, Langtre, and Myntye, and the seven hundreds of Cirencester, were afterwards granted to sir Thomas Seymour, lord Seymour of Sudley, as I find it recited in a subsequent grant of them to sir Anthony Kingstone, 6 E. 6. of which I have an office copy.

Sir John Danvers died seized of the manor 37 Eliz. and was succeeded by his son, Henry Danvers earl of Danby, who built a large house on the west side of the town, and made the famous physic-garden, for the public use of the university of Oxford. The manor and hundred were afterwards sold to Henry Poole, whose son and heir sir William Poole, in 1645, assigned them, with their appurtenances, and levied a fine thereof to the lady Poole, his mother, (in lieu of dower) for her life, and after her death, to her daughter Anne Poole, and her heirs; which Anne was married to James earl of Newburgh, and previously thereto, and in consideration thereof, she released to him the manor, borough, and town of Cirencester, with their appurtenances and franchises, to the use of him and his heirs. Charles was his heir. He married Frances —, who survived him, to whom he left the premises in fee. She sold them in the year 1695, to sir Benjamin Bathurst, father of the Earl of Bathurst, the present proprietor; between whom and Mr. Chamberlayne there is a dispute concerning the right to the seven hundreds.

^d The lower part of the Tolsede, or Tolshey, is now converted into a grocer's shop, in the Butter-row, and the rooms over it are part of a dwelling house.

^e His Lordship's ancestors were seated at a place called Bathurst, in Suffex, not far from Battle abbey, of which they were dispossessed, and their castle demolished, in the troublesome times of the dispute between the houses of York and Lancaster.

Lawrence Bathurst was seated at Cranebrook in Kent, within three miles distance of the antient seat; and held lands at Staplehurst in the same county, beside his paternal estates at Cranebrook and Canterbury. He left issue three sons, Edward, ancestor to the Earl of Bathurst; Robert, of Horsmanden in Kent; and John, who had lands in Staplehurst, by his father's gift.

Edward, the eldest son of Lawrence Bathurst, was seated at Staplehurst, and among other children, had Launcelot Bathurst, alderman of London, who, in the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth, was possessed of the manor of Franks, in the county of Kent. He married Judith, daughter of Richard Randolph, of London, by whom he had issue four sons and three daughters, Randolph, Launcelot, Edward, and George Bathurst; Elizabeth, married to John Brown, esq; Mary, wedded to Edmund Peshall, esq; and Susan, espoused to Robert Owen, esq. From the eldest son, Randolph Bathurst, the family at Franks descended, now extinct in the male line.

George Bathurst, youngest son of the said Launcelot, in the year 1610, married Elizabeth Villiers, daughter and coheir of Edward Villiers, of Howthorp, in com. Northampton, descended from an ancestor of George Villiers duke of Buckingham, and had with her the said manor of Howthorp, where he settled, and had issue twelve sons and four daughters. Several of the sons died in the service of king Charles the First, during the civil war. Those who survived were Ralph, Villiers, Henry, Moses, and sir Benjamin. Ralph was educated at Trinity college in Oxford, for a divine, but during the civil war studied physic, and was employed as a physician in the navy. At the restoration, resuming his former function, he became fellow of the Royal Society, president of Trinity-college, and one of the king's chaplains; and on June 28, 1670, was installed dean of Wells. He died on the 14th of June, 1704, and was buried in the chapel of Trinity-college, which he built at his own expence, and was highly esteemed for his learning.—Villiers Bathurst was judge-advocate of the navy, in the reigns of king Charles the Second, and king William and queen Mary, and died in the same post in the reign of queen Anne.—Henry was attorney-general of Munster, and recorder of Cork and Kinfale; but he and Moses dying without issue, their estates descended to their youngest brother, Sir Benjamin Bathurst, who, in the reign of king Charles the Second, was elected governor of the Royal African Company, under his Royal Highness James duke of York; also governor of the East India Company, in the years 1688, 1689. He was afterwards treasurer of the household to the princess Anne of Denmark, on the establishment of it, and was appointed cofferer when she acceded to the crown. Sir Benjamin died Aug. 27, 1704, and was buried at Pauler's Pury in Northamptonshire, leaving issue by Frances his wife, daughter of sir Allen Apsley, of Apsley in Suffex, knight, three sons, Allen, Peter, and Benjamin; and one daughter, Anne, wedded to Henry Pye, of Faringdon in Berkshire, esq.

Allen, the eldest son of sir Benjamin Bathurst, served in parliament for the borough of Cirencester, from the year 1705. In queen Anne, in consideration of his own great merit, and the long services of his father, was pleased to advance him to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain, by letters patent Dec. 31, 1711. In the year 1742, his lordship was sworn of the privy council, and the same day appointed captain of a band of gentlemen pensioners, but resigned his office in 1744. In 1757, he was constituted treasurer to his present majesty the prince of Wales, at whose accession to the throne, he was continued in the list of privy counsellors, but declined accepting any employment, on account of his great age. His lordship married Catherine, daughter and heir of sir Peter Apsley, and heir of sir Allen beforementioned, by whom he had issue four sons and five daughters. Her ladyship died in the year 1768, and was buried in a vault in Cirencester church.—Benjamin, the eldest son, born Aug. 12, 1711, married Elizabeth, daughter to Charles lord Bruce. He was chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Gloucester, in the 8th parliament of Great Britain, and was also chosen one of the members of the borough of Cirencester, in the year 1754. He died without issue Jan. 23, 1767; and his lady died Nov. 11, 1771, and are buried at Siddington St. Peter.—Henry Bathurst, the lordship's second son, applying himself to the study of the law, soon became eminent in his profession, and was successively appointed solicitor-general and attorney-general to Frederick prince of Wales. On the 2d of May, 1754, he was made a baronet.

belonging to Henry Earl Bathurst.

Views of the House at Cirencester.

His lordship holds courts for the hundred of Cirencester in the borough; and those for the seven hundreds are held by Thomas Horde, esq; and the reverend Mr. Chamberlayne, within their respective jurisdictions.

Soon after his lordship was possessed of the above estate, by the death of his father, he purchased a large one, adjoining to it, of sir Robert Atkyns; and taking down the old house, built the present mansion upon the site of it. It has a free-stone front next the town, but a high wall, lined with ever-greens, prevents the view on that side.

This seat is distinguished by its extensive and elegant plantations. The park is well stock'd with deer. The entrance to it is at a lodge on the north side of the house, by a spacious gravel-walk, lined on each side with a row of stately elms. At a small distance from the entrance, to the left, is an oblique prospect of the north-west front of the house, with a fine sweep of lawn before it, and a grove of lofty trees on either side. Turning to the right, the walk divides; one branch of it leads to the terras, the other runs by the side of it, in a serpentine direction, above a mile in length, finely arched and shaded by the plantation through which it passes. At suitable distances it communicates with the terras, where are several buildings and benches for the convenience of resting and prospect. At the end of the serpentine walk is a small building, called Pope's Seat, perhaps because that great genius frequently retired thither, when he visited his noble friend at Cirencester. There is a lawn before it, to the centre of which eight vistas are directed, which terminate with the prospect of neighbouring churches, and other agreeable objects. One of those objects is a fine lofty column in the midst of the deer-park, on which is placed the statue of Queen Anne, larger than life. This pillar is near a mile distant from the house, behind which stands the beautiful tower of the parish church of Cirencester, so directly in the centre of it, with their fronts parallel to each other, that an observer at the pillar might be easily induced to believe the tower to be a part of his lordship's house, were it not of a different colour.

The terras is sheltered on the north-east by a thick plantation of wood, with a most agreeable border, or lining, of shrubs and evergreens. It commands a distant prospect of the north of Wiltshire, and terminates at a handsome octagonal building, about a mile from the house. In the middle of the terras is a large pair of gates, for a communication between the deer and lodge-parks. At these gates is seen a large lake of water, a little to the right of the house, which looks like a part of a considerable river; but 'tis only a pleasing deception, for nature hath dealt her favours to this place with so sparing a hand as to that element, that there is not perhaps a perennial spring to be found within it. This agreeable effect is produced by planting clumps of trees to conceal the extremities of the lake, which is one of the numberless instances of that fine taste, every where to be seen in the disposition of this place, all laid out and perfected in the manner we now see it, in the life-time, and by the particular directions of the noble proprietor. The eye is no where offended with the appearance of bare walls, nor can it judge of the extent of the park, as the country about it is taken into view, over fosses and concealed boundaries made for that purpose, where they have the best effect.

Adjoining to the deer-park westward, are the lodge-park, and Oakley Woods, particularly meriting the traveller's attention. Of these I have attempted a short description under the titling of Oakley. I now return to Cirencester.

As to the other estates in Cirencester, mentioned in Domesday-book to be held by lay-men, it is impossible for me to give a distinct account of the descent of them; but I apprehend a part was granted to the abbey-church, of which hereafter, and a part passed in the following manner.

Ralph Cufion was seized of twenty acres in Cirencester 3 H. 3. and Jeffry de Erchebald, whom I take to be a descendant of the free man mentioned in Domesday-book, held an estate in Cirencester 36 H. 3. William Erchbald, a descendant of the said Jeffry, was found to be a free tenant here, by the escheator's inquisition, 4 H. 4. Philip Smith and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Cirencester and Chesterton, to the use of sir Giles at law, and one of the justices of the court of common pleas; till when, by successive re-elections, he had sat in parliament for the borough of Cirencester from the year 1735. In 1770, he was appointed one of the lords commissioners of the great seal; and his majesty was also pleased to advance him to the dignity of a baron, by the title of baron Apsley, on the 22d day of January, 1771; having on the 12th day of the same month, appointed him to the important office of lord high chancellor of Great Britain; which office he continues to discharge with great abilities and honour. His lordship married Anne, daughter and heir of — James, esq; who dying without issue, he wedded, secondly, Tryphena, daughter of Thomas Scawen, of Maidwell, Northamptonshire, by whom he has issue two sons and three daughters. — John Bathurst, third son of Allen earl of Bathurst, resides at Saperton in this county, and remains unmarried. — Allen, the fourth son, was fellow of New-college, Oxford, and rector of Beverlone and Saperton in this county. He died unmarried, the year 1768. — His lordship's five daughters were — Frances, married first to William Woodhouse, esq; who died knight of the shire for Norfolk, May 31, 1735; secondly, to James Whitshed, of Hampton Court in Middlesex, esq; one of the present representatives of this borough. — 2. Catharine, married to Henry Reginald Courtney, esq; brother to sir William Courtney, bar. afterwards created viscount Courtney. — 3. Jane, married to John Buller, of Morvall, in Cornwall, esq; and knight in parliament for that county. — 4. Leonora, married to colonel Edward Urmstone, of the first regiment of foot-guards, now a major-general. — And 5. Anne, married to the reverend James Benson, LL. D. the present chancellor of the diocese of Gloucester.

In consideration of his lordship's great merits, his majesty was pleased to advance him to the dignity of an earl, by the title of Earl of Bathurst, of Bathurst in Suffex, by letters patents dated Aug. 12, 1772.

His lordship's arms are, Sable, two bars ermine, in chief three crosses pattee Or. CREST. On a wreath, a dexter arm in mail embowed, holding a club with spikes, all proper. SUPPORTERS. Two stags argent, each gorged with a collar gemel ermine. MOTTO. TIEN TA FOY.

Bruges,

Bruges, 17 H. 7. and sir Edward Seymour, son of Edward duke of Somersset and the lady Catharine his wife, levied a fine of lands in Cirencester, to the use of the king, 7 E. 6. Those lands are now divided between a great number of proprietors.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

There are five tithings, or hamlets, in this parish, all in the hundred of the Out-Torn, or Crowthorne and Minety, of the following names, viz. 1. Spital-gate, now vulgarly and corruptly called Spiringate-tithing. 2. Wiggold. 3. Chester-ton. 4. Barton. 5. Oakley.

1. Spital-gate tithing lies on the north and east sides of the town. The abbey of Cirencester had its hospitium, for the entertainment of strangers; and the entrance to that part of the abbey was called the Spital-gate. This gate gave denomination to the tithing in which it stands, and to an adjoining farm. There are other lands in this tithing, called the Almery-farm, from the almery of the abbey, to which it belonged. The Almery-gate is also standing. Both these farms were granted to Richard Master 6 Eliz. and are now the property of Thomas Master, esq; who has a fine seat, with handsome gardens in this tithing, built on, or near, the site of the antient abbey, and therefore called the Abbey-House, of which more may be seen in the account of the abbey.

2. Wiggold lies on the north-east of the town, beyond the forementioned tithing. John Bisset, chief forester of England, died seized of Wiggold 25 H. 3. His wife Alice survived him, and held Wiggold in dower. After her death, the manor descended to his four daughters; Margaret, married to Richard de Rivers; Ela, Isabel, and Edith; which last was called Edith lady of Wiggold. Roger Normand purchased a charter of free-warren in this manor 9 E. 3. which was confirmed 15 R. 2. William Boys and others held lands in Wiggold and Cirencester 32 E. 3. Sir William Nottingham was seized of this manor 1 R. 3. and William Pole and Anne his wife levied a fine of it to George Prater 3 E. 6. Mr. Talbot and Mr. Grey were proprietors of it in the year 1711, but Mr. Talbot and Mr. Townsend are the present lords of this manor. The tithes of Wiggold, belonging formerly to the abbey of Cirencester, were granted to Thomas Erskyn, viscount Fenton, 5 Jac. but Thomas Master, esq; is the present impropiator. The tithe of hay, and all privy tithes, belong to the minister of the parish.

3. Chester-ton, situate on the south and south-east sides of the borough, the name of which has in it a kind of evidence of its antiquity; for the Saxon Leartre, (and so our Chester;) comes plainly from the Roman Castrum; and Mr. Burton has observed, that the name is given to such places only where the Romans built their Castra. But the antiquities found in this tithing have already been largely spoken of in the former part of this account, under the name of the Leaufes, which is within it; to which the reader is referred.

Jeffry Langley was seized of Chesterton 2 E. 1. Edmond Langley held this manor of Henry earl of Lancaster, by the third part of a knight's fee, 2 R. 3. John Langley was seized of it 38 & 39 H. 4. Isabel, the widow of Walter Langley, held this manor 14 E. 4. It afterwards descended to William Arundel, as heir to his father, 20 Eliz. and he had livery granted to him the same year.

Robert D'Oiley, son of Nigel, gave the tithes of Chesterton to the monks of St. Peter of Gloucester, when Serlo was abbat. Sir John Nelthorp is the present impropiator. The tithe of hay and privy tithes belong to the minister, as in Wiggold.

The earl of Bathurst, Thomas Master, esq; and the reverend Mr. Thomas Coxe, have very considerable estates in this tithing.

4. Barton-tithing includes a considerable tract of land on the west side of the town, beside the Barton-farm; which great farm belonged to the abbey of Cirencester, and was granted to Richard Berners 36 H. 8. and livery of it was granted to Gerard Croker 15 Eliz. It was vested in Richard Onslow, speaker of the house of commons, during part of queen Anne's reign, who sold it to Allen Bathurst, esq; now earl of Bathurst, the present possessor, whose deer park lies in this tithing.

5. Oakley-tithing lies further westward of the town. Of this place Domesday-book gives the following account:

' Roger de Laci holds Achelie. There is one hide and a half. Leuinus held it, now Girvius holds it of Roger. There are two plow-tillages in demean, and two villeins, with a priest, having two plow-tillages and a half. There are many servi. It was worth 4*l.* now 3*l.*' D. B. p. 76.

' Gislebert the son of Turoid holds one hide of Achelie of the king, and Ofulf holds it of him. Keneuard held it in the time of king Edward. There are two plow-tillages in demean, and three bordars, and six servi. It was worth 40*s.* now [only] 30*s.*' Domesday-book, p. 76.

' Turstin the son of Rolf holds one hide of Achelie. Brictric held it for a manor of king Edward. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and three villeins with three plow-tillages. There are six servi, and four acres of meadow. It was worth and is now worth 50*s.* Girvius holds it of Turstin.' p. 78. Thus far Domesday-book.

In the exemplification of the charter of king Henry the First to the church of Cirencester, it is thus expressed: ' I have also granted a walk, a course, and the wood called Aley, with a forest, and all its lands, and I retain to myself nothing out of the wood besides my hunting, and the abbat may not plow up [or assart] any part of it.'

This estate was part of the possessions of the abbey till its dissolution. Sir Thomas Seymour, uncle to king Edward the Sixth, obtained a grant of Oakley woods, in the first year of that king's reign; but he being attainted, they were granted to John duke of Northumberland 6 E. 6. after whose attainder, they reverted to the crown, and were again granted, 2 Eliz. to sir Thomas Parry, who died seized thereof 6 Eliz. and his son had livery granted him the same year. The last mentioned family sold them to sir John Danvers, who was possessed of them 37 Eliz. at the time of his death. They were afterwards purchased by sir Henry Pool, whose son, sir William Pool, sold them to sir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, of whom they were bought by the earl of Bathurst, the present proprietor of them, and of the whole of this extensive tithing.

The truffle is a vegetable production found in sufficient abundance in Oakley woods.

These woods deserve our particular notice. Near the middle of them, on a rising ground, is the point from which, like so many radii, ten cuts or ridings issue. The largest, about fifty yards wide, has the lofty tower of Cirencester to terminate the view; others, directed to neighbouring country churches, clumps of trees, and various distant objects, produce an admirable effect. Concealed as it were in the wood, stands Alfred's-hall, a building that has the semblance of great antiquity, with a bowling-green, and many beautiful lawns and agreeable walks about it. Over the door opposite to the south entrance, on the inside, is the following inscription, in the Saxon character and language:

Over the south door is the following Latin translation:

Behind this building is a ruin, with a stone over the chimney-piece, on which, in antient characters relieved on the stone, is this inscription:

IN · MEM · ALFREDI ·
REG · RENTAVR ·
ANO · DO · 1085.

It would have been inexcusable in the topographer to have passed by so curious a place without notice; but the historian would have been equally culpable, who should not have informed the reader, that this building is an excellent imitation of antiquity. The name, the inscription, and the writing over the doors, of the convention between the good king and his pagan enemies, were probably all suggested by the similarity of Achelle, the antient name of this place, to Æcglea, where king Alfred rested with his army, the night before he attacked the Danish camp at Ethandun, and at length forced their leader Godrum, or Guthrum, or Gormund, to make such convention.

Windfor, Richmond, and Stow have been sung by their respective bards; so the park and woods of this place are the subject of a short descriptive poem, by Mr. Edward Stephens, not wholly destitute of sentiment.

Of the Abbey.

King Henry the First built the abbey church, which he began in the year 1117, and compleatly finished it in fourteen years. This church was dedicated to St. Mary and St. James. But before the conquest, here was a rich college of prebendaries, says Leland, but of what Saxon's foundation no man can tell. It was antiently endowed with lands and possessions, of which Domesday-book gives the following account:

'The church of Cirecestre holds of the king
'two hides in Cirecestre hundred in elemosinage,
'and held them of king Edward quit from all 'custom. There are six acres of meadow. This 'is now, and was then worth 40s.' D. B. p. 73.

And further in the same book, in the register of lands belonging to Roger de Laci, at Wiche, now Painswick, in Bisley hundred, it is also recorded, that 'Saint Mary of Cirecestre holds one 'vill (as I read it) and part of a wood in this 'estate. King William granted it to her. It is 'worth 10s.' p. 75.

Reinbaldus, a priest, and a very eminent person of his time, was dean of this collegiate church. He was also chancellor to king Edward the confessor, and, as such, set his hand to witness the charter of privileges granted by that king to the abbey of Westminster*. Beside his ecclesiastical and other preferments, he held in this county four hides in Amney, seven in Driffild, one in Northcote, and eight in Preston, and in other counties very considerable estates, which, at his death, devolved to the crown.

King Henry having placed regular canons in the abbey church, and obtained pope Innocent's licence, and the consent and approbation of the archbishops, bishops, princes, and barons of the kingdom, as I find it expressed in the exemplification of his charter, (Appendix, N^o. 13.) endowed it, among other things, with all Reinbald's estates. And king Richard the First further increased its revenues, in the 9th year of his reign, by annexing to it the jurisdiction of the seven hundreds, as will appear by the exemplification of that king's charter, 4 H. 4. an abstract of which is given in the account of the manor and hundreds, to which the reader is referred. And king John, in the first year of his reign, confirmed all these grants to the abbey by his charter, which see also in the Appendix, N^o. 14.

There was a rent of 30*l.* a year reserved out of the manor of Cirencester, and the seven hundreds, to be paid into the exchequer at Michaelmas, which was settled, by king Edward the First, on queen Margaret, as part of her dower. This rent was afterwards granted to Edmond de Woodstock, the king's brother, 13 E. 2. and again, 1 E. 3. to Edmond earl of Kent, who was beheaded at Winchester. And John earl of Kent was seized of the same rent 26 E. 3.

The lands of William of Cirencester, in Minety, were granted to this monastery 5 Joh. and a new farm was granted to it in the 17th year of the same reign.

The abbat of Cirencester held Crinklewood, containing thirty acres, 9 E. 2. And Walter Wrilock and others granted two messuages, one toft, twenty-six acres, a yard-land, four acres of meadow, with other particulars, to the abbey, 13 E. 2. William Erchebald and others, for the church of Cirencester, were seized of seventeen messuages and twenty acres in Cirencester, 16 R. 2.

This monastery obtained a grant of a fair 17 Joh. and it had another grant of fairs in the town of Cirencester 37 H. 3. and of markets there, and in the seven hundreds, 42 H. 3.

I have already observed, in the account of the manor, &c. that a writ of Quo warranto was brought against the abbat, for the hundreds, 15 E. 1. So there was another large and strict inquisition issued against him 1 H. 4. for usurping divers privileges in the towns of Cirencester and Minety, and in the seven hundreds. But I apprehend these were mostly vexatious proceedings, to extort money from the subject for new grants; which were thought necessary in those times, when by casualties in the civil wars, or otherwise, any of the possessor's deeds and evidences happened to be lost or destroyed.

The extent of the abbat's jurisdiction in the manor court of Hatherop, was particularly specified, and mutually settled and agreed, by a composition between Hugh the abbat, and convent of Cirencester, and Wymark the priorefs and the convent of Laycock, to whom that manor belonged, which composition is preserved in the Appendix to Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon, N^o. 445.

There was a deed made in the year 1305, between the abbat of Cirencester and John de Latton, an ancestor of a family of that name at Kingston Bagpaze, in Berkshire. This deed is taken notice of by sir Robert Atkyns, as remarkable for the abbat's concessions to the other party; and as there is a translation of it in sir Robert's book, I have also inserted a copy of that translation in the Appendix, N^o. 29.

1. Serlo, the fourth dean of Salisbury, was made the first abbat after the foundation, anno 1117. He died anno 1147, and was succeeded by
2. Andrew, who died anno 1176, and had for his successor,
3. Adam, prior of Bardney. He died anno 1183, and
4. Robert, canon of Cirencester, succeeded; who dying the same year, the convent elected another
5. Robert for their abbat; upon whose death, which happened anno 1187,
6. Richard, prior of St. Gregory's, Canterbury, succeeded. He died anno 1213; in which year,
7. Alexander Nequam, alias Neccham, was made abbat. He was a very learned man, and greatly renowned for his skill in poetry, and all sorts of literature. See an account of him in Leland, and Bale de Scriptoribus. Weever says he was buried in St. Alban's abbey, tho', with better authority, other historians mention his interment in the cloysters of the cathedral church at Worcester, with this epitaph:

*Eclypsim patitur sapientia, sol sepelitur,
Qui dum vivebat studii genus omne vigeat.
Soluitur in cineres Neccham. Cui si foret heres
In terris unus, minus esset flebile funus.*

The year after his death, which happened anno 1227, or, as in Willis, 1217,

8. Walter, or, as some records have it, Richard, was elected abbat. He died 1230, whereupon
9. Hugh de Bampton, alias Bathon, who is elsewhere called Henry, succeeded. He died anno 1238, and was succeeded by
10. Roger de Rodmarton. He died anno 1266, and was succeeded by
11. Henry de Munden, to whose election the king consented Oct. 10, 1266. I don't find when he died, but anno 1281,
12. Henry de Hamptonel was made abbat. He died Nov. 2, 1307, eleven days after which,
13. Adam Brokenbury was elected abbat; but his election was vacated 'till the 3d of December, at which time he obtained a confirmation of it. He died anno 1319, and was succeeded by
14. Richard de Charleton, on whose resignation, anno 1334,
15. William Hereward was admitted abbat. He died Apr. 25, 1352, and was succeeded by
16. Ralph de Estcote, who dying anno 1357, was succeeded by
17. William de Marteley, or Martelege. He died anno 1361, and was succeeded by
18. William de Dinton, who dying anno 1363, was succeeded by
19. Nicholas de Amenev, who dying anno 1394, was succeeded by
20. John Lekhampton. His successor was
21. William Best, anno 1416. He procured to himself and successors, the use of the mitre and pontificals, and dying 1419,
22. William Wotton obtained the benediction, Mar. 5, 1429. On his death, 1440,
23. John Taunton was consecrated abbat the same year, and dying anno 1445, had for his successor,
24. William George, who received the benediction April 14, 1445, at Perthore. He died anno 1461, whereupon
25. John Solbury, or Sadbury, received the benediction at Alchurch, Oct. 13, 1461. I find not when he died, but anno 1478,
26. Thomas Compton occurs abbat. He died Oct. 11, 1481, and was succeeded by
27. Richard Clyve, elected Oct. 25, and confirmed Nov. 5, 1481. He was succeeded 1488, by

28. Thomas Aston, confirmed abbat, in the bishop of Worcester's chapel in the Strand, London, October 22, 1488. He resigned anno 1504, and was succeeded by

29. John Hakeborne, or Haukebourne, who was confirmed abbat December 7, 1504; of whom Anthony a Wood tells us, that in the year 1500, being then prior of St. Mary's college in Oxford, he commenced Batchelor of Divinity, and afterwards Doctor, and dying about the year 1522, was succeeded by

30. John Blake, the last abbat. In the year 1534, he subscribed to the king's supremacy, with Richard Ciceter, prior, Will. Cerney, and other monks of his house, in number sixteen.

This abbey was surrendered to the commissioners on the 29th of December, 1539, 31 H. 8. according to Mr. Willis's emendations, inserted after the index, in his History of Parliamentary Mitred Abbies; where I find the following account of the pensions assigned to the abbat and the religious of this monastery. 'John Blake, late abbat, 250*l.* Richard Woodwall, late prior, 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* William Warbot, late cellarer, 8*l.* William Philips, vicar of the parish church of Cirecester, nihil; declaratur in pede. This was a mitred abbey. The abbat was summoned to parliament 43 H. 3. but had not a seat there till William Best obtained the mitre, and a seat among the barons, for himself and successors, in the year 1416. The abbey was valued, at the time of its dissolution, at 1051*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.* ob. I find it in Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon.

The abbat had the privilege of coinage. I have seen a brass piece, something smaller than a copper halfpenny, which was found in the year 1772, in Mr. Master's garden. On one side was a coronet, charged with three rams heads, (part of the arms of the abbey) and round it this inscription, AVE MARIA · GRACIA · PLEN · On the reverse, a cross stony between four fleurs de lis; and round the quarters the letters ·G· ·A· ·G· ·A· for George, Abbas. From which it appears, that it was coined between the years 1445 and 1461, during which time William George was abbat.

Leland, who had seen the abbey church, says, The East part of the Church sheweth to be of a very old building. The West part, from the Transeptum, [the great cross aisle] is but new Work to speke of. The whole fabric was probably demolished soon after the surrender, and the materials were so totally removed, that the precise place where it stood was soon forgotten; but there are two gates, the Spital-gate and the Almery-gate, belonging to the abbey buildings, and the abbey barn, still remaining. Mr. Willis conjectures that the abbey stood on the north side of the parish church, which was, no doubt, says he, set within part of the abbey cemetery. He has given the following dimensions of the abbey church, from William of Worcester's MS. in Bennet-college, Cambridge. viz.

The length of the great church contains 140 steppys, the breadth of the nave of the church 41 steppys, with two ailes; or 24 yards. The chapel of the blessed Mary on the south part of the church contains 41 yards, with an aisle adjoining. The breadth of the said antient chapel contains 21 grassus, with the antient aisle. The length of the cloister 52 grassus. The length of the chapter-house 14 yards and 10 yards in breadth.—The grassus, or step, is about two feet.

In the Body of the [abbey] Church, says Leland, in a Sepulchre Crosse of white Marble is this [inscription,] Hic jacet Rembaldus Presbyter quondam hujus Ecclesie Decanus [et Tempore Edwardi Regis Angliæ Cancellarius]. Ther by 2 Noblemen of S. Amandes buried withyn the Presbyterie of Cirecestre Abbay Church. And there is buried the Hart of Sentia, Wife to Richard King of [the] Romaines, and Erle of Cornwalle. Sir Robert Atkyns was greatly mistaken in representing these particulars as being in the present parish church, instead of the abbey church.

The arms of the abbey were, Gules, on a chevron argent three rams heads caboshed sable, attired Or.

The site of the abbey was granted, Aug. 19, 1 E. 6. to Thomas lord Seymour, with lands in fifteen shires, to be held in capite by the service of one knight's-fee, paying 1*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* But on his attainder it reverted to the crown, and was afterwards granted to Richard Master, 6 Eliz. and is now the property of Thomas Master, esq; who has an elegant house and gardens on the site of the abbey, and a large estate adjoining.

He was physician to queen Elizabeth, and married Elizabeth daughter of ——— Tunnelly of Lincolnshire.

George Master, esq; son of Richard, married Bridget, daughter and heire's of John Cornwall, of Marlborough in Wiltshire.

One hundred fifty two messuages lying in the town of Cirencester, and which formerly belonged to the abbey, were granted to John Polland and William Birt 36 H. 8. St. Mary's-Mill (at the first bridge, now taken down) and Barton-Mill, formerly belonging to the abbey, were granted to James Woodford and Thomas Woodford 2 Eliz. Bridgbury-farm in Cirencester, also belonging to the abbey, was granted to Percival Bowes and John Mosier 10 Eliz.

Thus far of the town and abbey. The register and other books belonging to the abbey, which might have given further light into the antient affairs of this place, are supposed to be lost. Doctor Tanner had not seen them, and the editor of this account, after diligent inquiry, has not been able to get the least information concerning them.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Cirencester. The bishop of the diocese is patron of the curacy, which, with various augmentations and perquisites, is now of considerable value. The particulars of the several donations to it stand under the head Benefactions.

The rectory of Cirencester, and the advowson of the vicarage, were granted to sir Thomas Tresham and George Tresham 5 E. 6. But William Bouchier, of Barnsley, esq; died seized of the rectory in the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth, and livery thereof was granted to his son Thomas Bouchier the same year. The impropriations of Chesterton and Wiggold are already taken notice of under those tithings.

A portion of tithes called Archebalds, formerly belonging to the abbey of Cirencester, were granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor 6 Jac.

There have been three parish churches in this town, one dedicated to St. Cecilia, which was intirely down in Leland's time; the church of St. Lawrence is still standing, but now converted into small tenements. The third is the present parish church, dedicated to St. John the evangelist. It is a large and beautiful building, consisting of the nave, two large ailes, and five chapels. The roof is supported by two rows of stone pillars, very handsomely fluted. There are five pillars and two pillasters in each row. The length of the nave is 77 feet, and the breadth of the church, including the two ailes, 74 feet. Over the pillars are the busts of several benefactors to the church, with proper scutcheons, arms, and devices. The first two (one in each row) next the chancel, are for Thomas Ruthal, bishop of Durham, with the arms of his see impaling his own paternal coat. He was a native of Cirencester, and was consecrated bishop of Durham 1 H. 8.—The next figure in each row, represents John Hakebourne, twenty-ninth abbat of Cirencester; one scutcheon bears the arms of his abbey; on the other is a mitre pierced with a crozier, to shew that his abbey was a mitred one; and upon both are I. H. the initial letters of his name.—The arms over the third pillar, in one row, Quarterly 1st. and 4th. two lioncels passant; 2d. and 3d. a chevron. On the other, a wyvern in combat with a lion, a crescent for distinction.—Over the fourth pillar on one side, R. R; on the other row, a cross moline between the letters I. P.—Over a fifth pillar are the letters H. G. and the scutcheon opposite to it has three greyhounds palewise courant.—The arms of the town stand near the top of the fourth pillar; and other devices, among which are the crown of thorns and instruments of crucifixion, are arranged over the arches.

These circumstances shew that the nave of the church, and probably all westward, including the tower, was rebuilt when John Hakebourne was abbat, viz. between the years 1504 and 1522. But the original church was built long before, for there are monumental inscriptions still remaining, of dates almost a hundred years prior to abbat Hakebourne's government. The arms of bishop Ruthal, placed among those of the benefactors to this church, is so strong a circumstance of his having contributed to the rebuilding of it, that I cannot assent to Leland, who says, he promised much, but preventid with Deth gave nothing.

The windows were very curiously painted, but they have suffered from bigots and bungling workmen. Those on the south side are best preserved, and of those the great one on the right of the entrance is most intire. This consists of three ranges of figures, of four compartments each. The principal figures in the uppermost, are three of the antient fathers of the church, and the Pope. They stand in the following order, 1st. St. Augustine, 2d. St. Jerom, 3d. the Pope, 4th. St. Ambrose. The names of the fathers are written beneath; but the Pope is distinguished only by his tiara, or tripple crown. Under St. Augustine, in the same compartment, is a figure kneeling, with a scroll round his head, whereon is written Sc's Augustinus ora pro nobis. His name, Willi

Sir William Master, son of George, married Alice, daughter of Edward Estcourt, of Salisbury, esq. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 3 Car. 1, 1627, and was a person of great worth and loyalty. He served in parliament for the borough of Cirencester, and lies buried in the church of that place.

Thomas Master, esq; son of sir William, married Elizabeth, sister of sir Thomas Dyke, of Sussex. He died 1680, and lies buried near his father in Cirencester church. He also served in parliament for that borough.

Thomas Master, son of Thomas, married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Driver, of Aston, and has likewise served in parliament for the said borough.

Thomas Master, son of the last Thomas, married Joan, daughter and heiress of Jasper Chapman, of Stratton, esq; who before his death gave this estate to his son.

Thomas Master, esq; who married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of sir Thomas Cann, bar. and dying the latter end of May, 1749, left issue by the said Elizabeth, two sons, Thomas and Richard, and one daughter Elizabeth.

Thomas Master, son of the last Thomas and Elizabeth, the present proprietor of the abbey estate, married Mary, daughter of James-Lenox Dutton, of Sherbourn in this county, esq. His arms are, Gules, a lion rampant gardent, his tail double Or, holding in his paws a rose Argent.

¹ Not Sc's Augustine, which I observe, lest the reader should think the above an error of the press.

Hampton, stands at foot, to shew that he was the donor of this light, or compartment of the window. There are also figures at the feet of the other fathers, with their names thus written, Iobes Hampton & ux ei; Willm' Okyn & Iobana ux. eiusd; Will. Colburn Bower & Alicia Iobana. These gave the respective compartments in which they are placed.—The principal figures in the second range are, 1st. St. Catherine, 2d. St. Margaret, 3d. St. Dorothy, 4th. defaced. They have all scrolls round them, upon which portions of scripture, in Latin, are written in old character; and the donor of each compartment is placed, with his name, under the principal figure.—The figures in the four lights of the lower range are, St. ... de Beulaco; Jobes de Bes'laco; Will. Ebraco; ...s Osmund de Sarr' with scrolls and passages of scripture round them. In the small lights, at the top of the window, are various figures and representations, as of the trinity in a triangular form, as commonly express'd; of the virgin mother, &c. &c.

In the window on the other side of the south door, are written on the glass the names of the benefactors to the lights wherein they stand, viz. Iobes Rowthale M'garet & Alic' ux. in one compartment, Iobanes Langele' in another, and Iobana Whyt in a third; and round the head of the latter, in a scroll, Sc'a Batildis ora pro nobis; which saint is the principal figure above in this compartment. There is a large figure in each of the other lights, over the persons above-mentioned, but their names do not appear. In the other windows, on the same side of the church, are figures of canonized saints, with portions of scripture, in Latin, upon scrolls round them; but a description of every particular would be too minute and tedious.

There is a gallery or screen-work at the entrance of the choir, upon which a handsome organ was erected in the year 1683, and has been several times since repaired and enlarged at a great expence.

The chapels were built at different times, and are the following:

1. Jesus-chapel, built of Irish oak, at the east end of the south aisle. It is 12 feet long, and 9 broad. Round the top of it are several coats of arms belonging to the families of benefactors to the church and poor; as, 1. Bathurst, 2. Master, 3. Monox, 4. Atkyns, 5. Cox, 6. Coxwell, 7. Myth impaling Master, 8. Or, a fess between three doves heads erased sable, for How of Guiting.
2. St. John's, on the south side of the choir, 34 feet long, and 24 broad.
3. St. Catherine's, on the north side of the choir, is 34 feet long, and 13 broad. The roof is richly arched with stone, and ornamented with arms, knots, and devices; among others, Quarterly, France and England. 2. Three ostrich's heads issuing out of a ducal coronet. 3. A rose signed with a coronet. 4. The letters I.H. several times repeated, for John Hakebourne, as already mentioned. This chapel was roofed in abbat Hakebourne's time, principally at the expence of himself and bishop Ruthall. The effigy in stone of Richard Osmund, with a purse at his girdle, lay under an arch in the wall of this chapel, with his head upon a pillow, but now is injudiciously placed upright against the wall. He is supposed to have been the founder of it. The figure of St. Catherine, as large as life, with her wheel and several votaries at her feet, is rudely painted on the south wall, and 'till lately has been covered with white wash.

4. St. Mary's, formerly endowed with great revenues. It stands on the north side of St. Catherine's, and is 74 feet long, and 21 broad.

5. Trinity-chapel, on the north side of the north aisle. The glass windows of this chapel were very beautiful. In the east window were the figures of Peter king of Castile, Richard duke of York, Thomas duke of Surry, Richard earl of Salisbury, and of sir John Jeneville, who was buried here; but those figures are now defaced. In the wall at the east end are the arms of benefactors. 1. Gules, a chevron between three mullets Or. 2. Argent, on a bend gules three martlets Or. 3. Gules, two bars Or, in chief two stags heads caboshed of the second. 4. Argent, on a bend gules three cinquefoils Or. 5. Gules, a chevron between ten crosses pattee argent. 6. Obliterated. 7. Argent, a fess between three crosses pattee sable. 8. Sable, a cross argent. 9. Gules, three couples-cloves argent. 10. Checky Or and gules, a fess ermine, for Roe. 11. Argent, a chevron between three crescents Or. 12. Nebule Or and gules. 13. Argent, a chief indented sable. 14. Sable, six doves argent. 15. Argent, a bend Or, in chief a label. 16. Ermine, on a cross gules five martlets Or. 17. Checky Or and sable, a chief argent gutty gules. 18. Argent, fretty gules. 19. Gules, fretty argent, a canton of the second in the dexter chief.—In a niche, at the east end of this chapel without, are the effigies in stone of the virgin Mary, and the infant Jesus in her arms.

The tower stands at the west end of the church. It is 134 feet high, well proportioned and beautiful, with pinnacles and battlements. On the dexter side of the west door are the arms of Cirencester abbey; on the other side, Quarterly, France and England. There is a peal of twelve bells in this tower, which no place in the kingdom can boast of, except London. In the south-west angle of the tower, in a niche, is the figure of St. John, as large as life, to whom the church is dedicated; and in the north-west angle stands another figure.

There is a very curious representation in the north wall, at the top of the church, of a Whitson-All, with the lord and lady, in high relief, and the steward, purse-bearer, and all the mock officers which attend that kind of merry-making, almost peculiar to this country. See pp. 23, 24.

The south porch is a fine Gothic structure facing the market-place, thirty-eight feet in front, and fifty high. It is ornamented with curious pinnacles and battlements of hollow work, and with a great variety of carved representations of dragons, beasts, and other figures, very neatly finished. In twelve niches in the front, formerly stood the twelve apostles; but the rigorous principles of the times, about the latter end of the reign of king Charles the First, would not permit them to remain. Over this porch is the town-hall, now used on parish meetings, and other large assemblies of the inhabitants; but formerly the general Sessions of the county hath been kept in it; on which account, I apprehend, the figure of Justice, standing over the door of the stairs leading to the hall, was first placed there. Alice Avening, aunt to bishop Ruthall by the mother's side, gave 100 marks towards the building of the porch, and his mother, and other parishioners, contributed to the finishing of it.

There were several chantries and religious offices established in this church, viz.

1. The chantry of St. Mary.
2. The chantry of Jesus.
3. The chantry of St. Christopher, whereof Thomas Edmonds was the last chaplain, and had a pension, after the dissolution, of 4*l.* Willis. The lands belonging to these three chantries, were granted to sir Oliver Cromwell 5 Jac.
4. The chantry of the Holy Trinity, whereof William Painter was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 4*l.* Willis. The lands belonging to it were granted to — Skevington, in the reign of Edward the Sixth.
5. The service of the Holy Trinity, of which Thomas Marshall was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 5*l.* Willis.
6. The chantry of St. Catherine.
7. The office of St. Thomas the Martyr, founded by sir William Nottingham, whereof Thomas Neal was the last chaplain.
8. The chantry of St. Anthony.
9. The chantry founded by John Jones.
10. The service of St. John.
11. Robert Richard's chantry, whereof William Wilton was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 4*l.* Willis.
12. Alice Avening's chantry, whereof Henry Jones was the last chaplain, and had a pension of 5*l.* Willis. Her name is now in the window of St. Catherine's chapel.
13. The Fraternity of St. Catherine, and
14. The Fraternity of St. John Baptist.

 which, without an explanation, would soon defeat the intention of it. Close by it, on another table

Against the south wall is an elegant white marble monument for sir William Master. He is represented in a cumbent posture, leaning on his left elbow, and over him, on a table, this inscription:

Quos Deus conjunxit separat tantum non repudiat Mors.

At the entrance of St. Mary's chapel, against the wall, on a brass plate, is the effigy of an old man in a gown, with a taylor's shears over his shoulder, and a dog at his feet. At bottom, Phillip Marner who died in the yeare 1587.

In Trinity chapel are several very antient flat stones of grey marble, with inscriptions on brass. Upon one of them is the figure of a gentleman, with a lady on each side of him, and this memorial:

Hic sepeliuntur Willms Prelatte Armiger specialissim' benefactor huj' Capelle Agnes nup' uxor Iohannis Martyn et Iohana filia et heres Ricardi de Cobyndon Relicta Iohannis Twynyho de Cayforde in Comitatu Soms. On another stone, inlaid with brass (whereon are the effigies of a man and woman, and fourteen children) was this inscription, part of which is torn off:

Hic jacet Robertus Pagge cum Margareta sibi sponfa prole secunda Vicinis gratus fuerat mercator amatus Pacificus plenis manibus subventor egenis Ecclesiisq; viis ornator et hiis reparator Mill C quater quater et anno sed Aprilis Oclava luce mortem pertransiit ipse Celi solamen De' illi conferat Amen.

On a label, issuing out of the woman's mouth, is

That to the Trinite for us pray syng or rede.

Another stone. On brass are engraven the figures of a man, his two wives, and eight children, with this inscription:

Orate pro aīabus Iohannis Benett et Agnetis uxor' suarum qui quidem Iohannes obiit decimo nono die mensis Iulij Anno Domini Millimo CCCC° nonagesimo septimo quor' animabus

Over his first wife's head is written,

Spiritus sci de' miserere nobis.

Over his head,

Sacta Trinitas unus Deus miserere nobis.

Over his other wife's head (now torn off) was written,

Fili redemptor mundi miserere nobis.

On the brass plate of another stone are representations of a man and his four wives, two on each side, and on the brass, round the edge of the stone, in old characters, Hic jacent Reginaldus Spycer quondam m'cator isti' ville qui obiit ix° die Iulij Anno dni Mill'mo CCCC° xlij° et Margareta Iuliana Margareta ac Iohna uxores ej' quor' aiab' p'picietur d's Amen.

On another brass plate is the effigy of a man in armour, with spurs on, and a sword girt to his side, in the pomel of which are these arms, A pile, over all a chevron. Round the stone, on brass, it was written, but now imperfect, Hic jacet Richardus Dixton Armiger qui obiit die sancti Laurencii martyris Anno dni M CCCC xxxviii° cujus anime propicietur de' Amen.

On a plain marble table against the north wall, of Mr. William Turner, late of this place:

In remembrance

and of Catharine, (for more than fifty-six years) his entirely beloved wife.

He was the youngest son of the reverend John Turner of Somersford Keynes in the county of Wilts: and died the 21st of August 1769, aged seventy-six years. She was the second daughter of the reverend Joseph Harrison, more than sixty-three years minister of this parish: and died four months after her husband, and of the same age.

They were a very humane and exemplary pair: acknowledged THE MOST HIGH in every dispensation: and kept through life the serious thought of death.

In the south porch, against the wall, is the following modest memorial:

Under your Feet lyeth the Body of William Cletherow, Gent. an humble Penitent, who thoughte himselfe unworthy of the lowest Place in the House of God. He departed this Life the 8th day of November 1680.

Benefactions.

Doctor William Clarke, late dean of Winchester, having devised certain lands and tithes in the parish of Tillingham, in the county of Essex, in trust among other things, to augment ten small ecclesiastical benefices with 30*l.* per ann. each for ever; and Dr. Henry Compton, bishop of London, and the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, having the nomination of six of those benefices, declared they would assign this charity to such market-towns as would settle an equal revenue on their minister. And the inhabitants of the town of Cirencester, with the assistance of others, having raised the sum of 619*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* by free contribution, and with 600*l.* of the said money purchased an annuity for their minister of 30*l.* a year, charged on the tithing of Oakley, in this parish; the said trustees then appointed Cirencester to be one of those benefices so to be augmented, by an instrument dated Jan. 17, 1698. But by a deficiency in the profits of the trust estate, from inundations and other accidents, the annual payments to the respective ministers, from the first commencement in 1699, have often fallen under, tho' sometimes exceeded 15*l.* a year. The surplus of the money (19*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*) was given to the minister towards defraying his expences in settling the augmentation. The principal contributors to this laudable benefaction were, sir Robert Atkyns jun. knight, who gave 100*l.* Thomas Master, esq; 100*l.* Mrs. Bridget Smith, a daughter of sir William Master, knight, 100*l.* Mrs. Winifred Master, 50*l.* Mrs. Anne Williams, 43*l.* Sir Benjamin Bathurst, knight, 20*l.* Sir Jonathan Raymond, knight, 20*l.* Sir Richard Onslow, baronet, 10*l.* Sir Richard Howe, baronet, 10*l.* John Willet, clothier, 20*l.* Bernard Ballinger, 20*l.* John Coxe, clerk, rector of North Cerney, 10*l.* Ralph Willet, clerk, rector of Stratton, 10*l.* Robert Brereton, gent. 10*l.* Other contributions were from 5*l.* to 10*s.* each.

Till about this time there was no vicarage-house. The inhabitants first purchased a lease of the present house; afterwards William George, esq; gave the quit-rent of it, and in the year 1708, Mrs. Rebecca George, his widow, gave the fee of it for ever.

For Sermons, Prayers, and Catechizing.

1587, Philip Marner gave 6*s.* 8*d.* for ever, for a sermon on the first Friday in clear Lent.

1607, Sir Giles Fettiplace gave an annuity of 20*s.* out of lands in Eastington; half for a sermon on the 5th of November, and half for ringing on the same day, and for mending the ropes.

John Coxwell, esq; gave 20*s.* a year for two sermons in Christmas tide and Lent.

1618, Jeffry Bath, bailiff of the town, gave 6*s.* 8*d.* for a sermon on Ascension-day.

1637, Sir Thomas Roe, of Cranford in Middlesex, gave 2*l.* for a sermon or prayers on the 13th of September, for ever.

1639, George Monox, esq; gave 8*l.* per ann. for a sermon on the first Wednesday in every month.

1681, Mrs. Mapson, a native of the town, gave 10*s.* for a sermon on St. Andrew's day.

1695, John Master, M. D. gave 200*l.* one half of the income of which to the minister for ever, for reading morning prayers, the other half to poor house-keepers not receiving alms.

Mrs. Rebecca Powell gave 10*l.* a year to the minister, for catechizing the children, and for expounding the catechism; and 2*l.* a year to provide candles necessary for that service.

Mrs. Hannah Ashwell gave 10*l.* the interest whereof for a sermon on the 30th of January for ever; but the principal money is now lost. She also gave 10*l.* more, the interest of which to be divided between the minister and parish clerk, for a psalm, with Gloria Patri, to be sung every Monday at morning prayers.

Nicholas Edwards gave to the minister the interest of 5*l.* for ever.

To the Church, &c. and for Educating and Apprenticing poor Children.

The large, handsome gallery, on the north side of the church, was built at the expence of the Right Honourable the Earl of Bathurst. That at the entrance of St. Catherine's chapel was erected by sir Anthony Hungerford.

The organ was purchased with the contributions of the inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood.

The two large silver flaggons, used at the communion, were given by Edward Dixon, esq; in the year 1434; William George, esq; and his wife, gave the two plates for collecting the offerings; Mr. John Adye gave the gilt strainer for the chalice; and Mrs. Bridget Smith, and others (whose names are either forgotten, or who chose to conceal them) furnished the remainder of the noble service of plate with which this church is accommodated.

The best bible and common prayer book were given by Thomas Powell, esq; and his wife; and the marble font was presented by the female inhabitants of the town.

For the ornamenting and repairing of the church, there is a revenue of 67*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* a year, arising chiefly from houses lying within the town, and a close in the tithing of Chelston, given by John Jones, and other benefactors, whose names have not been transmitted down to us; about 22*l.* of which is laid out in repairs, and the remainder expended in salaries, except 4*l.* paid to the minister, and 8*l.* to the master of the free Grammar School, as directed by a decree in chancery 1 Jac. 1.

The Grammar School was built and founded by bishop Ruthall. The master has a good house kept in repair for him, and besides the 8*l.* a year before-mentioned, queen Mary endowed the school with 20*l.* a year out of the exchequer, which bounty was afterwards confirmed by queen Elizabeth.

The Blue School, for cloathing and educating twenty boys and twenty girls, with provision for teaching younger children in quarterly schools, out of it, was set up in 1714, by the general beneficence of the inhabitants and their friends. But Thomas Powell, esq; and Rebecca his wife, were the principal benefactors. In the year 1718 he endowed it with 15*l.* a year, part of an annuity for 99 years, paid out of the exchequer; and a moiety of the profits of Maskelyne's Ham in Cricklade. And the court of chancery, in the year 1737, appropriated 20*l.* a year, out of the estates bequeathed to Mrs. Powell for erecting and endowing a charity school or schools in this parish, for the support of this school; and in 1744, appointed the produce of 562*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* to be paid yearly for the benefit of this school, as a provisional supply, after the expiration of the annuity out of the exchequer.

The Yellow School was erected and endowed by virtue of the will of Mrs. Rebecca Powell, who died in the year 1722, and left an estate for that purpose. A school-house was purchased and fitted up at the expence of near 1200*l.* but some difficulties arising about carrying the will into execution, the court of chancery, upon application to it, decreed that 212*l.* 8*s.* per annum be apply'd to the cloathing, maintaining, teaching to write and cast accounts, and bringing up twenty boys in the art of stocking-frame knitting. Twenty girls are also cloathed every year, and are taught to read, and to spin worsted.

Sir Thomas Roe gave a rent-charge of 25*l.* a year out of land at Mouswell in this county, 40*s.* of which for a sermon, as already mentioned, the rest to put out poor children of this parish apprentices, on the 13th of September annually; and once in three or four years, a boy out of the parish of Rendcombe, presented.

Mr. Thomas Perry gave 100*l.* and his son Mr. Timothy Perry gave 12*l.* which sums were laid out in the purchase of a freehold estate in the parish of Upton St. Leonard in this county.

Richard George, esq; gave a rent-charge of 3*l.* a year, out of a house in Gloucester-street; William Forder, late of Amory Crucis, gave 20*l.* Thomas Powell, esq; gave 40*l.* James Clutterbuck, late citizen of Exeter, gave 100*l.* James Shewell, filkins, gave 10*l.* and Mrs. Elizabeth Edwards, in 1726, gave 100*l.* the annual produce of all which to be apply'd to the putting out poor children apprentices.

Hospitals and Almshouses.

King Henry the First founded St. John's Hospital, for three poor men and three poor women, who receive 1*s.* 8*d.* each weekly.

St. Lawrence's Hospital was founded by Edith, lady of Wiggold, in this parish, for a master, with a salary of about 40*s.* a year, and two poor women, who have 12*d.* a piece weekly.

St. Thomas's Hospital was erected by sir William Nottingham, who lived in the reign of king Henry the Fourth, and endowed it with a rent-charge of 6*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* per annum, out of an estate in the parish of Thornbury, which is divided between four poor weavers.

In the year 1670, Mrs. Elizabeth Bridges gave an Almshouse in Dollar-street for six poor widows, and 1*s.* a piece weekly for ever.

William George, esq; and Rebecca his wife, in the year 1702, gave six tenements and gardens in Leaufe-lane, for six poor widows; and assigned two other tenements in Cricklade-street, one charged with 6*l.* a year to buy garments for the widows, and what remains of the produce of them to keep the houses in repair.

Thomas Powell, esq; gave a moiety of the rent of Maskelyne's Ham to the same widows; and Rebecca his widow gave them 10*s.* a year each, to buy them firing.

John Morfe gave two dwellings in Gloucester-street for two poor widows.

To be given or lent in Money to the Poor.

In the year 1587, Philip Marner gave 20*l.* and in 1613, Henry Hill gave 30*l.* to be lent to tradesmen without interest.

The same Philip Marner gave a rent-charge of 3*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* on a house in Abbat-street; Alice Avening, in 1498, gave a house in Dollar-street, of 40*s.* a year; John Weobley, the same year, gave a house, since exchanged for an annuity of 1*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* charged on the Greyhound inn; William Hooper, in 1605, gave a house in Little Silver-street, of 2*l.* 4*s.* rent; Jeffry Bathe, in 1618, gave, out of a house in Cricklade-street, 1*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*

John Chandler, in 1632, gave a house in Cicely-street of 2*l.* a year; Mr. Humphry Bridges gave a house in Cricklade-street, of 2*l.* a year; George Monox, esq; in 1639, gave five houses in this town, now let at 23*l.* 10*s.* the produce of which (except 1*l.* a year for a monthly sermon, and 6*s.* 8*d.* to be spent) to be given in money to the poor.

John Pathe, butcher, in 1641, gave a rent-charge of 4*l.* on a house in Dollar-street, half to decayed butchers and half to the other poor. Rowland Freeman, in 1658, gave a rent-charge of 40*s.* on a house and land now incorporated with the earl of Bathurst's park. These rents were given to the use of the poor.

The following sums were also given that the annual interest them may be apply'd to the same use.

In 1625, Samuel Coxwell, gent. gave 50*l.* 1639, George Monox, esq; gave 100*l.* 1645, Sir Henry Pratt, of London, knight, gave 100*l.* William Blomer, of Hatherop, gent. gave 10*l.* Mrs. Chambers gave 50*l.* Others, in small contributions, gave 53*l.* Which sums were all laid out in the purchase of land in South Cerney, except 20*l.* part of Mr. Blomer's gift, with 10*l.* which a house in Gloucester-street was purchased for the poor.

Thomas Damsel gave 100*l.* In 1620, a man who had a lottery gave 40*l.* Mr. Thomas Shermore, of London, 20*l.* Mr. John George, esq; 10*l.* The heirs of Robert George, esq; 10*l.* Mr. Edward Pratt, jun. 10*l.* 1606, Thomas Smith 20*l.* 1615, John May, of Amney St. Mary, 10*l.* Robert Church, butcher, 10*l.* Edward Church 20*l.* 1669, Lady Atkynson, 10*l.* 1679, John Oates, clothier, 10*l.* 1680, William Kirby, of London, falter, 10*l.* John Coxwell, esq; 100*l.* The friend Mr. William Master 50*l.* 1706, Mrs. Winifred Master 10*l.* Other benefactions, in smaller sums, amounted to 22*l.* 10*s.*

Elizabeth Edwards gave 30*l.* and four tenements in Castle-street, (which were sold for 60*l.* about the year 1729) the interest to be distributed yearly among four poor families. But these tenements, with 100*l.* before mentioned to have been given by her to apprentice children, were laid out in the purchase of the church-yard.

I come now to give the state of population. According to sir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this parish, there were near 800 houses, and about 4000 inhabitants, whereof above 100 were freeholders; yearly births 103, burials 87. But these numbers are too high; for having examined the register, I find, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, which includes the time mentioned in his account, there were 933 baptisms, and 821 burials. During this period the dissenters (except the quakers, of whom there were but few) buried in the church-yard, and were duly registered; and allowing 3 births and 2 burials to the quakers, the annual number, upon an average, will be 96.3 baptisms, and 84.1 burials. In a like series of ten years, beginning with 1760, there are registered 774 baptisms, and 775 burials; but during this time the dissenters in general are not registered; and allowing for them 17 baptisms and 10 burials annually, the present state of the account will be 88.4 baptisms, and 87.5 burials.

After the small-pox had left the town in the year 1741, the inhabitants were found to be 3797; and after a visitation of the same kind in 1758, the people were numbered at 3458; but in 1775, an exact account having been taken, the whole number of householders was 838, and of inhabitants 3878, something more than four persons and a half to a house. The increase of inhabitants when the burials so nearly equal the births, must be attributed to the afflux of people from other places: wherefore the burials, as they now stand, are improper for making an estimate of the healthiness of the place. For, had the people risen to the present number, without such adventitious assistance, it is easy to prove, that the burials would have been fewer in proportion. Suppose ten in a year ought to be deducted on that account, the number of inhabitants to the average of annual burials will be as 50 to 1. This is a proof of what was advanced of the healthiness of the place, considered as a town, where intemperance and disorder are more prevalent than in country villages.

C L A P T O N

IS a small parish, in the lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, five miles south-westward from Stow, five north-eastward from North-leach, and twenty-three eastward from Gloucester. It is situated upon an eminence to the west, above Bourton-on-the-Water. The etymology of the name is uncertain: and the parish affords nothing worthy the attention of the naturalist or antiquary.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In the list of the manors belonging to William Goizenboded, in Ceolfede hundred, it is thus recorded:

' The same William holds Cloptune. A household servant (buscarle) held it in the time of king Edward. There are ten hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and twelve villeins, and four bordars, and one radchenister, with nine plow-tillages. In Wicelcombe one burgage. It was worth 8*l.* and is now worth 100*s.* D. B. p. 74.

The abbey of Evesham purchased a charter of free warren in Clopton and divers other manors 35 H. 3. But Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchester, was seized of Clopton 55 H. 3. and a charter of free warren in Clapton was granted to Richard Clapton 56 H. 3. I have retained the extracts from the records of the two last dates, because I found them in sir Robert Atkyns's account; but they may possibly relate to some other place of the same name.

Alan la Zouch, baron of Ashley, died seized of Clapton 7 E. 2. leaving three daughters coheiresses, from whom the manor went to the family of the Bruggs.

Richard de Brugg was seized of Clapton, and having been in rebellion against king Edward the Second, his whole estate was forfeited, and seized into the king's hands, but it was restored to him again 1 E. 3. Edward Brugg was seized thereof 15 H. 6. as was sir John Brugg 11 E. 4.

Mr. Woodman is the present lord of this manor. It was formerly part of the manor of Bourton-on-the-Water.

Lands in Clapton, called Clerk's and Smith's Mill, and divers other lands and messuages, formerly belonging to the abbey of Evesham, were granted to Michael Ashfield 32 H. 8.

John Dolphin, esq; has lately purchased a good estate in this parish, but he resides at Eyeford in this county, late the estate of William Wanley, esq.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stow. It is a chapel of ease to Bourton-on-the-Water. The church is dedicated to St. James. It was built, together with the chancel, about 1670.

There were 18 houses and about 80 inhabitants in this parish when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it; but the inhabitants are increased since that time to 112. Part of them bury and are registered at the mother church, and part here, so that no useful information can be derived from the register.

Cleeve.]

CLEEVE, or BISHOP'S-CLEEVE,

LIES in the hundred of its own name, about four miles north from Cheltenham, five south from Tewkesbury, and eleven north-eastward from Gloucester. It is bounded on the north by Woolston, from which it is separated by a brook, called the Tirl in the chronicles of Worcester, that runs into the Carrant; on the south by Presbury; on the east by Postlip-warren, in the parish of Winchcombe; and on the west by Tredington.

It is a very large parish, consisting of several tithings and hamlets, more than five miles in length, and nearly of the same breadth; part of it lying in the vale, and part extending over the great ridge of hills which divides the vale from the Cotswold country. This situation on the side of the hill very probably gave occasion to the name; for Clip, in the Anglo Saxon language, signifies a high rock, or steep ascent. It is sometimes called Bishop's-Cleeve, (having been antiently the property of the bishop of Worcester) to distinguish it from Prior's-Cleeve, and from Cleeve in the parish of Westbury, in this county.

The lands, in the vale part, consist chiefly of rich arable, with a mixture of good meadow and pasture.

I have had frequent occasions to mention the many camps, intrenchments, and fortifications found in various parts of the Cotswold country, but more especially on the verge of those hills next the vale; situations which seem to have been chosen on two accounts, as being less liable to surprise or attack, and commanding a large extent of country below, where the opposite party could do nothing without being observed. On the edge of Cleeve-hill, commonly called Cleeve-cloud, is a large double intrenchment called the Camps, extending 350 yards along the summit of the rock, in the form of a crescent, and inaccessible on every side but the front. The name of Cleeve-cloud seems to have been given to the edge of this hill on account of its bold and lofty appearance, when viewed from the vale below; for from the foot of the rock to the top of the rock where the camp stands, (no little more than half a measured mile) there is an ascent of 630 feet perpendicular. Upon Nottingham-hill, (a part of the same range, so called) in the hamlet of Gotherington, are other very considerable lines of fortifications and intrenchments; and in the middle between these two intrenchments, which are about a mile distant from each other, are four large tumuli, or barrows, one of which was lately opened, and found to contain a great quantity of human bones, broken and crumbled into very small pieces, and surrounded with a particularly soft and fine kind of mould. Hence it may be concluded, that some bloody engagement formerly happened here. It will not be expected of me to point out the exact time when, nor the people by whom these works were raised, since our once miserable country has been a scene of bloodshed and desolation for many hundreds of years together, and but few of the military transactions of early ages are recorded in history. If they were raised by the Romans, some of the coins of that people would probably have been found thereabout; but I hear of no such thing. They are therefore supposed to be Saxon, raised some time about the seventh century, when the West-Saxons were continually at war with the Mercians.

About the mid-way between Cleeve and Gotherington, is a spring of saline purging water, not unlike that in the neighbouring parish of Presbury. And the inhabitants of this part of the country have been agreeably amused with the expectation of coal being to be found in Long-Wood in this parish. The proprietor is now searching for that useful fossil, in which I wish him success for his own sake, and for the general good of the neighbourhood. I come now to treat

Of the Manors and other Estates.

In Domesday-book are the following particulars, under the title Terra Eccl'ie de Wirecestre:

' The same church held Clive in Tedboldestan
' hundred. There are thirty hides. In demean ' are three plow-tillages, and sixteen villeins, and ' nineteen bordars, with sixteen plow-tillages.
' There are eight servi, and one Moor. [Afrus.]
' There is a priest who hath one hide and two ' plow-tillages, and a radchenister having one hide
' and two plow-tillages. There is a little wood.
' Durandus the sheriff holds of the church six ' hides of land of this manor in Surham, Ra' dulphus four hides in Sapletone, Turstinus the ' son of Rolf six hides in Godrinton. In these ' lands are eight plow-tillages in demean, and ' twenty-two villeins, and seven bordars, with ' thirteen plow-tillages. There are twenty servi,
' and three Moors, [Afri.] and a mill of 12 den.
' [rent,] and a little meadow. Bernardus and ' Raynaldus hold seven hides of the same land in ' Stoches, and they would do no service for St.
' Mary. [i. e. the church of Worcester.] The ' whole manor, in the time of king Edward, was ' worth 36*l.* and it is now worth 26*l.* in the ' whole. Ulstanus the bishop holds this manor.'
Domesday-book, p. 70.

Thus it appears that part of Salperton formerly belonged to the manor of Cleeve. Surham, (now Southam,) Godrinton, and Stoke are tithings in this parish, of which hereafter.

The manor of Cleeve was settled in jointure on queen Elianor 27 H. 3. Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, was seized of Cleeve and Clifborn 3 E. 1. but he held it, most likely, under the bishop of Worcester; for in the 15th year of the same reign the bishop was seized of this manor, and divers privileges were allowed him in a writ of Quo Warranto.

In a taxation of the temporalities of the see of Worcester in the last mentioned reign, as I find it in a manuscript in the Cotton library, it is thus expressed: Item, At Clyvam the rents of assize 8 l. — carucates of land, and each carucate is worth 20s. and a dove-house worth 6s. and a water-mill worth 30s. and the pleas and perquisites of the court 30s. In the whole 13 l. 6s. In the survey taken of this manor 26 H. 8. it was valued at 55 l. 10s. 9d.

This manor was resumed by the crown 1 Eliz.^m together with the manors of Bredon, Bishop's-Wyke, Henbury, and Knight-Wyke, in the counties of Gloucester and Worcester, part of the possessions of the see of Worcester; in lieu of which the queen, in the 4th year of her reign, granted to Dr. Edwin Sandys, then bishop of Worcester, the impropriations of Bishampton, Church-Lench, and Elmely, and the tenths of the bishoprick and of the archdeaconry of Worcester.

The manor of Cleeve, formerly belonging to the bishoprick of Worcester, was granted to Peter Vanlore, merchant, 2 Jac. who was lord of it in the year 1608. John Bridges was lord of this manor at the beginning of the present century. It passed afterwards to Thomas Hayward, esq; and from him to William Strachan, LL. D. whose son sir William Strachan, baronet, sold it lately to Mr. Thorneloe and Mr. Lilly, of Worcester, the present proprietors.

Of the other estates, the records shew, that lands in Cleeve, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and were in the tenure of Roger Fowler, were granted to Richard Gunter 36 H. 8. Thomas Bullen and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Cleeve, Gotherinton, and Woodmancot to the use of Richard Southwell, 1 E. 6.

Lands called Bushcomb-wood, in Cleeve, formerly belonging to the bishop of Worcester, were granted to Christopher Hatton 18 Eliz. which estate is now the property of Mr. Branch of Gloucester.

A messuage in Cleeve, formerly belonging to the chantry of St. Mary in Westbury-upon-Trim, was granted to Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Southam, so called because it lies southward of the church. This is a large tithing, wherein Thomas-Baghot De-la-Bere, esq; has a seat, and a very fine estate. The house is one of the greatest curiosities in the county. It is a low building, in the stile of the age of Henry the Fourth, or then-about. The hall is floored with painted bricks, brought from Hayles-abbey soon after the dissolution of that house. There are many curious devices upon them of different kinds, containing the names, and rebusses of the names, of the abbats Ford and Melton. There are also great numbers of scutcheons, with arms, among which are the following: 1. France and England quarterly. 2. Or, an eagle display'd sable, for Richard duke of Cornwall, as king of the Romans, the founder of Hayles-abbey. 3. Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Azure, a bend argent, cotoised Or, between six martlets of the last, for De-la-Bere; 2d and 3d, Gules, a fret argent, for Huddleston. &c. &c. The bricks are in exceeding good preservation, and are valuable remains of the abbey to which they belonged. There are also in this house many very antient paintings of eminent persons, particularly a whole length figure of king Edward the Sixth, done upon oak, which is very much admired; but some of the pieces are injured by time.

There are two manors in this tithing, both described in the records by one common name, which I shall endeavour to distinguish in their descent.

Six hides in Surham, part of the manor of Clive, were held of the church of Worcester by Durand the sheriff, at the time of the general survey. Southam was confirmed to the abbey of Tewkesbury 1 H. 3. Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, held this manor of the bishop of Worcester 3, 27, & 30 E. 1. in which last year it was seized by the crown. Elias de Iccumb held the manor of Southam 5 E. 3. and Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, and William de Bohun, earl of Nottingham held Southam 37 & 47 E. 3. respectively. The manor of Southam was granted to Ralph Butler, for life, 16 H. 6. and a fine was levied thereof, and of other lands belonging to the dutchy of Lancaster, to the use of Elizabeth, queen to king Edward the Fourth, and to the use of the archbishop of Canterbury and other great men, 15 E. 4. This manor and many others were granted to Henry Stafford duke of Buckingham, as heir of blood to Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford, 1 R. 3. who was beheaded the same year. A wood called Queen's-wood in Southam, and the manor of Southam belonging to the dutchy of Lancaster, were granted to Robert earl of Salisbury 5 Jac. And he sold all his manor, lands, and interest in Southam, (except some lands before granted by copy of court roll) to Richard De-la-Bere, of Lincoln's-Inn, esq; the following year.

Thomas Baghot De-la-Bere^e, esq; is the present lord of this manor, whose arms are blazoned in the former part of this account.

^a Willis's Survey of Worcester Cathedral. ^b Dugdale's Bar. His ancestor, sir Richard Dalabar, came into England with king William the Conqueror. Sir John Dalabar, son of sir Richard, lived in the reign of king William the Second. He married Joan, daughter and heiress of Stephen de Heven, lord of Heven. Sir Stephen Dalabar, son of sir John, married Mabel, one of the daughters of Brian, lord of Brompton in Shropshire. Sir Simon Dalabar, son of sir Stephen, married Sibil, daughter of sir Henry Pembridge. Richard Dalabar, esq; son of sir Simon, married Sibil, daughter of sir Robert Harley. He assigned a rent-charge to Sibil his wife 3 E. 2.

Sir Richard Dalabar, son of Richard, married Margaret daughter of sir William Gammage, lord of Rogiad in Monmouthshire. He lived 20 E. 2. and succeeded to the estate of Alan Pluganet, as next heir of the whole blood. He was present at the glorious battle of Cressy, 20 E. 3. where he acquired honour by rescuing Edward the Black Prince, then in imminent danger, and was by him, for this great service, presented with the present crest to the family arms, which is Five ostrich feathers issuing out of a ducal coronet. Tho' Crests are now considered as mere ornaments, they were formerly greater marks of honour.

Cockbury is a farm in this tithing, belonging to Edward Rogers, esq; held of Mr. De-la-Bere's manor.

Peter Fitz-Herbert^p obtained a charter of free warren throughout all his lands in the hundred of Cleeve 12 H. 3. and Reginald the son of Peter was seized of the manor of Southam 14 E. 1. John Fitz-Herbert, and Reginald Fitz-Herbert, were successively seized of Southam 22 & 26 E. 3. Thomas Dinley, in right of Philippa his wife, died seized of the manor of Southam 9 H. 8. and left an only daughter Elizabeth, married to George Barret, to whom livery of this manor was granted the same year. William Emundesham was lord of the manor of Southam, and left Elizabeth his daughter and heiress, married to Roger Bodensham, of Dewchurch in Herefordshire. Roger died seized of Southam 2 E. 6. Richard Baker had livery of the manor of Southam 1 Eliz. And the reverend Mr. Richard Rogers has the manor in Southam and Brockhampton, late Baker's. His arms are, Argent, a mullet sable, on a chief gules a fleur de lis Or.

The records also shew, that William Stokes was seized of Fletchard's-croft in Southam 5 H. 6.

Brockhampton, or Brockington, is a hamlet in this tithing.

Haymes is a manor within the tithing of Southam, which continued in the name and family of Lorange for about four hundred years, from the reign of king Edward the Second. It was purchased by serjeant Goodinge, who was Custos Brevium of the court of Queen's-bench, in the reign of queen Anne. It came afterwards to sir William Strachan, a baronet of Nova-Scotia, who a few years since built a very handsome seat here, upon an eminence, commanding a delightful prospect over the vale of Evesham, terminated by Malvern and Abberley hills, in the county of Worcester. This seat was lately sold to some persons of Worcester. Sir William married one of the daughters and coheiresses of Edward Popham, esq; of the Lodge, near Tewkesbury in this county, by whom he has no issue.

2. Gotherington, which lies north-eastward of the church. Almerick de St. Amand was seized of the manor of Gotherington 4 E. 2. Hugh le Spencer and Elizabeth his wife, the relict of Miles Badlesmere, were seized of Gotherington and Stoke-Archer 23 E. 3. The manor of Gotherington and other lands belonged to the abbey of St. Augustine in Bristol, and were granted to the dean and chapter of Bristol 34 H. 8. Another manor in Gotherington, formerly belonging to the abbey of Tewkesbury, was granted to Anne Fortescue, widow of sir Adrian Fortescue, and to the heirs male of sir Adrian, 5 Mar. Lord Craven is the present lord of this manor.

3. Stoke-Archer, now commonly, but improperly, written Stoke-Orchard. This tithing lies south-westward of the church, in two different hundreds; the greater part in the hundred of Cleeve, the other in the lower division of the hundred of Tewkesbury. It took the name of Archer from a family surnamed le Archer, who held a manor in this tithing by the service of providing a man, with bow and arrows, at their own charge, to attend the king's army forty days when it marched against the Welch. It had not obtained that name at the time of the general survey, as may be seen by the following abstract.

'In Stoches Hermer' and Aluvinus held three hides, less one yard-land. Now Bernard holds them of the king, and has there one plow-tillage in demean, and four acres of meadow. It was worth 60s. and is now worth 40s. Those who held these lands in the time of king Edward, were both themselves and the lands under the government of Brietric.' Domesday-book, p. 68.

The above is the part in the hundred of Tewkesbury.

The abstract from Domesday-book which sir Robert Atkyns, by mistake, placed under this head, belongs to Lark-Stoke. He was also mistaken in saying, as from the record, that it was held by the church of Winchelcumbe, whereas the estate therein described was held by the church of Evesham.

The following abstract relates to that part of this hamlet which lies in the hundred of Cleeve.

'Bernard and Raynald held seven hides in Stoches, and they would do no service for St. Mary.' Domesday-book, p. 70.

I shall endeavour to trace the descent of these estates distinctly.

Thomas Berkeley of Coberley was seized of that part of Archer-Stoke which lies in the hundred of Cleeve, 25 E. 3. Henry de Berkeley held the in coats of arms, being only worn by heroes of great valour, principal commanders, that they might be the better distinguished in an engagement, and thereby enabled to rally their men. Sir John Dalabar, son of sir Richard, lived 39 E. 3. married Agnes, daughter of sir Pain Turbervil, who dying before his father, she was granddaughter and coheir to sir Gilbert Turbervil. Sir Richard Dalabar, son of sir John, lived 46 E. 3. Sir Alan Dalabar, son of sir Richard, married the daughter and coheir of Waldron Bafon, lord of Kilpethg, and of Haslebury in Herefordshire. Sir Richard Dalabar, son of sir Alan, married Margaret, daughter of sir William Abrahall. Sir Kynard Dalabar was son of sir Richard. Sir Richard Dalabar was son of sir Kynard: He lived in the reign of king Edward. Sir Kynard Dalabar, son of sir Richard, married Joan, eldest daughter and coheiress of sir Thomas de Barry. Sir Richard Dalabar, son of sir Kynard, married Elizabeth, daughter of Norris, serjeant of the hall to king Henry the Seventh.

George Delabar, son of sir Richard, married Sybil, daughter to Thomas Walwen, esq. John Delabar, son of George, married Sybil, daughter of John Scudamore, of Homelacy in Herefordshire. Kynard Delabar, son of John, married Blanch, daughter to — Spencer. Kynard Delabar, son of Kynard, married Joan, daughter of John Hales, of Coventry, esq. John De-la-Bere, son of the last Kynard, married Anne, daughter of John Stephens, of Lypiatt. He was high sheriff 3 W. 3. 1690. Kynard De-la-Bere, son of John, married Hester, one of the daughters and coheiresses of John Neal, of Dean, in the county of Bedford, esq; and was succeeded in this estate by his nephew William Baghot De-la-Bere, of Presbury, esq; who was son of Anne, eldest sister and heiress of Kynard De-la-Bere. He married Hester, daughter of Thomas Stephens, of Lypiatt, esq; and his eldest son and heir, Thomas Baghot De-la-Bere, esq; is the present lord of this manor, as already mentioned.

same 26 E. 3. Joan the widow of William de Whittington, and formerly the wife of Thomas Berkeley of Coberley, held the manor of Stoke-Archer 46 E. 3. Thomas Berkeley of Coberley was seized of the manor of Stoke-Archer 6 H. 4. and left an only daughter Alice, who carried this estate into the family of the Brugges, by her marriage with sir Thomas Brugge, whom she survived, and was afterwards married to John Browning³; and surviving him also, she died seized in dower of this manor 2 H. 5. Giles Brugge, or Bruges, her son, was seized of this manor 6 E. 4. Sir Giles Brydges died seized thereof 3 H. 8. and livery was granted to his son sir John Brydges 16 H. 8. John lord Chandois died seized of the manor of Archer-Stoke 4 Mar. and livery thereof was granted to his son Edmond lord Chandois the same year. He died seized thereof 15 Eliz. and livery was granted to his son Giles lord Chandois the same year.

Of that part of Stoke-Archer which lies in the hundred of Tewkesbury, the following account is drawn from the records.

John, son of Robert de Stokes, was seized of Stoke and Gotherington 38 H. 3. Nicholas le Archer held two plow-tillages in Stoke 15 E. 1. by the service of providing a man, with bow and arrows, to attend the king's army forty days when it marched against the Welch. Edmond Archer held Stoke-Archer 7 E. 2. It was held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, 8 E. 2. Elianor the widow of Henry le Dispencer was seized of the hamlet of Archer-Stoke 11 E. 3. Jeffry le Archer held the manor of Archer-Stoke 24 E. 3. and Cicely his widow was seized of it the same year.

John Arundel of Arundel held Archerds 9 H. 5. John Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel, died seized of Archerds 13 H. 6. Elianor the widow of sir Walter Hungerford, late wife of sir Richard Poynings, and formerly wife of sir John Arundel, died seized of the manor of Archerds 33 H. 6. Nicholas Madefden, esq; was seized of Archer-Stoke 14 H. 6. and Robert Madefden held the same 36 H. 6. George duke of Clarence, in right of Isabel his wife, was seized of Archer-Stoke 13 E. 4. Anne, sister and heir of Henry duke of Warwick, made an assignment of the manor of Stoke-Archer to the king and his heirs male 3 H. 7. Thomas earl of Arundel died seized of the manor of Archerds 16 H. 8. and livery was granted to his son William earl of Arundel the same year, who died seized thereof 35 H. 8. and livery was also granted to his son Henry earl of Arundel 36 H. 8. The manor of Stoke-Archer, lately Warwick's and Spencer's lands, was granted to John Hall and Henry Sheldon 37 H. 8. John Hall died seized thereof 2 E. 6. and livery was granted to his son Francis 3 Mariae.

The manor of Stoke-Archer is now the property of Mrs. Rogers, widow of the late Richard Rogers, of Dowdeswell, esq.

There is a chapel of ease in this hamlet.

4. Woodmancot lies south-eastward of the church, where Mr. James Cocks has a good house and estate.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe. It is a rectory worth 500*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Reid is patron and incumbent. It is a peculiar, exempt from the archdeacon's visitation, but subject to the bishop's triennially. The rector exercises archidiaconal jurisdiction, proves wills, and grants administration. It was a prebend to the college of Westbury, who placed a vicar here.

Godfrey Giffard, bishop of Worcester, in the 13th century, obtained this rectory for his life by a bull from the pope. The bishops of Worcester were patrons, 'till the bishop conveyed away the advowson to Thomas Seymour lord Sudely, by whose attainder it came to the crown, and was afterwards granted, with the advowson of the chapel of Stoke-Archer, to sir Christopher Hatton 21 Eliz.

John Parkhurst was rector of this church, and was made bishop of Norwich in 1560.

John Cleymand was president of Magdalen-college in Oxford; and upon his removal to be the first president of Corpus Christi-college, because the latter was of less value, he was presented to this rectory; wherefore he gave a scholar's place in Brazen-nose-college for a native of this parish, 1548.

Dr. Nicholson, bishop of Gloucester, had also been rector of this church.

The church is very large, dedicated to St. Michael the archangel. It hath an aisle on the north side, two on the south, a handsome tower, with pinnacles, in the middle, and a cross aisle on each side. In the year 1696, the spire fell down, and the present tower was rebuilt, without a steeple, in the year 1700, at the expence of 770*l.*

There were four chantries in this church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, to St. Catherine, to All Saints, and to St. Mary.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Under a handsome arch, in the wall of a chapel on the south side of the church, lies the effigy in stone of a man in antient armour, girt with his sword, and a large shield on his left arm. His legs are crossed, like a knight templar, with spurs on, and his feet rest on a dog. Tradition will have it to be for Gilbert the Bold.

There is also the figure of a military person upon a brass plate fixt on a stone in the chancel, with his arms, three piles, and this inscription in old character:

..... armiger qui obiit undecimo die mensis
M^o.CCC^o.LXX^o. quinto Cujus anime p^{ro}picietur deus amen.

In the south aisle of the church, against the wall, is an elegant monument of black and white marble, erected to the memory of Richard De-la-Bere, by his widow, daughter and heir to — Newman

It consists of two compartments. The lower contains a table designed for an inscription, which has not yet been put upon it. Over the table are two scutcheons. On the dexter side are the arms of De-la-Bere; on the sinister, Azure, a fess undy between six dolphins nayant, 3 & 3, argent, for Newman. All round are the arms of several families with whom the De-la-Beres have intermarried. In the middle of the upper compartment is a large scutcheon with eight quarterings. 1. De-la-Bere. 2. Gules, a chief counter compony Or and azure, over all a bend argent. 3. Azure, a lion rampant between eight crosses crosslets argent. 4. Gules, on a chief argent three martlets sable. 5. Paly of six argent and sable, four bars gules, for De Barry. 6. Barry of six Or and azure, over all a bend gules, for Pembridge. 7. Newman, as before. 8. Argent, a bend voided gules, in chief a rose. This monument is enriched with marble pillars of the Corinthian order, and with pyramids whose bases are ornamented with emblematical figures. Before it, upon a large raised tomb, are the effigies in white marble, of a man and woman, lying along in full proportion, both in rich dresses, designed for Richard De-la-Bere, esq; and his wife. He died in 1635. Near this, on another raised tomb, is the figure of a lady lying along, with an ermine mantle covering her head, and hanging down to her elbows; but she has no inscription. The whole is inclosed with iron palisadoes, and in good preservation.

Against the south wall in the chancel is this inscription.

On the other side of Dr. Bedingfield's monument: Catherina Woodhouse Comitatus Ob. Nov. 14^o 1711.—Arms, ermine, a cross in pale gules.

On a plain table of black marble:

A charter was obtained 25 H. 6. to exempt this town from taxes and fifteenths for two years, on account of the great loss which the inhabitants sustained by fire.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 175 houses and about 875 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 27, burials 25. But having examined the parish register, I find, that in ten years beginning with 1700, there were 314 baptisms, and 206 burials. The average annually being very different from sir Robert's numbers. And in ten years beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 306, and the burials 242. The present number of houses is 295, of inhabitants 1252; so that the proportion between the average number of annual burials, and the whole number of inhabitants is nearly as 1 to 52. Here is a burying ground belonging to the Quakers.

CLIFFORD CHAMBERS.

THIS parish is situated in the vale, on the south side of the river Stower, on the borders of the north-east part of the county. It lies in the upper division of Tewkesbury hundred, ten miles distant north from Campden, one south-west-ward from Stratford upon Avon, in Warwickshire, and thirty north-eastward from Gloucester.

The name is compounded of the Saxon word Clyp, a steep and rocky place; and ford a passage over a river; exactly descriptive of the situation. And as Aston Somerville, Coln Rogers, and several other places in this county, took the cognomen from their respective proprietors; so, by analogy, I suppose that Chambers was the name of some owner of this manor, tho' not mentioned in the subsequent records, and that it was added to distinguish this parish from Rhyon Clifford, in the county of Warwick, which lies at a small distance from it, on the opposite side of the Stower.

The parish consists chiefly of meadow and pasture lands, with some arable; but produces no rare plants, fossils, nor mineral waters; nor are there any remains of antiquity within it; wherefore I proceed to give the descent

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Under the particulars of the manor of Tewkesbury, in Domesday-book, it is thus expressed:

'Seven hides in Clifort belong to the same manor. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and fourteen villeins with five plow-tillages, and a mill of 12s. [rent] and two acres of meadow. There are thirteen servi and ancillaë, and there is a church, and a priest with one plow-tillage. It was worth 8l. now 6l. The queen gave this land to Roger de Busli, and it was taxed for four hides in [the manor of] Tedecheberie.' Dom. Book, p. 68.

In the year 1099, the above Roger de Busli, then called Roger de Bulley, gave the manor and advowson of Clifford to the church of St. Peter of Gloucester, whose grant king William the Second confirmed when Serlo was abbat.

The abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester was seized of Clifford 17 E. 3. and continued possessed of it till the dissolution of that house.

What is mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns, of Gilbert de Clare being seized of this manor, 15 E. 1. must relate only to Ailston, a hamlet in this parish, of which he died seized 7 E. 2. as appears by the escheator's inquisition of the following year.

The manor of Clifford Chambers, formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, was granted to Charles Rainsford 4 Eliz. Hercules Rainsford, his son and heir, died seized of it in 1583, and was succeeded by his son sir Henry Rainsford, who died seized thereof in 1622. Henry Rainsford, esq; was son and heir of sir Henry. His estate was sequestered in the great civil wars, for the part he took with the king, and he compounded for 900 l.

The last Henry Rainsford sold the manor &c. to Job Dighton, esq; in the year 1649. He was succeeded by his son Henry Dighton, esq; who died in 1686, and was succeeded by his son Richard Dighton. Francis-Keyt Dighton was son and heir of Richard. His son Lister Dighton, esq; is the present lord of this manor, and has a large estate here, with a good house and pleasant gardens, situate on the river Stower. His arms are, Quarterly, 1 & 4, Argent, a lion passant between three crosses formy fitchy gules. 2 & 3, Gules, a chevron between three kites heads erased Or, for Keyt.

The poor of the city of Coventry have a considerable estate in this parish, lying between Clifford-bridge and Stratford.

HAMLETS. There are two hamlets in this parish.

1. Ailston, or Aleston. Part of this hamlet lies in the parish of Atherston, in Warwickshire. At present there is no house in that part which lies in Clifford. This estate was held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, at the time of his death, 7 E. 2. as appears by the escheator's inquisition of the following year.

2. Wincot, so called from Wenric, lord of it in the time of Edward the confessor. Only part of this hamlet lies in the parish of Clifford, and that part was antiently appurtenant to the large manor of Tewkesbury, as appears by Domesday-book, where, among the particulars belonging to that manor, it is thus expressed.

'A thane held three hides in Wenecote. The queen gave this land to Rainald the chaplain. There are three villeins with half a plow-tillage. It was worth 40s.' Domesday-book, p. 68.

The other part of the hamlet is in the parish of Queinton, and lay in the old hundred of Witelai (now comprized in that of Kiftgate) as we learn from the record: See Queinton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Campden, worth about 100 l. a year. Lister Dighton, esq; is patron; Mr. John Martyn the present incumbent. The abbey of Gloucester were formerly patrons of this church.

The rector has the tithe of two yard-lands in that part of the hamlet of Ailston which lies in the parish of Atherstone, in Warwickshire, and intirely out of the diocese of Gloucester.

The church is dedicated to St. Helen. It has a handsome tower, with pinnacles and battlements at the west end.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On a tomb in the manor seat, in old character:

Here lyeth Buryed the Boddy of Hercules Rainsford Esquier Lord of this manor of Clifford who marryd Elizabeth Parry Daughter of Robert Parry equier by whome havynge Issue too sonnes and on Daughter died the second daye of August An^o DM. 1583. and in the yeare of his age 39.—Over it are these arms, Argent, a cross sable, for Rainsford; impaling, Argent, three boars heads caboshed sable, for Parry.

On a flat stone, at the foot of the steps leading to the altar, is the figure of a woman in brass, and this inscription:

Under this stone lyeth the Body of Elizabeth Daughter of Hercules Rainsford of Clifford in the County of Gloc: Esquire, married to Edward Marrowe Sonne and Heire of Samuell Maitowe of Barkswell in the County of Warwick Esq. w^h Elizabeth deceased the 29 of Octob' 1601.—On another piece of brass, scutcheon, Baron and femme, 1. Argent, a fess engrailed sable between three maids heads couped proper, for Marrowe; impaling Rainsford, as before.

On the north side of the chancel is a handsome monument, with the figures of a man and his wife kneeling, and between them this inscription:

Benefactions.

Hugh Casnel, clerk, gave four tenements in Clifford in Warwickshire, for the benefit of the poor. Thomas Jackson of this place, gave 100*l*. to endow a free-school, and 50*l*. to the poor; his executors gave 50*l*. more, which money was laid out on a rent-charge of 10*l*. a year, on lands in Tiddington and Alveston in Warwick-

The following are the metes and bounds of the parish, described in an old book in the church. From the passage of the river Avon, by the river Avon, to the chapel of St Vincent, and from thence, by the river aforesaid, to Wallcam-slade, and from thence to a place called the Hawthorn, and from thence to a shire, 7*l*. 10*s*. of which is appropriated to the school, the remainder distributed in bread to the poor. The church-house, worth 6*l*. a year, was built by the inhabitants for the use of the poor.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 76 houses and about 320 inhabitants in this parish, whereof four were freeholders; yearly births 11, burials 9. But he was far from being accurate in the two last particulars; for it appears by the register, that in ten years, from 1700 to 1709 both inclusive, there were only 79 baptisms and 62 burials. In the same number of years, from 1760 to 1769 inclusive, the baptisms were 70, and the burials 39. Several cottages have been taken down during the last century, so that there remain only 51 tenements; and the number of inhabitants is about 249; the proportion between the average of annual burials and the number of inhabitants being nearly as 1 to 60, which shews the place to be very healthy.

CLIFTON,

ONE of the most agreeable villages in the kingdom, lies in the hundred of King's-Barton. It is situated on the south and south-west of a cliff, or hill, (whence its name) about thirty-six miles southward from Gloucester, and one mile westward from the city of Bristol, over which it commands a very pleasing prospect.

Some of the houses grace the summit of the hill, but most of them lie at a small distance lower down, upon a slope, near the banks of the river Avon, which divides this parish from Somersetshire. The well-cultivated lands in that county, rising gradually for four or five miles from the verge of the river, to the top of Dunderly-hill, present themselves towards the village in a very beautiful landscape. And what very much enriches it, is the view of the ships and boats continually passing before the eye, up and down, upon every returning tide.

A little westward of the houses, nature displays herself in a bolder manner. Rocks rise from the very edge of the water on both sides of the river, almost perpendicularly, near two hundred feet high. They are, in some places, bare and craggy; in others, beautifully covered with shrubs and hanging coppice wood.

These rocks extend over a large space of country on each side of the river; and the strata of which they are composed all lie in the same direction, certain stone called the Mere-stone, lying between the chapel of St. Lambert and the royal way; and from thence, by the aforesaid way, to Smock-acre, from thence to the White-stile, and then to Dedystone-stile, and thence to the Lime-kilns, and then by the river Avon to the passage aforesaid.

dipping towards the south, making an angle of about fifteen or twenty degrees with the horizon. Those on one side of the river so perfectly correspond in every respect with the opposite, that people, in all ages, seem to have concurred in this general opinion, that they have some time or other united in the same body; but various are the notions concerning the cause of their separation.

In early times, when the nature of things was less attended to and less understood, it was usual to attribute such events as could not otherwise be accounted for, to an extraordinary interposition of divine power, which we call miracle. This gave rise to the following story. There was a chapel on the top of these rocks, long since demolished, dedicated to St. Vincent, who was a native of Spain, and suffered martyrdom about the year 305. And once upon a time, I know not when, but before the port of Bristol was settled in the river Frome, a dispute is said to have arisen, whether a place called Say-Mills was not a more convenient port than another which was proposed, several large ships having been built in that place. One Goram, a hermit, because his hermitage lay on the side of the brook Trim, which ran down to Say-Mills, contended for that port; but the dispute was determined in favour of the river Frome, by St. Vincent's cleaving those rocks asunder, thereby giving passage to the river, in honour of the chapel that was so built and dedicated to him.

Some suppose the rock to have been split by an earthquake; but it is opposed to this opinion, that then the strata would have been disordered by the rising and convulsions of the earth, and not have lain, as we now see them, exactly in the same direction on both sides of the river.

The most rational opinion concerning this event seems to be, that the deep and narrow channel, in which the Avon runs, was made at the Deluge. The impetuous torrent of waters not finding vent fast enough, at going off, through the vale a little to the south, burst a passage this way, and washed the channel of the river when the earth was in a soft and yielding state. And that the soft, stony matter, through which the waters then made their way, have since petrified into those vast rocks, the dividing of which is otherwise so difficult to account for.

Giant's-Hole is a vast cavern, half way down St. Vincent's rocks, described in William of Worcester's manuscript, in Bennet-college library, Cambridge. It is supposed to have been an old hermitage, and originally to have communicated with the surface near the chapel. There is also a place called Jack's-Hole, in the same rocks.

The river Avon empties itself into the estuary of the Severn at Kingroad, seven or eight miles below Clifton. The tide rises in it to the height of thirty feet and upwards, upon which the merchant-ships ride into the port of Bristol.

There are antient fortifications and intrenchments upon Clifton-hill, where a wind-mill now stands; and coins of the later Roman emperors have been frequently found about the camp. Other intrenchments stand opposite to them, on the Somersetshire side of the Avon. They are all supposed to be the works of the Roman soldiers under Ostorius, who caused fortifications to be raised in many places along that river, above and below Bristol; for which reason, probably, the Britons gave the name of Caer Oder, i. e. Castrum Ostorij, to that city.

This camp on Clifton-hill is necessarily of a circular form, taking the shape of the hill, with a double ditch, and aggera. The spot was chosen with the greatest military judgment, being the highest ground about this part of the country. It stands on the banks of the Avon, with a causa across at low water, to pass to the camp on the Somersetshire side. It seems to be the first of a chain of forts constructed by that warlike people, to command the Severn, and the country bordering upon it; and to secure the passage over that river at Oldbury, which was undoubtedly the Trajectus of Antoninus.

That passage was of the highest importance to the Romans, as it preserved a communication between their stations at Isca, Venta Silurum, and Abone, on the north side of that river, and Aqua Solis and other stations, on the south side of it.

Tho' it was a long march from Aqua Solis, or Bath, to that passage, the camps on Sodbury-hill and Horton-hill, about the mid-way, were thought sufficient to protect that road; but so great was their attention to secure the Trajectus, that, in a shorter distance of ground, they constructed no less than seven camps of observation in the line from Clifton to Oldbury. Two of them are about four miles distant each from Clifton, one a little to the right, on Bury-hill, in the parish of Winterbourn; the other to the left, on Blaise-hill, in the parish of Henbury; and a little further, on Comb-hill and King's-Weston-hill, are two others, which survey the Severn. From Blaise-hill to the camp at Almondsbury is about five miles, and from thence to another called Old-Abbey, at Alveston, four miles; which latter is about the same distance from the Trajectus at Oldbury.

Their great care to secure the passage at the Trajectus, from the country of the Silures, on the other side of the Severn, is no less apparent. For, from the Abone, which I would fix at Aylberton, in the parish of Lidney, is a deep intrenchment and agger, all the way down to the river, almost opposite to the Trajectus.

All these camps are situated upon high ground, that one might look upon the others, and be secured by them; and that the soldiers might the better descry the enemy, and being within sight, might alarm their distant friends of approaching danger.

* Mr. Barrett of Bristol, a person of great learning and judgment, who is writing the History and Antiquities of that city, favoured me with an account of these camps, having particularly traced and examined them himself.

And so extensive and beautiful is the prospect from the camp at Clifton particularly, that it is the resort of the gentry at the Hot Wells and Clifton every fine day.

Before I quit this subject, I must observe, that beside the camps on Sodbury and Horton hills, supposed for the purpose of protecting the road from Aqua Solis to the Trajectus, there were two posts occupied by the Romans on the sides of that road; one at Wick, about eight miles from Bath, the other at Cromhall, about seven miles from Oldbury. That they were Roman works, will appear from the circumstances related under the respective places.

The excellent prospects from various parts of Clifton, and the fine air, have induced many gentlemen to build and reside there.

Matthew Brickdale, sometime a representative in parliament for the city of Bristol, Samuel Worrall, Isaac Elton, John Freeman, Henry Hobhouse, — Hibbs, and John Vaughan, esq^r. have very handsome modern houses, with freestone fronts and proper offices, upon Clifton-hill. Mr. Goldney has a handsome house here, with fine gardens, a motto of shell-work, and a canal with fountains, supply'd with water by a fire-engine.

Sir William Draper has also a very handsome seat upon the hill. As you face the front, there stands at a distance before it, on the right hand, a freestone obelisk, with this inscription on the base:

GVLIELMO PITT, COMITI DE CHATHAM,
Hoc Amicitiae privatae Testimonium,
Simul et Honoris publici Monumentum, Posuit Gulielmus Draper.

On the left, to answer the obelisk, is a Cenotaph, consisting of a raised tomb, supporting a large vase, with an urn at top, well executed in freestone. Engraven on the side of the vase, are the following elegant verses:

HUMANITY is the Characteristic of BRITISH CONQUERORS.

The sides of the table are inscribed with the names of the officers of the seventy-ninth regiment who fell in Asia:

Field Officers; C. Brereton, I. Moore. — Captains; Knuttall, Stewart, Wingfield, Delaval, Chisholm, Chesbyre, Upfield, Straban, Muir, Moore. — Lieutenants; Whaley, G. Browne, Hopkins, Robinson, T. Browne, Le Grand, Winchelsea, Roston, Campbell, Fryer, Turner, Richbell, Bouchier, Busted, Hardwick. — Ensigns; Collins, Vassette, La Tour, Horler, Mac Mahon. — Surgeons; Smith, Atherton.

At the ends of the tomb, in small oval tables, it is thus written:

Siege of Madras raised, Feb. 17, 1759.
Conjeveram taken by Storm, April 13, 1759.
Battle of Wandewash gained, Jan. 22, 1760.
Arcot recovered, Feb. 10, 1760.
Carical taken, April 5, 1760.
The Lines of Pondicherry stormed, Sept. 10, 1760.
Pondicherry surrendered, Jan. 16, 1761.
Manilla taken by Storm, Oct. 6, 1762.

Every attempt to perpetuate the memory of heroes who have nobly fallen in the service of their country, must be highly grateful to the lovers of it. It is the only tribute we can pay to their merit. It is a grateful acknowledgment to those who were engaged in the same glorious, but hazardous enterprises, and more fortunately survived them. I have, therefore, furthered the design so worthily conceived by sir William Draper; and am persuaded, that this page of my book will be read with pleasure, when other parts of it lie neglected.

From the bottom of these famous rocks of St. Vincent, issues the Bristol Hot-well water, deservedly esteemed for its efficacy in a variety of disorders. The spring is very plentiful. It is the property of the society of merchants of Bristol. It rises near the bed of the Avon, the salt water of which usually breaks in upon it at very high spring-tides; and therefore, they are then obliged to leave off pumping, a few hours in the day.

Various experiments have been made upon this water, to discover its distinguishing properties. The heat of a cold spring in that neighbourhood is fifty degrees in Fahrenheit's thermometer; that of the new warm well of the merchants near Bristol, sixty-eight degrees; Mallow-water in Ireland, sixty-eight degrees; the water of this well at Clifton, seventy-six; warm milk from the cow, eighty-nine; the Hot-bath at Bath, 114; the Cross-bath there, 107 degrees. By the nicest experiments, the heat of the Clifton Hot-well water is scarcely ever found to vary. the taste of it, at the spring, is particularly soft and milky, and very grateful to the stomach; yet it leaves a sort of stypticity, or dryness, upon the palate. It curdles with soap; with oil of tartar, it gives a bluish white cloud, and white sediment; spirit of sal-ammoniac whitens it; galls do not turn it purple, but it turns green with syrup of violets; and makes a considerable ebullition with acids.

The fire separates from it a white matter on the sides of the vessels, and a chalky scum. Dr. Shebeare got fifty-six grains from a gallon, by a gentle sand-heat. The taste of the sediment is brackish, bitter in the throat, and makes an ebullition with acids. The salt separated from the terrestrial matter is white, consisting, according to the doctor, of octagonal crystals, interspersed with cubical ones; but the nitrous seem to preponderate. Diluted with oil of vitriol, it gives a genuine spirit of salt; and all appearances shew, that it is of the neutral kind, consisting of marine salt and calcareous nitre. The earth separated from the salt, and dried, ferments with acids, and by calcination becomes lime. The proportion of earth to the salt, in one experiment, was as 15 to 11; in another, as 13 to 11; thus the calcareous matter exceeding the saline, the water is rather sweetening and astringent, than purgative; as, on the contrary, where the salts predominate, as in Cheltenham and other waters, these prove purgative. It has this peculiar property, that it keeps good for many years, having been carried several voyages to Guinea, and has yet been sweet and good.

It differs greatly from the Bath water, being lighter, has no ferruginous parts, less marine salt, and the heat of it is not so great. The Bath water is powerfully attenuant and laxative, corroborating and heating; whereas this is incrassating, astringent, cooling, and successfully prescribed in inflammations, hectic, coughs, hemorrhages, hemoptoe, dysentery, immoderate fluxes, and the scurvy with heat. It was first used for external ulcers, and many of the scrophulous and cancerous kinds have been very unexpectedly cured by daily washing and fomenting the part with it, and at the same time drinking the water.

Internally, it strengthens the stomach, promotes appetite, assists digestion, corrects acrimony, and immoderate secretions and discharges. Randolph attributes its virtues to a mineral air impregnating the water, and observes, that it cures a diabetes sometimes in three weeks, sometimes not in as many months; and yet, by care and perseverance, makes a perfect cure at last. It cures a hectic fever, stops the spitting of blood, and is of great service in obstinate coughs and obstructions in the lungs; so that a great part of those whom consumptions have carried off, might probably have been saved by it, had they applied in time.

Some persons are of opinion, that the true source of the virtues of this water is the great rocks of lime-stone through which it runs; and endeavour to shew, that lime-water gives the virtues to common water which this water possesses. Without disputing the fact, it must be acknowledged, that this is not a very philosophic way of reasoning; however, the doctors Keir and Ruty are of that opinion; to whom, and to the other writers on this subject, I refer the reader for further satisfaction.

The house at the wells was built by subscription. The season is from May to September. There is music in the rooms, and public breakfasting, assemblies, and other amusements usual at such places.

The beauties of nature on the banks of the Avon invite to the healthy exercise of walking; and the numbers of ships and vessels continually passing in view, to and from the port of Bristol, with every tide, awaken the fancy to a train of agreeable ideas, various as the objects from which they arise.

For those who cannot walk, or who prefer riding, there is the finest opportunity in the world. The downs are near and spacious, with delightful prospects; and the air is so excellent, that Clifton is esteemed the Montpelier of England.

The situation of Clifton is peculiarly advantageous for excursions of another nature. Parties are frequently going in pleasure-boats, attended with music, down the river to Kingroad. For the first two miles the Avon runs in a very deep channel, between rough and craggy rocks, romantic beyond description. The cliffs project in a manner astonishing, and many of them, covered with shrubs, tufts of grass, tall plants, and little trees have the appearance of hanging woods, scarcely any where to be equalled; and the winding of the river between them beautifully diversifies the scene.

Clifton, however, with all its advantages, cannot boast of fertility of soil. The herbage is short and poor, and the rocks on Durdham-down, near it, in many places appear above the surface of the ground. The stone of these rocks is very heavy and compact, harder than most marbles, of which it is a species, and bears a good polish. It is full of shining particles, when broken; and not only the rock, but the earth itself about Clifton and Durdham-downs, is much intermixt with minerals and metallic substances.

The stone, in this part of the country, is rich in iron ore, which when broken from it, is of various colours, redish, crimson, brown, and yellow; some like spar, only heavier and transparent others like emery, and there is a sort in pieces beautifully streaked, and rising in the appearance of little bubbles, which the druggists call the blood-stone.

In the fields near Clifton is a kind of hollow stone, the cavities of which contain spar crystal, in clusters of various forms. The common people confound these substances by the general name of crystal; but they are nevertheless of distinct kinds, and different in themselves. The latter is clear and bright, cuts glass, and suffers no change in the fire, except it be very violent; whereas the breaks, when tryed on glafs, and put into the fire, presently calcines to lime; aqua fortis also corrodes it, but takes no effect on crystal. The shoots of spar are triangular, or pentangular; but those of crystal are hexagonal, and terminate in a point.

This crystal is the true Bristol-stone, held by lapidaries in good estimation, before the invention of paste, and is found in great plenty in this neighbourhood. The crystals about Clifton resemble table-diamonds, and some of them resemble diamonds; and the largest, when separated, are about the size of a hazle-nut. Most commonly, the shoots of the purest sort grow upon a thin coat of reddish ferruginous matter, which spreads itself over a kind of crust or bed of fouler crystal, about half an inch thick, of the appearance of allum. They are of every tincture between a vivid red and white state perfectly colourless. There are also various shades of yellow, and of brown, down to almost black, which are very brilliant, and of a hardness exceeding all the rest.

In the same rocks are veins of lead-ore, intermixed with a brown stone, of the nature of calamine, which is not uncommon in these parts. And there are several sorts of ochre of different shades, from a deep red to a light lemon-colour, but they are never found except about the lumps of iron-ore, from which they originate.

Crystals, like other stones, are undoubtedly generated by the agency of water; and in this part of the country, it must of necessity be from rain; there is no spring near the places where they are found. In many parts, the surface of the ground is so firm and compact, that water does not easily penetrate. Now if crystals were found in quantities under such places, it would destroy this hypothesis; but the case is otherwise, for very few are found in such places. In other parts, the earth and materials under the surface of it are loose and spongy, and on breaking them away, a great number of exceeding small tracks and channels may be perceived, through which the water takes its way from the surface. In following these, there are always found vast quantities of crystals, in the cracks and cavities of the iron-ore which lies underneath. And as this is the case without exception, can there be any doubt of the crystals originating from water? The different colours of them are owing to the materials through which the water passes before petrification; for invariably, where it is strained through the red ochre found among the iron-ore, they are strongly tinged with that colour; if through yellow ochre, they are yellow; but if it passes through earth, sand, or other matter that gives no colour to water, when the crystal is colourless.

Mr. Owen has published observations respecting the natural history of the country about Bristol, in which he attempts to shew that it is particularly disposed to petrification; and that even the fine-dust on Clifton-hill, moistened by rain, converts into a body of stone again. But he was deceived in fancying that the incrustations which he had observed on some stones lying on the sides of the road, were formed as above; when it is certain, that those stones were taken out of the pit with the incrustations upon them.

Clifton is also famous for its vegetable productions. The following is a catalogue of rare plants found in this parish.

Mr. Henry Jones, author of Kew-Gardens, Sec. about the year 1767, celebrated this village in a poem of two cantos, intitled CLIFTON¹. In the second canto, he pays his devoirs to King's-Welton, Stoke-Giffard, and other neighbouring villas.

¹ This poem has a considerable degree of merit, tho' in some parts a little obscure. Such of my readers who have not seen it, may be pleased with the following extract from it.

CLIFTON, rich source of Heliconian stream!
Thou teeming topic! and thou lofty theme!
Where art, where nature leads the soul along,
And taste and commerce crown the copious song;
Where vast variety the heart expands,
And giving grandeur opens wide her hands;
With nature's noblest gifts regales the soul,
Each part a paradise — a heaven the whole!
Where health, where vigour quaffs the winnow'd air,
And drives far off the ugly fiend, Despair.
My muse, O CLIFTON! would thy summits climb,
And hand thy beauties down to latest time;
To ages yet unborn thy charms display,
In numbers lasting as the lamp of day;
Would Inspiration prompt my proud desire,
The song and subject should at once expire.
How epic wonders here the soul delight!
There, distant beauties strain th' impassion'd sight;
See rocks coeval with the world arise,
Whose cloud-swept groves seem waving in the skies;
By ages furrow'd deep, with time plow'd mein,
With adverse frowns, with fractur'd foreheads seen,
Whilst Neptune rolls his rapid tides between.
See Wealth quick flying in the freighted gale,
See East, see West expand th' impatient sail;
Here earth, here ocean, mountains, rocks unite
And in harmonious discord give delight;
There, princely piles in classic taste express'd
In Gracian garb, in Roman grandeur dress'd,

A line of palaces o'erlook the town,
That with a jealous pride the prospect crown:
On different heights they stand in stately strife,
Like rank and dignity in moral life:
In various climax court th' attracted eyes,
The objects changing as the structures rise:
From pile to pile a prospect new appears,
And now the hills, and now the river cheers.
See num'rous ships with sudden glance shoot by,
The sails and streamers only strike the eye:
Between th' embracing banks, for ever green,
They seem to move on land, their bulk unseen;
By glad propitious gales impatient blown,
With rapid speed and motion not their own.
See next a * steeple on yon hill appear,
Yon distant hill, the Proteus of the year;
From whose oft-changing look, the watchful swain,
Foretells the weather, and avoids the rain.
The blue ætherial hills see last arise,
In azure robe to meet the bending skies.
Here pendent gardens with rich fruits appear,
The rip'ning bounty of the lavish year.
The temple rais'd above the group see sway,
And all th' extended various views survey.
Divine ambition in the choice is found,
Nay taste itself mark'd out the sacred ground;
With holy pride the lofty seat to shew,
And reign exulting o'er the world below;
Where some on others look with scornful phlegm,
Whilst others look with equal scorn on them;
With mole-hill malice dash the cup of life,
An inch in difference makes the mountain stile.

* The steeple on Dundery hill.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

It appears by Domesday-book, that Clifton was part of the antient demesns of the crown, and a member of the manor of Westberie, (as it was then written) in which the king had thirty hides of land; and that it continued a member of that manor during the first four years of the Conqueror's reign. But afterwards, according to the record, six hides in Chire, ten in Cliftone, eight in Noent and Chingestune, and one in Ladenent, were taken from the manor of Westberie, and held by three proprietors; namely, the abbey of

From proud comparison we quaff our all,
That source of human sweets, or human gall:
At which the restless soul impatient pants,
Begets her anguish, and creates her wants.
Oh frantic fallacy! oh brain-sick need!
Shall thy sleek beaver make my bosom bleed?
Thy better buckled belt make me repine,
Or if thy nails be closer cut than mine?
Shall I my lips with inward anguish bite,
Or thy black kitten's tail be tipt with white?
Or if thy leeks than mine should greener grow,
And make thy fancied blifs, my REAL woe?
Invy in courts and cottages will dwell,
May climb to heaven itself, tho' born in hell:
Every living bosom lurks this pest,
But reigns unrival'd in the human breast;
In reason's throne usurps a thorny part,
And plants a thousand daggers in the heart.
THE moral here and natural world we see,
In wife gradation, and in just degree:
Where all constructed for one system's sake,
Happy, heterogeneous prospect make:
Where reason's scale from class to class can fall,
And measure equal bounty dealt to all;
Each lot can justly prize, in fortune's wheel,
But not from what we have, but what we feel.
FROM moral strains, let my glad numbers soar,
And yon coincidence with speed explore:
Where strong extremes produce a striking taste,
Gothic building by a Greek embrac'd:
A contrast kind, the feasted eye to fill,
And mark the summit of the social hill:
There Goldney acts the meek, the moral part,
And daily works new miracles of art.
There he like Moses makes the water flow,
His gold the rock obeys, but not his blow:
His gold, that conquers nature's hardest laws,
And tountains from the rocky centre draws:
His well-spent gold a two-fold transport gives,
The garden gladdens, and the labourer lives.
Each toils refresh at once the heart and head,
We taste a banquet, and the rustic bread:
We take nature wonder at her thin-wove mask,
And truth survey her own transparent task.
The master's pleasure with th' improvement grows,
And all the rapture, that a parent knows:
When wife discretion weighs th' unerring coin,
And makes his pleasure with his prudence join.
When sweet ambition bids the heart begin,
Or genius feels a paradise within:
And tho' at full her task may seem too hard,
Th' accomplish'd wonder is its own reward.
When fancy triumphs, when by judgment led,
And wears the well-earn'd wreath around her head:
Without a blush her own bright work surveys,
Approves the rapture, and enjoys the praise:
A new creation lifts th' admiring lid,
Where nature looks abroad, here art lies hid:
For the grand form her mantle meek she flings,
And ornaments are arbitrary things:
But even there should fancy never stray
From nature's path, or seek a wiser way;
It is but nature in her best array.
With simple elegance she smiling stands,
A blameless garb, put on by Goldney's hands.
A gemus taught the tasteful eye to cheer,
With sober judgment whispering in his ear:
Where wife discretion rules the realms of wit,
The happy medium here, he happy hit;
Where each bright incident performs its part,
And inward rapture melts the master's heart;
And each congenial guest with joy invades
The fountains, prottos, and the clear cascades;
The tall paterres that lift the comely face,
And yield at once such majesty and grace,
With ev'ry growing beauty in its place,
Minor Stow on Clifton's crown we find,
Ere meekness, like its master's mind.

HERE buildings boast a robe, tho' rich yet chaste,
The robe of judgment, and of ripen'd taste:
Convenience here is mix'd with manly grace,
Yet ornament but holds the second place.
To human frames these structures seem akin,
With aspect fair, while reason rules within.
These domes discretion decks, and fancy cheers,
Palladio's stile in Patty's plans appears:
Himself a master with the first to stand,
For Clifton owes her beauties to his hand.

HENCE to the vale, by mountain rocks secur'd,
By nature's own immortal hand immur'd,
The vale, where skreen'd Avona sinks and swells,
That warping leads me to the hallow'd Wells,
I wander joyful, with unbounded glee,
From all I raptur'd hear, and raptur'd see:
To where sweet health her far-fought balm bestows,
And beauty with re-kindled fervor glows.
Above this fountain of supreme delight,
Two ponderous rocks surprise and please the sight:
With bending brows of nearer terms they treat,
Thro' countless ages essay'd oft to meet;
With grey address the tedious courtship con,
And wish the aerial arch would make them one:
The nuptial bridge* sublime their brows would join,
Whilst Europe wonder'd at the work divine.
Blenheim should blush, tho' high her concave swells,
Nay Venice veil her bonnet to the Wells:
Her proud Rialto should no more appear,
But France and Italy come crowding here;
Can then ambition sleep when GLORY calls,
The MUSE herself shall help to raise the walls;
With Orphean sounds the work divine advance,
And make the willing stones in order dance;
Expand the joy-touch'd heart, enlarge the mind,
And Lacy leave one wonder more behind:
The groves on high their frequent nod bestow,
And earth and water give consent below;
Whilst ART stands ready with impatient hands,
But gold, demurring gold forbids the bans:
That scrupulous wight, whom lock'd-up souls adore,
He listens not alas! to am'rous lore,
Who many a noble match hath marr'd before.

THE walks see full, see health disclose her hive,
Whilst all the neighbouring objects seem alive;
See bounty there her healing store unlocks,
Breathes all her vital veins, her genial rocks,
Distill'd by nature in her richest cell,
Where health fits brooding, and her offspring dwell;
With heaven in council deep, for mortal weal,
Where angels blend the balm, and bid it heal;
There love and beauty revel in the tide,
There grace and vigour wanton at their side;
That with more lustre make glad beauty glow,
Than all the diamonds orient realms bestow;
The cheek to vermil, and relume the eye,
And make disease, that pallid fantom, fly
From all its windings in the nerves and limbs,
When thro' the lax'd tubes he lazy swims,
The fizy, creeping, tardy, torpid flood,
That long in hesitating lakes hath stood,
With loaded bane to blast the balmy blood,
With pining atrophy, and spitting gore,
And all the wastings of the vital store;
With diabetes and its irksome train,
And life-consuming dews, and mental pain.
Here health expels disease, that deep-hid mole,
Winds up the body, and lets loose the soul,
Calls virtue home, with health, in exile still,
Revives th' affections, and awakes the will,
Bids love and friendship in the bottom play,
And drives each dark dissocial cloud away. &c. &c.

* James Lacy, esq; the designer of Ranelagh-house, was consulted on the project of building a bridge of one arch from rock to rock, over the river Avon. A gentleman, whose name I have forgot, bequeathed 1000*l.* towards this work; which, had it been perfected, would have been the noblest bridge of one arch in the world.

Cormeile, Osborne, and William the son of Richard. This is not a literal translation of the passage in Domesday-book, but will be found to agree with it in substance. See p. 67.

These three were originally joint proprietors of those estates, which were some time afterwards divided. The abbey of Cormeile was an alien priory; and as such, all the lands belonging to it, in England, were vested in the crown by act of parliament 2 H. 5.

The shares of the other proprietors seem to have descended distinctly by the general name of Clifton, according to the records of the following dates; which records shew, that Lettice the daughter of Nicholas purchased Clifton of Joan her sister, who was married to Nicholas de la Hay, 8 Joh.

Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, was seized of Clifton 47 H. 3. John de St. Lando held Clifton, with free warren, 20 E. 3. Sir Edward le Dispencer and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Bartholomew Burghurst, were seized of the manor of Clifton 49 E. 3. in which year he died.

Sir John Chidiok held this manor 14 R. 2. John Rache and Joan his wife levied a fine of the third part of the manor and advowson of Clifton to sir John Moigne 15 R. 2. Sir John Botreaux and Elizabeth his wife were seized of the manor of Clifton, held of the honour of Gloucester, 18 R. 2. Richard Seimour held this manor 2 H. 4. John Rache was seized of the same 11 H. 4. probably the same third part of which John Rache and Joan his wife levied a fine to sir John Moigne, as above.

Richard de Beauchamp and Isabel his wife held the manor of Clifton 2 H. 5. Sir John Chidiok was seized thereof 3 H. 5. Nicholas Seimour held this manor 2 H. 6. Elianor the widow of sir John Chidiok, or Chadock, was seized of the manor of Clifton 12 H. 6. John lord Zouch was also seized of this manor, and being attainted 1 H. 7. his estate was forfeited, and this manor was granted the same year to sir William Willoughby and his heirs male.

All the property which the crown had in the manor of Clifton, formerly belonging to the abbey of Cormeile, was granted to sir Rafe Sadleir 35 H. 8. And, according to sir Robert Atkyns, Ralph Sadler, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608.

It is morally impossible that the whole manor should change masters so often as mentioned by the records of the foregoing dates; or that there should be so many distinct manors in this parish, as there are different owners in and about the same age; wherefore, to obviate every difficulty, and to account for the confusion in the descent of the manor, I suppose it to have been divided and subdivided, perhaps by the marriage of coheiresses; and the parts to have been often sold, or demised for terms of short duration; and that each passed by the general name of the manor of Clifton; of which similar instances are not wanting in other places.

The merchants adventurers of the city of Bristol are owners of one part of this manor; the other, which antiently belonged to sir Rafe Sadleir, is the property of Mr. Rufs, and Mrs. Adams's family of Bristol.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Bristol. It has been augmented with queen Anne's bounty, so that the present real value is about 100*l.* a year. Mr. John Taylor is patron and incumbent. The minister has no tithes. His income arises chiefly from the voluntary contribution of the parishioners. There is a chapel also in the parish, but no provision for repairing the building; nor endowment for the minister, beside the voluntary contributions of the company resorting to the Hot-wells, amounting usually to about sixty guineas.

The impropriation of Clifton was given, by John Carpenter, bishop of Worcester, to the college of Westbury upon Trim. It was lately vested in Mr. Hodges, and is now the property of his daughter, Mrs. Hamly.

The church has a new building added to it, and is handsomely pewed.

In the church, is a monument thus inscribed:

In this Church are deposited the Remains of ROBERT DINWIDDIE, Esq; formerly Governor of Virginia, who deceased July 27, 1770, in the 78th Year of his Age. The Annals of that Country will testify with what Judgment, Activity, and Zeal, He exerted himself in the Publick Cause, when the whole North American Continent was involved in a French and Indian War. His Rectitude of Conduct in his Government, and Integrity in other publick Employments, add a Lustre to his Character, which was revered while he lived, and will be held in Estimation whilst his Name survives. His more private Virtues, and the amiable social Qualities he possessed, were the Happiness of his numerous Friends and Relations, many of whom shared his Bounty, all lament his Loss. As his happy Dispositions for domestic Life were best known to his affectionate Wife and Daughters, They have erected this Monument to the Memory of his Conjugal and Paternal Love, which they will ever cherish and revere with that Piety and Tenderness he so greatly merited.

Farewell blest Shade! no more with Grief oppress, Propitious Angels guide thee to thy Rest.

On another marble monument, this inscription:

A WOMAN uniformly and without Ostentation actuated by the great Principles of VIRTUE and RELIGION; moderate in her Desires & Enjoyments; by Prudence and a well disposed Mind secured from Temptation or Surprize. Tenderness and Benevolence were seen in her pleasing Countenance; an amiable Simplicity of Manners in her Deportment; and both shewed the constant Influence of TRUTH and INNOCENCE. Quick to discover & acknowledge Merit, yet Indulgent to the Failings of Humanity, she contemplated with Delight the Excellencies of her Friends, and saw with Candour their Defects. Insensible of her own Worth, She viewed with partial Eyes Her HUSBAND; and gave him the warm and active Affection of a Heart which knew no Joy or Interest unconnected with His. According to sir Robert Atkyns, when he composed his account of this parish, there were 90 houses, and about 450 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 14, burials 12. The resort to the Hot-wells, since that time, has greatly increased population, and consequently the number of baptisms and burials; for in ten years, beginning with 1760, the average of annual baptisms is 36.2, of burials, 49.3; and the inhabitants, exclusive of lodgers, are about 1367. It is observable that the burials greatly exceed the baptisms, occasioned by the interment at Clifton of such persons as, coming to the wells for the recovery of their health, have died there. Of these there have been, for some time past, about 10 in a year, upon an average. This reduces the annual burials of the settled inhabitants to 30.3; nearly in the proportion of 1 to 45 of the whole number of the living.

There is an antient farm-house, with a chapel adjoining to it, called the Priory.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 45*l.* a year. Mr. Eyre is patron, Mr. Millechamp the present incumbent. The priory of Lanthony formerly presented to it.

Milo, constable of Gloucester, gave two parts of the tithes of Colebourn Sampson, and two parts of the tithes of Elias Leholt of Colebourn, to the priory of Lanthony, in the year 1137; so that the rector hath only one third part of the tithes.

The advowson of the rectory, of which the earl of Arundel was possessed, was granted to George and John Huntley 6 Eliz. A portion of tithes, and divers sheep-pastures, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to John Arundel 38 H. 8.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It is small, in form of a cross, with a low embattled tower at the west end. The north aisle belongs to the lord of the manor, the other to the parish.

But by the register, from May 6, 1759, to May 8, 1769, there were 76 baptisms; and from Jan. 2, 1759, to Feb. 19, 1769, 44 burials. The families are 48, and the inhabitants being number'd, are exactly 254; so that the average of annual burials, to the whole number of people, is as 1 to 57.7; which shews the place to be very healthy.

C O L N St. A L W I N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Britwell, barrow, nine miles distant north-eastward from Cirencester, five north-westward from Lechlade, and twenty-three eastward from Gloucester.

The river Coln, increased by the Bibury water, runs reluctantly through this parish, with a deep stream; and the trout grows in it to a good size, whereas at Bibury 'tis always light and slender. The parish takes its name from the river, and from St. Alwin, to whom, it is supposed, the church was originally dedicated. He was tutor to Charles the Great, and famous for his great skill in disputation.

This is a pretty little village. The lands rise in a bold manner on each side the Coln, and the church and houses are seen pleasantly situated on the north-east side, overlooking the river, the stone-bridge upon which is part repaired by the parish, and part by Quenington.

The Ikenild-way, a Roman road, leading from Oxfordshire through this parish to Cirencester, is still visible in a high ridge in many parts of it. It passes through a corner of Poulton in Wiltshire, at an eminence about six miles from Cirencester, and crosses another road where a tall ash tree grows, which tree was particularly convenient as a landmark and token to travellers; and hence the place obtained the name of Ready-token.

The parish hath lately been inclosed by act of parliament.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Athelred, governor of Gloucestershire, gave the messuages of his land, lying in Culne St. Alwin, to the monks of St. Peter of Gloucester. See page 178. And the manor was held by the same church after the Conquest, as appears by Domesday-book.

'The church [of St. Peter at Gloucester] held Culne. There are four hides. In demer there are three plow-tillages, and eleven villeins, and four bordars, with twelve plow-tillages. There are four servi. It was worth 6*l.* now 8*l.* The mills paid a rent of 25*s.*' Domesday-book.

The abbey of Gloucester reserved for rent 100 sheep, or 9*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* a year, at the election of the steward. They were seized of this manor 1780, and continued proprietors of it till the dissolution after which it was made a part of the endowment of the dean and chapter of Gloucester, 33 H. 8. who are the present owners.

Thomas Ingram, esq; and others, are lords of this manor under the dean and chapter of Gloucester. Mr. Ingram has a good house at the church, where he resides. His arms are, a chevron between three lions passant guardant Or.

H A M L E T. Williamstrip is a hamlet of this manor in this parish, about half a mile east of the church. John de Handelo levied a fine for this manor 4 E. 3. and was succeeded therein by his son Richard, whose wife Isabel, by virtue of her settlement ttlement, enjoyed it 'till her death 35 E. 3. Edmond de Handelo, grandson of Richard, dying without issue 49 E. 3. left a great estate to his two sisters; of whom Margery the eldest, first married Gilbert Chateline, and afterwards to John de Popleby, had this manor.

From their time I find no account of the proprietors, 'till Henry Powle, esq; became possessed of it. He was speaker of the house of commons, master of the rolls, and one of the privy council to King Charles the Second, and King William the Third. From this family the manor of Williamstrip went, by the marriage of his only daughter and heiress, to Henry Ireton, esq. It afterwards passed to Brooke Forrester, and then to Humfry-Mackworth Praed, who sold it to Samuel Mackwell, esq; one of the representatives in parliament for the borough of Cirencester, who is the present lord of the manor. He has a very handsome seat and large estate here, and in other parts of the county. For his arms, &c. see p. 229.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, now worth about 60*l.* a year. It has been augmented by Queen Anne's bounty. Sylvester bishop of Worcester, in the year 1217, gave the impropriation of this church to the abbey of Gloucester, for the increase of hospitality, when Henry Blond was abbat. And the impropriation and the advowson of the vicarage were granted to the dean and chapter of Gloucester, by their charter of foundation. At this time there is no incumbent, by reason of the decease of the late Mr. Field, 1775. The vicar has 20*l.* a year out of the impropriation, and at the late inclosing of the parish, lands were allotted to him in lieu of tithes. A Catland-house was given by the abbey of Gloucester for the purpose of a church-house.

The church consists of the nave only. It is dedicated to St. John Baptist. The tower stands on the south side, and there is a large gallery at the west end, built by the donations of Henry Powle and his brother William, in 1646. The tower was built by abbat Gamages, as appears by the initials of his name, I. G. over the door on the west side, and his arms, a cross, which stand a little above. On the south side, on the battlements, are the arms of the Clares earls of Gloucester, three chevronels ruby. And on the west side are the arms of St. Peter's abbey, Gloucester, and the prince of Wales.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a freestone monument in the chancel, with the figures of a man and woman kneeling, in one compartment, and six children in another. It was designed for George Fettiplace, esq; as appears by a scutcheon of his arms, viz. Quarterly, Gules, a chevron argent. 2d, Three roundlets, A lion rampant, 4th as 1st. He was one of the judges of South Wales in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and died of the plague in 1578.

On a flat stone in the chancel :

Here lies the Body of Thomas Church, esq; (son of Thomas Church, of Tunstall in Shropshire, and of Theophila Fettiplace his wife, youngest daughter of Giles Fettiplace, of this place, esq;) He departed this Life at the Bath, the 15th day of March, 1734, aged 31.

C O L N St. D E N N I S

IS a small village in the upper division of the hundred of Deerhurst, in the Cotswold country, situate on the east side of the Foss-road leading from Cirencester to Stow, a little mile below Foss-bridge; bounded on the west by Chedworth, on the south by Coln Rogers; having Hamnet on the north, and Northleach on the east of it. It is seven miles north of Cirencester, three south of Northleach, and twenty east of Gloucester.

It takes its name from the river Coln, which runs through it, and is distinguished from Coln Rogers by the additional name, derived from the abbey of St. Dennis in Normandy, to which it antiently belonged.

The houses stand in a little comb, or bottom. The parish consists principally of arable land, with some meadow and pasture on the sides of the river; but it has nothing remarkable to engage the attention of the naturalist.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following is all that is mentioned of this manor in Domesday-book. 'In Derhest hundred the church of St. Dennis holds five hides in Colne and Caldecote.' D. B. p. 72.

This manor was appropriated to the use of the priory of Deerhurst, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis in France; and the monks, by their interest, procured it to be annexed to the hundred of Deerhurst, tho' it lies many miles distant from any other part of it.

The alien priories, of which Deerhurst was one, being dissolved, this manor was granted to the abbey of Tewkesbury 7 E. 4. and afterwards, at the general dissolution of religious foundations, the manor of Coln Deans, and lands in Caldecot, were granted to William Sharrington 34 H. 8.

Livery of the manors of Coln Deans and Calcot, alias Caldecot, with the advowson of the church, was granted to Robert Westwood 1 Eliz.

The manor came afterwards to Thomas Master, esq; of Cirencester, who sold it, and Mr. Dorrel, of Oxfordshire, is the present proprietor of it.

H A M L E T. Caldecot, now Calcot, is a hamlet in this parish. Humphry Bohun was seized of the manor of Caldecot 3 E. 1. and Gilbert Gamage and Lettice his wife were seized of it 6 R. 2. from whom it descended to Roger their son and heir.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 140*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. John Hughes is patron and incumbent.

Two parts of the tithes of Caldecot were granted to the priory of Lanthony, by Milo constable of Gloucester, in the year 1137.

The church is small, without battlements, and has a low tower in the middle, in which are five bells.

The church-house and a barn, four acres and three-quarters in each common field, ten sheep-pastures, and a dwelling-house called the Maple, have been given at several times for the repair of the church.

There are memorials for John Hughes, who died in 1726; for Charles Hughes, M. A. who died 1742; and for Andrew Hughes, M. A. who died in 1756, all rectors of this church; but there are no family arms.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 16 houses and 80 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. But in ten years, beginning with 1760, there are registered 41 baptisms and 29 burials; and the number of families is 26, of inhabitants 112; so that about one in 39 dies every year.

COLN ROGERS

IS a small parish in the hundred of Bradley, three miles south from Northleach, seven north-east from Cirencester, and twenty-one miles east from Gloucester. It was so called from its situation on the river Coln, and from Roger of Gloucester, its antient possessor. But in the grant of king Stephen to the abbey of Gloucester, it is called Coln St. Andrew, because the church is dedicated to that saint.

The village stands in a little dale. The lands are chiefly arable, with a little pasture near the riv.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Roger of Gloucester, knight, being dangerously wounded at Wallison, gave the manor of Coln Rogers, alias Coln on the Hills, to the monks of Gloucester, in the year 1105, to pray for his soul; and the grant was confirmed by king Henry, when the abbey was vacant by the death of Serlo.

The abbey of Gloucester was seized of the manor of Coln Rogers 17 E. 3. and continued possessed of it 'till the dissolution; when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8. who are the present lords of it.

Alexander Colston, esq; is lessee under the dean and chapter.

Pindrop, or Pendrop, from pen, the top, and drop, a dwelling, so called from its situation above the village, is a considerable farm in this parish, the property of Thomas Cotton, esq; a banker in London, who has a good house here.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 100*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Gloucester are patrons. The living is now vacant.

Twenty-four acres in each common field belong to the glebe.

The demans of the lord of the manor pay only the twentieth part in lieu of tithes.

The church is small, dedicated to St. Andrew, and contains nothing worth notice. It has a tower at the west end, with three bells in it. Two acres in each common field, called the Church-land, are given to find bell-ropes.

At the beginning of this century, there were 18 houses in this parish, and about 70 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. But on an average of ten years, from 1760, the annual baptisms are 4.2, burials 3.1 and the the number of families is 26, of inhabitants exactly 125. So that the annual burials are to the whole number of inhabitants, nearly as 1 to 42.

COMPTON ABDALE

IS a small parish in the hundred of Bradley, in the Cotswold country, eleven miles north from Cirencester, four north-westward from Northleach, and sixteen east from Gloucester.

The village takes its name from the situation of the church and houses in a little comb or valley, for combe in the Anglo Saxon, signifies a narrow valley; but the greater part of the parish lies upon the hills. It consists principally of arable land, with a considerable share of wood, and a little pasture on the banks of the Coln, a branch of which runs through it. But what most distinguishes it, is the bold appearance of lord Chedworth's plantations, which stand on a high part of the Cotswold.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday-book gives the following account of this manor :

'Stigand archbishop [of York] held Cuntune in Bradelege hundred. There were nine hides. There are two plow-tillages, and five acres of meadow, and twenty-two villeins, and five bordars, with eleven plow-tillages. There are five seroi, and a mill of 5*s*. In the time of king Edward it was worth 9*l*. now 7*l*. Thomas archbishop [of York] holds it. A free man of Roger de Lurei holds one manor of three hides belonging to this manor. The archbishop claims it.' Domesday-book, p. 70.

The temporalties of the archbishop of York were extended 14 E. 3. of which this manor was a part.

Thomas Lane held the capital messuage of Compton Abdale, under the archbishop of York, and died seized thereof 37 H. 8. leaving Thomas his son eighteen years old. This manor was taken from the archbishop of York, and granted to sir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6.

It was afterwards purchased by sir Richard Grubham, of Wishford, in Wiltshire, who was lord of it in 1608; and dying without issue in 1629, left this and many other great estates to his nephew John How, esq; from whom it descended, like Chedworth and Stowell, down to lord Chedworth, who is the present lord of the manor; an account of whose family and arms is inserted under Stowell, where his lordship resides.

William Docket and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Compton-Abdale, to the use of Edmund Tame 19 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Cirencester. The rectory of Compton-Abdale, and the advowson of the vicarage, belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester; and after the dissolution of that house, were granted to the church of Bristol 34 H. 8. The dean and chapter of Bristol are the appropriators and patrons, and pay the incumbent 10*l*. a year. The curacy has been twice augmented; first by a donation from the late Mr. Aylworth, and by queen Anne's bounty, in the year 1737; and again in 1760, by donations from Alexander Colston, esq; (as executor of the late Edward Colston, esq;) and Charles Page, M. A. the present incumbent, and by the queen's bounty.

The church is very small, dedicated to St. Oswald, and has nothing in it worth notice.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 30 houses and about 130 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. In ten years, beginning with 1760, there were registered 34 baptisms, and 28 burials, and the inhabitants are at present 130 in number.

COMPTON GREENFIELD.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Henbury, six miles north-west from Bristol, nine south-westward from Thornbury, and thirty-three south-westward from Gloucester.

It is bounded on every side by the parishes of Almondsbury and Henbury, except a small portion on the west, where the river Severn is its boundary. The former part of the name is explained under the preceding head; the latter was given it with great propriety, because the parish consists almost wholly of meadow and pasture land, and to distinguish it from Easter Compton in Almondsbury.

The turnpike-road from Bristol to Aust-passage leads along the north-east side of it, near the church.

Tho' this little village affords but few materials to enrich a history, and is distinguished by neither fossils, camps, nor antient coins, yet it may be deservedly ranked among the happiest class for its vegetable productions, I mean its excellent pasturage.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It appears by Domesday-book, that at the time of the general survey this was a member of the large manor of Huesberie, [now Westbury] in Bernintreu hundred; and that Gislebert the son of Tuold then held three hides and a half in Con-tone, as it is written in that record.

This manor was granted to Ralph, son of Ralph Bloet, 18 Joh. but it was in the Berkeley family

It afterwards passed by purchase to Dr. William Juxton. He had been dean of Worcester, bishop of the sees of Hereford and London, and at length obtained the metropolitanical see of Canterbury. In 1635 he was made lord treasurer, by the interest of Dr. Laud, which giving disgust to many of the nobility, he was obliged to resign that office in 1641. In the year 1649, he attended king Charles the First on the scaffold, at the time of his execution, and afterwards retired to his manor of Little Compton. But at the Restoration he was promoted to the metropolitanical chair of Canterbury, in which dignity he died in the year 1663, aged 81, and was buried in St. John's College Oxford, to which he had been a generous benefactor.

William Juxton succeeded his uncle Dr. Juxton in this estate, and was created a baronet Dec. 22, 12 C. 2. He was high sheriff of the county in 1676; and was succeeded in title and estate by his son sir William Juxton, who died in 1739, without issue, whereby the title was extinct. His lady surviving him, was afterwards married to lord Fane, and is the present proprietor of Little Compton, where she has a good house, and resides there some part of the year.

John Musgrove was seized of lands in Little Contone 3 E. 1. Robert Ferrers of Chartley was seized of lands in Compton 1 H. 5. Sir Edward Ferrers de Chartley held four marks rent in Little Compton 14 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Stow. The appropriation and advowson of the vicarage belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and were granted to the chapter of Oxford 38 H. 8. They pay 22*l.* and Dr. South has given 10*l.* a year to the curate. Mr. Baker is the present incumbent. About the year 1771, the college gave 200*l.* arising from an estate given them by Dr. Stratford, to augment the living; but the money is not yet laid out on land. The appropriation is in lease to Mr. John Davis, and Mr. Richard Jordan.

The church is dedicated to St. Dennis, and hath a tower on the south side.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On a flat stone in the chancel :

Under this Stone lieth interred the Body of Sir William Juxton, late of this Parish, Knight and Baronet, who died the 3^d Day of Feb. 1739, in the 79th Year of his Age. He was the eldest Son of Sir William Juxton, Knight and Bar^t. also deceased, who intermarried with Elizabeth a Daughter of Sir John Walter of Sariden in the County of Oxford Bar^t. also deceased. Sir William Juxton the Son intermarried with Susanna Marriott, youngest Daughter of John Marriott late of Stuston, in the County of Suffolk, Esq; deceased, but has left no issue, whereby the title is extinct.

CONDICOT.

THIS parish lies partly in the hundred of Kiftgate, and partly in that of Slaughter. It is three miles distant north-westward from Stow, seven eastward from Winchcombe, and twenty-five north-eastward from Gloucester.

It is a small parish, consisting chiefly of arable land. I conjecture that formerly it was overgrown with wood, from the termination of the name, which comes from coed, a wood, in the British language.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This little parish was divided among several proprietors at the time of the general survey. That part of it which lay in the old hundred of Salemanesberic (now Slaughter) was a hamlet belonging to Oddington, and was then held by Thomas archbishop of York. His predecessor, Aldred, had taken a mortgage of this and other estates, of the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, to secure the payment of some money he had expended on that abbey, of which more may be seen p. 133, 141. See also the Domesday account of Oddington. In the same record are the following particulars:

' The church of Wirecestre holds two hides in
' Condicote [in Tedboldestan hundred] and Osbern
' holds them of the bishop. It was and is worth 40*s.*
' Osbern holds one hide and a half in Condicot
' in Witelai hundred, of Durand [de Gloucestre]
' It is and was worth 20*s.*
' William Froisselew holds half a hide in Con-
' nicote in Witelai hundred, which paid tax.
' There was one plow-tillage and four servi.
' It was worth 20*s.* now 3*s.* Brittric held it in ' the time of king Edward'. D. B. p. 70, 77, 74.

The principal manor and estate in this place, were held by the archbishop of York 6 E. 6. in which year they were granted to sir Thomas Chamberlain. But the records mention other estates by the general name of Condicote. Thus Hugh de Condicote gave half a hide of land in Condicote, to the knights-templars, who were seized of court-leet, waifs, and felons goods in their lands there, by the grant of king Henry the Third; and their claim to those privileges was allow'd 15 E. 1. and they were possessed of this estate 2 E. 3.
5 G which

The manor of Condicote, or rather a manor in Condicote, was held by William de Clinton earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3. by Edward de Stonore, 5 R. 2. and by Gilbert son of Robert de Stonore, 3 H. 5.

Mr. Machin was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Mr. Cox was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, but Mr. Haslam is the present owner.

A messuage in Condicote called Nun-beys, because it formerly belonged to the nunnery of Cokehill in Worcestershire, and from bai, a bedge, park, or inclosure, was granted, after the dissolution of religious foundations, to Nicholas Fortescue and Catherine Fortescue 34 H. 8. Thomas lord Wentworth married Margaret daughter and heir of Anne Fortescue, and with her had this messuage, which on his death, 5 E. 6. descended to Thomas lord Wentworth his son.

Hinswick is a considerable estate, part lying in this parish, and part in that of Breedon in Worcestershire. Lands in this place belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, as appears by the charter of king John, confirming the donations to that abbey, De feodo Willielmi filii Bernardi unam hidam in Hunchewic. Chart. ann. regni 6°.

Leland speaks of a water, 'rising at Kensdale in Cotswald, and [running] thens to Hinch-wike, wherabout yt rennith undre the grounde; thens to Swelle village by Stow; from Swelle to Slaughter and so into Bourton Water.' Itin. v. 5. p. 1.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Stow, worth 70*l.* a year. It was formerly within the peculiar of Blockley. Mr. Haslam is patron; Mr. Baker the present incumbent.

Ninety-eight acres of arable land, and five acres of pasture, belong to the glebe. The tithes belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. No lands in the parish are tithe free.

The church is small, dedicated to St. Nicholas.

C O R S E.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Westminster, on the north-west side of the river Severn. It is six miles distant east from Newent, nine south-west from Tewkesbury, and five and a half north-west from Gloucester. It is three miles and a half long and two broad, bounded on the east by the river Laden or Leaden; and the waters of Howbrook, which run through this parish, after joining another little rivulet called Collier's-brook, empty themselves into that river.

There is a large tract of pasture-ground called the Lawn, of which the greater part, about 1200 acres, is in this parish, the remainder in that of Eldersfield in Worcestershire. Two turnpike-roads, one from Gloucester to Worcester, the other to Ledbury, are carried over it. The fine verdure with which it is clothed, makes this part of the journey particularly agreeable in the spring and summer seasons. It is a fine plain, about three miles long, with a beautiful slope, like a lofty terrace, running on the east side for a good part of the way. This piece of ground is common to the parishioners, who depend much on depasturing large flocks of sheep upon it; but it often proves fatal to them, for in a wet season it is so rotting, that scarce a sheep survives. This fine tract of ground might be greatly improved, and rendered more healthy; but there is an insuperable obstacle,—it belongs to the church of Westminster.

There is a small and very fragrant sort of wild thyme growing about the ant-hills on the Lawn.

Mr. Pennant, among his many beautiful descriptions of places in Scotland, mentions the Carfe, or rich plains of Gowrie; and it remains a doubt with me, whether the parish of Corfe was denominated from the Lawn I have been speaking of, or whether it was so called from the British word Cors, a marsh or bog; as formerly it was much covered with wood, and consequently more rotten and boggy than at present; for the records mention Corfe-forest, Corfe-chase, Corfe-wood; but now there is no such thing in the parish.

The husbandry of this country, for many miles round, is in an unimproved state. The farmers leave much to nature, and tho' there is plenty of marle in the parish, particularly at Horridge, I cannot find that they ever used it as a manure. The

Cotes.]

The soil is strong, and the Herefordshire method of planting fruit-trees in the inclosures of tillage land prevails in this place, where they make some pretty good cyder. The elm is the chief timber-tree, but the oak grows very well; and I observed that in the parishes of Hasfield, Tirley, and all the way to Tewkesbury, the tenants have topped almost every oak-tree, that they may be afterwards, of right, intitled to the lop. This is an injury of a public as well as of a private nature, and I speak of it as the more unpardonable in this part of the country, where coal comes at an easy rate down the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Corse is not mentioned in Domesday-book, but it appears by later records that there was a forest or chase there; and that Richard de Clare earl of Gloucester and Hertford held Cors-forest and Cors-court 47 H. 3. and Joan his widow held Cors-chase 35 E. 1. and that Gilbert de Clare died seized of the same chase and court 7 E. 2. leaving three sisters coheireffes.

Elianor the eldest sister was married to Hugh le Despencer the younger, who in her right was seized of the manor and chase of Cors. He was beheaded, and Roger Mortimer procured a grant thereof to himself and his heirs 1 E. 3. But Roger being attainted and executed, this manor and chase were soon after restored to Hugh, the son of the last Hugh le Despencer, who died seized of them 23 E. 3. and was succeeded by Edward le Despencer his nephew. He died seized of the manor and chase of Cors 49 E. 3. and was succeeded by Thomas his son and heir, who was attainted and beheaded 1 H. 4.

This manor and chase were held by Richard Despencer his son and heir, who dying without issue, left two sisters his coheireffes, of whom Elizabeth died young. Isabel succeeding to this estate, carried it in marriage to Richard Beauchamp, lord Bergavenny. He died 17 H. 6. leaving John Throgmorton one of his executors, who died seized of this manor and chase 13 E. 4.

Cors-court was held by Philip Throgmorton 1 H. 8. and by his son William 28 H. 8. whose son Thomas succeeded him; and another Thomas Throgmorton, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608. It passed afterwards into the family and name of Dowdeswell, for Richard Dowdeswell, esq; was lord thereof at the beginning of this century, and the right honourable William Dowdeswell, esq; who had been chancellor of the exchequer, and one of his majesty's most honourable privy council, (which important stations he had filled with great abilities and integrity) died seized thereof in the year 1775. His arms are, Or, a fess undy between six billets sable.

The manor of Corse-Lawn antiently belonged to the abbey of Westminster. It was granted to the chapter of Westminster 34 H. 8. and being confirmed 2 Eliz. now continues in that church.

HAMLET. Horridge is a hamlet in this parish. Lands called Horredge, in Corse, formerly belonged to the Benedictine priory of the lesser Malvern, in Worcestershire; and after the dissolution of religious foundations, were granted to Henry Leigh 37 H. 8.

Stainbridge is another place in this parish.

Robert Widecomb and Emma his wife levied a fine of lands in Corse to the use of the heirs of Emma 16 H. 6. Christopher Rastal died seized of lands in Corse 6 Eliz. and Thomas Rastal his son had livery the same year.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is within the peculiar of Deerhurst. It is a vicarage endowed with the tithes, worth about 70*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, the reverend Mr. Robert Gegg, the present incumbent. The patronage was formerly in the priory of Deerhurst, and afterwards transferred to the abbey of Tewkesbury. About fifteen acres belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. It is small, with a spire steeple at the west end.

And in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, there were 97 baptisms, and 53 burials, in which number the quakers are not included; and the inhabitants in 1771, were exactly 253. So that population is nearly in the same state as it was seventy years ago.

C O T E S, or C O A T S.

THIS parish lies in the Cotswold country, in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, three miles west from Cirencester, seven north-eastward from Tetbury, seven east from Minchinhampton, and eighteen south-eastward from Gloucester. This

This name was unknown at the time of the general survey, temp. W. 1. In Domesday-book the parish is described by the names of Hunlafesed, Turberie, and Torentune; but in the sheriff's return of all the vills in the hundred of Cirencester, 9 E. 1. these were omitted, and the general name of Cotes occurs in their stead.

Sir Robert Atkyns was of opinion, that it received its name from being seated among the Cotts in Coteswold; but it was more probably from the British word coed, a wood, because here was one of those great woods which are supposed to have extended over almost all the country from this place to Stow, and to have given the name of Coteswold to a large extent of ground upon the hills of Gloucestershire. Wold, from the Saxon weald, signifies the same as coed; so that there is a redundancy in the name of Coteswold, of which there are instances in the appellations of other places. The present state of the country about Cotes serves to confirm the etymology; for there are still two large woods, at Hailey, and Oakley, adjoining to this parish, the latter of which was granted by the crown to the abbat of Cirencester, on condition that it should not be assarted; a restriction which has preserved it to our time, otherwise it might have fared as most of the antient wood-lands have done.

There is a strong camp, with a double ditch, in the hamlet of Trewsbury, called Trewsbury castle. It was probably a Roman camp of observation, lying a little to the north of the Acman-street-way, which led from Corinium to Aqua Solis, (now Cirencester and Bath) two eminent Roman stations. The Romans had another post about a mile and a half farther westward, on the same side of that road, where a great many coins and other vestiges of that people have been found, as related under Rodmarton.

The head of the Thames or Isis, poetically described by the learned Camden, is commonly reputed to be in this parish; but the well so called, does not overflow in the summer, unless in very wet seasons, and there is no constant stream in the place. Indeed if this were perennial, it would not be the highest source of that river, as I have shewn more largely at p. 48.

This village lies high and open, and is remarkably healthy, as appears by the state of population at the end of this account. The women and children are employ'd in spinning woollen-yarn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Gilbert de Clare was seized of the manors of Cotes and Trewsbury, with court-leet, 15 E. 1. They came afterwards into a family of the name of Vernon. Richard Vernon sold them to sir William Nottingham, who died seized of them 2 R. 3. without issue, leaving them to his widow for her life, the remainder to trustees. Richard Poole married Elizabeth, widow of sir William Nottingham, and purchased the reversion of the inheritance of the trustees, 7 H. 7. Sir Leonard Poole was son and heir of Richard, and dying 30 H. 8. was succeeded by his son sir Giles, who died in 1588. Sir Henry Poole, son of sir Giles, died in the year 1616, leaving sir Henry Poole his son and heir; whose son sir William was succeeded by his son sir Henry, the last male heir of his family. He sold the manor, &c. to sir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, about the year 1660, who dying in 1709, was succeeded by his son sir Robert Atkyns, who also died in 1711. Mr. Atkyns is the present lord of the manor.

This parish is reputed to be within the jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Gloucester. It consists almost intirely of arable land.

HAMLETS. 1. Hunlafesed, i. e. Hunlaf's seat, so called from the name of the Saxon proprietor. It is now called Hullafesed. The particulars whereof are thus set down in Domesday-book:

' Elmar possessed Hunlafesed in Cirecestre hundred, in which were three hides and a half. The bishop of Baieux held it. It is now in the king's hands. In demean is one plow-tillage, and four villeins, and four bordars, with three plow-tillages. It was worth 4*l.* now 50*s.* Domesday-book, p. 68.

The abbess of Romsey had the advowson of a chapel, and was possessed of lands in this place, 36 H. 6. The chapel is now standing, and retains the name, but it is converted to a barn.

2. Trewsbury, but antiently Tursberie, was probably so called from traws, sloping, and berg, a camp, or fortification. Domesday-book gives the following account of this estate:

' The same Gislebert [the son of Tuold] holds half a hide in Tursberie, in Cirecestre hundred, and Ofuard holds it of him. Aluard held it. In demean is one plow-tillage. It was worth 10*s.* now 15*s.* Domesday-book, p. 76.

3. Torleton is a hamlet, part of which lies in Rodmarton, and part in this parish. Torleton in Cotes lies a mile westward from the church, and contains sixteen families. In Domesday-book it is thus described:

' Radulfus Pagenel holds Torentune in Cirecestre hundred, and Radulfus holds it of him. There are four hides and a half taxed. Merlesuen held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and ten villeins, and one bordar with three plow-tillages. There are ten servi. It was worth 10*l.* now 100*s.* Domesday-book, p. 75.

Of the other estates, the records shew, that William Golding and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Cotes, to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to William Panton and Joan his wife, daughter of William Golding, 23 H. 6. William Leweline and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Cotes to William Nottingham, 7 E. 4. The royalty of the hamlets is vested in the lord of the manor of Cotes.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory in the deanery of Cirencester, worth 200*l.* a year. Mr. Atkyns is patron, Mr. Chaunler the present incumbent.

Three acres of pasture land, adjoining to the parsonage house, eighty-two acres in the common fields, 170 sheep-pastures in Cotes, and 200 in Torleton, belong to the rector. Parish Register.

The tithes of the demesns belonged to the abbey of Cirencester, and were so adjudged in the year 1463; and afterwards, Richard Peachy, rector of this church, by indenture dated in 1486, quitted claim to the tithes of the demesns to Richard Clyve, abbat of Cirencester, Richard Vernon being then lord of the manor.

The church is large, dedicated to St. Matthew. It has a handsome well-built tower at the west end, with two bells in it. On the north side of the church is a small chapel, which, by tradition, was built by the Nottinghams for a burying-place.

Under a void niche, on the west side of the tower, is an inscription engraven in antient characters, in the stone, mistaken by sir Robert Atkyns; and which cannot be better explained than by the following abstract from the curious register of the parish of Rodmarton, in the year 1636, where it is thus written: 'In the windowe of the south side, adjoining to the chancel, was a little picture in the glasse, of one praying in the habit of a minister, cum baculo pastorali; and under-written Richardus Exall, which was broken by children. Perhaps he was at the charge of that window. There is also upon the west side of Cotes tower, in stones, Orate p' animab' Richardi Wiat, et Richardi de Rodm'ton; It may bee it was this Richard which did joyne with the person of Cotes to build that tower.'

Mr. Tyndale, late rector, caused this device to be placed over the door of the parsonage-house. A large rose, handsomely carved in freestone, and Under the Rose, (alluding to that saying) in Roman capitals, NE GRY QUIDEM FORAS; by which he meant to caution his friends against tale-bearing. I found something like this in the parlour of the parsonage-house at Buckland. To intimate that conversation in chearful societies should not be betray'd, there is a large gilt rose in the middle of the ceiling, over the place for the dining-table, and round it, in gold letters, Qui Dicta vel Faeta Foras eliminat, eliminetur. i. e. Let him that divulges what is said or done here, be kick'd out of doors. It was the antient custom at sympofiac meetings, or merry-makings, to wear chaplets of roses about the head, which gave rise to the phrase of Speaking under the rose.

Thomas Master, of the family of that name now residing at the abbey in Cirencester, was rector of Cotes, and a great scholar. He published several learned pieces, and assisted the lord Herbert of Cherbury in composing his History of king Henry the Eighth. He died in 1643, and lies buried in the chapel of New College Oxford.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On a flat stone in the chancel, is an acrostic for Ales Marshfield, the letters of whose name appear on the margin of the stone, but the verses are very imperfect.

On another stone, in capitals:

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 26 houses in this parish, and about 120 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 2. On an average of ten years, beginning with 1760, the annual baptisms are 4.4, burials 2. The present number of families is 40, of inhabitants exactly 200; by which it appears that only 1 in 100 dies every year, a proof of the astonishing healthiness of the place.

COW HONIBORN.

THIS district, or hamlet, lies in the upper division of Kiftsgate hundred; four miles distant east from Evesham in Worcestershire, five north from Campden, and thirty north-east from Gloucester.

The corrupt manner of writing the modern names of places often misleads in judging of their derivation. If Honiborn has any determinate signification, it is a very different one from that of Heniberge, the old name of this place, as I find it written in Domesday-book. The antient name seems to be composed of pæn, Saxon, stone, and beoꝛꝝ, a camp or fortification; or of ben, British, old, and beoꝛꝝ, as before. Sir Robert Atkyns omits the Domesday account of this place, and overlooking the antient name, says nothing of its derivation; but he observes of the prenomèn Cow, that it was so called from the number of cows kept there, and to distinguish it from Church-Honiborn in the neighbourhood.

This little place consists principally of pasture land, with some good arable. Two small brooks, from Weston-Subedge, and Aston-Subedge, run through it into the Avon.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday-book are the following particulars: 'The same church [St. Mary of Winchelcumbe] holds Heniberge in Celsede hundred. There are ten hides, of which two are in demean and eight in service. In demean are five plow-tillages, and fifteen villeins, with five plow-tillages. There are nine servi, and three ancillæ. It was worth 6*l.* now 8*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 71.

The right of free warren in this place was allowed to the abbey of Winchcombe in a Quo Warranto 15 E. 1. and that house continued possessed of the manor 'till it was dissolved; after which the manor was granted to lord Burley and John Fortescue, esq; 33 Eliz. and was purchased by sir Edward Grevil, of Milcot in Warwickshire, in the 36th year of that reign, who was lord of it in 1608. The manor seems now to be in the crown, from whom the inhabitants have taken long leases.

What sir Robert Atkyns mentions of William Strupes being seized of Honiborn 10 E. 1. cannot relate to this place, unless it means that he held it under the church of Winchcombe.

Of the Church, &c.

The church of this place stands in Church-Honiborn in Worcestershire. Here was a chapel formerly belonging to the deanery of Campden; but it has been long since converted into a poor-house.

Tithes of hay in Cow Honiborn, formerly belonging to the abbey of Evesham, were granted to John Green and Ralph Hall, 7 E. 6. Other tithes in Honiborn, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

Mr. Williams has the impropriation and the advowson of the vicarage.

C O W L E Y

IS a parish in the hundred of Rapsgate, in the Cotswold country, five miles south from Cheltenham, nine north-westward from Cirencester, and nine east from Gloucester.

The village lies mostly in a narrow glyn, through which the river Churn runs, with hanging woods to the south of it, and the rising lands of Coberley to the north.

Sir Robert Atkyns supposes the name to signify a pasture-ground where cows are kept. This opinion is supported by the testimony of the inhabitants, who say, that within the memory of man the lands were mostly employed in breeding large herds of cattle. But they are at present chiefly in tillage, with a due proportion of pasture, and about 100 acres of wood.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday-book are the following particulars, omitted by sir Robert Atkyns:

'The church of St. Mary of Persfore holds Kvelege in Respigete hundred. There are five hides taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and fourteen villeins, and one bordar, with seven plow-tillages. There are five servi, and a mill of 50*d.* and six acres of meadow, and a wood three-quarters of a mile long, and one broad. It is worth 100*s.*' Domesday-book, p. 72.

The manor continued in the abbey of Persfore 'till the dissolution, when it was granted to the church of Westminster, 34 H. 8. and confirmed 2 Eliz. Henry Bret, esq; was lessee of the manor at the beginning of the present century. He was passionately fond of ringing, and continually travelling about the country with a company of ringers, at a vast expence, dissipated a plentiful fortune. George Hawker, esq; is the present lessee of the manor.

Richard de Brudelep gave two acres of land in Cowley to the brethren of St. Bartholomew's hospital, Gloucester.

H A M L E T S. 1. Stockwell, lying one mile from the church. A small stream rises here, and falls into the Churn at Cockleford.

2. Birdlip, so much of it only as lies on the north side of the road from Cirencester to Gloucester, is in this parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth 180*l.* a year; the lord chancellor is patron, the reverend Dr. John Brickenden the present incumbent.

The church is a small building, dedicated to St. Mary, with a neat embattled tower at the west end, in which are six musical bells, the gift of Henry Bret, esq.

Under a niche, in the north wall of the chancel, is the figure of a man lying along, with a lion couchant at his feet. No other monument worth notice.

Cowley.]

COWLEY, or COALEY,

IS a parish in the hundred of Berkeley, six miles north-eastward from Berkeley, three north from Dursley, and twelve south from Gloucester. It lies under the north sides of Uley and Nimpsfield hills, and consists chiefly of good pasture land.

Cowley's-Pick is a sugar-loaf hill in this parish, whence there is an extensive prospect over the vale. A small brook runs from hence into the Severn, near Slimbridge.

The public roads here are the worst that can be conceived; and the poor labouring people are so abandoned to nastiness, that they throw every thing within a yard or two of their doors, where the filth makes a putrid stench, to the injury of their own health, and the annoyance of travellers, if any come among them. The better houses are gone to ruin, and there is not a gentleman resident in the parish; but this is not peculiar to Cowley.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It appears by Domesday-book, that four hides in Coulege belonged to the honour of Berchelai. And the manor of Cowley has been held by the Berkeley family, and the owners of Berkeley-castle, down to the present earl of Berkeley, who is lord of this manor.

Richard de Coueley held divers lands in this parish in the reign of king Henry the Second. John de Coueley, a descendant from him, held one messuage, eighty acres of arable, eight acres of meadow, nine acres of pasture, and ten acres of wood, of the king, as of the manor of Berkeley, Ratione rebellionis manerij de Berkeley, by the fourth part of a knight's fee. Escheator's Inquisition 18 E. 2. And this estate continued in the same name and family down to 7 H. 5. when it descended to daughters.

William Coryet held lands and tenements in Coueley of the king in capite, as of the manor of Berkeley, 18 E. 2. Escheator's Inquisition.

John Clifford de Daneway was seized of 15 s. rent issuing out of a tenement in Cowley 21 R. 2.

Thomas lord Berkeley died seized of a tenement called Canon's-court, in Cowley, 5. H. 5. and Richard de Beauchamp earl of Warwick died seized of it 17 H. 6.

William Warner levied a fine of lands in this parish to the use of William Harding 18 H. 7. and another fine of other lands to the use of John Jones 22 H. 7.

James de Covell gave to St. Bartholomew's hospital, in Gloucester, the meadow of Willewood, with its appurtenances, 44 H. 3.—Robert de Benecumb gave to the same hospital his land in Boseley, and one acre and a half in Cliffield, in this parish. Gwydewell-brook and Illebrook occur in the last mentioned record; and Hathmer's-mill, and Athemere's-field, temp. II. 3.

Roger de Berkeley gave to the church of Stanley a mill in Cowley, and a messuage, and lands belonging to the mill. And Thomas lord Berkeley gave lands in Cowley to St. Bartholomew's hospital, Gloucester, that the obit of Maurice his father, and Isabel his mother, should be kept in full choir. Magn. cartul. apud Berkeley, fol. 293.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Dursley, worth 60*l.* a year; the lord chancellor is patron, Mr Hornage the present incumbent.

The impropriation was given by Roger de Berkeley to the abbey of Gloucester, and continued in that house 'till the dissolution of religious foundations, when it passed through a variety of hands till it came to the Brownings, who were lessees of it, and purchased the inheritance 14 J. 1.

The impropriation was lately purchased of the Brownings by Mr. John Minett, the present owner.

Forty-five acres of arable, and thirteen acres of pasture, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and consists of the nave, and an aisle on the north side. It has a handsome tower, with pinnacles, at the west end, and five bells in it.

CRANHAM.

C R A N H A M.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Rapsgate, eight miles southward from Cheltenham, twelve miles north-westward from Cirencester, and six south-eastward from Gloucester.

Supposing the name to be derived from Croen, British, rugged, and bam a village, it is particularly well adapted to this place, which is remarkably uneven, with many steep and rugged hills covered with beech wood. But towards Painfwick, there is a fine spacious opening, which communicates with the vale.

The large beech wood is usually converted into gun-stocks for Birmingham, and the waste and smaller wood into charcoal.

Tho' the peculiar situation and other distinguishing marks of each parish are generally noticed under its respective head; yet as the parishes lie dispersed thro' this work according to alphabetical arrangement, it may be sometimes necessary, in order to convey to the reader a more competent idea of the face of a country, to take a short view of a larger district. If it were possible that the eye could be raised above the horizon, so as at once to comprehend this, and the adjoining parishes of Brimpsfield, Side, Miserden, Edgworth, and Bisley, it would be highly delighted with the multiform appearance of hills and dales, woods and pastures, little fields and turgid rising grounds, watered by so many rills and limpid streams, meandering in a thousand different forms. The little glyns and dales are so deep and narrow, that the sun's enlivening rays never fall on them for months together; yet every spot is cultivated with unremitting labour, and rewards the industrious hand with plentiful crops of corn and pasture. There are landscapes which have more of the Great and Wonderful; but few more truly picturesque, or of greater variety than this would be. The vastly different soils and aspects, if diligently examined, would probably furnish a considerable list of curious natural productions, of which some are mentioned under Miserden, tho' it is apprehended many have escaped notice.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There is no place taken notice of in Domesday-book of the name of Cranham, nor any thing like it, in Gloucestershire. And as Brimpsfield, by the account given of it in that record, seems to have been of much greater extent and consequence than at present, being taxed at nine hides, Cranham, adjoining to it, was probably included in that account. Accordingly we find that the Giffards, who were lords of Brimpsfield, were also owners of Cranham when it was first mentioned in the records by that name. Helias, or Elias Giffard, gave Cronham to the abbey of Gloucester, of which he was a monk, when Hameline was abbat. Elias Giffard, son of that Elias, in the year 1167, gave eight librats of land in Willingwike in Herefordshire to the monks of Gloucester, in exchange for this manor. But the manor of Cranham soon reverted to the abbey, which continued possessed of it 'till the dissolution, when a considerable part was granted, by the name of a manor, to the dean and chapter of Gloucester, 33 H. 8.

The other part of the manor, with two mills, lately belonging to Catherine queen of England, was granted to John Bridges, afterwards lord Chandos, 1 E. 6. Edward lord Chandos died seized of this manor 15 Eliz. and Giles lord Chandos his son had livery of it the same year.

It was soon after purchased by sir William Sandys, who died 17 C. 1. leaving William his grandson and heir, whose grandson, William Sandys, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. It went afterwards, by purchase, to lord Edgumbe, who is the present lord of it. For his lordship's arms, see Brimpsfield.

Climperwell is a considerable estate in this parish, the property of Samuel Hayward, of Wallworth-Hall, esq.

Lands in Cranham, which belonged to the abbey of Cirencester, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 50*l.* a year. Lord Edgumbe is patron, Mr. Wallbank the present incumbent. The rector receives 1*l.* 18*s.* a year out of Tibboth-farm.

The church stands on the side of a very steep ascent, and is dedicated to St. James. It hath an aisle on the south side, and a tower at the west end.

C R O M H A L L.

THIS parish lies in the vale, in the hundred of Berkeley, about seven miles distant south from the town of that name, six south-west from Wotton-under-edge, and twenty-three south from Gloucester.

The

The name is of doubtful original. It is probable that the old road from Aqua Solis, or Bath, to the Trajectus at Oldbury, and so on to the Roman stations in Monmouthshire, led through this parish, or perhaps a little to the southward of it; for there are the remains of a strong encampment in Cromhall-park, where it may be supposed the soldiers were posted to protect that road. That this was a Roman work is pretty certain, from some coins which have been found, and from a tessellated pavement sometime since discovered there, about eighteen feet long, and fifteen broad, composed of small cubical bricks, or stones, of various colours, and set together with a strong cement, in a very curious order and regularity. The above camp lies at a convenient distance from two others for observation, on Sodbury and Horton hills, a little eastward of the same line of road, which probably led through Pucklechurch and Westerleigh, and was guarded between Bath and those places, by a lodgment of soldiers at Wick, of which vestiges have also been lately discovered.

St. Augustine, by the assistance of Ethelbert king of Kent, called a council of Saxon and British bishops to confer on matters of religion. At that time Bangor in Wales was a famous seminary of learning, some of the monks of which place came thither to consult an holy anchorite, who had a cell upon a hill in this parish, whence it is called Anchorite-hill, where the ruins of his cell are still to be seen.

Cromhall-beath is a large common of pretty good land, permitted to remain in the unimproved state of nature, like many other fine tracks of ground in this part of the county, to the great injury of the community.

The fossil productions of this village are pit-coal, and white-lay stone. Of the former there is great plenty; but the works have relaxed for some time. The latter is common to many other neighbouring parishes. It burns to an excellent kind of white, strong lime, in making of which some of the labouring inhabitants are employed, whilst the women and children spin wollen-yarn for the clothiers about Wotton-under-edge.

There was formerly a fair for cattle, and a variety of goods, held here on St. Andrew's day; but it has long since fallen into neglect and disuse.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Before and after the conquest, Cromhall was a member of the great manor of Berkeley, for in Domesday-book it is thus expressed:

'Two brothers held five hides in Cromhal in that manor [i. e. Berchelai] in the time of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and six villeins, and five bordars having six plow-tillages. Those two brothers might do what they pleased with themselves and their land. It was then worth 4*l.* now 3*l.* Earl William committed them to the care of the steward of Berchelai, that he might have their service, as Roger says.'

And in another place in the same record, it is said, 'Two hides in Cromale belong to Berchelai.' Domesday-book, p. 68.

Robert lord Berkeley, in the year 1148, gave one of those manors to the monastery of St. Augustine in Bristol, wherefore it was called Cromball-Abbats. The abbey had free-warren and court-leet therein 13 & 15 E. 1. and continued in possession of this manor 'till the dissolution. It was afterwards granted to Paul, bishop of Bristol, and his successors, on the establishment of the see of Bristol, 34 H. 8. and now is in that church; but it was sold to Richard Kirrington and Roger Cook, for 568*l.* 0*s.* 2*d.* in the year 1649.

There is another manor in this parish, called Cromball-Ligon, because it formerly belonged to the Lignons.

William de Wantone levied a fine of the fourth part of the manor of Cromhall, and of the advowson, 18 E. 2. and a person of the same name levied another fine thereof 11 E. 3.

Sir John Berkeley of Beverstone died seized of the manor of Cromhall 6 H. 6. out of which family it went by purchase to the Lignons; and livery of the manor of Cromhall and Redgrove was granted to Richard Ligon, 9 Eliz. but sir William Throgmorton was lord of the manor in 1608.

It was soon afterwards purchased by sir Robert Ducie, from whom it descended to lord Ducie, the present owner of this manor; whose descent and arms are given under Woodchester, his lordship's residence.

Sir William Ducie obtained a licence for inclosing Cromhall-park in the year 1661.

John Newton of Bristol, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Cromhall 8 H. 8.

Woodend is a place in this parish, where the late Mr. Matthews, who had been steward to the earl of Berkeley, built a large handsome house, which cost him many thousand pounds.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth upwards of 200*l.* a year; of which Oriel college has the advowson; and the reverend doctor Penny is the present incumbent.

About fifty acres of land belong to the glebe; and a ground called Didnam's-Place, containing six acres, part in Wickwar, and part in this parish, is given to repair the church.

The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. It consists of the nave and a south aisle, in which was an antient stone monument, consisting of the figure of a man lying cross-legged, intended, as supposed, for one of the Lignons. But it was lately built in the south wall, to save the parish three-pence in materials for the repair.

CUBBERLY, or COBERLEY.

THE greater part of this parish lies in the hundred of Rapsigate, but some part of it is in Bradley hundred. It is four miles south from Cheltenham, ten north-westward from Cirencester, and nine east from Gloucester; and is bounded on the south by Cowley.

These two parishes have something of the appearance of a basin, with a piece broken off one side to the bottom; for to the north, west, and south, the lands extend up the sides of the hills which divide the Cotswold from the Vale, and so form the top of a little valley, with an opening to the east.

From Crickley-bill, which lies partly in this parish, there is a most astonishing prospect of the country towards Gloucester; and there is another very extensive view from the top of Pinswell, (a hamlet in Coberley) as far as the city of Worcester on one hand, and almost to Marlborough in Wiltshire on the other, which places are above sixty miles asunder.

The river Churn rises here, at a place called the Seven Wells, within a small distance of the road from Gloucester to Oxford. This is deservedly considered as the head of the Thames, being the highest source of that river. The united waters of these springs are so copious as to drive a corn-mill a little below. The Churn runs through Colesbourn, Rendcombe, North Cerney, and so on to Cirencester.

Coberley, from the British word Cop, signifies the top of the pasture, and I am told that within the memory of some of the inhabitants, the whole parish was in lays or pasture; but now the greater part is converted to tillage. This etymology is from conjecture; but Leland was certainly mistaken, who calls in Cowberley, as he says, shortly for Cow Berkeley; for Coberleie was the name of it in the reign of king Edward the Confessor, before the Berkeleyys had any property here, as appears by the following record.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Roger de Berchelai holds Coberleie in Rapsigate hundred. There are ten hides. Dena, a thane of king Edward, held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and nineteen villeins, and four bordars with five plow-tillages. There are four servi, and five acres of meadow; a wood three-quarters of a mile long, and half a mile broad. ' It was worth 7l. now 8l.' Domesday-book, p. 75.

The manor, says sir Robert Atkyns, did afterwards pass to Robert Waleran, but he was most probably mistaken; for there were two manors or estates in this parish, at the time of the general survey. And it is observable, that in those times the records often describe several manors in the same parish by one general name. These estates lay in different hundreds, and continued in different proprietors for a long time. Sir Robert's inattention to those distinctions occasioned the mistake. There is therefore the strongest reason to believe, that the principal manor continued in the uninterrupted possession of the Berkeley family 'till it was carried out of it by the marriage of an heiress.

The records shew that sir Thomas de Berkeley held the manor of Cubberly 8 E. 3. and that Thomas Berkeley his son held it 25 E. 3. and died seized thereof 6 H. 4. leaving Alice, his only daughter and heiress, married to sir John Brugg, who had issue by her two sons, Giles and Edward. Alice surviving her husband, was married to Thomas Browning, whom she also survived, and held this manor in jointure at the time of her death 2 H. 5. Sir Giles Brugg, or Bruges, was her son and heir; who married Catherine, daughter of James Clifford, of Frampton, esq; and relict of Anselm Gyse, of Elmore in this county, esq; and died seized of the manor of Coberley 6 E. 4. Thomas Brydges was his son and heir; who married Florence, daughter of William Darrel, and was succeeded by his son sir Giles Brydges, who married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Baynham, and died seized of the manor of Coberley 3 H. 8. leaving John his son nine years old. He had livery of this manor granted to him 16 H. 8. and married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward lord Grey of Wilton. He was created lord Chandos of Sudley 1 Mar. and died in the 4th year of the same reign, leaving Edmund lord Chandos his son and heir, who had livery of the manor of Coberley the same year. He married Dorothy, daughter and coheir of Edmond lord Bray, and died 15 Eliz. Giles lord Chandos, his son, had livery of the manor the same year. He married Frances, daughter of Edward earl of Lincoln, and died 36 Eliz. leaving two daughters coheresses. Frances his widow held Coberley in jointure, and was seized thereof in 1608. This

This manor was soon after purchased by the Duttons of Sherbourn. John Dutton gave it in marriage with his daughter Lucy, to sir Thomas Pope, earl of Down. It was again purchased, about the middle of the last century, by the Castleman family. Jonathan Castleman, esq; in the year 1720, sold the manor of Coberley for 40000*l.* to John How, esq; father of John first lord Chedworth; and Henry-Frederick lord Chedworth is the present lord of this manor.

H A M L E T S. 1. Lower Coberley, as before.
2. Pinswell, sometimes called Upper Coberley, consisting of only two houses. It lies in the hundred of Bradley, and was a member of the manor of Northleach, as appears by Domesday-book. It has contributed to the relief of the poor of that parish, and still pays land-tax in aid of Eastington there. The name of Pinswell, from pen the top, and well, a spring of water, is exactly descriptive of its situation on the top of a high hill above the rest of the village; a perennial spring rising on the brow of the hill, runs down a steep descent, and joins the Churn water at the manor-house of Coberley. This estate is described in Domesday-book, under the head Terra Thome Archiep'i, viz.

'In Culberlege in Bradelege hundred is one hide belonging to this manor [i.e. Lecce, which we now call Northleach.] The hide at Culberlege is worth 20*s.*' Domesday-book, p. 70.

The manor of Coberley, then called Turpindeswelle, corruptly for Tre-pindeswelle, [i.e. Pinswell-place] was given to the nunnery of Gloucester when Eva or Edytha was abbess, who died in 768. In 1058 it was taken from the abbey of Gloucester by Aldred archbishop of York, as being a member of the manor of Lecce, to reimburse him his expences in rebuilding the abbey; but it was restored to that house by Thomas archbishop of York, in 1094, soon after the general survey.

Robert Waleran died seized of the manor of Coberley 1 E. 1. He left no issue, and was succeeded by his nephew Robert. John Waleran, and Robert Waleran with Isabel his wife, were seized of 4*l.* rent in Coberley 2 E. 2. but John Limel held the manor the same year.

Though the above persons are said to be seized of the manor of Coberley, yet it must be understood only of Pinswell, or Upper Coberley, which they held under the abbey of Gloucester.

The abbey of Gloucester was seized of lands, and of a portion of tithes, in Coberley, 17 E. 3.

It does not appear to whom Pinswell was granted at the dissolution of Gloucester abbey. But it is probable that it passed into lay hands, together with the manor of Northleach, of which it was a member. One of the Duttons of Sherbourn purchased the manor of lower Coberley, and John Dutton gave it in marriage with his daughter Lucy, to Thomas earl of Down. It is likely that his estate went with the other manor, for since that time they have had the same proprietors.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth 200*l.* a year. Lord Chedworth is patron, the reverend Mr. John Arnold the present incumbent.

The rector presented to a chantry in the church of Beauvale in Nottinghamshire in the year 1401.

The patronage of this church belonged to the priory of Little Malvern in Worcestershire.

There was a chantry in the church dedicated to the virgin Mary, founded by Thomas Berkeley in the year 1340, of which William Williams was the last incumbent. This chantry was granted to sir John Brydges 1 E. 6.

The church is an antient building, dedicated to St. Giles, with a small aisle on the south side, and a strong tower at the west end, with three bells in it.

There is a tradition that there was a chapel at Pinswell, and foundations of buildings have lately been dug up there, on the spot where the chapel is said to have stood.

In the chancel is the figure of a knight in armour, lying on his back, girt with a sword, and his legs across, with a lion at his feet: Opposite is the figure of a lady, in the dress of the age of Edward the Third. Under a niche in the north wall, is the figure of a man in net armour, holding his escutcheon before him, but the arms are utterly destroyed: And under an arch in the south wall, is an antient female figure, lying along in full proportion; but no account can be given of the persons they were intended for.

D A G L I N G W O R T H

L I E S in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, in the Cotswold country, three miles north-westward from Cirencester, six east from Bisley, and fifteen south-eastward from Gloucester.

The name seems to be derived from the Saxon birgel, bidden, and þeopð, a village; the greater part of the houses standing in a narrow dale, not easily easily seen from the great road, which lies a little to the east of it.

A small stream, rising in Dunteshourn, runs through the village to Stratton, and falls into the Churn at Cirencester. And the Irminstreet, a great Roman road, leading from Cirencester to Gloucester, passes thro' the parish. It is thrown up very broad and high, and notwithstanding it is much injured by the injudicious management of surveyors, yet it still remains very visible for many miles together. I have given the derivation of the name of this road, agreeably to Camden, under Cirencester: But it has since occurred to me, that the name is of Saxon original; for þepe in that language signifies an army, and þepeman a soldier. So that Irminstreet is nothing more than the expression via militaris translated into the Saxon language; and signifies the soldier's road, as having been made by the Roman soldiers, who were occasionally employed that way.

The Romans had an advanced post in this village, as appears by the ruins of some foundations, and a tessellated pavement, discovered in a ground called Cave-Close, about a century ago.

On the east side of this Roman way, on a large down, is found a kind of stone peculiar to this place, and the neighbouring parishes of Stratton and Bagendon. It is called the Dagham-down-stone. It lies just under the sod, on a bed of black mould, unmixed with any other kind of stone. It is of a close whitish grit, very hard, and endures all weathers. The stones rise singly, of infinite shapes and uncommon figures, occasioned by a number of circular perforations, from one inch to three or four inches diameter; which seem to have been made by a kind of fermentation in the stony matter, whilst in a soft state; for the surface of the hollow part is as smooth as if cut with a sharp instrument. They are shaped like various kinds of animals, human skulls, bones, and other irregular figures, much easier conceived than described; and are carried to great distances to ornament grottos, bridges, and rustic buildings, in which they have an effect vastly superior to any work of art.

And on the same down, there is another curious kind of stone lying near the surface. It rises sometimes three or four feet square, is of a whitish grit, hard as marble, full of petrified shells, and bears a good polish.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday-book this place is not mentioned, being probably considered at the time of the survey, as a part of the manor of Stratton; but in the sheriff's return of all the vills in the hundred of Cirencester 9 E. 1. Daglingworth is expressly mentioned, and Stratton omitted, whence it seems probable, that 'till that time at least they were one parish.

This manor was held by Ralph Bloet in the reign of king Henry the Second, and by another Ralph Bloet, who had a grant of free-warren in Daglingworth 9 E. 3. Sir John Bloet, son of Ralph, died seized of this manor, leaving Elizabeth his only daughter and heiress, who by her marriage with sir James de Berkeley, carried this manor into that name and family, in which it continued down to 44 Eliz. when Henry lord Berkeley sold it to sir Henry Poole for 1320*l.* From the Pooles it passed to sir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century, out of whose family it went by purchase to the earl of Bathurst, whose son the present earl of Bathurst is lord of the manor.

Of the other estates, the records shew, that William Boise and others held lands in Daglingworth 32 H. 3. William Nottingham and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Daglingworth to the use of themselves in special taille 20 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 80*l.* a year, the lord chancellor is patron, Mr. Chapman the present incumbent.

The abbess of Godstow in Oxfordshire presented to this church in the year 1499.

Seventy-three acres of arable land in the common fields belong to the glebe.

The church is small, dedicated to the Holy Cross, and has a strong tower at the west end.

DEAN, or MITCHEL DEAN,

LIES in the hundred of St. Briavel, (but antiently in Westbury hundred) in the forest-division of the county, seven miles distant south from Newent, five north from Newnham, and twelve west from Gloucester.

Agreeably to the name, this place is situated in a little low valley, between two hills, with the forest of Dean on the west and south-west of it. It is a little market-town, consisting of one very narrow, crooked street, of ordinary low buildings. The market is held on Monday, and pretty well frequented; for the convenience of which a new market-house hath been lately built by the lord of the manor. Here is a fair on Easter-munday, and another on the 10th of October.

The town had formerly some share in the cloathing-trade, which gave way to that of pin-making, and this hath long since left it, (for want of proper spirit in the manufacturers) to be fostered under abler managers at Gloucester: so that at present, having no support from manufactures, and but little from travelling, tho' the turnpike-road from Gloucester to Monmouth leads through it, the town is evidently in decline.

In this place, and in many others about the forest, large quantities of rich cinders have been found, from which our ancestors, for want of more powerful engines, could not extract the iron.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

William the son of Norman holds two hides, two yard-lands and a half in Dene. Three thanes, Godric, Elric, and Ernui held these lands in the time of king Edward. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and thirty-eight bordars have seven plow-tillages and a half, three of which pay 8s. It was worth 33s. now 44s. King Edward exempted these lands from tax, for the preservation of the forest.' D. B. p. 74.

The regular canons of Southwick in Hampshire were seized of lands in Dean, and had a charter of liberties therein 1 Joh. and a grant of another part of Dean in the 5th year of that reign, the rest remaining in the king's hands.

This manor, and a bailiwick in the forest, were held by William de Dean 47 H. 3. and by Henry de Dean 20 E. 1. John Abbenhall was seized of the manor of Michel-Dean, and of one messuage, and 140 acres of land, 10 E. 2. and William de Dean held Great Dean, St. Briavel's-castle, and four acres of assart-land in Bradell, 12 E. 2. and Reginald de Abbenhall had a grant of markets and fairs in Great Dean 2 E. 3.

John Tiptot, earl of Worcester, had this manor in marriage with Elizabeth Grender, and held it till his death; but leaving no issue by her, it reverted to the Grenders, and went out of that name to the Walwyns, by the marriage of an heiress. It was afterwards carried out of the name of Walwyn, by an heiress to the Baynhams; and descended like Abbenhall, down to Christopher Baynham, who had livery of this manor 3 E. 6. He dying 5 Mar. livery was granted the same year to his brother Richard; as it was to Robert Baynham 9 Eliz. and to Joseph Baynham 14 Eliz. And Thomas Baynham had livery of the fourth part of the manor of Mitchel-Dean, and of the third part of the advowson of the rectory, 20 Eliz. It afterwards became the property of sir Robert Woodruffe; but Maynard Colchester, of Westbury, esq; is the present lord of the manor.

Walter de Laci gave his lands in Dene to the abbey of Gloucester, which gift the king confirmed 4 W. 1. Roger de Staunton gave the watercourse of Dene and of Clinch to the said abbey, 7 R. 1. And the abbey held lands in Dean of Edward earl of March 3 H. 6.

The inhabitants of Dean had right of estovers and pasturage in the forest of Dean 7 H. 3.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of the forest, worth 50l. a year. Mr. Colchester is patron, Mr. John Harris the present incumbent. There is no land tithe-free.

The church hath two ailes, and a handsome spire at the west-end, with eight bells. It is dedicated to St. Michael, whence the town is called Mitchel-Dean. There was a small chantry, dedicated to the holy Trinity, whereof Henry Hooper was the last incumbent.

Five small parcels of land, and some cottages, are given for the repair of the church, and for the use of the poor.

DEAN (LITTLE.)

THIS is a parish in the hundred of St. Briavel, in the forest of Dean, three miles south from Mitchel-Dean, two north from Newnham, and twelve westward from Gloucester.

It abounds with excellent coal and iron ore, and great quantities of very rich iron cinders have been dug here. The labouring inhabitants are employ'd in mining, and in a small nail manufacture. Here is a market-house without a market. On Whit-munday, and on the 26th of November, are two fairs for pedlery.

This village affords very little matter for the entertainment of the curious. If it were not an offence to quote a writer professedly in the parliament's interest in the reign of king Charles the First, I would mention from Corbet a melancholy transaction which happened here. Governor Mafly (of whom the reader may see more under Gloucester) sent a party of horse to alarm a little garrison at this place, whilst he fell upon Westbury himself. This party surpris'd and took about twenty of the king's men; and also surrounded colonel Congreve, governor of Newnham, and one captain Wigmore, with a few private soldiers, who were in some houses. They had accepted quarter, and were ready to surrender, when one of the company from the houses killed a trooper, which so enraged the rest, that they broke in upon them, and put them all to the sword. Congreve died with these words, Lord, receive my soul: but Wigmore uttered nothing but the bitterest execrations: upon which Corbet makes a remark of the extreme contrariety in the spirits of men, even under the stroke of death.

Mr. Pyrke has a good house and estate here. Thomas Pyrke, esq; the late owner of them, married Dorothy, daughter of Richard Yate, of Arlingham, esq; by whom he had two sons and a daughter; and surviving them, he bequeathed this estate to — Watkyns, descended, by the mother's side, from a brother of the said Thomas Pyrke, who assumes the name of Pyrke and resides at this place. See inscriptions at Abbenhall, for the family arms.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There is no distinct account of this manor in Domesday-book, because it was taken out of Great Dean, or Mitchel-Dean, since the compilation of that record. William de Dean (of whom already under Mitchel-Dean) died 12 E. 2. seized of Dean, which he held in capite, paying 10 s. a year to the constable of St. Briavel's castle, and serving the king in his army in the counties of Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester, three days at his own expence. Esch. The manor afterwards came to the Grenders, and descended precisely like the manor of Mitchel-Dean to Maynard Colchester, esq; who is the present lord of this manor.

Sir Anthony Kingston had a grant of an estate by the name of a manor in Little Dean 36 H. 8. valued at that time at 14 l. 2 s. 2 d. Richard Brain, esq; died seized of lands in Little Dean 15 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation in the forest deanery, belonging to St. Bartholomew's hospital, Gloucester. The corporation of that city are patrons, Mr. Webb is the present incumbent. It is usually joined in the same presentation with Newnham. The incumbent has a lease of the impropriation, out of which he pays 8 l. a year for the use of the hospital, the rest being allowed to him as curate.

The church is dedicated to St. Ethelbert. It has a double roof, supported by pillars in the middle. There was a chantry erected 13 H. 4. dedicated to the holy Trinity. George Pomefrey, the last incumbent, retired with a pension of 4 l. And the lands of this chantry were granted to William Herick and Arthur Ingram 5 Jac. Procurat. and Synodals 1 s. 0 d. At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 70 houses, and about 320 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 9. But I find that in ten years, beginning with 1714, there were 146 baptisms, and 115 burials; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1761, the baptisms were 144, the burials 106. And the inhabitants are now about 423.

DEERHURST, or DERHURST.

PART of this parish (the tithing of Derhurst) lies in the hundred of its own name, three miles distant south from Tewkesbury, and eight north from Gloucester.

The parish is bounded by the Severn for two miles on the west, and lying mostly flat and low, is extremely subject to floods from that river. In 1770, the flood rose to the top of the first floor of most of the houses in the village, and so continued many days together; but it was much higher in some parts of the parish. The roads are almost impassable in the winter.

It appears from Domesday-book, that there was a large wood in Derhurst, that in part gave denomination to the place; for the name is composed of Dwr, British, water, and Derst, Saxon, a wood, and signifies the wood by the water. This explanation agrees precisely with the situation, and is much preferable to that which accounts for the former part of the name, by supposing that deer formerly harboured there, which notion probably took rise from the more modern manner of writing it.

Common occurrences are improper for history, because uninteresting; and the marvellous and wonderful are to be admitted with caution. Finding the following story in sir Robert Atkyns, is my only reason for giving it a place in this account. The story is, that a serpent of a prodigious bigness was a great grievance to all the country about Derhurst, by poisoning the inhabitants and killing their cattle. The inhabitants petitioned the king, and a proclamation was issued out, that whosoever should kill the serpent should enjoy an estate on Walton-hill in this parish, which then belonged to the crown. One John Smith, a labourer, engaged in the enterprize, and succeeded: For having put a quantity of mill in a place to which the serpent resorted, he gorged the whole, agreeable to expectation, and lay down to sleep in the sun, with his scales ruffled up. Seeing him in that situation, Smith advanced, and striking between the scales with his axe, took off his head. The family of the Smiths enjoyed the estate, when sir Robert compiled this account, and Mr. Lane, who married a widow of that family, had then the axe in his possession.

There is a small island here, called the Eight, made by the dividing of the waters of the Severn, which some writers have taken for the Olanze, or Alney, where Edmund Ironside and Canute the Dane fought in single combat for the kingdom; but the isle of Alney, near Gloucester, was most probably the scene of that famous engagement.

Derhurst common is remarkable for its great extent, and for being frequently overflowed with water. It begins at the church-yard, and goes round a good part of the parish, about four miles in length, joining the Leigh common. A few years ago the inhabitants of the Leigh dug a deep ditch across, to divide the parishes, whereupon an action was brought against them; and on trial, the right of common being a manerial right, under the manor of Plaistow, which includes both parishes, a verdict with damages passed against them. If I am not mistaken, a commission of sewers, for the improvement of estates liable to be overflowed by the Severn from Gloucester upwards, was issued in the last king's reign; which, if carried into execution, might make this a most valuable piece of ground, and greatly improve many other estates in this part of the country.

Here is an antient bridge, which obtained the name of Gildable-bridge, from certain tolls and customs having been formerly paid at it. 'Tis part repaired by Norton, and part by Derhurst. And here was a fair held on Holy-rod day, now totally disused.

But more observable for antiquity is the priory which stood in this place, which Bede mentions to be a famous monastery in his time. It is said to have been built about the year 715, of which Leland gives the following account from a manuscript he had seen in Tewkesbury abbey. Almarick, brother to Odo and Dodo, great noblemen of Mercia, was buried in a small chapel at Deerhurst, which had been a royal palace; where, in the wall over the door, it was written, Hanc aulam Dodo dux consecrari fecit in ecclesiam, ad honorem beate Mariæ Virginis, ob amorem fratris sui Almarici: i. e. Duke Dodo, for the affection he bore to his brother Almarick, caused this palace to be consecrated to a church, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary. Itin. v. 6. And in the year 1675, there was an old stone dug up here in Mr. Powell's church, with this inscription: Odde dux jussit hanc aulam regiam construi, atq; dedicari in honorem Trinitatis pro anima Germani sui Elfrici, quæ de loco assumpta erat. Ealdredus vero episcopus qui eodem dedicavit ii idibus April. xiv^o autem anno S.^o regni Eadwardi regis Anglorum. That is, Duke Odde commanded this royal palace to be built, and to be dedicated to the Holy Trinity, for the soul of his cousin (or brother) Elfrick, which was parted from his body in this place. But Ealdred was the bishop who consecrated it, on the second of the ides of April, in the 14th year of the reign of the holy king Edward.

To reconcile these accounts, we must suppose that Almarick and Elfrick are only accidental variations in the name of the same person. The dedication to the virgin Mary mentioned in the first account, refers to the original consecration. But the Danes ravaging and destroying the monastery, it continued in a low condition for many years; 'till Edward the Confessor caused it to be rebuilt and consecrated in the year 1056; and the latter account must relate to the second consecration. He also endowed the priory with the advowsons of Derhurst, Woolstone, Prestone, and Compton, and made it an alien priory, subject to the abbey of St. Dennis at Paris; all which William the Conqueror confirmed^m in the year 1069. But William of Malmesbury tells us, that in his time this house was only an empty monument of antiquity. Leland says, The olde Priory stode est from Severn a bow shotte, and north of the town. There remayne yet dyverse names of streates, as Fiffchar-streate, and others. But the buildings of them are gone; to which I must add, that many ruins of old foundations have been found, which shew the place was formerly much larger than at present.

St. Alphege, archbishop of Canterbury, about the year 960, was a private monk in this monastery.

King Richard the Second found some pretence for seizing into his hands all the manors and lands belonging to this priory, and John de Beauchamp of Holt obtained a grant of them 11 R. 2.

By the statute of 2 H. 5. all the possessions of alien priories were vested in the crown, except of such as were conventual. This house therefore was not within that statute. But king Henry the Sixth having wars with France, it was not thought fit to permit the abbey of St. Dennis to have the patronage of this cell, and the right of presenting the prior; he therefore by his^x charter makes it a priory denizen 1 H. 6. and grants them power to elect their own prior; but gave the patronage of the monastery to the abbey of Tewkesbury. Hugh Magason was the last prior alien.

King Henry the Sixth, in the nineteenth year of his reign, founded Eaton-college, and dissolving the monastery of Derhurst, gave most of their lands to that college, the rest to Tewkesbury abbey, which occasioned great law-suits between the college and the abbey, that were not finally determined till Henry the Seventh's reign; when it was settled, that Goldcliff-priory and lands should go to the college, and Derhurst to the abbey of Tewkesbury. John Blomsgrove was the last prior, and had a pension of 13 l. 6 s 8 d.

King Edward the Fourth being willing to abrogate the acts of king Henry the Sixth, who was of the Lancastrian line, takes away those lands from Eaton-college, 17^o regni, and bestows them on the college of Fotheringhay in Northamptonshire, which was founded by Edward duke of York, of his own family, in the year 1415, which lands were afterwards regranted to the college of Eaton by king Henry the Eighth.

Lands in Derhurst, and the scite of the priory, which lately belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to Giles Throgmorton, in consideration of the manor of White Waltone, and other lands in Berkshire, 34 H. 8. and Thomas Throgmorton had livery of them 12 Eliz. The scite of this antient priory is exempt from tithes, and is now the property of the earl of Coventry, who is also viscount Deerhurst. His lordship's arms are Sable, a fess ermine between three crescents Or. SUPPORTERS, Two eagles, wings expanded, argent, member'd and beaked Or. MOTTO, CANDIDE ET CONSTANter.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

' The church of St. Peter at Westminster holds Derhest in Derhest hundred. There are fifty-nine hides. There were five hides in the chief manor in the time of king Edward. There are three plow-tillages and twenty villeins, and eight bordars with ten plow-tillages. There are six servi, and sixty acres of meadow; a wood two miles long, and half a mile broad. It is worth and was worth 10*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 72.

But it is supposed that the above fifty-nine hides include other manors which were held of this, and are expressly mentioned in the record to be ad hoc manerium Berewicci, members belonging to this manor; and are as follow: Herdduic, Bortune, Teodecham, Sudtune, in which were twenty-five hides. And there were besides smaller estates held by Radechenisters, or free men, who notwithstanding they were free, did, in the time of king Edward, plow, harrow, reap and mow at all the lord's work^y; which estates lay in Almundestan, Telingc, Wicfeld, Toteham, Botingtune, Bortune, Chinemertune, Giningtune, Tereige, Trinleic, Hasfelde, Lemingtune, and Montune.

' The whole manor in the time of king Edward paid a farm of 41*l.* and eight sextaries of honey of the king's measure. It is now worth 40*l.* of which 26*l.* belong to the manor, and 14*l.* to the [free] men.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

This lordship was taken by the Conqueror^z from the abbey of Pershore, and given to the church of Westminster; and Robert Fitz-Haman (sometimes erroneously stiled earl of Gloucester) took it again from the abbey of Westminster, with all their possessions in Gloucestershire; which abbat Lawrence recovered by a law-suit in the reign of king Henry the Second. The abbat of Westminster was seized of the hundred of Derhurst 15 E. 1. and held the manor of Derhurst, with the hamlets of Hardwick, Walton, Corfe, Trinelly, and Haurick, [Tyrley and Haw] 27 E. 1. At the dissolution of religious foundations, this manor was vested in the crown, and granted to the dean and chapter of Westminster 34 H. 8. but was resumed, and granted to the convent of Westminster 4 Mar. and again regranted, and confirmed to the church of Westminster 2 Eliz. who are the present proprietors.

HAMLETS. 1. Apperley, where Mr. Capel Payne has a good estate, lately belonging to the Lanes. The manor of Apperley antiently belonged to the abbey of Westminster, upon the dissolution of which, it was granted to the dean and chapter of that church, 34 H. 8. and confirmed 2 Eliz.—There is said to be another manor in Apperley, of which Edward Brugg was seized 10 H. 4. Edward Brugg, esq; held 30 messuages in Trinly, and one capital messuage called Apperly-place, 200 acres of land, 30 acres of meadow, and 100 acres of pasture in Derhurst, 15 H. 6. The manor of Apperley was held by John Throgmorton 13 E. 4. by Philip Throgmorton 5 H. 8. by William Throgmorton 28 H. 8. and livery thereof was granted to Thomas Throgmorton 12 Eliz.—Lands in Apperley, late Warwick's and Spencer's lands, were granted to James Gunter and William Lewis 37 H. 8.

2. Wightfield. Eduui, a free man, held one hide in Wicfeld of the manor of Derhest in the time of king Edward, which Walterius Pontherius held at the time of the general survey. D. B. Gilbert le Dispencer was seized of two messuages, 400 acres of land, &c. in Wightfield and Apperley, 5 R. 2. John Cassey, lord chief baron of the exchequer, died seized of this manor 1 H. 4. as did Robert Cassey, esq; 1 E. 6. and Henry Cassey his son, 38 Eliz. Powell Snell, esq; is the present lord of this manor, and owner of the estate in Wightfield, but holds no court.

3. Walton. This manor antiently belonged to the abbey of Westminster, and, with others, was granted to the dean and chapter of Westminster 34 H. 8. and confirmed 2 Eliz. William Nottingham and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Walton by Derhurst 20 H. 6. Lands in Derhurst-Walton, which lately belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to James Gunter and William Lewis 37 H. 8. Sir Henry Caple and Anne his wife levied a fine of lands in Walton 3 Mar.

The manor of Hardwick by Derhurst was also antiently in the abbey of Westminster, and after the dissolution was granted to that church.

These three hamlets lie in the lower part of Westminster hundred.

The representative of the late William Dowdell, esq; of Pull-court, as lessee under the dean and chapter of Westminster, is lord of the manor of Plaistow; and at that court, all the places in the lower division of Westminster hundred owe suit and service.

Of the Church, &c.

Derhurst is a peculiar, and the mother of the following churches; Corfe, Forthampton, Hasfield, the Leigh, Staverton, Bodington, and Firley, which had no right of sepulture 'till they obtained it of the priors of Derhurst. These, with their mother church, claim to be visited at Derhurst, as probably they were heretofore served by monks of the priory, whom the archdeacon visited there. It is a curacy, formerly in the gift of the impropiator; but the bishop hath appointed the curate for many years past. Here is no house nor glebe for the incumbent, who receives 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* from the impropiator, which a few years since was all the income; but it hath lately been twice augmented by the queen's bounty, and the parishioners have undertaken to make the whole 20*l.* a year. It was a laudable act in the people, so far as it extends, but ineffectual to any good purpose; for the clergy, like other men, have need of meat, drink, and cloathing, which this pitiful income cannot supply. Hence the church of Derhurst has service performed in it once in four, five, or six weeks, at uncertain times; and hence also the greater part of the inhabitants of this large parish, either frequent alehouses on the Sunday, idle about, or lie, like swine, in the lanes and public highways, for want of a minister to teach them their duty; to the great injury of the cause of religion, and to the general depravity of morals. I dislike the invidious reflections thrown out by Pelman, Stevens, and others, against the Reformation; but in all cases similar to the above, I sincerely wish to see the Reformation reformed, and am sure the clergy will heartily join me. The prior of Derhurst was seized of the advowson of this church 5 H. 3.

Livery of the rectory of Derhurst was granted to Thomas Throgmorton 12 Eliz.

The impropriation, worth 150*l.* a year, belongs to Powell Snell, esq; whose father purchased it of the family of Fermor.

The church consists of a lofty nave, with two side ailes. The chancel is higher than the church, with a large aile on each side, all covered with lead. There was a handsome spire at the west end, which was blown down in 1666, instead of which, there is now a small tower with pinnacles, and five musical bells in it. There is a small place at the upper end of the south aile, called Petty France, with a door, through which the prior used to come out of his house into the church. There are some remains of painted glass in the windows, with the figures of St. Agatha, St. Catherine, &c. Upon the whole the church is a good figure, but kept in a miserable filthy condition. The church-yard contains about an acre of ground.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

In the north aile is the following inscription upon brass, round a grey marble stone:

Hic jacet Iohes Casly miles quondam capitalis Baro Sc'e'ij dñi Regis qui obiit xxiiij^o die Mar. Anno dñi M^o CCCC^o Et Alicia uxor ejus quor' animab' p'picietur Deus.—The figures of a man and woman are engraven in brass on the stone, and very perfect. Over the man's head, Argent, a chevron between three eagles heads erased gules, for Casley. At his feet, three lioncels passant in pale. The arms over the woman's head are torn off.

In the north aile, is a memorial for William Lane, esq; of Apperley, who died in 1755, and these arms, Party per pale argent and gules, three saltires counterchanged; a mullet for difference.

On a flat stone in the chancel, is a memorial for Peter Fermor, second son of Henry Fermor, of Tufmore in Oxfordshire, esq; who died in 1691, with his arms, A fess between three wiverns heads erased; a crescent for difference.

There are several memorials for the Powells, the Mortimers, &c. but nothing worthy notice.

Benefactions.

Thomas Halker gave 20*l.* to the poor. And there is a rent of 40*s.* a year given to the poor, charged on an estate at Walton. Mr. Snell pays 20*s.* a year towards putting poor boys out apprentices. And there are about twelve acres of land, which let for 5*l.* 12*s.* a year, to repair the church.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this parish, there were 100 houses, and about 620 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 16. Having examined the parish register, I find that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptisms were 172, burials 121; and in a like series, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 166, burials 153. But the register appears to be very ill kept, and no certain deduction can be made from it. The inhabitants are now about 530.

DEINTON, or DOINTON,

IS a small parish, at present in the hundred of Langley and Swineshead, but it lay antiently in that of Pucklechurch. It is bounded on the east by Dyrham, on the west by Bitton, on the north by Abston, and on the south by Langridge and Lansdown in Somersetshire; eight miles distant east from Bristol, about seven north-east from Bath, four west from Marshfield, and thirty-three southward from Gloucester.

It was antiently called Didington; a little brook runs thro' it into the Boyd, and so into the Avon.

The Boyd runs between this parish and Abston, in a very deep channel, between rocks of a prodigious height, rising almost perpendicularly from the bottom; and on each side are fortifications and intrenchments, raised, it is supposed, with a view to preserve a communication between Aqua Solis and Trajectus, two antient Roman stations, already mentioned more largely under Cromhall, Clifton, and other places.

This little parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Gloucester. It is pleasantly situated under Lansdown. It produces no rare plants, but there are some veins of lead ore, which are not rich enough to defray the expence of working. The stone of the rocks above-mentioned makes an excellent, white, strong lime.

The women and children are employed in spinning woollen yarn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' The same bishop [i. e. the bishop of Constance] held Didintone in Polcrecerce hundred, and Robert held it of him. Aluward a thane of king Edward held it. There are five hides taxed. In demean are three plow-tillages and fourteen villeins, and eight bordars with eight plow-tillages. There are ten servi, and two mills of 10s. and 10d. and two men of 5s. and twelve acres of meadow, a wood half a mile long, and half a mile broad. It is worth and was worth 8l. Domesday-book, p. 70.

The family of the Deintons took their name from this place, and held the manor for several generations, of the Clares, earls of Gloucester. Thomas de Deinton sold the manor and advowson of the church to John de Tracy, and levied a fine thereof 6 E. 1. and John de Tracy, son of the former, proved his right to courts leet and waifs in this manor, in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. The manor continued in the name of Tracy 300 years, and was sold out of that family to Mr. Arthur Player and others, in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

Robert Langton, esq; was lord of this manor at the beginning of this century, and Joseph Langton, esq; is the present lord of it.

But there was an antient manor called the Bury, which belonged also to the Tracies, afterwards to the Stills, and is now, by purchase, the property of Mr. Hillman.

The lodge-house in Tracy-park, which for many generations belonged to the Riddleys, is the property of Mr. Frankham.

John Stanshaw and Humphry Stanshaw his brother, levied a fine of lands in Deinton to William Fream, 12 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth 130l. a year, of which the lord chancellor is patron; the reverend Mr. Thomas Coker the present incumbent.

Eighty acres belong to the glebe. Tracy-park pays a mark yearly in lieu of tithes; all other places pay full tithes.

There was antiently a free chapel belonging to the manor-house, dedicated to the virgin Mary; and Mr. Hillman pays an audit to the crown of 5s. 4d. for the site of it.

The church is small, with an aisle on the north side, a handsome gallery at the west end, and an embattled tower with five bells in it. It is dedicated to the holy Trinity. The present rector rebuilt the chancel about the year 1768.

Monument and Inscription.

There is a handsome monument in the church, of white marble, with the following inscription:

M. S. Elizabethæ Langton, filix Edwardi Bridges de Cainsham, in Com. Somerset. Arm. uxoris Johannis Langton, de Deinton, in Com. Glocest. Gen. a cujus morte Vidua vi: annos ultra quadraginta, ut Charitati in Pauperes, Benignitate in suos, Pietati in Deum, Curis soluta, sese devoveret. Ob. Ann. Ætat. 83^o, Salutis 1702-3. There is a rent charge of 6s. a year on an estate in Deinton belonging to Mr. Walker, for the use of the poor. John Langton, of Deinton, esq; in the year 1660, gave 20l. with which a piece of ground was purchased in this parish for the poor. Mr. William Langton, rector of Dyrham, in 1668, settled 200l. in trust for educating and apprenticing out poor children of this parish.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 48 houses and about 200 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 6. But in ten years, beginning with 1700, I counted from the parish register 83 baptisms, and 41 burials; and in a like series, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 110, and the burials 79. And there are now about 340 inhabitants, nearly in the proportion of 44 to 1 of the average of annual burials.

IS a small parish in the lower division of Kildgate hundred, three miles distant northward from Winchcombe, nine south-west from Campden, and eighteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

This little village is pleasantly situated on the south-west side of the ridge of hills which divide the vale from the Cotefwold country. It consists of excellent arable and pasture-land, but there is nothing more to recommend it to our notice. A little rivulet runs from hence into the Avon near Evesham; and as Diddan in the British language signifies pleasant, it is probable that the place took its name from its situation upon this pleasant brook or stream of water.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor formerly belonged to the abbey of Hayles, which continued in possession of it 'till the dissolution of religious foundations, when it passed by grant into the name and family of Tracy, in which it has remained ever since; lord viscount Tracy of Todington, being the present proprietor of it.

TITHING. Cofcomb is a tithing in this parish, situate in a little dale on the brow of the hill, facing the vale towards Tewkesbury. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Hayles, at the dissolution of which house, the capital messuage of Cofcombe, alias Cofcom, in Didbrook, among other particulars, was assigned to Stephen Segar, the last abbat of Hayles, 'till he should be otherwise provided for. But the same messuage, by the name of the Abbat's-Lodging, was granted to Robert Acton 32 H. 8. Anthony Daston died seized thereof 20 Eliz. as did another Anthony Daston 12 C. 1. leaving Richard his son 12 years old.

This estate belonged to the late Mr. Justice Tracy, who built a handsome seat here, commanding an extensive prospect over the vale of Evesham. His grandson Robert Tracy, esq; dying without issue, it came to the present owner, Robert Pratt, esq; representative in parliament of the borough of Horsham in Suffex. Here are two houses in this tithing; and there was formerly a small chapel, now converted to prophane uses.

Wormington-grange is a place in this parish. William Fravellesworth held Little Wormington 3 E. 3. Wormington-farm, which belonged to the abbey of Hayles, was granted to Robert Acton 2 H. 8. Lands in Wormington, formerly belonging to the same abbey, were granted to sir Richard Gresham, in exchange for lands in Yorkshire, 38 H. 8. Lands called Hayles-close in Wormington, were granted to Henry Russel and Charles Brockton 2 Mariae.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage in the deanery of Ampden, of which lord viscount Tracy is patron; the Honourable John Tracy, D.D. the present incumbent. It was formerly appropriated to the abbey of Hayles. The advowson of the rectory and vicarage of Didbrook was granted to sir Edward Scimour 1 E. 6. and afterwards to John Welley and John Ascough 18 Eliz. The impropriation belongs to lord viscount Tracy, and pays four marks yearly to the vicar.

In the year 1738, this vicarage, the rectory of Pinnock, and the chapel of Hayles were consolidated into one presentation, by the concurrence of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent.

The church is supposed to be dedicated to St. George, from the picture of that saint in armour being in the window near the belfry. It has an embattled tower, and four bells, at the west end.

In the chancel window, painted on the glass, is the head of an old man, and this inscription was under it: Orate p' aia Willi Whytchyrche qui hoc templum fundavit cum cancello. And under, these arms, Argent, a lion rampant gules, in a bordure charged with four besants. But the latter part of the writing is now destroyed. This William Whytchurch was abbat of Hayles in 1470, and lies buried here in a stone coffin. The church was polluted by bloodshed in 1472.

LIES in the upper division of the hundred of Grumbaldsath, six miles westward from Tetbury, twenty eastward from the city of Bristol, and twenty-three southward from Gloucester.

It is situated in the hill country, and bounded on the south side by Wiltshire. This seems to account account for merton, the latter part of its name, which signifies a boundary town, from menc, Saxon, a boundary; but I am totally ignorant of the meaning of the former part of it.

The turnpike-road from Oxford, thro' Cirencester, to Bath and Bristol, leads through this village, where are two or three little inns for the accommodation of travellers.

The antient family of the Codringtons had a large seat near the church, which, with the estate belonging to it, is now gone out of that family, and there is only one wing and part of the front left standing.

The parish consists chiefly of arable land, and has nothing in it to engage the attention of the naturalist or antiquary.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Durand of Glowec' holds Dedmerton in Grimboldestou hundred, and Anschitil holds it of him. There are three hides taxed. Leuin held it of earl Herald. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight bordars with one plow-tillage, and four servi, and six acres of meadow. 'It was worth 30s. now 40s.' D. B. p. 76.

Otnell de Siward was son of the above Anschitil, who was called Anschitil of the wood. This Otnell granted two hides in Dudmarton to his uncle Elias; and the manor continued several generations in the family of the Sywards. It passed afterwards to the Rostons, for William Roston held the manor of Didmarton of the honour of Hereford 10 H. 4. Their name was afterwards varied to Wroughton, and from them this manor passed to the Seacoles.

Richard Seacole, esq; died seized of Didmarton, and left two daughters Grisle and Anne, coheiresses, of whom the former had livery of the manor and advowson 13 Eliz. Anne being married to Simon Codrington of Codrington, carried this manor into that name and family, from which it passed by purchase to the late duke of Beaufort, father of the present duke, who is the lord of this manor.

Of the other estates, the records and evidences shew that Oswald, who founded the monastery of Pershore in Worcestershire, in the year 604, gave several tenements in Dydimeretune to that monastery, which king Edgar confirmed to it; and those lands, after the dissolution of monasteries, were granted to Christopher Smith and Thomas Wharton 2 Mar.

John Joy died seized of one messuage and one yard-land in Dudmarton 19 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth 50*l.* a year, of which the duke of Beaufort is patron. Henry Dennis had livery of the advowson 4 Eliz. In the year 1735, this church was united in one presentation with that of Oldbury upon the hill. The rectory pays 2*s.* a year to the lord of the manor of Hawkesbury, which manor formerly belonged to the abbey of Pershore.

Fifty-two acres of land belong to the glebe.

The church is built in the form of an L, because the name of St. Lawrence, to whom it is dedicated, begins with that letter. It is small, with a wooden turret, in which is a clock. There are no monuments nor inscriptions worthy notice.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 11 houses, and 56 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 1. There are at present 17 families, and 72 inhabitants; and in sixteen years, beginning with 1760, the burials have been 20: so that the proportion of annual burials to the whole inhabitants, is as 1 to 58, which shews the place to be remarkably healthy.

D I M M O C K.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Botloe, in the forest division, almost at the extremity of the county next Herefordshire; eleven miles north from Mitchel-Dean, thirteen west from Tewkesbury, and seventeen north-west from Gloucester.

It is a large parish, situated in the vale, and but little frequented by travellers, wherefore the roads are exceedingly deep and foundrous. Sir Robert Atkyns supposes that antiently it was covered with wood, and that the name may be resolved into two Saxon words, Dim, obscure, and Aac, oak; as if it was so called on account of the place being darkened with oaks. If the reader should dislike this etymology, he may take a conjecture of my own, or reject both at pleasure. I suppose the name to be originally British, and to be corrupted from Ty-Môcb, which signifies the swineberd's house, and being the first that was built in the place, gave name to it; as Newent took its name from a new inn which was the first house in that place, built there for the convenience of travellers.

As it lies in the neighbourhood of Herefordshire, so the people here, like the inhabitants of that fine county, cultivate orcharding, and make a rich kind of cyder and perry. And it is very remarkable, that it was from the Ryelands in this parish, that king Edward took the sheep which he presented to the Spanish monarch, from the breed of which we are now supplied with wool for our finest manufactures.

It is watered by the river Leden, which passes by and gives name to the town of Ledbury in Herefordshire, about six miles north of this village.

and empties itself into the Severn near Gloucester. Dimmock has more pasture than arable land. The oak-tree delights in a deep soil, and grows with uncommon vigour here. There are two large woods of oak, and great numbers of fine trees lie dispersed in the meadows and pasture grounds. The arable-lands are planted with fruit-trees, with large intervals between the rows; and there are several thousand hogheads of cyder and perry made in this parish in a good year.

Cyder being a principal object, they give great attention to the culture of fruit-trees, stirring the earth about the roots of them when the fields lie fallow; but the foul appearance of their corn fields manifests a want of skill, or of industry, in that department. They know nothing of watering their meadows, as practised about Cirencester, and are negligent in draining the wet lands, both which would make prodigious improvements. However the soil is so exceedingly rich, that this, and two or three of the adjoining parishes, may vie with any district of the same extent in the county.

When the fruit-trees are in full blossom, the appearance of this plantation from some elevated spot is inconceivably fine. It has been compared to a garden overspread with flowers; but the utmost stretch of verbal description would produce an idea very inadequate to the beauty of this flowery landscape.

Dimmock was formerly privileged with markets and fairs, which were let to farm to the inhabitants to H. 3. according to the records. And to add to its consequence, it is said that one of the Bohuns, earls of Hereford, built a castle here; but there are no vestiges remaining, except the castle-rock and the castle-tump. The tump is a round mount on the borders of the parish next Newent, grown up by hands, with an area at top, by much too small for a building of any great strength. The market failing from difficulty of access, or other disadvantages in situation, many houses were deserted and fell to ruin, of which the antient foundations have been found in the fields above a quarter of a mile from the church, with paved causeys, &c. There is a place near the church called the Back of St. Clement's; and the Butcher's-row, or Butcher's-lane, occurs in the court-rolls of the manor; whence it appears that the town was formerly much larger than the village is at present.

Dimmock was ever remarkable for hospitality. The lords of the manors, and other proprietors of the best estates, (and there have been, and still are, very considerable land-holders here) used to reside in the parish, and their houses were open to all comers; and tho' some have now left it, yet the same convivial old English spirit remains with this generous, hospitable people.

Roger Dimmock, a Dominican frier, and D.D. at Oxford, was a native of this place, and a person of such singular learning, that the university chose him for their disputant against Wickliff's doctrines. He flourished in 1390. And Robert Burhill, a profound and judicious scholar, and editor of many learned works, was also a native of this parish. He assisted sir Walter Raleigh in writing the History of the World, and died in 1641.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor is part of the antient demesnes of the crown, the privileges whereof are briefly mentioned pp. 66, 67. In Domesday-book are the following particulars:

' King Edward held Dimoch in Botelau hundred. There were twenty hides, and two plow-tillages in demean, and forty-two villeins, and ten bordars, and eleven free men [coliberti] having forty-one plow-tillages. There is a priest having twelve acres, and four radechenisters with four plow-tillages. There is a wood three miles long and one broad.

' The sheriff paid what he pleased for this manor in the time of king Edward.

' King William held it in his demesnes four years. Earl William and his son Roger had it afterwards, the men of the county know not how. It now pays 21*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 69.

Roger and his two brothers dying without issue male, the manor of Dimmock came to Roger earl of Hereford, who gave the demcans thereof, and half the wood, to the abbey of Flaxley which he had founded. But he and his four brothers, Walter, Mahel, Henry, and William, dying without issue, their inheritance came to their three sisters, of whom Margery the eldest was married to Humphry de Bohun, who, in right of his wife, had the manor of Dimmock, of which Humphry their son died seized 33 H. 2. Henry de Bohun, son of Humphry, was created earl of Hereford 1 Joh. and had the Tertium Denarium Comitatus granted to him, in consideration that he had released all his right in Dimmock to the king, the same year.

In the reign of king H. 6. the sheriff of the county would charge the freeholders of Dimmock with contribution to pay the wages of the knights of the shire, which occasioned the following writ:

Henry, by the grace of God, king of England, and France, and lord of Ireland, to all and singular sheriffs, mayors, bailiffs, constables, officers, and other our liege people, as well within liberties as without, to whom these presents shall come, greeting: Whereas by the antient and approved custom of our realm of England, the inhabitants and tenants of the antient demesnes of the crown of England were wont, throughout the said kingdom, to be excused from tolls, and the expences of knights of the shire who come to our parliaments, and to the parliaments of our progenitors formerly kings of England. And whereas it appears by the certificate of our treasurer and chancellor, transmitted into our chancery by our command, and which is still remaining on the files of our chancery, that the inhabitants and tenants of the town of Dimmock in the county of Gloucester are of the antient demesnes of the crown: We therefore command, that in pursuance to the custom aforesaid, you acquit and discharge them from the payment of toll, and from contribution towards the expences of the knights of the shire which shall come to our parliaments, or to the parliaments of any of our heirs.

The king granted Dimmock to Walter de Clifford the younger, brother to Fair Rosamond, who died seized thereof, with markets, fairs, a wood, and other appurtenances 6 H. 3. And it appears by the account of Walter de Burg that this manor paid yearly to the king 63*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* 23 H. 3.

Morgan de Kerlynn held this manor 30 H. 3. and the king granted it to Ela countess of Warwick, after the death of her husband, for her better support, 36 H. 3. But she surrendered it afterwards, for William de Grandison proved his right to courts leet and free warren in Dimmock, in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. He had been a domestic servant to Edmond earl of Lancaster, and was summoned as a peer to parliament. He married Sybil, younger daughter and coheirs of John de Tregoz, with whom he had a large estate, particularly Lydiard in Wiltshire, which from his wife's family was called Lydiard-Tregoz, the seat of the present lord viscount Bolingbroke.

Peter Grandison, son of William, died seized of Dimmock 32 E. 3. as did John de Grandison, brother to Peter, 43 E. 3. to whom sir Thomas Grandison his nephew succeeded, and died without issue 49 E. 3.

The manor now became divided among several owners Sir Roger de Beauchamp was seized of a rent issuing out of it, and Catherine widow of Robert Todenham held the 4th part of it 7 R. 2. Margaret the widow of sir Thomas Grandison died seized of the third part of it 18 R. 2.

Two parts of the manor of Dimmock were held by Richard Ryhale 9 H. 4. a part by John Phelepot, esq; 13 H. 4. a fourth part by another Richard Ryhale 3 H. 5. a part by Elizabeth widow of William Ryhale 7 H. 6. a part by Richard de Montacute 8 H. 6. George Breinton, Thomas Leightfoot, Thomas Barton, and Thomas Smith were lords of Dimmock 8 H. 6. and Richard Ryhale held the manor of Dimmock 11 H. 6.

Beside the principal manor, there were two others in Dimmock, and there is no distinction made between them in the records, which accounts for the unusual fluctuation of property, as it may seem, in the principal manor.

Richard Pointz and John Langley transfer the possession of the manor of Dimmock to sir Walter Devereux 26 H. 6. Richard Oldcastle had a right in the manor 31 H. 6. Four parts of the manor of Dimmock were granted to sir Walter Devereux and Elizabeth his wife 32 H. 6. The manor continued in the Devereuxes, lords Ferrers, during the reigns of E. 4. H. 7. and H. 8.

Letitia countess of Leicester was seized of this manor 23 Eliz. Giles Forster, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608. Edward-Pye Chamberlain was proprietor of it in 1712, and another gentleman of the same name sold it to Mrs. Anne Cam, who is the present lady of the manor, and has a handsome seat called the Bois, and above 1000*l.* a year in this parish, but she resides in London.

Her arms are,

Mr. Chamberlain's arms are, Gules, an escutcheon between eight mullets argent.

Mune was antiently a manor within the manor of Dimmock. It was granted to William de Gammage 1 Joh. whose son Jeffery de Gammage dying 37 H. 3. left Elizabeth his only daughter and heir, married first to John Penbrug, and afterwards to Walter Pedewardin, who proved their right to free warren and other privileges in the manor of Mune in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. John Penbrugg, son and heir to Elizabeth by her first husband, held this manor 29 E. 1. as did Edward his brother 34 E. 1. and William de Penbrugg 11 E. 2. & 16 E. 3. Henry Penbrugg held Gammage-hall 36 E. 3. as did John Penbrugg 50 E. 3. and Sybil his widow, married afterwards to Ralph de Staunton, died seized of it in dower 9 R. 2. Walter Penbrugg died seized of the manor of Gammage-hall, and left Elizabeth his only daughter and heirs, married to sir Rowland Moreton, who died 1 Mar. and left Richard Moreton his son and heir.

Thomas Wenman died seized of the Old Grange of Dimmock, and of Dimmock Little, alias Gammage-hall, 1582, and left Richard his son nineteen years old. William Wintour died seized of the manor, rectory, and advowson of Dimmock Little, 1627, of which his son Giles, who married Alice Caerwardine, widow, died seized in 1629, leaving a son William four years old. Wenman Winniat, esq; was lord of the manor of Little Dimmock at the beginning of this century. The manor place of Gammage-Hall hath lately been purchased by Mr. Richard Hall, but the manerial rights are reserved by the reverend Mr. Winniat, (a direct descendant of Wenman Winniat, esq;) who has a very good estate here. His arms (as on a family monument in the church) are, Sable, on a fesse argent, between three anchors Or, a dragon gules. The old Grange and new Grange, having belonged to the abbey of Flaxley, are exempt from tithes.

It hath been already observed, that the abbey of Flaxley had a grant of the demesnes of the manor of Dimmock, which in process of time were reputed a manor; and after the dissolution of religious foundations, were granted as such to sir Anthony Kingston. Sir John Lutterel had livery of Dimmock demesnes granted to him 1 Eliz.

Other records shew, that John Handborough and Maud his wife levied a fine of lands in Ketford in Dimmock 36 H. 6. and that John Garrin levied a fine of lands in Dimmock 2 E. 4.

The estate belonging to the White-house is the rectory, formerly the property of Mr. Wintour. It is worth about 500*l.* a year, and now belongs to Miss Lambert, a minor.

Mr. Lambert has the Lintrige, which belongs to Mr. Wall, and a good estate in this parish.

John Cam, of Hereford, M. D. has a large estate here, of which the Pounds is the chief, and has long been in his family.

Mr. Richard Hill, of the Pithouse, has a very good estate here. The castle-rock and the castle-tump-house are both Mr. Hill's. The house called the Callow is Mr. Yate's, and another called the Green-house belongs to Mr. Hankins. Mr. James Cooper has also a good estate here. There are many other freehold estates in the parish, not here particularly mentioned; besides estates of inheritance to a great amount, held according to the custom of the manor.

HAMLETS. There are three hamlets in this large parish, which all meet in the church-yard; and it is remarkable that the families are buried in that part of it belonging to the respective divisions in which they lived.

1. Ledington, (lying on the river Leden) in which there is a tithingman. The account from Domesday-book which sir Robert Atkyns placed to his tithing, belongs to the parish of Upleaden.

2. Ryeland, (so called, because being a sandy soil, it was formerly thought unfit to be planted with any thing but rye) in which are two tithingmen, one belonging to the tithing of the same name, the other to Ockington, in this hamlet. The manor of Rye was held by Robert Attgreen and Maud his wife for their lives, of Henry duke of Lancaster, 14 E. 3. This manor was granted to the archbishop of Canterbury and several other great persons in trust 3 H. 5. And the manor, late parcel of the dutchy of Lancaster, was granted to Charles earl of Devonshire 1 Jac.

3. Woodend, which has a distinct tithingman.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the forest deanery, worth 60*l.* a year, paid out of the impropriation. Miss Lambert is patroness; Mr. Hayward the present incumbent. The church and advowson were granted to the abbey of Corneille in Normandy, by the king, 56 H. 3.

The impropriation, worth 500*l.* a year, belongs (as before observed) to Miss Lambert, a minor. She pays 40*s.* a year to the crown.

The church is built in the form of a cross. It is dedicated to the virgin Mary, and has a low tower at the west end, and a small wooden spire.

There was a chantry in the church, dedicated to the virgin Mary, whereof John Wood was the last incumbent. A pasture ground, late belonging to it, at Scarborough-bridge, and lands called Portland, were granted to sir William Ryder 7 Jac.

A house and orchard in Dimmock, which belonged to the chantry of the Holy Trinity in Dodington, were granted to sir Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 250 houses, and about 1000 inhabitants, whereof 40 were freeholders; yearly births 28, burials 27. Having examined the parish register, I find that, beginning with the year 1700, the average of baptisms is 26, of burials 19; and that in seven years, beginning with 1768, the average of baptisms is 34, of burials 26; and the number of inhabitants is now about 1116, which is nearly in the proportion of 43 to 1 of the annual burials.

LIES in the lower division of the hundred of Grumbaldsh, ten miles north of Bath, thirteen east from Bristol, and thirty southward from Gloucester.

It is situated on the verge of the vale, and secured from the bleak easterly winds by the high lands of Tormarton, with old Sodbury hill to the north of it.

Sir William Codrington has a seat here, seen through a vista, at the distance of about five or six hundred yards to the right from the road which leads from Gloucester to Bath. Tho' the house is not in the modern taste, it is large and handsome. There are two very beautiful pieces of water, one above the other, in the front, with the finest lawn about it that can be conceived, interspersed with venerable oaks and other forest trees, rising to the view from the house in a most exquisite landscape.

The spring which supplies those pieces of water rises just above, and is the head of the river Froome, which runs to Bristol Back, so called from being Saxon, a river; where the key of that port was dug in the year 1247. Before that time, Bristol key, or port, was near St. Mary-port-street, which was so called upon that account.

The Romans left vestiges behind them of their presence in this village; for Leland (Itin. v. 6.) relates, that several earthen pots (I suppose what we now call urns) very finely flourished in the Roman times, were dug out of the ground in Dodington field, in one of which were Roman coins; and further, that there was a glass containing bones, found in a sepulchre in the highway by the church; but omits to say when these things were discovered.

The Orchis Apifera, or Bee Orchis, with other species of that plant, is found growing in this parish. And the Circea, or Inchanter's Nightshade, grows plentifully here.

This parish is within the jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Gloucester.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Roger de Berchelai holds Dodintone in Hedredestan hundred. There are three hides, and two parts of half a hide. Aluvin held it in the time of king Edward. In demean is one plow-tillage, and seven villeins, and four bordars with four plow-tillages. There are four servi, and ten acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 3*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 75.

' The bishop of St. Laud in Constance holds Dodintone in Edredestan hundred, and Roger holds it of him. Ulnod held it in the time of king Edward. There is one hide and a half, and the third part of half a hide. In demean is one plow-tillage, and four villeins, and one bordar with one plow-tillage. There are three servi. It is worth and was worth 30*s.*' D. B. p. 71.

Thus it appears that in the time of king Edward the Confessor, Dodington was held by two different proprietors, who were both dispossessed of their estates soon after the conquest. Part of it was given to Roger de Berkeley, who was also tenant of the other part under the bishop. But that family soon became possessed of the whole in their own right, which they held of the honour of Gloucester, as appears by the records of 47 H. 3. 21 E. 3. and 4 H. 4. It was held by William de Berkeley 5 E. 3. by John Berkeley of Dursley 19 & 22 E. 3. by sir Nicholas Berkeley, his son together with one messuage and two yard-lands in the same place, 6 R. 2.

Maud, widow of Robert de Cantelupe, and daughter and surviving heir of sir John de Berkeley was seized of this manor 4 H. 4. as was Margare the widow of sir John Blaket 8 H. 5. Richard Chedder had married the daughter and heiress of Robert de Cantelupe, by whom he had a daughter and heiress married to Thomas Wekys, who in her right was seized of Dodington 13 E. 4. John Wekys, son of Thomas, married Maud, daughter of Walter Langley of Siddington Langley, and was succeeded by his son Edward, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Norton. Nicholas Wekys, son of Edward, married Elizabeth daughter of sir Robert Pointz, and died seized of Dodington 5 Mar. John Wekys, son of Nicholas, married a daughter of sir Thomas Danvers, of Dancy in Wiltshire, and dying before his father, livery of the manor of Dodington was granted to Robert Wekys, son of John, 5 Mar. He built the large house at Dodington, and afterwards sold the estate to Giles Codrington.

Giles Codrington was descended from Robert Codrington of Didmarton. Thomas Codrington a younger son of Robert, married Elizabeth daughter of sir Robert Pointz, by whom he had Ambrose Codrington, who married Mary, daughter and heiress of Lawrence Test, and died 6 H. 6. Francis Codrington, son and heir of Ambrose married Margaret, daughter and heir of — Stripman. Giles Codrington, son of Francis, was the purchaser of Dodington, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Arthur Porter. His son Richard Codrington married Joyce, daughter of John Burlace; and Samuel Codrington, son of Richard married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Stephen of Sodbury. Thomas Codrington, son of Samuel married Hester, daughter of — Plummer, and dying in 1675, was succeeded by Samuel Codrington his son and heir, who sold the manor of Dodington to his kinsman Christopher Codrington son of Christopher, who gained a large estate in the West-Indies. He died governor of the Leeward Islands, and disposed of large sums of money in charity. By his will, dated Feb. 22, 1702, he gave 10,000*l.* to All-Souls College in Oxford, of which he was a fellow; 6000*l.* part thereof, was to build a library, the remainder for books, and he gave his own valuable library to furnish it. He also settled a large revenue for propagating the Christian knowledge in foreign parts.

He left the manor of Dodington to his kinsman William Codrington, who was created a baron by patent, whose son sir William Codrington baronet, is the present lord of this manor. His arms are, Argent, a fess sable between three lions passant gules.

A small manor, with the rectory of Dodington, belonged to the abbey of Keynsham in Somersetshire, and after its dissolution, was granted to sir Richard Long 30 H. 8.

Other lands in Dodington belonged to the priory of Black Canons at Bradenstoke in Wiltshire, and were granted to John Wiley and John Scudamore 37 H. 8.

Amicia la Walsh was seized of one messuage and one yard-land in Dodington and Oldbury 8 E. 2. Anthony Walsh died seized of lands in Dodington 4 Eliz. leaving Nicholas Walsh of Olveston his brother and heir.

John Stanshaw, esq; was seized of lands in Dodington 12 E. 4. and John and Humphry, his sons, levied a fine of them 12 H. 7.

John Cotherington and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Dodington 49 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Lawkesbury, worth about 100*l.* a year. Sir William Codrington is patron; Mr. Blifs the present incumbent. The abbat of Gloucester was patron in the year 1500.

The church is small, dedicated to the virgin Mary, with a low tower at the west end; and there is a vault under the chancel, which is the burying-place of the Codrington family.

DORSINGTON

LIES in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftsgate, seven miles distant north-east from Evesham in Worcestershire, four west from Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire, and thirty-one north-east from Gloucester.

Sir Robert Atkyns derives the name from Dorsum, Latin for the back; this place being situated, says he, on the back or ridge of an hill. But sir Robert's etymology is not founded on fact, for Dorsington lies in a flat vale country, at a considerable distance from any hill.

Great part of the parish is common field. The roads are very bad, and as stone is scarce, the few houses in this village are either brick or wattled.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Roger de Belmont holds Dorsintune in Ceolfled hundred, and Robert holds it of him. There are ten hides. Saxi held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins with five plow-tillages, and six servi. It was worth 8*l.* It is now worth 100*s.* Domesday-book, p. 75.

From Roger de Belmont this estate descended through the several generations of the earls of Warwick, precisely as it is related of the manor of Chedworth, 'till it came to Thomas de Beauchamp, who died seized of Dorsington 2 H. 4.

But the Draytons held this manor of the earls of Warwick; for Baldwin de Drayton and Alice his wife levied a fine of Dorsington, and settled it on their son John de Drayton, 18 R 2. And William Drayton, esq; died seized of the manor of Great Dorsington 5 E. 4. as did Richard Drayton 19 E. 4.

William Watson had livery of this manor 15 Eliz. from whom it passed afterwards to George Shirley, esq; who was lord of it in the year 1608.

Thomas Rawlins, serjeant at law, was afterwards lord of this manor, who was succeeded by his son Thomas; and Thomas Rawlins, esq; a descendant from them, is the present lord of the manor of Dorsington, which comprehends the whole parish, except Braggington-farm.

Alice the widow of Thomas Paynel died seized of nine messuages, and two plow-tillages in Little Dorsington 16 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 105*l.* a year. Thomas Rawlins, esq; is patron; Mr. Martyn the present incumbent.

Three yard-lands belong to the glebe, with nine cow-pastures, 60 sheep-pastures, six horse-pastures, and pasture for a colt in the commons.

The church was rebuilt with brick in the year 1758, having been burnt down with some part of the village.

whose son Edward-Gilbert Rich had a daughter Mary, married to Robert Lawrence, of Shurdington, esq; and dying without male issue, this estate went by entail to her cousin Thomas Rich, who sold it, about the year 1774, to Mr. Van Notten of London, the present proprietor.

HAMLETS. Sandiwell and Andiford are hamlets in this parish, both held of Richard de Clare earl of Gloucester and Hertford 47 H. 3. Henry Brett, esq; sold Sandiwell in Lower Dowdeswell to lord Conway, from whose son, the earl of Hertford, it went by purchase to the late Thomas Tracy, esq; and is now the property of his widow Mrs. Tracy, before-mentioned.

William de Dowdeswell gave his demean, and two virgates and a half of land in Anneford, to the knights templers. Dugd. Mon.

Pegglesworth-farm is an estate of about 200 l. a year, belonging to Mr. Wade.

There are records which shew that John Handborough, and Thomas Bruges and Maud his wife, levied a fine of the third part of lands in Dowdeswell 36 H. 6. And that William Garrine and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands therein 2 E. 4.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 200 l. a year. Mr. Rogers is patron; Mr. John Arnold the present incumbent.

The most antient is the effigy of a man engraven on brass, which has been mistaken for an abbat of Hayles. The figure is not represented in the dress of an ecclesiastick, but in a long robe semée with mullets and fleurs-de-lis, which denote him to be of the family of Rogers.

On the table of a monument in the chancel:

DOWN-AMNEY

LIES in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, two miles north from Cricklade in Wiltshire, six south-eastward from Cirencester, and twenty-two south-eastward from Gloucester.

It is so called, because it lies down the river which runs from the other Amneys, and empties itself into the Thames at Eisey. It is a flat country, and very subject to floods from those rivers. The soil is very rich, with less pasture than arable land.

It is observable, that part of the large manor house lies in Wiltshire, part in Gloucestershire, and that a line drawn across the kitchen divides the counties. The church exhibits what is further remarkable in this little parish, wherefore I pass to the particulars

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Ednod held Omenel in Gersdon hundred in the time of king Edward. There were fifteen hides taxed, of which king Edward remitted the tax of five hides, as the county says, and afterwards Ednod paid for ten hides. There are in this manor four plow-tillages in demean, and a priest, and nineteen villeins, and three bordars, with ten plow-tillages. There are twelve servi. This manor belonged to the bishop of Baieux, and was worth 20*l*. It now pays a farm rent of 26*l*. to the king. Domesday-book, p. 69.

This record stands under the title Terra Regis.

Radulf [de Todeni] holds Omenie and Cernei in Gersdones hundred, and Roger holds them of him. There are four hides. Four thanes held them for four manors, and they could go where they pleased. In demean are ten plow-tillages, and one villein, and one bordar. There are twenty-one servi, and a mill of 5*s*. rent, and thirty acres of meadow. It was worth 10*l*. now 6*l*. Domesday-book, p. 76.

As there are four parishes in the same hundred of the name of Amney, it is very difficult to apply the accounts from Domesday-book to the respective parishes, because the manors are in nowise distinguished in that record. And, seeing no reason to the contrary, I have followed sir Robert Atkyns in placing the above abstracts to the parish of Down-Amney. If the estate in Amney, mentioned in the second abstract, belong to this parish, it is probably that which the subsequent records mention by the name of Wike, and belonged afterwards to the abbey of Cirencester. The first estate was seized by the Conqueror, and was granted by king Henry the Second, to Alice, daughter of William de Cassey; but Edmond Crouchback, earl of Lancaster, was afterwards seized of it, and 55 H. 3. granted the manor of Down-Amney to Nicholas de Valers, (afterwards written Vilers, or Villers) probably the same person with sir Nicholas de Villers, who in 1268 was in the holy war, and relinquishing his paternal coat of arms, viz. Sable, three cinquefoils argent; assumed The cross of St. George, charged with five escallop shells, being the antient badge of the croises. The said Nicholas proved his right to view of frankpledge within the manor of Down-Amney 15 E. 1.

William Cufons held one messuage and one plow-tillage called Wike in Down-Amney 7 E. 3. Sir William de Cufons died seized of the manor of Down-Amney, and of the lands in Wike 19 E. 3. John de Handelo died seized of the manor of Wike 20 E. 3. as did Edward de Handelo 32 E. 3.

Peter de Cufons and Margaret his wife levied a fine of the manor of Down-Amney 35 E. 3.

Sir Thomas Hungerford (who was the first standing speaker of the house of commons, 51 E. 3.) purchased a charter of free warren in Down-Amney 8 R. 2. He married Joan, daughter and coheir of sir Edmond Hufley, and was succeeded by his son and heir sir Walter Hungerford, lord high treasurer of England, and baron Hungerford. He married Catherine, one of the daughters and coheireffes of Thomas Peverel, and died 27 H. 6. leaving two sons, Robert and Edmond, of whom the latter married Margaret, daughter and heir of Edward Burnel, and died seized of this manor, and of Wike near Hampton-Meysey, 2 R. 3. Sir John Hungerford his son and heir died seized of Down-Amney 16 H. 8. as did sir Anthony Hungerford, son of sir John, 1 Eliz. He was succeeded in this manor by John Hungerford, his son, whose son sir John Hungerford married Mary, the daughter of sir Richard Berkeley, and died 10 Car. Sir Anthony Hungerford, his son and heir, left Bridget his only surviving daughter and heiress, who being married to Edmond Dunch, esq; carried this manor into that name and family.

Hungerford Dunch succeeded his father Edmond, and was succeeded in this manor by his son Edmond Dunch, who married the daughter of colonel Godfrey, and was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. It passed afterwards by purchase to James Craggs, esq; secretary of state, whose two surviving daughters and coheireffes were married, the one to lord Clare, the other to Mr. Elliot, who are the present lords of this manor.

William Golding and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Down-Amney 23 H. 6. as did William Lewellyn and Joan his wife 7 E. 4. A ground called Le Wike, and two other messuages, belonged to the abbey of Cirencester, and were granted to sir Anthony Hungerford 32 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, and since the augmentation, by the gifts of Dr. Godolphin and Mr. Wells, which procured the queen's bounty, it is worth about 60*l*. a year.

King Edward the First gave the church of Down-Amney to the knights templers. The patronage and impropriation belonged afterwards to the abbey of Cirencester, and were granted to Christ-church college, Oxford, 38 H. 8. where they remain. Mr. Smith is the present incumbent. The manor pays 25*l*. to the vicar, and every yard-land 5*s*.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is built in the form of a cross, with a handsome spire, and five bells, at the west end.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On the north side of the chancel, under an arch in the wall, is a fine marble tomb in the form of a coffin, with a cross engraven on it, the top of which is incircled with a wreath of olive. It has no inscription, but it is supposed to be for one of the antient patrons of the church.

In the south cross aisle, are two very antient monuments under an arch in the wall. One is the figure of a woman in freestone, lying along, with her hands in a supplicating posture. This is very much defaced and broken. The other is that of a man in black marble, well executed, and in good preservation, lying along in compleat armour; his legs are crossed, with his right hand on the hilt of his sword, as if about to draw it, and on the left arm a large shield, bearing Five escallops on a cross of St. George. These are the arms of Villers, and without doubt, the figure was intended to represent Nicholas de Villers, who had been in the holy war, and was lord of this manor in the reign of king Edward the First, as before mentioned.

There is a noble monument of marble against the wall of the north cross aisle, with a pediment supported by two Ionic pillars. Under the pediment are the figures of two knights in armour, kneeling and facing each other, with books upon a desk before them. Under the figures are two tables of black marble, on which are the following inscriptions: On the dexter table,

MORS MIHI LVCRVM.

IN THIS CHAPELL LIETH THE BODY OF ST. IOH. At the beginning of this century there were 36 houses in this parish, and about 180 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders; but the inhabitants are now increased to about 248.

DOW-N-HATHERLEY.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Dudston and King's-Barton, six miles distant south from Tewkesbury, six westward from Cheltenham, and four north-eastward from Gloucester.

It is a small parish in the vale, consisting chiefly of rich pasture ground. A small brook from Badgworth runs through it, and falls into the Severn near Sandhurst. The roads are so exceedingly deep and miry in the winter, as to deter the curious traveller from visiting it, and indeed there is nothing worthy his notice.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the general survey, it was found that Edmar, a thane, had held three manors in Dudesstan hundred, of which Athelai was one, and that he could give or sell his land to whomsoever he pleased. But Domesday-book mentions that earl Harold took away those lands, with some others, after the death of king Edward; and accordingly they stand in record under the title Terra Regis, with other lands which the Conqueror seized for his own property, as formerly belonging to Harold. See Domesday-book, p. 67.

It is uncertain how long this manor continued in the crown; but Robert Musgrofs died seized of Down-Hatherley 38 H. 3. as did his son John 3 E. 1. and Roger, son of Roger de Burghull, held it 31 E. 1.

It afterwards passed to the Willingtons, for John de Willington died seized of this manor 4 E. 2. and Ralph his son, and others, held it by one knight's fee, of the manor of Brimpsfield 1 E. 3.

Sir Thomas Brook and Joan his wife levied a fine of it 12 R. 2. and sir Thomas Brook, their son, died seized thereof 5 H. 5. as did the widow of the last sir Thomas 15 H. 6.

Fulk Grevil, second son of sir Edward Grevil, married Elizabeth, the surviving granddaughter and heir of Robert Willoughby, lord Brook, whereby the manor of Down-Hatherley came to the Grevils. This Elizabeth had two sisters, coheireffes. Anne died unmarried; Blanch was married to sir Francis Daintry, who, in her right, was seized of a third part of this manor; and by the death of Anne, had also livery of the moiety of her third part; but Blanch also dying without issue, the intire manor came to Elizabeth the wife of Fulk Grevil, who surviving his wife, died seized thereof 1 Eliz. and Fulk his son had livery 4 Eliz.

From the Grevils it passed to the Norwoods. Livery of the manor was granted to Nicholas Norwood, 14 Eliz. and Richard Norwood was lord of it in 1608. Mr. Gwinnet was proprietor of it about the beginning of this century; but Mrs. Chester is the present lady of the manor.

The records of the following dates shew, that Robert de Sauvage held lands in Down-Hatherley, 44 H. 3. as did John Attyate 41 E. 3. Fifty-five acres in Down-Hatherley were held by sir John Berkeley 6 H. 6. and by sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverstone 38 & 39 H. 6. and 19 E. 4.

Mr. Gibbs has a handsome house, and a good estate in this parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe. It is a vicarage endowed, worth about 100*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron; Mr. Barry is the present incumbent. It belonged to St. Oswald's in Gloucester 33 E. 1. and the priory of Usk hath presented to it; and so did the abbey of Gloucester in the year 1500.

The church is small, with a strong embattled tower at the west end. It is dedicated to Corpus Christi. The inscription upon a tomb in the church-yard for Henry Aisgill, vicar of this church, chancellor of St. David's, and a prebendary of Gloucester, is inserted p. 169.

D R I F F I E L D

IS a small parish in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, four miles south-eastward from Cirencester, three north-westward from Cricklade in Wiltshire, and twenty-one south-eastward from Gloucester. The parish is bounded by Latton in Wiltshire, and by the turnpike-road from Cirencester to Cricklade on the south and west. It is a strong soil, and requires judicious management; for in the winter, an infinite number of small springs break out, and spreading over the surface of the ground, infallibly destroy the crops of corn, if not carried off by proper drains.

The name was probably taken from two Saxon words, dnop, dirty, and peld, an open country; for a great part of this parish lies low and springy. The river from the upper Amneys runs thro' it to Down-Amney, by means of which the farmers water their meadow grounds. Something of this practice has been mentioned under South Cerney, but without sufficiently describing it. I will therefore take this opportunity of making a few short observations on that head.

A level is first taken from the highest part of the river, to see if the water may be carried over the highest ground in the meadow, allowing a fall of three or four inches for current in about 300 yards. A shallow trench, about four or five feet wide, (according to the size of the meadow, and quantity of water required) is then cut from the upper part of the river through the highest ground, taking care to preserve a current, and first paring off the turf to lay uppermost on each side of the trench. This is called the grand carry. From the sides of which, smaller cuts must be made, if required, with breaches in their banks, to let the water into little trenches (which must be carried up to those breaches) made by turning up the turf on one side, like the furrow of a plow; and in the sides of each of these small cuts, there must be a sufficient number of broken places to let out the water, so that by this management it may may be evenly distributed, and continually running over every part of the meadow. Lastly, from the lowest part there must be a cut or drain, to convey the water into the lowest course of the river, so that the meadow may be perfectly drained at pleasure, and no water left to stagnate. A bay must be erected across the river, to turn a sufficient quantity of water into the grand carry, and sometimes there may be occasion for bays in the large carries, to distribute the water properly into the smaller ones. In this business there are three principal objects, 1. That the water be carried over every part of the meadow if possible. 2. That it be kept every where briskly running, but so as not to cover the tops of the grass, if it can be avoided; because straining thro' the grass, it deposits the matter which makes the manure. 3. That the drains be so contrived as to clear the lowest places from water.

This operation is generally performed at the beginning of the winter, and the water kept running over the meadows 'till about the beginning of March, when it is drawn off, and the smaller carries are levelled by turning the sod into the places whence it was originally taken. The running water, during the winter, keeps the frost from nipping the blade, and vegetation is so much the stronger and earlier in the spring, that it is usual to feed off the first crop, and afterwards give the ground a watering for two or three days, about the beginning of May, and then hayne it for cutting.

If this short account of the method of drowning meadows be not sufficiently explicit to be understood by such as are not acquainted with it, for whose use it is intended, it will be worth their time and expence to make a journey of five hundred miles to get further information.

The abbat of Cirencester had a country-house in this parish, on the scite of which stands the present manor house, near the church, the seat of lord Coleraine.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Reinbald the priest holds Drifelle. Elaf held it of earl Tofti'. There are seven hides. There are fifteen servi, and a mill of 5s. rent, and twenty acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 8l. Domesday-book, p. 73.

Reinbald, or Rumbald, granted this manor, and the advowson of the church, to the college of Cirencester, of which he was dean; and they continued in the abbey of that place from its first foundation 'till its dissolution. The manor was then granted to Humphry Brown and George Brown, in exchange for lands in Waltham in Essex, 37 H. 8. Sir Humphry Brown died seized thereof 4 Eliz. and left four coheireses. Roger Townsend, who married the eldest, had livery of the fourth part of the manor, in right of his wife, 5 Eliz. One of the coheireses dying soon after, livery of the third part of the manor was granted to Mary Brown, coheires of sir Humphry, 9 Eliz. and livery of another third part was granted to Christiana Brown, coheires of sir Humphry, 14 Eliz.

Thomas Wilford, esq; was lord of the manor in 1608. It was afterwards purchased by John Hanger, a Turkey merchant. George Hanger, esq; descended from the said John, had two sons, George and John. George, the eldest son, was knighted by king William for his steady attachment to the religion and laws of his country. He married Anne, daughter and coheir of sir John Beale, of Farmingham in the county of Kent, baronet; by whom he had four sons, George, John, Gabriel, and William; and four daughters, Anne, Delicia, Jane, and Mary. Gabriel surviving his elder brothers, succeeded to the paternal estate, and was created baron Coleraine, of Coleraine in the county of Londonderry, in the year 1761. His lordship married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Richard Bond, of Cowbury in the county of Hereford, esq; by whom he had issue three sons, John, William, and George; and one daughter, Anne. His lordship died in the year 1773, and is succeeded in title and estate by his eldest son John lord Coleraine, the present lord of this manor, and proprietor of all the lands in the parish. His lordship's arms are, Ermine, a griffin rampant sigreant, parted per fess topaz and sapphire. SUPPORTERS. Two griffins segreant. MOTTO. ARTES HONORABIT.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirencester, endowed with all the tithes, and worth about 90l. a year. Lord Coleraine and Thomas Smith, esq; are patrons, and present alternately; Thomas Bray, D.D. is the present incumbent.

Twelve acres inclosed, and twenty-four acres in the common-fields belong to the glebe.

The late lord Coleraine took down the old church, and rebuilt it. The present church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a very neat building, well pewed, with a handsome altar-piece, and a small tower at the west end, in which are three bells.

^b This Tofti, or Toffi, was earl of Northumberland, and brother to king Harold. He is represented by the archdeacon of Huntington as one of the most inhuman wretches that ever lived. Taking a jealous antipathy to his brother Harold for being so well in king Edward's favour, he hastened to Hereford, where his brother had made vast preparations to entertain the king, and murdering many of the servants, put a leg, an arm, and head, into each of the vessels of liquor designed for the entertainment, sending the king word, That he had made ample provision pulled meats, but his majesty might bring other sorts with him. For this horrid villainy he was banished. But his implacable spirit sought every method of revenge against his brother: At length, when Harold came to the crown, by the death of king Edward, Tofti engaged the king of Norway to invade England in conjunction with him. And having united their fleets, they sailed up the Humber, and shortly after ranlacked York. But Harold meeting them with an army at Stamford-bridge, gave them battle (wherefore it was afterwards called Battle-bridge) and obtained the victory; in which fight Tofti and the Norwegian were both killed.

D U M B L E T O N.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Kiftgate, six miles distant southward from Evesham in Worcestershire, four north from Winchcombe, and eighteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

The brook Isbourn runs through it from Winchcombe, in its course to the Avon.

It is situated in the vale, on the north-east side of a fertile little hill, to which this parish gives name, though the greater part of the hill lies in the parishes of Beckford and Washbourn. On the side of it rises a little spring of medicinal water, whose properties have been found to be very much like the waters of Astrop-wells.

No gentleman's family is resident at Dumbleton, and part of the mansion house, the seat of the late sir Robert Cocks, has lately been taken down, to reduce it to a farm house.

Many gentlemen's seats in this county are totally deserted, and falling to ruin; and too many others, in compliance with the taste of the present age, are left by the owners for the greater part of the year, to partake more largely of the pleasures of the metropolis, and other places of public entertainment. This custom is fraught with many great evils; first to the poor inhabitants, whose pinching necessities were formerly relieved by a prudent hospitality, and whose morals might improve from the good example of their betters residing among them. But gentlemen themselves pay dearly for their diversions. How many squander what better œconomy would lay up for their children! How many spend their fortunes before they come to the possession of them! To this custom we owe that luxury and extravagance which pervade all ranks and degrees of people; that cacoethes ludendi which has spread itself over the land; that general depravity of morals which bids defiance to our laws, and endangers the state. This observation arose from reading an inscription in the parish church here, where hospitality and residence in the country are mentioned with commendation. And tho' the remark is not in the least applicable to Dumbleton, the manor-house becoming void by the death of the whole family, yet it stands under this head with some propriety, that is, to avoid particular application.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

King Athelstan, in the year 931, gave Swinford, and Sanford, and Dumelton, in the county of Gloucester, to the abbey of Abingdon, when Cinath was abbat. Stevens's Supp. to the Monast. v. 1. p. 507. But it appears that there was a dispute soon afterwards, about the right to this manor; for Wulfric Spot, an earl of Mercia, gave it to Elfric, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year 1004, from which see it had been withheld, as alledged, by the church of Abingdon; but that church held it at the time of the general survey, as appears by the record.

'The church of St. Mary of Abendune holds Dubentone in Gretestan hundred. There are seven hides and a half. In demean are four plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, and eight bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There are six servi, and a mill of 6s. rent. In the time of king Edward it was worth 12l. now 9l. This manor paid tax in the time of king Edward.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

But there was then another estate in this parish of smaller value, of which the following are particulars:

'William Goizenboded holds one hide in Dubentone in Gretestan hundred. Sauuin held it in the time of king Edward, and could go where he would. It was worth 20s. now 12s.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

The abbey of Abingdon held this manor till that house was dissolved; and the abbat proved his right to free warren and other privileges 15 E. 1.

The manor and advowson of Dumbleton, after the dissolution of abbeyes, were granted to Thomas lord Audley, and to sir Thomas Pope, in exchange for the manor of Laver-Marney in Essex, 34 H. 8. and the manor was confirmed to sir Thomas Pope 36 H. 8.

Edmond Hutchins, esq; was afterwards lord of this manor. He married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Cocks of Cleeve, who was a younger branch of a family of that name of Cocks-Hall in Kent, and lived in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. This Edmond Hutchins, by his will, gave his estate to Dorothy his wife, whereby it came into her family. She was afterwards married to sir Charles Percy; but leaving no issue by him, Charles Cocks, her brother, succeeded to this estate, and sir Richard Cocks, baronet, second son of Richard Cocks, of Castle-ditch in Herefordshire, esq; and grandson of Thomas Cocks of of Cleeve, succeeded his relation, Charles Cocks, in the manor of Dumbleton. He married Susanna, daughter of Ambrose Elton, of the Hasle in Herefordshire, esq; and was created a baronet in 1666. Richard Cocks, esq; eldest son of sir Richard, married Mary, daughter of sir Robert Cook of Highnam, and died before his father.

Sir Richard Cocks, son and heir of Richard, married Frances, daughter of Richard Nevell, of Bickingbeer in Berkshire, esq; and was elected knight of the shire in three successive parliaments in the reign of king William the Third. He married secondly Mary, daughter of William Bethell, of Swindon in Yorkshire, esq; but died without issue by either wife. He was succeeded in title and estate by his brother Robert Cocks, D.D. who married Mrs. Anne Fulks, of Oxford, by whom he had several sons and daughters; and dying in the year 1735-6, was succeeded by his fourth son Robert. Sir Robert Cocks married Elizabeth, daughter of James Cholmeley, of Easton in the county of Lincoln, esq; by whom he had issue several sons and daughters. He died by a fall from his horse, in the year 1765, and leaving no male issue, the title is extinct, and the estate devolved to Charles Cocks, esq; of Castle-ditch in Herefordshire, the present proprietor.

John Daston was seized of lands in Dumbleton 6 E. 4. probably the same which William Goizenboded held at the general survey, and which afterwards, in respect to the large estate held by the abbey, was called Littleton. Anthony Daston levied a fine of lands in Dumbleton 1 E. 6. Another Anthony Daston died seized of lands in Dumbleton, called Littleton's-fields, 12 C. 1. and left Richard his son twelve years old.

A meadow in Dumbleton, called Dockham, belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and was granted to Clement Throckmorton, and Alexander Avening, 37 H. 8. And a portion of tithes in Dumbleton belonged to the abbey of Evesham, and was granted to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 200*l.* a year. The lord of the manor is patron; the reverend John-Baghot De-Bere is the present incumbent.

Part of the parish is an impropriation, belonging to Trinity college in Oxford, worth 10*l.* a year, which the rector pays 10*s.* a year. The parish has a claim to a fellowship in that college.

Three little closes, and about seventy acres of tithable, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It has a cross aisle on the south side, and a cross aisle on the north side, which formerly belonged to the Dastons, where several of them lie buried. It has a tower at the west end, with six bells.

The lord of the manor repairs the church. Jesus College, Oxford, repairs the north aisle.

Against the north wall of the chancel, is a monument with the figures of a man and woman kneeling, and this inscription :

On the table of a handsome marble monument,

In Memory of St. Richard Cocks, Bar: and of Dame Susanna his Wife: He was the 2^d Son of Richard Cocks, of Castle-Ditch in the County of Hereford, Esq; and of Judith his Wife, Daughter and Coheir of John Elliott, Esq^r. She was the 5th Daughter of Ambrose Elton, of the Hasle in the County of Hereford, Esq; and of Ann his Wife, Daughter of St. Edward Aston, of Tixall in the County of Stafford. He, in his younger Days, accompanied his Uncle Christopher Cocks, (Who was honoured by King James the First with a public Character) into Muscovy, and after his return, he retired into the Country, and was concerned with no Publick matters more then the offices of Justice of the Peace and Highsheriffe. She was a Lady distinguished by very great ornaments of Mind and Body, the visible remains of which continued with her to her last hour. They kept good Hospitality, loved their Tenants and Neighbours, and on all occasions did them all the service they could. He liv'd peaceably with them, and kept them in peace one with another. She healed their diseases, and cured their sores. He was a great sufferer for his love to the Royal Family, and for his zeale for the Laws, and for the established Religion of his Country. They were indulgent Parents, good to their Servants, and charitable to the Poor. They gave their Children good fortunes and liberal education. They had three Sons, Richard, Charles, and John: and two Daughters, Judith and Elizabeth. But John the younger, and Elizabeth the reliēt of St. John Fust, of Hill in this County, Bar: only survived them. She, out of a just remembrance and gratitude to so good Parents, and believing the memory of them would be grateful to their Neighbours, ordered her brother John Cocks to erect this Monument for them. He died September 16, A.D. 1684, aged 82. She died March 10th A. D. 1689, aged 84.

Arms, Baron and femme, 1. Cocks, 2. Paly of six Or and gules, over all on a bend sable three mullets of the first, for Elliott.

On a plain marble table,

To the happy Memory of M^{rs}. Dorothy Cocks. She died the 29th Day of October, 1714, in the 58th Year of her Age, & lies inter'd inter'd in y^e Chancel, near the Communion Table. She was Eldest Child of Richard Cocks, Esq^r. & of Mary his Wife, the youngest daughter of S^r. Robert Cooke, of Hynam, by his first Wife; her Father and her Mother both died when she was about 14 years old. She was of a middle stature, endowed with great ornaments of Body, & with far greater of the mind. She was a woman of a very good and compassionate nature, of a great understanding, & made a very good use of it. She chose rather to be a Mother to her younger Sisters, then to be engaged in another family; & by her care and good instructions she helped to breed them up in piety & religion, and other necessary knowledge. Envy itself can't charge her with an unbecoming action or expression in her whole life. She was a woman of great piety, patience, and humanity: She spent great part of her life in her devotions & prayers for herself, her friends, and country. She bore a tedious sickness, and other misfortunes that attended her infirm body, with all cheerfulness & resignation: she made use of her time & fortune, not only to serve her friends and relations, but even strangers, that were distressed: therefore S^r. Richard Cocks, her Eldest brother, out of a gratefull remembrance of these virtues, has chose rather to set up this true and just Epitaph then a magnificent Monument, with an intention to make her family blush when they deviate from such a president; and that they & others may imitate her Example in this world, & be happy wth her in y^e next.

Sic Vovet R. C.

In the south aisle, on the table of a very neat monument of white marble:

Elizabeth, Wife of S^r. Robert Cocks, Bar^t. and Daughter of James Cholmeley, Esq; of Easton in the County of Lincoln, with three of her Children, Charles, Ann, & Catherine, were carried successively by the same fatal Sickneſs, a Fever and Sore throat, to the Grave, in a few Days. A most excellent and amiable Mother. The two youngest in the brightest dawn of Hope, the Eldest in the sweetest bloom of Virtue, growing up like the fairest Flowers, like the fairest Flowers were cut down. This Place where they sleep is marked out by the unfeigned grief of a Husband, mixt with the Tears and unflattering Praise of Surviving Friends: Unhappy in being Survivors, unless they tread in the same blameless Steps: Happy, could they, by keeping her in Remembrance, reach the same shining Heights of Loveliness, Virtue, and Religion.

Benefactions.

Mrs. Dorothy Cocks, by her will, gave 40s. a year for teaching children to read. And Mr. Richard Cocks, by his will, in 1728, gave an estate in Tainton, worth 21l. a year, part for putting a poor boy out apprentice, the remainder to be given to the poor of this parish not receiving alms.

DUNTESBOURN ABBATS

LIES five miles north-eastward from Cirencester, ten southward from Cheltenham, and twelve south-eastward from Gloucester. Part of it is in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, and the other part in that of Rapsgate.

This is sometimes called Upper Dunteshourn. It consists mostly of arable land, and lies on the south-west side of the Irminstreet, a Roman road, already described under Daglingworth, and other places.

A small boorn, or brook, rises in this parish, and joins the Churn at Cirencester. It is most likely that the manor was very antiently the property of one Dun, or Dunt, whose name, with the genitive or possessive ending, Dunte's, is very discernible in that of the parish. Abbats, the cognomen, was afterwards given it for a like reason, because it was the property of the abbat of Gloucester, and served to distinguish it from the other Dunteshourns.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' The wife of Walter de Laci, by the licence of king William, gave the manor of Dunteshourn in Cirecestre hundred, consisting of five hides, to saint Peter [the abbey of Gloucester] for the [good of the] soul of her husband. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, with five plow-tillages. There are sixteen servi, and a mill of 2s. rent. It is worth 4l. D. B. p. 71.

' Ansfrid de Cormeille holds one hide in Tanteshorne in Cirecestre hundred. Elmer held it for a manor, and could go where he would. In demean is one plow-tillage, and one villein, and two bordars, and five ancilla. It was worth 40s. and is now worth 20s. D. B. p. 78.

In the year 1100, Gilbert de Eskcot gave lands in Dunteshourn to Gloucester monastery, to pray for the soul of Walter de Laci.

Odo de Mara granted to Jordan, the son of Isaac of Cirencester, lands in Dunteshourn, 1 Joh.

Over Dunteshourn was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.

This manor was held by the abbey of Gloucester till that house was dissolved, and was granted afterwards to William Morgan and James Dolle 5 Mar. James Dolle died seized of it 42 Eliz. and left Anthony Dolle his son and heir 40 years old. Mr. Edward Dolle was lord of the manor in the year 1608. The earl of Radnor is the present lord of the manor. For his arms, see Pucklechurch.

Richard Murdac gave one hide in Dunteshourn to the priory of Lanthony, which was confirmed 1 Joh. Lands in Bockham in Dunteshourn were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple 35 H. 8. which formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony near Gloucester; and two messuages and lands in Dunteshourn, formerly belonging to the same priory, were granted to Richard Andrews and George Hifley 36 H. 8.

HAMLET. Duntesbourn-Lyre is a hamlet in this parish, so called, because it was the property of the abbey of Lyre, or de Lira, in Normandy. This hamlet lies in the hundred of Rapsigate.

The church of St. Mary of Lire holds Tantesborne in Respiget hundred. There is one hide and one yard-land. In demean is one plow-tillage, and two bordars. It is worth and was worth 20s. Roger de Laci gave this land to that church. Edmer held it in the time of king Edward. Domesday-book, p. 72.

Roger de Laci holds Tantesborne in Respigete hundred, and Gislebert holds it of him. Keneuard, a thane of king Edward, held it, and could go where he would. There are two hides. In demean is one plow-tillage, and two villeins, and two bordars with one plow-tillage and a half. There are two servi. It is and was worth 40s. Domesday-book, p. 75.

Ansfrid de Cormeille holds two yard-lands and a half in Dantesborne in Respigete hundred, and Bernard holds them of him. Elmer held them for a manor, and could go where he would. There is one bordar. It is worth and was worth 40s. Ansfrid had the above of Walter de Laci when he took his niece. D. B. p. 78.

Chetel holds three yard-lands and a half in Dantesborne in Respiget hundred, and he held them in the time of king Edward. There is one plow-tillage, and two bordars, and two servi. It was worth 10s. and is now worth 15s. Domesday-book, p. 79.

Nutebean-farm, in Duntesbourn-Lyre, belonged to the abbey of Cirencester, and was granted to William Sherington 34 H. 8. Thomas Pleydall was seized of the scite of the manor of Duntesbourn-Lyre, and of a capital messuage called Nutbeame-farm, alias Nutbeane in Duntesbourn-Lyre, of which he levied a fine 32 Eliz. to the use of John Pleydall and his heirs in fee taille.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth 90l. a year. The advowson of the rectory of Over Duntesbourn was granted to Esme Stewart, lord Aubeny 8 Jac.

The advowson of the rectory is in trust for the use of the reverend Mr. Joseph Chapman's children. Mr. Chapman himself is the present incumbent.

No lands in the parish are tithe free. By an agreement made between the bishop of the diocese and the rector, in the year 1681, the latter is to pay 20s. a year to the poor on Palm-sunday, in lieu of a calf, and other entertainment, formerly given to the parishioners on that day. And the poor of this parish are intitled to a fourth share of the rent of Bull-bank close, given by the will of Mr. Thomas Muggleton, to be distributed to them on Good-friday.

The church is small, dedicated to St. Peter.

There were 42 houses and about 180 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 12 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. Atkyns. But it appears by the register, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 55 baptisms, and 30 burials; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 43, burials 26; and the inhabitants are 176; almost 68 to 1 of the annual burials.

DUNTESBOURN ROUS.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Crowthorn and Minety, one mile lower on the Bourn, and nearer to Cirencester, than Duntesbourn Abbats, wherefore it is sometimes called Lower Duntesbourn. And because the knightly family of the Rouses were antiently proprietors of it, their name was added for the cognomen, and sometimes their title, as Duntesbourn Militis, in contradistinction to Duntesbourn Abbatis, the preceding parish, where the rest is sufficiently explained.

A small brook parts this parish from Edgworth, and runs into the From river, which goes to Stroud. The lands are chiefly arable.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

William de Ow holds Duntesborne in Cirecestre hundred. Alestan held it in the time of king Edward. There are five hides and a half taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and six villeins, and four bordars with five plow-tillages and a half. There are seven servi, and a mill of 8s. Radulf holds this manor of William, and pays tax; but he witholds the tax of three hides. A foreigner [francigena] holds half a hide of this land, and has one plow-tillage there with his men. The whole in the time of king Edward was worth 10l. and is now worth 8l. Domesday-book, p. 73.

Durand the sheriff holds two hides in Duntesborne in Cirecestre hundred, and Radulf holds them of him. Wluuard held them for a manor of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and three villeins, and one bordar with one plow-tillage. There are four servi, and two acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 40s. Domesday-book, p. 76.

Soon after the Norman conquest, this manor became the property of John Rufus. This is the same same name with le Rous and le Rus. They were so called from having red hair, as the Blonds or Blounts obtained their name from having white hair, and a fair complexion. Roger le Rous held one yard-land in Duntelburn 22 E. 1. as did John le Rous in the reign of king Edward the Second, when he was attainted for rebellion; but his lands were restored 1 E. 3.

This manor afterwards passed into the family of Mull. Thomas Mull and William Mull were attainted 2 E. 4. and the manor granted by the crown to Thomas Herbert and to his heirs male 2 & 5 E. 4. which Thomas dying without male heirs, the manor was granted to sir Richard Beauchamp 14 E. 4. It was afterwards purchased by Dr. Fox, bishop of Winchester, in the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and by him settled on Corpus Christi College in Oxford, which was founded by him; and it now belongs to that college.

HAMLET. Pinbury is a hamlet, lying part in this parish, and part in that of Edgworth. It is an antient manor, and has a park situated on high ground, with a camp in the midst, whence it obtained the above name, which is composed of pen, the top, and beorg, a camp or fortification. There was a large manor-house in the park, where a branch of the Atkyns family resided; but the park is converted to a coney-warren, the house gone to decay, and some of it taken down. There was also an antient chapel in this hamlet, with several houses, of which the old foundations are still to be seen. In Domesday-book we read thus of the manor:

‘The church of the nuns of the holy Trinity of Cadom holds Penneberie in Cirecestre hundred of the king. There are three hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and one artificier [faber] with three plow-tillages. There are nine servi, and a mill of 40d. rent. It was worth and is now worth 4l.’ D. B. p. 72.

The abbess of Caen proved her right to court leet and free warren in Pendebury, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

After the suppression of foreign monasteries, the manor was granted to the nuns of Sion in Middlesex; and after the general dissolution of religious foundations, it was again granted, with Avening, Hampton, &c. to Andrew lord Windsor, in exchange for Stanway, &c. in Middlesex, 34 H. 8. who dying, his son had livery thereof 35 H. 8. Sir Henry Pool purchased it of lord Windsor. Sir Henry Pool, grandson of that sir Henry, sold it to sir Robert Atkyns of Saperton; and the children of Edward Atkyns, esq; who are minors, are the present owners of Pinbury. The greater part of the park lies in this parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 100l. a year. Dr. Robert Morwent bought the advowson, and gave it to Corpus Christi college in Oxford, in the year 1557, who are patrons; and Mr. Finden is the present incumbent. The rector pays 13s. 4d. yearly to the crown, which was a rent formerly paid to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem.

The church is small. There is a vault under the chancel belonging to the rector, with stairs into the church, supposed to have been used in confession.

Two acres of land in each field are given towards the repair of the church.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Berkeley, five miles east from the town of that name, four north from Wotton-under-edge, and fifteen southward from Gloucester. The parish is not large, but the market-town within it merits particular consideration.

The town of Dursley is situated under the north side of a steep hill, covered with a fine hanging beech wood. It is one of the five antient boroughs in Gloucestershire, and was returned so to be by the sheriff of the county, in the ninth year of the reign of king Edward the First; and in that reign the criminals of this place were tried and executed at Berkeley.

Under the antient constitution of the borough, there was a chief officer (the Præpositus) appointed over it, and there is now a bailiff elected annually at the manor court, out of the better rank of people in the borough, who is honoured by the attendance of the principal inhabitants, with accustomed ceremonies. This officer formerly collected the king's rents, and perhaps executed some processes within the borough. He now examines into the sufficiency of weights and measures, but his authority seems to extend no further; though we are told by topographers, that the borough is governed by a bailiff and four constables.

Here was an antient castle, and the ruins of its foundations are still visible in a garden not a quarter of a mile north-westward of the town. The fields adjoining are still called the Castle-fields. The castle belonged to the antient family of the Berkleys, and falling to decay, was taken down, and part of

of the materials used in building the manor-house at Dodington, by Robert Wekys, who was lord of both the manors of Dursley and Dodington 5 Mariae. Our historians say very little about it, but Leland observes, that it had a good moat, or in his own words, a metely good dyche, round it; and that it was chiefly built of a towse stone, full of pores and holes lyke a pumice.

There are no papers, that I can find, which give any further light into the antient state of this place, wherefore I proceed to a short account of its present condition. It is a little town, not much frequented by travellers, consisting of two narrow streets, forming something like the figure of the letter T. But beside these two streets, there is a large hamlet without the borough, containing more houses than either of them. Leland calls the town a praty clothinge towne, so that if we reckon from his time, it has enjoyed the clothing trade between two and three hundred years, which hath enriched some individuals, and is the present support of the place. The business of making cards for the clothiers has been long settled here, and employs a pretty many hands.

There is a handsome market-house, of free-stone, in the middle of the town, built about the year 1738, with the statue of queen Anne in a niche at the east end, and the arms of the lord of the manor in the front. But what confers great honour on the town, is the earls of Berkeley taking their title of viscount from it; and the eldest son is stiled lord Dursley.

The weekly market is on Thursday, and pretty well frequented; but this part of the country is chiefly supply'd with grain and flour from Cirencester, Gloucester, and Tetbury; for the neighbourhood of Dursley, next the Severn, runs greatly on dairy, and produces the best sort of Gloucestershire cheese. The fairs are on the 6th of May, and the 4th of December.

On the south-east side of the church-yard are many springs, which rise perpendicularly out of the ground like boiling water, in so copious a manner, that they drive a fulling-mill at about a hundred yards distance below. At their rise, they cover a fine, level, gravelly bottom, for the space of about fifteen feet square, with near two feet depth of water, wherefore the inhabitants call the place the Broad Well; but in old writings concerning property thereabout, the name is Ewelme.

This is a Saxon word, [epylm] usually translated by Origo Fontis, the head of the spring. It is conjectured, that this remarkable water gave name to the town, for in the British language Dwr signifies water, and ley, lege, lega, are common terminations, denoting pasture ground. The s in the name was added to make the sound more agreeable.

There is a curious fossil substance found in great plenty in this parish, which Leland calls towse stone. It lies in one intire bed or stratum, and is so soft as to be cut out in pieces or blocks of any size or shape; but when it has been dried in the sun and air, is extremely hard and durable. The walls of Berkeley-castle, and those of the church of Dursley, are built in part with this stone, and tho' the castle walls have stood above six hundred years, the stone remains as sound as ever.

One thing more, perhaps, recommends itself to our notice, on account of its antiquity. It is a place called the Hermitage, at the top of the hill near Nibley park, where an anchoret is said to have spent his days. I fancy very few in this age will chuse his situation, or practice the austerities of those rigorous devotees, who thought an extreme mortification of the body quickened the exercise of religion, and added fervor to devotion.

Mr. Phelps, Mr. Wallington, and Mr. Stiff have good houses in the town. Mr. John Purnell has a good house and estate at King's-hill, on the west side of it; and another Mr. John Purnell has a beautiful house, on an elevated situation, at a place called the New Mills, on the east side, where Mr. Tippets has also a good house.

Edward Fox, bishop of Hereford in 1535, was a native of this place, and very active in promoting the divorce of king Henry the Eighth from queen Catherine.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, in the reign of William the First, Derfilege (i. e. three hides in Derfilege) being a member of the honour of Berkeley, was given by the Conqueror to Roger de Berkeley, as appears more fully under Berkeley. Roger de Berkeley, founder of the monastery of Kingswood, was certified, upon an aid for marrying the king's daughter, to hold one hide in Dursley, of the old feoffment, 12 H. 2. And upon levying scutage to carry on war against Scotland, it was certified that six knights fees and a half were held of the honour of Dursley 13 Joh. Henry de Berkeley proved his right to certain privileges in his manor of Dursley in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

John de Berkeley of Dursley and his wife levied a fine of the manor of Dursley 5 E. 3. and were in possession thereof 22 E. 3. and John Atyate, of the Berkeley family, died seized of it 41 E. 3. Sir Nicholas Berkeley and Cecily his wife were seized thereof 2 R. 2. About this time the manor went out of the name of Berkeley, by the marriage of Maud, daughter and surviving heir of John de Berkeley, to Robert de Cantelupe, who survived her husband, and held the manor of Dursley 4 H. 4. Richard Chedder married the daughter and heiress of Robert de Cantelupe, by whom he had a daughter and heiress, married to Thomas Wekys, who, in right of his wife, died seized of the manor of Dursley 13 E. 4.

This manor continued several generations in the name and family of Wekys, for Nicholas Wekys died seized of it 5 Mar. and left Robert Wekys his grandson and heir, (by his son Nicholas) who had livery thereof the same year, and sold it to the Estcourt family 9 Eliz.

Sir Thomas Estcourt was lord of it in 1608, from whom it descended in a direct line to Walter Estcourt of Laiborough, esq; who was succeeded by Thomas Estcourt of Shipton-Moigne, esq. He dying unmarried, was also succeeded by his brother Edmond, of Burton-Hill, near Malmesbury, in the county of Wilts, esq; who dying without issue male, bequeathed his large estate to Thomas Estcourt, esq; (son of the late Mr. Estcourt of Cam) the present lord of this manor. His arms are, Ermine, on a chief indented gules three estoiles Or.

But the descent of the manor seems to have been interrupted in the turbulent reigns of Henry the Sixth and Edward the Fourth; for the records shew that Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who had married Elizabeth, heiress of the Berkeley family, held the manor 17 H. 6. Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverstone, died seized of Dursley and Woodmancot 38 H. 6. And Margaret countess of Shrewsbury, daughter of the above Richard de Beauchamp, died seized of this manor 7 E. 4.

Richard Forster, and John Moor and his wife, levied a fine of lands in Dursley to the use of John Walch 1 & 6 H. 7. George Dennis, late of Tetbury, and Agnes his wife, levied a fine of lands in Dursley and Woodmancot to William Austin jun. and others 17 H. 7.

TITHING. Woodmancot is a hamlet and tithing in this parish, eastward of, and adjoining to, the borough. The village lies under the side of a hill covered with wood, which gave name to the tithing. A tithing in the parish of North Nibley lies within the manor of Woodmancot.

Robert de Swineborn held the manor of Woodmancot near Dursley 19 E. 2. Sir John Berkeley was seized of the manor of Woodmancot, with the hamlets of Nibley, 6 H. 6. Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverstone died seized of it 38 H. 6. as did Maurice his son 14 E. 4. William Berkeley, son of the last Maurice, taking up arms against Richard the Third, was attainted, and his lands seized, and the manor of Woodmancot was granted to sir Thomas Brugge, and his heirs male 1 R. 3. But king Henry the Seventh restored him to his estate. Sir Edward Berkeley, son of William, married Alice, daughter and heir of Robert Poyntz, who surviving him, held Woodmancot in jointure, and died seized thereof 1 H. 8. She was succeeded by her grandson John Berkeley, whose father Thomas died before the said Alice. Sir William Berkeley succeeded to John, and died seized of Woodmancot 5 E. 6. and his son John had livery thereof the following year. The manor came afterwards to Mr. John Arundel, but Mr. Phelps of Dursley is the present lord of the manor. His arms are, Argent, a lion rampant sable between six crosses crosslets fitchy gules.

Tiltdown is a place in this parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Dursley, worth 80*l.* a year. John Carpenter, bishop of Worcester, appropriated the rectory of Dursley to the archdeaconry of Gloucester, in the year 1475; which rectory belonged to St. Peter's abbey, and was given in exchange for the archdeacon's house in Gloucester, and has continued annexed to the archdeaconry ever since.

The church, which is dedicated to the holy Trinity, is large, with an aisle on each side of the nave, and a handsome tower at the west end, with six bells and a set of chimes. The altar-piece is neatly wainscotted, and railed in.

There was a chantry in the north aisle, dedicated to the virgin Mary, whereof Richard Breic was the last incumbent, and retired with a pension of 5*l.* a year. There was another chantry in the south aisle, dedicated to St. James, founded by one Tanner. And against the south wall, under a canopy supported by pillars, is the effigy in stone of a naked person, lying along, supposed to be designed for Mr. Tanner, who probably built that aisle.

Mr. Throgmorton Trotman, by his will in 1663, gave 15*l.* a year to be paid by the company of Haberdashers in London, for a weekly lecture on Thursdays.—In 1703, John Arundel of Dursley gave the rent of an acre of land in Cam, for buying books, and teaching poor children to read. And Mrs. Anne Purnell, in 1759, gave 100*l.* to be laid out in land, out of the profits of which 10*s.* a year to the officiating minister for a sermon on Good-friday; the remainder for buying books, and teaching children to read; she also gave 60*l.* to buy land, 10*s.* of the profits of which for another sermon on New-year's-day; the remainder to be given to forty poor widows.—About the year 1736, Joseph Twemblo, a dissenting minister, gave a house in Dursley, fitted up like a meeting-house, to be employ'd as a school-house, and for the dissenting minister of Cam to repeat his sermons in occasionally; and Josiah Sheppard of London gave 100*l.* with which a piece of land called Withybeare, in Berkeley, was purchased, to endow this school. And Mary Twemblo, and others, gave afterwards 260*l.* with which lands in Ham-fallow, in the parish of Berkeley, were purchased. At the beginning of this century, there were 600 houses and about 2500 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 40 were freeholders; yearly births 42, burials 38. Atkyns. But sir Robert's estimate was too high, for notwithstanding there is reason to believe the inhabitants are not decreased since that time; they are now only about 2000.

DURHAM or DYRHAM.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Grumbald's-ash, four miles west from Marshfield, five south from Chipping-Sodbury, eight northward from Bath, and thirty-one southward from Gloucester.

The village is secured from the cold easterly winds by an hill, and the high lands about Littleton and Cold Aston, which bound the parish on that side. It is plentifully supply'd with water from springs which rise at the foot of the hill, and forming a brook, empty themselves into the Boyd. It is conjectured that from these springs the parish obtained the name of Durham, i. e. Dwr, British, water, and ham, a village; yet I am not ignorant that in some of the chronicles it occurs by the name of Deorham.

It is remarkable in antiquity for a bloody battle which was fought here between the Britons and Saxons, about the year 577. The latter, under Cuthwin and Ceaulin, vanquished the Britons, and slew three of their princes, Commeaile, Condidan, and Fariemeiol; in consequence whereof, the cities of Cirencester, Gloucester, and Bath, with the country round them, surrendered to the conquerors. And upon Henton-hill is a large camp of a single intrenchment, but imperfect on the south-west side, inclosing near twenty acres of ground, which the Saxons are supposed to have occupied.

This village is distinguished by the fine seat of William Blathwayt, esq; built by his grandfather after a design of the ingenious Mr. Talmen, in 1698. There is a plan of this house, and an elevation, in Campbell's Vitruvius Britannicus. The principal story is large and convenient, with a variety of very good apartments. The garden front extends one hundred and thirty feet. The first story is intirely rusticated, and the coins to the cornice. In the second story, the windows are dressed with alternate pediments, over which are attic windows; and the front finishes with a handsome cornice and balustrade, adorned with trophies and vases of an excellent choice.

There is a park adjoining to the gardens; but the curious water-works, which were made at a great expence, are much neglected and going to decay. From this seat there are very agreeable prospects westward, over the forest of Kingswood, and the city of Bristol.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' William the son of Widon holds Dirham in ' Grimboldestou hundred of the king. Aluric ' held it in the time of king Edward. There are ' seven hides taxed. In demean is one plow' tillage, and thirteen villeins, and thirteen bordars
' with two plow-tillages. There are eight servi
' and ancillæ, and three mills of 15*s.* rent, and six ' acres of meadow. It was worth 12*l.* now ' [only] 8*l.*

' The same William held three hides of this manor,
' with which Durand the sheriff had endowed ' St. Mary of Pershore, by the king's order; which ' [hides] earl William had given to Turstin the son
' of Rolf with this manor.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

This manor was soon after transferred to the barons of Newmarch, who were descended from Bernard de Newmarch, (de Novo Mercatu), who came in with the Conqueror. Henry de Newmarch, son of William, was seized hereof and left it to James his brother, who died 17 Joh. leaving Isabel and Hawise his coheiresse.

John Russel of Berkshire purchased the wardship of those daughters, and married Isabel the eldest eldest of them to his son Ralph Ruffel, who, in right of his wife, was seized of Durham. Ralph Ruffel, by deed, gave this manor in marriage with his daughter Maud, to Robert Walerand, who was governor of St. Briavel's-castle, and warden of the forest of Dean, and four times high sheriff of this county in the reign of H. 3. He died 1 E. 1. and she soon after, both without issue; whereby this manor went to William Ruffel, her elder brother, who by his wife Jane, daughter of Robert Peverell, had issue Theobald Ruffel, ancestor by his second wife to the present duke of Bedford. By his first wife, daughter and coheir of Ralph de Gorges, a baron in parliament temp. E. 3. he had three sons, of whom Theobald the youngest assumed the name and arms of Gorges, viz. Lozengy Or and Gules, and is ancestor of the Gorges of Wraxall. The above William Ruffel was succeeded by his son William, who died seized of Dyrham 4 E. 2. Ralph Ruffel was seized of this manor 30 E. 3. and sir Maurice Ruffel died seized of it 2 H. 4. Sir Maurice left two daughters Margaret and Isabel, the first married to sir Gilbert Dennys, knight; who, with sir John Drayton and Isabel his wife, the other daughter of sir Maurice, (married before to sir John St. Loe) were jointly seized of the manor of Dyrham 3 H 5. But sir Maurice by a second wife, had a son Thomas, whose only child was named Margery, and died without issue; this Thomas and Margery were seized of one yard-land called Barn-place, and of one messuage and one yard-land called Salesbury's, in Dyrham, 10 H. 6. But the manor and other lands never came into the possession of Thomas, having been settled in trust by sir Maurice, to pay the portions of his daughters.

Sir John Drayton sold his moiety to sir Gilbert Dennys, who died seized of the intire manor 10 H. 5. Maurice Dennys was son of sir Gilbert, sir Walter Dennys son of Maurice, and sir William Dennys' son of sir Walter. Sir Walter Dennys, son and heir of sir William, was the next and last possessor of Dyrham of that family; for he, joining with his eldest son Richard, sold the manor in the thirteenth year of queen Elizabeth, to George Wynter, esq; brother to sir William Wynter, of Lydney in the forest of Dean.

* This sir William Dennys, and his lady Anne, daughter of Maurice lord Berkeley, with some others, founded a Gild in the church of Durham, in the year 1520. The method of its foundation, and the statutes, are still preserv'd, and are here inserted, to shew the nature of Gilds in general.

The usual pay from each person was 10 or 12d quarterly.

John Wynter, son of George, had livery of the manor 23 Eliz. He accompanied sir Francis Drake in his famous voyage round the world, as his vice-admiral, and married the daughter of sir William Bruen of Dorsetshire. Sir George Wynter, son and heir of John, married Mary, daughter of Edward Rogers, of Cannington in Somersetshire, esq; and dying in 1638, left John Wynter his son and heir then sixteen years old. He married Frances, daughter and coheirefs of Thomas Gerard of Trent, in the county of Somerset, esq; descended from the Gerards of Lancashire. He died seized of Dyrham in 1668, leaving an only surviving daughter Mary, married to William Blathwayte, esq; whose family came out of Cumberland. This gentleman's knowledge in modern languages, and his early and steady application to business, advanced him to several public and profitable employments. He was secretary at war, and secretary of state to king William during his abode in Holland and Flanders; and was one of the commissioners for trade and plantations, and clerk of the privy council in the reigns of king Charles, king James, king William, and queen Anne. He was lord of the manor of Dyrham at the beginning of this century, and his grandson William Blathwayte, esq; is the present lord of this manor. His arms are, Or, two bends ingrailed sable.

Walter Gaselin held three plow-tillages in Dyrham 7 E. 3.

HAMLET. Hinton is a hamlet in this parish, about a mile from the church. The name signifies the old town, from Hen, British, old. The manor antiently belonged to the family of De la Rivere, sometimes written de Ripariis. Sir John Tracy and others were seized of it in trust for Richard de la Rivere 37 E. 3. and Thomas de la Rivere, son of Richard, was seized of it 48 E. 3. The heir of De la Rivere sold the manor to the Ruffels, lords of Dyrham; and the several proprietors of the manor of Dyrham, have been also lords of the manor of Hinton ever since.

Sir Gilbert Dennys and sir John Drayton, who had married the two coheirefses of sir Maurice Ruffel, joined in the sale of part of the lands of Hinton, to Nicholas Stanshaw, who was seized thereof 3 H. 5. Margaret the widow of Nicholas died seized of those lands 14 H. 6. The heir of Stanshaw sold them to Mr. Thomas White, who granted them to the mayor and corporation of Bristol, for public uses, 32 H. 8. and they are still vested in the corporation of that city, and the profits thereof are faithfully disposed of to the intended uses.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 150*l.* a year. Mr. Blathwayte is patron; Mr. Peter Grand the present incumbent. Eighty acres belong to the glebe.

The church is not large, but very neat. It is dedicated to St. Peter.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a flat stone, with a large representation of a man and woman, for Maurice Ruffel, who died in 1401, and Isabel his wife, and under it the following monkish verses:

Miles privatus vita jacet hic tumulatus
Sub petra stratus Maurice Ruffel vocitatus
Isabel sponsa fuit hujus militis ista
Quæ jacet absconsa sub marmoreo modo alto
Cœli solamen, Trinitas, his conferat Amen.
Qui fuit est et erit. Concita morte perit.

At the upper end of the south aisle, is a very handsome freestone monument. The figures of a man in armour, and a woman on his right hand, large as life, lie under a canopy, supported by five fluted pillars, with Corinthian capitals; and four sons and seven daughters are represented kneeling, with their hands in a supplicating posture. On a table is this inscription:

Georgio Wynter armigero (qui animam efflavit xxix^o die Novembris Anno Dni 1581) Anna Wynter uxor pia, charo conjugii hoc monumentum posuit: statuens cum et ipsa, dei jussu, vitæ hujus stationem peregerit, hic iuxta mariti funus suum quoque reponi: ut quibus vivis unus erat animus, eisdem et mortuis unus esset corporum quiescendi locus, sub spe futuræ resurrectionis.

Round the base of the monument, these verses:

Mole sub hac placidam capiunt en Membra Georgii
Wynteri requiem, duces pericæpe labores
Qui solida in Terra, qui flucti vagantibus undis,
Et pace innocua, simul et pugnacibus armis,
Sustinuit Patriæ, dum publica Munia gessit.
Anna fuit quondam hæc illi fidissima conjux;
Undenas Thalami soboles tulit ista, viriles

Benefactions.

Mr. William Langton, formerly rector of this parish, left by his will, 600*l.* to be laid out in lands, the income of which to be employed in teaching children to read, and putting them out apprentices. Dyrham to have two thirds of this charity, and Deinton the other. And Mr. Peter Grand, the present rector, desirous of promoting this laudable design, built a school-house in Dyrham, at his own expence, about the year 1770.

EASINGTON or EASTINGTON.

THIS parish lies in the vale, in the hundred of Whitston, six miles westward from Stroud, six north from Dursley, and ten south from Gloucester.

It consists mostly of pasture, as the soil is rich, but in some parts it is much inclined to clay. The river From runs through it, and divides the tithing of Eastington from that of Alkerton.

In the latter tithing, there is a spring of water of a cathartic property, which, upon examination, is found to contain a large portion of salts, like those extracted from the Epsom water, some calcareous earth, and a little sea salt.

The name of Eastington, or any thing like it, is not to be found in Domesday-book. It is probable, therefore, that Eastington was a member of Frampton, when the survey for that record was made; but in process of time, acquiring parochial rights, it became a distinct and independent parish. Upon this ground the etymology is easy, for the village was very properly called Eastington, i.e. the east town upon the water, because it lay on the east of the parish of Frampton, upon the river. And accordingly we find, that the names of Norton, Weston, Siddington, Sutton, have been given to many places for similar reasons.

At Framiload, which is a hamlet lying part in this parish and part in Morton Valence, there is a passage over the Severn, leading from this country to the upper part of the forest of Dean, and so on to Herefordshire. The passage-house lies on the south-east side of the river, which at this place is near a mile over at high water. Here the navigable canal from Stroud is intended to fall into the Severn, if the bill for making it, now depending in parliament, should pass into a law.

The clothing business extends itself in the line from Stroud to this parish, which enjoys some share of it, chiefly in the fine way; but the parish produces nothing curious or uncommon in the fossil and vegetable kingdoms.

The handsome manor-house near the church is going to ruin, and has for many years been occupied only as a farm-house.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Winebald de Balun, son of Drogo de Balun, together with his brothers Hamcline and Wyonoc, came into England with William the First. Winebald had obtained the manor of Easington 2 W. 2. He gave a mill in Framelode to the abbey of Gloucester, in the year 1126, and was at that time stiled one of the great barons of the realm. Roger succeeds his father Winebald, and was succeeded by Hameline de Balun, one of the same family; whose son John de Balun levied a fine of this manor 11 H. 3. Sir John de Balun, or Balun, son of John, was the next possessor. He joined with Simon Montfort and other barons against the king, and, in conjunction with sir John Giffard of Brimpsfield, took Gloucester-castle by stratagem in 1264, as already related, p. 107; but he afterwards obtained the king's pardon, and the manor descended next to Ifolda de Balun, married first to her kinsman Walter de Balun, by whom she had no issue; secondly, to Hugh de Audley the elder, who purchased a charter of free warren in Easington 12 E. 2. She survived her second husband, and died seized of this manor 11 E. 3. Hugh de Audley, their son, succeeded to this estate, and married Margaret, second sister and one of the coheiresses of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, and widow of Piers de Gaveston, the favourite of king Edward the Second. This Hugh de Audley died 21 E. 3. leaving Margaret his only daughter and heiress, married to Ralph lord Stafford, who died 46 E. 3.

Hugh earl of Stafford, their son and heir, died at Rhodes, in his return from a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, seized of Easington 9 R. 2. as appears by an inquisition taken the following year. He settled the manors of Easington, Haresfield, and a moiety of the manor of Alkerton, on Hugh Stafford his younger son, who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Bartholomew lord Bourcher, and was summoned to parliament as lord Bourcher 12 H. 4. He died without issue 9 H. 5. whereby the manor of Easington came to his nephew Humphry earl of Stafford, who was son of Edmond, elder brother to the lord Bourcher. He was created duke of Buckingham in the succeeding reign, and died seized of this estate 38 H. 6. He was succeeded by his grandson Henry duke of Buckingham, son of Humphry earl of Stafford, who had been slain at the battle of St. Albans, four years before his father's death. This Henry took up arms against king Richard the Third, and was beheaded at Salisbury; but Edward his son and heir was restored to his father's honours and estates, by king Henry the Seventh. He began the magnificent castle at Thornbury, which he did not live to finish, being attainted and beheaded 13 H. 8. and the same year the manor of Easington was granted to Thomas Heneage and Catherine his wife for life. Henry, son and heir of Edward, had this manor restored to him 23 H. 8. and his son Edward lord Stafford sold it to Edward Stephens 15 Eliz.

The family of Stephens are of ancient standing in this county. Ralph son of Stephen, and William William his brother, were joint high sheriffs of Gloucestershire four years, beginning 18 H. 2. and William Stephens was high sheriff 22 H. 2. and so continued thirteen years together.

Henry Stephens of Easington, married the daughter of — Lug, of Herefordshire; and Edward Stephens, his son, the purchaser of this manor, married Joan, daughter of Edward Fowler of Stonehouse. He died in 1587, and was succeeded by his son Richard Stephens, esq; who married, first, Margaret, daughter of Edward St. Loe, of Kingston in Wiltshire, esq; and surviving her, he married, secondly, Anne Kerry, widow, one of the daughters and coheiresses of John Stone of London, and died 41 Eliz.

Thomas Stephens, third son of Edward, and brother of Richard, was attorney to prince Henry and prince Charles, and by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and coheiress of John Stone of London, had three sons; Edward, the eldest, ancestor to the Stephens's at Sodbury; John, ancestor to the family of that name at Lypiat; and Nathaniel, the third son, ancestor to the Stephens's, formerly of Cherington. But to proceed with the descendants of Richard Stephens.

Nathaniel, son of the said Richard Stephens of Easington, married Catherine, daughter of Robert Beall, of Prior's Marston in Warwickshire, esq; and dying in 1660, was succeeded by his son Richard, who married Anne, eldest daughter of sir Hugh Cholmeley, of Whitby in Yorkshire, bart. and died in 1678. Nathaniel Stephens, son of the last Richard, married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Francis Pemberton, who had been lord chief justice of both benches. This Nathaniel served the office of high sheriff of this county in 1698, and was lord of the manor of Easington at the beginning of the present century. Richard Stephens, esq; died seized thereof in the year 1775, and is succeeded by his brother Robert Stephens, who resides at Chavenage, and is the present proprietor of this manor, and of the hundred of Whitston, and holds courts for both. His arms are, Party per chevron, azure and argent, in chief two eagles with wings elevated Or.

Winebald de Balun gave a mill in Framelode to the abbey of Gloucester in 1126. Walter the prior of Lanthony purchased a mill at Hamelaw, now Framelode, of Arnold the miller 8 Joh. Simon de Framilode was seized of lands in this place temp. H. 3. The abbey of Winchcombe granted a fishery in the Severn, near Framilode, to the abbey of Gloucester, in exchange for 4*l.* yearly rent out of the manor of Northleach 14 E. 2. and the abbey of Gloucester was seized thereof 17 E. 3. and of two water-mills in Framilode 6 H. 8. A messuage and the ferry at Framilode's passage, late the duke of Buckingham's, were granted to Ambrose Shelton 22 H. 8. A mill and lands in Easington, late the duke of Buckingham's, were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. upon whose remainder they were granted to John earl of Warwick, afterwards duke of Northumberland, 3 E. 6. He being likewise attainted and beheaded, the mill and lands, then in the tenure of Walter Clutterbuck, were granted to William Britton 2 Mariae.

HAMLET. Alkerton is a hamlet and tithing in this parish, taken notice of in the beginning of this account for its medicinal water. The manor is thus described in Domesday-book.

' Edric the son of Chetel holds Alcrintone in Blacheleu hundred. His father held it in the time of king Edward. There are four hides and a half taxed. In demean is one plow-tillage, and six villeins, and four bordars with eight plow-tillages. There are three servi, and a mill of 10*s.* and ten acres of meadow; a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. It is worth and was worth 3*l.* Domesday-book, p. 80.

William Walton was seized of this manor, with affize of bread and ale, 31 E. 1. and 5 E. 2. The manor afterwards came to the Staffords, and descended like Easington down to Mr. Robert Stephens, the present lord thereof.

But there were two manors in this tithing, as appears by the escheator's inquisition, 41 Eliz. where it is said that Richard Stephens died seized of Estington and Alkerton, late the duke of Euckingham's, held in capite; and of the manor of Alkerton, alias Amycourt, part of the possessions of Robert Bradstone, esq; held by free foccage of the honour of Hereford, paying 6*s.* 8*d.* a year.

There are particular places in this parish of the names of Nupend, Westend, Millend, Churchend, and Nassend.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth 140*l.* a year. Mr. Stephens is patron and incumbent.

Winebald de Balun, in 1088, gave the tithes of Easington to the monks of Bermondsey in Surry. The advowson of the rectory of Easington was granted to the Benedictine nunnery of Clerkenwell in London, and after the dissolution, was granted to sir William Herbert 4 E. 6. The rector pays 20*s.* a year to the vicar of Frocester, in lieu of a portion of tithes in Alkerton.

Sixteen acres of arable, forty of pasture, and some meadow, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and consists of two ailes, with a low tower at the west end. There was a chantry called the chantry of Alkerton, in this church, dedicated to Thomas Becket and St. Catherine, to which the prior of Stanley St. Leonard presented. And there was an inhibition in 1339, that the parishioners at Alkerton should not hear divine service in any other church than that of Easington.

Doctor Richard Capel, once rector of this church, was son of Christopher Capel, alderman of Gloucester, who was born at Hoo Capel in Herefordshire. The doctor was eminent for his learning, learning, and refusing to read the book of sports, on the Lord's-day, in 1633, was obliged to resign his parsonage, and practiced physic at Pitchcombe, near Stroud. He was chosen one of the assembly of divines, but never sat among them. He published several religious books, and died in the year 1656.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, at the beginning of this century there were 100 houses in this parish, and about 450 inhabitants, whereof 11 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 14. But population has increased since that time, so that the number of souls is now about 767.

EASTLEACH-MARTIN

IS a small parish in the hundred of Britwell's-Barrow, eight miles south-east from Northleach, three north from Leachlade, and twenty-seven eastward from Gloucester.

The air is healthy, and the soil well adapted to tillage; but there is good pasture-land on the side of the river Lech, upon which this village is situated, and from which it takes its name.

In Domesday-book there are four villages all bearing the name of Lecce, and denominated from the river upon which they lie. But they were afterwards distinguished in the following manner. The river runs south-eastward, and the first, because the most northerly of those villages, was called Northleach, now a market town. For a similar reason, the most southerly of them, dropping the name of the river, was called Southrop; and the two others, because situated more eastward than Northleach, obtained the name of Eastleach. But further to distinguish the two latter, the one was called Eastleach-Martin, from the name of the faint to whom its church was dedicated; the other received the additional name of Turville, for the reason assigned in its proper place. But this parish is sometimes called Butbrop.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Drogo the son of Ponz holds Lece in Bricstuldes hundred. There are ten hides taxed. Cola held it. In demean are four plow-tillages, and fifteen villeins, and four bordars, with nine ' plow-tillages. There are nine servi, and a mill of 10s. and ten acres of meadow. It was worth 8l. now 10l.' Domesday-book, p. 77.

This manor, soon after the conquest, belonged to the priory of Great Malvern in Worcestershire. But it did not long continue in that house, for Walter de Clifford became possessed of it, and gave it to the abbey of Gloucester, in exchange for the manor of Glasebury; and the grant was confirmed by king Stephen in 1144. The abbey of Gloucester was seized of the manor of Eastleach St. Martin 17 E. 3. and continued in possession of it 'till the dissolution, when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Gloucester, who are the present lords of the manor.

Mr. Slade Nash is lessee under the dean and chapter, by purchase from the trustees of the late Viner Small, esq; deceased, and pays 1l. 6s. 8d. a year to the crown.

HAMLETS. 1. Fifield. 2. Coat, which from its name seems to have been woodland.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 160l. a year; the lord chancellor is patron; Mr. James Parsons is the present incumbent.

The church is small, dedicated to St. Martin, and has a small aisle on the north side, and a tower at the west end, in which are three bells.

The parsonage-house was built by Dr. Smith, canon of Christ-church, and rector of this church.

Rowland Searchfield S. T. B. fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge, was rector of this church, and afterwards bishop of Bristol. He died in 1622, and lies buried in Bristol cathedral.

EASTLEACH-TURVILLE.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Britwell's-Barrow, in the Cotswold country, seven miles south-eastward from Northleach, four north from Leachlade, and twenty-eight east from Gloucester.

It is situated upon the river Lech, which divides it from Eastleach-Martin. This part of the country lying high and open, enjoys a healthy air. The soil is rather stony, but sweet, and well adapted to tillage; and a great part of the parish, consisting formerly of sheep-lays and common fields, has been lately inclosed by act of parliament.

There is a well of water in Church-lane of a cathartic property; and the common well water will turn meat, when washed in it, as red as if it had been cured with salt-petre.

The Roman road called the Ikenild-way enters this parish from Oxfordshire. It is hereabout pretty perfect, and passing westward through Coln St. Alwin's and Amney, joins the Foss at Cirencester.

The etymology of Eastleach is given under Eastleach-Martin. Sir Robert Atkyns speaking of this parish, says, The name is taken from its standing on the east side of the river Lech, and from the tower of the church. But he was totally mistaken as to the first particular; for the parish lies on the west, not on the east side of that river. The addition of Turville was probably taken from a family of the name of Turberville, or Turville, who resided and had possessions in this county about the time of king Henry the Third, and king Edward the First^a. It was intended to distinguish this place from the other Eastleach, as Acton-Turville was so called to distinguish it from two other neighbouring places of the name of Acton. But it must be acknowledged that I speak from conjecture, as by the defect in the records concerning this manor, about the time above mentioned, we are deprived of positive evidence.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The same Roger [de Laci] holds Lecce in Brictwoldeberg hundred, and William holds it of him. There are five hides. Alduin held it in the time of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and twelve villeins, and one bordar, with five plow-tillages. There are five servi, and eight acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 6*l.* Domesday-book, p. 75.

A Quo warranto was brought against Gilbert de Clare earl of Gloucester, to set forth by what right he held courts leet in this parish, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1. The manor was held by one knight's fee of Gilbert de Clare, the last earl of Gloucester of that name, who was slain at the battle of Bannocksbourne in Scotland, in 1314. It was likewise held of Hugh de Audley and Margaret his wife, sister and one of the coheiresses of the last Gilbert de Clare, 21 E. 3. and of the earls of Stafford, descended from Hugh de Audley, by one knight's fee, 10, 16, & 22 R. 2. and 4 H. 4. Sir Edmond Tame died seized of this manor 10 H. 8. as did Edmond Tame his son, without issue, 36 H. 8. He left three sisters his coheiresses; Margaret, married to Humphry Stafford; Alice, married to sir Thomas Verney; and Isabel, the wife of Lewis Watkin, who all had livery 37 H. 8. Sir Thomas Verney was succeeded by Richard Verney his son, whose son George Verney died seized of Eastleach-Turville 16 Eliz.

The mesne lords of this manor were as follow. Theobald de Verdune died seized of Eastleach-Turville 10 E. 3. as did Richard de Wideslade 29 E. 3. and Mary the widow of William Herney 7 H. 4. Edward Leversegge died seized of this manor, and Elizabeth his widow died seized of 140 acres in Eastleach 1 H. 6. Robert Leversegge died seized of the manor 4 E. 4. and was succeeded by his son William Leversegge, whose son Robert Leversegge died seized of the manor of Eastleach-Turville 6 E. 6. and livery was granted to his son William Leversegge the following year.

William Blomer was lord of this manor in the year 1608; but sir John Webb, baronet, is the present proprietor. For his arms, see Hatherop.

There were other lands, reputed to be a manor, which belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, founded by Nicholas Basset in 1147. Lands in Eastleach, late belonging to the abbey of Bruern, were granted to John Dodington and John Jackson 2 Eliz. This estate was afterwards purchased by Richard Keeble, (descended from sir Henry Keeble, lord mayor of London in 1510) in whose family it continued down to Richard Keeble, the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and the sixth in lineal descent of the same christian name. It is now annexed to the principal manor by purchase, and is the property of sir John Webb.

Thomas Oddington levied a fine of lands in Eastleach-Turville 14 H. 7. and John Wright and his wife levied a like fine the same year. Sir Walter Dennis and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Eastleach 15 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy in the deanery of Fairford. The dean and chapter of Gloucester are patrons and impropiators, Mr. Price is the present incumbent, who has been presented to the living of Coln Rogers, since the account of that parish was printed off.

In the year 1500, the impropriation belonged to the priory of Derhurst, and afterwards to the abbey of Gloucester. It is now the property of the dean and chapter of Gloucester, and pays 30*l.* a year to the curate, in consequence of the bishop's injunction.

Eighty-two acres belong to the glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is very small, with an aisle on the north side, and a low tower at the west end, in which are two bells. This church and that of Eastleach-Martin lie at but little more than a hundred yards distance from each other, the former on the west, the latter on the east bank of the little river Lech, which separates the parishes.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account, at the beginning of this century, there were, according to him, 60 houses, and about 200 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Since which time the inhabitants are increased to near 400.

EBBERTON, or EBBRINGTON,

LIES in the hundred of Kiftesgate, two miles distant north-east from Campden, eleven south-west from Evesham in Worcestershire, and thirty-three north-eastward from Gloucester.

It lies on an easy ascent north-westward from Blockley. The manor house is agreeably situated on an eminence close by the church. It is large, and, tho' not a modern building, may be ranked among the handsomest country seats of the last age. The soil is very fertile, and the air remarkably salubrious, as appears by the state of population at the close of this account.

The name is of uncertain original. Some have fancied it to be a contraction of Egbert's town, as if the village had been a part of the demean lands of that king. Others have supposed the denomination to be taken from the dedication of the church to St. Edburg. But the name of Ebberton, or Ebbington, is not to be found in that part of Domesday-book relating to Gloucestershire; and if the particulars of this manor are not omitted in that record, they must be given under some other name. Accordingly I find Bristentune in the old hundred of Witelai, (now comprized in that of Kiftesgate) which I apprehend was then the name of this parish, especially as Cheuringaurde, now Charingworth, was held, at the time of the conquest, by the same proprietor.

* Martin Fortescue, esq; son and heir of John Fortescue, lord chancellor of England, (by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of sir Miles Stapleton) married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Richard Deynfall, of Filleigh in com. Devon, esq; and had issue two sons, John and William. John married Jaquetta, eldest daughter of Ralph St. Leger, esq; by whom he had issue Bartholomew, whose son and heir, Hugh Fortescue, married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of sir John Chichester, of Raleigh in com. Devon, and had by her John Fortescue, esq; which John married a daughter of sir John Specot, knight, by whom he had issue Hugh Fortescue, his son and heir. This Hugh, by his wife, daughter of sir Samuel Rolle, had issue colonel Robert Fortescue, who died without issue; and Arthur Fortescue, esq; who married a daughter of — Elford, esq; and had issue by her four sons, of whom Hugh Fortescue, of Filleigh, esq; the eldest, married Bridget, sole daughter and heir of Hugh Boscawen, of Tregothnan in Cornwall, by Margaret his wife, fifth daughter, and at length coheir of Theophilus Clinton, earl of Lincoln; by whom he had issue Hugh, Theophilus, Margaret, and Bridget. He married

This manor had obtained the name of Ebberton, and was held of Roger de Quincie, earl of Winchester, 55 H. 3. Ernald de Bosco, who founded the abbey of Bittlefden in Buckinghamshire in the year 1147, was seized of it, and his family held it for several generations. Another Ernald de Bosco died possessed of this manor 4 E. 1. and John de Boyse, his son, in a Quo warrants brought against him, proved his right to courts leet and waifs therein 15 E. 1. About this time the manor went out of that family, for Alan de Zouch, grandson and heir of the earl of Winchester, died seized of Ebberton 7 E. 2. leaving three daughters coheiresses.

It afterwards passed to the Corbets, for Roger Corbet had a grant of free warren in Ebberton and Coate 6 E. 3. Sir Robert Corbet died seized of Ebberton and Hidcote 2 H. 4. as did another sir Robert Corbet 5 H. 5.

Sir John Fortescue, lord chancellor of England in the reign of king Henry the Sixth, purchased the manor of Ebbington, alias Ebberton; and upon his attainder, 7 E. 4. it was granted to sir John Brug, who died seized of it 11 E. 4. But it was afterwards restored to the Fortescue family, and Matthew lord Fortescue, a direct descendant from lord chancellor Fortescue, is the present lord of this manor, and holds a court leet here.

Cateflade is a manor appurtenant to, and dependant on, the manor of Ebberton, notwithstanding it lies within the parish of Guiting-Power, where some further account of it will be given.

One plow-tillage in Ebberton, with the advowson of the church, was granted to the abbey of Bittlefden 1 R. 2.

Devon, and earl of Clinton; with limitation of the barony to Matthew his brother. His lordship dying unmarried, the title of Clinton devolved on his sister Margaret; and his said brother Matthew succeeded to the barony, and is the present lord Fortescue. The family of Keyt has refided in this parifh about four hundred years. Sir John Keyt was created a baronet in 1660, in reward of his loyalty to King Charles the Firft, for whom he raifed a troop of horfe at his own charge. There are feveral monuments and infcriptions in the church, fhewing the alliances and other particulars of this family. Sir William Keyt married the daughter of fir Francis Coventry, fon of the lord Keeper of Coventry, and died in 1702. Sir William Keyt, fon of William Keyt, efq; married in 1710, Anne, the daughter of William viscount Tracy, by whom he had iffue Thomas-Charles, who fucceeded to the baronetage, and dying without iffue, was fucceeded by his brother Robert, the prefent baronet. The laft mentioned fir William Keyt, being in his houfe at Norton in this parifh, when it was burnt down, voluntarily perifhed in the flames, in the year 1741. Soon after his death, the fcite of the houfe, together with the eftate, was fold to the late fir Dudley Ryder, lord chief juftice of England, whose fon, Nathaniel Ryder, efq; is the prefent proprietor of Hidcoat Bois.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hampden, worth about 30*l.* a year. The crown patron, Mr. Jacob Mould the prefent incumbent. The advowfon of the church was granted to the abbey of Bittlesden 1 R. 2. And after the diffolution of that abbey, the reftory and church of Ebrington were granted to Anthony Bonner and George Bonner 4 Jac. Tithes in Charingworth, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to fir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

There is no glebe-land. Sir William Keyt gave 10*l.* a year to augment the vicarage, which fum is included in the above mentioned value.

The church is large and handsome. The eaft window of the chancel is ornamented with painted glafs, in pretty good prefervation, wherein are feveral coats of arms, as Sable, a fefs ermine between three crefcents Or, for Coventry. France and England, quarterly. The arms of Keyt, &c. Upon two wreaths is written, Beati qui lugent.—Beati Pauperes. And towards the bottom are two historical pieces, the one, Joseph telling his dream to his father and brothers; the other represents him flying from the temptations of Potiphar's wife. In a tower at the weft end, are fix mufical bells.

Monuments and Infcriptions.

Against the north wall of the chancel is a large monument for lord chancellor Fortefcue, with his effigy, in fcarlet robes, lying on a raifed tomb ornamented with fcutcheons of coat armour. On a table is the following infcription:

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, about the year 1710, there were, according to him, 74 houses, and 341 inhabitants, of whom 10 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 15. But from an accurate examination of the parish register, it appears, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptisms were 139, burials 87; and in a like series of years, beginning with 1761, the baptisms were 164, the burials 76; and there are now 94 houses, and 469 inhabitants. So that about one in every sixty-one of the inhabitants dies every year.

EDG W O R T H.

THIS is a small parish in the hundred of Bisley, in the Cotswold country, six miles north-west from Cirencester, three north-eastward from Bisley, and twelve south-eastward from Gloucester.

The situation of the village on the side of a hill, gave rise to the name, which is composed of two Saxon words, Ege, the sharp side of a thing, and peopð, a village.

It hath been already observed, under Cranham, that the face of the country hereabout is exceedingly uneven, with much beech wood growing on the steep acclivities. The bottoms are generally pasture; but the greater part of this parish is arable land. A small brook runs through it into the river From.

Part of Pinbury-park lies in this parish, the rest in Duntelbourn Rous.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

‘ Roger de Laci holds Egesworde in Bislege hundred. There is one hide and a half taxed.
‘ Eluvin held it. In demean are four plow-tillages, and four villeins, and three bordars with two plow-tillages. There are two free men with two plow-tillages. There are fifteen serfs, and a mill of 30*d*. and two acres of meadow.
‘ A wood one mile long, and half a mile broad.
‘ It is worth and was worth 6*l*. D. B. p. 75. Edw.

Earl Hugh holds half a hide at Egeifuurde, which Roger de Laci claims, as the county witnesseth. It was worth 10s. and pays tax. Domesday-book, p. 73.

Audomar de Valencia, earl of Pembroke, son of William de Valencia, who was half brother, by the mother, to king H. 3. was seized of Edgworth. Mary his third wife had two parts of the village in dower, and died seized thereof 17 E. 2. Thomas de Eggeworth held the third part of the vill of Eggeworth of the said earl, as of the manor of Paynswyke, by half a knight's fee, 17 E. 2. Efcb.

Walter Helvin died seized of this manor 16 E. 3. as did Robert de Aston the 23d, and John Coaffe 36 E. 3. when it was held of the manor of Painf-wick. The manor soon after passed to the Raleighs. Thomas Raleigh died seized of the manor of Edgworth, which he held by half a knight's fee, of Richard lord Talbot and Anchoret his wife, 21 R. 2. Thomas Raleigh, his son and heir, died seized of this manor 6 H. 4. as did Walter Raleigh, son and heir of Thomas, 8 H. 5. William Rawleigh and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the manor and advowson of Edgworth 28 H. 6. of which William died seized in the reign of king Edward the Fourth. Sir Edward Rawleigh, son of William, died possessed of this manor 5 H. 8. and George Rawleigh died seized of it, and of the advowson of Edgworth 37 H. 8. which were held by foccage of sir Henry Jerningham, as of the manor of Painf-wick. Sir George Rawleigh and Edward his son sold the manor to sir Henry Pool of Caperton, 44 Eliz. who was lord of it in the year 1608, and died in 1616. Out of this name and family it passed not long after. Nathaniel Ridler, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. From him it descended to Thomas Ridler, esq; who left three daughters, heiresses, 1. Elizabeth, married to William Minn, of Charlton-King's, esq; 2. Anne, the present lady of the manor; 3. Barbara, married to the reverend Mr. Richard Brereton. The arms of Ridler are, Argent, a bull passant gules.

John Mandevil was seized of lands in Edgworth and Painf-wick 34 E. 3. John Timbrel levied a fine of lands in this parish 24 H. 7. A tenement and water-mill here belonged to the abbey of Gloucester 2 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of onehouse, worth 100*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Richard Brereton, in right of his wife, is patron and incumbent.

LIES in the lower division of the hundred of Berkeley, eleven miles north from Bristol, ten north-west from Chipping-Sodbury, and twenty-eight south-westward from Gloucester. It is situated in the lower part of the vale, on the east side of the Severn, where the river is two miles over. And tho' the greater part of the houses stand upwards of a mile from it, the inhabitants are subject to agues, and disorders particularly incident to countries situate upon large rivers; yet in a less degree than some of their neighbours in the marshes.

There is a small camp, with a single ditch, on the hill eastward of the village, peculiarly well adapted to observe every thing passing on the river, with a full view of the country on the other side of it. It was probably thrown up by the Romans, to preserve a communication between the Trajectus at Oldbury, and the country about the Bristol Avon.

In Domesday-book the name is written Eldbertone, which signifies the old barton, or farm.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It appears by the abstract from the above mentioned record, given under Berkeley, that five hides in this place belonged to the manor of Berkeley; and went with that manor, by the gift of king Henry the Second, to Robert Fitz-Harding.

He settled this manor on his second son Robert, in marriage with Alice de Gaunt. Robert and Alice had issue Maurice, and a daughter Eva¹, married to Thomas Harpetre, descended from Gouel de Percheval, sometimes called Gouel de Yvery, surnamed Lupus, who attended the Conqueror in the invasion of England, and was rewarded with several manors, among others, with that of West Harpetre in the county of Somerset. Maurice, by his deed, bearing date at Portsmouth, gave² to the king, then passing into Britany, his lordships of Weston, Beverstone, and Albrieton, and died³ without issue the same year. But it is probable that he did not dispose of the inheritance; for the greatest part thereof went to the issue of his sister Eva, whose son Robert assumed the surname of Gournay, and 15 H. 3. had livery of all his⁴ lands in Somersetshire and Gloucestershire, except Beverstan, Weston, Rudewic, Oure, and Albricton; which, however, he not long after obtained of the king.

John Tropyne¹ died seized of the manor of Aylbrington juxta Olviston, by the service of the tenth part of a knight's fee, 11 E. 2. Sir John Walsh died seized of Elberton 38 H. 8. And Maurice Walsh, his son and heir, who married Bridged Vawse, had livery thereof the same year.

George Smith, esq; was lord of this manor in 1608. It passed afterwards to sir Thomas Cann of Stoke-Bishop, and from him to Cann Jefferis, esq; who dying without issue, it went by the marriage of his sister, to Henry Lyppingcott, esq; who is the present lord of the manor. See Stoke-Bishop.

Lands in Ailberton belonged to the monastery of St. Augustine at Bristol, and at the dissolution, were granted as^k part of the endowment of the bishoprick of Bristol, 34 H. 8.

Lands called Priestcroft in Aleberton, alias Elberton, were granted to Edward Sallus 3 Jac.

Mr. Goldney has a good house and estate in this place, which formerly belonged to the Browns, and afterwards to lord Vaughan.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Bristol, worth about 60*l.* a year. The rectory and advowson of Allberton, formerly belonging to St. Augustine's monastery at Bristol, were granted at the dissolution, to Paul, bishop of Bristol¹, and his successors for ever, 34 H. 8. The bishop of Bristol is patron; the rev. Mr. Camplin incumbent. In the year 1767, the church of Elberton was consolidated with that of Olveston.

The bishop of Bristol has given the impropriation to the curate of Horfield.

The church consists of a nave, and an aisle on each side, with a spire in the middle; and hath a very large church-yard. From both aisles, are square holes cut through the pillars which support the roof, in a direction to the altar, that the congregation might the more conveniently see the priest elevate the host, in time of mass.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a large stone coffin in the south cross aisle, in which 'tis supposed one of the Walshes lies buried.

There is a flat stone in the body of the church, with a plate of brass, and this inscription:

Here lyeth the Body of Joseph Fricker jun^r. Son of Joseph Fricker of Tockington. Qui obiit Aug. 27 Anno 1707.—Then follow three verses, viz. Job. xiv, 1. in Hebrew; Ephes. v, 14. in Greek; Eccles. xii, 1. in Latin.

There were 26 houses, and about 104 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1700, I counted upon the parish register 36 baptisms, and 33 burials; and in other ten years, beginning with 1760, 18 baptisms, and 37 burials. From which I judge they have baptized chiefly at some other church. The inhabitants are now about 122.

IS a small parish in the hundred of Rapsgate, in the Cotswold country, eight miles north-westward from Cirencester, seven south from Cheltenham, and ten east from Gloucester.

The turnpike-road from Cirencester to Cheltenham leads through it. The parish consists chiefly of a stone-brash arable land, with a little pasture. The greater part of it lies bleak, and much exposed to the wind from every quarter, which so impedes vegetation, that the harvest is later here than in any other part of the county.

Here is a quarry of very excellent stone to endure the weather. It cuts easy at first, but hardens in the air, and is very durable. And I am inclined to think that the place took its name from the shallow stony soil; for the antient name is Elchestane, perhaps from El, a place, and stone, i. e. the stony place.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds Elchestane in Respigete hundred. Two Leuini [persons of the name of Leuinus] held it for two manors. There are four hides and a half; and in Coleborne one hide and a half. Eluinus held it for a manor, and these three thanes could go where they pleased. In demean are two plow-tillages, and five villeins, and two bordars, with three plow-tillages and a half. There are four servi, and ten acres of meadow; a wood half a mile long, and two quarters broad.'

' One knight holds a moiety of this manor of Ansfrid, and has two plow-tillages there, and five villeins, and two bordars, with three plow-tillages; and another knight holds Coleborne of him, and has half a plow-tillage there, and two villeins, and two bordars, with one plow-tillage, and a mill of 50*d.* This [manor] was worth 8*l.* now 7*l.* and 10*s.* Domesday-book, p. 78.

The manor of Elkstone was granted to John le Brun 50 H. 3. and John his son was seized thereof 31 E. 1. John de Acton was seized of this manor 8 E. 2. And George de Acton having forfeited his his lands by rebellion, Hugh Mustel became possessed of Elkestone, of which he died seized 19 E. 2. Richard de Bellers held the manor 3 E. 3. but it could only be in trust for sir John de Acton, then under age, who had been restored to all his father's lands 1 E. 3. He died without issue 17 E. 3. leaving his cousin Maud his heir. She was married to Nicholas Poyntz, whose son and heir, sir John Poyntz, was seized of this manor 1 & 6 R. 2. and it continued many generations in his family.

James Huntly was lord of this manor in the year 1608; but lord Craven is the present proprietor. His lordship's arms are, Argent, a fess between six crosses crozlets fitchy gules. CREST. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a griffon of the 2d. beaked Or. SUPPORTERS. Two griffons ermine. MOTTO. VIRTUS IN ACTIONE CONSISTIT.

HAMLETS. 1. Cockleford, lying about a mile north-westward from the church. In this hamlet, in the road from Cirencester to Cheltenham, lies Cockleford-hill, well known to travellers for the difficulty of the ascent, and badness of the road.

2. Combend, so called from its lying at the top of a comb, or little valley, about a mile eastward of the church. Thomas Estcourt died seized of the manor or farm of Colescombe, alias Combend, alias Combescottle 41 Eliz. which, with the manor of Winston, he had settled on his son Thomas, who married Mary, the daughter of William Savage. Esch. This estate passed afterwards to the Hortons. Thomas Horton, esq; died seized of it at the beginning of this century; after whom, William Blanch, esq; became possessed of it, who dying without issue, in the year 1766, bequeathed all his estates to his wife, during her life, and after her death, to Mr. James Rogers of Gloucester, and his heirs. Mr. Samuel Walbank of London, wine-merchant, married Mrs. Blanch, and holds this estate in right of his wife.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth 100 l. a year; lord Craven is patron, the reverend Mr. Lloyd the present incumbent.

The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is small and neat, with a handsome tower at the west end, and four bells.

Fifty-one acres of inclosed ground, and fifty acres in the common-fields belong to the glebe.

At the beginning of this century there were 35 houses in this parish, and about 160 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1760, there are registered 71 baptisms, and 32 burials. The present number of houses is 40, of inhabitants 178.

E L M O R E.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Dudston and King's Barton, eight miles north-west from Stroud, five north-eastward from Newnham, and four south-westward from Gloucester.

Elmor, from the British Allmor, so likewise Armor, signifies a low situation near the sea, or some great river; and the name was given with great propriety to this parish, which is almost peninsulated (if I may so express myself) by the Severn, and often suffers considerable damage from the overflowing of that river. But the notion of its being so called from the great number of eels taken in the moors, is puerile and vulgar.

The channel of the river winding here, and being so much narrower than it is a few miles below, causes the spring-tides to come in with a very great head, sometimes eight or ten feet high.

The boundaries of the parish are remarkably confused and irregular. It is natural to suppose that the Severn would have been the boundary between such places as lie on the opposite sides of it; but here is an exception; for there are some lands at a place called Elmore's Back, on this side the river, which belong to the parish of Minsterworth.

They have some tillage land in common-field, but the greater part is pasturage; for the soil being rich, and subject to floods, is improper for tillage. The air is not remarkably unwholesome for the situation; but the inhabitants suffer the topical disorders generally incident to places lying on large rivers and stagnated water.

A rock, called Stone-Bench, runs across the Severn here, but the water is seldom low enough to make it fordable. Here is also a place of deep water, called Groundless-Pit, (made by the floods breaking the sea-wall) commonly, tho' erroneously, said to have no bottom.

These are the chief particulars which distinguish this parish; but Leland speaks of another, in the Third Vol. of his Itinerary, published by Hearne. Mr. Gysse, saith he, bath at his manor of Elmore in Glocestresbir, Okes, the rootes whereof he converted into hard stones within the ground. From this account the reader may suppose, that the trunks and branches above the ground remained in their natural state, at least, if they did not retain the power of vegetation. I have made some inquiry as to the fact, and find that there is no such thing at present, nor any tradition of what he mentions. I never heard of an instance of the roots of a live tree, nor indeed of any tree, petrifying in the place where it grew; and it is extraordinary that the learned and judicious antiquary should be so much imposed imposed on as to believe and report this incredible story.

Sir William Guise has a large, handsome seat here, standing on an eminence, with a chapel in it, and good offices and gardens; but he resides at Rendcombe.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The parish or manor of Elmore is not mention'd in Domesday-book, but at the time when that record was compiled, it must have passed by some other name, or was considered as a part only of another parish. However, it soon afterwards acquired the present name, for it is expressly mentioned in a register book of the priory of Lanthony, near Gloucester, that Hubert de Burgo^m, earl of Kent, and justice of England, by his deed, gave to the said priory tithe of lampreys, and all fish, taken in his gorges of Elmore. Teste Richard, bishop of Chichester, the king's chancellor.

John de Burgh, son of Hubert, by his wife Margaret, daughter of William, king of Scotland, held the manor of Elmore, with free warren, 44 H. 3. the year in which his mother died.

Nicholas de Gyse, son of Robert, of the family of Gyse of Asple-Gyse, or Gowiz, in Bedfordshire, married a near relation of John de Burgh, and had with her the manor of Elmore, by the gift of the said John, and assumed the arms of De Burgh in honour of that family. Aunselme de Gyse, son of Nicholas, had a fresh grant of the manor of Elmore, with its appurtenances, from John de Burgo, 2 E. 1. at the yearly rent of a clove-gilliflower, and proved his right to free warren, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

John de Gyse, knight, by his deed dated at Elmore, on the feast of St. Vincent, 31 E. 3. grants the manor of Elmore, and the pool there, to William Haybarare, chaplain, Robert le Little of Coveley, clerk, and Richard Stout of Heyhamstude. And the king gave licence to those three persons to grant the same manor, with the appurtenances, valued at 12*l.* a year, to the priory of Lanthony near Gloucester, for the uses therein mentioned, which they did by their deed 32 E. 3.

A re-feoffement was made, by William, the prior, and the convent of Lanthony, to John de Gyse, knight, of their manor of Elmore, for his life, dated Apr. 5, 32 E. 3. and they engage to pay him 20*l.* a year for his life; and that he shall have twelve yards of the suit of the principal clerks; also one robe for his esquire, of the suit of the esquires of the prior; and one robe of the suit of the free tenants, for his chamberlain. And they also engage to celebrate one canon perpetually for the souls of his father and mother, of himself, and of the lady Joan his wife; and that they shall have a solemn anniversary, with mass, and the office of the dead, for ever.

But it is probable that the inheritance of the manor did not pass by the above grant to the priory, for Anselm Gyse died seized of Elmore 13 H. 4. as did his son Reginald 8 H. 5. And from them it descended to sir William Guise, bar^t, the present lord of the manor, whose arms are given under Rendcombe, the place of his residence.

This manor was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, and of Joan his wife, as of the honour of Hereford, 32 & 46 E. 3. and of Henry lord Stafford, as of the same honour, 5 Mariae.

By an inquisition 23 E. 1. it was found, that the king was seized of four tenements in this parish, and the priory of Lanthony was seized of two; which latter, after the dissolution of the priory, were granted to William Doddington 7 Eliz.

The abbey of Gloucester held lands in Elmore, which were granted, at the dissolution, to Joan Cook, widow, 31 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester. It is an impropriation belonging to sir William Guise, who allows the curate the parson's tithes and a house. The curacy was augmented by lot in 1746. Sir William Guise is patron, Mr. Chester the present incumbent.

In the year 1137, Milo constable of Gloucester gave the tithes of Elmore to the priory of Lanthony, and two years afterwards, he gave a meadow in Elmore to the same house, all which the priory enjoyed 'till it was dissolved.

The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a double building, supported by pillars in the middle, and has an embattled tower, with five bells, at the west end.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On the top of a raised tomb, in the south chancel, is a rude engraving of the figure of a man, and round the edge, in old characters, Hic jacet Johes Gyse et Alicia uxor ejus qui quidem Johannes feliciter obiit in Milefimo cccc lxxxv quor animabus propicietur Deus Amen.

On a black marble monument, this inscription:

This for the Worthy Memory of St. William Guise, who deceased Sept. 19, 1642. And of William his eldest Son by his first Wife, Margaret, Daughter to Christopher Kenn, Esq; who married Cicelia, Daughter to John Dennis of Puckle-Church, Esq; by whom he had 4 Sons and 3 Daughters. Hee deceased August 26, 1653. — Arms, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Gules; 2. Gules, a fejs between six billets Or; 3. Sable, a fejs between three martlets argent.

^m The chronicles of his time are full of the praise of this man, who was looked upon by the people as the father of his country. Having offended king H. 3. he took sanctuary in the chapel of Boisars, which the king hearing, sent one Canecumbe, with three hundred men, to apprehend him. A smith being called to set a pair of gyves, or fetters, upon his legs, asked who he was; and when he understood him to be Hubert de Burgh, What, said he, shall I fetter him that hath so often delivered this kingdom from enemies? Whatever may be the consequence, I will never do it.

On another monument,

In Memory of William Guise, Esq; of the City of Gloucester. He was the eldest Son of Major Henry Guise of Winterbourn in this County, and Grandson of William Guise, Esq; of this Parish. He departed y^s Life August the 28th 1716, in the 68th Year of his Age, and lyeth here interr'd with William his 4th Son.

Also Dorothea his Wife departed this Life June the 12th 1738, aged 76. A Lady remarkable for her strict Piety, diffusive Charity, and engaging Courteousness of Behaviour, flowing from the truest Sentiments of Religion, Goodness, and Humanity. She was the only Daughter of John Snell, esq; Lord of the Manor of Uffeton in the County of Warwick; which Manor, with Lands to the Value of near a Thousand Pounds a Year, he gave by Will to support the Interest of Episcopacy in Scotland. But this Application of his intended Benefaction being defeated by the Union, a decree was obtained in the High Court of Chancery for settling the Estate on Baliol College in Oxford for ever, to maintain, support, and educate certain scholars to be sent thither by the University of Glasgow, allowing to each Fifty Pounds a Year, for ten Years. Only eight partake at present of these Exhibitions, though the Estate may be deemed capable of supporting a greater Number.

She had Issue three Sons and one Daughter. John, the eldest, died aged 21 Years. He was a Gentleman of a very extraordinary Genius, and eminently studious, having in that early Time of Life acquired a perfect Knowledge of all the polite Languages, antient and modern. William, the second Son, died aged 12 Years. Henry, the third Son, is still living, and caused this Inscription; & Theodosia, the Daughter, was married to Dennis Cook of Highnam, esq; and lies interred in Highnam Chapel.—Arms. 1st Guise, impaling 2d. Quarterly gules and azure, over all a cross fery Or, for Snell.

On a flat stone,

Here lieth the Body of Henry Guise, esq; of the City of Gloucester (youngest Son of William Guise, esq; who lies interred in this Chancel) a Gentleman in his private Conversation, well known for his engaging Affability, in Public for his strict Administration of Justice. He died much lamented, the 23^d of October 1749, aged 51.—Arms. Quarterly, 1st and 4th Guise, 2d and 3d Snell. On a scutcheon of pretence, Or, a chevron chequy gules and azure between three cinquefoils of the last, for Cook.

There is a large vault or burying-place in the church-yard, for sir William Guise's family, inclosed with palisadoes, and covered with a pyramidal roof, supported by arches springing from each corner.

Benefaction.

Three pounds a year, part of the large benefaction of the late Mr. Cox of Upton St. Leonard, to several places, is assigned to the poor of this parish.

In the year 1562, there were only 36 householders in this parish; but according to sir Robert Atkins, about the beginning of this century, there were 70 houses, and about 300 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. And there is now about the same number of inhabitants.

IS a small parish in the vale, lying part in the lower division of Westminster hundred, and part in the lower division of Derhurst hundred, five miles south-east from Tewkesbury, four north-west from Cheltenham, and eight northward from Gloucester.

The parish consists principally of good arable, with some pasture land. The little river Swilyate runs through it, down to Tewkesbury, where it empties itself into the Severn.

In old records the name is written Almundestan, Aylmundestan, and Aylmundston, but why it was so called is uncertain.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

In Domesday-book, Elmston is set down as a member of the large manor of Derhurst, then belonging to the abbey of Westminster, where it is said, 'Brictric held one hide at Almundestan. Reimbald holds it.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

Robert Fitz-Haman took the manor from the abbey of Westminster in the reign of king William the Second; but Lawrence the 25th abbat recovered it by a suit at law, in the reign of king Henry the second, and it continued in possession of the abbey till its dissolution; when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Westminster, who are the present lords of the manor. The church stands in Elmston, but there is no house in this part of the parish.

TITHING and HAMLETS.

1. Uckington is a tithing and manor in this parish, lying in the lower division of Derhurst hundred. It has its own proper constable, with a tithingman under him for the parish of Staverton, which is a member of this manor. The soil of part of this hamlet is a very loose sand, but it bears good crops of corn.

In Domesday-book, under the title Terra Sci Dyonisii Parisii, it is said, 'The church of St. Dennis holds five hides in Hochinton, in Derhest hundred.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

The priory of Derhurst, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis, was seized of Hochington 56 H. 3. The earl of Oxford was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century; from whose heirs it was purchased by Mr. Rogers of Dowdeswell, about sixty years ago; and Mrs. Rogers, widow of the late John Rogers, esq; is the present proprietor, and holds a court leet for her manor at Uckington, where the inhabitants of Staverton attend. For her arms, see Dowdeswell.

Mr. Thomas Buckle had a good estate in this tithing, at the beginning of the present century, which is now the property of his grandson Mr. John Buckle. His arms are, A chevron between three annulets.

This tithing is joined with Staverton in the payment of taxes.

2. Hardwick is a hamlet and manor in this parish, and lies in the lower part of Westminster hundred. It is generally called Elmston-Hardwick, to distinguish it from the parish of Hardwick, near Gloucester. It consisted of five hides, and was a member of Derhurst, as appears by Domesday-book, p. 72.

Henry Eden and Margaret his wife levied a fine of Elmston-Hardwick, to John Seaborn and John Chilkel, Chikel, 21 H. 7. Maurice lord Berkeley died seized of it 15 H. 8. as did Thomas lord Berkeley, his brother, in the 24th year of the same reign, whose son Thomas lord Berkeley had livery of it the same year. Livery of this manor was also granted to Richard Ligon 9 Eliz.

Richard Dowdeswell, of Pool-court in Worcester-shire, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century; as was the late right honourable William Dowdeswell, esq; at the time of his death, in 1775. See Corse.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth 40*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron; Mr. Freeman is the present incumbent.

The impropriation, worth 170*l.* a year, formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, but now it is vested in Jesus college, Oxford, and Mrs. Chester is lessee under the college.

Tithes of corn and hay in Elmondeston belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and were granted to Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

The church is large, with an aisle on the south side, and a handsome embattled tower at the west end.

Lands worth 2*l.* 12*s.* a year are given to repair the church.

F A I R F O R D.

THIS parish is of a middle size. It lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, four miles distant west from Leachlade, eight east from Cirencester, and twenty-three south-eastward from Gloucester.

It is a flat part of the country, affording very little variety. A fine gravel lies near the surface, which makes it dry and healthy. The arable lands produce good corn, and the meadow and pasture ground, of which there is a due proportion, is rich and luxuriant. The river Coln runs thro' it.

I know it has been said, that the place takes its name from the Fair Ford that was there before the bridge was built over the river. It is difficult to remove opinions that have been commonly received, and uncontroverted; and tho' I am well convinced of that not being the true etymology, it may not be easy to satisfy others; but I submit my sentiments to the candour of competent judges.

The antient and proper name is Fareforde, where fare does not signify fair, or beautiful, but a passage, in which sense we even now sometimes use it; and is derived from the Saxon verb papan, to go to pass. The name was suggested by, and is descriptive of, the situation of the place, and signifies the passage at the ford. The river produces excellent trout, and empties itself into the Thames, a little below.

The parish includes a little town, consisting of two streets, with a market, tho' not much frequented, on Thursdays; and two fairs, held, since the style was altered, on May 14, and Nov. 12, for cattle and pedlery. Another fair, said to have been formerly held on the 18th of July, is now discontinued. The turnpike-road from Cirencester to London leading through it, there are two or three inns for the accommodation of travellers. But the town is most distinguished by the handsome seat belonging to Mrs. Lamb, and by the fine painted glass windows of the parish church. The earl of Hillsborough was born in the manor house, on which account his lordship has done the place the honour of taking the title of viscount from it.

Mrs. Lamb's seat stands about a quarter of a mile above the town. It is a good house, with a deer-park, and gardens well laid out, and kept in proper order. There is a vista from the north front, terminated by an obelisk about a mile from the house. A fine plantation stretches along the east bank of the Coln, with pleasant serpentine walks, and openings from several seats and buildings, to take in views of the Wiltshire hills and other distant objects.

The house was built by Mr. Barker, grandfather to the present proprietor, but modernized and much improved by the late Mr. Lamb. Dr. Parsons relates, that at the building of it, many urns and medals were found, the former broken by the workmen in digging, without saying what the medals were. And as this happened in the Doctor's time, I rely upon his authority. Sir Robert Atkyns took his account from Dr. Parsons's Collections, and enlarged the sense, in saying, that medals and urns were often dug up; and our topographical writers have followed him. But upon strict inquiry, I am assured, that none have been found here, except the above. These valuables were most probably concealed, previously to a skirmish which happened hereabout, not unlikely in the time of the civil wars between the Yorkists and Lancastrians, tho' our historians have not taken notice of it. Yet, that there was an engagement is certain, from two tumuli, little more than half a mile from the house, which having been opened about the end of the last century, were found to contain many human skulls and bones of the slain. But there is no vestige of an encampment in the parish.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

King William the First having seized this manor into his own hands, it stands under the title

Fairford.]

Terra Regis in Domesday-book, which gives the following particulars :

Brictric held Fareforde in Bristoldesberg hundred. There were twenty-one hides in the time of king Edward, and fifty-six villeins, and nine bordars, with thirty plow-tillages. There is a priest who held one virgate of land of the manor, and three mills of 32s. 6d. There are now only thirteen hides, and one yard-land. Queen Maud held this manor, and Hunphry paid her 38*l.* and 10s. by tale. The queen gave four hides of the land of this manor to John the chamberlain. There are two plow-tillages, and nine villeins, and four bordars, with four plow-tillages. There are fourteen servi, who pay 9*l.* for their farm. The queen also gave Baldwin three hides and three virgates of the same land, and he has there two plow-tillages, and five servi, and one free man, who has one plow-tillage, and two bordars. It is worth 4*l.* Those who held these two estates in the time of king Edward, could not withdraw themselves from the chief of the manor.' Domesday-book, p. 69.

It is uncertain who had the first grant of it from the crown; but Philip of Worcester was seized of Fairford 5 Joh. as was George de Sunevil the following year.

The manor and town of Fairford belonged to Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, 7 H. 3. and Gilbert de Clare proved his right in Quo warranto, to markets, fairs, and a court set therein, 15 E. 1.

Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, died seized of this manor 7 E. 2. and left no surviving issue. Hugh le Dispencer the younger married Elianor, eldest sister and coheirefs to the last earl, and with her had the manor of Fairford. Hugh le Dispencer, their son, succeeded, but died without issue; whereby Edward Dispencer, son to Edward, who was brother of the last Hugh, became possessed of his manor, of which he died seized 49 E. 3. He left Thomas Dispencer his son, who was attainted and executed for treason 1 H. 4. Richard was son of Thomas. He died before he was fourteen years old, and left two sisters; Elizabeth, who died in her infancy, and Isabel, married first to Richard Beauchamp, lord Bergavenny, and secondly to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. And the manor continued in the Beauchamp family, 'till king Henry the Seventh prevailed upon Anne, the great heirefs thereof, and widow of Richard Nevil, the great earl of Warwick, to convey it to him and his heirs male, in the third year of his reign.

John Tame, a merchant of London, purchased the manor of the king, and levied a fine thereof 15 H. 7. He married Alice, daughter of Mr. Winiho, and died seized of Fairford 15 H. 7. Sir Edmond Tame, his son, succeeded him, and married Agnes, daughter of sir Edward Grevil. He was three times high sheriff of the county of Gloucester, and died 26 H. 8. Edmond Tame, son and heir of sir Edmond, married Catherine, daughter of sir William Dennis. He was twice high sheriff of this county, and died without issue 36 H. 8. His wife surviving him, held Fairford in jointure. She was afterwards married to sir Walter Buckle, who procured an additional grant of the manor of Fairford, and of all the lands in this parish, then lately belonging to the earl of Warwick, and formerly to the Dispencers, 38 H. 8. The last mentioned Edmond Tame left three sisters, coheirefs; Margaret, married to sir Humphry Stafford; Alice, married to sir Thomas Verney; and Isabel, the wife of Lewis Watkin. They and their descendants sold the manor to sir Henry Unton and John Croke, from whom it was purchased by the Tracys. Sir John Tracy was lord of the manor in the year 1608.

Andrew Barker, esq; purchased the manor of the Tracys, and was succeeded therein by his son Samuel Barker, who was high sheriff of this county in the year 1691. He married the daughter of Mr. Hubbard of London, and left two infant daughters, coheirefs. One died unmarried; Esther, the surviving daughter, was married to James Lamb, of Hackney, in the county of Middlesex, esq. He died without issue in the year 1761, and his widow is the present lady of the manor. The arms of Barker, are, Argent, five escallops in cross Or.

Sir Walter Dennis and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Fairford 15 H. 7.

Leland says, sir Edmund Tame of Fairford came out of the house of Tame of Stowel. He takes frequent occasion to speak handsomely of the family; and says, Fairford never flourished afore the Cumming of the Tames onto it. Sir Edmond Tame had to his second wife, Elizabeth, sister to John Morgan, of Monmouthshire, who was a colonel in the reign of king Henry the Seventh. This alliance induced the colonel to purchase an estate in Fairford, and to reside there, and was the occasion that Edmond has been a frequent Christian name in the family.

Edmond Morgan was the son of John. He had likewise a son Edmond, who married Margaret, daughter of — Sadler of Purton. Walter Morgan, son of the last Edmond, married Elizabeth, daughter of — Betterton of Fairford; and had issue Edmond, who married Mary, daughter and heirefs of Robert Savory, of Hannington, a family which continued in that place from the time of king John, 'till towards the end of the last century; and then the estate was carried, by the above marriage, into the name and family of Morgan. The last Edmond Morgan had a son Edmond, who was an officer in the king's army at the time of the great rebellion. He married Mary, daughter of Edward Pleydell, of Cricklade, esq; by whom he had a numerous issue, among whom were Robert and James, both proprietors of estates at Fairford. Edmond Morgan was son of Robert, and Charles the only son of Edmond. He died in the year 1754, leaving two sons, 1. Robert, now a captain of a ship in the service of the East-India company, who married a daughter of captain White, of Devonshire. 2. Charles-Tyrrel Morgan, an eminent barrister, who married Britannia, daughter of John Raymond, of London, esq. Mr. Charles Morgan had also four daughters. Their arms are, Sable, a chevron between three spears beads argent.

The house and estate in Fairford which belonged to this family, have lately been purchased by Mr. Raymond.

TITHINGS. 1. The Borough, which has its proper constable.

2. East End, which has a tithingman.

3. Milltown End, which has also a tithingman.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Fairford. It is a vicarage worth about 150*l.* a year. The presentation is in the dean and chapter of Gloucester. Mr. Evans is the present incumbent.

Part of the advowson of the church of Fairford was granted to Matthew de Winterborn, 18 Joh. The parsonage belonged afterwards to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and upon the dissolution of that house, was granted to the chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8.

The impropriation, worth 300*l.* a year, is in lease to Mr. Oldisworth. All the corn tithes belong to it; the vicar hath all other tithes. When the commonable places in the parish were inclosed, about five or six years ago, the vicar had allotted to him, in lieu of what he before enjoyed, about half an acre of orcharding near his house; 4*a.* 1*r.* 9*p.* in the Moor, and 4*a.* 2*r.* in Priest Hurst, both pieces of meadow ground; and 19*a.* 39*p.* of arable land.

The church is a large and beautiful building, 125 feet long, and 55 broad. It consists of a spacious body, and two proportionable ailes, very handsomely paved in chequers of blue and white stone, and neatly pewed. It has a handsome tower in the middle, ornamented with pinnacles, and several scutcheons of coat armour. On the south side is Cbecky, bearing a chevron. On the east side, three chevronels, for Clare, earl of Gloucester. There are three chancels and a vestry. That on the north belongs to the lord of the manor, the middle to the impropriator, and the south chancel to the vicar. The middle chancel is fitted up with stalls like the choir of some cathedrals. In the south porch of the church are the arms of Tame, Argent, a dragon combatant vert with a lion rampant Azure, crowned proper.

A View of Fairford Church from the ESE Entrance of the Churchyard.

John Tame having taken a ship bound for Rome, in which was a large quantity of very curious painted glass, built this church in the year 1493, for the sake of placing the glass in it, and dedicated it to the virgin Mary. The figures were designed by that eminent master, Albert Durer, to whom the greatest improvements in painting on glass are attributed. There are some curious pieces of perspective. The colours are very lively, and some of the figures so well finished, that sir Anthony Vandyke affirmed, that the pencil could not exceed them.

There are twenty-eight windows, exhibiting the following subjects :

First window. The serpent tempting Eve; God appearing to Moses in the fiery bush; the angel conducting Joshua to war; Gideon's fleece; the queen of Sheba trying Solomon's wisdom, and offering him presents.

2d. The salutation of Zacharias and Elizabeth; the birth of John the Baptist; Mary visiting Elizabeth; Joseph and Mary contracted.

3d. The angel Gabriel's salutation of Mary; Ave Maria plena [gratiæ] dominus te [cum]; the birth of our Saviour; the Epiphany, or the wise men offering him presents; the purification of the virgin mother; the circumcision of our Saviour.

and Simeon receiving him in the temple, with an inside view of the temple.

4th. Joseph and Mary flying to Egypt; the assumption of the virgin Mary; Christ disputing with the doctors in the temple.

5th. Advent, viz. Our Saviour riding to Jerusalem; Zacheus; the multitude crying Hosanna, and singing, Gloria, laus, et honor tibi sit. Our Saviour praying in the garden; Judas going to betray him; Pilate and the high priest sitting in judgment against him; their scourging him, and compelling him to bear his cross; in the upper part of the window, he is crucified between two thieves.

6th. Joseph of Arimathea and Nichodemus taking down the body, and placing it in the sepulchre; a representation of the wonderful darkness; St. Michael and his angels fighting the dragon and the fallen angels, with Belzebub looking through a fiery grate.

7th. The burial of our Saviour; the angel that rolled away the stone, &c. with perspective views of buildings in the garden; the transfiguration; Moses and Elias; St. Peter, James, and John, with their three tabernacles; Jesus appearing to his mother, with this salutation, Salve sancta parens.

8th. Christ appearing to two disciples going to Emmaus, and afterwards to the twelve apostles.

9th. Jesus appearing to his disciples fishing in the sea of Tiberias; the miraculous draught of fishes; his ascension into heaven from the mount of Olives; the holy ghost descending on his disciples in the likeness of a dove.

10th. In four compartments, 1. Peter, with a scroll round his head, on which is written, Credo in deum patrem omnipotentem, creatorem celi et terræ.

2. St. Andrew, Et in Jesum Christum filium ejus unicum dominum nostrum. 3. St. James, Qui conceptus est de spiritu sancto natus ex Maria virgine. 4. St. John, Passus sub Pontio Pilato crucifixus mortuus et sepultus.

11th. 1. St. Thomas, Descendit ad inferna tertio die resurrexit a mortuis. 2. St. James, Ascendit ad celos sedit ad dexteram dei patris omnipotentis. 3. St. Philip, Inde venturus iudicare vivos et mortuos. 4. St. Bartholomew, Credo in spiritum sanctum.

12th. 1. St. Matthias, Sanctam ecclesiam catholicam sanctum communionem. 2. St. Simon, Remissionem peccatorum. 3. St. Jude, Carnis resurrectionem. 4. St. Matthew, Et vitam eternam. Amen.

13th. The primitive fathers, St. Jerom, St. Gregory, St. Ambrose, and St. Augustin.

14th. King David sitting in judgment against the Amalakitè for slaying Saul.

15th. Is the great west window, representing the day of judgment. In the upper part, Christ sits on the rainbow, incompassed with cherubims. Below, St. Michael weighs a wicked person in the scale, against a good one in the other, and tho' the devil endeavours to turn the scale, the good outweighs the bad. The dead are rising out of their graves. From the mouth of an angel, receiving a saint into heaven, proceeds a label, on which is written, Omnis spe-s lauda d'um. St. Peter, with the key, lets the blessed into heaven, who, having passed him, are cloathed in white, and have crowns of glory. In another part, is a representation of hell, and the great devil, with red and white teeth, three eyes, scaly legs and face. There is Dives praying for a drop of water, to cool his tongue; and Lazarus is placed in contrast among the blessed, in Abraham's bosom; with many other devices, agreeable to the gross ideas of the designer. This window is of high estimation.

16th. A little broken. Solomon determining the live child to the harlot; Midas king of Phrygia, with ass's ears; the story of Sampson, Delilah, and the Philistines; Jewish senators; and a piece of glass said to represent rubies and diamonds.

17th. The four evangelists, with their symbols. In the three next windows are the twelve prophets, with scrolls round their heads, whereon are written the following select parts of their prophecies.

18th. Hosea, O tua mors ero tua [not exact] c. xiii. 14. Amos, Qui edificat in celum ascensione. c. ix. 6. Malachi, - - - udam ad vos judicio, et ero testis velox. c. iii. 5. Joel, In valle Josephat judicabit omnes gentes. c. iii. 2.

19th. Zephaniah, Invocabuntur omnes eum, & servient ei. c. iii. 9. Micah, Eum odium habueris dimitte. Ezekiel, O v'am vos de sepulchris vestris pop'le meus. c. xxxvii. 12. Obadiah, Et erit reg'um d'ni amen. v. 21.

20th. Jeremiah, Datorem invocabitis qui fecit & indidit selos. David, Deus dixit, en filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te. Ps. ii. 7. Isaiah, Ecce virgo concipiet & pariet filium. vii. 14. Zechariah, Suscitabo filios tuos. ix. 13.

The remaining eight windows are in the body of the church. In the four on the north side, are the persecutors of the church, with devils over their heads, viz.

21st. Domitian, Trajan, and Adrian.

22d. Antonine, Nero, and Marcus Aurelius.

23d. Herod, Severus, and Maximinus.

24th. Decius, Annanias, and Caleb.

25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th, (on the south side) exhibit twelve antient worthies, preservers of the church, viz. Philippus, Valerianus, &c. with angels over them.

In the historical pieces, are represented many other figures and circumstances not mentioned in this short account, but which are very proper appendages to the main subjects. The whole was very happily preserved from the fury of men of an intemperate zeal in the great rebellion, by the care of Mr. Oldisworth, the impropiator, and others; not by turning the figures upside down, as some suppose, (for they never minded which end was upwards, if they were but images and paintings) but by securing the glass in some private place, 'till the restoration, when it was put up again.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

In the north aisle is a raised monument, with the figures of a man and woman lying along on the top, for Roger Ligon, esq; and his wife, who had two husbands before she was married to him; first, Edmond Tame, esq; and secondly, fir Walter Buckle, privy counsellor to queen Elizabeth, who all lie buried in the church.

On a large flat stone of grey marble, are the figures of fir Edmond Tame, and his two wives, on brass plates; and upon plates of brass round the edge, it is thus written in antient black characters, † Of youre charite pray for the soule of Edmond Tame knyght here under buried which decessid the first day of October in the yere of oure lord god a thousand cccccxxxiiij and for the soule of Agnes his first Wife which decessid the xxvi day of July an^o es & all xpēn soules Ihū have mercy Amen. — On the dexter side, at top, are the arms of Tame, as before. On the sinister side, the same coat, impaling, Sable, on a cross within a bordure ingrailed Or, five pellets, for Grevil.

Under an arch, between the north and middle chancels, there is a very large, handsome tomb of grey marble, polish'd, and in excellent preservation, for John Tame, esq; who built the church. The effigies of him and his wife are engraved on brass plates at top, and this writing stands at their feet:

For Ihūs loue pray for me: I may not pray nowe pray ye:
With a pater noster & an ave: That my paynys releffyd may be.

Round the verge of the top stone,

† Orate pro animabus Johis Tame Armigeri et Alicie uxoris eius qui quidem Johēs obiit octauo die Mensis Maij anno dnī Milefimo quingentesimo et anno Regni Regis Henrici sept'i sextodecimo. In the middle chancel are several memorials for the antient family of Oldisworth, among which are the two following:

The lady Mico, of London, (sister to Elizabeth, wife of Andrew Barker, esq;) gave 400*l.* with which lands in Leachlade were purchased, and the rents are applied as she directed, to bind out four boys apprentices annually, out of the parish of Fairford. She likewise gave two dozen of bread to be distributed to the poor every Sunday; and the donation is secured by a rent charge on a meadow in Meysey-Hampton, called Settle Thorn.

The widow Cull, by her will, dated May 5, 1674, gave 20*l.* to the poor; and Morgan Emmetts gave 5*l.*

Mr. Smith of London, gave 30*s.* a year for teaching poor children to read, charged on his estate at Fairford, now the property of Mr. Raymond.

And about the year 1738, a large, handsome school-house was built. The nomination of the lecturer, school-master, and scholars, is vested in Mrs. Lamb, as heir of Samuel Barker, esq. Mrs. Farmor likewise gave 200*l.* which was expended about the year 1725, in purchasing the wire lattices, placed on the outside of the church windows, to preserve the glass from accidents.

William Butcher of this parish, who died June 17, 1715, gave the interest of 40*l.* to be distributed weekly to the poor in bread. F A R M I N G T O N

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Bradley, in the Cotswold country, two miles northward from Northleach, eight westward from Burford in Oxfordshire, and twenty-one east from Gloucester. About seven hundred years ago, the name of this place was Tormentone. It was afterwards variously written in the records, according to the different judgment of persons in office; as, Thormenton, Thormarton; which come so near to Tormarton, the name of another parish in this county, that, if some mistakes have happened in the application of particulars, it will be the more excusable. The modern name of this parish is Farmington, but I am totally ignorant of its signification.

The face of this part of the country is turgid, uneven, and almost wholly destitute of plantations, in which last particular, there is certainly great room for improvement. The soil produces very good corn, to which the greater part is appropriated; and the farmers give much attention to the breed of their sheep, for which they are deservedly famous.

Norbury-camp, mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns, and others, as being in Farmington, lies in the hamlet of Eastington, in the parish of Northleach, where the particulars of it are given.

The turnpike-road from Gloucester to Oxford passes thro' this parish; and a stream from a spring, which rises here, empties itself into the Windrush, below Sherbourn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This is set down as part of the large manor of Lecce, [now Northleach] in Domesday-book, where it is said, 'There are two plow-tillages in demean' at Tormentone, and twenty-five villeins, with 'twelve plow-tillages, and four servi.' D.B. p. 70.

Thomas de Blachamp and William Hastings were seized of the manor of Thormenton, which they held by the service of one knight's fee, 5 E. 1. and Peter de Staunton held the manor 16 E. 1. About this time it passed to the St. Phileberts; for Benedict Blakenham had licence to alienate one plow-tillage, and the advowson of the chapel, to Henry de St. Philebert, 26 E. 1. John de St. Philebert, son of Henry, succeeded, and held the manor, with free warren, 14 E. 2. and died seized thereof 7 E. 3. leaving sir John de St. Philebert, his son and heir, who levied a fine, and sold the manor and advowson of Thormenton, for 200 marks, to William de Eddington, bishop of Winchester, 25 E. 3. The bishop gave this manor to the Augustin priory of Bonhommes, at Edington in Wiltshire, which he founded in 1352. It was dedicated to St. James, St. Catherine, and All Saints, and valued at the dissolution at 52*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.*

After the dissolution of the priory, the manor and advowson of Thormarton were granted to Michael Ashfield 32 H. 8. who dying the same year, livery was granted to his son Robert 4 Mar. Robert Ashfield, esq; was lord of the manor in 1608, and sold it to sir Rice Jones, whose descendant, sir Henry Jones, distinguished himself in the wars in Flanders, and was slain there, leaving an only daughter and heiress, married to the earl of Scarborough, who, in her right, was lord of the manor about the beginning of this century. Of him it was purchased by Edmond Waller, esq; whose son Edmond Waller, esq; is the present lord of the manor. His arms are, Azure, on a bend sable cotized argent, three walnut leaves Or.

The following records seem to belong to Farmington, tho' sir Robert Atkyns has placed them under Tormarton, where the Phileberts had no concern.

William de Hastings levied a fine of lands in Tormarton [it should be Tormentone] to Benedict Blakenham and Julian, or Joan, his wife, 1 E. 1.

John

John de St. Philebert levied a fine of lands in Tormarton to Roger de Asperley, and Juliana his wife; and they reconvey Juliana's right of dower to John de St. Philebert, reserving a rent of 20*l.* for her life, 5 E. 3. Thomas Hungerford, and others, were seized of 14*s.* rent, issuing out of two messuages and two yard-lands in Tormarton, in trust for the priory of Bonhommes, at Edington in Wiltshire, 16 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth 120*l.* a year; Edmond Waller, esq; is patron, Mr. Binam the present incumbent.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a small building, neatly pewed, with a low tower at the west end, in which are three bells. The inhabitants of this parish formerly buried at Northleach.

At the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 25 houses in this parish, and about 100 inhabitants, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 3. The present number of houses is 38, of inhabitants exactly 195.

F I L T O N and H A Y.

THIS is a small parish, in the lower division of the hundred of Berkeley, four miles north from Bristol, eight south from Thornbury, and thirty south-westward from Gloucester.

The turnpike-road from Gloucester to Bristol leads through it, and one of the heads of the river Trim, or Trin, rises in it, and runs to Westbury. The name is supposed to be compounded of fell, rocky, stony; and ton, a common termination.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, in the reign of king William the First, this was a part of Horfelle, (now written Horfield) wherefore there is no account of the manor in Domesday-book, under the name by which it is known at present. But Robert Fitz-Harding having given the other part of Horfelle to St. Augustin's monastery at Bristol, this began to be distinguished from it, by the name of Felleton, and Filton.

Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols, descended from the above Robert Fitz-Harding, died seized of this manor 16 R. 2. and was succeeded by his son, Thomas Fitz-Nichols, who died 6 H. 5. leaving two daughters coheiresses; of whom, Elianor, the elder, was married to John Browning, of Haresfield; whereby John Browning, son of John, became seized of this manor 8 H. 5.

But it was probably a moiety of the manor only, because the records shew, that the manor of Filton, which I suppose to be the other moiety, was held by the Blounts, about the time of the above dates. Edward Blount and Margaret his wife were seized of it 4 R. 2. and Wenteline, widow of John Blount, died seized of the same, and of Bitton, 32 H. 6.

Thomas Mallet, esq; died seized of this manor 22 Eliz. and left John, his son, twelve years old at his father's death. Mr. Pope was late lord of this manor.

Robert Fitz-Harding gave six messuages in this parish to the abbey of St. Augustin's in Bristol, wherefore the abbat would have them considered as parcel of the manor of Horfield; and accordingly his claim to a court leet in Horfield and Filton was allowed, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. After the dissolution of that abbey, these lands in Filton were granted, with the manor of Horfield, to the bishoprick of Bristol, 34 H. 8. and they now belong to that bishoprick. These lands were afterwards deemed a manor, for in Willis's edition of Eaton's Thesaurus, it is said, the manors of Horfield and Filton were sold out of the bishoprick; to Thomas Andrews, for 125*l.* 14*s.* in the year 1649.

HAMLET. Hay is a hamlet in this parish. John Newton, burges of Bristol, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Le Hay, near Filton, to the use of themselves in special talle; and John Newton, son of John, levied a fine of the same lands, to the use of William Moor, 28 H. 6. Henry Strangeways and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Filton and Herry-Stoke 16 H. 7.

A meadow in this parish belonged to the Magdalen hospital in Bristol, and was granted to John Bellowe and John Bloxolme 37 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Bristol, worth about 80*l.* a year. The lord of the manor is patron, and Mr. Davis the present incumbent. This is one of the small livings augmented by Mr. Colston's donation.

The rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Filton antiently belonged to the abbey of St. Augustin's in Bristol, and after the dissolution of that abbey, were granted to the bishop of Bristol, 34 H. 8. But I understand by the word rectory, in this place, nothing more than the tithes of the six messuages which belonged to that abbey, as already observed.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is small, with a little aisle on each side of the nave, and a low tower, with five bells, at the west end, which had a spire, blown down about ninety years since.

FLAXLEY

IS a parish of no great extent, in the hundred of St. Briavel's, in the forest division of the county, two miles distant south-east from Mitchel-Dean, three north from Newnham, and ten south-westward from Gloucester. The name was antiently written Flaxlyn, which comes from glyn, a valley; and agrees with the situation of the place. The parish consists chiefly of pasture and woodlands. The manufacture of the place is iron, for making of which there is a furnace and forges.

An abbey was founded here, by Roger, the second earl of Hereford, in the reign of king Henry the First, for monks of the Cistercian order,^a who were Benedictines reformed. The founding of which seems to have been occasioned by an accident which happened to the earl's brother, who was killed by an arrow in hunting, in the very place where the abbey was afterwards built, as Leland found it related in a table hung up in the abbey church. King Henry the Second, whilst duke of Normandy, gave the monks of this place a charter, confirming to them their lands and possessions; and afterwards, when king of England, he gave them another; both which charters are inserted in the Appendix N^o. 15 and 16. In the former, some particulars omitted in sir Robert Atkyns's translation are supply'd. In the latter, it is observable, that the abbat and his conventuals are called the monks of Dene; whereby it appears, that Flaxley was at that time appurtenant to Dene, and not a distinct parish; and the lands, at this time, lie very confused and intermixt with those of Little-Dean, and with the woods of the forest.

The abbey was situated in the valley of Castiard, a name at present unknown to the parishioners. It was under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Hereford,^o by whom the abbats were consecrated.

^a It has been already shewn, (p. 11) by what means lands, formerly belonging to the Cistercian monasteries, and some others, became exempt from tithes; and it is well known that ever since the dissolution of the houses to which they belonged, they have been privileged with the same exemption. But Mr. Stevens has given a very extraordinary opinion respecting such lands, in the second volume of his Supplement to the Monasticon, which deserves to be taken notice of. It is on the state of the case of the owners and inheritors of certain lands within the lordship of Bernoldswick, by them and their ancestors purchased from king Henry the Eighth.

He states, that those lands were given to the Cistercian abbey of Kirkstall, before the Lateran council, and were of their own nature and tillage. And that by the said Lateran council it was declared, that the lands possessed by the Cistercians, before the holding of that council, should pay no tithes.

Now comes the opinion, which Mr. Stevens produces to determine the present right of exemption from tithes. His words are these:

'In fine, it has been resolved, by council learned in the law, that the land purchased in fee of king Henry the VIIIth, and occupied by the owners of the inheritance, being of the Cistercian order, and given to the abbey before the Lateran council, as this of Bernoldswick was, ought to be free by law, whilst it continues in the occupation of any owner of the inheritance, but when it is in lease or farm, the privilege does not extend to the farmer or tenant, and so they ought to pay.'

How happy is it for the proprietors of such lands that the opinion of Mr. Stevens's learned council does not constitute a precedent. I have elsewhere express'd my disapprobation of matters settled at the Reformation, as not to make better provision of appropriations, for some of the parochial clergy. But, things now are, it would be the highest injustice to take away these exemptions, especially from estates which have passed by purchase through several hands, and valuable considerations have been paid on account of them.

Mr. Stevens was no friend to the Reformation, as appears from several exceptionable passages collected from sir Henry Spelman's History of Sacrilege, and other sources. Having shewn that king Henry the Eighth granted the site of Rufford monastery, in Nottinghamshire, and all its lordships, to the earl of Shrewsbury, he says, from the aforesaid earl of Shrewsbury, this estate came by the females (the male line being extinct) to the family of the Saviles, the last of which line also was the famous viscount, then earl, and lastly marquis of Halifax, in the reign of king Charles and king James the Second; where we see the bane of 'those church-lands attending both those great families, quite extinguished in so short a time; I mean that line of the Saviles, for I know there are still others of other branches.' And again, after shewing that Ralph Rowlet the elder, had a grant from king Henry the Eighth of the manor of Byshmead, which belonged to the abbey of that place, in Bedfordshire, he proceeds with the descent of the manor to Ralph his son and heir, who died without issue; and then concludes, 'Thus the family was extinct in the first heir that took possession of this land dedicated to God.'

There is nothing in which men so much disagree as in their notions of religion; nor is there any establishment but may gain a degree of respect from habit and education. This makes reformation difficultly effected; for the smallest changes from established principles and forms disgust vulgar minds. Nay we see that some persons of learning cannot part from what they have been taught to venerate without great reluctance, tho' the seeming loss should be real gain. Hence they remonstrate and complain; but surely the zeal of these men has carried them too far, in representing the want of issue in one family, and a decline in fortune in another, (for that is alledged by them in some instances) as the judgment of God, particularly sent to punish such persons as have not acted agreeably to their peculiar mode of thinking, by purchasing lands which formerly belonged to dissolved monasteries; whereas they are nothing more than common events, which have happened to all sorts of people, and are daily brought about in all countries, under every kind of establishment.

^o This appears from several entries in the register books of the bishops of that diocese, particularly in the following years, 1288 fol. 53; 1314, fol. 189; 1372, fol. 11; 1426, fol. 107; 1509, fol. 45. The following is extracted from the register book of bishop Courtenay:

It was dedicated to the virgin Mary, and valued at the dissolution at 112*l.* 3*s.* 1*d.* a year, as I find it set down in a table of the value of all the monasteries in England, taken from a manuscript in the Cotton library. Thomas Ware was the last abbat, who retired, after the dissolution of his house, to Tame in Oxfordshire, where he died in the year 1546. The abbey church is so totally demolished, that it can only be guessed where it stood.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday-book, this manor is included in the general account of Dene. It was given to the abbey at the foundation of it, by Roger, earl of Hereford. The abbat had a grant of an iron forge, and of two oaks every week out of the forest of Dean, for the maintenance of the forge, of king Henry the Second. But the taking of the two oaks was very destructive to the forest, wherefore the monks had a wood granted to them instead thereof, 42 H. 3.

This manor, with the wood, continued in the possession of the abbey till the dissolution; and was afterwards granted to sir William Kingston, who died seized thereof 32 H. 8. and livery was granted to sir Anthony Kingston, son of sir William, the same year; who, by his deed, conveyed it to the king, and in the 36th year of the same reign, the king, by his letters patent, regranted to him the site of the late abbey or monastery of Flaxley, and all the church, bell-house, and church-yard of the same, and all the houses, buildings, rivers, pools, lands, grounds and soils of the same, as well within as without the said site; and also all other the manors and granges of Flaxley house, &c. &c.

William Kingston, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, soon after which it passed to Abraham Clarke, esq; who died seized of it in 1683.

From him the manor went to his relation, William Bovey, esq; who dying in 1692, his widow enjoy'd it; after whom it passed to Thomas Crawley, esq; who assumed the name and arms of Bovey. He married a daughter of — Lloyd, by whom he had issue several children, and dying in the year 1775, possessed of a large estate in this parish, was succeeded by his son Thomas-Crawley Bovey, esq; the present lord of the manor. The arms of Bovey are, Ermine, on a bend gules and sable, between two martlets of the latter, three gutties d'Or.

The manor house is that wherein the abbat formerly lived, with some addition to it. Notwithstanding it is a long, low building, of two stories, it has a handsome and venerable appearance.

Richard Brain, esq; died seized of lands in Flaxley 15 Eliz. and left Thomas, his grandson, twenty years old at his grandfather's death.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of the forest. The lord of the manor is patron, Mr.

Crawley is the present incumbent. The church was formerly appropriated to the abbey of Flaxley. The impropriation belongs to Mr. Bovey, who pays 8*l.* a year out of it to the curate; who besides has the interest of 1200*l.* left by Mrs. Bovey, to improve the curacy. The church is very small. It was rebuilt by Mrs. Pope.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is the following memorial on an old monument in the chancel:

On George Kingston, Gent. who was buried Mar. 4 1644
 Vixi dum vellem, moriebar tempore grato,
 Et sic vita mihi, mors quoque grata fuit.
 Kings have stones on them when they die,
 And here Kingstone under a stone doth lie.
 Thus prince, nor peer, nor any mortal wight,
 Can shun Death's dart; Death still will have his right.
 O then bethink to what you all must trust
 At last to die, & come to Judgment just.

On the table of a handsome monument,

Benefactions.

F O R T H A M P T O N .

THIS is a small parish, in the lower division of Tewkesbury hundred, three miles west from Tewkesbury, and eight north from Gloucester.

It is bounded on the north side by Worcester-shire, and has the river Severn running on the east of it, for about half a mile. In the road from this this place to Tewkesbury, is a passage over that river, called the Lower Load.

The parish consists chiefly of rich pasture ground. Dr. York, bishop of St David's, has repaired the roads in this parish, at a great expence, which before were exceedingly bad. The oak delights in a deep soil, and flourishes here; but the tenants have committed intolerable waste, by polling the trees, that they may afterwards take the lop. This is the less excusable, as coals, brought down the river from Shropshire and Staffordshire, are very reasonable.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor was in the crown at the time of general survey. Among the particulars of the large manor of Tewkesbury, in Domesday-book, it is thus recorded :

' In Fortemelton nine hides belonged to this manor [of Teodekesberie.] There are two plow-tillages in demean, and twenty plow-tillages are shared among the villeins and bordars, and six among the servi and ancilla. There is a wood. It was worth 10*l.* in the time of king Edward, now [only] 8*l.* Earl William held these two estates [i.e. Hanlege and Fortemelton] and they paid tax in behalf of Tewkesbury.' D. B. p. 68.

King Henry the Second gave to the abbey of Tewkesbury the vill of Ferthelmenton, which was held of the honour of Robert Fitz-Hamon; and the abbey had court leet, waifs, and felons goods therein, which were allowed them, in a writ of quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

The manor continued in the possession of the abbey till its dissolution. And the manor-house of Forthampton, and certain lands there, were granted to Giles Harper 33 H. 8. The manor was afterwards granted to Robert, earl of Salisbury, Jac. Charles Dowdeswell, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. His predecessor, Charles Dowdeswell, esq; sold it to Samuel Clarke, esq; and he sold it to Dr. Isaac Maddox, late lord bishop of Worcester. His lordship left issue one only daughter, who, after his death, was married to the honourable Dr. James Burke, now lord bishop of St. David's, who in right of his wife, is the present lord of this manor, and proprietor of a large estate in this parish, where he has a handsome seat. His lordship's arms are, Argent, a saltire azure, with a bezant in the center.

Mr. Hayward has a good house and estate in this parish.

A portion of tithes in Forthampton and Bushley, with a pasture ground called Oxley, lately belonging to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to Edward lord Clinton 1 E. 6. The close called Oxley was granted to Roger Dowdeswell 7 Jac.

HAMLETS. 1. Swaily. Edward earl of Stafford held Swaily, 4 H. 4.

Down-end is another hamlet.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, within the peculiar of Derhurst, value 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* paid by the impropriator. The lord of the manor is patron and impropriator. The impropriation formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a large building, and stands on a rising ground, with a strong tower, and five bells, at the west end.

IS a village in the hundred of Whitston, in the vale part of the county; bounded on the north by the river Severn, on the south-west by Slimbridge, on the north-east by Whitminster, and on the north-west by Arlingham. It is ten miles south-west from Gloucester, eight westward from Stroud, seven north of Dursley, and five south from Newnham, across the Severn. The parish consists of rich pasture, meadow, and some arable land, with gravel in many places little more than a foot below the surface. The water rises almost to the top of the gravel, so that the houses have no cellaring. The

The Stroud river, whose name I suppose to be the Froom, rises at Brimpsfield; passes by, and gives name to Frampton, a hamlet in the parish of Saperton; runs to Froomhill or Froomill, near Stroud, and so on to Froombridge in this parish; and at length empties itself into the Severn at Framilode, i. e. the emptying of the Froom; for lode comes from ladian, which in the Saxon language, signifies to empty. These circumstances seem to prove that Froom is the true name of the river, which it has communicated to this village, for Frampton signifies the town upon the Froom. It is generally called Frampton upon Severn, to distinguish it from another Frampton, near Bristol. What sir Robert Atkyns says of the Berkeley river bounding this parish on the south, is so great a mistake, that it is in no part within several miles of it.

The turnpike-road to the passages over the Severn, at Framilode and Arlingham, leads thro' this village, which is one of the handsomest and pleasantest in the county. It consists chiefly of one street; and tho' the houses are not all joined together, after the manner of our market-towns, yet they stand in two straight rows, parallel to each other, with the space of about one hundred and fifty yards between them.

The piece of ground, or street, between the rows of houses, was formerly called Rosamond's-Green, from the name of an unfortunate lady of the family of the Cliffords, whose story is pretty well known.

On the south side, about the middle of this vast street, is an elegant free-stone house, with large offices and gardens, suitable to the fortune and dignity of a nobleman. This was the seat of the late Richard Clutterbuck, esq; deceased. It is built on the very scite of the antient family mansion of the Cliffords. To this gentleman the neighbourhood is indebted for the improved state of the parish. The green I have been speaking of, is a flat piece of ground, and 'till lately was generally overflowed with water in the winter, and consequently very rotten. The road was almost impassable, and the inhabitants extremely subject to agues. But he made underground drains to carry off the water, and threw up a fine, straight, gravelly road, through the middle of the lawn, which contributes to give the place that beautiful appearance, for which it is so deservedly admired. And since the drains have been made, the people are as free from the ague, as the inhabitants of any part of the vale.

At Froombridge in this parish, hath been lately erected one of the largest and compleatest works in the kingdom, for making of iron and steel wire, used in this and some of the neighbouring counties, more especially in the manufacture of cards for the clothing business. From this work also that valuable branch of our commerce, the Newfoundland fishery, is partly supply'd with steel wire for fish-hooks, to a very considerable amount annually. And at this place also there is a brass-work lately erected.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Drogo the son of Ponz holds Frantone of the king. There are ten hides taxed. Ernesi held it. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and ten villeins, and eight bordars, with six plow-tillages. There are nine servi, and a mill of 10s. [value] and ten acres of meadow, a wood one mile long and three furlongs broad, one burgage in Gloucester of 6d. [value]. It is worth and was worth 100s. Roger de Laci holds unjustly one hide of this manor.' Domesday-book, p. 77.

Ponz was a noble Norman, whose three sons, Walter, Drogo, and Richard, attended king William in his invasion of England. Drogo died seized of this manor without issue 20 W. 1. and was succeeded by his brother Richard, who had large revenues in Wales, and was a great benefactor to the priory of Malvern in Worcestershire. He had two sons, Simon and Walter, which latter being seated at Clifford in Herefordshire, took the surname of Clifford, and had this manor of Frampton settled upon him.^p He had issue two sons, Walter and Richard, and two daughters, whereof Rosamond, the younger, was the famous mistress to Henry the Second,^q and mother to William Long Espee, earl of Salisbury. The manor of Frampton was settled on Richard, the younger son, who had livery of it 2 R. 1. He married Lettice, daughter of William de Albaniaco, of Camber.

Sir Hugh Clifford, son of Richard, succeeded him in this manor, and died seized thereof, with markets and fairs, 38 H. 3. Sir John Clifford was his son and heir, and died seized of Frampton 27 E. 1. He had a son Richard, and two daughters, who died before him, whereby Isabel, his only ^p He gave a mill in Frampton, and a meadow adjoining to it, called Leeton, to the nuns of Godstow in Oxfordshire, to pray for the souls of Margaret his wife, and Rosamond his daughter.

^q She died at Woodstock, in a spacious and large apartment which king Henry the Second caused to be made for her, with great art, like a labyrinth, on purpose to secure her from the violence of queen Eleanor, who nevertheless, if we believe the common report, found out the passage, and poisoned her. But John Brompton and Henry Knighton tell us, that she died a natural death, soon after she had been inclosed in the said apartment. And the same thing is also asserted by Ranulph Higden. She was buried in the choir of the nunnery of Godstow, and it is said the following epitaph was placed upon her tomb:

Hic jacet in tumba Rosa mundi, non Rosa munda;
Non redolet, sed olet, quæ redolere solet.

But Higden and Knighton have both of them quod for quæ in the last line.

^r Thus it appears that the manor went out of the name of the Cliffords by the marriage of this Isabel; but the capital messuage and divers lands in Frampton remained in a younger branch of that name, who in a lineal descent are seized of part of them at this present time, as may be seen by the following pedigree: Henry Clifford (brother of sir Hugh, who was grandfather of Isabel) was living 12 E. 1. and held an estate in Frampton. William Clifford, son of Henry, had to his second wife, Catherine, daughter of Ralph de St. Maur. William Clifford his son died 15 E. 2. John, son of William, was constituted warden of the forest of Bradon in Wiltshire, 1 H. 4. Here is a deficiency in the pedigree. Henry Clifford, son of James, was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 27 H. 6. James Clifford, son of Henry, was only surviving daughter, became his sole heir. She was married to Robert Fitz-Pain, steward of the king's household, who died seized of Frampton 9 E. 2. This manor was held of Thomas de Berkeley by the service of 22 marks yearly. At this time there were 420 acres of arable land, let at 6d. an acre; 50 acres of meadow, at 2s. 6d. 30 acres of pasture, at 6d. and 40 acres of oak wood, the herbage of which was worth half a mark. There were 15 free tenants, who paid 8l. 4s. rent of assize. There were 6 yard-lands in villeinage, at 20s. a yard-land; and the pleas of the court were worth half a mark. Escheator's Book.

Robert, son and heir of Robert Fitz-Pain, left an only daughter Isabel, married to sir John Chidiok, who had issue another sir John Chidiok, who, in right of his mother, had the manor of Frampton. He married Elianor, daughter of sir John Fitz-Warren, by whom he had a son John Chidiok, who married Catherine, daughter of sir Ralph Lumley, and left only daughters coheiresses.

Catherine, one of the coheiresses, was married to sir John Arundel, of Llanhern in Cornwall, and afterwards to Roger Lukenore, and dying seized of the manor of Frampton 19 E. 4. was succeeded by sir Thomas Arundel, her son, whose son and heir, sir John Arundel, died seized of this manor 5 Mariae. His son, John Arundel, esq; had livery of it the same year, whose son John was seized of the manor of Frampton-upon-Severn the year 1608, and afterwards sold it to sir Humphry Hook, alderman of Bristol.

Sir Heel Hook is said to be the present lord of this manor, but Mr. Stephens holds the court baron.

Of the other estates, the records shew, that William de Lucy held lands in Frampton 1 H. 3. Sir Hugh Clifford purchased lands in Frampton upon Severn of Walter de Clifford 33 H. 3. The knights templers were seized of lands in Frampton upon Severn 2 E. 1. A fine was levied of lands in Frampton to Robert Isham and others 14 H. 7. Here is a fair kept on the 3d of February, called trying-pan fair.

The parishioners have a right of common of pasture in Slimbridge-Wharfe; and have also a common containing about 120 acres, called Egrove.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Dursley. It is a vicarage, worth upwards of 60l. a year, having been doubly augmented with the queen's bounty. Mr. Wicks is patron and impropiator. Here is no parsonage house.

The rectory and the advowson of the vicarage did belong to the Cliffords. Being forfeited to the crown by attainder, they were granted to Edward Couper, and Valentine Fairweather, 7 E. 6.

The vicar hath one third of all tithes, and the impropiator the other two. Chancellor Parsons, who made his collections at the beginning of this century, says, 'the impropriation formerly paid 18s. per ann. to the parish clerk, but [the payment] has been detained for twenty years last past. There was also 20s. to the hayward, in lieu of an acre called the hayward's mead, by the lord of the manor, but detained for these twenty years'. The impropriation is worth about 70l. a year. The presentation formerly belonged to the abbey of Cirencester.

The church is a neat one, consisting of two aisles, and a chapel on each side of the chancel, with a handsome gallery, and a pinnacled tower, in which are six bells, at the west end. The middle chancel belongs to the vicar, the two side chancels, or chapels, to the impropiator.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

In the north wall of the chancel, in a niche, is the figure of a knight, lying along in full proportion, cross-legged, with spurs on, a shield on his left arm, and a dog at his feet. Near it, in another niche, is the figure of a lady. They are both in free-stone, perfectly intire, and are supposed to represent some of the Cliffords.

On an old stone in the chancel :

Hic jacet humatum corpus Elizabethæ Clifford, quæ obiit vicesimo quarto die mensis Septembris anno Dni millimo cccc° lxxvi. Sub eodem vero lapide jacet corpus Iohannis Clifford qui obiit . . . Maij anno Dni millimo cccclxxxvii° quorum animabus propitiatur Deus Amen.

Within the rails in the chancel, an antient stone, the inscription much obliterated in the second line; but I read the whole thus :

HERE LIETH THE BODY OF WALTER WIAT PREACHER AND VICARE OF THIS CHURCHE DECESED THE 30 DEY OF SEPTEMBER ANNO DOMINI 1578 ANNOQUE REGNI REGINÆ ELISABETH VICESIMO.

In the north aile, on black marble, married, with his wife, in the south chancel of Frampton church, 168, as appears by an inscription there. Henry was son of James, and married Anne, daughter of Thomas Baynham, which Anne afterwards married to William Try, of Hardwick, esq. James Clifford, son of Henry, married Anne, sister and one of the coheiresses of Thomas Harewell, esq. She was afterwards married to Nicholas Wickes. Henry, son of James, married Mabel, daughter of sir John Welche, and died in the year 1558. He had four sisters, viz. Margaret, married to Robert Bradstone of Interbourn; Frances, married to Edward Barrow of Field-bourn; Havise, to Matthew Madox of Lidney; and Alice, married to Anselm Guise of Elmore. James Clifford, son of Henry, married Dorothy, daughter of Charles Fox of Bramhill, Shropshire, esq. William Clifford, fourth brother of James, married Joan, daughter of Thomas Beard of Saul, in Gloucestershire. Henry was third son and surviving heir of William. James Clifford, of Swindon in this county, who had for his second wife, Blanch, daughter of Thomas Hopkins of Howelsfield, or Hewelsfield, in this county, was seized of an estate in Frampton in 1608. John Clifford, son of James, married Mary, daughter of William Shepard of Horsley, and left only three daughters, i. e. Mary, married to Nathaniel Clutterbuck of Eastington; Rosamond, married first to Edward Haynes of Frampton, secondly, to John Simmons, and thirdly, to Zachariah Wintle; and Elizabeth, married to Gilbert Tripet of Aue.

The late Richard Clutterbuck, esq; a descendant of the above Nathaniel, built a fine seat in this parish. He died in 1775, and his two sisters succeeded to this estate.

When ſir Robert Atkyns wrote his Hiſtory, there were ſaid to be 100 houſes in this pariſh, and about 500 inhabitants, whereof 26 were freeholders; yearly births 14, burials 13. In a ſeries of ten years, from 1710 to 1719, both incluſive, there are regiſter'd 139 baptiſms, and 104 burials. In a like ſeries of ten years, from 1760 to 1769, both incluſive, are regiſter'd 182 baptiſms, and and 135 burials; which ſhews that the inhabitants of this pariſh have increaſed very conſiderably, ſince the date of the fiſt ſeries; and they are now about 600.

FRAMPTON COTTEREL.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Langley and Swinehead, five miles diſtant ſouth-ward from Sodbury, ſeven miles ſouth from Thornbury, and about thirty miles ſouthward from Glouceſter.

It is ſo called from the river Froom, which runs through it, in its courſe to Briſtol, where it makes the key of that port; and from the family of the Cotels, who were antiently lords of the manor.

The pariſh conſiſts chiefly of meadow and paſture ground, with ſome arable land. The ſtone is of a rediſh brown grit, and ſeems to have a ſmall proportion of iron in it.

Here is a conſiderable manufacture of felt hats, which employs a pretty many hands.

The pariſh is ſaid to be within the juriſdiction of the court of the honour of Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

Walter Baſtarius holds Frantone, in Langley hundred. There are five hides taxed. Aleſtan held it of Boſcombe. In demean is one plow-tillage, and ten villeins, and eleven bordars, with five plow-tillages. There are five ſervi, and two mills of 5 s. [rent]. And there is a church, which was not [in the time of king Edward.] It was worth 8 l. now [only] 3 l. D. B. p. 77.

This manor belonged to the family of the Cotels ſoon after the Norman conqueſt. John Cotel, the laſt of that family, died ſeized of it 29 H. 3. before which the pariſh had obtained the name of Frampton Cotel.

Robert Walerond was ſeized of Frampton Cotel, and purchaſed a charter of free warren 41 H. 3. His wife Maud held it in dower, and proved her right to markets, fairs, and free warren, in a Warranto, 15 E. 1. John Walerond, and Robert Walerond, and Iſabel his wife, were ſeized of this manor 2 E. 2.

John de Willington held this manor of the honour of Wallingford 12 E. 2. and died ſeized thereof 12 E. 3. as did ſir Ralph de Willington, his ſon, 22 E. 3. whoſe ſon Henry, had livery thereof the following year. Sir John de Willington, ſon of Henry, had ſeizin of this manor, and of the advowſon of the church, 2 R. 2. and Ralph de Willington, ſon of ſir John, died ſeized thereof 6 R. 2. Joan his widow had the third part of the manor aſſigned to her in dower 8 R. 2. and having married Thomas Weſt, whom ſhe alſo ſurvived, died 6 H. 4. Ralph de Willington, ſon of Ralph and the ſaid Joan, died ſeized of the other two parts of this manor 19 R. 2. and was ſucceeded by his brother John, who died ſeized of this manor, and of the advowſon of the church 20 R. 2. leaving no issue; whereby his sister Joan became his heir. She carried this estate, by her marriage, to John Wrath, and John Wrath, their son, dying without issue 13 H. 4. left his two sisters his heirs; of whom, Elizabeth was married to sir William Poulton, and Isabel was the widow of William Beaumont.

Sir William Poulton and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the moiety of the manor of Frampton 14 H. 4. They dying without issue, the whole manor was vested in Isabel Beaumont. She had issue John and Isabel, who both dying without issue, were succeeded by sir Thomas Beaumont, who died seized of this estate 29 H. 6. as did his son William Beaumont 32 H. 6. and Philip Beaumont, brother of William, 13 E. 4.

Hugh Beaumont and Elizabeth his wife, John Bassett and Elizabeth his wife, John Beaumont, clerk, John Chichester and Margaret his wife, and John Croker and Anne his wife, by several fines levied 16, 18, & 20 H. 7. convey the manor and advowson of Frampton Cotel, to king Henry the Seventh.

The manor was afterwards granted to Giles lord D'Aubeny, who dying 6 H. 8. his son, Henry lord D'Aubeny, had livery thereof the same year. The manor again reverted to the crown, and was granted to Edward duke of Somerset, who being attainted, John Bassett obtained a grant of it 4 Mariae, which was confirmed to Arthur Bassett 7 Eliz.

The manor was afterwards purchased by the Players. William Player, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, as was his son, Thomas Player, esq; in the year 1736. Charles Pradge, esq; is the present lord of the manor.

Sir John Seymour had a large house, with a park, and a good estate in this parish, from whom they went by purchase to Henry Symes, esq; and were carried, by the marriage of his daughter Jane, to Edward Biss, esq; and then passed out of that name, by the marriage of his daughter, to Gabriel Sale, esq; who was the owner of them when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish; but they are now the property of William Southwell, esq.

John de Acton and Sybil his wife were seized of a mill and eighty acres in Frampton Cotel 6 E. 2. Walter Gacelyn died seized of one messuage and 10 plow-tillages in Frampton Cotel 7 E. 2. as did Walter his son 7 E. 3. and William, son of the last Walter, 20 E. 3.

Jeffry Stowel and Matthew Stowel were both seized of lands in Frampton 37 E. 3. William Pryster levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Frampton Cotel, to John Walsh and others 12 H. 7.

TITHING and HAMLET.

Wickwick is a tithing in this parish, about two acres from the church, from which an antient family residing here, took their name.

The manors of Magnesfield and Wickwick were granted by king Henry the Eighth, to sir Edward Seymour, who died seized of them 27 H. 8.

and was succeeded by his son, sir Edward Seymour. The manor of Wickwick came afterwards to the Kemyfes, and then to the Browns. This manor, with a large estate in the tithing, was lately the property of Francis Brown, esq; deceased, who leaving two daughters coheiresses, one of them was married to — Daubony, esq; of the city of Bristol, who, in her right, has a moiety of the manor and estate. His arms are, Gules, four fusils in fess argent.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 130*l.* a year. The patrons are, the duke of Beaufort, (as heir to the late lord Botetourt) Mr. Southwell, and Mr. Jacob; whose shares being unequal, an agreement was made in the year 1765, to present in the following order, viz. 1. The duke of Beaufort. 2 and 3. Mr. Southwell. 4. Mr. Jacob. 5. The duke of Beaufort. 6 and 7. Mr. Southwell. 8. Mr. Jacob. 9. Mr. Southwell. Mr. Philip Bliss is the present incumbent.

A portion of tithes in Frampton belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

Fifty acres belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. It hath an aisle on the south side, and a tower, with six bells, at the west end; and the effigies of those saints, of the virgin Mary, and of some king, stand in niches, on the sides under the battlements.

F R E T H O R N

IS a small parish in the hundred of Whitstone, three miles south-eastward from Newnham, six northward from Dursley, and nine southward from Gloucester.

It is bounded on the west by the river Severn, with Frampton on the south, Arlingham to the north, and Saul to the east of it.

The lands are chiefly in meadow and pasture. The air is unwholesome, and the inhabitants are subject to the ague.

Frith comes from Fretum, a streight or narrow passage of the sea; and burn signifies a corner.

It is said, the inhabitants of this parish claim the privilege of being toll-free in all markets, and have free passage over the Severn. Fair Rosamond, mistress to king Henry the Second, was born in a large house in this parish, which stood on the bank of the Severn. It was originally built by an ancestor of the Clifford family, and was remarkable for a noble stair-case, and two chimney-pieces, one of them bearing the Cliffords arms, and 1598; which is supposed to be the date when it was rebuilt by James Clifford, esq; one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to queen Elizabeth. This house was taken down about twenty years ago.

Nicholas Veel held Frethern, Coteworth, and Eston 9 E. 2. Jeffry de Frethern held one messuage and one plow-tillage in Frethern 14 E. 2. John de Frethern was seized of the manor of Frethern 27 E. 3.

James Clifford, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608. William Bayly, esq; was afterwards the proprietor of it, whose family sold it to John Yate, of Arlingham, esq; and Robert-Gorges. Dobyys Yate, esq; is the present lord of the manor, and resides at Bromborough in this county.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in Gloucester deanery, worth about 50l. a year. Mr. Yate is patron, Mr. Davis the present incumbent.

Forty-four ridges of land belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a small building, with a wooden tower, at the west end.

There are several memorials in the chancel for the family of the Baylys, with their arms, viz. Gules, a scutcheon of pretence per pale argent and azure. Within the communion rails, is this verse,

F R O C E S T E R

IS a small parish in the hundred of Whitstone, four miles north-east from Dursley, five west from Stroud, and eleven south-west from Gloucester. It is bounded on the north by Easington, on the south by Nymphsfield, with Cowley and Cam to the west, and Leonard Stanley to the east of it.

It lies in the vale, on a declivity facing the north, with a large hanging beech-wood on the side towards Nymphsfield, down which the turnpike-road leads from Bath to Gloucester. The soil is rich and good, and the air tolerably healthy.

A small

A small brook runs down to Cowley, and so into the Severn. It is said the houses formerly stood near the church, in the lower part of the parish, but were burnt down; and afterwards, for the conveniency of a drier spot, the inhabitants built them where they now stand. There are about 207 acres of common field, lying in six different fields; but the greatest part of the parish is rich pasture. It is not remarkable for any uncommon natural productions.

The name is differently written, as Frowecestre, Froucestre, Froncester; but I apprehend the latter form arose by mistaking the letter u for n, which in old writings are much alike. This gave rise to the notion of its being so called, because it was a frontier castle.

The abbats of Gloucester had a sumptuous house in this village; and it is said, that formerly here was a college of prebendaries.

This village was honoured with a visit from queen Elizabeth, who lay a night at the manor house, as appears by an entry in the parish register, as follows: Hoc anno 1574^o die festo Laurentij martyris Serenissima Regina n^{ra} Elizabetha hoc n^{rm} oppidatum accessit et inuisit, in eoq; in Ædibus Georgii Huntleij, armigeri, comiter, benignèq; et sum^a cum humanitate tractantis, p^{noctavit}, indeq; Barkleyum Castellum concessit. i. e. On the day of the feast of St. Lawrence, in this year, 1574, our most serene queen Elizabeth came into this our town, and lodged in it that night, at the seat of George Huntley, esq; by whom she was elegantly and splendidly entertained; and afterwards she went to Berkeley castle.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In the general survey, soon after the conquest, under the head Terra S. Petri de Glowec, it is thus recorded:

'The same church held Frowecestre in Blace-lawes hundred. There are five hides. In demean are four plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and seven bordars, with seven plow-tillages. There are three servi, and ten acres of meadow, and a wood three furlongs long, and two broad. It was worth 4*l.* now worth 8*l.*' Dom. B. p. 71.

This manor continued in the abbey of Gloucester 'till its dissolution. After the dissolution of monasteries, this manor, and the advowson of the vicarage, were granted to Edward duke of Somerset, 1 E. 6. and notwithstanding his attainder, these and other particulars were confirmed to his widow, in satisfaction of all claim of dower, 3 Mar. The manor of Frocester, and divers lands, which had been granted before to the said duke, were again granted to Christopher Hatton, 17 Eliz.

Sir William Doddington, of Bremer in Hampshire, was lord of this manor in the year 1608. He left only daughters, of whom Anne, the surviving heir, was married to Robert Grevile, lord Brooke, whereby his lordship was intituled to this manor. The earl Brooke and earl of Warwick is the present lord of the manor of Frocester.

The scite of the manor house, with divers lands, and the rectory and advowson of the vicarage, were granted to Giles Huntley, 1 Mar. They afterwards descended to sir George Huntley, who came by a violent end in the park.

It is said this family is of Norman extraction. The name was antiently written Graville, or Grevill, and sometimes Grevel. William Grevill died seized of the manors of Inglethwait and Awdtoftes in Yorkshire, 1294. John Grevill died before 133 E. 3. and was succeeded by his son William, who was seated at Campden in Gloucestershire, and lent king R. 2. three hundred marks. William was his son and heir, who purchased the manor of Milcot in Warwickshire, in the year 1398. He was buried in the church of St. Mary in Campden, to the repair of which he gave 100 marks, and 200*l.* for four chaplains to say mass in that church for his soul, for ten years following. He was succeeded by his son John, who resided at Campden, and married, first, Sibill, daughter and heir of sir Robert Corbet; secondly, Joyce, daughter of sir Walter Cokesey, knight, by whom he had three sons, John, his son and heir, who resided at Charlton Regis, com. Glouc. and who had the manor of Milcot 28 H. 6. He died in the year 1480, after having the honour of knighthood conferred on him, and serving in five parliaments for Gloucestershire. Thomas was his only son, who assumed the surname of Cokesey. At the coronation of king H. 7. he was created knight of the Bath, and afterwards was made a knight Banneret. He died without issue, whereby the inheritance of the Cokesey family reverted to that family; but the estates he had from the Grevills went to John Grevill, a descendant of Lodowick, second son to William Grevill of Campden. Which John was one of the justices for the goal-delivery at Warwick 15 H. 7. He had issue, by his wife Jane, daughter of sir Humphry Forster, two sons, Edward and Robert. Edward was knighted for his valiant behaviour in the engagement called the Battle of the Spurs, from the swiftness of the French in running away, 5 H. 8. He was one of the knights appointed to attend the king and queen to the conference with Francis I. the French king, 12 H. 8. He obtained the wardship of Elizabeth, one of the daughters, and at last sole heir of Edward Willoughby, the only son of Robert lord Brooke. He married Anne, daughter of John Denton, by whom he had issue four sons, John, Fulke, Thomas, and Edward. The two last died without issue, and the elder branch, from John, became extinct in the fourth descent from him. Fulke, the second son, married Elizabeth, his father's daughter, one of the greatest heiresses in England, by whom he had three sons, Fulke, Robert, and Edward; and four daughters. Fulke, the eldest, was succeeded by his son Fulke, who was advanced to the dignity of a baron, by the title of lord Brooke, with limitation of that honour, in default of heirs male of his own body, to his kinsman Robert Grevile; which said Fulke lord Brooke dying unmarried, he was succeeded in honour and estates by the said Robert, second lord Brooke, who married lady Catherine Russell, eldest daughter to Francis earl of Bedford, by whom he had five sons, Francis, Robert, Edward, Algernon, (the two last dying bachelors) and Fulke. Francis succeeded his father, but died unmarried; whereby Robert became the fourth lord Brooke. He married Anne, daughter to John Doddington, esq; by whom he had six sons, who all died young, and two daughters. He died at Bath, in 1676, and was succeeded in honour and estate by Fulke, his youngest brother. This Fulke, fifth lord Brooke, married Sarah, daughter of sir Samuel Dashwood, alderman of London, by whom he had issue four sons, Francis, Algernon, Doddington, and Robert; and seven daughters. He died in 1710, and Francis, the eldest son, died eleven days before his father, having married lady Anne Wilmot, eldest daughter and coheir of John earl of Rochester, by whom he had issue two sons, Fulke and William, and two daughters.

Fulke, the eldest son, succeeded his grandfather as lord Brooke, but died at University-college, Oxford, in 1710-11, and was succeeded by his brother William.

Which William, seventh lord Brooke, married Mary, second daughter and coheir of the honourable Henry Thynne, esq; by whom he had three sons, William, Fulke, and Francis. The two former died infants, and William lord Brooke, their father, died in 1727.

Francis, the third and only surviving son, succeeded to his father as eighth lord Brooke, when but eight years old. In the year 1746, he was created earl Brooke by king George the Second; and the title of earl of Warwick being extinct, by the death of Edward Rich, earl of Warwick and Holland, in 1759, his majesty was pleased to add the dignity of earl of Warwick to his lordship's other titles, the same year. His lordship married Elizabeth, daughter to the lord Archibald Hamilton, by whom he hath issue three sons and four daughters. ARMS, Sable, on a cross within a border ingrailed Or, five pellets. CREST, In a ducal coronet gules, a swan with wings expanded argent, beaked sable. SUPPORTERS, Two swans argent, beaked and membered sable, and ducally gorged gules. MOTTO, VIX EA NOSTRA VOVO.

Sir Robert Ducie purchased of the Huntleys the court-house, and a large estate belonging to it, now the property of lord Ducie.

Sir Robert Atkyns was mistaken in representing his lordship's park as being any part of it in this parish.

A mill in Frocester, lately belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, was granted to William Ramesden and Edward Hobbey 37 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouse. It is a vicarage worth 50*l.* a year. The advowson was given to the abbey of Gloucester by William de Blois, bishop of Worcester, in the year 1225, when Thomas de Bredone was abbat. Lord Ducie is patron and impropiator; Mr. Hayward is the present incumbent.

The demean lands are tithe free, as having belonged to the abbey of Gloucester.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, hath an aisle on the south side, and a large spire in the middle, in which are six bells. There is a small chancel on the north side of the large one, which formerly was the burying place of the Huntleys, and now belongs to the earl of Warwick. In the chancel is an antient monument, supposed to be for the founder. There is a small farm in Cowley, and a rent-charge of 9*s.* 4*d.* both given to keep the church in repair, which is very antient, and standing upwards of a mile from the houses, divine service is performed at a chapel, and not in the church, except at funerals; for they bury there. The chapel is built on lord Warwick's land.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 61 houses, and about 250 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 7 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. But I find that in a series of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 inclusive, there were registered 107 baptisms, and 61 burials; and in a like series, from 1760 to 1769, there were 103 baptisms, and 63 burials; and the present number of inhabitants is 262.

St. G E O R G E's.

THIS is a newly erected parish. It lies in the hundred of King's Barton, about thirty-six miles south from the city of Gloucester. It is bounded' on the east by Bitton, on the west by the out-parish of St. Philip and Jacob, on the north by Stapleton and Mangotsfield, and on the south by the river Avon. The western extremity is distant three quarters of a mile from "Laford's Gate, in the city of Bristol; and its greatest length from east to west is two miles and a quarter.

It was part of the out-parish of St. Philip and Jacob, but an act of parliament passed for erecting it into a distinct parish 24 G. 2. By that act, all rates made for the relief of the poor, for the repair of the highways, and all taxes granted, or to be granted, by parliament or otherwise, are to be made upon the inhabitants of St. Philip's and St. George's, jointly and in common; and the workhouse in the old parish is to be for the common use of both. The orders of justices of the peace, relating to the poor, are to be made and directed as before the making of the said act for erecting the said parish; but the church-rates are to be separate. There are two petty constables appointed annually for this parish, at the hundred-court.

Before this separation, the whole of the out-parish of St. Philip and Jacob was called Eaton, because it lay eastward of the city of Bristol; but more antiently, the name of it was Bertune. It was part of the antient demesnes of the crown, as appears by Domesday-book, and gave denomination to the hundred of Barton Regis.

The greater part of the parish lies within the boundaries of the forest, or chase, of "Kingswood, and is one of those places (all situated in the neighbourhood

* The boundaries of the parish are settled to be from a bridge at the foot of Lawrence-hill, called Lawrence-bridge, along the lane southward, called Barton-hill-lane; thence, in a direct line, along Little Marsh-lane; thence by a little stream of water which runs from the said lane into King's-pill; and thence along by the King's-pill to the river Avon, and along up the side of that river to the utmost extent and boundary of the old parish of St. Philip and Jacob on that side thereof. From St. Lawrence-bridge aforesaid, westward to Dod-lane; along this lane northward to Gane-bridge, in the road leading from Bristol to Gloucester, and so on to Comb-brook, and thence to the utmost boundaries of the old parish, eastward to the river Avon. Act, 24 G. 2.

† It is generally written Laford's Gate; but that erroneous manner of writing it destroys the idea which the true name conveys. The castle of Bristol was built by Robert Mellent, or Fitz-Roy, consul and earl of Gloucester. He was lord of the manor and hundred of Bertune, wherefore this gate was called Laford's Gate, i. e. the Lord's-Gate, from the Anglo Saxon Hlaford, which signifies Lord. This gate has lately been taken down.

‡ The following are the bounds of Kingswood Chase, copied from a survey taken by order of government, May 26, 1652, and communicated by a learned friend, for the satisfaction of the curious. — Kingswood was bounded by divers inclosed lands shewed to the surveyors by antient inhabitants within the bounding parishes, beginning near a stone in the high road called Dungel's-crofs, so to Roe-yate northwards, by several inclosed lands, to the manor house and ground called Ridgway, unto a gate called Longland's-gate, abutted on the north by said Ridgway-house, on to Bullibroke, and along the foot of the new pools to Rublay's-yate-lane; thence abutted on the east by Longwalls, near Mangotsfield parish, along to Erford's-lane, so down Bromley's-heath unto Brimble-gate, and thence returning towards the south, surrounding the said heath, passing along by Player's manor-house and grounds called Cleave's-hill; thence south-eastward to Downing's-green, thence northward to Sodbury-gate and road; thence eastward, surrounding the said green, unto Westerley-gate; thence unto grounds called Charnock's, and into Mangotsfield-bottom unto Siston's-brook, and along it southward, returning down Mangotsfield-bottom, unto the highway, or road, from Dungel's-crofs, abutted by Siston's-common; and thence unto Grimsbury-lane, above Mr. Woodward's house; thence winding westward by Grimsbury-hill, and along Cock-ode-hill down eastward by Workman's-green, and thence southward unto the highway towards Mr. Newton's house and manor; thence passing unto Herring-lane end, and over the hill called Martin's- neighbourhood of each other) whence the city of Bristol is supply'd with its coal, which is so excellent, for its durable quality, that the very cinders will burn over and over again, 'till they are wholly reduced to vapour and ashes.

Some of the coal-pits are of a prodigious depth. That at Two-mile-hill*, belonging to his grace the duke of Beaufort, is 107 fathom deep. At this and many others they use a fire-engine, to draw out the water which flows in upon the miners, and would prevent their working.

There are the same kinds of fossils found here which are particularly mentioned in Bitton, and are common to all the coal-lands in Kingswood; but upon diligent inquiry, I cannot find that there is any thing curious or uncommon in the vegetable system. However, I should not omit to mention a flat stone that was found, not long since, near the side of the Avon, in this parish, about nine inches long and six broad, which had so beautiful an impression of a very large species of the fern plant (native of America) on one side of it, that it looked more like the work of a masterly engraver than the production of nature. I saw it in the cabinet of a curious naturalist, and very worthy gentleman, in the city of Bristol. He shewed me, at the same time also, a sparry incrustation, which had almost filled up a pipe made of boards, of which the cavity was about four or five inches square. This pipe, if I mistake not, had served for the conveyance of water to some of the copper-works here, 'till the stony matter filled up the cavity, except a small hole in the middle, and rendered it useless. The grain of the wood, and the marks of the saw, were so perfectly imprest on the incrustation, that the eye could not distinguish it from a piece of sawed timber.

This village is not wholly destitute of antiquities. On a hill, within a few yards of the turnpike-gate leading down to Crew's-hole, there is a small dwelling-house, which in former ages was a Romish chapel, dedicated to St. Anthony; and it retains the name of St. Anthony's chapel to this day. In the highway, about two hundred yards westward of the church, stood Don John's Cross, which was a round freestone column, supported by an octangular base. The upper part of the column, and the cross at top, were probably destroyed by the parliament's party in the great civil war, who demolished every thing of that sort. When the church was built, it was removed, and the base is now deposited at the door of an adjacent house. It is very uncertain what event this was intended to preserve the memory of; but tradition says, that here the corpse of one Don John, a noble Spaniard, rested in its way to the place of its interment. If there be any foundation for this story, it might be shipped for Spain, from the port of Bristol.

Here are two copper-works, and a glass-house for the manufacture of bottles. But the principal production of art is a curious hydraulic machine, erected upon the river Avon, and invented and constructed by the late ingenious mechanic and mathematician, Mr. John Padmore, for throwing water into a reservoir, for the use of the city of Bristol. The reservoir is at a little distance, on the top of a hill, whence, by subterraneous pipes, the water is conveyed to the city. There were formerly two machines for the same purpose, at Hanham-mills, in the parish of Bitton, but they were taken down in the year 1720.

There is a turnpike-road from Bath to Bristol leading through this parish; and another from Bristol to London, by way of Marshfield.

Some of the subsequent records concern the whole hamlet of Easton, and consequently have a relation, as well to the present out-parish of St. Philip and Jacob, as to St. George's; but as they could not properly be divided, they are placed here, and referred to from St. Philip's.

Martin's-horse-hill, unto Cadbury's-bottom; thence southward to Jeffery's-hill into the road way from Bristol to Bath, then north up the said road to the door of H. Stone, where we cross the said road; thence south along by some houses, and westward along by Proffer's-gate unto Cadimore-brook, unto Hanham's-meads, and over Jeffery's-hill, and along down Conham's-hill to the lower end of Strode-brook, so to Deanridge-lands, rounding them to the river Avon; thence turning short about to the north-west by Harris-hill, unto the north-east of the said hill, near to the Bath road; so along westward by the dean and chapter's lands till we come over-against Sims's smith-shop and Dungal's-cross, thence we set out. Total of acres of the whole chase were 132 and 2 Roods. — There were formerly 1500 or 2000 head of deer in the chase, but there have been none for upwards of seventy years past.

* In the year 1735, three men and a boy lay ten days and nineteen hours in a dark cavern, in the midst of a coal-pit near Two-mile-hill, in this parish, thirty-nine fathom under ground, surrounded with water, and on the brink of a precipice sixteen fathom perpendicular. As these persons were wedging out coals, on the 7th of November, a prodigious torrent of water burst on a sudden out of a vein, and put out all the lights; the people were struck with the utmost consternation, and knew not which way to fly, but crawling on their hands and knees from place to place to avoid the water, they providentially got to a rising ground, where creeping up higher and higher, as the water rose, at length reached a hollow place, whence coals had been dug, and there continued. In their way, they found a bit of beef and a crust of bread, together about a quarter of a pound, which they divided equally, and eat. It was for some time very easy to get water, but the water sinking, it became more and more difficult, 'till at length, not being able to obtain it, they were forced to drink their own urine, and to chew some chips which they cut from a basket; but losing their knife, even this miserable expedient failed them, and one endeavoured to eat his shoe. They were almost suffocated with heat, and with the nauseous fumes that arose from their bodies, and continued without any other sustenance 'till the 17th, when their friends, after several ineffectual attempts, let down a large quantity of burning coals, which dissipated the black vapour; and the water being gone off in a great measure, five men ventured down, and calling out, were surpris'd to find them alive and able to answer. The eldest, about sixty years old, was delirious, and all of them very weak, and for some time intirely blind. They were taken out, and having received some refreshment, walked to their homes, to the great astonishment of a vast croud of people assembled from all parts. The men did not apprehend they had been above five days under ground. At the water's first bursting in upon them, there were four other boys in the mine, but being at the Tip of the work, ran to the rope, crying to be pulled up, and notwithstanding it was done with as much expedition as possible, yet the water was at the heels of the last boy, who, as the other three were hawling up, caught hold of the feet of one of his companions, and all got safe out.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Under the head Terra Regis, in Domesday-book, it is thus expressed:

' In Bertune at Bristou were six hides. In de' mean were three plow-tillages, and twenty-two ' villeins, and twenty-five bordars, with twenty-' five plow-tillages. There were ten servi, and ' eighteen free men [coliberti] having fourteen
' plow-tillages. There were two mills of 27 s.
' [rent.] When Roger received this manor of the ' king, he found there two hides, and two plow' tillages in demean, and seventeen villeins, and
' twenty-four bordars, with twenty-one plow-
' tillages. There were four servi, and thirteen
' free men with three plow-tillages.

' In Manegodesfelle, one member of this manor,
' are six cows in demean.

' The church of Bristou holds three hides of ' this land, and has one plow-tillage there.

' A radechenister holds one hide, and has one ' plow-tillage, and four bordars with one plow' tillage.

' This manor and Bristou pay 110 marks of ' silver to the king. The burgessees say, that bishop
' G. [Goisfrid] has thirty-three marks of silver,
' and one mark of gold, besides the king's farm.'
Domesday-book, p. 68.

The manor and hundred of Bertune have been generally held by persons of great eminence. It appears by the fines registered 3 H. 3. that Richard earl of Gloucester had been seized of Bertune near Bristol, of Finchwood, and Keynsham-chafe. And his son, Gilbert earl of Gloucester, was afterwards seized of them. Bertune near Bristol was granted to queen Isabel, in part of her dower, 11 E. 2. The manor of Bertune was granted, in part of dower, to queen Philippa, 4 E. 3. and afterwards to queen Catherine.

The manor of Bertune, and the hundred, and the advowson of the hospital of St. Lawrence, within the said hundred, belonged to Edward duke of York, grandson to king Edward the Third, who was slain at Agincourt, and died without issue. His brother, Richard earl of Cambridge, having been attainted and executed, this manor reverted to the crown, and was granted to Humphry duke of Gloucester, and to his heirs male, 3 H. 5. He and Elianor his wife levied a fine thereof to the use of themselves in taille, the remainder to the king, 14 H. 6. and the duke made a lease of this manor and hundred to Ralph Butler and John Beauchamp, for their lives.

Henry Beauchamp, duke of Warwick, had a grant of the manor and hundred to him and his heirs, in reversion, after the death of the duke of Gloucester; but the duke of Warwick dying 25 H. 6. the year before the duke of Gloucester, the estate came to Anne, an infant daughter and heir of the duke of Warwick, who dying 27 H. 6.

the manor and hundred went to Anne, sister to the duke of Warwick, who was married to Richard Nevil, the Make-king, afterwards earl of Warwick in her right. They join in levying a fine of this estate to the use of themselves and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to Richard Beauchamp, afterwards earl of Warwick.

Isabel, one of the daughters and coheirs of Richard Nevil earl of Warwick, and Anne his wife, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth; and by virtue of an act of parliament which deprived the mother, he, in right of his wife, held the manor and hundred of Bertune, of which he died seized 17 E. 4. But Anne countess of Warwick was afterwards restored to her right, with a sinister design, by that covetuous monarch king Henry the Seventh; for she was obliged to pass away this manor, and many others, to the king, as frequently observed in the course of this work, 3 H. 7.

The manor and hundred, and two mills, called French-Mills, were granted, by king Henry the Eighth, to his last queen Catherine, in part of her dower. She died 2 E. 6. and presently afterwards the manor was granted to sir Thomas Arundel, the duke of Somerset's favourite, who was attainted and executed with the duke, 5 E. 6. for conspiring the death of John duke of Northumberland, and other privy counsellors.

The manor and hundred were again granted by the crown to William earl of Pembroke, in consideration of 8000 l. 7 E. 6. Maurice Dennis was seized of the manor and hundred of Berton 5 E. 6. and left Walter Dennis, his brother and heir, then sixty years old.

This manor and hundred were soon after purchased by Thomas Chester, of Knole, esq; and from him it has descended, down to the present time, in the same manner with Almondbury in this county, to which the reader is referred.

The lords of this manor have constantly held courts leet and hundred courts for the manor and hundred.

Beside the manor, the records give the following particulars of other estates in this parish, and such parts of its neighbourhood as cannot, perhaps, at this time, be distinguished therefrom. Thomas de Amenel, in right of his manor of Bitton, had tack of swine in Bristol-Bertune and Finchwood 7 H. 3. Roger Corbet was seized of lands in Bertune by Bristol 18 E. 1. John de Saltmarsh was seized of twenty acres of wood in Kingwood-chafe 14 E. 2. William Corbet was seized of fourteen acres of land in Bertune near Bristol 2 R. 2. Sir William Rodney died seized of several tenements in Berton and in Bristol 6 E. 4. Roger Kemys, a lunatick, held a tenement, called Girdelars, 21 E. 4. A meadow in Berton near Bristol, which had belonged to St. Mary Magde-len's hospital in that city, was granted, after the dissolution of religious foundations, to Henry Brain and John March, 37 H. 8. The lords commissioners to examine the king's revenues throughout England, made a return 6 E. 6. that the ranger of Kingswood and Fillwood had a yearly salary of 11*l.* 8*s.* 1*d.*

The hospital of St. Lawrence, for lepers, which stood within the bounds of this parish, was granted, at the dissolution, to sir Raufe Sadleir, knight. A piece of ground, about six acres, which belonged to that hospital, lying on the north side of the chapel of St. Lawrence, is exempt from tithe. Sir William Dugdale, in his Monasticon, places this hospital in Somersetsshire, by mistake.

Blacksworth, or Blackensworde, is a manor consisting of detached lands in several parishes. The greater part is in this, and some, particularly the passage over the river Avon at Rownham, in the parish of Clifton. The monastery of St. Augustin in Bristol was endowed with this manor by the founder, Robert Fitz-Harding. It is now the property of the dean and chapter of Bristol, and is in lease to Thomas Tyndale, of the Fort, esq.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, worth 150*l.* a year, under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Bristol and of the archdeacon of Gloucester; the mayor and corporation of the city of Bristol are patrons, the reverend Mr. Hart is the present incumbent.

Dr. Butler, bishop of Durham, gave 400*l.* towards endowing the church: And the late Thomas Chester, esq; gave two acres, one rood, and six perches of land, bounded on the west by Don John's Cross, (as recited in the act of parliament) for the scite of the church and cœmety. Besides these, other donations, to a large amount, were contributed by various persons, for the augmentation of the vicarage; and, together with what was procured from the governors of queen Anne's bounty, were laid out, by the commissioners, in the purchase of several lands in this parish, to the value of between 70 and 80*l.* a year. There is a very good new house for the residence of the incumbent.

The church is a very neat, tho' plain building, seventy feet long by sixty broad, consisting of the nave and two aisles, supported by two rows of handsome freestone pillars. The chancel is very small, with a Venetian window over the communion table. At the west end is a large square tower, seventy-two feet high, with two bells.

The building was begun in the year 1752. The mayor of Bristol, attended by the rest of the commissioners, went in procession, on the 3d of March, from the Lamb inn to the spot of ground upon which the church was to be erected, where the mayor laid the first foundation stone, with this inscription:

Templum hoc,

Several pieces of coin, inclosed in lead, being laid on the same stone, the whole was covered with a proper sheet of lead, and then another stone laid thereon, with the following inscription:

Domine Deus noster!
Aperti sint Oculi tui nocte dieque super domum hanc; Orationes populi tui, quodcumque oraverint in loco isto, exaudias; in Loco Habitaculi tui in Cœlis exaudias; et cum exaudieris, propitius

The church was consecrated Sept. 6, 1756, and was called St. George's. A revel is constantly kept on the anniversary of the church's consecration, in pious commemoration of the divine goodness, in causing this fabrick, at a great expence, to be founded and endowed, for the accommodation of the inhabitants in their weekly attendance on divine worship: Which revel is most devoutly celebrated by great numbers of the parishioners, and others, in the adjacent ale-houses, with all the solemnities of an old pagan festival; that is, drunkenness, gluttony, riot, debauchery, cursing and swearing, scolding and fighting, fiddling and dancing, Bacchanalian songs, and midnight impurities.

What induced the truly worthy persons concerned in this good work to give the church the name of St. George's, is to me unaccountable, as that saint is not to be found in the calendar of the church of England, since the reformation.

The late Mr. Paul Fisher, of Clifton, left, by his will, the interest of 300*l.* for ever to the vicar of St. George's for the time being, for reading prayers on Wednesdays, Fridays, and saints-days, for preaching a sermon on Good-friday and Christmas-day, and for administering a monthly sacrament.

Of the donations formerly left to the poor of St. Philip's parish, amounting to 16*l.* a year, the church-wardens of this parish receive a third part, which they distribute in bread to the poor.

The donations, formerly given to the old parish for repairing the highways, are not divided; particulars of which are given under St. Philip's.

In a series of ten years, beginning with 1760, there are registered 1145 baptisms, and 499 burials. But the burials give no light respecting population, because many of the parishioners are every year interred at the neighbouring parishes, especially at St. Philip's, where most of their ancestors lie; which accounts for the great disproportion between the numbers of baptisms and burials here. There are about 700 houses in this parish, and if we estimate the whole number of inhabitants to be to the average of annual baptisms in the proportion of 30 to 1, which is the proportion commonly found in like situations, the number of people will then be 3435; i. e. nearly five to a house.

GUITING-POWER.

THIS parish is situated in the Cotswold country, in the lower part of the hundred of Kiftesgate, six miles distant west from Stow, six eastward from Winchcombe, and nineteen north-east from Gloucester.

It is generally called Lower-Guiting, from its situation lower down the river, to distinguish it from another Guiting, lying nearer to the source of that river.

It is a fine, open, sporting country, with bold rising grounds, consisting chiefly of sheep-walks, and arable lands; but there are some woodlands and meadow grounds. Petrifications of the cockle, the muscle, and the echenites are found in plenty, particularly in and about the manor of Guiting Grange; and the water of a stream near the village is of a strong incrusting quality. The little river is the head of the Windrush, and abounds with small trout and excellent eels.

Powell Snell, esq; has a large estate called the Grange, in this parish, with a handsome seat, where he resides.

hides, of which nine pay tax. In demean are four plow-tillages, and four villeins, and three foreigners, and two radchenifers, and a priest, with two bordars, who have between them all, five plow-tillages; and the servi and ancilla have eleven [plow-tillages] and two mills of 14 s. There are five salt-pits, which yield twenty seams of salt. Two houses in Winchcombe pay 11 s. 4 d. It was worth 16 l. now 6 l.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

The master of the knights templers, in a writ of Quo warranto brought against him, proved his right to court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Guiting-Poers, by a grant 53 H. 3.

Two virgates of land, each of 3 s. rent, were given to the knights templers by Roger de Waittevil. Dug.

This manor, Farmcot, Catelade and Caldecot, were held of Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchester, 55 H. 3. and afterwards of Alan la Zouche, baron of Ashley, who was grandson and heir to the said earl, by one of his coheireffes; which Alan died 7 E. 2. and left coheireffes.

Roger Corbet died 7 E. 2. seized of four knights fees and a half, and of one third part of a knight's fee, in Ebrington, Hudecote, Clopton, Farnecote, Cattelade parva, Gytinge, and Teynton; which he held of Alan Szouche, and they were worth 48 l. 6 s. 8 d. Esch.

Adam de Hermitington died seized of the manor of Nether-Guiting 16 E. 3. and sir John Butler died seized of the manors of Nether-Guiting and of Whitbridge 17 E. 4.

This manor came afterwards to the Horwoods. William Horwood was seized of it, and obtained grant of the impropriation 35 H. 8. which latter formerly belonged to the knights templers. He died 37 H. 8. and left two coheireffes; Anne, who was afterwards married to Ambrose Dudley; and Margaret, who was married to Thomas Throgmorton. They had livery granted to them 3 Mar. and livery of one moiety of the manor, and of the rectory and advowson, was granted to Thomas Horwood 15 Eliz.

Henry Stratford, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Sir James Howe married one of the coheireffes of the heir of Henry Stratford, and was lord of the manor when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. But it did not continue long afterwards in that family, for David Hughes, esq; was lord of it in the year 1726. He was succeeded by David his son, who dying unmarried in the year 1753, bequeathed his estate to his three sisters, of whom the eldest was married to Thomas Vernon, of the city of Gloucester, esq; deceased, by whom she has one son; the second to Mr. William Smart, of Winchcombe, apothecary, deceased; and the youngest to John Holland, of Bickleton in this county, gentleman, by whom she had several children. Mr. Vernon and Mr. Holland are the present lords of the manor, and had a court baron; but Guiting-Power, Catflade, and Farmcot owe suit and service to the court leet at Ebrington, held by lord Fortescue. The manor of Guiting-Power pays 9 l. 19 s. a year to William Wyndham, of Halling, esq.

But there was another manor of Guiting at the time of the general survey.

'The wife of Geri de Loges holds of the king four hides in Getinge, in Holiforde hundred. Three thanes, Gulvert, Tovi, and Turber held them for three manors, and paid tax. In demean is one plow-tillage, and one villein, with half a plow-tillage. It was worth 40 s. now 20 s.' Domesday-book, p. 79.

It is impossible at this time to trace the descent of these lands distinctly from the former; only the records shew, that Gunuld de Loges, the widow of Juric or Geri de Loges, gave two hides of land in Guiting to the monastery of Gloucester, to pray for the soul of her husband.

William de Ebroicis and Maud his wife, formerly the wife of — de Trelvel, levied a fine of lands in Guiting to the use of Maud for her life, with several remainders, 5 E. 1.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Farmcot, but antiently, and perhaps more rightly, Fernecote; from fern, and the British word coed, a wood; for there is a large wood which gave occasion to the name. This hamlet, lying near three miles from the church, is divided from the body of the parish by the intervention of lands in Guiting-Temple. It is an antient manor, thus described in the survey:

'William Goizenboded holds Fernecote. Aluinus held it. There are three hides taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and four villeins, with four plow-tillages, and thirteen among the servi and ancilla. Goisfrid holds it of William. It was worth 10 l. now 3 l.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

Roger Corbet died seized of lands in Farnecote, &c. which he held of Alan Szouche 7 E. 2. John Benne died seized of this manor 16 E. 3. as did sir Robert Corbet 5 H. 5. having assigned it to Joan his widow in dower. John Grevil married Sybil, the daughter of sir Robert Corbet, and in the life time of the said Joan, entered upon the lands which she held in dower, for which he had the king's pardon 8 H. 5. John Grevil died seized of Farmcot 23 H. 6. as did sir John Lincham 19 E. 4.

This estate soon afterwards came into the family of the Stratfords, who have continued to enjoy it to the present age; but that antient family falling to decay, this manor and estate were sold to Robert Tracy, esq; grandson to the late Mr. Justice Tracy; who dying without issue, bequeathed it to Robert Pratt, esq; representative in the last parliament for Horsham in Suffex.

The large wood is the property of George Pitt, esq; representative in parliament for the county of Dorset.

On a piece of ground called the Langet, stood a small preceptory, belonging to the commandery at Quenington in this county, to which the great tithes belonged. King Henry the Eighth fold fold the great tithes to bishop Fox, who gave them to Christ-Church college in Oxford. The preceptory and the Langet were granted to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberlain of Hayles, 34 H. 8. and afterwards purchased of them by Mr. John Stratford, at that time owner of the rest of Farmcot. Other lands in Farmcot, which belonged to the abbey of Hayles, were granted to William marquis of Northampton, 5 E. 6.

Here is a chapel of ease, where divine service is performed once every kalendar month, by the minister of Lower-Guiting.

This tithing has its own constable, and pays all rates, except the poor's rate, distinctly.

2. Caldicot is another hamlet, but it is not known by that name at present. When Domesday-book was compiled, this hamlet lay in a different hundred from the rest of the parish, according to the following entry :

' William Goizenboded holds Callicote in Salemanesberie hundred, and Rannulf [holds it] of him. Aluvin held it in the time of king Edward. There are three hides taxed. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight among the servi and ancilla. It was worth 60s. now [only] 40s.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

The lands of this place are now called the West Field, about a mile from the church, divided from the other lands of the parish, by those of Naunton and Halling. This estate belonged to the family of Aylworth, which became extinct in the present age. It is now the property of Henry Blagg, of the county of Nottingham, esq.

3. Castlet, antiently written Cateslat, and Cateslade, is another hamlet, of which it is thus recorded :

' William Goizenboded holds Cateslat. Aluvin held it. There are two hides taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and four servi, and a mill of 5s. It was worth 40s. now only 10s.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

This manor, tho' within the parish of Guiting, is a member of the manor of Ebbington. It consists of a capital messuage and a corn-mill. David Hughes, esq; lately deceased, died seized of this manor. Christ-Church college in Oxford has the great tithes; but the vicar has tithe of hay, some pieces of ground excepted. Cateslat has a distinct constable. It is exempted from statute-labour, but in all other respects, it joins in payments with the parish at large.

4. The Grange. This is an independent manor, and pays an annual rent to the crown. It was a grange belonging to the abbey of Bruern, and tho' it does not appear when these lands were granted to that house, it was certainly not before the reign of king John.

Three fourths of the great tithes of this manor are paid to Christ-Church college, Oxford; the remainder to the trustees of the charities left by George Townsend, esq.

Within this manor is a plot of ground, in the midst of an arable inclosure, where the foundations of a chapel are visible, of which, however there is no written account. It is supposed to have been the burying-place of the inhabitants of the Grange, and to have been dedicated to the Holy Trinity, as the ford thro' the adjacent brook is even now called Trinity ford, and probably gave name to the old hundred of Holeford, i. e. holy ford, in which it lay. The piece of ground between those ruins and the Grange-house, still retains the name of the Bier-way-piece. Add to this, that the plot of ground where the foundations are seen belongs to the vicar.

Lands in Nether-Guiting, formerly belonging to the abbey of Bruern, were granted to Anthony Stringer and John Williams 34 H. 8. This manor and estate were the property of William Gardiner, esq; at the beginning of this century, and were purchased of Mr. Gardiner, about fifty years since, by John Snell, of the city of Gloucester, esq; who marrying Anna-Maria, daughter and sole heiress of Robert Huntingdon, D.D.^b sometime bishop of Raphoe, by Mary his wife, sister to the late sir John Powell, knight, one of the justices of the court of queen's bench, had by that marriage several sons, of whom the late Powell Snell, esq; was the eldest. He inclosed the antient grange within a park stocked with deer. In the year 1737, he married Dorothy, one of the coheiresses of Charles Yate, of Colthrop, in this county, esq; by whom he had issue Powell, John, Charles, and Dorothy. And surviving her, married secondly, Susannah, second daughter of Benjamin Bathurst, of Lidney, in this county, esq; but by her had no issue. He died in the year 1767, and is succeeded in this and other estates, by his eldest and only surviving son, Powell Snell, esq; who resides here. His arms are, Quarterly, gules and azure, over all a cross flory Or.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, worth 52*l.* a year. Thomas Vernon, esq; and Mr. David-Hughes Holland are patrons; Mr. King the present incumbent. The impropriation belonged to the abbey of Bruern, in Oxfordshire.

The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a very antient fabrick. The door-way of it, and the arch between the church and chancel, are thought to be of Saxon workmanship. It hath a well built embattled tower at the west end.

Benefactions.

George Townshend, esq; gave a portion of tithes in this parish, to be applied in apprenticing out poor children; one of this parish to be taken in rotation with some others. Two acres of land are given to repair the church. And one Compere gave 100*l.* the interest of which to be laid out in bread for the poor.

GUITING - TEMPLE.

THIS parish lies on the Cotswold hills, in the lower part of Kiftesgate hundred, seven miles north-westward from Stow, five eastward from Winchcombe, and twenty north-east from Gloucester.

It was called Temple-Guiting, because the knights templers had great property here. It is now generally called Upper-Guiting, and formerly, in old writings, Over-Guiting, because situated above the adjoining parish of Guiting-Power.

It is of a middle size, consisting mostly of arable land, with some pasture and woodland, and two large commons, on which great numbers of cattle are depastured.

It is a fine country for hunting, abounds with game, and enjoys a very healthy air, as appears by the state of population at the end of this account.

The honourable and reverend George Talbot, D.D. third son of Charles lord Talbot, late high chancellor of Great Britain, resides in the hamlet of Barton, in this parish. And Mrs. Jane Allen resides at Guiting. She is descended, on the mother's side, from the very antient family of Pussey, of Pussey, in the county of Berks, which flourished there in the time of king Canute the Dane. She is possessed of that famous Charter-Horn, of which Mr. Pegge gives some account in a work intitled Archæologia, published in the year 1775. This horn is ornamented with silver gilt rims, and a broad silver ring in the middle, and neatly mounted on hound's feet, which support the whole. It was produced in court before lord chancellor Jefferies, in the reign of king James the Second, and proved from the inscription upon it, and other admissible evidence, to be the identical horn, by which, as by a charter, king Canute conveyed the manor of Pussey to the family of that name, about 700 years before. It appears to have been originally a hunting horn, but as a hound's head, of silver gilt, is made to screw in, as a stopper, at the small end, it is supposed to have been also a drinking horn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The account of this manor, in Domesday-book, stands under the head Terra Rogerij de Laci, and may be thus translated :

' The same Roger holds Getinge in Holeford hundred. There are ten hides taxed, besides the lord's, which is not taxed. Brictric held it, who was one of king Edward's thanes. In demean are five plow-tillages, and twenty-five villeins, and a priest, and seven radcheniffers, with eighteen plow-tillages. There are eighteen among the servi and ancilla, and three mills of 24*s.* and a salt-pit of 20*s.* and twelve seams of salt, and in Winchelcombe three burgages of 32*d.* and two burgages in Glouuecester of 10*d.* From wood and pasture forty hens. It is worth and was worth 10*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 75.

Walter de Laci, father of the above Roger, was a great soldier, and very much in favour with the Conqueror; and this Roger had one hundred and sixteen manors given him, of which twenty were in Gloucestershire. Taking part with Robert Curthoise, the elder brother, against king William the Second, his possessions were taken from him, and given to Hugh de Laci, his younger brother, who founded the priory of Lanthony.

Hugh de Laci left no surviving issue, whereby his inheritance descended to Gilbert, son of Emme, his sister and surviving heiress; which Gilbert assumed the name of Laci. He gave twelve hides and one virgate of land, with his demesnes in Guiting, and five burgages in Winchcombe, to the knights templers, of which order he afterwards profest himself.

Hugh de Laci, who distinguished himself in the wars in Ireland, was son and heir of Gilbert, and died seized of the manor of Temple-Guiting 31 H. 2. Walter de Laci, son of Hugh, succeeded him, in whom, and his descendants, the manor of Guiting continued till the death of Alice, daughter and heiress of Henry de Laci, the last earl of Lincoln of that name. The knights templers held of Alice countess of Lincoln, the manor of Great Guiting, called Temple-Guiting, with all its members, and the advowson of the church, 17 E. 2. She died 22 E. 3.

From the Lacies, the manor of Temple-Guiting went to William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, who held this manor, together with the hamlets of Kynton and Bereton, in Temple-Guiting, jointly with his wife Julian, daughter and heir of sir Thomas de Leybourn, and widow of John lord Hastings of Bergavenny; and died seized thereof 28 E. 3. Julian surviving him, died seized thereof 41 E. 3. They leaving no issue, the manor descended to sir John de Clinton, (son of John, the elder brother of the before-mentioned William earl of Huntingdon) who died seized thereof ^d 22 R. 2. He married Idonea, eldest daughter of Jeffery lord Say, and at length coheir to her brother William lord Say, and had by her, sir William Clinton, his heir, who married Elizabeth, daughter of sir William Deincourt, knight; but dying in the life time of his father, left issue William, his heir, who succeeded his grandfather. This William, fifth lord Clinton, bore the title of lord Say, to which he was heir by his grandmother Idonea, and was a very great warrior. He died 10 H. 6. and John Clinton, his son and heir, succeeded him; but it does not appear that he had any property in this manor, unless he was the same person described in the records by the name of John Clinton, of Clinton and Say, who levied a fine of lands in Over-Guiting 2 R. 3.

The manor of Temple-Guiting was soon after purchased by Dr. Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester, who gave it to Corpus Christi college in Oxford, which he had founded: The president and fellows of which college are the present lords of the manor, and keep a court leet.

It is on record, that the knights templers purchased a charter of free warren, and of court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Guiting, Barton, Kyngton, Holford, and Weston, 53 H. 3. and that their right was allowed, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. This seems incongruous with the preceding account of the descent of the manor, from before that time 'till long afterwards, in the family of the Lacies; but the difficulty immediately vanishes, if we consider them as mesne lords under that family, which was really the case, as expressly mentioned by the record of 17 E. 2. But tho' they were not the chief lords, their lands and possessions in this parish were very considerable. Upon the suppression of their order, in the reign of king Edward the Second, their lands in Guiting, and in almost all other places, were given to the knights hospitallers; and after the general dissolution of religious foundations, the rectory and advowson of the vicarage, and lands in Temple-Guiting, lately belonging to the knights hospitallers of Jerusalem, were granted to the dean and chapter of Oxford 38 H. 8.

Of some other estates, the records shew, that Robert de Brives died seized of lands in Guiting-Temple 53 H. 3. Walter de Laci gave lands in this parish to the abbey of Gloucester, which abbey was seized of one messuage, one plow-tillage, and six yard lands in Temple-Guiting 32 E. 1. The abbey had also a grant of four marks rent, out of a messuage and one yard land, 33 E. 3.

H A M L E T S. 1. Guiting, containing 23 houses, and 177 inhabitants.

2. Ford, containing 17 houses, and 80 inhabitants. Robert consul of Gloucester gave to the monastery of Gloucester a water-mill in Ford, when William was abbat. Here was formerly a chapel of ease, long since converted to secular uses. This hamlet pays to the church and poor of Guiting, but it is a constablewick annexed to Pinnock, to which it is rated for statute labour. Lord Tracy is lord of the manor.

3. Kynetton, which has 16 houses, and 84 inhabitants. Thomas Cook and Juliana his wife, and John Collet, levied a fine of lands in Kynetton 3 E. 6. One of the large commons within the parish is appropriated to the use of this hamlet.

4. Barton, containing 7 houses, and 44 inhabitants. Livery of the manor of Barton was granted to Maurice Rodney 1 Eliz.

5. Hyde-farm. This is situated between Guiting and Ford; but tho' its situation seems to intitle it to be taken notice of in this parish, yet it pays neither to the church nor poor of Guiting, and is within the constablewick of Pinnock. And I conjecture, that Pinnock, Ford, and Hyde, constituted that district which is called Pinnockshire in some antient writings.

Besides the above, there are some scattered tenements, which make the whole number of houses 75, of inhabitants 428.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Stow, and in the gift of Christ Church college, Oxford. Mr. King is the present incumbent.

The tithes and church revenues of this parish are appropriated, and vested in the dean and chapter of Oxford, and the manor and temporal revenues belong to Corpus Christi college. Tho' both are of a considerable value, yet the allowance to the curate is only 20*l.* a year; upon which sir Robert Atkyns has observed, that it would be an advantage to both the colleges, and justice to the church, to improve the curacy; for then there might be a competent provision for a member of their own society, and the colleges might present alternately.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. By the generosity of Dr. Talbot, the late minister, and the concurrence of the inhabitants, this church has been beautified in a more elegant manner than is often seen in village churches. The chancel is small, but ornamented with a handsome altar-piece, and the windows are of antient painted glass. The church is newly pewed and glazed throughout, and the walls and cieling are of stucco. There is a handsome square tower at the west end, with four bells.

At the beginning of this century, there were 45 houses and about 191 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 6. Atkyns. The average of annual baptisms at present is 16, of burials 8; the exact number of houses 75, of inhabitants 428; which shews that the place is very healthy; the proportion of annual burials, to the whole number of inhabitants, being exactly as 1 to 53.5.

HAMPNET

IS a small parish in the hundred of Bradley, one mile north-westward from Northleach, and eighteen east from Gloucester.

It is situated in the Cotswold country, with a healthy air, and a light soil, chiefly employ'd in tillage. A little rivulet rises here, and runs to Northleach in its way to Leachlade, where it empties itself into the Thames. It is called the Lech, (i.e. in the British language, a stone) from the petrifying quality of its water, which incrusts wood and other substances lying in its course with stony matter.

The name of this village was antiently written Hantone, but there being two other parishes in Gloucestershire of the same name, both much larger than this, the diminutive termination was added for distinction, and it was then called Hamptonet, which, by vulgar use, was soon contracted to Hampnet.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The earliest account we have of this manor is in Domesday-book, where it is thus recorded :

'Roger de Lurei holds Hantone in Bradelege hundred. There are ten hides. Arch-bishop Eldred held it, to whom king Edward gave two of those ten hides quit [from tax] as they say. In demean are three plow-tillages, and ten villeins, with a priest, and one bordar, with five plow-tillages. There are eleven servi, and ten burgages in Winchcombe pay 65*d.* It was worth 8*l.* now [only] 6*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 75.

The manor of Hampton was held of Roger Mortimer, earl of March, 34 E. 3. Edward de Mortimer, earl of March and Ulster, was seized of a rent out of Hamptonet, near Northleach, which was then considered as a member of Bisley, R. 2. Richard Hercourt, and Agnes his wife, levied a fine of the manor and advowson of Hampnet 23 H. 7.

This manor, and that of Stowel, have had the same owners for many generations. Edmond Horn was seized of Hampnet 1 E. 6. and levied two fines of the manor and advowson of Stowel, the same year, the other 4 E. 6. He died

2 Mariæ, and left an only daughter and heir, married to Anthony Bourne, who, in her right, had livery of Hampnet the same year.

The manor passed afterwards to Henry Atkinson, of Stowel, esq; who was lord of it in 1608. Sir Henry Atkinson, the last male heir of his family, dying without issue, gave this manor to William earl of Strafford, grandson to sir William Wentworth, who had married Anne, the eldest sister of the before-mentioned Henry Atkinson. John How, esq; purchased the manor of the earl of Strafford, and lord Chedworth is the present lord of the manor of Hampnet. See Stowel.

Of the other estates in this parish, the records shew, that John Hanborow, and Thomas Bruges and Maud his wife, levied a fine of the third part of certain lands in Hampnet 36 H. 6. Also William Garine, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of lands in Hampnet 2 E. 4.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth 160*l.* a year. Lord Chedworth is patron, Mr. Hawker is the present incumbent.

The church of Stowel was annexed to Hampnet by the consent of the bishop and patron in 1660. There are about fifty acres of glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, is small, with a tower at the west end, but there is nothing in it worthy notice. It is, however, remarkable, that a woman has for many years officiated as clerk of the parish.

There were 14 houses in this parish, at the beginning of this century, and about 60 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 1. Atkyns. There are now the same number of houses, and 78 inhabitants.

HAMPTON.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Longtree, three miles distant south from Stroud, six north from Tetbury, ten west from Cirencester, and twelve south-eastward from Gloucester.

The name is composed of Ham, a village, and ton, a common termination. The manor antiently belonged to the nuns of Caen in Normandy, wherefore it was called Minchen-Hampton, from the Saxon word Wynchen, a nun, in order to distinguish it from another parish of the name of Hampton in this county. It is also called Hampton-Road, because it lies on the great road from the south-east country to the passage over the Severn.

The

The greater part of the parish lies high and healthy. It consists mostly of arable lands, a large common, and some beech woods.

On the north east side of the town, are several fortifications and rampires, thrown up at the time when the Danes ravaged this part of the country; and a great battle was fought thereabout, between Wolphang the Saxon, and Uffa the Dane, as related by one of our antient historians, wherein the latter was routed; and the place has ever since borne the name of Woeful Dane's Bottom, or rather, Uffa Dane's Bottom, in memory of that event. There are also very large intrenchments on the west side of the town, made probably about the same time, to check the incursions of those terrible robbers.

Within the parish, is a little town of the same name, with a market on Tuesdays, and two fairs in the year, viz. one held on Trinity-Monday, the other on the 29th of October. The abbess of Caen purchased a grant of markets and fairs here, in the fifty-third year of the reign of king Henry the Third; but the charter was renewed in 1541. The town consists of four streets, in the form of a cross, with three market-houses, one of which was built in the year 1700, for storing of wool and yarn, in expectation of establishing a great mart for those commodities, as the town is well situated for that purpose in a great clothing country; but it seems not to have fully answered the design.

In the parish, not in the town, the clothing business is carried on in a very extensive manner, where it has been seated for several ages, and will probably continue; for the many brooks and streams of water on the north and west sides of the parish, are particularly necessary for driving the fulling-mills used in that business.

Here was formerly a furnace for making of iron, and the place where it stood is now called the Iron-mills.

Amberley is a large tract of common of pasture, on the west side of the town, consisting of about a thousand acres, given to the parish, according to tradition, by dame Alice Hampton, who lies buried in the church. In this common are quarries of very fine freestone, and weather stone.

So much of Chalford as lies on the south side of the river, is within the boundaries of this parish; and notwithstanding some account has been given of it under Bisley, it is necessary in this place to take notice of the petrifying quality of a remarkably clear spring of water, issuing from several apertures, out of the north side of the hill facing the bottom. The petrifying effects of this water are seen on various substances, lying in the course of the stream, such as moss, and small pieces of wood; but they are particularly observable on the axis and other parts of a mill-wheel, on which the water is continually dropping; so that in the course of a year, it forms incrustations nearly half an inch thick, not much unlike pieces of manna.

Falling into cavities, it forms stalactites, and large petrified masses, in various uncommon shapes, pieces of which are preserved as curiosities.

St. Mary's-Mill, in this parish, was formerly a chapel, famous for a room in it called Friar Bacon's Study, because Roger Bacon is said to have been educated there. He died in 1284, and was the greatest mathematician and philosopher of the dark and ignorant age in which he lived. His skill in those sciences was so much superior to that of all others, that he was cast into prison, on suspicion of having communication with the devil; and, it is said, was indicted for bringing the sun, moon, and stars down to the end of a long stick. Hence it seems probable that he had some knowledge of optical glasses; for what else can that long stick be, than some kind of telescope.

Mr. Sheppard has a very good house close by the church, and a park adjoining, with plantations of beech wood, particularly large and fine.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Sir Robert Atkyns, giving an account of the antient proprietors of this manor, has appropriated some records to this place, which really belong to others. Thus, the manor of Hantone which the Conqueror gave to Roger de Lurei, (whom Sir Robert calls de Ivory) lay at that time in the hundred of Bradley, as appears by Domesday-book; and tho' he has applied that account to Minchin-Hampton, yet it can belong to no other place than Hampnet in Bradley hundred. He also mentions, under this head, another manor of Hantone, in Bisley hundred, whereas there was no such manor there. The particulars he specifies, should have been applied to Hampton-Meysey, which at the time of the general survey, lay in Gersdones, not in Bisley hundred, according to the fore-mentioned record. The following account is proper to this manor:

'The church of the Holy Trinity of the nuns of Caen holds Hantone in Langetreu hundred. Goda the countess held it in the time of king Edward. There are eight hides. In demer are five plow-tillages, and thirty-two villeins, and ten bordars, with twenty-four plow-tillages. There is a priest, and ten servi, and eight mills of 45s. [rent] and twenty acres of meadow; a wood two miles long, and half a mile broad. It is worth 28l.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

The nuns of Caen in Normandy purchased a grant of markets and fairs in Hampton 53 H. 3. and the abbess proved her right to court leet and free warren in Hampton, in a writ of Quo warranto brought against her, 15 E. 1.

The nuns of Caen enjoy'd this manor 'till the reign of king Henry the Fifth, when all the estates in England belonging to alien monasteries were taken from them. And that king having founded a stately nunnery at Syon in Middlesex, as already mentioned under Avening, endowed it with many great great estates, and among others, with the manor of Hampton. The nuns of Syon obtained a confirmation of this estate 1 E. 4. to be held after the death of the dutchess of Suffolk, who had a grant of it for her life.

After the final dissolution of religious foundations, this manor was granted to Andrew lord Windsor, in exchange for the manor of Stanwell in Middlesex, and other lands near Hampton-court, 34 H. 8. since which time it has had the same proprietors with that of Avening, where they are particularly set down. Edward Sheppard, esq; is the present lord of the manor.

Sir Robert Atkyns observes, that the manor of Hampton was held of Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, 47 H. 3. but this must be understood of Meysey-Hampton, and not of Minchin-Hampton, where he had placed it by mistake.

In the account of donations to St. Peter's abbey at Gloucester, taken from sir William Dugdale's Monasticon, it is said, that William Revel gave to the church of St. Peter at Gloucester, one hide of land in Hamptone, with the consent of Bernard of Newmarket, which king Henry the First confirmed to the abbey, when Peter was abbat. And that Hugh Talemach, when he took the monk's habit at Gloucester, gave one moiety of the town of Hamptone, with the church thereof, which his son Peter confirmed; as did afterwards king Henry the Second, when Hameline was abbat. But it is not certain that these particulars belong to Minchin-Hampton, nor does it appear that Gloucester abbey ever presented to this church.

Several lands in Muneching-Hampton were given to the monastery of Malmesbury, about the time of king Henry the Second. And the records shew, that the following persons had estates in this parish.

Peter de la Mere was seized of Minchin-Hampton, with free warren, 20 E. 1. This could not be the chief manor, but was probably the same estate of which Robert de la Mare died seized 2 E. 2. consisting of one messuage, and sixty acres of land, for which he paid to the abbess of Caen 13s. 4d. and to the abbat of Malmesbury 40s. yearly; and left Peter de la Mare his son and heir, who was seized of the same estate 12 E. 2.

Here it may be proper to observe, that in the subsequent account, notwithstanding the records mention several persons who were seized of the manor; yet they must either be mesne lords only, or the expression must be understood in a qualified sense, to signify some considerable estate, or reputed manor, and not the principal one, which was held by the religious 'till the reformation. Thus it is said, Edmond de Pinkney held this manor 4 E. 3. Thomas de Rodborough was seized of the manors of Minchin-Hampton and Havenpen 1 E. 3. William Ballecot held Hampton 20 E. 3. Sir John Maltravers and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Minchen-Hampton 30 E. 3. and John Maltravers the elder was seized of one plow-tillage, twelve acres of meadow, and 100s. rent, with one knight's fee in Muchin-Hampton 31 E. 3. Sir John Maltravers held the same 38 E. 3. John Berdolf de Wermese was seized of Nalesworth, held of the manor of Munchin-Hampton, 45 E. 3. Agnes, widow of John Maltravers the elder, held the manor of Muchin-Hampton 49 E. 3.

Sir John de Arundel was seized of the manor of Hampton 3 R. 2. Sir John de la Mere and Maud his wife were also seized of the manor in Minchin-Hampton, held of the honour of Wallingford, 5 R. 2. Roger Gulden levied a fine of lands in Minching-Hampton to John Pearl and others 14 R. 2. Hugh Rodborough held the manor of Redewike, and lands in Sencle, within the manor of Muchin-Hampton, 17 R. 2. Thomas duke of Gloucester was seized of lands in Muchin-Hampton and Rodborough 21 R. 2. John Pentour and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Hampton and Rodborough 22 R. 2. Reignald Cobham the elder, of Sternbrugh, held Minchin-Hampton 4 H. 4. as did his widow 6 H. 4. Welleline, widow of sir John Roches, was seized of the manor of Muchen-Hampton 12 H. 4. Sir John Philips held the same 3 H. 5. John Fry, son and heir of John Fry, levied a fine of lands in Minching-Hampton and Rodborough, to the use of John Moody, esq; 4 E. 4.

Delamere manor, alias Lambert's, near Minchin-Hampton, was granted to George Nevil, esq; and his heirs males 2 R. 3. Henry Hammerston levied a fine of lands in Minching-Hampton 10 H. 7. John Hyet also levied a fine of lands in Hampton and Avening, to William Webb, 1 E. 6.

The manors and advowsons of Hampton, Avening, Pinbury, &c. which lately belonged to the nunnery of Syon in Middlesex, were granted to Henry earl of Northampton, William lord Howard, and Nicholas Barnsley, 10 Jac.

HAMLETS, and places of distinct names.

1. The Box. William de Lasbroke held La Box and La Planch 45 H. 3. and William de Staure held eight acres in Box 17 E. 2. Box and Longford were held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 400*l.* a year. Edward Sheppard, esq; is patron; Doctor White is the present incumbent.

The parish of Rodborough is annexed to this rectory. The abbess of Caen in Normandy has presented to this church; as did Agnes abbess of Syon, in the year 1538.

Gilbert Bourn was rector of this church in the year 1551, and was consecrated bishop of Wells in 1554.

Anthony Laphorn was presented to this rectory in the year 1612, of whom there is this anecdote. Being chaplain in ordinary to king James, he was present one day when the king and some of the nobility were at bowls, the archbishop of Canterbury and others standing by. The king laid a bowl close to the jack, which the nobleman who bowled next struck away, on which his majesty, falling into a passion, swore at a terrible rate. The archbishop taking no notice of it, Laphorn boldly expressed himself as follows: The king swears, and the nobles will swear. If the nobles swear, the commons will swear. What a swearing kingdom then shall we have! And for you, my lord archbishop, who have the immediate charge of his majesty's soul, to hear him take God's sacred name in vain, and to have never a word for his sake, I will say to you, as one Paul said to Annanias, Thou painted wall, God will smite thee. Which reproof wrought so great a reformation in the court, that if the king heard any person swear, he would reprove him, and say Laphorn was coming.

The church is dedicated to the holy Trinity. It is built in the form of a cross, with two side ailes. It had formerly a spire in the middle, but half of it was taken down, and the remainder ornamented with pinnacles and battlements; of which Dr. Frampton, bishop of Gloucester, who had visited the holy land, used to say, that it greatly resembled the pillar erected in memory of Absalom, son of king David.

There was a chantry in the church, dedicated to the virgin Mary. Richard Gravener, the last incumbent, received a pension of 5*l.* in 1553.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

The most antient are the effigies of a man and woman lying in two niches in the wall of the south aile. The man is girt with a sword, and has a large shield on his left arm, charged, in the first quarter, with an eagle display'd. His feet rest on a lion. This was intended for one Anloc, who is said to have built the aile.

In the north aile, engraven on brass plates, and fixed on a flat stone, are the effigies of a man and his wife in shrouds, and this inscription:

Of yo^r charite pray for the soules of Iohn Hampton gentleman, Elyn his wife, & all their Children, specially for the soule of Dame Alice Hampton his daughter, whiche was right beneficial to this church & p^rish. Whiche Iohn decessed in the yere of o^r lord Mccccclvi. on whose soules Ihu have mercy, Amen.

Mr. William Webb, of Hocomb, has given five shifts, or 15*s.* in money, annually for ever, for five poor widows, secured on Hilbore's-mead, in this parish.

Mrs. Sarah Webb, of Giddinap, gave 300*l.* the interest of which to provide twelve brown cloth, serge gowns, and twelve shifts, to be given to twelve antient maidens, or widows, of this parish, on the 3d of January, for ever.

Mr. William Vick, of Bristol, gave the interest of 300*l.* for ever, to be distributed annually as follows ; 1*l.* 1*s.* to the minister for prayers and a sermon ; 1*l.* 1*s.* to be spent by the vestry at the Talbot, whilst it continues a publick house ; 10*s.* to the clerk ; 10*s.* to the ringers ; 2*s.* 6*d.* to the sexton ; and the rest to be distributed by the clerk to the poor in bread. Of the Manor and other Estates.

This parish was probably a member of the large manor of Standish, when king William the First caused the kingdom to be surveyed ; wherefore Domesday-book makes no distinct mention of it. The manor of Hardwick was antiently held of the earls of Gloucester and Hertford. Petronella de la Mere was seized of Hardenwick 47 H. 3. John Kenn died seized of Hardwick 6 H. 4. as did Robert Kenn 31 H. 6.

John Trye was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 27 H. 6. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Almery Boteler, a Park, of Hardwick-court, and had that estate in right of his wife. The manor and estate of Hardwick and Hardwick-court continued in the Tryes*, 'till it was purchased

The soil is a strong clay, therefore more proper for pasture than tillage; yet they have some arable land: And here, and almost in every part of this vale, they make excellent cheese, and stout cyder.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This parish was probably a member of the large manor of Standish, when king William the First caused the kingdom to be surveyed; wherefore Domesday-book makes no distinct mention of it. The manor of Hardwick was antiently held of the earls of Gloucester and Hertford. Petronella de la Mere was seized of Hardenwick 47 H. 3. John Kenn died seized of Hardwick 6 H. 4. as did Robert Kenn 31 H. 6.

John Trye was high Sheriff of Gloucestershire 27 H. 6. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Alмеры Boteler, a Park, of Hardwick-court, and had that estate in right of his wife. The manor and estate of Hardwick and Hardwick-court continued in the Tryes, 'till it was purchased

of Trye, esq; in the family chapel at Hardwick) whence their ancestor came into England about six hundred years ago.

Rawlin Trye married Margaret, daughter and heir of Thomas Berkeley,

This family was eminent in Gloucestershire for many generations. Their original descent & Name is from a Towne beyond the called Trye, (as I find it written on a monument for William of them by the late lord chancellor Hardwick, when he was attorney-general. And when his majesty king George the Second was pleased to create him a baron of Great Britain, in 1733, and afterwards to advance him to the dignity of an earl, in 1754, his lordship took both those titles from this place. His lordship died^b in the year 1764, and was succeeded by Philip his eldest son, the present earl of Hardwick, and lord of this manor.

The abbey of Gloucester had divers lands and possessions in this parish. Certain lands in Hardwick which belonged to that abbey, were granted to Edward duke of Somerset, 1 E. 6.

HAMLETS. 1. Rudge and Farley, lying in the lower part of the parish, near Elmore church. The manor of Farleigh and de la Ruge was part of the possessions of St. Peter's abbey at Gloucester 17 E. 3. After the dissolution of that house, this manor, and a portion of tithes and glebe, were granted to the bishop of Gloucester 6 E. 6. and are now part of the endowment of the see of Gloucester.

2. Field-Court. The name was antiently written Feld, and La Feld. Feld was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon 28 E. 3.

Berkeley, with whom he had the manor of Alkington in Berkeley, in the reign of king Richard the Second; and was succeeded by his son John, who was also succeeded by his son William. John Trye was son of William. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Almerly Boteler, a Park, of Hardwick court, and had that estate in right of his wife. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 27 H. 6. William Trye, son of John, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Baynham, and widow of Henry Clifford, of Frampton upon Severn, according to some accounts; but it appears by a monument in Hardwick church, that William Trye, esq; lord of the manor of Hardwick, son of John Trye, esq; lived in the time of king Edward the Fourth, and married Isabella, daughter of James lord Berkeley, of Berkeley-castle. Edward Trye, son of William, married Sybil, daughter and coheir of sir Simon Milborn of Herefordshire, and widow of sir Thomas Monington, and was succeeded by his son John Trye, who married Elizabeth, one of the coheirs of Charles Brandon, knight, duke of Suffolk, and died in the year 1579, as appears by a memorial for him. John Trye, son of John, married first, Margaret, daughter of sir William Skipwith of Herefordshire; secondly, Alice, sister of sir James Crofts. William Trye, son of the last John, married Mary, daughter of sir Edward Tyrrell, of Thornton in Buckinghamshire, and died in 1609. From this marriage all his descendants have a claim of kindred to the founder of All-Souls college in Oxford, whereby they will have a better chance of a fellowship in that college, than others who are not of the founder's kindred.

William Trye was son of William, and married Anne — descended from the family of sir Francis Vincent, of Stoke in the county of Surry, knight, and by her had eight sons and six daughters. John, William, and Henry, the three eldest sons, died without issue. Thomas, the fourth son, married Anne, eldest daughter of Richard Jones, of Hanham, esq; and died before his father; whereby William, son of Thomas, was heir to his grandfather. He married Mary Horne, one of the coheires of Thomas Horne, of Horncastle in Yorkshire, esq; and died possessed of the manors of Hardwick and Haresfield in the year 1717. He was succeeded by Thomas, his son and heir, who married Mary, daughter of Thomas Norwood, of Leckhampton, esq; and was also succeeded by his son William Trye, late of Sudgrove in the parish of Miterden, esq; deceased, whose son Thomas Trye is now living. Arms, Or, a bend azure.

^b On the day following his death, there appeared a short account of his lordship, his offices and promotions, with his character. He studied the law in the Middle-temple, with such success, that at 29 years of age he attained the office of solicitor-general; and the same year, 1720, received the honour of knighthood. In 1723-4, he was constituted attorney-general, and held that office till Oct. 31, 1733, when, having first received the degree of serjeant at law, his majesty was pleased to constitute him lord chief justice of the court of king's bench, the same day;

It is an antient feat which has been long in the family of the Berows, or Barrows. Edward Berow died seized of Field-court 12 Eliz. and left James Berow, his son, twenty-eight years old. Mr. Thomas Barrow died possessed of this estate in the year 1736; whose only daughter, Elianor, carried it, by her marriage, to the rev. Mr. Thomas Savage, eldest son and heir of George Savage, of Broadway in the county of Worcester, esq; by whose death in 1760, it descended to his only surviving son and heir, George Savage, esq; the present proprietor of this estate, and of the manor of Blakey in the parish of Awre. His arms are, Argent, six lioncels rampant sable, 3, 2, 1.

The constable of Hardwick has jurisdiction in the hamlet of Colthrop in the parish of Standish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Gloucester, annexed to Standish, and worth to the vicar about 30*l.* a year. The tithes in Hardwick, and some lands called the Ruge, were given to the abbey of Gloucester by Thomas de St. John, and after the dissolution of the abbey, were granted to the bishop of Gloucester 33 H. 8. and were confirmed 1 E. 6.

and to create him a baron of Great Britain, on the 23^d of November following. On Feb. 21, 1736-7, his lordship had the great seal delivered to him; and in the years 1740, 1743, and 1745, he was nominated one of the lords justices for the administration of government during his majesty's absence in the kingdom, as he was also several times afterwards. In 1745, he was appointed lord high steward of England, for the trial of the earls of Kilmarnock and Cromartie, and lord Balmerlawrie, and again in 1747, for the trial of lord Lovat. His majesty, in consideration of his long and eminent services, was pleased to advance him to the titles of viscount Royston, and earl of Hardwick, by letters patent, bearing date Apr. 2, 1754. He resigned the great seal in November 1756, and departed this life March 6, 1764.

The reputation with which he filled the seat of judicature in the king's bench could only be equalled by that with which he afterwards discharged the office of lord high chancellor; and it is no small evidence of the abilities and integrity with which he presided in the court of chancery, that, during the space of near twenty years, in which he sat there, (a period longer than any of his predecessors since lord chancellor Egerton) only three of his decrees were appealed from, and those afterwards confirmed by the house of lords. His talents as a speaker in the senate, as well as on the bench, have left too strong an impression to need being dilated upon; and those, as a writer, were such as might be expected from one who had early distinguished himself in that character in the Spectator. In his public character, wisdom, experience, probity, temper, candor, and moderation were happily united, that his death, as public affairs were then situated, was reckoned a loss to his country as unseasonable as important. And his private virtues, learning, and amiableness of manners were as much esteemed and admired by those who had the honour and happiness of his acquaintance, as his superior abilities were by the nation in general.

His lordship married Margaret, one of the daughters of Charles Cocks, of the city of Worcester, esq; (by Mary his wife, eldest sister of John lord Somers) and by her ladyship, who died on Sept. 19, 1761, had issue five sons and two daughters. 1. Philip, now earl of Hardwick. 2. Charles, who filled the offices of solicitor-general and attorney-general, and is now deceased. 3. Joseph, knight of the Bath, and ambassador to the States General. 4. John, clerk of the crown, &c. 5. James, now bishop of St. David's. And two daughters, 1. Lady Elizabeth, married to lord Anson. 2. Lady Margaret, wedded to Gilbert Heathcote, esq.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

In the east end of the south aisle are many monuments for the Tryes, with their arms and quarterings, all in a ruinous condition. That part of the pedigree of this family which differs from sir Robert Atkyns's, is drawn from the inscriptions. The following are the most observable:

Here lieth y^e Body of William Trye y^e Elder Esq^r Lord of y^e Mannor of Hardwicke, who married Mary, second Daughter to S^t Edward Tyrrell, of Thorneton in the County of Buckingham, Knight, & died the 13th Day of March, Anno Dni 1609.

HARESCOMB, or HARSCOMB,

IS a small parish, lying in the united hundreds of Dudston and King's-barton, five miles distant north from Stroud, one from Painwick, and five south from Gloucester. It consists of good pasture, with some arable.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It is expressly mentioned in Domesday-book, that Edmar, one of the king's thanes, could either give or sell his three manors of Hersefel, Athelai, and Sanher, to whomsoever he would; and it follows immediately after,

'In Hersecome, Wiflet held three virgates of land as free as Edmer. He had two plow-tillages there, and two bordars, and five servi, and meadow [proportionable] to the plow-lands'.

This short account of Hersecome is succeeded by the particulars of Brookthrop, already given under that head; then follows a passage in the record more dishonourable to Harold and William than any I have found in that part of it relating to Gloucestershire. It is there said, that 'Earl Herald took away those five estates after the death of king Edward, and Roger de Lurei put them to farm for 46*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*' i. e. for the use of king William. These were the lands which the owners held so freely that they might give or sell them as they pleased; and if they had incurred a premunire, so as to forfeit their title, it would undoubtedly have been mentioned, as in the case immediately following: 'Uluuard held half a hide of king Edward free [from rent] in the same hundred, near to the city [of Gloucester;] but earl William gave this to his cook, for Uluuard was outlawed.' But no outlawry, no crime, is pretended against Edmar and Wiflet; yet Harold first deprived them of their right, and William, far from restoring their property, as justice required, took possession of it himself, upon the usurper's title.

Roger le Rus, or le Rouse, died seized of Harescomb 22 E. 1. John Rouse was seized of one messuage and half a yard-land in Harescomb 19 E. 2. Joan the widow of William Bokeland died seized of this manor 35 H. 3. which I conjecture she had in dower from one of the Rouses, a former husband, as it soon reverted to that family; for Thomas Rouse was seized of the manor of Harescomb, and of a tenement called the Orchard, 48 H. 3. and 1 R. 2.

William Mull, (perhaps a son of sir Edward Mills, who lived at Harescomb) was afterwards lord of this manor; and being attainted, his estate was forfeited, and granted to Thomas Herbert, and to his heirs males, 2 E. 4. which Thomas dying without male issue, the manor, and one toft, and one yard-land called Organs, were granted to sir Richard Beauchamp, and his heirs, 14 E. 4.

In the charter of endowment of the bishoprick of Gloucester, it is recited, that the manor of Harescomb lately belonged to the abbey of Gloucester. And, by that charter, it was granted to the bishoprick, 33 H. 8.

The abbat of Gloucester was possessed of lands in this parish, which were granted to the bishoprick of Gloucester 33 H. 8 and were confirmed 6 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Gloucester, to which Pitchcombe is annexed, worth together together about 60*l.* a year. Mr. Purnell is patron; Mr. Rice Jones the present incumbent. Fourteen acres belong to the glebe.

Tithes in Harfcomb, with the advowson, which belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to the bishoprick 33 H. 8. and again confirmed 6 E. 6. Other tithes in Harfcomb, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to sir William Rider 7 Jac. The priory of Lanthony received a pension of 5*s.* yearly of the rector.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptist, is small, with only a small turret.

H A R E S F I E L D.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Whitstone, in the vale country, five miles north-west from Stroud, and six south from Gloucester.

It is a very rich part of the country, situated beneath a ridge of hills, sheltering it from the bleak easterly winds. The parish is pretty extensive. Most of it is in pasturage and orcharding, and produces cheese and cyder of the best qualities.

From a hill called Broadbridge-green in this parish, is a very fine prospect over the vale, for many miles above and below, with the waving woods and rising lands of the forest of Dean in the front, on the opposite side of the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, this parish lay in two hundreds, as appears from the following extracts from Domesday-book:

‘ Edmar, a thane, had three manors in Dudestan hundred, Herfeld, Athelai, and Sanher. He might give or sell his land to whom he pleased. This estate was taxed at two hides. There were eight plow-tillages in demean, and four villeins, and four bordars, and thirty servi, with five plow-tillages, and meadow proportionable to the plowed-land. Domesday-book, p. 67.

Of that part which lay in Whitstone hundred it is said, ‘ Durand of Gloucester, holds seven hides taxed, in Herfeld in Witestan hundred. Godrick and Edric, two brothers, held them for ‘ two manors, and could go where they would

‘ There are three plow-tillages in demean, and ‘ nine villeins, and eleven bordars, with nine plow‘ tillages. There are four servi, and five potters ‘ pay 44*d.* There is a wood half a mile long,
‘ and three furlongs broad. It was worth and is

In the reign of king Stephen, this manor belonged to Milo the great earl of Hereford, son of Walter, constable of England. He married Sybil, daughter and coheirefs of Bernard de Newmarch, lord of Brecknock, by Nesta, daughter of Griffith ap Llewelin, prince of Wales, by whom he had five sons and three daughters. This manor descended to Roger, his eldest son, who dying without issue, Walter the constable, of Hereford, was his brother and heir. He gave to the monks of Gloucester, when Hameline was abbat, six yard-lands in Haresfield, and two yard-lands against Bristol high-way, near the park, in exchange for a hundred fardingals of land in Herefordshire. He and his brothers dying without issue male, this manor descended to Margery, his eldest daughter, married to Humphry de Bohun, whose heirs, in her right, were afterwards earls of Hereford, and succeeding owners of this manor.

Humphry de Bohun, great grandson of Humphry and of Margery the heirefs, settled this manor on sir John de Bohun, his eldest son by Maud de Avenbury, his second wife. This sir John took part with the rebellious barons against king Henry the Third, but made his peace in the 53d year of the king's reign. He proved his right to view of frank-pledge and free warren in this manor, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and died in the 20th year of that reign; as did his son George de Bohun, 10 E. 2. and Humphry de Bohun 46 E. 3.

This manor came afterwards to the Staffords, by marriage with a descendant from the Bohuns, earls of Hereford. Humphry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, died seized of Haresfield 38 H. 6. as did Edward duke of Buckingham, who was attainted and beheaded 13 H. 8. whereby it came to the crown.

Lord Coke, in the fourth part of his Institutes, says, the office of constable of England was of inheritance, by the tenure of the manors of Haresfield, Newland, and Whitenhurst, by grand Serjeanty. This office became forfeited to the crown by the attainder of the duke of Buckingham, and since that time, both in respect of the amplitude of the authority, in war and peace, and of the charge, it was never granted to any subject, but now of late hoc vice.

This manor was granted to sir Anthony Kingston 4 E. 6. from whose family it passed to the Jerninghams. Sir Henry Jerningham died seized of it 20 Eliz. and Henry Jerningham, his son, was the proprietor of it in the year 1608. Our

of this name and family it passed to the Tryes. William Trye of Hardwick died seized of this manor in 1717, and was succeeded therein by his son and heir, Thomas Trye, who sold the manors of Haresfield and Hardwick to sir Philip Yorke, attorney-general, afterwards earl of Hardwick. His lordship's eldest son, Philip earl of Hardwick, is the present lord of this manor, and has a very large estate here. For his lordship's arms, &c. see Hardwick.

The records which mention the following particulars, either cannot relate to the manor of which I have been treating, or else the persons mentioned therein must have been tenants under the Staffords. Anchoret, the widow of sir Richard Talbot, was seized of the manor of Haresfield 1 H. 5. Alice, the widow of John Browning, held the same 2 H. 5. and John earl of Shrewsbury died seized of it 38 H. 6. I have given these a place in the account of this parish, because I found them in sir Robert Atkyns, and they may possibly relate to it. But what he says of Giles Bruges being seized of the manor of Haresfield, 6 E. 4. must be understood of Hasfield.

Beside the manor, the records mention other proprietors of estates in this parish. The priory of Lanthony was possessed of lands in Haresfield, some of which were granted to Arthur Porter 32 H. 8. And a manor in Haresfield lately belonging to Lanthony (for the religious affected to call their estates by that name) was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8. The inn called the George, in Haresfield, lately belonging to Lanthony, was granted to William Partridge 5 Eliz.

The lay proprietors were the following: William de Littlecot died seized of lands in Haresfield 1 H. 3. Reginald Fitz-Herbet died seized of lands in this parish 14 E. 1. and was succeeded by his son John Fitz-Reignald. Matthew Fitz-Herbert, a descendant from them, levied a fine of lands in Haresfield, with various remainders, 14 E. 3. and died seized of those lands 30 E. 3. as did Edward de John of Scopham, and Joan his wife, 6 R. 2. William Mull was seized of one toft and one yard-land in Haresfield, called Henbarrows, and being attainted, the lands were forfeited to the crown, and granted to sir Richard Beauchamp 14 E. 4. Christopher Raftal died seized of land in Haresfield 6 Eliz. leaving Thomas, his son, thirty years old. Mr. Samuel Niblet, of the city of Gloucester, is possessed of estates to the amount of near a thousand pounds a year in this parish, and of the house formerly belonging to the family of Rogers.

The handsome house, formerly the Warners, and afterwards Mr. Trye's, is now the property of Mrs. Longford, descended by her mother from the Tryes.

The late Mr. Smith's house and estate are the property of the earl of Hardwick.

HAMLETS. 1. Harescomb, which is distinct from the parish of that name.

2. Park-End. Mr. Rogers had a good house and estate in this hamlet, now the property of Mr. Bearcroft, and Mr. Jones, in right of their wives, who are the daughters and coheirs of Mr. Rogers. Sir Almarick Boteler was seized of the manor of Park-End (hence sometimes called Almarick a Park) and of one furlong of land called Beaurepeire, in Haresfield, 20 R. 2. John Kenn died seized of fifty acres of arable, six acres of meadow, and twenty-four of pasture, in Haresfield and Hardwick, 16 H. 6. Robert Kenn, esq; was lord of Beaurepeire in Haresfield 31 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth 80*l.* a year. The earl of Hardwick is patron; Mr. James Comelyne is the present incumbent.

The rectory and church of Haresfield, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Lawrence Baskervil and William Blake, scrivener, 3 Jac. The earl of Hardwick has the impropriation, which pays 9*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* a year to the crown.

Ten acres of meadow, and ten acres of arable land belong to the glebe. The vicarage house is a very good one, with handsome gardens, and a fish-pond.

The church consists of the nave, with two chancels, one beyond the other. The farthest belongs to the vicar, the other to the impropriator. At the west end is a spire, with five bells and a clock.

IS a small parish in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, three miles east from Cirencester, and twenty south-eastward from Gloucester.

It was antiently called Harebille, and Harnbull. It lies on the edge of a vale, and consists of a due proportion of pasture and arable land. The soil is strong, and the air healthy; but in this little village there is nothing very remarkable.

' Radulf de Todeni holds Harebille in Gerfstones hundred, and Roger holds it of him. There are ' five hides. Elric, Aluvin, and Aluric held it for ' three manors.' Domesday-book, p. 76.

William de Harnhull died seized of the manor of Harnhull, with the advowson of the church, 17 E. 2. which manor was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.

Edward de Stonor died seized thereof 5 R. 2. as did John, his son and heir, 13 R. 2. He was succeeded by Robert de Stonor, whose son Gilbert died seized of this manor 3 H. 5.

From this family, it went to the Tames. Edmond Tame died seized of Harnhill 26 H. 8. as did Edmond his son 36 H. 8. leaving three daughters coheiresses, married, as related under Fairford; who, with their husbands, had livery of this manor 37 H. 8.

Thomas Aubury, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608; but Thomas Smith, esq; who resides in Oxfordshire, is the present lord of the manor of Harnhill, and has a good house (now occupied by the tenant of the farm) and a good estate in this parish. His arms are, Per pale, ermine and erminois, over all an eagle display'd, member'd gules, arm'd and langued azure.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 45*l.* a year. Mr. Smith is patron; Dr. Bray is the present incumbent. There are no lands tithe free.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and hath a small spire at the west end.

H A R T P U R Y.

THIS parish lies in the united hundreds of Dudston and King's Barton, six miles eastward from Newent, nine south-west from Tewkesbury, and four north-west from Gloucester. It consists of rich meadow and pasture, with some very good arable land. The low grounds are exceedingly liable to floods from the Leaden, and from a brook which runs from Tiberton.

This village is not distinguished by antiquities, the curious productions of nature or art, nor any remarkable transactions: only, en passant, it may be observed, that in the great civil war, colonel Massy placed a garrison in the manor house, after the siege of Gloucester, to secure Corfe-lawn, and to oppose colonel Myn, of the king's party, who lay at Newent, Highleden, and Taynton.

Hardeper, Hardepery, and Hartpury, are variations of the same name, whose signification is uncertain. The vulgar notion of its arising from barts, or red deer, frequenting the place, is to me very unsatisfactory; for how does that account for pere, or pery. If the name of the brook from Tiberton were the Deper, the etymology would be easy; for rejecting the aspirate, Ar-Deper, and Ar-Depery would denote the situation of the village Upon the Deper; but this is all conjecture. The name seems to have been given it some time since the conquest; for though it is affirmed that Offa, king of Mercia, gave the manor of Hardepery to the church of St. Peter at Gloucester, when Eva was abbess, who died in the 33d year of her government, anno 768, it does not appear to have been given by that very name, but the contrary is most probable; for in Domesday-book no such name can be found, the place being there called Merewent; and part of the parish is distinguished by the name of Morewent to this day.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

When Domesday-book was compiled, Merewent was a member of the manor of Bertone, under the account of which, at p. 206, is a translation of that record, which includes the particulars of this parish. The manor at that time was part of the possessions of the abbey of Gloucester. King Henry the First confirmed to the monks of Gloucester the assart lands, or new plowed grounds in Hardeper, 23^o regni, which were granted to them by William earl of Gloucester. He also, by his charter, gave to Gloucester abbey free warren in all their lands beyond Severn, and the abbey's right for Hardeperie, in particular, was allowed 5 E. 1. by which it appears, that the place had then obtained its present name.

The abbats of St. Peter's at Gloucester continued in possession of this manor, and of a very large estate here, 'till that house was dissolved.

Walter Compton, esq; died July 26, 7 Eliz. seized of the manor of Hartpury, and of the capital messuage there, called the Abbat's-Place, and of fifty yard-lands belonging thereto, all which he had by the grant of William Herbert, knight of the garter, dated Feb. 20, 4 E. 6. Fsch. sub anno.

The above Walter Compton was descended from the Comptons in Wiltshire. From him the manor passed, thro' several generations, down to sir William Compton, baronet, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century. He was succeeded by his son, sir William Compton, baronet, who had issue three sons and three daughters.

One son died an infant. William, the eldest, succeeded to the title and estate, but dying without issue, his brother, sir Walter Compton, baronet, succeeded him. Which sir Walter Compton deceasing in the year 1773, without issue, this manor and estate devolved on his two surviving sisters, Catherine and Jane; Helen, the third sister, being then dead. Catherine was married to Edward Bearcroft, of Droitwich in the county of Worcester, esq; and died in the year 1775, without issue also; Jane is married to John Berkeley, of the city of Worcester, esq; who, in her right, is the present lord of the manor of Hartpury.

H A M L E T S. 1. Morewent-end. William de Morewent, (who took his name from this place, where he had a considerable estate) gave twenty acres of wood for ever to the poor, which therefore bore the name of William's Wood; but the wood was destroy'd in the reign of king Charles the First, and is now in waste.

2. Moor-end, where is a common by the side of the Leden.

3. Corse-end.

4. Blackwell's-end.

5. Lamper's-end.

6. Butter's-end.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth 80*l.* a year. The bishop of Gloucester is patron; Mr. Sparks is the present incumbent.

The great tithes were appropriated to the abbey of Gloucester, and were granted to the bishoprick of Gloucester 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, consists of the nave, with a tower at the west end, on which are the Comptons arms, viz. Sable, a lion passant gardant Or, between three helmets close proper. The church is out of repair, and in a filthy condition.

This was not the common burying-place of the Compton family, so that there are but few memorials for them; but within the communion rails, on brass, is the following:

He died Anno 1641. to whose Memory their dear Daughter Dame Elinor Button Wife of S^t Robert Button Baroⁿ here put this Monument.—Arms, 1. There is a memorial for Walter Compton, esq; who died in 1627.

Benefactions.

Lands in this parish, given to the poor by a person unknown, now let at about 8*l.* a year. Mr. Anthony Jelfe gave 50*l.* with which lands in Longney have been purchased for the use of the poor. Besides these, 3*l.* 10*s.* a year, part of Mr. Cox's charity, is allotted to this parish. And I find a memorandum in bishop Benson's book, that lady Button left 100*l.* to the poor, which, at the time when that entry was made, is said to have been in Mr. Jones's hands.

H A S F I E L D.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of Westminster hundred, six miles distant east from Newent, five south from Tewkesbury, and six north from Gloucester.

It is situated on the north-west side of the Severn, and consists of rich meadow and pasture. About a thousand acres of meadow ground, lying along the side of the river, are in common part of the year. But there are only 125 acres of arable land in all the parish.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Brietric held one hide and a half at Hasfelde, of the church of Westminster, in the time of king Edward. Turstin the son of Rolf now holds it.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

The above could not be the manor, for king Henry the Third gave that to Richard Pauncefoot, in the thirty-third year of his reign, whose family had been eminent in this county, and flourished in Wiltshire in the time of king William the First. Grimbald Pauncefoot, son of Richard, proved his right to privileges in this manor, in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and dying 8 E. 2. left Almarick his brother and heir. John Pauncefoot died seized of this manor 3 H. 5. and was succeeded by his son, sir John Pauncefoot, who was several times high sheriff of Gloucestershire. Livery of the manor of Hasfield was granted to John Pauncefoot, son of Nicholas, 1 Eliz.

Paul Tracy, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Sir Humphry Tracy sold it to Mr. John Parker, about the year 1655, and John Parker, esq; a descendant from him, is the present lord of this manor, and has a good estate in the parish. His coat armour, as I find it in the last herald's visitation, is, Sable, a buck trippant argent between three pheons Or. But he now uses the following: Sable, a fess argent charged with a buck's head caboshed and two pellets of the field, between three pheons Or.

Edward Bruges of Lone, brother of sir Giles Bruges of Coberley, died 15 H. 6. seized of four messuages, and eight acres of land, and a tenement called Underhills, consisting of thirteen acres of arable, and of eight acres of meadow and pasture; which estate is called the manor of Hasfeld in the escheator's inquisition of that year. By another, taken at Gloucester 15 Eliz. it was found, that Edmund lord Chandois died seized of the manor of Harsfield; but this was not the manor which had been so long enjoy'd by the Pauncefoots.

The estate held by the church of Westminster at the time of the conquest, was sometime afterwards called a manor. At the dissolution of religious foundations, it was vested in the crown, and granted to the dean and chapter of Westminster 34 H. 8. but resumed, and granted to the abbat and convent of Westminster 4 Mar. and again regranted to the chapter 2 Eliz. The right of the church of Westminster to the manor of Hasfield was tried 33 C. 2. when it appeared from the court-rolls, as early as 8 E. 2. that the manor was then held of the heirs of William Ruffel, and not of the church of Westminster, by the service or rent of a sparrow-hawk yearly.

Thomas Throckmorton levied a fine of lands in Hasfield to John Webb, 1 E. 6.

Wickeridge is a hamlet in this parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, within the peculiar of Derhurst, worth about 130*l.* a year. John Parker, esq; is patron; Mr. Parker is the present incumbent. The rector pays 20*s.* yearly to the crown.

Thirteen acres of meadow, and some arable, belong to the glebe.

A portion of tithes in Hasfield, formerly belonging to the monastery of Derhurst, was granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor 1 Eliz. and another portion, likewise belonging to the same convent, was granted to Richard Hill and William James 13 Eliz. These tithes afterwards belonged to the Browns, and, by purchase, are now the property of Nicholas Hyett, of the city of Gloucester, esq; who pays a fee-farm rent of 3*l.* a year to the crown.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is pleasantly situated on a rising ground. It is twenty-eight yards long, with a strong embattled tower at the west end. In the windows were the following coats, 1. Gules, six plates, 3, 2, 1.—2. Pauncefoot.—3. Or, a lion rampant gules semeé with crosses croizett.—4. Bridges.

H A S L E T O N

IS a small parish in the hundred of Bradley, three miles north-westward from Northleach, nine south-eastward from Winchcombe, and seventeen east from Gloucester.

It is situated high on the Cotswolds, with a fine healthy air. The country hereabout is almost destitute of trees, and so much exposed to the winds from every quarter, that vegetation is not a little retarded. The soil is generally light and stony, and mostly in tillage; yet agriculture is lately so much improved in this open, I had almost said naked region, that the farmers obtain good crops of corn, and feed and fat great numbers of sheep, and some black cattle; and many of them keep a little dairy besides. This parish hath lately been inclosed, and it is hoped that, as well for profit as ornament, planting of beech, ash, and fir, which suit the soil, may take place with other improvements.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Sigar de Cioches holds Hasledene in Bradelege hundred. Goda the countess held it. There are ten hides. King William granted three of them free from tax, as the county affirms. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and fourteen villeins, and a priest, with ten plow-tillages; and there are six servi. It was worth 8*l.* now 7*l.* Domesday-book, p. 79.

This manor was given to the abbey of Winchcombe, by Robert Gyves, 35 H. 3. and the abbat proved his right to free warren therein 15 E. 1. continued in possession of the abbey 'till the general dissolution, and was granted to Thomas Culpeper the younger, and to his heirs males, 36 H. 8. reserving a rent of 16*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* Notwithstanding this, Richard Tracy obtained a grant of the manor of Hasleton, and Hasleton-ove, lately belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, 36 H. 8. However, Thomas Culpeper seized of the manor 1 Eliz. when livery was granted to Alexander Culpeper, his son; and sir Anthony Culpeper was lord of it in the year 1608. Mr. Serjeant Wyat, of Kent, was afterwards lord of the manor of Hasleton; as was Mr. Serjeant minister, of Turk Dean, at the beginning of this century. Edmund Waller, esq; is the present lord of this manor, and of Farmington.

HAMLET. Yanworth is a hamlet in this parish, from which it is separated by the parish of Hampnet.

Sigar de Cioches holds Ieneurde in Bradelege hundred. Goda held it. There are five hides, of which three are exempted from tax by king William, as Sigar's man says. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and fourteen villeins, and two bordars, with seven plow-tillages. There are seven servi, and a mill of 40*d.* [rent] a wood three furlongs long, and two broad. It was worth 7*l.* now 6*l.* Domesday-book, p. 79.

Radulph de Zouch gave Janesworth [i.e. his property therein] to the church of St. Peter of Gloucester, free and quit from all services. And Reginald Thucks gave to the same church, his village of Janesworth [i.e. his share of it] in perpetual right of inheritance, free and quit from all services and customs. Earl Robert de Bertone gave to the same church 10*s.* rent out of Janesworth, in the time when Walter de Lacy was abbat. And king Stephen and king Henry the Second, confirmed these grants to the abbey. See p. 148.

John de Ganeworth, or Yanworth, was abbat of Winchcombe 31 H. 3. and probably he procured this manor from the abbey of Gloucester to his own house, either by purchase or exchange; for in the proceedings of a Quo warranto, the abbat of Winchcombe proved his right to privileges in Yanworth, 15 E. 1. and the manor continued in that house 'till it was dissolved.

After the dissolution of the abbey of Winchcombe, the manor of Yanworth was granted to Thomas Culpeper 35 H. 8. as that of Hasleton had been, and was enjoy'd by that family. But other records mention, that the manor of Yanworth, a quarry of stones, and the church-house, lately belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget, 36 H. 8. And that Henry earl of Arundel had the manors of Hasleton and Yanworth, for they were granted to Edward earl of Bedford, 8 Jac. and in his grant they are mentioned to have been lately the earl of Arundel's. These seeming inconsistencies may be reconciled, by considering that, as Yanworth was given in several portions to the abbey, so in all probability, each grant had relation only to one of those estates, all different from each other, tho' all described by the name of Yanworth. Lord Chedworth is the present lord of the manor of Yanworth, which descended to him from his ancestor, sir Richard How of Compton.

This place has a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Michael, with an aisle on the north side, and an embattled tower at the west end. The inhabitants anciently buried at Hasleton, but are now buried at this chapel. The bishop of Worcester, in 1366, made a decree between the abbat of Winchcombe and the rector of Hasleton, concerning the settling of a chaplain at Yanworth.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 110*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron; Mr. Rawlins is the present incumbent. At the inclosing of the parish, the rector had lands allotted to him in lieu of tithes.

The abbey of Winchcombe presented to this church in the reign of king Richard the First. The advowson of the rectory and vicarage of Hasleton belonged to the abbey of Hayles, and was granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is small, with a low tower at the west end.

H A T H E R O P.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, seven miles distant south-east from Northleach, ten eastward from Cirencester, and twenty-four south-eastward from Gloucester.

Sir Robert Atkyns says, The Name is derived from Throp, which in the Saxon Language signifies an Habitation, and Heitber, because it lies lower on the River than Bouthrop, which lies higher. As I profess not to understand the latter part of this sentence, I shall pass it over without further remark, and give my own opinion of the derivation of the name, which was antiently written Hetrope, and Etherope. The village is situated upon an eminence, but particularly above Quenington, an adjoining parish, which lies in a little narrow valley to the southward; and it was undoubtedly this high situation that gave occasion to the name; for peah, in the Anglo-Saxon, signifies high, and þrop, a village.

There are two camps in this parish, one about a mile to the north-west of the Roman Ikenild-way; the other near the side of that antient road, at a place now called Aston-Barrow. The latter is thought to be that which was antiently called Britswoldesberg, and gave name to the hundred, now corruptly written Britwell's-barrow.

Sir John Webb has a noble old house here, but not making it his constant residence, 'tis too much neglected, and the offices and gardens are falling to ruin. About the year 1773, sir John exerted a very laudable spirit, in searching several places in this parish for coal, with uncommon perseverance; but his success was not equal to the wishes of the country, nor to his own expectations. It is said that the workmen found some detached pieces of coal, but no continued stratum. It is said also, that they drew up a quantity of ashes from the depth of a hundred feet. If this be true, it seems utterly unaccountable how they should be lodged there.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

There were antiently two distinct manors in this parish, of which the following was the most considerable:

'Ernulf de Hesding holds Etherope in Britwell's-barrow hundred. There are seven hides. 'Uluuard held it. There are six plow-tillages in 'demean, and twenty-three villeins with ten plow-tillages. There are twelve servi, and a mill of '15*s.* It was worth 8*l.* now 12*l.* D. B. p. 77.

Ernulf de Hesding gave the church of Hethrope, and a water-mill, with the lands belonging to the priest, in the same place, to the monks of Gloucester, when Serlo was abbat; which particulars were confirmed to them by king Henry the First, and king Stephen, p. 147.

This Ernulf de Hesding was also lord of the manor of Kempford, in this county, which he conveyed to Patrick de Chaworth, in the reign of William the First; and probably this manor passed to the Chaworths at the same time; and came to Walter, grandson of Walter de Ewrus, earl of Roschar, by his marriage with Sybilla de Chaworth. He gave lands in Hatherop to the priory of Bradenstoke in Wiltshire, which was of his foundation, and he and his wife lie buried near the choir of that monastery.

Patrick his eldest son, created earl of Salisbury by the empress Maud, was slain in a quarrel by Guy de Lozinnian 13 H. 2. His son and heir, William earl of Salisbury, married Alianore de Vitrei, daughter of Tirrel de Mainers, by whom he had Ela, his only daughter and heiress, married to William Longespee, natural son to king Henry the Second, by Fair Rosamond.

She survived her husband, and founded a nunnery at Lacock in Wiltshire, of which she herself was abbess, and endowed it with the manor of Hatherop, with the advowson of the church, and with the hundred of Britswold Barrow; which endowment was confirmed by her son, William de Longespee, and by king Henry the Third. She died in the year 1300, having founded the church at Rewley near Oxford, and was buried before the high high altar there, as appears by an inscription on a stone dug up in the year 1705. This manor continued in the nunnery of Lacock 'till its dissolution.

The other manor is thus described :

‘ Roger de Laci holds Hetrope in Brictwoldeberg hundred, and William holds it of him. There are two hides. Duning held it in the time of king Edward. There are two plow-tillages, and three villeins, and three bordars, with one plow-tillage. There are six servi. It is worth and was worth 100s.’ Domesday-book, p. 75.

Eubulo le Strange, and Aleria his wife, levied a fine of this manor to Hugh le Dispencer 18 E. 2. and Theobald de Verdon died seized thereof 10 E. 3.

Hugh le Dispencer constituted John de Handelo governor of St. Briavel's castle, and warden of the forest of Dean, in the year 1299, which John levied a fine of the manor of Hatherop, with several remainders, in the year 1325, and was seized of it in 1340. His son Richard married Isabel, daughter of Almarick de St. Amand, and died before his father, but Isabel held Hatherop in jointure, and died seized of it in 1355. Edmond, son of Richard, was heir to John his grandfather, and died seized of a great estate in Kent, and other counties, and of the manors of Hatherop, Wike, and Williamstrip, in Gloucestershire, leaving two sisters his coheiresses. Margaret, the eldest, was married, first to Gilbert Chastelain, or Chateline, and afterwards to John Appleby; and Elizabeth, the other sister, was married to Edmond de la Pool. But the above-mentioned lands, lying in Gloucestershire, were assigned to Margaret, whereby John Appleby, in her right, was lord of this manor.

This is an abstract from the records, as I find them applied to Hatherop by sir Robert Atkyns; but it may be observed, that in the descent of the manor of Williamstrip, he makes Edmond de Handelo grandson of Richard. In all other respects the accounts are consistent.

It will be proper now to pass to the manor possessed by the nunnery of Lacock.

After the dissolution of that house, their manor and estate at Hatherop, and lands in this parish which had been vested in the priory of Bradenstoke, were granted to sir William Sherington 2 E. 6.

About this time, both the manors in Hatherop were enjoy'd by the same proprietor, and so continuing, the distinction was lost by unity of possession.

John Blomer, descended from the antient family of the Blomers in Westmoreland, had livery of the manor of Hatherop 1 Eliz. William Blomer was lord of it in the year 1608. John Blomer, son of William, married Frances, daughter of Anthony viscount Montacute, by whom he had three sons and three daughters, who all died without issue, except Mary, the youngest, who was married, first to Richard Draycott, of Painsly in the county of Stafford, esq; and afterwards to sir John Webb, of Canford in the county of Dorset, baronet. Her issue by her first husband left no children, whereby sir John Webb, son and heir, by her, of sir John Webb, succeeded to this manor and estate; and sir John Webb, baronet, grandson of the last mentioned sir John, is the present lord of this manor. His arms are, Gules, a cross between four muscovy ducks Or.

John Tame and Edmond Tame levied a fine of lands in this parish 13 H. 7. And sir Walter Dennis and Agnes his wife levied a fine of the same lands 15 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 160*l.* a year. Sir John Webb is patron; Dr. William Sandford is the present incumbent. There were about 100 acres of land belonging to the glebe. But the parish hath lately been inclosed by act of parliament, and the rector hath other lands allotted to him in lieu of tithe.

The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, consists of the nave only, with a tower between that and the chancel, in which are six bells.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

In the chancel are several monuments and memorials for the Blomers, among which the following is most observable :

To the Pious Memory of JOHN BLOMER Esq; sixth son to WILLIAM BLOMER of HATHEROPE in the County of Gloucester Esq; & of FRANCES his Wife, Daughter to ANTHONY VISCOVNT MONTACVTE, by whom he had Issue three sons, JOHN, WILLIAM and ANTHONY, which last died in the 19th year of his age, and three daughters, CATHERINE, FRANCES, who died Infants, and MARY, who first Married RICHARD DRAYCOTT of PAINSLY in the County of STAFFORD Esq; and afterwards St JOHN WEBBE of Canford, in the County of DORSET BARONET. HAWKESBURY.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of the hundred of Grumbald's-ash, four miles distant north from Sodbury, four north-east from Wickwar, and twenty-five south from Gloucester. Two turnpike-roads, one from Gloucester to Bath, the other from Oxford to Bath and Bristol, lead through it.

Part of it lies upon the hills, in a fine, healthy, open country, mostly corn fields; and part on the west side, beneath the great ridge which separates the upland, or Cotswold country, from the vale.

The name was antiently written Havocheberie, i. e. Havoche's-hill, or camp, according to the explanation of berie, already given. But of this Havoche history gives no account.

Petrifications of the bivalve kind are common in the upper part of the parish. Two little brooks rise here, and empty themselves into the Berkeley river.

Gilbert Ironside, bishop of Bristol, is said to have been born here in the year 1588.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' The church of St. Mary of Perfore holds

The abbey of Pershore had a grant of markets, fairs, free warren, and court leet in Hawkesbury 37 H. 3. which they pleaded in a Quo warranto brought against them 15 E. 1. and their claim was allowed.

William Wasp and others were seized of the manor of Hawkesbury, and of twelve messuages, one toft, three plow-tillages, nine acres of meadow, three acres of wood, and a yearly rent of 7s. 2d. in Hawkesbury and Hildesley, in trust for the abbey of Pershore, 15 R. 2. at which time the abbey was seized of the town of Hawkesbury in their own hands.

At the dissolution of this abbey, the manor of Hawkesbury was granted to John Butler. And lands in Kilcot, Tresham and Seddlewood, and a wood in Hawkesbury, Stoke, &c. lately belonging to the abbey of Pershore, were granted to the same John Butler 37 H. 8. who died seized thereof 5 E. 6. After whom, Sylvestra, his widow, held the manor in jointure, and died 7 Eliz. William Butler, son and heir of sir John, had livery of the manor the same year, as also of Hilsley, Kilcot, Tresham, Seddlewood, Upton, and Guston. Nicholas Butler, esq; was lord of the manor of Hawkesbury in the year 1608.

The manor passed from the Butlers to the Crews, and from them to the family of the present owner, sir Banks Jenkinson, baronet, who is lord of the manor of Hawkesbury. His arms are, Azure, on a fess undy argent a cross paty Gules: in chief two estoiles Or. The manor-house having been uninhabited for some time, is gone to decay.

TITHINGS. 1. Hilsley. This is a very considerable village, and has a distinct tithingman.

' Turstin the son of Rolf holds Hildesley in

' There are eight servi, and three mills of 18s.
' rent, and eight acres of meadow. It was worth ' 40s. but is now worth 60s.' Domesday-book, p. 78.

Robert Lynet held Hildesley of William Ruffel, whose heir he was, and he held one messuage, a small wood, and certain lands at Brodecroft of the abbey of Pershore, at the rent of 4s. a year, 9 E. 2. Esch. William Cheltenham held lands in Hildesley in trust for the abbey of Pershore 40 E. 3. & 19 R. 2. The manor of Hilsley belonged to the Cosyns for several generations, and passed out of their name, by the marriage of an heiress, to Mr. Tipping of Oxfordshire. It is now vested in Matthew Hale, of Alderley, esq.

Here was a chapel dedicated to St. Giles, now converted into tenements for the poor. Sir Thomas de Berkeley and Margaret his wife were seized of the advowson of the chapel of Hildesley 5 H. 5. of which William, earl marshal, levied a fine fine 3 H. 7. And there was a chantry in this chapel 40 E. 3. of which Thomas Swetheman was the last incumbent, and received a pension of 5*l.* in the year 1553.

2. Tresham, i.e. the village place. Thomas Kennet and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Tresham and Hull 21 E. 3. This manor belongs to Mr. Hale. Here is likewise a chapel of ease, with divine service once a month.

3. Kilcot, perhaps from the British Cyll, the hazle-tree, or Cil, out of sight, and coed a wood. Maud de Evers was seized of the manor of Kilcot, with free warren, 15 E. 1. John Bodisant, and Joan his wife, who had been the widow of Robert Stanshaw, levied a fine of lands in Kilcot, Hildesley, and Tresham, 14 H. 7. The manor of Kilcot belonged to the late Samuel Barker, of Fairford, esq; deceased, and is now the property of William Springett, esq.

4. Settlewood. This estate was late Mr. Workman's. It now belongs to Mr. Timothy Thomas, of Uley. Tresham, Kilcot, and Settlewood are united in one tithing.

5. Upton. This is a large tithing, situated upon the hill. John Cotherington and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Hawkesbury Upton 49 H. 6. in which year that king recovered the crown for a short time. This manor belongs now to sir Banks Jenkinson, baronet.

6. Wast. The abbat and convent of Pershore granted a licence 47 E. 3. to Thomas Beverston clerk, and John Godwell, to give their manor and lands of Wast, in the manor of Hawkesbury, to the abbey of Gloucester, on condition that the latter do grant to the abbat of Pershore and his successors 6*s.* 8*d.* out of those lands on the death of every abbat of Gloucester. And accordingly Beverston and Godwell gave the same manor, with the advowson of the chapel, to the abbey of Gloucester, by their deed executed at Standish 49 E. 3. The chapel of le Wast, with all tithes and appurtenances, were granted to Francis Moris and Michael Cole 12 Jac. The manor of Wast belonged afterwards to Robert Cotherington, of Sidmarton, esq; and is now the property of the duke of Beaufort.

A moiety of lands in Wast, which antiently belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, was granted to Arthur Swayne and William Bennet 41 Eliz. see Boxwell.

7. Little Badminton, belonging also to the duke of Beaufort.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, to which it gives name. It is worth about 80*l.* a year. Sir Banks Jenkinson is patron; Mr. Potter Cole is the present incumbent. The vicar's income, for the chapels of Tresham and Little Badminton, arises from certain estates there, out of which he receives in the proportion of 6*d.* to the pound of their respective rents. At present, Little Badminton pays 19*s.* Tresham 7*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*

The chapel of Little Badminton was taken down in the year 1750, by the consent of the bishop, &c. and the inhabitants have seats in the church of Great Badminton, who, as to ecclesiastical concerns, are made subject to the vicar of that church. The scite of the chapel, and the yard, which may be still used for sepulture, is to be kept well fenced round by the duke of Beaufort.

The vicar of Hawkesbury receives mortuaries from Alderley, which parish still repairs a part of the church-yard wall at Hawkesbury.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the abbey of Pershore. The tithes in Hawkesbury and Hawkesbury Upton, lately belonging to that abbey, were granted to John Butler 37 H. 8. The impropriation of this large parish is now divided between the duke of Beaufort, sir Banks Jenkinson, and other persons.

The church is large, and adorned with battlements. It has a south aisle, the upper end of which belongs to sir Abraham-Isaac Elton, and a lofty embattled tower at the west end. It was formerly said to be the mother of seven daughters, or chapels of ease, within her jurisdiction. A licence was obtained to set up a gild, or fraternity, in this parish, dedicated to the virgin Mary, and to purchase land of 10*l.* a year for its endowment, 30 H. 6.

There is a handsome monument against the wall in the chancel, finishing with an obelisk of Siena marble, with the family arms at top, and other ornaments; and on the vase is the following inscription:

In Memory of St Robert Jenkinson, Bar^t who departed this Life Aug^r 8th in the year of our Lord 1766 and in the 46th of his Age. He was the eldest Son of St Robert Banks Jenkinson Bar^t by Catharine his Wife, third Daughter of St Robert Dashwood of North Brook in the County of Oxford Bar^t. He married Mary the Daughter of St Jonathan Cope, Bar^t but left no issue, yet let his Name be preserved to Posterity, for his filial Piety, his conjugal Love, and fraternal Affection, and all those virtues which best adorn the honest English Gentleman and sincere Christian. Fortified with these he bore with Patience a long and painful Illness till he resigned his soul with faith and Confidence into the Hand of his Creator. Disdain not, Reader, what, from too high a Veneration for more glaring and ostentatious Characters, thou mayest be taught to think a very humble Encomium; for remember, that Purity of Life and Integrity of Manners will receive the greatest Praise at the last Day, from him who is the supreme Judge of all Virtue and Merit, and who alone can assign them their due Reward.

At the beginning of this century, there were 150 houses in this parish, and about 598 inhabitants, whereof 25 were freeholders; yearly births 25, burials 22. Atkyns. But it appears by the register, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptisms were 280, burials 206. And in a like period, beginning with 1760, there were 302 baptisms, and 196 burials. And the inhabitants are now about 896. By which it seems that Sir Robert Atkyns's numbers for families and inhabitants were too low; since the average of the annual burials, is to the number of souls, nearly as 1 to 45.

HAWLING

IS a parish in the lower division of Kington hundred, in the Cotswold country, six mile-north-westward from Northleach, six south-east from Winchcombe, and seventeen north-eastward from Gloucester. The turnpike-road from Stow to Gloucester leads through it.

This village, which lies in an open champaign country, is said to be one of the highest places on the Cotswolds, and is remarkable for its healthy air, sound sheep, and sweet mutton. Husbandry is the chief employment of the male inhabitants, but the women and children spin woollen yarn for the clothiers. The common fields in this parish, containing 977 acres, were inclosed by act of parliament in the year 1756.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Sigar de Cioches holds Hallinge, in Holforde hundred, of the king. Goda the countess held it. There are ten hides taxed. In demean are three plow-tillages, and twenty villeins, and five bordars, with nine plow-tillages. There are six servi, and three ancillæ. There is a wood. It was worth 7l. now 8l.' Domesday-book, p. 79.

This manor was given to the abbey of Winchcombe by Robert Gyves 35 H. 3. and the abbat proved his right to free warren, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. The same abbey enjoy'd the manor till that house was dissolved, when the manor of Hallynge, alias Hawlynge, was granted by the crown to William Whorwode, esq; in consideration of 791l. 6s. 8d. 36 H. 8. He died the following year, leaving two daughters coheiresses, of whom, Anne was married to Ambrose Dudley, and had livery of the manor 37 H. 8. and Margaret was married to Thomas Throckmorton, who had livery granted to them 3 Mariae. Livery of one moiety of the manor was granted to Thomas Horwood 15 Eliz.

Henry Stratford, esq; was lord of the manor in 1608, and died in 1649. Henry Stratford, his son, died in 1671; and Richard Stratford, esq; lord of the manors of Guiting and Hawling, died in the year 1692. Henrietta, one of the sisters and coheiresses of Richard Stratford, was married to William Wyndham, esq; (younger son of Sir Wadham Wyndham) who, in her right, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century; and William Wyndham, esq; is the present lord of the manor of Hawling. His arms are, Azure, a chevron between three lions heads erased Or.

HAMLET. Rowell, or Roell, is accounted extraparochial, but being contiguous to Hawling, I have

I have placed it in the manner of a hamlet. It is an antient manor thus described in Domesday-book:

'The church of St. Ebrulf holds Rawelle in Holeford hundred of the king. Wluuard held it in the time of king Edward. There are ten hides. In demean are four plow-tillages, and sixteen villeins, and two bordars, with six plow-tillages. There are three servi. It is worth and was worth 10*l*. This manor never paid tax.'

Domesday-book, p. 72.

The church of St. Ebrulf in Normandy was seized of the manor and church of Rowel, and of two plow-tillages, 56 H. 3.

At the suppression of alien monasteries, this manor was granted to the abbey of Winchcombe, which continued possessed of it 'till the dissolution, when it was granted, together with the tithes, to sir Ralph Sadleyr, 1 E. 6. Livery of the manor of Rowel was granted to Brian Carter, and Mary his wife, daughter of sir Philip Hobbey, 1 Eliz.

The manor came afterwards to lord Chandos. Christopher Montacute, esq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century, and Mr. Montague is the present lord of the manor.

Here was a chapel of ease, now demolished.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 69*l*. a year. Mr. Wyndham is patron; Mr. Lawrence is the present incumbent.

When the common fields were inclosed in 1756, the rector quitted claim to all tithes, &c. in consideration of receiving 25*s*. yearly, in money, for every yard-land; the whole to be reckoned at 30 yard-lands. He likewise gave up his glebe land, consisting of 63 acres, in consideration of 10*s*. a year for every acre, to be paid to him and his successors, by the lord of the manor, in the great porch of the parish church of Hawling.

A composition was made, April 13, 1464, between the abbat of Winchcombe, and Hugh Ward, rector of Halling, by which the abbat's lands of Halling and Rowell were exempted from tithes; the abbat agreeing to pay the rector 30*s*. a year in lieu thereof, and for his duty at Rowell.

The abbey of Winchcombe presented to this church in 1313. After the dissolution of that house, the advowson of the rectory and vicarage, and the tithes of Hawling and Rowell, were granted to sir Thomas Scimour 1 E. 6.

The demean of the manor pay 13*s*. 4*d*. in lieu of tithes.

The church, dedicated to St. Luke, is small, with a low embattled tower, and three bells, at the west end. A house and orchard, and thirteen acres of land, in three pieces, are given for the repair of the church.

H A Y L E S.

THIS parish is situated in the lower division of the hundred of Kiftsgate, at the foot of that range of hills which divides the Cotefwold from the vale part of the county, running from north-east to south-west nearly the whole length of it. It stands two miles distant north-east from Winchcombe, ten east from Tewkesbury, and seventeen north-east from Gloucester. A small brook runs from this place into the Avon at Evesham in Worcestershire.

Sir Robert Atkyns says, It is so called from haly, which is Saxon for holy: and indeed if this name had been given it after the founding of its monastery, the residence of so many holy men, or of any other religious house prior to that foundation, there might have been some reason for this conjecture; but Heile being the antient name of the place long before any religious house was here founded, this etymology will fail. Hail, or beile, antiently, as well as at present, signified strong, healthy; and lei, ley, or lie in the Saxon language signifies a pasture ground; so that this place was probably so called from the strength and fertility of the soil, for which the piece of ground wherein the church stands, in particular, is now very remarkable. Besides pasture, here are woodlands, and some rich arable lands; but this parish furnishes furnishes nothing remarkable in the fossil or vegetable kingdoms.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

William Leuric holds Heile in the hundred of Gretestan. Osgot held it in the time of king Edward. There are eleven hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and nine villeins, and eleven bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There were twelve servi, whom William made free. There is a mill of 10s. [rent] and a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth 12*l.* [but] now [only] 8*l.* This manor pays tax.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

A considerable part of this manor was granted to the abbey of faint Ebrulph in Normandy. Geoffrey de Luci was seized of it 6 John, and the 17th year of the same reign, he granted part of the lands to Robert de Maci. John de Julin was also seized of it 3 H. 3. and 10 H. 3. it came to the crown, when the inhabitants of the parish were discharged from the hundred of Winchcombe. King Henry the Third granted it to his brother, Richard earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans, who, in the year 1246, founded a monastery in this place, and endowed it with this manor.

Adam le Hunt also granted twenty solidates of land in Hayles, and one messuage, one toft, and three acres of meadow in Sudely, to the abbey of Hayles, 13 E. 2. See accounts of other grants to this abbey under Didbrook, Pinnock, Church-down, Sudely, Guiting-Power, Longborough, Todington, and other parishes. For the charter of the endowment of the abbey, see N°. 17, in the Appendix.

This abbey was surrendered to the king's commissioners, Dec. 31, 1539, by Stephen Sagar, the last abbat, and not Whaley*, as mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns; and was valued at 357*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.* ob. per annum.

After the dissolution, the scite of the monastery, and the greater part of the manor, (probably Hayles-wood, Pinnock's-wood, and Hayles-park) containing 500 acres, value 65*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* were granted to sir Thomas Seymour, in fee, Aug. 19, 1 E. 6. He being attainted of high treason, and afterwards beheaded, the scite of the monastery, and the rest of the lands, were granted to William marquis of Northampton, June 12, 4 E. 6. The marquis, on the 16th of June, in the same year, leased it to one Hodgkins, for twenty-one years, at 159*l.* 16*s.* It seems afterwards to have been in the crown, for queen Elizabeth, July 18, in the 7th year of her reign, leased it again to Hodgkins for twenty-one years at the same money. Hodgkins had three sons, but he bequeathed this estate to his daughter, who married William Hobby, esq; of whose family this manor and estate was purchased by John lord viscount Tracy, whose descendant, Thomas-Charles lord viscount Tracy, is the present proprietor, and resides at Todington in this county.

Hayles-wood, containing 102 acres, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, was granted to Robert earl of Salisbury, 5 Jac. Lord viscount Tracy is the present possessor, and pays an annual rent out of it to the present earl of Salisbury.

A meadow which belonged to the marquis of Northampton, and formerly to the abbey, called Browning's, was granted to Henry Browning and Charles Brockton, 2 Mariæ.

Other lands in this parish, formerly belonging to the abbey, were granted to Theophilus Adams and Richard Adams, 25 Eliz.

An inn and divers houses, formerly granted to the marquis of Northampton, which, before the dissolution, belonged to the abbey, were granted to sir Thomas Smith and Edward Lascelles, 2 Jac.

Of the ABBEY.

In the year 1246, Richard earl of Cornwall, in performance of a vow which he made when he was in great danger at sea, on his return from Gascony¹, erected a monastery in this place, and brought hither twenty monks, of the Cistercian order, from Beaulieu in Hampshire^m. These monks chose one from among themselves to be abbat, whom the earl invested with the abbey, and all things belonging to it. On the 5th day of November, 1251, being the year in which the church, dormitory, cloisters, and refectory were finished, the earl procured this church of Hayles, which he had built at a vast expence, to be dedicated, with great pomp and solemnity, to the virgin Mary, and to All Saints, by the bishop of Worcester; the king, the queen, and above three hundred persons of quality being present on the occasion. Thirteen bishops celebrated mass on the day of dedication, each at a separate altar, the bishop of Lincoln officiating at the high altar. This grand company was all entertained together, upon a sunday, with a noble and magnificent

* Sir Robert Atkyns says, 'Abbot Whaley was the last Abbot, who, in hopes of a Pension, surrendered it to King Henry the Eighth.' This is assigning no very laudable motive for the abbat's resignation. But why this reflection; what had he done? He gave up all the dignity and state, the authority and power, attendant on his office, for a private station; and this, probably, not by choice, but in obedience to that authority which he could not withstand. Certain writers, however, have endeavoured to blacken the characters of many that appear to have been merely passive in the first steps to the Reformation. Stevens says of Thomas Kampswell, the last prior of Worcester, that 'He was one of those poor spirited creatures, who, either out of fear, or some worse consideration, surrendered their monasteries to king Henry VIII. at the general dissolution; by which means he procured to himself a good pension of 133*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* as the reward of his treachery and sacrilege. Death was the penalty for refusing to submit, and a plentiful support for an idle or vicious life the recompence for complying: How few are there that bravely face the terrors of the former, and withstand the temptations of the latter.' — True, very true, Mr. Stevens, You and I are happy in not having been put to the trial, or we ourselves might have shrunk at the sight of the gallows.

dinner, worthy of themselves and of the occasion: But the religious dined upon a vast variety of fish, at a separate table. An eminent writer, speaking of this affair, delivers himself to the following purpose. 'If I should endeavour fully to describe the magnificence of that entertainment, every one would conclude that I exceeded the truth; and lest I should write a falsity, I will relate what I had from Matthew Paris. The earl assured him, for an undoubted truth, that, reckoning all charges, he had expended 10000 marks on the building of that church, adding these memorable and commendable words, "That he wished to God that all the money which he had laid out on the castle of Wallingford had been expended so wisely, and to so good purpose as this."

The abbey church and most of the buildings were burnt down in the year 1271, and the damage was estimated at 8000 marks.

This was a mitred abbey. Stevens, in his Monasticon, gives a list of abbats, &c. summoned to parliament, from the clause rolls in the tower, by which it appears, that the abbats of this house, and of Hales-Owen in Shropshire, were usually summoned together; but neither of them in the year 1294, as sir Robert Atkyns affirms, in which there were only two summonses extant.

The abbat and convent paid an annual rent of 6l. 16s. 10d. ob. for Pinnockshire, 27 E. 1. which rent was, the same year, settled by the king on queen Margaret, as part of her dower.

In the annals of this monastery is recorded the history of the founding of a small one, of monks of the order of Bon-hommes, or Good-men, the substance of which is as follows. Edmund earl of Cornwall, as yet a boy, being with his father in Germany, and seeing a large, close, golden vessel, full of relicks of the precious blood of our Lord, which had been sent as a great present to Charlemain, from Greece, he prevailed to have a considerable part given him, which he brought into England with him, and carried to the monastery of Hayles, and laid it up in the abbey church there, both the convents of Hayles and Winchcombe attending; Edmund himself, who was present for his devotion, carrying the vessel in solemn procession. This precious relick he divided, and leaving one part at Hayles, gave the other to the monastery of Ashridge in Buckinghamshire, which he himself had built. — At the dissolution of Hayles monastery, this precious blood is said to have been discovered to be the blood of a duck, or perhaps some other animal, which was weekly renewed. Of this it was affirmed, that a man being in mortal sin, and not absolved, could not see the blood; but as soon as he was absolved, he might plainly discern it. The priest shewed it in a cabinet of crystal richly adorned, both sides thereof seemed alike, yet one side of the crystal was much thicker than the other; and until the penitent had paid for as many masses as the priest thought fit, the thicker side of the crystal was presented towards him, through which nothing could be seen; but having paid to the priest's satisfaction, the thin and more transparent side of the crystal was presented, and then, to his great joy, he might discern the blood. This imposture had been practised for many ages, and greatly enriched the monastery.

The following account of the pensions assigned to the religious at the surrender, is taken literally from Willis's History of Abbies, viz. 'Stephen Sagar, late Abbot ther, 100l. and also to have of the Kyngs Majestie the Capital Messuage or Mansion-House callyd Costombe, alias Coston, within the Parish of Didbroke in the Countie aforesaid, with the Stable ther, and oon Close nere therunto adjoyning; and the furst Vesture oone lytle Mede adjoyning unto a Grove callyd Costcombe-Grove, with the lytle Garden; and the Courte ther duringe the natural Liff. of the same Stephen, untill the seid Stephen be promoted by the King's Majestie to some Benefyce or Benefices to the Some above seid, and further to have fortye Lodes of Fyreward and Housebote sufficient out of the Kings Majesties Woods callyd Hayles Wood by th' Assignement out of the Receyvor of his Highness Court of Augment within the seid Countie, (or his sufficient Deputy for the tyme byinge.) John Dawson, B. The abbat's house was a large, handsome building. John lord viscount Tracy died there, anno 1686, but was buried at Todington, since which time it has not been the residence of any of his family. It is now so far fallen to decay, as to be habitable for a few poor persons only. Long since sir Robert Atkyns published his history, the arms of the founder were in the hall window, and round them, in old characters, RICARD' PLANTAGENET SEMPER AUGUSTUS FUNDATOR NOSTER. The arms, and other painted glass of the windows of this house, have lately been put up in the hall windows at Todington; and a noble old chimney-piece from hence is also put up in the great hall there, by the present lord Tracy.

What now remains of the old abbey is situated in a rich pasture ground, of five or six acres. The north-west side of the cloister, in length about thirty-five yards, is tolerably intire; in the roof of which are the following arms: Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Five fusils in fess. 2d and 3d, Barry of six, a bend over all. — Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Sable, a lion passant gardant Or between three helmets argent, for Compton earl of Northampton. 2d and and 3d, A chevron within a bordure charged with roundlets. — Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Gules, fretty argent. 2d and 3d, Two bars, impaling A lion rampant. — A chain with a shack-bolt at each end between three mitres, which are supposed to be the arms of the abbey.

The outer walls of the other three sides of the cloisters are in part standing. There are three or four doors leading out of the north-east side to the place where the church stood, of which nothing remains, except part of the foundation.

Round the area are four or five habitations, formed from the outer buildings of the old monastery, as appears by the arches of the windows and doors, now walled up.

The inn, already mentioned to have been granted to the marquis of Northampton, is still remaining. It is a large old building near the abbey house, formerly used for the reception of pilgrims and devout persons visiting the monastery; and has been kept open, as an inn, ever since the reformation, 'till very lately.

Upon a large stone, lying in a heap near the abbey house, I observed a device in a scutcheon, expressed in the following manner: A mitre pierced with a crozier in pale; on the dexter side, the letter A; on the sinister, the letter Q standing over a tun; intended for a kind of rebus on the name of Melton, one of the abbats. In the floor of the hall at Southam House are a great many painted bricks, taken from this place, and carried thither when the abbey house belonged to Mr. Hobby, who was related to the De-la-Bere family. Upon some of them is the same rebus, and upon others, the name of Ford several times expressed within a wreath; and there are the arms of benefactors to the abbey upon others, as described under the account of that house, in the parish of Cleeve.

The inhabitants say there is a subterraneous passage from this place to Coscomb, which was called the Abbat's-lodging. One Freeman of Didbrook, in this neighbourhood, declared to an old man at the abbey house, that he went so far in it 'till he came to a pair of iron gates, which stopt him from proceeding; that the top is handsomely arched with stone, and in the walls are niches, or seats, all along: The mouth, or opening, he said, was in the orchard near the house; but Freeman is dead, and nobody could shew it me, yet the people give intire credit to his relation.

Richard° earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans, and brother to Henry the Third, died at the castle of Berkhamsted, April 2, 1272. His heart was buried in the church of the friars minors in Oxford, and his body at Hayles. His wife, who died 1261, was buried here; and Edmund, their son, earl of Cornwall, was interred in this church anno 1300. His funeral was performed with great solemnity, king Edward the First, and a great number of the nobility attending; so that this abbey church contained the ashes of a king, a queen, and their son.

Viewing the venerable remains of these once noble buildings, where the ashes of so many eminent persons lie scattered and undistinguished amongst the ruins, 'tis not easy to avoid reflecting on the transitory nature of riches, power, titles, honours, which so much engage the attention of the busy world, and which all must shortly leave behind.

Sir Robert Atkyns speaks of Alexander de Hales°, whence it might be inferred that he had some connexion with this place: And Camden, in his Britannia, says, 'this place is famous for its great scholar, Alexander de Hales;' but as it is generally agreed that he died in the year 1245, he certainly could have no relation to this monastery, which was not founded 'till the year following. The truth is, this great schoolman was of Hales-Owen in Shropshire.

In the reign of king Henry the Fourth, a battle was fought on Braham-moor, in the north of England, between the earl of Northumberland, and other rebels, and sir Thomas Rokeby, sheriff of Yorkshire, on the part of the king; the first were routed, and the abbat of Hales being then taken

° He was a powerful prince in his time, and a religious person; valiant in war, and of great resolution and conduct. In Aquitain he behaved with wonderful courage, and had equal success. He forced the Saracens to a truce in the Holy Land; refused the kingdom of Apulia, when offered him by the pope; quieted several tumults in England; and being chosen king of the Romans in 1257, was crowned at Aix la Chapelle; but this got him no great reputation, for, according to a common verse, he is supposed to have bought this honour:

Nummus ait pro me nubit Cornubia Romæ.

Cornwall to Rome almighty money joyn'd.

For, before that time, we are told by a cotemporary writer, that he was so famous a monied man, as to be able to spend 100 marks a day for ten years together. This is the substance of Camden, col. 27.

° He went to France, and studied school divinity and canon law in the academy at Paris, in both which he became so very famous, as to be commonly called Doctor Irrefragabilis. He flourished about 1230, and having entered himself in the order of Franciscans, died at Paris, Aug. 27, 1245. — Cave's Historia Literaria, p. 714. — He lies buried in the midst of the body of the church of the Cordeliers in Paris. Near the steps ascending to the choir is a monument of black marble, raised about two feet from the ground, with this inscription in yellow letters:

in armour against the king, was hanged for his defection. The bishop of Bangor was taken at the same time, but his life was spared, because he was found in his ordinary habit. Notwithstanding this story is admitted here, it is most probable that the unfortunate abbat belonged to Hales-Owen, as in many instances these two places are not properly distinguished in history.

In the supplementary part of Mr. Willis's History of Abbies, after the index to the second volume, under Hayles, at p. 10. is the following note; 'This abbey, tho' surrounded with Gloucestershire, and at a distance from any part of Wiltshire, is reputed in Wiltshire.'—This is a mistake, for it was always reputed in Gloucestershire. However, this blunder, I think, should not be charged on Mr. Willis, which I presume was the printer's, who should have placed the note under the account of the abbey of Kingswood, immediately following, of which the observation is just.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Campden. In the year 1738, by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and the incumbent, the rectory of Pinnock, the vicarage of Didbrook, and the donative of Hayles were consolidated into one presentment. Lord Tracy is patron and impropriator; and his lordship's brother, the honourable John Tracy, D. D. warden of All Souls college in Oxford, is the present incumbent of these consolidated churches, which are worth, comm. ann. about 120*l.* year.

The curacy of Hayles was augmented by lot, with queen Anne's bounty, in the year 1738, as the vicarage of Didbrook had been two years before.

The rectory, chapel, and tithes of Hayles, formerly belonging to the abbey, were granted to John Dudley and John Ascough, 18 Eliz.

Godfrey Giffard, bishop of Worcester, in the year 1270, endowed⁹ the vicarage of Hayles with ten marks yearly, (a sum equal in value, at that time, to 100*l.* of our present money) to be paid by the abbat and convent, in two equal portions, with the allowance of offerings, and a house and garden.

The church is a mean structure, with a small wooden tower. It was built by William Hobby, esq; who was buried in it Mar. 17, 1603, aged 103, but there is no memorial for him. In the churchyard is a memorial upon a grave-stone, placed over the remains of John Langley, esq; (son of Philip Langley of Mangotsfield) who married a daughter of John lord Tracy.

At the beginning of this century, there were 18 houses and 80 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 3 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. Atkyns. The baptisms and burials in Didbrook and Pinnock are registered at Hayles, without distinguishing what belongs to each place; wherefore nothing can be concluded from them. On an average of seven years, the baptisms are 7, the burials 4. The houses at present at Hayles are 16, and the inhabitants 90.

IS a small parish in the united hundreds of Dudston and King's-barton, distant about a mile south-west from Gloucester, upon the turnpike-road from that city to Bristol.

The name of it has been variously written in different ages, as Hechanestede, about seven hundred years ago; afterwards Hey-Hamsted, and by contraction, Hampstead, and Hempsted, as we now use it. I apprehend the first form is most agreeable to the original orthography, and signifies Hechane's-town; for sted, or stadt, is a town or station.

This village is bounded on the north by the river Severn. It consists of rich pasturage and orcharding, and produces excellent cheese and cyder. Daniel Lysons, esq; a physician, has a very handsome house and a large estate in this place, with plantations of trees that run up to the great road, whence it is seen at an agreeable distance.

There are six servi, and half a fishery. 'Earl William held this manor in demean, and it 'was not in farm; but now the sheriff has let it 'at 60*s.* a year.' Domesday-book, p. 69.

This manor was given to the priory of Lanthony by Milo earl of Hereford, in the year 1136. The prior's claim to court leet and felons goods was allowed, in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and in the 21st year of the same reign, he purchased a charter of free warren in Hey-Hempstead and Podgmead. The manor continued in the possession of the priory of Lanthony 'till that house was dissolved; and was then granted, together with a fishery in the Severn, to Thomas Atkyns and Margaret his wife, 37 H. 8. Sir Robert Atkyns of Saperton was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. Daniel Lyfons, esq; died seized of it in the year 1773, and was succeeded by his son, Daniel Lyfons, esq; who is the present lord of the manor. His arms are, Gules, a chief argent, on the lower part thereof a cloud, the sun's resplendent rays issuing thereout proper.

Certain lands and tithes in Hempsted, with a fishery in the Severn, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Arthur Porter 32 H. 8.

H A M L E T. Rea is a hamlet, lying about half a mile from the church.

Podgmead is a tithe free farm of considerable value, in this parish, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony. The scite of the manor of Podgmead, and several other lands, in consideration of 266*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* were granted to Joan Coke, 31 H. 8. to be held by the tenth part of a knight's fee, paying 30*s.* yearly to the crown. Podgmead came afterwards to Mr. Hoskins, who granted it to the corporation of the city of Gloucester, on condition that they should constantly renew to the next heir male of his family, a lease for thirty-one years, at a certain reserved rent, on the payment of a small fine.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth about 90*l.* a year. The hon. Mr. Howard, who married Miss Scudamore, is patron in her right; Mr. Taylor is the present incumbent. It was formerly a chapel belonging to St. Owen's in Gloucester.

In the year 1137, earl Milo gave the tithes of this church to the priory of Lanthony. Small tithes in Hempstead, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to sir Christopher Hatton, 24 Eliz.

John lord Scudamore, in the year 1662, settled on the minister the vicarage house, garden, and orchard, the parsonage close and barn, and a parcel of meadow ground in Hempsted-moor, with his tithes, &c. in Hempsted, which particulars he had purchased of Henry Powle, esq; of Williamstrip in this county, as appears by a conveyance, dated Jan. 17, 13 C. 2. To the above he added the church-yard of Lanthony priory, and all the tithes of his demans there. These particulars were settled by act of parliament. He likewise built the present parsonage house, at the expence of 700*l.* over the door of which is written, in gold letters,

Whoe'er doth dwell within this door,
Thank God for viscount Scudamore.

The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, stands on a rising ground, whence there is an extensive prospect over the vale, and has a tower between the nave and the chancel.

Against the north wall of the chancel is a very handsome raised monument, for Richard Atkyns, chief justice of South Wales, with his effigy, in judge's robes, lying thereon. A flat stone near it bears this inscription :

Here lyeth buried the body of Richard Atkins of Tufn Esquior waighting for the resurrection of glory, and was buried the 3 day of November ano 1610.

Benefactions.

Sylvanus Lyfons, esq; left an estate of about 300*l.* a year, after his widow's death, which happened in 1750, charged with the payment of 20*l.* a year each to nine clergymens widows of this diocese, (the Forest deanery excepted;) 2*l.* 2*s.* for a sermon in Hempsted church; and 5*l.* for an entertainment on Ascension-day. If any overplus remains, it is to go to the rector of Hempsted. Five scoffees (three clergymen and two laymen) are appointed to the management of the charity.

Mrs. Harris of Abergavenny, sister to Sylvanus Lyfons, esq; left 1000*l.* now laid out in the purchase of an estate at Upton St. Leonard's, the rents to be apply'd as follows: 20*s.* for an anniversary sermon on the 27th of June, which was the day of her death; 5*s.* to provide bread and wine for a sacrament, and 2*s.* 6*d.* to the clerk; and the same at Whaddon. Four widows are to be clothed on that day. What remains of the rent to be employed in putting out boys apprentices, two of this parish for one of Whaddon. If the boys are not apprenticed, then the money to be expended in clothing poor men.

H E N B U R Y.

THIS is an extensive parish, lying at the western extremity of the county, part of it in the hundred of its own name, and part in the hundred of Berkeley; five miles distant northward from Bristol, and thirty-five south-westward from Gloucester. It is bounded on the east by Almondesbury and part of Westbury, on the west by the Avon, on the north by the Severn, and on the south by Clifton and part of Westbury.

The name sufficiently evinces the antiquity of the village. It is composed of ben, British, old, and berg, a camp, or fortification; and signifies emphatically the old camp, for there were more bergs, or camps, than one in this place, and its neighbourhood, when the name was first given it.

Lord Clifford has a fine seat at King's Weston, in this parish, enriched with plantations, and beautiful lawns and pasture grounds. It lies at the distance of about two miles from the Severn, which appears from thence like a large arm of the ocean, with ships generally lying at anchor in Kingroad, either bound to or from the port of Bristol. From a little hill, not far from the house, the prospect is exquisitely beautiful, and uncommonly extensive, commanding the country on the Bristol channel, from Pembrokehire on one side, and Somersetshire on the other, almost up to the city of Gloucester, with the Welch mountains, at a vast distance, for an evanescent ground. Turning southward, the view is less extensive, but not less agreeable, over a rich cultivated country, interspersed with villas, on the Gloucester-hire side of the Avon, as far as the city of Bristol. Mr. Jones, in his CLIFTON, slightly touches on the beauties of this seat:

KING'S WESTON there, delightful various scene!
The muse enjoys, and reigns a raptur'd queen,
With throbbing bosom, and extatic eye,
O'er all the subject, ocean, hills, and sky,
The faint perspective, and the dying view,
The boundless plan to just proportion true,
Where each bright beauty spreads its tints abroad
In all the splendors of thy pencil, Claude!
Where parts on parts reflect a lucid ray,
That all the lustre of the whole display;
Where harmony her happy order shews,
In all the art that on the canvass glows;
The plastic picture strikes th' astonish'd mind,
The ships in prospect, and the hills behind;
The woods, the mountains at due distance rise,
In perfect unison with sea and skies:

There light and shade their wond'rous strength impart,
There nature seems to take the hint from art.

The vale incult, by random robe see grac'd,
With SOUTHWELL soaring to the mark of taste;
Whose classic eye each erring stroke shall scan,
Reform the model, and improve the plan;
To simple majesty reduce the pile,
And bid discretion through the garden smile;
Make truth and unity in all combine,
And taste and judgment crown the clear design;
Unnumber'd beauties thence attract the soul,
That seem expanded to the distant pole;
The outline endless, charms th' insatiate eyes,
Within that trait ten thousand beauties rise,
With incidents above Salvator's hand,
Of ocean, air, of forest, sky, and land.

From this short visit to King's Weston, we return to the village of Henbury; where, not far distant from the church, stands Blase-hill, of a sugar-loaf form, whose sides are covered with a fine wood. It is so called from an old chapel formerly erected upon it, said to have been dedicated to St. Blasius, bishop of St. Sebaste, and patron of the wool-combers. On the summit of this hill are strong lines of fortification, which were very probably the old camp that gave name to the village.

About the year 1766, in digging the foundation of a pleasure house on the top of this hill, some brass coins of Vespasian, Antoninus, Constantine, Constantius, Tetricus, and others of the later empire, were found, with a few silver ones, chiefly of Gordianus. The most curious of them all was a large brass medal, with a very fine head of Faustina, and a female figure, holding an infant in one hand, on the reverse; whence, and from the inscription, FERTILITAS, it is supposed to have been struck upon the occasion of that empress's lying-in. But these remains were only the gleanings of a fuller harvest, which happened in the year 1707, when many coins, and other Roman antiquities were found there, as we are told in general by sir Robert Atkyns. Then, also, the foundation of the old chapel was dug up, and a vault discovered, ten yards long, and six broad, wherein were many human bodies, with the skulls intire, and teeth white.

Besides this camp, there are two others, one on King's-Weston-hill, the other on the summit of Comb-hill, both supposed to be Roman.

Blase-castle, which is the name of the pleasure-house above-mentioned, is elegantly finished in the Gothic stile, at a very considerable expence, by Thomas Farr, esq; the present chief magistrate of the city of Bristol, who has a good house and a large estate in this village. From this castle is a most delightful prospect of the country round it, with the windings of the Avon, the beautiful rising inclosures on the side of Dundery-hill, the more distant country of Glamorganshire, Monmouthshire, and the waving woods of Dean-forest on the opposite side of the Severn, with the mountains in Wales to close the landscape.

Here FARR with inbred rapture may resort,
And see his ships glad sailing into port,
With Indian treasures on the current ride,
To crown the prospect, and enrich the tide:
What nameless raptures must his joys renew,
With growing taste at once, and wealth, in view;

The harbour, ships, the sea, the mountains shine,
 With instant lustre, and with ray divine;
 Lo, SOUTHWELL's landskip, happy FARR, is thine!
 There on the right a Roman camp we find,
 Left by the lords and masters of mankind;
 Where coins and medals narrative are found;
 Those story'd registers from under ground,
 A moral lecture to the mind convey;
 The Latian glories, in their last decay,
 May mad ambition's frantic boast deride,
 And human vanity, and human pride.
 From hence kind nature opens wide her arms,
 Her pictures ravish, and her prospect charms;
 From hence the fated soul forbids the sight,
 O'ercome, and fill'd with surfeits of delight.
 Where erst the Roman eagles wav'd in air,
 Behold a peaceful growing pile appear,
 For friendly banquet, in a Gothic guise,
 From forth the center of the camp arise;
 Which shall each sense with each regale supply,
 But feast for ever the insatiate eye;
 Thence down a vegetable arch we stray,
 A growing gallery, with winding way,
 Where lovely labyrinths in mazes run
 To the sweet rustic lawn where we begun:
 There FARR with willing heart can frequent blend
 The connoisseur, the merchant, and the friend;
 At the rich genial board in each can shine,
 And make his converse lively as his wine;
 His three years toil with happy eye may view,
 And joyful guess what three years more can do.
 His lov'd LUCINDA in her orb can charm,
 Her smile can gladden, and her music warm;
 From forth the answering keys her fingers call
 The soul of harmony, that joy of all;
 Her measures, like her mind, are fill'd with grace,
 In sounds you hear, you see it in her face.

Jones's CLIFTON.

Here, with the poet, we take leave of Blaise-hill, and observe, that Mr. Sampson, and Mr. Miller have very good houses in the midst of the village, and good estates in the parish.

Henbury, Clifton, Redland, Kingsdown, Stapleton, and Winterbourn are to Bristol, what Islington, Hempstead, Bow, and other circumjacent villages are to London; an agreeable retreat from the noise and hurry of a busy life, and they mark the taste and opulence of a trading people.

This large parish consists chiefly of pasture and meadow ground, with some arable and woodland, and there are some marshy grounds next the Severn.

Asparagus Palustris, [Officinalis Linnei] Marsh Asparagus; flowering in autumn. Park. 454. Gerh. p. 947. Found in Maidenham, or Madam-meadow, in Lawrence-Weston.

Nasturtium Montanum annuum tenuissime divisum, [Lepidum petreum Linnei] Finely cut annual Mountain Cress; flowering in the spring, on the low rocks over-against Goram's-chair. Ray, 304.

Polygonum minus. Small Knot-grass. Park. 446, sect. 4. On the shore of the Severn, about Weston.

The Entrochus, a petrification of the worm, or grub class, from one to three inches long, composed of several joints, with radii on each disk, and perforated through the middle, is sometimes found at King's Weston.

In this parish are two ferries over the Severn. The uppermost, or Old Passage, is in the tithing of Aust, thirteen miles on a turnpike-road from Bristol: There the river is above two miles over, and the opposite house is at Beachley, in the parish of Tidenham in this county. The other ferry, called the New-Passage, is at Redwick, about three miles further down the river, and eleven miles distant from Bristol. There the water is about three miles over; and the opposite passage-house is at a place called the Black Rock, near St. Pierre's in Monmouthshire. See observations on these passages, p. 47.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Sir Robert Atkyns, attempting to give an account of this manor from Domesday-book, has intermixed with it some particulars of that of Sodbury, which commence in the fourth line, and run on to the end of his account. In the detail of the large manor of Westbury, in Bernintree hundred, which, before and after the conquest, belonged to the church of St. Mary of Worcester, it is thus recorded: 'These members, Henberie, 'Redeuuiche, Stocche, Giete, belong to this manor. 'In these are nine plow-tillages in demean, and 'twenty-seven villeins, and twenty-two bordars, 'with twenty-six plow-tillages. There are twenty 'servi, and two ancilla, and twenty free men, '[coliberti] with ten plow-tillages, and a mill of '20d.' Domesday-book, p. 70.

The bishop of Worcester proved his right to court leet and free warren in Henbury, in a Quo warranto brought against him 15 E. 1.

In an ancient taxation of the manor, found in the Cottonian library, it is said, The lord bishop of Worcester has at Henbury in the Salt-marsh 40*l.* in rent of assize; and five carucates of land, worth two marks each; and a dove-house, worth 6*s.* 8*d.* and in pleas and perquisites of the court, twelve marks; and a water-mill, with some other income, worth 100*s.* In all 60*l.* Tiberius, C. x. E. 76.—In another survey of the manor, 26 H. 8. it was valued at 71*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* per annum.

Henbury continued in the fee of Worcester from before the conquest, till Dr. Heath alienated this manor, and that of Stoke-Bishop, with the advowson of the vicarage of Henbury, to the crown, in the year 1547, in exchange for some other manors and estates in Herefordshire and Worcestershire.

King Edward the Sixth, by letters patents, 30 Jun. 1^o regni, grants the manors of Bishop's Stoke and Henbury in Salt-Marsh, and the hundred of Henbury, with the advowson of the vicarage of the parish church of Henbury, late parcel of the possessions of the bishop of Worcester, to sir Rafe Sadleir, and his heirs. Sir Thomas Sadleir, son of Rafe, was owner of these estates 32 Eliz. and left one son, Rafe Sadleir, esq; who had no issue, and and one daughter Gertrude, married to fir Walter Aston, of Tixal in Staffordshire.

Walter lord Aston, their son and heir, sold the manor and hundred of Henbury, with the advowson of the vicarage of Henbury, and the manor of Westbury Bryan, alias Westbury upon Trim, lately belonging to the college of Westbury, to Thomas Yate and Gregory Gearing, 20 May, 1675; from whom they passed by purchase to fir Samuel Astry, of Henbury, in 1680.

By the death of fir Samuel Astry, the manor and hundred of Henbury, &c. descended to his three surviving daughters and coheiresses; Elizabeth, married to fir John Smyth, baronet; Diana, the wife of Richard Orlebar, esq; and Arabella, the lady of Charles-William earl of Suffolk, whom she survived. And dying without issue, she left her third part to fir John Smyth, baronet; whose son, fir John Smyth, sold a moiety of that third to the heirs of Edward Colston, esq; who had purchased the third part late Mr. Orlebar's. A moiety was then in fir John Smyth, whose three sisters and coheiresses sold it to fir Jarrit Smith, baronet, who married Florence, one of the said coheiresses. The other moiety descended to the two daughters and coheirs of Thomas Edwards, esq; one of whom was married to Francis lord Middleton; the other was wedded to Alexander Leady, esq; who afterwards took the name of Colston, and died in the year 1775. So that fir Jarrit Smith is the present owner of one moiety of the manor and hundred of Henbury, &c. and the honourable Thomas Willoughby, second son of the late lord Middleton, and Alexander Colston, esq; at the time of his death, were proprietors of the other moiety. Sir Jarrit Smith bears for his arms, Gules, on a chevron between three cinquefoils argent, as many leopards faces sable.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. King's Weston, where lord Clifford has a fine manor, as mentioned in the introductory part of the account of this parish. This tithing received its name from being the king's antient demesnes, and lying farthest westward of any part of Berkeley hundred, of which it is a member, tho' far detached from the continent of that hundred. It is thus mentioned in Domesday: 'Seven hides and one virgate in Westone belong to Berchelai.' King Henry the Second granted the lordship of Berkeley, and Berkeley herneffe, &c. the district of Berkeley, to Robert Fitz-Harling, who settled this manor and that of Beverstone, on Robert his second son. From that time the manor of King's Weston and that of Beverstone descended to the same proprietors, as related under the account of the latter, down to R. 2. when Catherine, the widow of Thomas Berkeley, died seized of both, after having married, to her second husband, fir John de Throp, who was possessed of King's Weston 11 R. 2.

Sir Maurice Berkeley held this manor 2 H. 4. and was succeeded by fir John Berkeley, his heir, who enjoy'd it 6 H. 6. From him it descended to fir Maurice Berkeley of Beverstone, who dying 38 H. 6. was succeeded by fir Maurice Berkeley of Uley, who was seized of this manor 4 E. 4. His son and heir, fir William Berkeley, taking part with king Richard the Third, his estate was seized by king Henry the Seventh, and the manor of King's Weston was granted to Jasper duke of Bedford, and to the heirs males of his body. But the king granted the reversion, after the duke of Bedford's entail, to fir William Berkeley, the former owner, 4 H. 7.

Sir John Berkeley, son of fir William, succeeding his father, died seized of King's Weston 37 H. 8. and left Richard, his son, who had livery 6 E. 6. and deceasing the same year, was succeeded by his cousin John Berkeley, son of fir William Berkeley, who was younger brother of fir John Berkeley.

Sir William Berkeley, son of fir John, sold this manor to fir William Wintour 12 Eliz. And fir Edward Wintour was seized of it 8 Jac. From the Wintours it passed by purchase to Humphry Hook, alderman of Bristol, whose son fir Humphry Hook conveyed it, in the year 1679, to fir Robert Southwell, a gentleman of great abilities and worth, descended from an antient family, seated at a place of the same name; whence they removed to Woodrising, where, and in other parts of Norfolk, they enjoy'd large estates.

Richard Southwell was eminent in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, and was by that king constituted one of the overseers of his last will.

Robert Southwell, esq; married Helena, daughter of major Robert Gore, by whom he had fir Robert Southwell, the purchaser of King's Weston.

Sir Robert Southwell married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of fir Edward Dering, of Surrenden-Dering in Kent, baronet, and had issue by her six children. He died in the year 1702, and was succeeded by his son and heir, Edward Southwell, esq;

Which Edward Southwell entered early on business, under the conduct of his father, and, like him, deservedly filled several offices of the greatest eminence in the kingdom of Ireland. He married first, the lady Elizabeth Cromwell, daughter and heiress of the earl of Ardglass, by whom he had issue Edward, who succeeded him, and Robert, Thomas, and Elizabeth, who died in their infancy. But this lady deceasing in 1709, he married, secondly, Anne Blathwayte, by whom he had issue one son, William Southwell.

Edward Southwell, the father, dying in the year 1730, was succeeded by his son and heir, the right honourable Edward Southwell, who married Catherine Watson, daughter of Edward lord Sondes, and had issue by her one son Edward, and one daughter Catherine. He served in three successive parliaments for the city of Bristol, and died in the year 1755.

Edward Southwell succeeded his father, and having been chosen one of the representatives of this county in three successive parliaments, which important trust he discharged with great ability and independency, was summoned by writ to the house of peers in 1776, by the title of baron Clifford, of Clifford in Gloucestershire. This title had been for some time in abeyance, to which he had a claim as being lineally descended by his mother from Robert lord Clifford, who was first summoned to parliament 28 E. 1. This Edward lord Clifford married Sophia, daughter of Samuel Campbell, esq; of Mount Campbell in the county of Leitrim, in the kingdom of Ireland, and dying seized of King's Weston in 1777, left issue by his lady, who survives him, four sons, viz. Edward, now lord Clifford, born in 1767; Robert-Campbell, born in 1770; Henry, and John, which two last are deceased: Also five daughters, viz. Mary, Katherine, Sophia, Elizabeth, and Henrietta, all living. His lordship bears two coats, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Argent, three cinquefoils gules, each charged with five annulets Or, for Southwell. 2d and 3d, Cheeky Or and azure, a fess gules, for Clifford. CREST. A demy goat argent, eared and gorged with a ducal coronet, and charged with three annulets in bend gules. SUPPORTERS. On the dexter side, A wivern gules; on the sinister, A monkey proper. MOTTO. LE ROY LE VEUT.

The monumental inscriptions in the clofe of this account exhibit many interesting particulars of his lordship's family, to which, for brevity sake, the reader is referred.

Thomas Mallet, esq; died seized of lands in King's Weston and Lawrence-Weston 22 Eliz. and left John his son twelve years old.

There was formerly a chapel of ease in this place, but it is now intirely demolished. The rectory and advowson of the vicarage of King's Weston belonged to the abbey of St. Augustin's in Bristol, and were granted to the bishoprick of Bristol 34 H. 8.

Bewy's-cross, of which there are still remains, stood near the side of the Severn. It was formerly held in high estimation by seamen, who paid their devotions to it on their safe landing.

2. Lawrence-Weston, so called, because the hospital of St. Lawrence near Bristol had lands there. Nicholas de Caldecot levied a fine of the manor of St. Lawrence Weston, to the use of John Bradley, and Isabel his wife, 12 E. 2. which John and Isabel levied a fine of lands in Weston St. Lawrence, Charleton, and Thredland, (i. e. The Redland) to John de Westbury, and to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to Walter, Robert, and Thomas, brothers of John, in successive fee tails, 5 E. 3. Sir William Berkeley died seized of this manor 5 E. 6. and John his son and heir had livery thereof 6 E. 6. Henry Lewis, esq; was seized of this manor in the reign of king James the First, and was succeeded therein by his son George, who died 10 C. and left William his son and heir, then seven years old. Six acres in Bishop's Moor, and other messuages and lands in Weston St. Lawrence, lately belonging to the Magdalen hospital in Bristol, were granted to John Bellowe and John Bloxholme 37 H. 8. as appears by a copy of the grant B. 2, Appendix to Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon. Here was also a chapel of ease, now demolished.

3. Redwick, which lies along the Severn, five miles from the parish church. I have already shewn from Domesday-book that this was a member of the large manor of Westbury, and that the New Passage over the Severn is in this tithing. Maurice de Gaunt died seized of the manor of Redwick, with markets and fairs, 6 H. 3. as did Robert de Gourney 53 H. 3. whose son Anselm was succeeded by John de Gourney, whose only daughter, Elizabeth, was married to John Adam, (sometimes called John de Badenham) which John and Elizabeth levied a fine of the manors of Redwick and Northwick 25 E. 1. John de Knovill held these manors 13 E. 2. and after his widow died seized of Redwick 28 E. 3. Sir John Walsh died seized of the manors of Redwick and Northwick 38 H. 8. of which livery was granted to his son, Maurice Walsh, the same year; and Nicholas Walsh died seized of them, and of Camer's Place 20 Eliz. and Henry Walsh, his son, obtained livery thereof in that year.

Reginald de Botreaux and Isabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Redwick 4 E. 3. William Stofe and Isabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Redwick and Northwick, and of a fishery called Chesyll-pill, to the use of Robert Pointz 49 H. 6. Richard Beke levied a fine of lands in Redwick and Gronen-down-hill, to Edward Veel, 1 Mar.

4. Northwick. The records concerning this hamlet are set down with Redwick. It remains to observe that here is a chapel of ease.

5. Aust. This tithing was antiently called Austre Clive, because it is situated on the south cliff of the river Severn.

There is great plenty of alabaster in the rocks all along the shore at this place, and I have seen a grinding tooth of some animal, nearly as big as a man's fist, taken out of these rocks. Here expected to have found great plenty and variety of petrifications, as others have done; but was disappointed, after a diligent examination.

Walter Mapes relates a memorable transaction at this place. Edward the Elder, says he, lay at Aust Clive, and Leoline prince of Wales at Bethley [Beachley] on the opposite shore. When the latter refused to come across the Severn, to a conference with the king, Edward passed over to Leoline; who knowing the king, threw his royal robes upon the ground, and leapt breast high into the water, embracing the boat, and saying, Most wise king, your humility has conquered pride, and your wisdom triumphed over my folly. Mount upon that neck which I have foolishly exalted against you, so shall you enter into that country which your goodness has this day made your own.' And so, taking him upon his shoulders, he made him upon his robes, and joining hands did him homage.

Domesday-book says, 'Turstin the son of Rolf holds five hides in Auftreclive of the land of this manor,' i. e. of the manor of Huesberie. William Ruffel held the manor of Aust 4 E. 2. and Roger de Acton was seized thereof 35 E. 3. John Semish, esq; and Margaret his wife, and Stephen Hatfield and Isabel his wife, levied a fine of one moiety of the manor of Aust to the use of sir Maurice Berkeley of Uley, 15 R. 2. And sir Thomas Brook and Joan his wife levied a fine of the other moiety of that manor, and of lands in Coats near Aust, 15 R. 2. Sir Thomas Brook died seized of the manor 5 H. 5. and Joan his widow died seized thereof, and of Coats near Aust, which she held in dower, 15 H. 6. It is probable that she had married sir John Stradling, for he and Joan his wife held the third part of the manor of Aust, in right of dower 15 H. 6. Thomas Chedder was seized of the manor of Aust and of Coates 21 H. 6. and John Semish held Aust 16 E. 4. The manor of Aust belonged afterwards to the Dennises of Durham, and passed to the Capels. Sir Giles Capel married Isabel, one of the daughters and heirs of Richard Newton, esq; son of sir John Newton, and died seized of Aust 3 Mar. and was succeeded by his son sir Henry Capel, who dying without issue, Edward Capel his brother had livery 5 Mar. Sir Edward Capel, with Humphry Capel, and Roger Capel, esq'. sold this manor to John Browning, of whose family it went by purchase to sir Samuel Astrey, in the year 1652. Sir Samuel devised it to dame Elizabeth his widow, who gave all her estates between her three surviving daughters, and upon a partition, this manor fell to the youngest daughter, Arabella countess of Suffolk, who devised it to sir John Smith, baronet. His son, sir John Smith, dying in 1741, without issue, devised his estate to his three surviving daughters and coheirs, who, in 1750, sold this manor to sir Jarrit Smyth, baronet, who sold it to the reverend Staunton Degge, late of Over, and Mrs. Almot is the present lady of this manor.

Livery of Aust-passage, alias Haman Hay, was granted to Elizabeth Randoll 15 Eliz. It was purchased by sir Samuel Astrey, and has since passed to the manor of Aust. There is a neat chapel for this tithing. See Inscriptions and Benefactions.

6. Stowick, which lies in the marshy part, along the banks of the Severn. The low grounds near the river were antiently called Salt Marsh. John Stoner died seized of lands in Salt Marsh 9 E. 2. and did his son John de Stoner 28 E. 3. and Edward de Stoner of the last John 5 R. 2. and John son of Edward 13 R. 2. Sir Ralph Stoner held the same lands 18 R. 2. and Gilbert de Stoner, son of Robert, died seized of the same 3 H. 5. Sir Edward Seimour, son of Edward duke of Somersset, and lady Catherine his wife, levied a fine of lands in Salt Marsh 1 E. 6.

7. Aylminton, alias Elminton. Four hides in Almintune belonged to the lordship of Berkeley at the time of the general survey. John Musgrove was seized of this manor 3 E. 1. John Blount held the manor of Aylminton in Henbury 22 H. 6. as did Wentlyn his widow 32 H. 6. and Edward Blount, esq; and Simon his son and heir were seized of it respectively 8 & 16 E. 4. Sir John Smyth was lord of this manor, whose coheirs sold it in the year 1749, to sir Jarrit Smyth, baronet, who is the present lord of the manor of Aylminton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Bristol, worth about 80*l.* a year. The presentation to the vicarage is alternate in the heirs of sir John Smyth, baronet, and the heirs of Thomas Edwards, esq; Mr. Gardiner is the present incumbent. The church was appropriated to the see of Worcester, and the advowson of the vicarage was in that bishoprick before the reign of king Edward the Sixth.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It consists of the nave and two ailes, with a handsome altar-piece railed in, and a large tower at the west end, containing six bells and a clock. Lands worth 60*l.* a year are given to keep it in repair.

She lived a conspicuous Example

Her Piety was without Hypocrisy,
Her Charity without Ostentation,
And her Hospitality without Extravagance.
Such was her amiable Disposition,
And such her unbounded Benevolence,
That she was alike respected and beloved

By the Rich and Poor.
Her Liberality still remains
In her pious Bequests

To the Parish of LONG ASHTON
And to the Parish of HENBURY.

She left respectively the Sum of Ten Pounds for ever.

Near this Tablet are intomb'd the Remains of JOHN SAMPSON, Esq; (Son of EDWARD SAMPSON, of this Parish, Gent.) who departed this Life on the twenty-first of December 1753, in the 6th Year of his Age. After the usual Time dedicated to his studies, at the College of St. JOHN in OXFORD, He was affianced in Marriage to MARY, Daughter and Coheirefs of NICHOLAS JACKES, Esq; Alderman of the City of Bristol; by whom he had the four Sons and two Daughters; none of whom survived the period of Minority, except JOHN, who deceased at the Age of twenty-eight: And EDWARD, who in Remembrance of an indulgent Father, erected this Monument.

Plain is the Tale unvaried Life affords,
And such an artless narrative records.
Yet think not all of human glory springs
From Camps, from Senates, or the Pow'r of Kings.
True Wildom oft avoids the Pomp of State,
Serene, collected, in an humbler Fate.
There too fair deeds & Joys unmixt are known,
While Virtue seeks no Trophies but her own.

At bottom are these arms, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Argent, a cross flory between four escallops sable; 2d and 3d, Gules, a fess undy between three fleurs de lis Or.

The remainder of the revenue to be employ'd in maintaining blue-coat boys at the school. To this charity Mr. Christopher Cole made a considerable addition, as already express'd in the memorial for him. There are now about ten or twelve boys cloathed and maintained in this school.

Robert Sandford, esq; in the year 1759, gave 1500*l.* to establish a school to teach poor children to read and write; and a further sum of 100*l.* out of the income of which the minister is to give 20*s.* a year in bread to the poor, and the residue is appointed for two sermons, on Good-friday and St. Thomas day, for ever.

HEWELSFIELD

IS a small parish in the hundred of St. Briavel's, six miles distant north-east from Chepstow in Monmouthshire, seven south from Colford, and twenty-four south-westward from Gloucester.

It is situated on high ground, in the forest of Dean, and enjoys a healthy air and a variety of soil. It was considered as a part of Lidney 9 E. 1. when the sheriff made a return of all the hundreds and vills in the county of Gloucester.

The inhabitants claim the privileges of the dutchy of Lancaster, to which they pay a certain sum annually; and they have common of pasture and of wood in Harthill.

The name has been variously written in different ages, as Huwaldesfield in the time of king Edward the First, Huersfelde, Huelsfelde, and Huetsfield about the reign of queen Elizabeth, and, in the latter ages, as it stands at the head of this account. It has been suggested, that it was occasioned by some general (I suppose either Briton or Saxon) of the name of Huer, or Huel, or perhaps Huwald, very antiently obtaining a victory upon this spot; because, it is said, the names of places ending in field have commonly been given them upon such an occasion. But if this opinion should have any weight as to other places, it cannot be applied in the present case; for the name of this place does not appear to be Huwaldesfield, but Hiwoldesfield, about the time of the conquest; and dividing it into Hiwoldes Town, it becomes easy and intelligible to every body.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

What I have asserted concerning the orthography of the name will be justified by the following extract from the antient survey, where, among the estates belonging to William the son of Baderon, it is thus recorded:

'The same William holds Hiwoldestone in Ledenei hundred. Ulfeg held it in the time of king Edward. There are three hides. By the king's order this estate is in the forest. It is worth 30s.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

Walter Wither was seized of Hawaldsfield 54 H. 3. John de Monemuta was afterwards seized of this estate, and gave lands in this parish, called the Vineyard, and a meadow called the Vineyard-meadow, together with 100s. rent, to the hospital of the holy Trinity in Monmouth, which he had founded. Dugd. Monast. And it appears by an inquisition taken 4 E. 1. that Hualdesfield had escheated from John de Monemuta to the crown, and that the king had then given it to the abbat of Tintern in free alms.

The abbey of Tintern held this manor till that house was dissolved.

By an inquisition taken at Wotton-under-edge, Feb. 4, 4 E. 6. after the death of Henry earl of Worcester, it appears that he died, Nov. 26, 1549, seized of Hewelsfield, and of 82 messuages, three mills, 1000 acres of plowed land, 70 of meadow, 1000 of pasture, 600 of wood, 500 of heath and turf, and 20l. 8s. rent in Brockwere, Wolvelton, Almington, Alveston, Hewelsfield, and Modeigate with the fisheries in the Wyc called Plomwery, Ashwere, Ithelwere, and Walwere; and the rectory of Walwere, and advowson and vicarage of the same; the manor of Tiddenham, and divers messuages, lands and tenements in Stow and Widdow.

Hill.]

Widden, Bisten, Bettesley, and Sudbury, all in the county of Gloucester. The duke of Beaufort is the present lord of the manor.

John Calmer and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Huedfield, to John Maddox, sen. and to John Maddox, jun. 21 H. 7.

Thomas Symonds, of Pengethly in Herefordshire, esq; has a good house and estate in this parish, which his ancestor, Robert Symonds, purchased of the daughters and coheirs of sir Nicholas Throckmorton, who held the same in right of his wife, Alice, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Richard Gough, son of William Gough, eldest son of George Gough of Hewelfield, whose seat and estate it had been.

James Rooke, of Bickswear, esq; eldest son to major-general Hayman Rooke, descended from a family of long standing in the county of Kent, died about the year 1771, seized of good estates in this parish and in Woollaston, in right of his wife, Jane, only daughter of Tracy Catchmay, esq; son and heir of sir William Catchmay, by Eleanor his wife, the other daughter and coheiress of the above-named Richard Gough. And James Rooke, esq; a major in his majesty's forces, succeeds his father in those estates.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, annexed to Lidney, the incumbent of which hath all the tithes of this parish, great and small, worth 60*l.* a year.

The church is a small building, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, with the tower in the middle, and a small aisle on the north side.

Procurations 1*s.* 6*d.* Pentecostals 1*s.* 4*d.*

Benefactions.

One acre in Clay-hill, a quarter of an acre in the old orchard, an acre in the old leaze, an acre in Platnedge, half an acre in Widdon's, a quarter of an acre called Jackstries, three acres called church-mead, a piece called the Harp, a garden about a quarter of an acre, an acre at Bremel's-ard, an acre in the Rye-fields, and the church-house and garden at Brockswear, are given to the use of the poor; —two small pieces of ground, about half an acre, for keeping the church-porch in repair; and Mrs. Williams gave 20*s.* a year for eight poor widows, 10*s.* a year to adorn the church, and 5*s.* a year for a sermon on Good-friday.

H I L L

IS a small parish in the hundred of Berkeley, three miles distant south-westward from Berkeley, four north from Thornbury, and twenty-two south-westward from Gloucester.

It was called Hull, or Hill, from the elevated situation of part of the parish towards the east.

The seat of sir John Fust, baronet, is pleasantly situated on the side of that acclivity, with the river Severn in front, at the distance of about two miles to the west; of which river, and of the high lands and pendent woods of the forest of Dean on the other side, it commands an uninterrupted and most agreeable prospect for many miles.

This place was formerly dependent on Berkeley, which it even now acknowledges, by paying one shilling a year towards the great bell-rope, and the like sum towards the wall of the church-yard there.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Four hides in Hill belonged to the great lordship of Berkeley at the time of the general survey, as appears by the account of the members of that lordship. This manor was granted to Robert Fitz-Harding, ancestor of the Berkeley family.

Maurice lord Berkeley gave the manors of Hill and Nimpsfield to his brother Nicholas, and died 1 R. 1. William Berkeley, son of Roger, died seized of Hull 46 H. 3. John Fitz-Nicholas was lord of this manor 9 E. 1. His family name was Berkeley, but being the son of Nicholas, he took the name of Fitz-Nicholas. Nicholas Berkeley, son of Ralph, held this manor in the 15th year of the same reign, when a Quo Warranto was brought against him to set forth his right to privileges, and his claim was then allowed.

John Fitz-Nichols died seized of Hull 15 E. 2. John Fitz-Nichols, son of John, died seized of the manor of Hull 29 E. 3. Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols held this manor, and two plow-tillages, and a yearly rent of 20*s.* in Hull, 7 R. 2. and sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols died seized of this manor 6 H. 5. Catherine, one of his daughters and coheirs, was married to Robert Pointz, esq; by which marriage this manor was carried into the family of Pointz. Elianor, the other daughter and coheir, was married to John Browning, esq.

Sir Nicholas Pointz died seized of Hill 4 Mar. and it continued in that name and family till sir John Pointz sold it, in the reign of queen Elizabeth.

The family of the name of Pointz, or Pontz, is said to have come into England with William the Norman, or soon after. The eldest branch of that family settled at Sutton in Dorsetshire, and the male line ending with one Nicholas Pontz, his lands passed, by heirs general, to the Newborows and Fitz-James's. Leland.

Henry Fleetwood was lord of the manor of Hill in the year 1608; soon after which it passed by purchase to Richard Fust, of the city of London, esq.

esq. His son, sir Edward Fust, married Bridget, daughter of sir Thomas Denton, of Hillersden in Buckinghamshire. He was created a baronet Aug. 21, 14 C. 2. and was succeeded by his son, sir John Fust, who married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Richard Cocks of Dumbleton, and was high sheriff of this county 27 C. 2. Sir Edward Fust, his son, married Anne, daughter of Thomas Stephens, of Lypiat, esq; his second wife was Elizabeth, daughter of William Mohun, of Portishead in Somersetshire; his third wife was Catherine, daughter of Francis Mohun, of Fleet in the county of Dorset, esq; and he took to his fourth wife, Susanna, daughter of Richard Cocks, esq; of Dumbleton. By his second wife he had sir Edward Fust, who succeeded to the title and estate, but dying without male issue, they devolved to his brother Francis, eldest son of sir Edward by his third wife; which sir Francis, in the year 1724, married Fanny, daughter of Nicholas Tooker, of the city of Bristol, merchant, by whom he had eight sons and four daughters. Sir Francis died in the year 1769, and was succeeded by his son, sir John Fust, baronet, who married Miss Philippa Hamilton, and is the present lord of this manor. His arms are, Argent, upon a chevron between three hedge bills erected sable, as many mullets of the field.

By records of the following dates it appears, that Adam le Waleys died seized of one messuage and one yard-land in Hull 9 E. 2. Robert Wither granted one yard-land, twenty-nine acres of arable, and a yearly rent of 13s. 6d. in Hull, Berkeley, and Bevington, to the abbey of Kingswood, 2 E. 2. which were granted, after the dissolution of the abbey, to sir Nicholas Pointz, 31 H. 8.

William Martel held three yard-lands and 20s. rent issuing out of Hull, 14 E. 2. John de Hull held lands in this parish 16 E. 3. as did Gilbert Tynden 24 E. 3. and John Sergeant 30 & 36 E. 3. Thomas Kennet and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Hull 21 E. 3, as did Richard Forster, to John Walsh and others, 12 H. 7. Richard Tyladam died seized of lands in Hill 34 Eliz. and left two daughters coheiresses.

HAMLETS. 1. Nupdown. 2. Woodend.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a donative, in the deanery of Dursley, worth 30l. a year, in the gift of sir John Fust.

The tithes of hay in Hill and Ham, which belonged to the abbey of St. Augustin's in Bristol, were granted to the dean and chapter of Bristol 34 H. 8. to whom the impropriation now belongs.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a small chancel on the south side, built by sir Edward Fust, and since used as the burying place of the family. Over the door, within the church, is the following inscription:

To drain this parish from its during flood;
To model and repair this house of God;
Are patterns good I set to future time.
Free profit yours; y^e cost & labour mine.

Sir Francis Fust, Baronet, lord of this manor, for the benefit of its inhabitants, at his own expence, planned, built and erected, in the year 1750, the great sewer at Hill-pill, next the river, called the Imperial Draught, and the two others above it. He also, in 1759, new modelled and repaired this church. All the costs and materials for all the said works are a gift from him freely to this parish, for the use above. Let those of ability strive to do good.

At the beginning of this century, there were 40 houses, and about 200 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. If this account may be depended on, population has been much on the decline since that period. In seven years, beginning with 1766, there are entered 17 baptisms and 27 burials, in the parish register, which has been very ill kept. The houses in Hill are 32, and the present number of inhabitants exactly 146.

IS a small parish in the hundred of Tibblestone, three miles south from Evesham in Worcester-shire, eight west from Campden, and twenty-three north-eastward from Gloucester.

The parish lies in a rich vale country, and consists almost intirely of pasture land, whence it is sometimes called Hinton on the Green.

A little river, which comes from Wormington, runs by this village, and falls into the Avon at Hampton, near Evesham.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In the year 981, Elfrede, sister of king Ethelred gave Hynetune to the church of St. Peter at Gloucester, to pray for her soul; and the king, at her request, exempted it from all secular charges.

Under the head Terra S. Petri de Glowec' in Domesday-book, is thus recorded :

'The same church holds Hinetune in Tetboldef-tanes hundred. There are fifteen hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and thirty villeins, and seven bordars, with sixteen plow-tillages.
There are eleven servi, and one foreigner. It was worth 3*l.* now 10*l.* This manor is free from tax, and from attendance on any court but that of the church.' Domesday-book, p. 71.

The abbey of Gloucester was seized of the manor of Hinton, with markets, fairs, court leet, and free warren, and their right was allowed in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

In the year 1156, it was adjudged in the county court of Gloucestershire, that the manor of Hine-tune being time out of mind free from all charges, therefore it ought to be free from fines for murder.

The abbey continued in possession of this manor till the general dissolution, when it came to the crown, and was granted, with the advowson of the church, to sir Edward Worth 36 H. 8. Thomas Barners was afterwards seized of the manor, and left an only daughter and heiress married to Thomas Baker, who was seized of it in right of his wife; and sir Thomas Baker was lord of the manor in 1608.

The manor came afterwards to sir John Hanner, who sold it to sir Robert Jason. His widow held it in jointure, and was afterwards married to sir Christopher Aires; and surviving him, was married, thirdly, to David Warren, esq; who, in her right, was lord of the manor at the beginning of the present century.

About the year 1739, Joseph Swayne, of Bristol, esq; married the widow of a succeeding sir Robert Jason, and became possessed of the manor of Hinton, which he sold, together with the Jason estate, to the reverend Dr. Stephens, who bequeathed it to his brother Philip Stephens, esq;
the present lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 120*l.* a year. Philip Stephens, esq; is patron, and the rev. Mr. Stephens is the present incumbent.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the abbey of Gloucester. The bishop of Gloucester has two thirds of the great tithes.

Four acres of meadow, eight of pasture, and the third of the great tithes belong to the rector.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, consists of the nave only, and has a handsome embattled tower, with five bells, at the west end.

In the year 1740, an old grave-stone being removed, the following mutilated inscription was found on the under side :

IS a small parish in the hundred of Berkeley, two miles north from Bristol, nine south from Thornbury, and thirty-four south from Gloucester. It consists mostly of rich pasture land.

One of the heads of the little river Trin, or Trim, rises in the north west part of this parish, and runs down to Westbury, (from this brook called Westbury upon Trim) and thence into the Avon, about three miles below Bristol.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

When Domesday-book was compiled, this was a member of the great lordship of Berkeley, as may be seen in the copy of that record, p. 68.

Robert Fitz-Harding, the first lord Berkeley of his family, gave the manor of Horfelle to the abbey of St. Augustine's in Bristol, which he himself had founded. And the abbat's claim to court leet in this manor was allowed in a Quo warranto, 15 E. 1.

At the dissolution of religious foundations, the manor and rectory were granted to the bishoprick of Bristol 34 H. 8. And the bishop of Bristol is the present lord of this manor.

Roger, the son of Roger, was seized of eight acres of arable in Horfield 3. E. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the diocese and deanery of Bristol, formerly worth only 8*l.* a year to the curate. But in the year 1718, it was augmented by the queen's bounty, and the joint donations of Edward Colston, and Thomas Edwards, esq". The bishop of Bristol is patron and impropriator.

The church is a small building, with a low pinnacled tower at the west end, and affords nothing worthy of observation.

At the beginning of this century, there were

H O R S L E Y.

THIS parish is in the hundred of Longtree, three miles distant south-west from Hampton, four north from Tetbury, and fourteen south from Gloucester. It is bounded on the east by Avening, on the west by Nimpfield, on the north by Woodchester, and on the south-west by Beverstone. Here is a market on Saturday, now almost disused.

The name signifies a woody place. It is derived from hýrre, a Saxon word for wood; and lei, contracted from leza, a place; and the present condition of the parish justifies the propriety of the name, for a considerable part of it is still in woodland.

There are in this parish, more especially where some of the houses are built, several dingles and narrow bottoms, with hanging woods, and verdant steep, which give it a romantic appearance, not easily to be described. By the highway, towards the top of that part where the houses are, next to Avening, I observed two or three small springs, ouzing out of the side of the bank, pretty strongly tinged with iron mine.

The cloathing business hath encouraged great numbers of families to settle here, but that manufacture declining of late, the poor are very burthensome, for want of employment; but much of their wretched condition is owing to idleness and bad habits.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The church of St. Martin of Troars holds 'Horsley' in Langetrew hundred, by the gift of 'king William. Goda, sister to king Edward, 'held it. There are ten hides. There are four 'plow-tillages in demean, and six villeins, and 'five bordars, with six plow-tillages, and one 'radchenister. And there is a house in Gloucestre of 6*d.* [rent]. There is a mill of 50*d.* 'It was worth 12*l.* and is now worth 14*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 73.

It appears by the escheator's inquisition, taken i R. 2. that this manor was exchanged with the prior of Bruton for lands in Normandy belonging to that priory, 45 E. 3.

After the dissolution of religious foundations, the manor of Horsley, with lands called Crainmere, were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 33 H. 8. and after his attainder, sir Walter Dennis had a grant of it 7 E. 6.

Richard Stephens died seized of this manor 41 Eliz. as appears by the escheator's inquisition the same year; where it is said that this Richard settled Chavenyde-farm on his wife Anne, one of the daughters of John Stone, haberdasher of London, 35 Eliz. This manor and estate have continued ever since in the same name and family. The reverend Mr. Robert Stephens, of Chavenage, is the present proprietor of them. His arms, and some account of his family, may be seen under Easington. Chavenage hath been variously written, as Chavenyde, Thevenage, &c. and may be so called from its situation on the borders of the parish of Avening, q. d. Aven-edge.

Sir Walter Dennis was seized of lands in Horsley and Thevenage 28 H. 8.

TITHINGS. 1. Tichmor-end. 2. Nup-end. 3. Barton-end. 4. Nailsworth.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stonehouse. The rectory was antiently appropriated to the priory of Bruton. In the year 1380, the bishop of Worcester, at the request of the prior, appointed twelve marks a year to be paid to the vicar of Horsley, by the said priory, as appears by the antient register of that diocese; and the vicar now receives 8*l.* a year of the impropiator. In the year 1733, the vicarage was augmented by the benefaction of Paul Castleman, esq; and queen Anne's bounty, which, together, make the present value about 45*l.* a year, besides a house called Rockness, lately purchased for the vicar. Lord chancellor is patron.

The rectory coming to the crown at the dissolution, was granted to sir Walter Hungerford 6 Eliz. It is now the property of Mr. John Selve, and is worth about 80*l.* a year. The prior of Bruton had a seat here, of which little more than the gate-way remains. There was also near the church, a building called the chapel, now reduced to ruins.

The church is large, with an aisle on the south side, and a handsome tower at the west end, adorned with pinnacles and battlements. It is dedicated to St. Martin. There is also a small aisle on the north side, called St. George's chapel.

Benefactions.

The reverend Mr. Henry Stubs gave 20*l.* the interest of which to be laid out in New Testament for the poor.

Mr. Walter Chambers, in the year 1714, gave 10*l.* the interest of which to buy bread for the poor.

Mr. Edward Webb gave 200*l.* to the charity school in this parish.

* Sir William Dugdale, by mistake, makes this Horsley to be in Essex. Tom. i. p. 604. Tom. ii. p. 1002.—Hurst in the parish of Berkeley is written Hirflege in Domesday-book, which occasioned sir Robert Atkyns, by a like mistake, to place an account of that large farm to this parish of Horsley.

" The priory of Bruton in Somersetshire was founded in the year 1005, by Aldgar earl of Cornwall, for Benedictine monks, who were afterwards changed to Black Canons. It was raised at the dissolution at 480*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.*

According to fir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his history, there were 300 houses, and about 1200 inhabitants in this parish, of whom 18 were freeholders; yearly births 22, burials 20. But from an examination of the parish register, it appears that in a series of ten years, from 1718, where the register begins, to 1727 inclusive, there were 296 baptisms, and 248 burials. And in a like series, from 1760, to 1769 inclusive, there were 423 baptisms, and 414 burials. Upon which it is to be observed that the inhabitants have increased greatly between these two periods of time; but we cannot make any tolerable judgment of the number of them from the burials, because there are in this parish and neighbourhood three meeting houses, of different denominations, at two of which they administer baptism, and there is sepulture at all of them.

H O R T O N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Grumbald's-ash, two miles distant north-east from Chipping Sodbury, four south-east from Wickwar, and about twenty-seven southward from Gloucester.

About half the parish lies in the vale, and consists of pasturage, with an extensive common; the other part is situated on the side of a hill, and on a lofty plain above, where the soil is lighter, but produces good corn. On the brow of the hill facing to the west, there are the intrenchments of a camp, called the Castles, overlooking the vale country to a very considerable extent. The camp is of a square form, supposed to be Roman, but I cannot learn that either coins or instruments have been found near it, by which it may be determined of a certainty to what people it belonged.

Mr. Paston has a large, antient seat, close to the church, where his ancestors have resided ever since the year 1710, upon their mansion-house at Appleton, in the county of Norfolk, being intirely burnt down in the year 1708.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Robert de Todeni holds Horedone in Grimboldestou hundred. There are ten hides taxed. Ulf held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eleven villeins, and eight bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There are seven servi, and a mill of 6s. and twenty acres of meadow; a wood two miles long, and one broad. It was worth 12l. now 7l. Domesday-book, p. 76.

Richard de Abbingdon was lord of this manor 9 E. 1.

William Kayleway and Alice his wife levied a fine of the manor of Horton to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to the heirs of Alice in special taille, the remainder to the right heirs of Thomas de Bradestone, 19 E. 3.

Thomas de Bradeston died seized of Horton 34 E. 3. as did Agnes his widow 43 E. 3. and Thomas Bradeston his son 48 E. 3. Ela the widow of Thomas de Bradeston died seized of the manor of Horton 11 H. 4.

Thomas Burton and William his son levied a fine of Horton to the use of Thomas Burton, son of William, in special taille.

This manor afterwards passed to William Knight, esq; prothonotary of the Common Pleas, who built the large manor house. Edward Paston, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, and Clement Paston, esq; is the present lord of the manor of Horton.

But there were two reputed manors in this parish; for Agnes, who had been the wife of Hubert de Ria, and Henry her son, gave the manor of Hortun to the church of Salisbury, in the time of Richard Powr, bishop of that see; and it was annexed to a prebend of the same, of which Ralph de York was prebendary; who set forth his claim to free warren and court leet within the manor of Horton, in his answer to a writ of Quo warranto brought against him 15 E. 1. and his claim was allowed. The same manor continued in that prebend 'till king Edward the Sixth granted it to Edward duke of Somersset, who being attainted, it was afterwards granted to Clement Paston, esq; and the manor and prebend of Horton, and the advowson of the rectory, were again granted and confirmed 1 Mar. This manor was formerly known by the name of Horwood. The manerial rights of the whole parish now belong to Mr. Paston, whose descent and arms are exhibited under Monumental Inscriptions.

Sir Walter de la Pool, and Elizabeth his wife, were seized of Draycot's Place, in Horton 12 H. 6. William earl marshal and earl of Nottingham, levied a fine of lands in Horton 3 H. 7. Certain lands in Horton, called Frayres-bay, which belonged to the commandery of the knights-templers at Quenington, were granted to John Bellowe 38 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 130l. a year, having the great and small tithes of the whole parish, except of Horwood estate, called the demesnes, for which a modus of 2l. 13s. 4d. is paid in lieu of all tithes, as I was informed by the late Mr. Paston, who sold the right of presentation some years since for three lives, to John Unwin, of Took's Court, London. Mr. Edward Draper is the present incumbent. Thirty acres belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It hath an aisle on the north side, which Mr. Paston repairs, Reginald de Gray purchased a charter of free warren in Hunteley, and all his lands in Gloucestershire, 53 H. 3. Robert Sapye, or de Sapy, was lord of Huntley, with free warren, 9 & 11 E. 1. and died seized thereof 20 E. 2.

Richard lord Talbot, of Goderick-castle in Herefordshire, (whose ancestor, Richard Talbot, came into England with the Conqueror) married Elizabeth, one of the daughters and coheireffes of John Comyn, of Badenagh, of the blood royal of Scotland, and with her had the manor of Huntley, of which he died seized 30 E. 3. Elizabeth, his widow, survived him, but dying soon after, this manor descended to Gilbert lord Talbot, son of Richard, who died seized of Huntley and Longhope 10 R. 2 leaving Richard lord Talbot his son and heir, who died seized of Huntley, Longhope, Leigh, and Lidney 20 R. 2. Gilbert lord Talbot, son of Richard, on the death of his mother, had livery of a fourth part of this manor 1 H. 5. Dugd. Bar. He died seized of the above-mentioned manors, and of a moiety of the manor of Badgworth, and of a third part of those of Painswick, Moreton-Valence, and Whaddon, 7 H. 5. leaving Ankaret, or Anchoret, his only daughter and heirefs, who dying at the age of four years, 9 H. 5. John lord Talbot, brother of Gilbert, and uncle to Anchoret, so famous for his victories in France, as to be esteemed the Achilles of England, was her heir. He was created earl of Shrewsbury 20 H. 6. and was slain* by a cannon shot, at the siege of Chastillon in France, July 20, 31 H. 6. and died seized of the before-mentioned manors which had belonged to his father and brother. He was succeeded in title and estate by his son and heir, John, second earl of Shrewsbury, who took part with the house of Lancaster, and was slain at the battle of Northampton, July 10, 1460.

John, third earl of Shrewsbury, died seized of all the before-mentioned manors 13 E. 4. Catherine, his widow, survived him, and had this manor assigned her in part of dower 15 E. 4.

George, fourth earl of Shrewsbury, son of the last John, died 30 H. 8. and was succeeded by his son Francis, fifth earl of Shrewsbury, who had livery of this manor the same year, and dying 32 Eliz. was succeeded by Gilbert his son, the sixth earl of Shrewsbury, who died seized of Huntley, and other manors in Gloucestershire, 14 Jac. leaving three daughters coheireffes.

Elizabeth, his second daughter, was married to Henry earl of Kent, who had for her share the manor of Huntley, and other estates in Gloucestershire, which must have been settled on him and his heirs, otherwise they would have descended to the issue of Gilbert earl of Shrewsbury; for the above Henry earl of Kent dying without issue in 1630, the manor of Huntley came to Anthony Grey, the next heir male of his family, who died seized of it, leaving Henry earl of Kent his son and heir. He died in the year 1644, and was succeeded in honour and estate by Anthony his son and heir. Henry duke of Kent, son of Anthony, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century.

The manor came not long afterwards to John Hopkyns Probyn, esq; and Edmund Probyn, esq; is the present lord of the manor of Huntley, and resides at Newland. His arms are, Ermine, on a fess gules a lion passant Or.

Thomas Rawlings and his wife levied a fine of lands in Huntley to William Baynham 8 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the Forest deanery, worth about 60*l.* a year. Mr. Morfe is patron and incumbent.

Wienochus de Monemut gave the chapel of Huntley to the monks of the church built by him in his castle of Monmouth, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Florence de Salurmo. Dugd. Mon.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptist, has a tower at the west end, and a small chancel.

The church house, and some lands, worth together about 4*l.* a year, are vested in feoffees, and the produce distributed to the second poor.

IS a tithing and hamlet in Icombe, of which the chapel and the greater part of the place is in Worcestershire; but the hamlet of Icombe lies in the hundred of Slaughter, and constitutes a part of the county of Gloucester. It is distant two miles south-eastward from Stow, ten northward from Northleach, and twenty-six north-eastward from Gloucester.

It had been long accounted extraparochial, and not subject to the orders of the magistrate touching

* When the body of the earl of Shrewsbury, the Achilles of England, was found, after the battle of Chastillon upon Dordon, by his herald, who had worn his coat of arms, he kissed the body, and broke out into the following dutiful expressions: Alas! is it you? I pray God pardon all your misdoings. I have been your officer of arms forty years or more, 'tis time I should surrender it to you. And while the tears trickled plentifully down his face, he disrobed himself of his coat of arms, and threw it over his master's body, which was the accustomed rite performed heretofore at funerals. Collins, from Anstis.

the maintenance of the poor, &c. But on a late trial in the court of king's bench, it was adjudged to be a vill to all intents and purposes, a constable having been always appointed for it by the lord of the hundred and leet of Slaughter.

The name, contrary to vulgar usage, should be written with one [C] only. It is the same in sound and signification with the British Ycwm, i. e. the valley, and is descriptive of the situation of the place, in a fine valley, on the side of the river Evenlode, which separates it from Worcestershire.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, Icombe in Gloucestershire included a much larger district than the hamlet so called at present; for there were then three manors of the name of Icombe, two of which have since exchanged it for that of Westcot. The third is thus described in the record:

'Durand of Glowec' holds Iccumbe, and Walter holds it of him. There are two hides taxed. Turstan held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and two villeins, and two bordars with one plow-tillage, and six between the servi and ancilla. It was worth 30s. now 40s.' D.B. p. 76.

In obedience to the king's writ, the high sheriff of Gloucestershire returned the names of all the villis within the said county, by which it appears that the fourth part of the vill of Icombe was in the hundred of Salmonsburye, and that Thomas de Icombe was lord of the same fourth part 9 E. 1. Several different manors passing by the same name in the records occasions confusion, and renders it impossible to distinguish one from the others. I have therefore set down the subsequent records as I find them in sir Robert Atkyns's account, notwithstanding some of them may be misapplied.

Elias de Icombe died seized of Icombe 5 E. 3. John earl of Kent was seized of it 26 E. 3. and Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, held Combe near Stow (probably Combe-Baskerville, in Westcot) 2 H. 4. Elizabeth, widow of John earl of Kent, held the manor of Icombe in part of dower, and died seized thereof 12 H. 4.

Robert Whitney died seized of Icombe 33 H. 8. and Robert, his son, had livery granted to him 37 H. 8. as had James Whitney, son of the last Robert, 9 Eliz.

The estate, consisting of the hamlet of Icombe, came afterwards to colonel William Cope, of the family of the Copes of Oxfordshire and Berkshire. He was succeeded by his son and heir colonel Henry Cope, who held it at the beginning of this century. Mr. Hopton and Mr. Gregory are the present proprietors of it. The large mansion-house of the Copes is now in decay, and occupied by one of the farmers.

Sir Robert Atkyns, with diffidence, appropriates the following particulars to this place, which, however, have no relation to Icombe in Gloucestershire, viz. Certain lands therein, and the advowson of the rectories of Icombe and Sodbury were reputed a manor, and did belong to the monastery of Worcester, and after its dissolution, were granted to the dean and chapter of Worcester 33 H. 8. The manor of Icombe, and a yearly rent of 8l. formerly belonging to the bishoprick of Worcester, were granted to the chapter of Windfor 1 E. 6. Another record mentions the manor of Icombe, lately belonging to the priory of Worcester, to have been granted to the chapter of Worcester 6 Jac.

The inhabitants of this hamlet have the use of one aile in Icombe chapel, which lies in Worcestershire, but is within the deanery of Stow.

KEMERTON.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, four miles distant north-eastward from the town of that name, seven north-westward from Winchcombe, and fourteen northward from Gloucester.

It is situated in the vale of Evesham, with Beckford to the east, Overbury and Breedon in Worcestershire to the north and west, and Tredington to the south of it; and is reputed to be within the jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Gloucester.

The name is variously written, as Caneberton, Chenemertone, and Chinemertune, and is of uncertain derivation. It may signify either the chief farm, from chen, or kyn, which is augmentative, and berton, a farm; or the town at the great or strong camp, from chen, as before, beorg, a camp, and ton a common termination; or it is resolvable into the British word Cwmru, and ton, that is, the Briton's town.

Breedon-hill, celebrated by Drayton for its proud situation in the bosom of the vale, not far from the Avon, is remarkable for its fine pasturage, and fertile corn fields. And as part of it lies in this parish, it is proper to take notice of the camp on the top, which appears to be Roman, from the many coins that have been found there, of which a country-man gave me the four following:

1. IMP. CARAVSIVS P. F. AVG. Reverse, a female figure, with an olive branch in her hand. Legend, PAX AVG.

2. IMP. MAXENTIVS P. F. AVG. Reverse, a soldier sitting in a temple. Legend, CONSERV. VRB. SVAR.

4. IMP.

4. IMP. LICINIVS P. F. AVG. Reverse, a soldier. Legend, obliterated.

On the brow of the hill, near the camp, stands a stone of a prodigious magnitude, which the people of that neighbourhood call Benbury-stone, placed there, without doubt, to commemorate some signal event; but time has totally defeated the intention, and left us no part of its history beside the name, which signifies the stone at the top of the hill, or head of the camp.

The curious natural productions of this village consist of fossil shells, particularly of the muscle kind; and I am informed that the astroites have been found in some parts of the parish.

Mr. Parsons has a very good house here, where he resides.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday-book, reciting the particulars of the large manor of Tewkesbury, has this passage:

'Brictric the son of Algar held this manor in the time of king Edward. He had in his time the subsequent estates of other thanes under his authority:

'Let held eight hides in Chenemertone, and they were a manor. Now Girard holds them, and has three plow-tillages there, and fourteen villeins, with four plow-tillages. There are eight servi, and three mills of 15 s. [rent]. It was worth 8 l. now 6 l.' Domesday-book, p. 68.

'Leuwinus held half a hide at Chinemertone, which Girard now holds.' and which was appurtenant to the manor of Derherst.

'Eluwinus held half a hide at Chinemertone, which Baldwin the abbat holds.'

'Beside these, Girard the chamberlain holds eight hides in Chenemertone, and three hides in Botingtune, which always paid tax, and did other services in Derheste hundred; but after Girard had them, they neither paid tax nor did service.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

The manor of Kemerton was held of the Clares and their successors, earls of Gloucester. William, son of Gerald, was seized of Kenemerton, with markets, 2 H. 3. Robert Musgrove died seized thereof 38 H. 3. as did John Musgrove 3 E. 1. and Robert Musgrove 9 E. 1. leaving Hawise his only daughter and heir, then married to sir William Mortimer, a younger son of Roger earl of March, who in her right had livery of the manor 10 E. 1. But it seems she was twice married, for some authors mention her as the wife of John de Ferrers, baron of Chartley.

The manor of Kemerton belonged afterwards to Thomas earl of Arundel, whose sister and heiress, Joan, carried it in marriage to William Beauchamp, lord Bergavenny, who dying 2 H. 4. she surviving him, was seized thereof at the time of her decease 14 H. 6.

Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, son and heir of William and of Joan, left Henry, afterwards duke of Warwick, his son and heir, who dying at twenty-two years of age, and leaving an infant daughter, who survived him but a short time, his sister Anne became his heir; but Cecily, his widow, held this manor for life, in part of her dower. The said Anne was married to Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury and of Warwick, by whom she had two daughters. Isabel, the eldest, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth. By virtue of an act of parliament which deprived the mother, he, in right of his wife, died seized of this manor 17 E. 4. But Anne countess of Warwick was afterwards restored to her right, with a sinister design, by king Henry the Seventh, to whom she was obliged to pass away this manor, and her other great estates, 3 H. 7. and died soon after.

Sir Robert Willoughby, lord Brook, married Elizabeth, one of the daughters and coheiresses of sir Richard Beauchamp, by Elizabeth, daughter of sir Humphry Stafford. She survived him, and died seized of Kemerton 6 H. 8. and livery thereof was granted to Edward Willoughby, their son and heir, the same year. He left three daughters coheiresses; Elizabeth, married to Fulk Grevil; Anne, who died unmarried; and Blanch, married to sir Francis Dautry. Anne, the second sister, dying soon after, livery of a moiety of a third part of the manor of Kemerton was granted to Francis Dautry and Blanch his wife, 25 H. 8.

The manor of Kemerton was afterwards granted to Thomas Hewes and Margaret his wife, and to their heirs in special taille, 4 Mar.

Livery of the manor of Kemerton was granted to Richard Ligon 9 Eliz. Sir Arnold Ligon and Thomas Hewes, esq; were lords of this manor in 1608. John Parsons, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and dying in 1721, was succeeded by his son, John Parsons. He died in 1759, and was succeeded by his son, John Parsons, esq; the present lord of this manor. His arms are, Azure, a chevron ermine between three trefoils argent.

Aston upon Carant is a tithing in the parish of Ashchurch, but is within the constablewick, and part of the tithing within the manor of Kemerton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 300 l. a year. The corporation of the city of Gloucester are patrons; the rev. Mr. Godfrey Goodman is the present incumbent.

Godfrey Goodman, bishop of Gloucester, May 8, 1638, granted the advowson of the church of Kemerton to the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester, who reconveyed the same to the bishop for his life.

On the vacancy of the rectory, the corporation of Gloucester are to enquire of the corporation of Ruthyn in Denbighshire for a relation of bishop Goodman's, to be presented to this living. If there there should be none, then the living to go to a son of the mayor of Gloucester, or of the senior alderman.

The rector, on the sealing of his presentation, pays 10*l.* for a dinner at St. Bartholomew's hospital in Gloucester, to which the bishop must be invited. He likewise pays two quarters of wheat yearly, to the treasurer of that hospital, for the poor people there, in the week before Easter.

Alicia de Bello Campo presented to this church in the reign of king Edward the Third.

The church is large, with an aisle on each side, and a low pinnacled tower at the west end, in which are six very musical bells.

K E M P L E Y.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Botloe, in the forest division of the county, five miles north-west from Newent, six southward from Ledbury in Herefordshire, and fifteen north-westward from Gloucester.

It is of a middle size, bounded on the north by Dimmock, on the south by Oxenhall, on the east by Pauntley, and hath Herefordshire on the west. It possesses an agreeable variety of ground, with easy slopes, and bolder acclivities, which however rise not into hills. Something more than half the parish consists of meadow, pasture, and orcharding; the rest is arable and woodland, where the oak grows with uncommon vigour.

Here the arable lands are planted with rows of fruit-trees, with large intervals between; for the soil of these parts produces a rich and pleasant cider, which is a principal object with the farmer. What has been said of Dimmock is equally applicable to Kempley. These places, with Preston and Oxenhall, make a district of rich country, in the neighbourhood of Herefordshire, with which the produce is nearly the same, and the methods of cultivation similar to those in use in that fine county, as mentioned under Dimmock.

Stonehouse, in this parish, is a seat of the antient family of the Pindars, where they resided at the beginning of the present century; but it hath long since been occupied by the tenant of the principal farm. Indeed the foundrous and impassible condition of the public roads, in the winter, is an insuperable objection to a gentleman's residence.

The air is said to be pure and healthy; and it is remarked, in Dr. Parsons's account of this village, that no native had ever been known to have either gout or stone; and that no person had died in Mr. Pindar's house within the memory of man, notwithstanding there were near fifteen or twenty in family great part of the time, to the year 1703. Perhaps cider, which is here the common liquor, may be a preservative from the above-mentioned disorders.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Roger de Laci holds Chenepelai in Botelau hundred of the king. Edric and Luric held it for two manors, in the time of king Edward, and could go where they would. There are three hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and ten villeins, and seven bordars, with twelve plow-tillages. There are seven servi. It was worth 4*l.* now 100*s.*' Domesday-book, p. 74.

Henry de Grey held the manor of Kempley in the reign of Richard the First. John de Grey, second son of Henry, was seized of it 9 E. 1. and was succeeded in this estate by his son Reginald, who died 1 E. 2. leaving John de Grey^x, his son, forty years old. John died 17 E. 2.^z seized of Kempley, which he held in capite by the service of half a knight's fee, and left Henry de Grey, his son and heir, who died seized of this manor 16 E. 3.^y Richard Grey held the manor of Kempley 22 R. 2.

John Abrahall, esq; was seized of the manor of Kempley 3 E. 4. William Pigot died seized of it 7 E. 6. leaving Edward his son forty years old, who had livery granted to him the same year. Henry Pigot, son of Edward, left Anne, his only daughter and heiress, married to Henry Finch, who, in her right, was seized of Kempley in the year 1608, and died in 1631. Francis Finch, son and heir of Henry, married Jane, daughter of Dr. Thornborough, bishop of Worcester, and left John Finch his son and heir.

The manor was soon afterwards purchased by sir Thomas How, of the family of that name at Compton. And from him it passed, in the same manner, to Reginald Pindar, esq; who was lord of the manor when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. Thomas Pindar, esq; died in 1722, and Reginald-Pindar Lygon, of Maddersfield in Worcestershire, esq; is the present lord of the manor. His arms are, Argent, two lions passant guardant in pale gules.

antiently, for there is still in being a lease from them, to Ralph Dragun and Emma his wife, of all their land in Kenepeleya, which Henry Hythenard sometime held of them, at the rent of three cranocs [half quarters] of wheat, and two quarters of oats.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, worth about 60*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Hereford, as guardians of the hospital of Ledbury, are patrons; Mr. Bourn is the present incumbent.

The vicar has the great tithes, except of Prior's-court, which is subject to the repair of the chancel, and is held under the hospital of Ledbury.

The church is small, with a small spire at the west end, in which are three bells. The church-yard is near an acre of ground, and intirely planted with apple trees.

K E M P S F O R D

IS a parish of a middle size, in the hundred of Britwel's-Barrow, four miles south-westward from Leachlade, nine eastward from Cirencester, and twenty-five south-eastward from Gloucester.

The river Coln enters this parish on the north side, from Fairford, and running through it, falls into the Thames, which, at this place, is a boundary between Gloucestershire and Wiltshire.

The name was antiently written Chenemesford. Chene, or Kyn, is of extensive signification, as strenuous, bold, valiant; and in composition, great, principal, chief; mer signifies the sea, or some large water, and mere is also a boundary: The name therefore signifies the Ford of the principal river, or great boundary, as the Thames may be very properly called in this part of the country.

Some topographers have taken this for the ford through which Ethelmund, general of the Wiccian army, passed to give battle to Werstan earl of Wiltshire; but by Higden's account of that transaction, who says, Ethelmund leaving his own territories, marched out as far as the ford Chimeresford, it appears that this could not be the place; for all Gloucestershire lay in Wiccia. Besides, it is most probable, from other circumstances, that it was at Cummerford, near Calne in Wiltshire, for near that place are remains of large intrenchments, which seem to put the matter out of doubt.

About half the parish is rich meadow and pasture, and the other part very good arable land; but it affords nothing curious in natural history.

Henry duke of Lancaster resided here in the reign of king Edward the Third, where his only son came to an unfortunate end, which determined the duke to leave the place; and his horse casting a shoe at his departure, the inhabitants nailed it to the church door, where it remains as a memorial of that event at this day.

The family of the Thynnes have also honoured this village with their residence for many successive generations, one of whom built the antient manor house near the church, which was very large and handsome, but is now uninhabited, and in a very ruinous condition.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

‘Hernulf de Hefding holds Chenemesforde in Brictuoldeberg hundred. There are twenty-one hides taxed. Osgot held it of earl Herald. In demean are six plow-tillages, and thirty-eight villeins, and nine bordars, and one radchenister, with eighteen plow-tillages. There are fourteen servi, and four mills of 40s. and 40d. rent, and 9l. from the meadows beside the pasture of the cattle, and from the sheep-fold 120 weight of cheefe. In Glouuec seven burgeses paying 2s. In the time of king Edward it was worth 30l. now 66l. 6s. 8d.’ Domesday-book, p. 77.

This manor was the head of an antient barony, called the barony of Kenemesford or Kenesford; and Hannington, and a moiety of Inglesham, both lying in Wiltshire, and Etloe in Awre, were members of it.

About the end of the reign of king William the First, Ernulf de Hefding conveyed this manor to Patrick de Chaworth, who was one of the Cadurci in France, and therefore sometimes called de Cadurcis. Which Patrick granted three water-mills in Kynemesford to the abbey of Gloucester 20 W. 1. and the grant was confirmed by William Rufus. Patrick, his son, gave a water-mill called Horcote, with the lands adjoining, and the tithes of the meadows of the said village, to the same monastery, when William was abbat. He paid 6l. upon levying of scutage for the redemption of the king out of captivity 6 R. 1.

Pain de Chaworth, son and heir of the last Patrick, married Gundred, daughter and heir of William de la Fert, and was buried in the chapter house of the abbey of Gloucester. Patrick the Third, son of Pain, being under age at his father's death, paid 500l. for his own wardship and marriage, 23 H. 3. He married Hawise, daughter and heir of Thomas de London, lord of Ogmere and Kidwelly in Wales, and obtained a grant of markets and fairs in Kempsford 28 H. 3. and died seized of Radene, and of the barony of Kenesford, 42 H. 3. His son Pain being then only thirteen years of age, his mother purchased his wardship at 1000 marks. Pain, with his two brothers, attended prince Edward in the Holy Land 54 H. 3. and died without issue 7 E. 1.

Patrick the Fourth, brother to the last Pain, succeeding him, married Isabel, daughter of William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and died 11 E. 1. leaving Maud his only daughter and heiress. Isabel, his widow, surviving him, held the manor of Kempsford in dower. She being soon after married to Hugh le Despencer, without the king's licence, this manor was seized by the crown, and granted to Ela countess of Warwick 15 E. 1. but Isabel was restored upon payment of 2000 marks. After the death of Isabel, the manor came to Maud, her daughter by her former husband: She was married to Henry, afterwards earl of Lancaster, nephew to king Edward the First, who joined with his elder brother, Thomas earl of Lancaster, and other barons, against king Edward the Second, to expel the Spencers. Thomas earl of Lancaster was taken prisoner, and beheaded at Pontefract for treason, and Kempsford, with all the other estates of Henry, was seized by the crown 15 E. 2. and granted to Roger Boyfield the same year. Upon the dethroning of king Edward the Second, Henry succeeded to his brother's honour, and had restitution of this manor, of which he died seized 19 E. 3. leaving Henry, his son and heir, afterwards created duke of Lancaster. He resided some time at Kempsford, but taking a dislike to the place, on account of the unfortunate death of his only son; he granted the manor of Kynemesford, one third of Chedworth, Hanendon [Hannington in Wiltshire] a moiety of Inglesham, and other lands, to the collegiate church of St. Mary the Less in the castle of Leicester, for the maintenance of a hospital there, called Newark, or New-work, of which he was the founder, 28 E. 3. The dean and college of Leicester purchased a grant of free warren in Kynemesford and Chedworth 30 E. 3. and continued possessed of this manor till the general dissolution of religious foundations.

King Edward the Sixth, in the third year of his reign, granted this manor to sir John Thynne, (descended from sir Geoffery Boteville, as mentioned under Bagendon) a very eminent person, who was at the battle of Musselburgh, and was knighted in the camp before Roxburgh in Scotland, by the duke of Somerset, to whom he was secretary, and received the Scotch lion as an addition to his arms. He built a noble mansion at Longleate in Wiltshire, said to be the first well built house in England, which was finished in the year 1579, at the expence of 8016l. 13s. 8d. besides the timber and stone, which were his own. He married, first, Christian, daughter of sir Richard Gresham, lord mayor of London, and sister and heir to sir Thomas Gresham, who founded and endowed Gresham college, and built the Royal Exchange in London, with whom, it is said, he had estates to the amount of 2000l. a year, and by by her had issue three sons and eight daughters. His second wife was Dorothy, daughter of sir William Wroughton, by whom he had five sons, and dying May 21, 1580, was buried at Deverel-Langbridge in Wiltshire.

Sir John Thynne, eldest son of sir John, by his first wife, had livery of this manor on the death of his father, and married Joan, daughter of sir Rowland Hayward, with whom he had Causcattle, the manor of Stretton-hall in Shropshire, and other lands to the value of 1000*l.* a year. He was knighted by king James the First, May 11, 1603, and died in 1606, according to sir Robert Atkyns, (but Nov. 21, 1604, according to Collins) and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Thomas Thynne, who was lord of this manor in 1608. He married, first, Mary, daughter of George Touchet, lord Audley; and secondly, Katherine Howard, granddaughter of Thomas viscount Bindon, by whom he had three sons and one daughter, and died in 1639.

Sir Henry-Frederick Thynne, second son of sir Thomas, had this manor given him by his father. He married Mary, one of the daughters of Thomas first lord Coventry, and was created a baronet July 15, 1641, by king Charles the First, in whose cause he was a great sufferer, being obliged to pay 3554*l.* composition, besides settling lands of the value of 200*l.* a year, as the sequestrators directed. He died in 1680, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Thomas Thynne, created baron Thynne of Warminster, and viscount Weymouth, in 1682. By the death of his uncle, sir James Thynne, without issue, and of his cousin Thomas Thynne, esq; who was murdered by the procurement of the Count Conningsmarke, he succeeded to their great estates. He married lady Frances Finch, eldest daughter of Heneage, second earl of Winchelsea, and died in 1714.

Thomas, second viscount Weymouth, great nephew to the above Thomas, succeeded him in honour and estate. He married, to his second wife, lady Louisa, daughter of John earl of Granville, and died in 1741, leaving Thomas, third viscount Weymouth, his son and heir, who sold this manor to Gabriel Hanger, afterwards lord Coleraine, whose widow is the present lady of the manor of Kempford.

HAMLETS. 1. Dunville.

2. Horcote. Richard Forster levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Horcote 12 H. 7.

3. Welford. What sir Robert Atkyns has said concerning this hamlet, relates to the parish of Welford.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, worth 230*l.* a year. The bishop of Gloucester is patron; Mr. Price is the present incumbent.

Ernulf de Helsing gave the advowson of this church to the abbey of Gloucester, and the grant was confirmed by king Henry the First. The abbey had likewise the impropriation of Welford, which, together with the advowson, was granted to the bishoprick of Gloucester 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church is large and handsome, with a lofty well built tower in the middle, in which are six musical bells. At the four corners of the tower, within, are these arms. 1. Three chevronels, for Clare earl of Gloucester. 2. A Gauntlet within a bordure. 3. A cross floy. 4. Three lions in pale, in chief a label of three points, for Henry duke of Lancaster.

LANTHONY.

THIS place lies in the united hundreds of Dudſton and King's-barton, adjoining to the south side of the city of Gloucester, and is accounted one of the south hamlets. It is extra-parochial, and obtained its name from the famous monastery of Lanthony that stood there, of whose original and foundation the following is a short account.

At Ewias, in the north part of Monmouthshire, is a solitary place, among woods, rocks and vallies, where St. David, bishop of Menevia in Pembrokeſhire, (which from him obtained the present name of St. David's) built a small chapel and cell, in the sixth century, and lived many years retired from the world, by the side of the brook Hotheni; which place, from the name of the bishop, and of the little river, the Britons called Llandeuui Nanthotheni; that is, the church of David on the brook Hotheni, and in process of time, the name was corrupted to Lanthony.

After the death of St. David, this place was desolate and uninhabited. But in the year 1103, Hugh de Laci, an English nobleman, going a hunting that way, with many knights, gentlemen, and attendants, was led into that valley, and one of those knights, of the name of William, admiring the solitude, and seeing a chapel already built, took a resolution to forsake the world, and devote himself to an hermetical life there. And having lived some years in that manner, he became so famous for his austerity and holiness, that Ernesi, who was chaplain to queen Maud, and a person of considerable account in the court of king Henry I. took a journey to visit him; and being highly pleased with his holy conversation, and place of retirement, became his associate.

These two holy men having spent some time together, mutually encouraging and strengthening each other in pious habits, Hugh de Laci took them into his special protection and favour, and enabled them to build a small church, which was consecrated by Urban, bishop of Landaff, and Rameline, bishop of Hereford, anno 1108, and dedicated to St. John Baptist, the patron of the hermits. The same person granted them some of his large farms for their maintenance; but they, preferring little before too much, accepted what they thought just necessary, and pre-emptorily refused the rest.

Having found so good a benefactor, they began afterwards to think of taking others into their holy society, which William was averse to at first, but at length yielded to the persuasions of Ernesi.
 And with the advice and approbation of Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury, a monastery was founded of the order of the canons regular of St. Austin, which order they chose, because those canons were satisfied with the most moderate subsistence, were most esteemed for their charity, and wore the most decent habit without affectation of sanctity.

They now invite divers persons, fearing God, out of the eminent convents of Moreton, the holy Trinity at London, and Colchester, to be brethren at Lanthony, and being thus increased to the number of forty or more, choose Ernest for their first prior. The strict rules, and solemn devotion which he kept up in his monastery, made the great men of the kingdom, and even the king and queen themselves, desirous of the prayers of this holy congregation; and hence the monks found many benefactors, who conferred more lands and revenues on them than they would receive.

Robert de Beton succeeded upon the death of Ernestus, and some time afterwards was translated to the bishoprick of Hereford.

Robert de Braci succeeded him. In his time the convent was much infested and ravaged by the Welch, whereupon, applying to the bishop of Hereford for advice and protection, the bishop resigned his palace to them, and maintained them at his own charge for two years, (some few only excepted, who would not leave the place of their conversion and profession.) But the intestine disturbances continuing in that part of the nation, the bishop applies to Milo earl of Hereford, the king's constable, on behalf of the distressed monks of Lanthony, reminding him of his father's devotion, who lay buried in their monastery; and so prevailed with the earl, that he gave them a place near Gloucester, called the Hide, where they built a church and monastery. This place they called Lanthony, from their former seat, and this was the original of the place of which I am to give an account. The church was consecrated by Simon, bishop of Worcester, and Robert, bishop of Hereford, anno 1136, and dedicated to St. Mary the virgin. From this time, the following persons were priors:

William of Wycombe, who had been chaplain to Robert bishop of Hereford, occurs prior in 1137. He was a man of profound learning, and had published in writing The whole Tyranny and malicious Proceedings of Milo earl of Hereford, who for some time violently persecuted the church and church men, for which he was punished with excommunication. This made him odious to Roger earl of Hereford, the patron of the monastery; and besides, he was disliked by the monks of his own house, on account of his great austerity; wherefore he resigned his government, and retired with one canon to Freme, for the remainder of his life.

Clement, the sub-prior, being chosen in his room, governed the monastery for many years.

Roger de Norwich, sub-prior, succeeded next. He presided in 1178, and was succeeded by Geffry de Henelawe, a clerk of great fame, who had lived in the service of Robert Harding, at Bristol, and was much celebrated for his skill in physick. He was preferred to the see of St. David's in the year 1203, whereupon Matthew was elected to this dignity, who, in the year 1214, was made abbat of Bardney, in the county of Lincoln.

John occurs prior anno 1218, and dying in 1240, Godfrey succeeded him, and resigning in the year 1251,

Everard was elected prior. After him, Martin; and then

Roger de Godestre; and after him

Walter, in the year 1285; and John de Chaundos, anno 1289. To whom, I judge, (says Mr. Willis) succeeded

Stephen; and to him,

Philip, by some called Peter; then

David, whose successor was

Thomas de Gloucester. He resigned in 1301, and was followed by one

John, occurring anno 1310. After him are found Simon Brockworthe, Edward St. John, and

William Cheritone. Then succeeded

William de Penebury, and

Tho: Elinham, who presided anno 1415.

Henry Dean, who presided here in the time of king Edward the Fourth. He was first made bishop of Bangor, and afterwards, in 1502, archbishop of Canterbury.

Edward Forest succeeding, governed in 1513, and had, it is presumed, for his successor, Richard Hempsted, whom A. Wood calls Hart. He, with William Nottingham, and twenty-one others, subscribed to the king's supremacy, Sep. 2, 1534, and on May 10, 1539, with the like number of monks, signed the surrender, and had a pension of 100*l.* per ann.

This monastery was valued at the dissolution at 748*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.*; but according to sir William Dugdale, at 648*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.* At first, this was only a cell to the former monastery in Monmouthshire, and was so confirmed by king John, who was a considerable benefactor to it, and made them large grants of land by charter, confirmed to them 18 E. 2. But king Edward the Fourth, in the twentieth year of his reign, united these two monasteries of Lanthony by his charter, making this near Gloucester the principal, and obliging these monks to maintain only a residentiary prior and four canons in the old priory to say masses, which prior was removable at will; and thus the monastery of Lanthony in Monmouthshire became a cell to this near Gloucester.

In the year 1553, there remained 20*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in annuities, and the following pensions, viz. To Will. Henlowe, John Ambros, David Matthew, alias Kempe, 8*l.* each. John Kellom, Will. Worcester, George Dean, Richard Westbury, Will. Abington, Will. Barrington, 6*l.* each. John Hempsted, Maurice Berkley, Will. Byford, Will. Presbury, 4*l.* each. Willis.

Many descendants of the great family of Bohun, earls of Hereford, and lords of Brecknock, were buried in the church of this monastery, viz. Margery Margery de Bohun, eldest daughter of Milo earl of Hereford, and patroness of this monastery. She was married to the lord Humphry de Bohun, steward to king Henry the First, and died in 1187. — Humphry de Bohun, the fourth of that name, (son of Margery) and Elianor his wife. — Henry Bohun the Good, earl of Hereford, and Maud, his wife, daughter of the earl of Ewe, and Alice her daughter. — Humphry de Bohun, the fifth of that name, who died in 1275, and Maud de Avenbury his wife. — The ashes of all these great persons, and many more, lie buried in the ruins of Lanthony; and it is to be lamented, that the noble tombs designed to preserve their memory, were ruined and destroyed soon after the dissolution. Of the monastery itself there are very few remains, besides a large gateway, upon which are the arms of the noble family of the Bohuns, who were great benefactors to the priory.

The scite of this monastery, and the adjoining lands, were granted to sir Arthur Porter 32 H. 8. and Thomas Porter had livery of this estate 1 Eliz. who dying in the 40th year of that reign, left Arthur Porter, his son, then thirty years old, on whom he had settled the capital messuage or scite of the late priory of Lanthony, with lands in Hempsted, as expressed in the inquisition after his death, taken by the king's escheator the same year. But sir Robert Atkyns has it, that Thomas Porter left an only daughter, married to sir John Scudamore, ancestor to lord viscount Scudamore, of Ham Lacy in Herefordshire, who was the proprietor of this estate when sir Robert drew up the account of it. The honourable Charles Howard the younger, in right of his wife Frances Fitzroy Scudamore, is the present proprietor of Lanthony, and patron of the vicarage of Hempsted.

This hamlet, at the dissolution of monasteries, was exempted from the payment of tithes, as having been the demesne lands of the priory of Lanthony. But John lord Scudamore, in the year 1662, generously annexed all the tithes of Lanthony to the rectory of Hempsted, which was confirmed by act of parliament, and has improved that rectory to a very considerable amount.

A ground called Long Madely, and other lands belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to the city of Gloucester 34 H. 8. Other lands called Madely, belonging to the said priory, were granted, the same year, to Thomas Bell.

Richard the priest of Hatherleya, about the time of king Henry the Third, gave to the priory of Lanthony by Gloucester 220 marks, that they should every day give ten loaves, called the loaves of Dudestan, to the poor of St. Bartholomew's hospital, which were to be of the same corn, weight, and quantity as the loaves were which the brethren of the upper hospital of Dudestan received of them, or sixpence in lieu thereof.

Anne, widow of Thomas earl of Stafford, and daughter of Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester, by will dated 16 Oct. 17 H. 6. bequeathed 100 marks, and 20*l.* yearly for twenty years, to this church, where she was buried.

For the several grants and confirmations to this priory, see Appendix, N^o. 18, 19, 20, 21.

L A S B O R O U G H.

THIS is a small parish, in the hundred of Longtree, in the Cotswold country, five miles east from Wotton-underedge, five west from Tetbury, and nineteen south from Gloucester. The lands are chiefly in tillage, and produce very good crops of corn.

A small stream rises here, and after joining another from Boxwell, runs down to Berkeley, and afterwards into the Severn.

Lesseberge, the antient name of this place, signifies the smaller camp, or fortification, so called in respect to some larger work in the neighbourhood, which, from its vicinity, I conjecture to be the Chestles, in the parish of Kingscot, where was a Roman lodgment, upon which this smaller post, or Lesse-berge, depended.

A few years since a monumental stone was turned up by the plow, in Bowldown-field in this parish, with the following inscription, communicated to me by Mr. James Dallaway, then resident at Bristol. There is no date of the year upon the stone, but by the two first letters, which are to be read Diis Manibus, it appears to have been before the establishment of christianity in this country, and consequently is of great antiquity. The three first letters of the second line are supposed to be the initials of the person's name, and ICENA denotes her to be one of the people called Iceni, who inhabited Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire. One letter, if not more, is broken off from her age, which might be either XXIII, XXXIII, or LXIII. There were several stones, with inscriptions of the same kind, found at Cirencester, as mentioned in the account of that antient place. The memorials are supposed to be for persons who died when the Romans were in these parts, tho' the time cannot be precisely determined, for want of dates.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday-book this manor is thus described:

' Hugo Maminot holds Lesseberge in Lange-trew hundred of Gislebert bishop of Lisieux. ' Leuinus held it. There are five hides. In ' demean is one plow-tillage, and five villeins, and ' a priest, with two plow-tillages. There are seven ' servi. It was worth 10*l.* now 50*s.*' D. B. p. 73.

The manor antiently belonged to a family that took their name from the place, for William de Lasseburge died seized of it 45 H. 3.

William

William de Dene died seized of Lassebergh, which he held of Hugo le Despencer by the service of one knight's fee, 12 E. 2. Escheat.

John Basset had a confirmation of a grant of free warren in Lasseburge 28 E. 3. and died seized of the manor 36 E. 3. John Basset, son of John, died seized of the manor of Lasseburge, and of the advowson of the church, 7 R. 2. as did John Basset, son of the last John, 21 R. 2. leaving Margaret, his daughter and heiress, married to Walter Brown, who, in her right, became seized of Lasborough.

Thomas Perry levied a fine of the manor of Lasborough 5 Mariæ, and Thomas, his son, had livery granted to him 7 Eliz.

The manor afterwards came to the Estcourts. Walter Estcourt, esq; was lord of the manor when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. It came next to Thomas Estcourt, whose only brother, Edmund, succeeded him, and left one daughter, Anna-Maria, married to Thomas Earl, of Malmesbury, esq; since deceased; but he bequeathed the bulk of his large fortune to Thomas Estcourt, esq; son of Matthew Estcourt, of Cam, in this county, who is the present lord of this manor, and has a large old house here, and a park adjoining, of considerable extent, part of which lies in the parish of Newington Bagpath.

Lands in this parish belonged to St. Catherine's chantry in Campden, and were granted to sir William Ryder 7 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Dursley, worth about 60*l.* a year, in the gift of Thomas Estcourt, esq. It is a free chapel, but takes institution from the bishop of Gloucester. The chapel and the rector's house are inclosed in the park.

LASSINGTON.

THIS is a small parish, in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, eight miles south from Tewkesbury, eight eastward from Newent, and about two miles north-westward from Gloucester.

The parish lies on a point of land between the Severn and Leaden, and consists principally of rich meadow and pasture, with some very good arable land. Part of the village lies on a rising ground, on the bank of the Severn, from which situation it most probably took its name, which in Domesday-book is written Lessedune, and signifies the smaller bill, as it might with propriety be called, in comparison of Circesdune, on the other side of Gloucester, which then belonged to the same proprietor.

On the side of the hill, in this parish, are found little star stones, called astroites, of a greyish colour, and formed by nature of a very curious pentagonal shape. They are from one to three inches in length, with a star-like appearance at the ends, striated from the center to the circumference. They break uniformly into lamina, about the thickness of a halfpenny, in a transverse direction, as tho' at so many joints, for which reason they have been supposed to be a petrification of some marine animal; but the more general opinion is, that they are a species of coral. When put into vinegar, it is said they have a motion for a considerable time; but I don't affirm this from my own knowledge, having never made the experiment.

Part of Lassington is in the parish of St. Mary de Lode, in Gloucester.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Ulchetel held Lessedune in Langebrige hundred, a manor of two hides. Now Roger holds it of Thomas the archbishop [of York]. This estate pays tax. In demean is one plow-tillage, and five villeins, and two bordars, with three plow-tillages. There are three servi, and twenty acres of meadow. It was worth 40*s.* now 30*s.* Domesday-book, p. 70.

The family of Muchegros, or Musgrose, was very antiently seized of lands in this parish, for it appears from the deeds and evidences belonging to St. Bartholomew's hospital in Gloucester, that Walter de Muchegros gave to the brethren and sisters of that hospital, two cranocs [eight bushels] of oats, payable at Michaelmas for ever, out of his barn at Lessedune. William de Musgrose died seized of Lessendun 49 H. 3. John Mone-mothe died seized of Lassington 9 E. 1. according to sir Robert Atkyns; but in the sheriff's return of all the vills in this county, the same year, it is said, Lassington, et ejusd. ville est d'na Abbacia de Helyon. Walter Helvin died seized of the manor of Lassington 16 E. 3. John Cooffe, or Coaffe, or Cove, held Lassington 32 E. 3. and was that year found to be an idiot, and died 36 E. 3. John Pyrie, parson of Staunton next Cors, Thomas de Beverstone, and John Godwell, who probably had a claim to the manor in right of their wives, as heirs of Cooffe, had livery granted to them 37 E. 3. and obtained a licence from the king, to grant a third part of the manor of Lassington, with all the lands and appurtenances thereto belonging, and a third part of the advowson of the church, to the abbey of Gloucester.

The manor came soon afterwards to Thomas Raleigh, who died seized thereof 21 R. 2. as did his son, Thomas Raleigh, 6 H. 4. and was succeeded ceeded by his son, Walter Raleigh, who died 8 H. 5. Edward Bromfleet and Joan his wife, daughter of William Raleigh, levied a fine of the manor of Lassington to the use of themselves in special taille, 5 H. 6. William Raleigh, esq; and Elizabeth his wife, and John Oldney, and Idonea his wife, levied a fine of a moiety of this manor to the use of Edward Bromfleet for his life, the remainder to William Raleigh, and his heirs, 28 H. 6.

Sir John Scudemore was seized of this manor; but being attainted for treason, in the beginning of the reign of Edward the Fourth, the manor came to the crown, and was granted to sir Richard Herbert, and his heirs males, 4 E. 4. It afterwards belonged to William Whorwood, esq; lord of the manor of Hawling, who dying 37 H. 8. left two daughters, whereof Anne was married to Ambrose Dudley, Margaret, the other daughter, was married to Thomas Throgmorton, who, with Margaret his wife, had livery of a moiety of the manor 3 Mariae.

Edward Cook, of Highnam, esq; was lord of this manor when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it, and his family had been for some time possessed of it. William Cook was son and heir of Edward, and dying unmarried, was succeeded by his brother Dennis, who leaving no male issue, the manor came to his two sisters. One of them was married to Roynon Jones, esq; the other to Henry Guise, esq; whose son, John Guise, of Highnam, esq; purchased Mr. Jones's moiety, and is the present lord of this manor.

That part of Lassington which lies in the parish of St. Mary de Lode, belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, by the gift of John Pyrie, &c. as before related, and was granted to the bishoprick of Gloucester 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth about 32*l.* a year. John Guise, esq; has two turns in the presentation, and the bishop of Gloucester has the third. Mr. Philips is the present incumbent.

Eight acres belong to the glebe.

The rectory formerly belonged to St. Augustin's abbey, and it now pays 8*s.* to the dean and chapter of Bristol. It appears by the visitation of the archbishop of York, in 1618, that this church was a peculiar.

In the taxation of ecclesiastical preferments 9 E. 1. it is said, Porcio prioris S. Oswaldi in eccles. de Lassyndon 8s.

The church is a small building, with a low dean tower at the west end.

In the year 1562, there were 10 householders in this parish. When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it, there were 10 houses, and about 45 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 1, burials 1. But the present number of souls is only 33.

ONE part of this place lies in the hundred of St. Briavel's, in Gloucestershire, the other part is in Herefordshire. It is distant two miles north from Mitchel-Dean, six south from Newent, and twelve west from Gloucester. The church lies about a quarter of a mile on the left hand of the great road from Gloucester to Hereford.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The bishop of Constance holds Lega, in Letberge hundred, and Robert holds it of him. Algar held it in the time of king Edward. There is one hide taxed, and two plow-tillages in demean, and three bordars, and two servi, with one plow-tillage. It is worth and was worth 20*s.*' Domesday-book, p. 71.

Richard Talbot had a grant of the manor of Lea, (or Leigh, as it is sometimes called) with a weekly market on Wednesday, and a yearly fair on St. Bartholomew's day, 21 E. 3. Richard Talbot, of Castle Richard, died seized of the manor 43 E. 3. as did sir Gilbert Talbot 20 R. 2. John Talbot, the great earl of Shrewsbury, held it at his death 31 H. 6. and was succeeded in this estate by his son, John Talbot, second earl of Shrewsbury, who was slain at the battle of Northampton 38 H. 6.

John Throckmorton died seized of this estate 13 E. 4. and Philip Throckmorton died 5 H. 8. seized of 30 messuages, and land in Lea, of which William Throckmorton, his son, had livery the same year. Richard Hameline was lord of this manor in 1608. Maynard Colchester, esq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century, and Maynard Colchester, of Westbury, esq; a descendant from him, is the present proprietor.

Thomas de Bruge and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Lea, and in the bailiwick of Dean, to the use of themselves in special taille, the remainder to Richard Curle, 5 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the Forest deanery, annexed to Linton in Herefordshire. The small tithes only belong to the curate. It has been augmented with the queen's bounty. Mr. Westphaling is patron. The bishop of Hereford has the impropriation.

The church is dedicated to St. John Baptist. It is a handsome building, with a double roof, supported by pillars in the middle. It has a handsome handsome spire at the west end, and a small chancel by the side of the greater.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, six miles distant west from Farringdon in Berkshire, about nine south from Burford in Oxfordshire, twelve east from Cirencester, and twenty-nine, thro' the last-mentioned town, from the city of Gloucester.

It consists of rich meadow and pasture-ground, with some arable land. There is a small market-town of its own name, seated within it, whose market on the Tuesday is at present but little frequented.

The river Thames waters it on the south and east sides, and divides it from Wiltshire and Berkshire. The Lech also, one of the little rivers from the Cotswold country, directs its course thro' the north side of the parish, which takes the one half of its name from that river, and the other from the old Saxon word, labian, to empty, because here the Lech empties itself into the Thames.

The last-mentioned river is navigable at this place for barges of forty or fifty tons burthen, but the want of water one part of the year, and long continued floods at other times, render the navigation extremely uncertain, and notwithstanding it leads to the metropolis, 'tis not so beneficial to the town as might be supposed, because it cannot be depended on for the general conveyance.

The junction of this river with the Severn has been long talked of, but the execution of that project, on a good plan, is rather to be wished than expected. A late application to parliament on behalf of the Stroud-water canal, brought this scheme anew into contemplation, and the country was slightly surveyed in the year 1775, in order to extend the canal from Stroud to Cricklade, where the Thames is first navigable; but what purpose can such a junction answer, unless the navigation of that river were improved?

The great road from London to Cirencester, and other places westward in that line, leads through the town of Leachlade, and is very much travelled. That part of it which was formerly obstructed by floods, about a mile eastward of the town, is now so much raised and improved, that travellers may pass commodiously at any time. Mr. Bufching, in his Geography, pretends to have found traces of a Roman way from this town to Cirencester, but I am convinced that none but himself ever dreamt of any such thing. The Roman road, which was the great one in use for about a thousand years after the Romans left Britain, from the west of Gloucestershire, and part of South-Wales to London, led through Cirencester, and Cricklade, and so to Wallingford; and it was not 'till after king Henry V. built a bridge at Abingdon, and the roads were greatly repaired thereabout, that this through Leachlade was much frequented; and then the towns of Cricklade and Wallingford, which before drew great advantages from travelling, began to decline.

Here are two fairs in the year, one on the 10th of August, for horses and other cattle; the other on the 9th of September, chiefly for cheese, and great quantities are brought hither, but nothing like so much as formerly. The latter is held in a meadow, near the bridge which belonged to a small priory in this place, dedicated to St. John, wherefore 'tis called St. John's-bridge fair; and the bridge, which stands over the Thames, is repaired by the lands formerly belonging to the priory.

This priory was founded by Richard earl, of Cornwall and Sencia his wife, and confirmed by king Henry III. who gave to the brethren there the hermitage of Lovebury, in the forest of Whichwoode, on condition that they should provide a chaplain to celebrate mass daily in the said hermitage. It was dedicated to St. John Baptist. King Edward IV. in the 12th year of his reign, granted the patronage and advowson of it to his mother Cicely, dutchess of York, with licence to change it into a chantry of three perpetual chaplains, to celebrate divine offices daily at the altar of our lady, in the church of Lechelade, who should be a body corporate, and have power to purchase land, and have a common seal. By the same deed, the king granted liberty to John Twynniho of Cirencester, to found another chantry at the altar of St. Blase, in the same church, for one perpetual chaplain, to whom the fore-mentioned three were allowed to grant a yearly rent of ten marks. In the reign of king Henry the Seventh, Underwood, dean of Wallingford, procured two of the three priests to be removed thither. John Lece, the last incumbent of Blaise chantry, had a pension of 5*l.* in the year 1553.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following particulars are extracted from the public records:

' Henry de Fereres holds Lecelade in Britwell's-barrow hundred. Siward a baron held it. There were fifteen hides, which paid tax in the time of king Edward, but that king granted that six hides should be quit from tax, as all the county witnesseth, and he that keeps the seal. There are are four plow-tillages in demean, and twenty-nine villeins, and ten bordars, and one stranger holds the land of one villein. They have among them all sixteen plow-tillages. There are thirteen feroi, and three mills of 30s. and a fishery of one hundred and seventy-five eels; from the meadows 7*l.* 7*s.* besides hay for the cattle. In Wicelcumbe two burgages pay 16*d.* and one in Gloucester without assessment. In the time of king Edward the whole manor was worth 20*l.* and so it is now likewise.' Domesday-book, p. 77.

In our antient books is the following fabulous account of the descent of Siward. The daughter and heiress of a great earl, of the royal blood of Denmark, walking in a wild forest, was ravished by a bear, and bore a son with ears like a bear. This son of a bear succeeded his mother in the earldom, and was father of Siward, who quits Denmark, and arrives in England, where he is kindly received by king Edward the Confessor; and upon a quarrel with Tofti earl of Huntingdon, he slew him, and carried his head to the king, who in reward gave him the earldom of Huntingdon and Northumberland, and made him governor of the northern counties, which were much infested by the Danes.

The above Henry de Ferreres, or de Ferrariis, was son of Guicheline de Ferriers in Normandy. His chief seat was at Tutbury in Staffordshire. He was succeeded by his son Robert de Ferrers, who was created earl of Derby 3 Steph. and died the year following, leaving Robert his son and heir. William de Ferrers, son and heir to the last Robert, married Margaret, daughter and heir of William Peverel of Nottingham, by whom he had two sons; Robert, the eldest, who succeeded him in the earldom of Derby, and Walcheline, his younger son, who had the manor of Leachlade. Hugh Ferrers, his son and heir, dying without issue, left Isabel his sister and heir, married to Roger Mortimer, progenitor of the earls of March, and grandson of Ralph de Mortimer, who came in with William the Conqueror, and behaved with great courage in the battle of Hastings. She doing her duty, had livery of the manor of Leachlade to John. It is probable that she was married a second time to Peter Fitzherbert, for he obtained licence to erect a gate on the causeway at Leachlade-bridge, com. Glouc. before the hospital there founded by him; and dying 19 H. 3. Isabella his wife had livery* of the lands of her inheritance, particularly of the manor of Leachlade. She is said to have founded a nunnery at Leachlade, but of that house I find no farther particulars.

This manor came to the crown, and was granted by the king to his brother Richard earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans, and to Sencia his wife, and the heirs of their bodies, 36 H. 3.

Edmund earl of Cornwall, son of Richard, was seized of it 4 & 15 E. 1. and dying 28 E. 1. without issue, the manor of Leachlade reverted to the crown, and was granted, by king Edward the First, to Richard Talbot the younger, and Elizabeth his wife; which Richard was son of Richard Talbot, who had married Joan, one of the daughters and coheirs of Hugh de Mortimer.

But upon the revolution of public affairs, in the turbulent reign of king Edward II. this manor was granted to Hugh le Despencer the younger, who being soon after attainted and executed, it was again granted, 1 E. 3. to Edmond of Woodstock, earl of Kent, second son of king Edward the First; and he being attainted and executed at Winchester 4 E. 3. the manor was granted to Jeffry de Mortimer, and the heirs of his body, the remainder to Roger Mortimer and his heirs.

John earl of Kent, son of Edmond, being restored, died seized of this manor 26 E. 3. But Elizabeth, the widow of John earl of Kent, and daughter of the duke of Juliers, held this manor in dower, and had a confirmation of fairs and markets in Leachlade 18 & 22 R. 2. and died seized of this estate the 10th, or according to some accounts 12 H. 4.

After her death, the manor of Leachlade descended to her husband's heir, who was Edmond Mortimer, earl of March, son of Elianor Holland, sister and heir to John the last earl of Kent, by her husband Roger Mortimer, earl of March. Edmond Mortimer, earl of March, died seized of the manor of Leachlade 3 H. 6. leaving Joan, one of his sisters and coheirs, then the widow of sir John Grey, who died seized of it, and of the advowson of the church 4 H. 6. This manor was granted to Cicely dutchess of York, for life, 38 H. 6. and again confirmed 1 E. 4. She died 10 H. 7.

The manor and town of Leachlade were afterwards made part of the dower of Catherine, queen to king Henry the Eighth; and after her death, they were granted to Dennis Toppes and Dorothy his wife 4 E. 6. in exchange for the manor of Rockholts, and other manors in Norfolk, reserving a rent of 27*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* to the crown.

The manor and town of Leachlade were granted to Robert Bathurst, esq; 4 Jac. Robert Bathurst, son of Robert, died under age, seized thereof 3 C. and left Edward Bathurst his brother and heir, thirteen years old. Edward Dadge, esq; was seized of this manor, (by what means I cannot learn) and gave it to sir Edward Bathurst, baronet, who died seized thereof in 1674. He was a person of great loyalty to king Charles the First, and paid a composition of 720*l.* for his sequestered estate. Lawrence Bathurst, esq; son of sir Edward, died in 1670, and left two daughters coheires; one married to Mr. Coxeter, the other to Mr. John Greening, whose descendants sold the manor in moieties to different persons, and it passed, so divided, to sir Jacob Wheate, baronet, and Mr. Pullen, who were lords of the manor in the year 1774, when sir Jacob purchasing Mr. Pullen's moiety, became the sole proprietor. His arms are Vert, a fess dancetty Or, in chief three garbs of the second. In a canton the arms of Ulster.

The records shew that Thomas de Cliene purchased lands in Lechelade of Robert de Clinterton and Emme his wife, 20 H. 3. Robert Hayfheet and Petronella his wife levied a fine of lands in Lechelade to the use of Robert de Bradneston and Alice his wife 51 H. 3. John de Wafre and Isabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Lechelade to the use of Simon Withers 52 H. 3. The abbey of Hayles was seized of lands in Lechelade 29 E. 1. and Adam le Hunt granted two messuages here to that abbey 13 E. 2. Robert de Franklin held one messuage, one water-mill, and one yardland 10 E. 2.

The farm called the Priory, which formerly belonged to the college of Wallingford, was granted to Dennis Toppes 14 Eliz. and the lands formerly belonging to the priory of St. John in this place, were granted to Thomas Toppes 20 Eliz.

Mr. Charles Loder, Mr. Robert Loder, and Mr. Richard Ainge, have good houses in the town of Leachlade, and good estates; and Mr. Day has a good estate at Clay-Hill, which he purchased of the Bathurst family. The arms of Day and Ainge are emblazoned p. 366; those of Loder are, Or, six annulets sable.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 300*l.* a year. Sir Jacob Wheate is patron; Mr. Wheate is the present incumbent. The patronage and impropriation formerly belonged to the priory of St. John Baptist in this place.

Lawrence Bathurst, esq; son of sir Edward Bathurst, endowed the vicarage with the tithes of his whole estate, by his will dated Sept. 16, 1670, which hath improved the vicarage above 150*l.* a year. There is no glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. It is large and handsome, with double ailes, supported by two rows of fluted pillars, and has a handsome spire, with five bells. It was new built, with the assistance of the priory and inhabitants, by Conrade Ney, who was vicar in the reign of king Henry the Seventh.

There was a priory or hospital, and several chantries here, of which some account has been already given.

Near this place lie the Remains of M^{rs} Anne Simons, whose Life compleated the true Character of the Gentlewoman, the Friend, and the Christian. She was sincere in her Friendship, affable and candid in her Conversation, pious in her Devotion, liberal and secret in her Charity. Her acquaintance have lost a real Friend, the Poor a daily and constant Benefactress. She lived to a good old Age, and tho' she declined gradually thro' the Weakness and Infirmity of Body, yet she retained a cheerful Temper and Vivacity of Spirits to the last. She is gone to receive the Reward of her Virtue, and has left her Friends to imitate her Example. She died the 24th of September 1769, aged 76.— Arms, in a lozenge, Or, a bend engrailed vert, between two roses gules.

Within the communion rails is a memorial for sir Edward Bathurst, baronet, with his arms, impaling a chevron between three greyhounds courant, supposed for his second wife, whose name was Morris. There are also memorials for several other persons of his family; and for several of the Coxeters; (descended in the female line from Lawrence Bathurst, esq;) with their arms, Argent, a chevron between three fighting cocks heads erased, gules. As also for the Bamptons, with their arms, Checky, on a chief three garbs.

Benefactions.

In 1586, Nicholas Rainton, gent. gave 4*l.* a year to repair the church. In 1599, Edward Dadge, esq; by his will, gave 5*l.* a year to the poor. In 1602, William Blomer, esq; and his heirs, &c. were compelled by law, to deliver to the vicar and church-wardens, five bushels of wheat, and five of barley, given by two maiden sisters, for the use of the poor for ever, out of the profits of Dolemead. In 1703, Mr. Richard Wellman gave 10*s.* a year out of Pidgeon-house close, to be given to the poor in bread. In 1720, Francis Loder, gent. gave the interest of 100*l.* to orphans or widows, natives of the parish. In 1721, Robert Loder, gent. gave 20*s.* a year in bread to the poor. In 1725, Mr. Richard Ainge gave 20*s.* a year to be disposed of in like manner. Mrs. Simons, by her will, gave the interest of 200*l.* to the poor. Mrs. Loder has also given the interest of a considerable sum to widows and orphans. And several pious persons have given plate, &c. for the communion table, and a branch for the church.

LECHAMPTON.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Cheltenham, three miles distant south from the town of that name, twelve north-westward from Cirencester, and eight eastward from Gloucester.

About half the parish lies in dairy farms, in the vale of Gloucester, the other part stretches eastward over a stupendous ridge of hills, whence there is a large prospect over the vale and the river Severn, above and below the city of Gloucester. It probably takes the former part of its name from the vast rock of stone, on the brow of the hill, for Lech, in the British language, signifies stone; and serves to distinguish this parish from several other places of the name of Hampton, in Gloucestershire.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

William Leuric holds Lechantone in Chiltenham hundred of the king. Osgot held it in the time of king Edward. There are three hides taxed. Indemean are two plow-tillages, and two villeins, and eight bordars with one plow-tillage. There are four servi, a wood one furlong long, and one broad. It is worth and was worth 40s. D. B. p. 74.

But there was then another manor, according to the record.

Brictric holds four hides in Lechametone in Chiltenham hundred of the king, and pays tax. He held two hides, and Ordric held the other two in the time of king Edward. King William, as he was going into Normandy, granted both estates to Brictric. He has one plow-tillage in demean, and nine bordars, with three plow-tillages, and two servi, and one ancill. There is a wood half a mile long, and half a mile broad. It is worth 30s. Domesday-book, p. 79.

Adam le Dispencer, son of Triftram, was seized of this manor, and had a grant of fairs, markets, and free warren 37 H. 3. which he pleaded in a Quo warranto brought against him 15 E. 1. and his plea was allowed. The same grant was also allowed 16 Jac. and the original is now in the custody of Mr. Norwood, the present possessor of this manor.

This manor was held by grand serjeanty of the king, by performing the service of steward at the great festivals of Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, as appears by a record 23 E. 1. Walter de Munemuth held it 30 E. 1. and John Limell died seized of it, and of the advowson of the church, 2 E. 2.

It soon after came to the Giffards, for sir John Giffard died seized of it 3 E. 3. and it continued several generations in that name and family; but after the death of John Giffard, the last heir male, this manor passed by the marriage of Elianor, one of his daughters and coheirs, to John Norwood, in whose family it has continued ever since, and Henry Norwood, esq; is the present lord of the manor of Lechampton. His arms are, Ermine, a cross ingrailed gules.

Robert Presbury held lands in Lechampton 18 E. 2. Sir John Berkeley was seized of seventy acres of land in this place, held of the manor of Cheltenham 6 H. 6. as was sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverstone 38 & 39 H. 6. and 14 E. 4. William Golding and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Lechampton to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to William Panton and to Joan his wife, daughter of William Golding.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 140*l.* a year. Mr. Norwood is patron, and Mr. Draper the present incumbent. The advowson, and one of the manors

² This family is descended from the Norwoods of Kent. Jordan Norwood, of the isle of Shepey, flourished in the reign of king Henry the Second, and lies buried in Minster church, with many of his posterity, and his monument is still remaining. He was seized of the manor of Northwood, to which one hundred burgesses of the city of Canterbury owed suit and service in the reign of king Edward the Confessor.

Stephen Norwood, son of John, resided near Shepey, at Norwood-Chastners, so called from the abundance of chestnut trees growing there.

Sir Roger de Norwood, son of Stephen, was seized of the manor of Shorne in Kent, 54 H. 3. He disdainful to hold his lands by the lazy tenure of Gavelkind, changed it for the more active one of knight's-service, in the 14th year of king Henry the Third. He married Bonafilia, sister and heir of John de Wantham of Shorn, with whom he had that manor, and dying 13 E. 1. was succeeded by his son and heir sir John de Norwood, who married Joan, sister and heiress to Giles lord Badlesmere. He was high sheriff of Kent 20, 21, 23, 24, & 28 E. 1. and was summoned to parliament in several years of that reign, particularly in the 22d, and 6 & 9 E. 2.

His son, sir John de Norwood, married Agnes, daughter and coheirs of William Grantson, descended from William de Granton, who had married Sibebe, daughter and coheirs of John lord Tregoz; which John died 12 E. 2.

Sir Roger Norwood, son of the last sir John, married Julian, the daughter, or sister, of Geffrid lord Say. He was one of the conservators of the peace for the county of Kent 34 E. 3. Sir John de Norwood, eldest son of this Roger, married Joan, daughter and one of the coheirs of Robert Hert, of Feverham, esq. His name occurs in the summons to parliament 43 & 47 E. 3. but not the name of Roger, as mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns.

William de Norwood, second son of sir John, succeeded his father, Roger, his elder brother, dying unmarried. John de Norwood was son and heir of William, and died without issue.

James de Norwood, next brother to the last William, and third son of the last sir John, married Margaret, daughter and coheirs of Robert Gralle, of Gralle in the county of Suffolk, by whom he had issue John de Norwood, esq; who married Margaret, daughter of John Martin, esq.

James de Norwood, his son and heir, married Jane Clinton, as appears upon her tomb in the church of Milton. His son and heir, John de Norwood, esq; was lieutenant of the Tower of London, and constable of Queenborough. By Elizabeth his wife, daughter and coheirs of Miles of Elton, son of sir John of Elton, he had the manor of Gilling; and dying 4 H. 7. lies buried at Milton. John de Norwood, esq; married Elizabeth, daughter and coheirs of Thomas Fragenhall, esq. He died 12 H. 7. leaving only three daughters.

John Norwood, cousin and heir male of the last John, married Elianor, daughter and coheirs of John Giffard, with whom he had the manor of Lechampton, and died in 1509.

Roger Norwood of Lechampton, son of John, married Alice, daughter of sir John Butler of Badminton. Ralph Norwood, son of Roger, married Jane Knight of Shrewsbury. Henry Norwood, son of Ralph, married Catherine, daughter of sir Robert Throgmorton, of Coughton in Warwickshire. William Norwood, son of Henry, married Elizabeth, daughter of William Ligon, of Madersfield in Worcestershire. Richard Norwood, son of William, married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Steward, LL. D. and died without issue. Francis Norwood, his brother, and second son of William, married Judith, daughter of Timothy Gates, rector of Cleeve. He died in 1682.

Henry Norwood, son of a younger brother of Richard, purchased Lechampton of Francis; and having distinguished himself for his loyalty in the civil wars, was made governor of Tangier by king Charles the Second, and served in parliament for the city of Gloucester. This colonel Henry Norwood underwent great variety of fortune. He was one of the company, in a voyage, who were reduced to the last extremity for want of victuals. They cast lots to determine which of them should be killed to be a morsel for the rest, and he on whom the lot fell was directed to go into the hold of the ship to prepare himself. Their ravenous hunger compelled them to follow him in a short time, where they found him dead; and notwithstanding the accident, they greedily fell to, and made a hearty meal of the carcase. The remains were buried handsomely.

Colonel Norwood died in 1689, and by will returned the estate to the family of Francis Norwood. Richard Norwood, William, and Thomas, sons of Francis, succeeded to it in order, and the reverend Thomas Norwood, eighth son of Francis, was the owner of Lechampton at the beginning of this century. Charles Norwood possessed it afterwards, and Henry Norwood, esq; is the present lord of the manor.

By this pedigree it appears, that the family of the Norwoods have a right to quarter the several coats of arms of Tregoz, Wantham, Badlesmere, Grandison, Hert, Gralle, Elton, and Giffard.

formerly belonged to the abbey of Fischamp in Normandy; and a portion of tithes in Lechampton, formerly belonging to the nunnery of Usk in Monmouthshire, was granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz. which tithes, worth 3*l.* a year, now belong to the impropiator of Cheltenham. Mr. Norwood has the tithes of one tithing, worth 10*l.* a year.

Ten acres of pasture, and some arable, belong to the glebe.

The church hath a handsome spire, with six bells, in the middle, and an aisle on the south side, the east end of which aisle is the burying-place of the lord of the manor.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a raised tomb under the arch between the nave and the aisle, upon which are the figures in stone of a man and woman lying along. The man is in armour, with a large shield over his left arm, is girt with a sword, and has spurs on, his feet resting on a lion. These figures are supposed to represent some of the Giffards, who were lords of the manor. The woman's dress is about the age of Henry the Fourth.

Upon a brass plate against the wall, is the following memorial :

The LEIGH, or LYE,

IS a small parish in the vale of Gloucester, lying partly in the hundred of Derhurst, and partly in the lower division of that of Westminster. It is six miles distant westward from Cheltenham, four south from Tewkesbury, and six north from Gloucester.

It is situated in a flat country, very subject to floods from the Severn, particularly a large tract of rich pasture ground, which lies in common between the inhabitants of this parish and those of Derhurst. A few years ago the people of the Lye dug a large trench across that common, to divide their part from Derhurst; but they were obliged, by a suit at law, to open the communication again.

The name is written Lalege in the antient record, with the prepositive article, after the Norman manner; and Lege, properly signifies the place. It was usual with our Saxon ancestors to give this name to a seat or capital mansion, which later generations have converted into lye. But ley, and lay sometimes signify also a pasture ground. Perhaps the prior of St Dennis, or some other person of eminence, had a seat here in early times, called La lege, which afterwards gave name to the whole parish.

This place is remarkable for nothing in natural history, but for a large quantity of dwarf elder growing here.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The church of St. Dennis of Paris holds one hide in Lalege, in Derhest hundred.' D. B. p. 72.

Gilbert de Kynerdesley granted the manor of Lye, with all his lands in Staverton, Heydon, Hawe, and Turley, to Joan de Rodborough, lady of Notgrove, 7 E. 3. William de Redbeargh held Lye, and two messuages, and two plow-tillages in Lye and Heydon 3 R. 2. John de Redbeargh died seized of the manor of Lye 7 R. 2. as did John Browning 3 H. 5. to whom succeeded Richard Browning, who dying without issue, Cicely Browning was his sister and heir: She was married to sir Guy Whittington, who, in her right, had Notgrove, Lye, and Rodborough. Richard Whittington, second son of sir Guy, by Cicely his wife, had this manor settled on him. Thomas Whittington, esq; who married Margery, daughter of William Needham, died seized of the manor of Leigh, 38 H. 8. and left six daughters coheiresses, by which means it went out of this name.

Richard Brown, esq; died seized of this manor 15 Eliz. and Thomas Brown, his grandson and heir, had livery granted him 17 Eliz. William Riddale, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608.

Lord Tracy afterwards purchased this manor, and sold it to Stephen Cook, esq; to whom suc-

HAMLET. Evington is a hamlet in this parish, but it lies in the lower division of Westminster hundred, of which manor the late right honourable William Dowdeswell, esq; died seized in the year 1775. Half the mill-house is in this hamlet, and the other part in the parish of Bodington.

Lands in this parish formerly belonging to the White Friars in Gloucester, were granted to Thomas Bell 36 H. 8. And tithes in Lye antiently belonging to the priory of Derhurst, and afterwards to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to Richard Pate 16 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, within the peculiar of Derhurst, worth about 60*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. John Chester the present incumbent.

The impropriation belonged to the priory of Derhurst in 1379, and is now vested in Corpus Christi college in Oxford. It pays 11*l.* 10*s.* yearly to the crown.

The church is small, with a small cross aisle on the south side, and a low embattled tower at the west end. It is dedicated to St. James, according to bishop Benson's book.

LEMINGTON

IS a small parish, in the upper division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, five miles distant south-east from Campden, five south-west from Shipton upon Stoure in Worcestershire, and thirty-three north-east from Gloucester.

The greater part is pasture, with a considerable tract of ground in common, over-grown with furze, fern, and hawthorn bushes, and capable of great improvement.

The parish lies on the verge or extreme limit of the county, next to Oxfordshire, wherefore, like the town of the same name in Hampshire, it was antiently called Limentone, and since altered to Lemington, from Limes, a boundary; but it has another title to its name, on account of the great Roman Foss-way entering Gloucestershire at this place, for the same Latin word signifies also a great broad way. It is called Lower Lemington, to distinguish it from Lemington, a hamlet in the parish of Toddenham. Before Mr. Camden's time, many Roman coins were plowed up here, and some have been found since, for which reason it is thought that the Romans had a small post or station at this place.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The church of Tewkesbury held twenty-four hides of land in Gloucestershire, which were taxed only as twenty, in the time of king Edward the Confessor, of which estate the record shews, that 'There were three hides in Limentone. There 'were two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, with 'four plow-tillages, and six servi, and one bordar. 'It was worth 60*s.* now 40*s.*' Dom. Book, p. 68.

The abbey of Tewkesbury had court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Lemington, by the grant of king William the Second, which were allowed 15 E. 1. And the abbey continued in possession of this manor 'till that house was dissolved. The manor was afterwards granted to Ambrose Smith 18 Eliz. and passed to sir William Juxton, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Lady Fane, who was the relict of sir William Juxton, and afterwards married to lord viscount Fane, is the present lady of this manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Campden, value 10*l.* from the impropriation, besides the income of about fourteen acres of land, purchased with queen Anne's bounty, and other money, raised in 1737, to augment the living. The impropriation belongs to lady Fane, who is patroness of the curacy, and Mr. Baker is the present incumbent. It was formerly reputed a rectory, worth 50*l.* a year. The church is small.

Monument and Inscription.

On a plate of brass, fixed to a blue stone in the chancel, is the following memorial :

HERE LYE THE BODIES OF CHARLES GREVILL AND PETER GREVILL, ESQUIORS, WHOE WERE NATVRAL BRETHREN AND LATE PATRONES OF THIS CHAPPELL. THEY WERE BROUGHT VP AND LIVED TOGETHER IN A VERTVOVS AND PIOUS COVRSE, AND TAKING TRVE CONTENT AND COMFORT ONE IN THE OTHER, LEDD SINGLE LIVES AND DIED BATCHELLORES ANNO DNI 1736. ——— Over the inscription, is a large scutcheon, with

with the Grevills arms, Sable, a cross and bordure engrailed Or, pellety, and twenty-four quarterings. The Grevills of this place sprung from Lodovick Grevill, of Drayton in Worcestershire, ancestor of the present earl Brooke, and earl of Warwick; and were allied to the Grevills of Campden.

Benefaction.

There is a charity of 200*l.* given to the poor, one half of which is laid out in the purchase of land.

At the beginning of this century, there were 7 houses, and about 36 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 2 were freeholders. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptisms were 10, the burials 6; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 20, the burials 8; and the present inhabitants are in number 59, which shews the place to be remarkably healthy.

L I D N E Y.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Blidestow, in the Forest division, ten miles south-east from Monmouth, eight north-east from Chepstow, and twenty south-west from Gloucester. The turnpike-road from that city, thro' Newnham to Chepstow, and so on to Cardiff, Swansea, and Milford-haven, is carried thro' it.

It probably took its name from being situated upon a broad part of the river Severn, for Llydan, in the British language, signifies broad, and the termination ey denotes a watry situation. Consistent with this explanation of the name, the river is here between two and three miles over, and it was formerly much broader. Lidney antiently gave name to a hundred; for in Domesday-book Aluredestone, Ledenei, Hiwoldestone, and Wigheiete, are mentioned as places within the hundred of Ledenei; but in the reign of king Edward the First, there was no hundred of that name.

Lidney Park, the residence of Thomas Bathurst, esq; is a handsome seat, about a mile west of the church, with large gardens and offices, and very extensive woods adjoining; of which seat that gentleman has obliged the public and the editor with the engraving annexed. It stands on the north-west side of the Severn, at about a mile and a half distance, and commands a large view of that river, of the seat of sir John Fust, at Hill; of the town of Thornbury, and other places on the opposite side of the Severn; which, especially from the height behind the house, make a rich and beautiful landscape.

The parish is of great extent, consisting of rich meadow and pasture land, with some arable, and a large proportion of woodland. It is well watered on the east by Linch-brook, dividing it from Awre; by Newarne-brook, running thro' the middle of it; and by Woodward's-brook, which is a boundary westward between this parish and Alvington, where it obtains the name of the Coln. All these rise in the forest of Dean, and empty themselves into the Severn.

The New Grounds here are a tract of above a thousand acres of land next the river. In these, vegetation is quick and luxuriant, and cattle depasturing on them improve uncommonly fast. Horses particularly are sent in the spring from places at a great distance, to take the benefit of rest, and of the salubrious food of the salt marsh. I cannot learn for a certainty when the waters first deserted these grounds, but it must have been at the same time that a like event happened at Slimbridge, on the other side of the river, and since a suit at law was commenced in the reign of king Charles the First, against lord Berkeley, to obtain the new grounds in the last mentioned parish for the crown, it must have been before that time.

That the tide in the Seven should abate of its former height and power, and confine itself within a narrower channel, so as to leave dry this large tract of land, which it once overflowed, is an operation in nature not to be accounted for by all our philosophy. Whatever was the cause, I am inclined to think the event was not sudden, but gradual and progressive; and that even the old meadows here, which lie higher and further up, are acquisitions from the river, tho' of longer standing. And I am the rather disposed to think so, from a tradition which the inhabitants have still among them, that the tide in its usual course formerly came up to a bank of earth called the Turret, just without the church-yard; and that a large ship was built near the place where there is now a spring of fine water, called the Turret-well.

These are changes in the terraqueous globe, brought about in a long course of time, which however happen seldomer in this country than in most others.

To what hath been said of the soil of the parish, and produce of the ground on the surface, should be added, that below it are inexhaustible treasures of iron ore and cinders, pit-coal, red and yellow ochre, lime-stone, and other fossils; and Mr. Bathurst has a large furnace for smelting the iron ore, and several forges for manufacturing of iron.

The Asteria Columnaris, a pentangular stone about the thickness of a large goose-quill, with a star of five rays at each end, is commonly to be found at Pirton-passage; and several other curious substances, particularly (if I mistake not) the grinders of an elephant, have been found at the same place.

Not far above Mr. Bathurst's house, there is a cavern in the wood, called the Scowls, the entrance to which is between very long unwrought stones, serving as pillars to support a rocky roof, on which

LYDNEY PARK, the Seat of Thomas Bathurst Esq. to whom this PLATE is humbly inscribed by his most obliged and very obedient servant Jam. Rudder.

Several large trees are now growing. The space within is about sixteen or eighteen feet broad, and nine or ten deep, and beautifully lined with moss, which grows spontaneously to the thickness of two or three inches. Tradition is intirely silent as to this place, and no traveller has taken notice of it. Perhaps it is nothing more than an old mine.

Upon the summit of a little hill, in that part of Mr. Bathurst's park which lies contiguous to Ailberton, are the remains of a large encampment, with foundations of many antient buildings; among which are the ruins of a Roman hypocaust, or bath, of an oval form. The longest diameter is about seventeen feet, the other seven, as near as I could judge by my walking-stick, with which I measured it. Below the surface of the ground, the walls are intire; and part of a very strong terras, about six inches thick, which served for the floor, is still remaining. A little westward of this bath was a tessellated pavement, now intirely broken and destroy'd; but great quantities of square bits of stone and brick, like dice, which composed it, lie scattered all about. An old man informed me, that he had seen a part of this pavement, in a piece about a foot square. There have been also great quantities of Roman coins found in this place, and carried away; yet they still lie so plentifully amongst the rubbish, that a gentleman told me, he never failed to find some of them after a shower of rain; and I have myself found many pieces of urns and fine pottery. There were two statues in stone of human figures, dug out of the ruins, and are now placed on the side near the summit of the hill.

This place is admirably situated for defence; the approach to it is by a steep ascent every way; and a fine stream of water runs on the north side of it, just at the foot of the hill. It was not sufficiently, if at all, known to our learned Camden; yet every circumstance inclines me to think it the scite of the Abone of Antoninus. In the former part of this work, I have slightly mentioned the prevailing opinions concerning the situation of that Roman station. I shall now briefly enter into a further discussion of them.

Mr. Camden fixes the Abone at Alvington, as well on account of the resemblance of the names, as because the latter is nine miles from Caer Went, the Venta Silurum of the Romans; which is the exact distance set down in the Itinerary from that station to the Abone. But it has been objected that Alvington lies only about four miles from the Trajectus, which our learned antiquary fixes at Oldbury, whereas from Abone the Trajectus should be nine miles, according to the Itinerary; wherefore, if the distances in the Itinerary are right, either Oldbury cannot be the Trajectus, or Alvington is not the Abone. But it is pretty generally agreed, that the Trajectus was at Oldbury.

The learned Dr. Gale, in his Commentary on the Itinerary, supposing Antoninus's distances to be right, thinks the stations are transposed by careless transcribers; and placing Abone after Trajectus, makes the former to have been at Hanham, in the parish of Bitton, where are many old ruins and foundations of antient buildings; and the distance from thence to Bath agrees with that set down in the Itinerary, from the preceding station to Aqua Solis. The doctor interprets the name of Hanham, either as a contraction of Avonham, a ham or station at Abone; or considers it as a small variation from Henham, an antient ham, or station.

Thus, by transposing the order of the stations, he thinks to accommodate the distances something better to the Itinerary. But, had that been the case, it is a bad expedient to correct one error by committing another. The mistake seems more likely to be in the distances than in misplacing the stations. The former are evidently wrong, as may be proved by the Itinerary itself. In the fourteenth Iter, from Isca to Calleva, the distance is said to be 103 miles; but casting up all the spaces between the several stations, the sum falls short by five miles of that number. So in the thirteenth Iter, from Isca to Calleva, through Clevum and Durocornovium, i.e. Gloucester and Cirencester, it is said to be 109 miles; whereas the sum of all the distances between the intermediate stations is only 90. In this journey, it is set down from Gloucester to Cirencester 14 miles, which agrees exactly with the old computation; and from the latter to Spinæ, i.e. Speenham-land, (adjoining to Newbury) 15 miles. But every body knows that it is twice as far between the two last mentioned stations, as from Gloucester to Cirencester. Here then is a very great mistake in distances, yet I believe nobody will contend, that Speenham-land is not the scite of the Roman Spinæ.

These circumstances considered, will probably so far establish the order of the stations as they stand in the Itinerary, that no person may hereafter attempt to break it, merely to support the exactness of the distances; since it has been proved, that, in respect to the latter, the Itinerary is inconsistent with itself, in the very journey that mentions the station in question.

I am now to offer the reasons which induce me to fix on this place for the scite of the Abone, in preference to Alvington and Hanham.

It was necessary for the Romans, having conquered the country, to fortify their several stations; and it is evident they did so, from the ruins and fortifications found in almost every place where they had them. In those places also, are found the remains of baths and tessellated pavements, with coins and other vestiges of that people. But none of all these have been found at Alvington, wherefore I think it cannot have been the Abone. As to Hanham, there is no doubt but the Romans made a lodgment there, as well as at many other places on the sides of the Avon; but neither can that have been the Abone, which we are to look for somewhere between Venta Silurum and the Trajectus. And since Ailberton is distinguished with every mark of antiquity, not only in the instances already taken notice of, but in the very name itself, which is evidently Alb-beong-ton, i. e. the town of the old camp or fortification, I think we need go no further for the Abone. It stands at the proper distance from Caer Went, on one hand, but from hence, across the river to Oldbury, (if Antoninus did not make some allowance for the zig-zag manner of sailing) is not more than five or six miles. As to the distance from Oldbury, the supposed Trajectus, to Aqua Solis, there is undoubtedly a mistake in the Itinerary, which I know not how to rectify; only, if instead of VI. we read XI. for the distance, it will come nearer the truth, and exactly make good the deficiency in the sum of the distances in the Iter from Isca to Calleva. But these matters I submit to better judges, who may depend on the facts I have related, admitting or rejecting the argument as they see occasion.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

The following particulars stand in the antient survey, under the head Terra Willi filii Baderon.

' The same William [the son of Baderon] holds ' Ledenei in Ledenei hundred. Alfer held it in ' the reign of king Edward. There are six hides ' taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and ' three villeins, and five bordars, with two plow-
' tillages. There are three servi, and a mill of 5 s.
' [rent,] and twenty acres of meadow, and half a ' fishery in Waie; a wood one mile long, and half ' a mile broad. It was worth 4 l. now 40 s.
Domesday-book, p. 74.

But there was then another manor, as we learn from the same record, wherein it is said:

' Earl William made a manor in Lindenee, in ' Bliteslau hundred, of four estates which he took ' from the lords thereof. Three hides from the ' manor of the bishop of Hereford; six hides from
' the manor set apart for the sustenance of the ' monks of Pershore, where were six villeins, with ' four plow-tillages. He took three hides and a ' half from two thanes. There are in demean
' three plow-tillages, and eight bordars, and a mill
' of 40 s. [rent,] a wood a mile long, and half a ' mile broad. It paid 7 l. in the whole.' Domesdaybook, p. 69.

Thus it appears, that there were two manors in this parish of the names of Ledenei, and Lindenee, which I take to be only an accidental variation from inaccuracy in writing, of which there are many more instances in the records.

⁴ There were two orders of thanes: The royal thanes were the great feudatories, or nobility, of the kingdom, who held of the king in chief by knight-service, and were equivalent to the barons, as they were called, after the establishment of the Normans. The other thanes were sub feudatories, not honorary; the same whom the Normans called Vavafors, which word occurs in Domesday as a synonymy with liberi homines regis; but it grew out of use after the reign of king Henry the Fourth.

The principal manor was in the Beauchamp family for a long course of time; the other belonged to the Talbots.

Henry earl of Warwick, son of Walerond earl of Warwick, married Margery, coheirefs of Henry D'Oiley, and died seized of the manor of Lidney, and of an iron forge in his woods there, and of other forges in the forest of Dean¹³ H. 3. His son Thomas de Newburg, earl of Warwick, succeeded him. He married Ela, second daughter of William Longespee, earl of Salisbury, natural son of king Henry the Second by Fair Rosamond, and died without issue 26 H. 3. John de Placetis married Mary, or Margaret, sister and heir to Thomas earl of Warwick. He was in great favour with king Henry the Second, who made the match, and obliged the lady to settle her whole estate on him for life, although she should have no children by him. He took the title of earl of Warwick, and died seized of Lidney⁴⁷ H. 3. But Mary, or Margeret, his wife, having no issue, the inheritance of the family went to the issue of her aunt Alice, daughter to Walerond earl of Warwick, who had been married to William Manduit, baron of Hanslope in Buckinghamshire, and by him left a son and a daughter, William Manduit and Isabel. William, in right of his mother, was created earl of Warwick, but died 52 H. 3. without issue; whereby his sister Isabel, who was married to William Beauchamp, became his heirefs. This William de Beauchamp died seized of Lidney⁵² H. 3. and was succeeded by his son William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who died seized of this manor 26 E. 1. Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was his son and heir. He died seized of a purparty of Lyden, held of the king in capite, appurtenant to his earldom,⁹ E. 2. And there were one hundred acres of underwood, worth (says the record) 1 d. per acre per ann. because it was in the royal forest.

Thomas, son and heir of Guy, was only two years old at his father's death. He was one of the chief commanders, who, under the Black Prince, led up the van of the English army at the battle of Cressly; and fought so long at that of Poitiers, that his hand was galled with the exercise of his sword and battle-ax. He married Catherine, daughter of Roger lord Mortimer, and died of the plague at Calais, seized of Lidney, 43 E. 3. and was succeeded by Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, his surviving son and heir, who married Margaret, daughter to William lord Ferrers of Groby. He had taken up arms against king Richard the Second, and was attainted, and his estates forfeited, whereupon this manor was granted to John Montacute, earl of Salisbury; who afterwards endeavouring to restore the same king, and being taken prisoner at Cirencester, and there beheaded by the townsmen, 1 H. 4. as related more largely under that head, this estate was restored to Thomas de Beauchamp, 2 H. 4. who died seized of Lidney the same year.

Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, succeeded Thomas his father, and married, first, Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Thomas lord Berkeley, viscount Lisle, by whom he had three daughters: secondly, Isabel, the only surviving heiress of the Dispencers, who were heirs to the Clares earls of Gloucester, and died seized of Lidney 17 H. 6. Henry, his son, was created duke of Warwick, and died seized of this manor 23 H. 6. He left Anne, his only daughter and heiress, an infant; who dying soon after, the inheritance came to Anne, his sister; but the manor was assigned to Cicely dutchess of Warwick, his widow, in dower, 25 H. 6. This last Anne was married to Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury, who, in her right, was also earl of Warwick. He was famous for his great power, and was often called the stout earl of Warwick, and the king-maker; for king Henry the Sixth and king Edward the Fourth held the crown by turns, as this earl favoured the side; but he was at last slain in Barnet-field, in which battle king Edward secured the crown to himself. Anne, his widow, had two daughters by him, coheiresses to her vast estate; and because she had taken part in the designs of her late husband, her estate was taken from her by an act of parliament 14 E. 4. and settled on her two daughters, of whom, Isabel, the eldest, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to the king, and Anne, her sister, to Richard duke of Gloucester, afterwards king Richard the Third.

George duke of Clarence was drowned in a butt of Malmesey-wine, seized of Lidney, 18 E. 4. his brother, Richard duke of Gloucester, most inhumanly assisting at the execution. His children were Edward Plantagenet, earl of Warwick, attainted by court contrivances, and beheaded 15 H. 7. and Margaret countess of Salisbury, beheaded 33 H. 8.

King Henry the Seventh pretending the injustice of divesting Anne dutchess of Warwick of her inheritance, procured another act in the beginning of his reign, to reinstate her, and then artfully prevailed with her to settle that great inheritance on him and his heirs, to the disinherison of the issue of her own daughters; and accordingly she received a fine of Lidney and many other manors to the king, 3 H. 7.

This manor continued in the crown 'till it was granted, by the description of late Warwick and Spencer's lands, to sir Thomas Seymour, 1 E. 6.

but upon his attainder, it reverted to the crown, and was afterwards granted, by queen Elizabeth, to sir William Wintour, vice admiral of England; who, with great valour and success, opposed the famous Spanish Armada, and was well rewarded by that queen. He built a stately house at Lidney, called the White Cross, which was begun in 1588.

Sir Edward Wintour, son of sir William, succeeded him, who married Anne, daughter of Edward earl of Worcester. Sir John Wintour, son and heir of sir Edward, was eminent for his loyalty to king Charles the First, throughout the whole civil war. He fortified his house at Lidney, and made it almost inaccessible, to oppose the garrison at Gloucester. At length he was put to flight, and, if you will believe a wonderful story, made a wonderful escape, by leaping down from the rocks at Tiddenham (mentioned in Dr. Parson's M S. to be near 200 yards high) into the river, which has given the name of Wintour's Leap to a place there. But tho' it may be true that he escaped by taking the water, it is nevertheless impossible to be as related. The White Cross house was afterwards demolished, and turned into buildings for an iron furnace. Sir Charles Wintour, son of sir John, succeeded to the manor of Lidney. He married one of the daughters and coheiresses of — Napper, esq; who survived him, and was owner of this manor when sir Robert Atkyns published his History of Gloucestershire.

Of the other manor, the following account is extracted from the records: William Hatheway died seized thereof 10 H. 2. and was succeeded by Ralph Hatheway his son. Walter Wither died seized thereof 54 H. 3. William Butler held Lidney and Peritune mills, and a bailiwick in the forest of Dean 13 E. 1. He died the same year, and left Perine, his only daughter and heiress, married to Gilbert lord Talbot, who, in right of his wife, died seized of Lidney 20 E. 3. Richard lord Talbot died seized of Lidney, Huntley, Longhope, and Leigh 20 R. 2. Gilbert lord Talbot, his son, succeeded, and died seized of those manors, and a moiety of Badgworth, with a third part of the manors of Painswick, Morton Valence, and Whaddon 7 H. 5. He left Ankoret, his only daughter and heiress, but she dying at four years of age, John lord Talbot, her uncle, (so famous for his victories in France as to be esteemed the Achilles of England) was her heir. He was created earl of Shrewsbury 20 H. 6. and being slain at the siege of Chastillon in France, by a cannon bullet, died seized of the manor of Lidney, &c. 31 H. 6. and was succeeded by John earl of Shrewsbury, his son and heir, who engaging on the part of the Lancastrians, was killed in the battle of Northampton 38 H. 6. He was succeeded by John his son, the third earl of Shrewsbury, who married Catherine, daughter of Humphry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, and died 13 E. 4. as appears by the escheator's book of that year, n. 52. From this time I have no account of the descent of this manor, separate from the first; wherefore I conclude that the distinction was lost by unity of possession, and that both were afterwards enjoyed as one manor.

The manor of Lidney was purchased of the Wintour family by Benjamin Bathurst, esq; third son of sir Benjamin Bathurst, baronet, and uncle to the present earl of Bathurst. He married Finetta, daughter and heiress of Henry Poole, of Kemble in the county of Wilts, esq; by whom he had issue, 1. Thomas, of whom hereafter: 2. Poole, sometime commander of a company of foot in his majesty's service; who, in 1776, married Anne, one of the daughters and coheiresses of — Hasketh, of the city of Salisbury, esq. 3. Anne, the eldest daughter, married to Charles Bragge, of Mangotsfield in this county, esq; by whom he hath issue two sons and one daughter: 4. Susannah, the second daughter, married to Powell Snell, of Guiting-Grange in this county, esq. 5. Finetta, who died unmarried; and 6. Catherine, now unmarried. The said Benjamin Bathurst married, secondly, Elizabeth, daughter of the reverend Dr. Broderick, one of the prebendaries of Westminster, and rector of Mixbury in the county of Oxford; by whom he hath a numerous issue. He died on Nov. 5, 1767, in the 76th year of his age, having represented the borough of Cirencester in three parliaments, the city of Gloucester in four, and the borough of Monmouth in two.

Thomas Bathurst, esq; the eldest son and heir of Benjamin Bathurst, married Anne, daughter and sole heiress of sir William Fazakerly, of Totteridge in Hertfordshire, and is the present lord of this manor. His arms, and a large account of his family, are given under Cirencester, to which the reader is referred.

Of the other estates in Lidney, the records shew, that Bogo de Knovil died seized of assart lands at Gravenhull and Zerkeley, near Lidney, 12 E. 3. but this particular seems to belong more especially to the forest of Dean. John Charburghe died seized of lands in Lidney and Aileberton 49 E. 3. Lands called Newton Myne, in Lidney, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to John Marsh and John Turpine 2 Eliz. Other lands called Palewell Myne, in Lidney, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Anthony Collins and George Woodnet 26 Eliz. In the tithing of Lidney are 48 families, and 246 inhabitants.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Aileberton. This tithing lies about a mile west from the church, and consists of 49 families, and 231 inhabitants. William Harpetre died seized of the manor of Halberton 12 H. 2. William Harpetre, son of William, was his heir. He had committed many trespasses in the forest of Dean, for which his lands were seized; but compounding for 100 marks, was restored to his estate 22 H. 2. Robert Harpetre was his son and heir, who dying was succeeded by John Harpetre. He died without issue, whereby his sister became sole heiress, according to sir Robert Atkyns, and being married to Anselm Gournay, was succeeded in the manor of Aileberton by Robert Gournay their son and heir, who died seized thereof 53 H. 3. But this seems to be a mistake; for Thomas Harpetre, brother of John, succeeded to this estate, and married Eva^k, daughter of Robert de Berkeley, who assumed the name of de Were, from the great lordship of Were in Somersetshire. They had issue Robert, who sometime after assumed the name of Gournay, and had livery, 15 H. 3. of part of the possessions of Maurice de Gaunt, his uncle, and of all his lands in Gloucestershire, except Beverstan, Weston, Radewic, Oure, and Albricton, which however, he not long after obtained of the king, and died 53 H. 3. He was succeeded by his son Anselm, whose son John Gournay died 19 E. 1. and left Elizabeth, his only daughter and heiress, married to John ap Adam, or, as he is sometimes called, de Badenham, who had issue Thomas ap Adam.

Sir Robert Atkyns's account of the descent of this manor breaks off at 53 H. 3. probably from some defect in the records he had consulted; but he says, it came afterwards to the family of the Berkeleys, by the marriage of an heiress. It is however most probable, that it descended from Robert Gournay, together with the manors of King's Weston and Beverstone, down to Thomas ap Adam; and like them was sold by him into the Berkeley family. Sir Maurice Berkeley purchased King's Weston of sir Thomas ap Adam 4 E. 3. which descended thro' several generations to sir Maurice Berkeley of Uley, who died seized of that manor and of Aileberton 4 E. 4. Sir William Berkeley succeeded his father in this estate; but taking part with king Richard the Third, his estates were seized by king Henry the Seventh, and granted to Jasper duke of Bedford in the first year of that reign. Robert Woodroffe died seized of Aileberton 15 Car. and left Thomas his son and heir seventeen years old. Thomas Bathurst, esq; is lord of this manor.

Sir Thomas Brook and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Aileberton 15 R. 2. Le Sterth and Goldgrove in Aileberton, and divers woods in Aileberton and Alvington, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to William Wintour 32 H. 8. Here is a chapel of ease, with a small tower at the west end.

2. Pirton, or Purton, is a tithing three miles southward of the church, consisting of 8 families, and 44 inhabitants. Besides what is mentioned of this manor in the abstract from Domesday-book, under Nafs, there are a few particulars relating to it that could not be separated from the account of Awre, of which, according to that record, it was antiently a member, and a fief belonging to William de Ow.

Robert Gournay held Pereton 53 H. 3. John de Badeham, or ap Adam, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Peritone to John de Knowil, to the use of themselves and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to the heirs of Elizabeth, 25 E. 1. Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, died seized of Peritone and Purton 9 E. 2. Maurice, son of Thomas de Berkeley, held Piriton 42 E. 3. Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, died seized of Peritone 2 H. 4. Thomas de Berkeley and Margaret his wife were seized of Purton 5 H. 5. Robert Goodrick and Edith his wife levied a fine of the manor of Purton 5 Mar. What sir Robert Atkyns says here of lands in Purton belonging to St. Oswald's in Gloucester, should be apply'd to Pirton in Churchdown. This manor is now the property of Thomas Bathurst, esq. Purton-passage over the Severn is in this hamlet, concerning which there are some useful observations at p. 47.

3. Nafs. This hamlet lies about two miles south-eastward from the church, consisting of 6 families and 35 inhabitants. Domesday-book gives the following account of it :

'Earl Herald held Nest in Bliteslau hundred. There were five hides, and in demean one plow-tillage, and ten villeins, and two bordars, with nine plow-tillages. It was not put to farm in the time of king Edward. But earl William joined it to two other manors, that is to say, Pontune and Peritune. In these were nine hides, and two plow-tillages in demean, and fifteen villeins, and two bordars, and two servi, with nine plow-tillages. There is a fishery. The steward lately increased Pontune by one plow-tillage. Peritune is in the king's farm. They pay 11 lib. in the whole.' Domesday-book, p. 69.

Robert Grinder, esq; was seized of Nasse and Hurst 22 H. 6. Sir John Barr died seized thereof 2 E. 4. John Baynham died seized of Nasse 10 H. 8. and livery of it was granted to William his son 26 H. 8. in which family it continued to the reign of queen Elizabeth; and from that time has been in the family of Roynon Jones, esq; who is the present lord of this manor, and has a good estate and a seat here. He is son of the late William Jones, esq; by Cholmley his wife, daughter of sir John D'Oyley, baronet, of Chessel-Hampton Oxfordshire. His arms are, Argent, a lion rampant gules.

4. Alliston, two miles north-eastward from the church, consisting of 24 houses and 105 inhabitants. Of this tithing it is thus recorded :

'William de Ow holds Aluredstone in Ledenei hundred. Bondi held it in the time of king Edward. There are three hides taxed, no lands in demean, but five villeins and three bordars have three plow-tillages. There is a fishery of 12 d. [rent] and ten acres of meadow; a wood half a mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth 20 s. now 30 s. Henry de Fereris claimed it because Bondi held it; but Ralph de Limesi also held it, who was predecessor to William. The same William holds two hides there which are taxed, and there are two villeins, with two plow-tillages. Ulnod held them, and they are now and were then worth 10 s.' Domesday-book, p. 73.

There was a castle at Alliston in the reign of king William the conqueror, who made Gwarine de Meez, of the house of Lorrain, governor of it, and gave him Alestune to defend the marches against the Welch. But whether this last particular be true of Alliston in Lidney, or of Olveston in the hundred of Langley and Swineshead, may admit of some doubt. Sir Robert Atkyns applies it to both places, of which however it cannot be equally true. But as this was situated in the marches which Gwarine was to defend, and as the record mentions a dispute between two persons concerning their right to this estate; it is probable the king afterwards put an end to the controversy, by giving the manor to Gwarine de Meez. This Gwarine married Millet, one of the daughters of Pain Peverel, lord of Whittington in Shropshire, who had declared, that whosoever behaved himself with the greatest courage at tilts, at the castle of Peake in Derbyshire, should wed his daughter; whereupon Gwarine meets at the place, and having there vanquished a son of the king of Scotland, and a baron of Burgoyne, gained her for his wife.

Fulk, the son of Gwarine, succeeded him, of whom there is this remarkable anecdote. Playing at ches with king John, the king broke his head with the ches-board; but Fulk returned the blow, and almost killed the king. He was succeeded by his son Fulk, who was slain at the battle of Lewes, 48 H. 3. This family obtained the name of Fitz-Warine, from Gwarine their ancestor, who came into England with the Conqueror.

5. Soitwell, or Sully, is a hamlet in Alliston. Edward duke of York was seized of the manor of Sully 3 H. 5. Edward James, esq; died seized of Sully, alias Soitwell-house, and Radmore 4 C. 1. He married Eleanor, daughter of John Powell, of Preston, esq; and left Thomas, his son, one year

* Sir Robert Atkyns has it 25 E. 3. But this is a mistake, as appears by his account of Beverstone, King's Weston, Churchdown, &c.

† There is another hamlet of the name of Pirton in the parish Churchdown, in this county, which occasioned sir Robert and eight months old. William James, esq; was proprietor of this estate at the beginning of this century; but Soilwell-house and estate became afterwards the property of Mr. Richard Williams, by purchase from the family of the James's. Mr. Williams has now sold it to John Townsend, of Chiswick in the county of Middlesex, esq; the present proprietor.

Atkyns, by mistake, to apply this record and some others to that hamlet, whereas they belong to Pirton in this parish. There are also some other mistakes in sir Robert Atkyns, which are taken notice of under Churchdown.

6. Hurst is a hamlet in Alliston, about a mile eastward from the church. This was antiently a wood, or woody place, and took its name from the Saxon Heprc, a wood. Mrs. Morgan, relict of Probert Morgan, esq; eldest son of Richard Morgan, esq; by Elianor his wife, daughter of Henry Probert, of the Ar-goed in the county of Monmouth, esq; has a feat here.

7. Newarne. This hamlet lies about half a mile eastward from the church, and is part in the tithing of Lidney, and part in Alliston. Mrs. Lewis, daughter of Richard Morgan, of Hurst, esq; has a handsome house here.

8. Rodleys is a house and estate belonging to Mr. Edward Jones.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, worth about 260*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Hereford are patrons and impropiators; the reverend Mr. Evans, one of the canons of Hereford, is the present incumbent. The abbey of Lyra in Normandy formerly had the impropriation. Ailberton, St. Briavel's, and Hewelsfield are chapels annexed to this church.

The glebe at Ailberton lets at 2*l.* 15*s.* a year, but there is no glebe at Lidney.

The church is large, with an aisle on each side, supported by two rows of pillars, and it has a very handsome spire at the west end. A small chancel on the north side of the great one, and a vault within the rails of the great chancel belong to the lord of the manor.

There was a chantry in this church, endowed by John Chardbrough and Julian his wife, 49 E. 3. whereof John Cook, the last incumbent, retired with a pension of 5*l.*

Monument and Inscription.

Mr. serjeant Powlet, recorder of the city of Bristol, and one of the justices of South Wales, died in 1703, and was buried in this church, but I find no memorial for him.

On a flat stone in the church,

Underneath this Stone lies buried the Body of Roynon Jones, of Nals, Esq; who died July the 26th A. D. 1732, Aged 69. — Arms, 1. Jones, as before, impaling 2. Or, a chevron chequy gules and azure, between three cinquefoils of the last, for Cooke.

Benefactions.

There is an almshouse of four rooms for the use of the poor.

Mr. Dunning of Purton, by his will dated 1625, gave 20*s.* a year to the poor. Mr. Morgan of Hurst, in 1660, gave 40*s.* a year, half to the poor, the other half for two sermons.

By indenture dated June 8, 1680, Christopher Willowby, of Bishopston, esq; gave 16*l.* a year, charged on the tithes of Clent, in the parish of Milton-Abbats in Wiltshire; of which 4*l.* a year each to be given to two poor old women, natives of Ailberton, for their lives; as often as one dies another to be chosen in her stead; 4*l.* 10*s.* to be equally divided between four poor persons of the same place; 10*s.* to each church-warden; 10*s.* to the parish clerk; 20*s.* to the minister for a sermon, and 20*s.* more for his trouble in keeping a register of the distribution of this charity, for want of which the whole to go to Bishopston.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this parish, there were 133 houses, and about 700 inhabitants, whereof 24 were freeholders; annual births 28, burials 26. But examining the parish register, I find, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 227 baptisms, and 251 burials; and in ten years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 196, and the burials 170; and the present number of inhabitants is 661. Upon comparing these numbers it will appear, that the people have decreased here this last century; that they were more healthy during the latter period of ten years, than in the former; and that the average proportion of burials to the whole number of souls is nearly as 1 to 39.

LITTLETON

IS a small parish in the hundred of Grumbald's-Ash, two miles distant north-westward from Marshfield, six south-west from Sodbury, and thirty-one south from Gloucester.

This was formerly a tithing in Tormarton, in respect to which it was a little town; but it is now a distinct parish. It is called West Littleton, to distinguish it from another Littleton, not far distant, in Wiltshire. The lands in this parish are chiefly arable.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, this manor was not distinguished in the record from Tormarton.

Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hereford, was seized of the manor of Littleton 47 H. 3. It afterwards went to the family of De la Riviere, and from them to the Willingtons, and from them to the St. Loes. Whilst it remained in these these families, it had the same owner with the manor of Tormarton.

George earl of Shrewsbury had married Elizabeth the widow of sir William St. Loc, captain of the guard to queen Elizabeth, the most distinguished lady of her time, for the beauty of her person and endowments of her mind, who had the inheritance of this manor, whereby the earl was seized of Littleton in her right, in the year 1608. They joined in conveying this manor to her son, William Cavendish, earl of Devonshire, who sold it to Mr. Willoughby, and others, by which means the manor was divided amongst divers freeholders.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Hawkesbury, and is annexed to Tormarton. It is worth about 50*l.* a year.

The church is small, with a little low spire in the middle.

LITTLETON upon SEVERN.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Langley and Swinehead, three miles south-westward from Thornbury, ten north-westward from Chipping-Sodbury, and twenty-six south-westward from Gloucester.

It consists chiefly of meadow and pasture, with some arable land, and is bounded on the west and north-west by the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The church of St. Mary of Malmesberie holds Littleton in Langelei hundred. There are five hides, of which two and a half pay tax, the others are quit. In demean are two plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, and two bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There is a church and a priest, and thirty acres of meadow. It was worth 60*s.* but it is now worth 100*s.* Domesday-book, p. 71.

A Quo Warranto was brought against the abbat of Malmesbury to set forth his right to court-leet in Littleton. He pleaded a grant from king Edward the Second, before the conquest, and his claim was allowed. The manor continued in the abbey of Malmesbury till the dissolution, and was granted, with the tithes of the demean, to sir Richard Long, reserving a rent to the crown of 8*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* 33 H. 8.

The manor was soon after purchased by Richard Hampden, who died seized of it 4 E. 6. and livery was granted to Edmond Hampden, son of Richard, 5 E. 6.

Edward Filton, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608; as was Mr. Hopton at the beginning of this century, and Mr. is the present lord of the manor.

HAMLET. Stock is a hamlet in this parish, of which there is a distinct account in Domesday-book:

‘The bishop of Constance [in Normandy] holds ‘Estoch in Sineshoved hundred, and Tetbald holds ‘it of him. Eldred held it of earl Harold, and ‘could go where he pleased. There are two hides, ‘one taxed, the other not. There is one plow- ‘tillage in demean, and two villeins, and one ‘bordar, with one plow-tillage. There are six ‘servi, and five acres of meadow. It was worth ‘40*s.* now 20*s.*’ Domesday-book, p. 70.

Sir Robert Atkyns, or some person for him, by mistake, appropriated an abstract of the above account both to Stoke-Bishop in Westbury, and to this hamlet, which are distinct places.

Richard Foster levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Stoke to John Walsh 12 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Bristol, worth about 45*l.* a year. Mr. Willoughby is patron, and Mr. Johns the present incumbent. The abbey of Malmesbury had the advowson.

The church is small, with a nave and a little north aisle, and a small tower covered with tiles, and two bells in it.

L O N G B O R O U G H.

THIS parish lies in the upper part of Kiftsgate hundred, three miles distant north from Stow, seven south from Campden, and twenty-five east from Gloucester.

It is situated on an easy declivity facing the east, and commands a pleasant view of part of Oxfordshire, and some detached parts of Worcestershire and Warwickshire. Two turnpike-roads lead through the parish, one from Stow to Worcester, the the other from Bath and Bristol, thro' Cirencester, to Harford-bridge in Warwickshire, and so on northwards.

The greater part of the parish is arable land, which furnishes husbandry business for the men, whilst the women and girls employ themselves in winding of silk for the throwsters at Blockley.

The name of the village was antiently written Langeberge, which was undoubtedly given it from the long form of a camp thrown up here, not far from the Roman Foss-way, which passes by the village.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

One manor in this parish is part of the antient demesnes of the crown, as appears by the following extract :

' King Edward held Langeberge in Cheftesiat hundred, with Mene, a member thereof, in each of which were eight hides. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and ten villeins, and four bordars, with six plow-tillages, and a mill of 5*s.* and six servi, and a meadow of 10*s.* rent. In the time of king Edward the sheriff paid for the farm what it yielded. It now pays 15*l.* with two hundreds which the sheriff added to it.' Domesday-book, p. 67.

But one part of this parish lay in Witelai hundred.

' Earl Moriton holds Langeberge in Witelai hundred. Tovi held it in the time of king Edward. There are two hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and three villeins, and one bordar, with one plow-tillage, and four servi. It was worth 4*l.* now 40*s.* and pays tax.' Ib. p. 73.

' Hunfrid the chamberlain holds Langeberge in Witelai hundred of the king. There are four hides taxed. Elstan, Blacheman, Edric, and Alric held it for four manors, and could go where they would. In demean were four plow-tillages, and three villeins, and five bordars, with three plow-tillages. There are nine servi. It was worth 16*l.* now 100*s.*' Ibid. p. 78.

Two of these manors were afterwards confused and united. Richard earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans, and brother to king Henry III. had a grant of the manor of Longborough. He founded the abbey of Hayles in the year 1246, and endowed it with this manor. A Quo Warranto was brought against the abbat, 15 E. 1. to shew by what right he held a court leet, and challenged waifs and felons goods, and his claim was allowed. The manor was held of the honour of Wallingford, and continued in possession of the abbey of Hayles till the dissolution.

The manor was granted to Rowland Hill and Thomas Leigh 1 Mar. Livery of it was granted to Rowland Leigh 15 Eliz. whose descendants have enjoyed it to the present time, and the heir of James Leigh, late of Addlestrop, esq; deceased, is the present lord of the manor.

Of the other estates the records shew, that William de Montacute was seized of lands in Longborough, and granted them to William Forho, reserving to himself the advowson, 16 H. 3. William de Bruse held one messuage and six yard-lands in Longburg 15 E. 1. John de la Crane was seized of one messuage and one yard-land in Langeberge the same year. William de Chester and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Longborow to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to John their son, 13 E. 2. Thomas Cole and others were seized of one messuage and one yard-land, in trust for the abbey of Hayles, 15 R. 2. Lands in Longborough, which belonged to the abbey of Bruerne in Oxfordshire, were granted to Edmond Hermas 35 H. 8.

H A M L E T. Banksfee, or Southfield, is a hamlet and distinct manor, lying part in this parish and part in Condictot. It is sometimes also called Longburrowe in the writings and evidences respecting it, and is undoubtedly one of those manors called Langeberge in Domesday-book. It is supposed afterwards to have received the name of Blanck's-fee, now somewhat changed to Banks-fee, from Richard le Blanck, who was seized of one messuage and three plow-tillages here 15 E. 1. The college of Westbury upon Trim was seized of this manor, and continued in the possession of it till the dissolution of monasteries. It was granted to sir Ralph Sadleir 35 H. 8. William Freeman died seized thereof 20 Eliz. and livery was granted to his son Thomas the same year. John Talbott, of Longfere in the county of Salop, was in possession of this manor 43 Eliz. as appears by evidences in the hands of the present possessor. In the year 1686, it was sold to sir Charles Shuckborough, baronet, in whose family it remained till 1753, when it passed, by purchase, to John Scott, esq; who has built a handsome house on the site of the old manor house, which he calls Banksfee-House. He is in the commission of the peace for the counties of Middlesex and Gloucester, and has considerable estates in both counties. He is descended from an antient family in Scotland, and married Jane, daughter of Edward Wilson, of Didlington in Norfolk, esq; by whom he has one son and two daughters, John, Charlotte, and Catherine. His arms are, Per pale indented argent and sable, a saltire counterchanged.

Here was antiently a chapel in this hamlet, dedicated to St. Edmond; but it is now wholly demolished.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 50*l.* a year. The impropriation was in the abbey of Hayles from its first endowment in the year 1251.

Richard Penney was seized of the advowson of this church 15 E. 1. The rectory and the advowson of the vicarage were granted to sir Rowland

Rowland Hill and Thomas Leigh 1 Mariæ. The heir of the late James Leigh, esq; presents for two turns, and the earl of Guildford one. Mr. Leigh is the present incumbent.

The vicarage was endowed in the year 1326, in the time of Thomas Cobham, bishop of Worcester, (called the good clerk) by the abbat of Hayles, with the tithe of sixteen yard-lands, then the fee of Richard de Hodington, and all privy tithes, except lamb and wool. And if the portion of the vicar, by reason of barrenness, or any other occasion, should not amount to 10*l.* per ann. by the oath of the vicar, the abbat and convent were to make it up to that amount. The demean lands pay no tithes.

A portion of tithes in this parish, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, was granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6. Other tithes, which belonged to Hayles abbey, were granted to Theophilus Adams and Richard Adams 25 Eliz.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It has an aisle on the south side, and a handsome tower, with pinnacles. There is the effigy of a man in armour in the aisle, without arms or inscription; and a handsome monument of black and white marble, with the effigies of sir William Leigh and his lady. He died in 1631.

At the beginning of this century there were 80 houses in this parish, and about 400 inhabitants, whereof 15 were freeholders; yearly births 12, burials 11. Atkyns. There are now exactly 82 houses, and 389 inhabitants.

L O N G H O P E.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of the Dutchy of Lancaster, three miles north-east from Mitchel-Dean, and nine west from Gloucester.

It is situated in a bottom, which gave occasion to the name; for Hope is a valley, says lord Coke, in the first part of his Institutes. It was called Long Hope to distinguish it from Mansel-Hope, not far distant from it, in Herefordshire. The greater part of the parish is arable land, with some woodland and pasture ground.

Part of Yartleton-Hill lies in this parish, and part in several others. Annually, on the first day of May, there is a custom of assembling in bodies on the top of that hill, from the several parishes, to fight for the possession of it, upon which account it is sometimes called May-Hill. What gave rise to this custom I cannot with any certainty learn; but some are of opinion that it is a relick of the ancient Campus Martius, which was an annual assembly of the people upon May-day, when they confederated together to defend the kingdom against all foreigners and enemies, as mentioned in the laws of Edward the Confessor.

There is a remarkable instance of longevity in the person of Thomas Bright, who was a native of this parish, and died here in the year 1708, one hundred and twenty-four years old, as appears by the inscription for him, on his grave-stone.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' William the son of Baderon holds Hope in Westberie hundred. Forne and Ulfeg held it of king Edward. There were five hides taxed, and those thanes might go where they would. There are two plow-tillages in demean, and twelve villeins, and one bordar, with twelve plow-tillages. There are three servi, and a mill of 17*d.* It was worth 8*l.* now 100*s.* Domesday-book, p. 74.

William the son of Baderon was succeeded by Withenock his son, who took the name of Monmouth from his father's government. Baderon was son and heir of Withenock, and Gilbert was son and heir of Baderon. John de Monemuta was son and heir of Gilbert, and was made governor of St. Briavel's castle 18 H. 3. He died seized of the manor of Long Hope 40 H. 3. and having no male issue, gave the inheritance of all his lands to prince Edward, eldest son to king Henry the Third.

This manor was soon after granted to Gilbert Talbot, one of the justices itinerant for the county of Hereford, and governor of the castle of Monmouth. He married Gwenthlian, daughter of Rhese ap Griffith, prince of South Wales, and died seized of Rodleigh, and of Long Hope 2 E. 1. but the wife of John de Monemuta the younger held the latter some time in dower. Gilbert Talbot, son of Richard, son of Gilbert, died seized of Long Hope and Huntley 10 R. 2. as did Richard, son of Gilbert, 20 R. 2. Gilbert, son of the last Richard, on the death of his mother, had livery of the fourth part of the said manors 1 H. 5. and John, brother and heir to Gilbert, died seized of the same 31 H. 6.

This manor continued long in the family of the Talbots, and had a succession of the same owners as the manor of Huntley. Edmund Probyn, of Newland, esq; is the present lord of both the said manors.

John Sabin and others were seized of one mesuage and sixty acres of land in Long Hope and Huntley, in trust for the abbey of Flaxley, 10 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage endowed. It lies in the Forest deanery, and is worth about 250*l.* a year. Mr. David Jones is patron and incumbent.

Robert de Chandos, who came into England at the Norman invasion, gave the advowson of the church of Hope to the abbey of Lyra in Normandy. The impropriation belonged afterwards to the priory of St. Mary and St. Florence in Monmouth. After the suppression of monasteries, the impropriation was vested in the Nourfes, and descended to Mr. Nourse Yate, who restored it to the vicarage in the year 1701.

The church is built in the form of a cross. It has a spire and five bells at the west end. The chancel was rebuilt, and the church repaired in 1771.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a memorial in the chancel for Thomas Master, gent. who died in 1682, with the arms of the family of the same name residing at Cirencester. There are also several memorials, on flat stones, for the Yates of this parish, with the arms of the Yates of Arlingham; and for Yate Bromwich, clerk, vicar of the parish, and patron of the living, who died in 1774; with his arms, i. e. Or, a lion rampant sable, gutty of the field; impaling, 2. Yate.

On a stone in the church-yard is this inscription,

Here resteth the Body of Thomas Bright, who departed this Life October 28th An^o 1708, Ætatis suæ 124.

His Patience was by long Affliction try'd;
In stedfast Faith and Hope he liv'd and dy'd.

Benefactions.

John Palmer, gent. gave one messuage and fifteen acres of land in Long Hope, in the reign of king Richard the Second. John Bodenham gave other lands in the reign of Henry the Fifth, as did John Appleby, gent. in that of Henry the Sixth. Richard Elly, of Mitchel-Dean, gave a messuage and lands in Long Hope, in the reign of Henry the Seventh; and about the same time, Walter Giffard, alias Pekks, gave a tenement in Mitchel-Dean, and lands in Long Hope; and other lands were given to this parish, by Thomas Bond, in the same reign. John Gwin gave lands also in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. All these donations are for the purpose of repairing the parish church, and for the relief of the poor.

In the year 1675, Mr. Thomas Nourse charged the impropriation with 5*l.* a year for ever to buy clothes for the poor; and 5*l.* for binding out one apprentice yearly. In the year 1701, Mr. Nourse Yate endowed the vicarage with the impropriation, subject to the said charities of 10*l.* a year.

At the beginning of this century there were 100 houses, and about 500 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 36 were freeholders; yearly births 13, burials 11. Atkyns. The present number of inhabitants is about 470.

L O N G N E Y.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Whitstone, seven miles north-west from Stroud, three east from Newnham, and seven south-westward from Gloucester.

Sir Robert Atkyns asserts, that it has been formerly called Long-Island, which gives, says he, the derivation of that name. But no instance has occurred to me of the place being so called; and it could not be so, without the greatest impropriety, as neither the parish, nor any part of it, is so much as peninsulated. The name seems to be compounded of Lang, long, or along, and Ea, water, (the letter n serving only to facilitate pronunciation) and it is perfectly descriptive of the situation of the place, which stretches along the south-east side of the river Severn, and consists of rich meadow and pasture grounds, with orcharding, and some arable land. This situation subjects the inhabitants to the topical disorders incident to such places.

I have had frequent occasions of mentioning the cheese made in these parts with the commendation it deserves; and with pleasure I take this opportunity of recommending a particular sort of cyder, of good strength, colour, and excellent flavour, made in this parish and its neighbourhood, from an apple which, being originally cultivated here, is called the Longney Russet. This village furnishes nothing further remarkable in natural history, and is intirely destitute of antiquities.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday-book it is thus recorded:

' Elfi holds Langenei in Witestan hundred of the king, and he held it in the time of king Edward. There are five hides taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and six villeins, and twelve bordars, with nine plow-tillages. There are four servi, and ten acres of meadow, and a fishery. It was worth 100*s.* now 60*s.*' p. 79.

Soon after the Norman conquest, this manor was given to the monastery of Great Malvern in Worcestershire, by one Osbert, or Osburt, who in the charter is called Osbert fil. Pontii; and it was confirmed by king Henry the First to that monastery, which was founded by Aldwin an hermit, in the year 1085, and endowed by king William the Conqueror, and the before-mentioned king Henry. That monastery pleaded their right to court-leet, free warren, and felons goods in this manor, in a Quo warranto brought against them, 15 E. 1. and their claim was allowed.

The manor continued in the possession of the monks of Malvern till the dissolution, after which it passed into lay-hands. Sir William Bond was lord of it in the year 1608.

Henry Smith, esq; a very charitable person, dying in the year 1627, his trustees, pursuant to the directions of his will, purchased several estates, and amongst others the manor of Longney, with the demean lands, and the rectory and parsonage, the income of which to be disposed of in charities. And the manor, &c. still continue vested in such trustees, who hold a court leet here.

The demean lands and parsonage of Longney, with the quit-rents of the manor, are allotted to pay the following sums annually, viz. to

Of the other estates, the records shew, that William Mull, or Mills, who had estates in Harefield, Duntisbourn-Rouse, and Harcombe, was seized of ten acres of meadow, ten of pasture, and six acres of wood in this parish; but being attainted 2 E. 4. his estates were seized by the crown, and granted to sir Thomas Herbert and his heirs male; and were afterwards granted to sir Richard Beauchamp, 14 E. 4.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth about 50*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Joseph Chester is the present incumbent. The advowson formerly belonged to the priory of Malvern.

The impropriation is vested in Mr. Smith's trustees. About 80 acres, called Sten-Meadow, are tithe-free.

The trustees to Mr. Smith's charity have an estate in Suffex, the income of which they divide amongst the poor clergy; and Longney being a small living, they sometimes give the vicar a share, as they do at present 10*l.* a year; but both the sum and the continuance of it are intirely at their discretion.

The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, hath a small chapel on the south side of the chancel, belonging to the manor. It has a handsome embattled tower on the south side, with five bells in it. There are neither monuments nor memorials worthy notice; but it is said that the founder of the church lies buried under a niche in the wall, on the north side of the chancel.

Sir Edmond Pounce has charged the impropriation with the payment of sixteen bushels of wheat to the poor on St. Lawrence's day. And six pounds yearly are charged on Mitchel's lands to the use of the poor. Atkyns.

The following short account of that very extraordinary man may be acceptable to my readers. The vulgar story concerning him is, that he was a beggar, followed by a remarkable dog, whence he is often in Surry called Dog-Smith; and that he was whipped through several parishes in that county as a vagrant. But all this seems to be fiction. There was a respectable family of the Smiths, who had a manor and a considerable estate at Wandsworth in Surry, 11 Eliz. which they enjoy'd till about the year 1664; and as he was born and buried there, according to Mr. Aubrey, it is probable, tho' not absolutely certain, that he was one of that family; and there is a monument for him in Wandsworth church. At length he became a citizen of London, of the salters company, tho' it is supposed he was a silversmith; and having a very large real and personal estate, vested the whole of it, in the year 1620, in trustees, for the relief of poor prisoners, hurt and maimed soldiers, portions for poor maids on their marriage, setting up of poor apprentices, repairing of highways, and losses sustained by fire, shipwreck, or otherwise; or such other charitable uses as he should by deed or will direct, or as his trustees, their heirs or assigns should think most meet and convenient; reserving 500*l.* per ann. for his own use during his life. Afterwards, by deed-poll, dated Jan. 26, 1626, he ordered that his personal estate should be laid out in purchasing lands, to be settled to the same uses; and directed, that the sums allotted by him or his trustees to any parish, be distributed by the church-wardens and overseers, for the relief of the aged, poor or infirm people, married persons having more children born in lawful wedlock than their labours can maintain, poor orphans, such poor people as keep themselves and families to labour, and put out their children apprentices at the age of fifteen; but by no means for the relief of persons given to excessive drinking, whoremongers, common swearers, pilferers, or otherwise notoriously scandalous; nor to any that have been incorrigible or disobedient to those whose servants they have been, nor to any vagrants having no constant dwelling, nor to any that receive inmates to dwell in the house with them, or that have not inhabited in such parish five years before the making of such distribution, or, being able, refuse to work, labour, and take pains.

He afterwards made his will, by which he gave some few legacies, but left the bulk of his estate to the disposal of his trustees, and died in January 1627.

Besides Longney, there are several considerable estates in Suffex, Kent, Hants, London, Middlesex, and Leicestershire, given by Mr. Smith, or purchased with his money, and vested in the trustees to this well-directed charity, who, in the year 1772, when this account was communicated to me by William Bray, esq; were the following noblemen and gentlemen, viz.

The earl of Ashburnham,	George Onslow, of Ockham in Surry, esq;
The right honourable lord George Germaine,	Thomas Scawen, of Carshalton in Surry, esq;
Lord Onslow,	Robert Scawen, of Ryegate in Surry, esq;
Lord Pelham,	Henry Talbot, of Chart-Park in Surry, esq;
The right honourable George Onslow, of Ember-Court in Surry, esq;	Abraham Tucker, of Betchworth-Castle in Surry, esq;
Sir Francis Vincent, baronet,	George Woodroffe, of Poyle in Surry, esq;
Peter Burrell, of Beckenham in Kent, esq;
General George Howard, of Stoke-Place, near Windsor,

Mr. Smith's trustees allow 8*l.* a year to the poor of this parish, not out of the manor of Longney, as mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns, but out of an estate at Longstock in Hampshire.

MANGOTSFIELD.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of King's-Barton, near Bristol, four miles distant north-east from that city, seven south-west from Chipping-Sodbury, and thirty-two south-westward from Gloucester.

It derives its name, says sir Robert Atkyns, from Mane, a Saxon general, who gained a victory in this place over the Britons. But with due deference to that gentleman, this seems not altogether satisfactory; for who has read of any such general gaining a victory here? Besides, sir Robert's notion that the names of parishes which terminate in field are most commonly derived from a general having obtained a victory in such places, as delivered by him in his account of Hewelsfield, is ill founded and erroneous.

In Domesday-book the name is written Manegodesfelle, as I conceive, from maen, British, stone, goed, or coed, in the same language, a wood, and felle, a bill, or common, in which sense it is still used in the north of England; the whole, therefore, taken together, signifies a stony place in the wood upon a bill. And this explanation agrees with the situation and antient condition of the place; for tho' the woods are now assarted, it must formerly have been woody, as lying in Kingswood-chase; and on the hill, at Downend in this parish, is one of the finest rocks of stone in the county. It rises in very large superficial dimensions, and so evenly bedded as to be fit for pavements, without the least labour to smooth the surface. These circumstances seem to confirm the etymology.

* This grant is inserted in Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon, as follows:

Concessio facta W. de Putot de libera Cantaria habenda in Capella Curie de Manegodesfeld.

NOTUM sit omnibus Christi fidelibus, præfens scriptum visuris vel audituris, quod P. There are few or no antiquities here, except a small camp of observation, at a place called Bury-bill, with a deep foss, and high agger, thrown up, as supposed, by the Romans under Ostorius. And there is another of the same kind, not far from it, in the parish of Winterbourn.

Leland, in the sixth volume of his Itinerary, calls the village Magatesfeld and Magnusfeld, but he was not very accurate in writing the names of places, which he commonly did as they were pronounced upon the spot. Speaking of a ruin which he found here, he says, It was ons witborote sayle a nunnery. Parte of the Cloyster standitbe yet. But the ruin has been long since destroy'd, and we know nothing more of the nunnery than what he says of it.

This village is one of those places in the neighbourhood of the city of Bristol, which abound with a very lasting kind of coal, already mentioned in the accounts of Bitton and St. George's.

Mangotsfield is reputed to be within the jurisdiction of the court of the honour of Gloucester, now held at Thornbury.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

The abstract from Domesday-book concerning the large manor of Bertune, of which Manegodesfelle was a member, stands in the account of the parish of St. George in Kingswood.

One manor in Mangotsfield belonged to the Blounts of Bitton, whose arms are cut in stone on the church porch, i.e. Argent, two bars azure, over all an escarbuncle of eight rays gules, promote and florette Or.

This manor was purchased by William Player, esq; in whose family it continued for several generations. It is now the property of Charles Bragge, esq; who married Anne, the eldest daughter of Benjamin Bathurst, late of Lidney-Park in this county, esq; deceased, by whom he hath issue two sons, Charles and William; and one daughter, Anne. He has a handsome seat at Cleeve-Hill, in this parish. His arms are, Or, a chevron between three buffalos sable.

Another manor, held of the honour of Gloucester, antiently belonged to the Putots, whom sir Robert Atkyns calls Piccots. William de Putot died seized of it 15 H. 3. He built a chapel in his manor house at Manegodesfeld, and had a special grant^o of a free chantry in that chapel.

He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire for several years. Lord Berkeley was seized of it afterwards, and granted it to Philip Langley, esq; 9 Jac. 1. It was again sold, in the year 1665, to John Meredith, esq; who planted a large vineyard in this place, and was succeeded in the manor by his son John Meredith, who was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Mr. William Meredith sold it to Edward Colston, esq; and it is now in jointure to the widow of the late Mr. Francis Colston.

Ruggeway, or Ridgway, is also a distinct manor, lying part in this parish, and part in that of Stapleton. Nicholas Barstable held Ruggeway within the manor of Bertune 13 H. 4. Edward earl of Hertford was owner of it 31 H. 8. It belonged to Matthew Smyth, of Long Ashton in com. Somerset, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and is now the property of sir Jarrit Smyth, bar^t. by purchase of the coheiresses of the late sir John Smyth, baronet.

Edward Andrews, esq; has a handsome seat in this parish, called Hill-house.

H A M L E T S. 1. Downend is a populous hamlet, already taken notice of on account of its quarries of excellent paving stone.

2. Morend, in which the before-mentioned camp is situated.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Bristol, said in Ecton to be about 20*l.* a year clear value; but it was augmented, in the year 1720, by the donations of Edward Colston and John Dowel, esq^r. and by queen Anne's bounty; and a second time, in 1758, by contribution of the principal inhabitants, and by the queen's bounty. It was originally only a chapel of ease to St. Peter's church in Bristol, and belonged to St. James's monastery there. The rectory and advowson were granted to John Brain 35 H. 8. and passed afterwards to Mr. Dowel, and then to Mr. Wolly and others, who sold to the several proprietors of lands the tithes of their respective estates. Mrs. Wilmot patroness, and Mr. Christopher Haines is the present incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It consists of the nave, two aisles, and a chancel, with a spire steeple on the south side, in which are six bells and a clock. There is a small chancel on the north side of the great one, which is the burying-place of several of the family of the Merediths. Here are two effigies in stone, at full length, and well preserved, supposed to be designed for some of the family of the Blounts, who had great property here, and in the neighbouring parish of Bitton.

At the beginning of the present century there were 150 houses, and about 750 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 24 were freeholders; yearly births 17, burials 15. Atkyns. But at that time the register was very ill kept. In ten years, beginning at 1760, the baptisms were 623, and the burials 372. And the present number of inhabitants is something above 2000. By which it appears that the proportion of annual burials is to the number of inhabitants about as 1 to 51, and that the situation is very healthy.

M A R S H F I E L D.

THIS parish constitutes the upper division of the hundred of Thornbury. It lies seven miles north-eastward from Bath, seven south-eastward from Chipping-Sodbury, twelve and a half east from Bristol, thirty-five south from Gloucester, and one hundred and three west from London.

It is situated on high ground, with a fine healthy air, and bounded on the south by a brook which divides it from Somersetshire; on the east by the parish of Wraxal, in Wiltshire; on the west by the village of Cold Aston; and on the north by Sherill's-brook, which separates it from Littleton. The greater part is a light soil, better adapted to corn than pasture, and there are some wood-lands which produce good oak, ash, and elm, but no beech wood.

The town of Marshfield stands near the middle of the parish, and consists chiefly of one street, near a mile long, through which a turnpike-road leads from London to Bristol. The business of making malt to supply the cities of Bath and Bristol was formerly very great here, for which the town is conveniently situated in a corn country; and tho' it has been for some time declining, yet it is still pretty considerable.

The market, which is but little frequented, except in the malting season, is held on Tuesday; and there are two fairs in the year, on the 24th of May, and the 24th of October, for which privileges their charter was renewed in the reign of king James the First.

The town has a bailiff for its chief officer, chosen annually at the court-baron. He is attended occasionally by a serjeant at mace, and other officers, to examine the weights and measures, which seems to be the proper duty of his office; but he always acts as a peace officer in the absence of the constable; and it is said that he has authority to commit to prison for certain offences, but no such thing is remembered to have been done by any of the present inhabitants. There are three tithings in the parish, with their distinct peace officers. The borough, as it is called, and the parish are reputed to be within the jurisdiction of the honour of Gloucester.

An extensive down of fine pasture (which is common to the freeholders) lies a little eastward of the the borough, where are visible traces of intrenchments, and not far distant from them, five tumuli, or barrows, bearing testimony of a battle having been fought there. The people call the largest of them Oswald's Tump, and have a tradition among them that the engagement was between Oswald king of the Northumbrians, and Peuda king of the Mercians, wherein the latter proved victorious. It is probable, that upon the credit of this tradition sir Robert Atkyns framed the etymology of the name of the town, which he asserts is called Marshfield from the Mercians, who gained a great victory over the West Saxons near this place. But the battle between Oswald king of Northumberland, and Peuda king of Mercia, wherein the former was killed, really happened at a place called Maserfeld, which being something like Marshfield occasioned the mistake. Oswald's body was cruelly exposed by his enemy upon a cross, which, it is said, occasioned the place to be afterwards called Oswestre, in British Croix Oswald, now a town in Shropshire.

Our chronicles make no mention of any battle happening in this place, (tho' the barrows may be considered as an incontestible proof of it) wherefore we are totally in the dark as to the parties between whom, and the time when it happened.

There are three stones, near a place called the Rocks, to mark the limits of the counties of Gloucester, Wilts, and Somerset, where they meet in a point. One of those stones stands in the parish of Marshfield, which borders upon the two last mentioned counties; and I am inclined to think that this circumstance gave occasion to the name of the parish, for Meapc, in the Anglo Saxon language, signifies a limit, or boundary. So Rodmarton, Didmarton, Tormarton, are names of villages all bordering on Wiltshire, and are supposed to take their origin from the same circumstance of situation, and to have the same Saxon word in their composition. Yet I am not ignorant that some would have the name derived from Mars, the god of war; whilst others suppose that the true reading is Marysfield, from the dedication of the church to the virgin Mary; but the manner of writing it in Domesday is unfavourable to these chymical notions.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This place is arranged in Domesday-book under the title Terra Regis, and is consequently part of the ancient demesns of the crown.

' Queen Eddit held Meresfelde in Edredestane hundred. There are fourteen hides, and in demean five plow-tillages, and thirty-six villcins, and thirteen bordars, with thirteen plow-tillages. There are eighteen servi. A priest hath one of those hides. In the time of king Edward it paid 35*l.* but it now pays 47*l.*' Dom. Book, p. 68.

Soon after the Norman conquest, this manor was given to the bishoprick of Wells, and afterwards alienated, by John de Villula, bishop of that diocese, who first assumed the title of bishop of Bath, to the monastery of Bath in the year 1106. But it is probable they had only a term in it, for it passed afterwards to the earl of Gloucester. William, the second earl of Gloucester, gave the manor of Marshfield, with the hundred, to the abbey of Keynsham in Somersetshire, which he had founded for black canons, and amply endowed.

The abbat of Keynsham purchased a charter of markets and fairs, free warren, and other privileges, 50 H. 3. and a Quo Warranto issuing against him 15 E. 1. he pleaded this charter, and his plea was allowed; as it was in another Quo Warranto 2 R. 2. The abbat had a confirmation of markets, fairs, and other privileges, 2, 3, & 4 E. 4. and the manor continued in that abbey till it was dissolved.

King Henry the Eighth granted a lease of this manor to sir Anthony Kingston, for six years, at 80*l.* rent; and lord Willoughby and sir Thomas Henage obtained a grant of the inheritance, in exchange for lands in Lincolnshire, 2 E. 6. Lord Willoughby conveyed the manor to the duke of Somerset, by whose attainder it reverted to the crown.

King Edward the Sixth then granted a lease thereof, for thirty-nine years, at 80*l.* yearly rent, to sir Henry Sydney. After which queen Elizabeth granted the fee to Thomas Ratcliffe, earl of Suffex, and lord chamberlain, for his good service against the rebels in the north. The earl sold the manor to John Gorlet, John Chambers, Nicholas Webb, and Thomas Cripps, which last died 43 Eliz. seized of Egglecombe's-wood, and divers messuages, lands, tenements, and of a certain annual sum of money, called Port-rent and Burrowe-downe-rent, as appears by the escheator's inquisition taken the following year. But much the greatest share of the estate was purchased by Gorlet.

William Gorlet, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, from whom it descended to John Harrington, of Kelfton in Somersetshire, esq; whose mother was the daughter and heiress of Mr. Gorlet. From the Harringtons it passed by purchase, and is vested in sir William Codrington, baronet, the present lord of the manor.

William Att-Green was seized of four messuages and two yard-lands in Marshfield, in trust for the abbey of Keynsham, 19 E. 2. Sir John Tracy and others were seized of lands in this place 37 E. 3. William Gibbs and others were also seized of two messuages in Marshfield, in trust for the abbey of Keynsham, 21 R. 2.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

Beside the borough, there are the east, south, and west tithings, with their proper officers. The hamlets are,

1. Westonton, formerly called Old Marshfield, or Little Marshfield. It has been a distinct parish, called St. Pancras, according to sir Robert Atkyns; and a well in this hamlet still bears the name of that saint.

The other hamlets made another distinct parish, under the denomination of St. Nicholas's parish.

2. Okeford. William de la Green held lands in Okeford and Upton, within the manor of Marshfield, 4 E. 3. John Jacob, esq; descended from the family of the Nortons in Wiltshire, was lord of this manor at the beginning of this century, from whom it descended to Miss Jacob, who has a handsome seat called the Rocks, near this place.

3. Ayford.

4. Ashwick. Mr. William Webb was lord of the manor of Ashwick, and proprietor of a good house and estate there, all which are now the property of Mr. Isaac-Webb Hardwick.

5. Bicks. This manor formerly belonged to the Crisps, afterwards to Sir William Deans, and is now the property of Miss Oland.

The manor of Meers in Marshfield belonged formerly to the earls of Stafford. It was forfeited to the crown by the attainder of the duke of Buckingham, and granted to Henry lord Stafford, and to Ursula his wife, 2 Mar. and the same family now receives chief rents of several persons in this place.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkebury, worth upwards of 200*l.* a year, including the several donations for its augmentation, before which it was valued at 50*l.* only.

In the reign of King Richard the Second, the impropriation and the advowson belonged to the abbey of Keynsham; they were afterwards vested in the abbey of Tewkesbury, and coming to the crown at the dissolution, Queen Mary, 2^o regni, gave them both, in exchange for the manor of Steeplelee, and other manors in Bedfordshire and Essex, to New College in Oxford, who are patrons, and Mr. Michell is the present incumbent. The impropriation is worth about 300*l.* a year, and now in lease to Mr. Merryweather.

The vicarage was augmented in the year 1725, with a donation of 200*l.* by Sir William Perkins, and the queen's bounty.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a handsome building, consisting of the nave and aisle on each side, and a lofty tower, with pinnacles, at the west end, which, from its elevated situation, is seen at a great distance.

There were two chantries in this church: Jesus Chantry, of which Henry Neal was the last incumbent; and St. Clement's chantry, of which Robert Savage was the last incumbent, each of whom enjoyed a pension of 1*l.* 10*s.* in the year 1553.

In the year 1529, Thomas Parker, who was Chancellor and vicar general to Jeronimus de Ghinucciis, or de Nugutiis, an Italian, bishop of Worcester, at the request of John Gosselat the Bailiff, and lord of the vill of Marysfield, (as it is called in a certain antient writing) and the greater part of the community of the same vill, established a gild in this church, with rules or statutes for the government of all that should enter into that fraternity. More of the nature of these gilds may be seen under Dyrham. The same Thomas Parker new built the vicarage house, but that was taken down, and a very handsome one built on the site of it, by Mr. Carey, the vicar, about the year 1734.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is nothing very curious under this head, what I have taken notice of being chiefly for the sake of family arms, and charitable donations; except, indeed, the following quaint epitaph. Over it, in a scutcheon, is a lion rampant.

Life is the Day of Grace, and Death the Night;
Live well, who knows when he shall loose the Light.
Soe did the tenant of this tombe, for hee
Made hast to purchase Immortalitie.
Death finding him receaving Customes, lookes
Tymes Records, sumde his Days, and crossd the Bookes.
And now the Customers from Customes free,
He paid to Nature what her Duties bee.
Scarce had hee ranne ovt halfe his race of life,
When Heaven and Earth to have him were at Strife:
Whose active Soule wore ovt his flesh soe nigh,
Twas time she shovld the tired corps lay by.
To bad men death is sad; when good men dy
It is their Birth to ioyes eternitie:
Judg then, what he did loose who lost but breath,
Liv'd to die well, and dyed A MEREDETH.

Non tam vita quam mortalitas finita.

Benefactions.

The donations to the vicarage are specified under the account of the church.

John Harrington left 6*l.* a year, and the reverend Mr. Kennings 20*s.* a year for teaching children to read. Mrs. Dionisia Long gave an estate of 29*l.* a year in Frampton Cotterel, and another of 26*l.* a year in Iron Acton, both purchased in the year 1731, and 900*l.* in South-Sea Annuities, with which a school is endowed, and twenty boys have their clothing and education. But out of the income of these estates, six poor widows are to be paid 6*l.* a year each. The bishop of the diocese is a trustee.

Mr. Elias Crispe, alderman of London, gave 4*l.* a year, paid out of Salter's-Hall, for eight sermons. He also founded an almshouse, consisting of a chapel, with a spire in the middle, and eight dwellings for as many poor men and women, and endowed it with 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* a year; which income sir Nicholas Crispe afterwards enlarged by a donation of 100*l.* so that the poor people now receive 1*s.* 6*d.* a week each. It appears by an inscription on the almshouse, that it was built in the year 1619.

Mr. Gunning, of Bristol, gave 5*l.* a year to the poor, and a piece of land has been purchased with 150*l.* given at several times to the same use.

Mr. Willis, killed at Gibraltar about eighty years ago, gave 25*l.* to be a stock for the poor for ever.

At the beginning of this century there were 150 houses, and about 800 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 29, burials 24. Atkyns. In ten years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms, exclusive of the dissenters, were 343, the burials, including all, 303; and the present number of inhabitants is about 1237.

MARSTON, or MARSTON SICCA.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftesgate, six miles south-west from Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire, six north from Campden, and thirty-four north-east from Gloucester.

It lies in a flat vale country, yet the greater part of the parish is arable land. Antiently the name was written Merestone, which I suppose to signify the marshy town, or watry town, for the parish is very subject to floods in the winter. This etymology is rendered more probable by considering that there are several Marstons in Warwickshire and Wiltshire, which, as well as the place under consideration, lie in flat countries subject to floods. The addition of Sicca, or Dry, tho' of an opposite meaning, and incongruous to the former part of the name, is not unaptly apply'd to this place; for notwithstanding its superabundance of water in the winter, it is frequently very much distressed for want of it in dry seasons, and having no spring in the parish, the inhabitants are then obliged to drive their cattle to the Avon: What water they use for culinary purposes, they commonly strain through sieves, to cleanse it from myriads of insects with which it abounds in the summer months. It is also called Long Marston, from the length of the village, and because the greater part of the houses stand in a row on the side of the road.

The only curiosity in the village is a roasting-jack, in the possession of Mr. Tomms, said to be the same which king Charles was set to wind up, when he appeared as servant to Mrs. Lane. It is not curious in itself, but only as it is connected in story with that prince.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' The church of S. Mary of Coventreu holds ' Merestone in Celfleode hundred. There are ten ' hides, and three plow-tillages in demean, and
' fifteen villeins, and three bordars, with twelve
' plow-tillages. There are six servi, and a meadow ' worth 10*s.* It was worth 8*l.* now 100*s.*
Domesday-book, p. 72.

The estate mentioned in the record to have been held by Hugh de Grentemaisnor, and apply'd to this parish by sir Robert Atkyns, lies in Broad Marston, in the parish of Pebworth.

The prior of Coventry purchased a charter for court leet, gallows, and tumbrel in this manor, in the reign of king Henry the Third, and pleaded this charter in a Quo Warranto brought against him 15 E. 1. and his claim was allowed. It appears that the abbey of Winchcombe had a manor in Marston at the same time, for the abbey purchased a charter of free warren in Merston 35 H. 3. and bought the advowson of the church in the same reign. He was seized of the manor of Marston, with free warren, 15 E. 1. at which time a Quo Warranto was also brought against that abbat. But soon after, the whole manor was vested in the abbey of Winchcombe, and so continued 'till the dissolution.

It was granted to Robert earl of Leicester 8 Eliz. and the lands were soon afterwards sold amongst several of the inhabitants, but the royalty of the manor was vested in Ralph Sheldon, esq; in the year year 1608, from whom it descends to William Sheldon, esq; the present lord of this manor. His arms, as they are blazoned in the heralds last visitation of this county, are, Sable, a fess Or between three drakes argent, a mullet for difference.

The records shew, that Lettice the daughter of Nicholas purchased lands in Marston, of Joan her sister, who was married to Richard de la Hay, 8 Joh. Henry Cooper purchased lands in Dry Marston, when they were divided, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and left them to Thomas his son, who died seized thereof 9 Car. leaving Henry his son two years old.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, of which Mr. Loggin is patron and incumbent. The parish has been lately inclosed, and lands allotted to the rectory in lieu of tithes, whereby the living, which before was worth about 145*l.* a year, is greatly improved. About 120 acres of pasture were the antient demean, and are tithe free.

The church is dedicated to St. James. It is a small one, with a low tower. There is an inscription for Mr. Samuel Burton, archdeacon of this diocese, which the reader may see at p. 164.

At the beginning of this century there were 40 houses, and about 190 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 21 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. Atkyns. But sir Robert's account was not accurate, for in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptisms were 70, and the burials 46; and in a like period, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 67, and the burials 42; and the present number of inhabitants is 199, which is in the proportion of something more than 47 to 1 of the annual burials.

M A T S O N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, ten miles distant south-westward from Cheltenham, seven north from Stroud, and three south-eastward from Gloucester.

It is very pleasantly situated on the slope of a sugar-loaf-hill, called Robin Hood's hill, which stands in the midst of the vale, and tho' the ascent is near a mile to the top of it, the soil is every where rich and fertile, and produces an excellent kind of herbage.

From before the Norman conquest, and for many ages afterwards, making and forging of iron was the principal employment of the town of Gloucester, and the ore was fetched from this hill, where it is said to be found in great plenty. The city of Gloucester is supplied with their best water from springs that rise on the side of it; and it appears by antient writings, that an aqueduct was carried from hence to that city, above four hundred years ago; for one William Gerard having granted the monks of the Grey Friars in Gloucester a supply of water from this place, a dispute arose between that house and St. Peter's abbey concerning the quantity the former was to receive, which was settled by Edward the Black Prince, in the year 1357.

The water of one of those springs running over a bed of iron ore, dissolves some of the finer particles, and is reputed to possess chalybeate properties.

The name of Matson does not occur in Domesday-book, nor does it appear by what name this village was known, when that record was compiled. About the reign of king Henry the Third, it was variously written, as Mattesdune, and Matesdone; and afterwards Matifnoll, Matesden, and now as at the head of this account.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

The manor of Matson was held of Humphry de Bohun and Joan his wife 46 E. 3. William de Gardinis was lord of Mattesdon in the reign of king Edward the First.

William Nottingham, esq; the king's attorney-general, by his deed, dated Aug. 13, 10 E. 4. gave the manor of Mattesdon to the abbey of Gloucester, for the erecting of a chantry in the abbey, to be supplied by two of their own monks; and a family of the name of Robins, alias Botcher, were for several generations successive tenants under the abbey. After the dissolution, the manor was granted to the chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8.

There is another manor in this parish, for the records shew, that William Gerard de Matesden, and Catherine his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Matesden, and of lands in Cugley in the parish of Newent, to the use of themselves in special taille, 8 E. 2.

The manor-house of Mattesdon, and all the buildings, orchards, gardens, and all the pasture and arable lands, formerly appurtenant to the house, being parcel of the land that belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted, by the crown, to the mayor and burgesſes of Glouceſter, Sept. 11, 34 H. 8. And the mayor and burgesſes, with the king's licence, fold the ſame to Thomas Lane, eſq; Dec. 10, 35 H. 8.

Richard Pate was ſeized of Matſon in the reign of king Edward the Sixth. Richard Liggon had livery of it 9 Eliz. ſoon after which it was convey'd to the Selwyns.

William Selwyn was governor of Jamaica. He had three ſons, John, of whom hereafter; Charles, who died without iſſue; and Henry, who married Ruth Compton, daughter of Anthony Compton of Gainſlow, near Berwick upon Tweed, eſq; and by her had iſſue two ſons, Charles-Jaſper, and William; and ſeven daughters, Albinia lady Boſton, Catharine Wilkes, Mary, Charlotte, Frances, Hannah, (deceas'd,) and Louiſa.

Charles-Jaſper, the elder ſon, married Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Coxeter, of Bampton in Oxfordſhire, and by her hath three ſons and three daughters.

William, the ſecond ſon, is an eminent barrifter at law. He married Frances-Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. John Dod, of Woodford in Eſſex, and by her hath iſſue two ſons, George and Thomas, and two daughters.

I return now to John the eldeſt ſon of governor Selwyn. He married Mary, daughter of major-general Farrington, of Chislehurſt in Kent, by whom he had iſſue two ſons, John, and George-Auguſtus; and one daughter Albinia, married to the honourable Thomas Townſhend, lately deceas'd, and by him had iſſue three ſons, Thomas, Charles, and Henry; and two daughters, Albinia, married to George lord Middleton; and Mary. Thomas Townſhend, the eldeſt ſon, married Elizabeth Powys, and by her hath iſſue four ſons and two daughters. Charles, the ſecond ſon, died unmarried. Henry, the third ſon, was a lieutenant-colonel of the firſt regiment of the foot-guards, and was killed at Wilhelmſtahl, in the year 1762.

John Selwyn, ſon of John, died unmarried in the year 1751, whereby George-Auguſtus, the ſecond ſon, ſucceeded his brother, and is the preſent lord of this manor, and has a handſome ſeat near the church, and a large eſtate here. He has repreſented the city of Glouceſter in five ſucceſſive parliaments, and is now one of the repreſentatives for that city. His arms are, Argent, on a bend ſable, cotized azure, three annulets, within a bordure ingrailed gules.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Glouceſter, worth about 25*l.* a year, beſides the augmentation it has received by Mr. Hodges's legacy, and the queen's bounty. There is no houſe for the incumbent.

Ernulph the ſon of Ralph gave the church of Matſedone to the abbey of Glouceſter, and Simon bifhop of Worceſter confirmed the grant. The advowſon of the rectory of Matſedon, late belonging to the abbey of Glouceſter, (not to the priory of Lanthony, as in ſir Robert Atkyns) was granted to the chapter of Glouceſter 34 H. 8. And the dean and chapter of Glouceſter are patrons.

The church is ſmall and neat, with the following inſcription over the door: This Church rebuilt at the ſole Expence of Albinia Selwyn, Relict of his Excellency Major-General Selwyn, A. D. 1739.

M A Y S E M O R E

IS a parish in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, seven miles south-east from Newent, eight south-westward from Tewkesbury, and two north-west from Gloucester.

It consists chiefly of rich meadow and pasture land. The turnpike road from Gloucester to Worcester, and to Ledbury, leads through it; and there is a bridge over the Severn at a place called the Lower Lode, which is repaired at the expence of this parish. Upon Maysemore bridge there formerly stood a cross, with this inscription:

In honore Dni nri Ihu Crifli qui nobis crucifixus erat. Ceofie croz fift Willm fiz Anketill de Lilton, et Cifeoli Willm fiz Anketill comenza pont de Mazemore. That is, For the honour of the lord Iefus Chrifl, who was crucified for us, William the son of Anketill made this crofs, and the fame William the fon of Anketill began the bridge of Maysemore.

Of the Manor and other Eftates.

The name of this manor is not to be found in Domesday-book, for when that record was compiled, this was part of the parish of St. Mary de Lode.

King Henry the Firft gave this manor, then called Ablode, and the grove of Barton, called Maygrave, to the abbey of Gloucester, ad victum Monachorum, in exchange for an orchard in Gloucester, which belonged to the monks of that abbey; and in the year 1101, granted the abbey free warren therein, which was allowed 15 E. 1. It continued in that houfe 'till the diffolution, and upon erecting the fee of Gloucester, was granted to the bishopruck 33 H. 8. as appears by the enowment. It was confirmed 6 E. 6. and the bhop of Gloucester is lord of the manor.

Henry Bawn and others were feized of two meffuages and one yard-land in Maysemore and Eghterton, in trust for the abbey of Gloucester, 1 R. 2. John Trimmes and others were feized of two meffuages, twenty acres of arable, eight acres of meadow, and two acres of wood in Maysemore, one toft in Gloucester, and one acre in Maysemore 15 R. 2.

A portion of tithes, and common in Pully-mead Maysemore, formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to Arthur Porter 1 H. 8.

HAMLET. Overton is a small hamlet in this parish, of which there is nothing remarkable.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester. The bhop has the impropriation, and his leffee provides a minifter with the bhop's approbation, to whom he pays 12*l.* a year. This curacy has been twice augmented, in the years 1719, and 1733, by donations from their lordships the bhop of Winchester and Gloucester, and by a legacy left by Mr. Hodges, and the Queen's bounty; fo that it is now worth 60*l.* a year. The church formerly belonged to St. Mary before the abbey gate. Abbat Gilbert Foliot granted it to the light of the altar of St. Peter, at the intreaty of the whole convent.

The church, which is dedicated to St. Giles, has a handsome embattled tower at the west end, with five bells.

Benefactions.

Mr. Francis Wheeler, arch-deacon of Salop, who died in 1675, and was buried here, gave 50*s.* for a fermon on New-years-day, paid by the minifter and bailiffs of Bridgnorth, and fecured by lands near that town. He also gave bread monthly to the poor, which charity is fecured by an acre of land in Wickham meadow. Mrs. Grace Wheeler, his widow, has given the like charity; and Mr. Edmond Ready has given bread to the poor.

In the year 1562, there were 36 householders in this parish. At the beginning of this century, there were 44 houfes, and about 200 inhabitants, whercof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 6, and burials 6. The inhabitants are now 210.

M E Y S E Y - H A M P T O N .

PART of this parish lies in Wiltshire, but the greater part is in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, in Gloucestershire, and antiently lay in Gersdones hundred. The church stands six miles distant west from Leachlade, six cast east from Cirencester, and twenty-three (by the road through the last-mentioned town) south-eastward from Gloucester.

It consists of rich meadow and pasture, and very good arable land. It is bounded in part by the river Thames on the south side, and by the road from Cirencester to London on the north.

The name of Hampton has been already explained. The prenomen was taken from the family of the Meyfies, who were antiently owners of this manor, and served to distinguish it from two or three other places in this county of the same name.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The Domesday account belonging to this parish, was misapplied by sir Robert Atkyns to Minchin Hampton. It may be thus translated :

' Earl Roger holds Hantone in Gerfdones hundred, and Turoid, nephew to Wiget, holds it of him. Leueric held it. There are five hides. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four villeins, and two bordars, and a priest, and two other men, who have among them all two plow-tillages and a half. There are six serui. It was worth 8*l.* now [only] 3*l.* Domesday-book, p. 73.

This manor was held of the honour of Gloucester, and the parish is now within the jurisdiction of the court of that honour. The master of the knights-templars had court-leet, waifs, and felons goods, by the grant of king Henry the Third, which were allow'd in a Quo warranto brought against him 15 E. 1.

Robert de Meyfie was lord of this manor, and high sheriff of the county, in the year 1255, whose son William succeed him, and left John Meyfie his son and heir. Robert Meyfie, kinsman to John, was seized of Marston Meyfie in the same parish, and agreed to pay John 12*d.* yearly, that the tenants of Marston Meyfie should pay suit of court to the manor of Hampton Meyfie only twice a year, 43 H. 3. The same John de Meyfie left Eve, or Elianor, an only daughter and heiress, married to Nicholas de St. Maur, who, in her right, died seized of the manor of Hampton Meysey, and the advowson of the church, 11 E. 2. Eschb.

Richard Seymour, son of Nicholas, died seized of this manor 2 H. 4. and was succeeded by his son Richard, who had an only daughter and heiress Alice, with whom this estate passed by her marriage to William lord Zouch.

William Zouch died seized of Meysey-Hampton 23 H. 8. leaving Frances, his only daughter and heiress, married to William Sanders, who levied a fine thereof to Edmond lord Chandos 4 Mar. Sir John Hungerford was lord of this manor in the year 1608. It was afterwards the property of sir Matthew Hale, from whom it passed in exchange for Alderley, to Mr. Barker of Fairford, whose descendant, Mrs. Lambe, is the present lady of this manor, and keeps a court leet.

HAMLET. Marston is a very large hamlet and tithing, lying in Wiltshire, on the north side of the Thames, and had its name from its low and marshy situation. The bishop of Salisbury is lord of this manor. For the convenience of the inhabitants, who are at a considerable distance from the church, there is a neat chapel of ease built in this hamlet, dedicated to St. James. The rector of Meysey-Hampton is patron. It has been augmented by the queen's bounty. The interest of 70*l.* is left for the education and apprenticing of poor children of this hamlet.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 300*l.* a year, in the gift of Corpus Christi College in Oxford. The reverend William Camplin, clerk, is the present incumbent. Livery of the advowson was granted to Giles Bridges, lord Chandos, 15 Eliz.

The glebe consists of about 80 acres of arable, and 25 acres of meadow and pasture. No lands are exempt from tithe.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is built in the form of a cross, with a tower in the middle, in which are six bells.

Benefactions.

In the year 1650, Richard Samway, rector of the parish, gave 10*l.* the interest to be equally distributed every year between the poor of Meysey Hampton, and those of Marston; and in the year 1712, John Beall, D.D. then rector, gave the like sum to the same use. In 1706, Anne Forsheew gave 5*l.* In 1715, Thomas Gegg gave 5*l.* In 1721, John Forsheew gave 5*l.* the interest of which sums to be given to the poor of this place. And John Kireheval, D.D. rector of this parish, gave 10*l.* each to Meysey Hampton and Marston, the interest to be expended in the schooling and apprenticing out of poor children; and in 1756, John Jenner gave 20*l.* to the former, and 10*l.* to the latter, for the use of their poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 33 houses, and about 360 inhabitants in the whole parish, whereof 14 were freeholders in the Gloucestershire part; yearly births 8, burials 8. Atkyns. In the year 1776, there were 54 houses, and 265 inhabitants in the Gloucestershire part; and the souls in the hamlet of Marston are computed to be at least 200.

MICKLETON.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftesgate, seven miles distant from Evesham in Worcestershire, five north from Campden, and thirty-one north-eastward from Gloucester.

It is situated in the vale part of the county, and consists wholly of rich pasture land. The name signifies the great town, from the old word mickle, muckle, which is still used for great in Scotland, and is now obsolete in this part of our island. And it was very properly so called, for whilst the neighbouring parishes consisted of three or four, and some of five or six hides of land, it appears from Domesday, that there were no less than four hundred in Mickleton, independent of the hamlets of Mopton and Hidcote.

Meen-hill, standing between this parish and Queinton, is no less beautiful on account of the richness of its verdure, than conspicuous from its situation in the midst of the vale. Part of it lies in this parish, and part in Queinton, under which head more may be read in its commendation from the good old poet Drayton, as well as some account of the camp on its top, and of the battle said to have been fought there.

Giles Widows, and Thomas his brother, were natives of this place, and zealous friends to the royal cause in the great civil war. The former distinguished himself as a clergyman, by his loyal sermons, preached at Oxford, whilst that city was garrisoned by king Charles the First. He died in 1645. Thomas was successively master of the schools at Gloucester, Woodstock, and Northleach, and author of a satyrical piece intituled, The Just Devil of Woodstock, giving an account of the frightful apparition that disturbed the parliament commissioners in the sale of the king's lands. He died in 1655.

That great and eminent lawyer, sir Anthony Keck, was also born here, in 1630, and was constituted one of the lords commissioners of the great seal of England, in 1688. At his death, he left a large estate to his son Francis Keck, of Great Tewe in Oxfordshire, esq; which is still enjoy'd by his descendants.

But not less eminent for learning than either of the forementioned persons, was Mr. Richard Graves, lord of this manor, who died in the year 1729. With great diligence he employ'd the latter part of his life time to investigate, and to give an historical account of the antiquities of the country in this neighbourhood; but his papers were never published, and the editor of the present work greatly regrets the misfortune of not being able to avail himself of them.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor was in the crown in the year 960, in the reign of king Edgar. Æthelmere, or Ailmer, earl of Devonshire, gave it, with the advowson of the church, to the abbey of Eynsham in Oxfordshire, which he founded in the year 1005, for monks of the Benedictine order. In Domesday it is thus recorded:

'The church of Egletham holds Muceltude in 'Celfledetorn hundred. There are fourteen hides,
'and five plow-tillages in demean, and twenty
'villeins, and eight bordars, with ten plow-tillages.
'There are eight servi, and two ancilla, and 'twenty-four measures of salt from Wich. It is 'worth and was worth 10*l.* The same church
'held it in the time of king Edward.' D. B. p. 72.

The abbat of Eynsham pleaded his right to court leet and free warren, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto brought against him, 15 E. 1. and his claim was then allowed, as it was again 34 E. 3.

By the dissolution of the abbey, the manor came to the crown, and it was not alienated 'till queen Elizabeth Elizabeth, in the year 1591, granted it to Richard Lukenore, and others, in trust for John lord Lumley, who, in the year 1597, sold it to Edward Fisher, esq; who died seized of it in 1627. Sir Edward Fisher, his son, succeeded him, whose son, Edward Fisher, esq; sold this estate, in the year 1656, to Richard Graves, esq; who also purchased the manors of Weston-Subedge, Aston-Subedge, and the royalty of the hundred of Kiftesgate.

Richard Graves, esq; dying in 1669, was succeeded by his son and heir Samuel Graves, who died in 1708. His son, Richard Graves, esq; succeeded him, and was father of Morgan Graves, esq; who died about the year 1771, and was succeeded by his son and heir Walwyn Graves, esq; the present lord of this manor, and of those of Weston-Subedge, and Aston-Subedge, and of the royalty of the hundred of Kiftesgate. His arms are, Gules, an eagle display'd Or, as I find them, with many quarterings, on the monuments for this family, in the church of Mickleton. He has a good house, and a large estate here, and in other parts of this county, and elsewhere.

The earl of Coventry has also a good estate in this parish.

John de Vall was seized of lands in Mickleton 36 E. 3. as were William Grevil of Campden 3 H. 4. and sir John Burge 11 E. 4. William Dalby and his wife levied a fine of lands in Mickleton 11 H. 7.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Hidcote is a tithing in this parish, distinguished by the additional name of Bateram, from another Hidcote in the parish of Ebrington. In Domesday it is thus recorded :

'The church of Wincelcumbe holds Hidicote in Celfede hundred. There are two hides free, and one plow-tillage in demean, with one servus. It is worth and was worth 40s.' D. B. p. 71.

This estate was afterwards vested in the priory of Bradenstoke in Wiltshire, and at the dissolution of that house, was granted by the crown to John Wyley and John Scudamore 37 H. 8. The manor now belongs to Thomas Edwards Freeman, of Batsford, in this county, esq.

2. Clopton is another tithing. 'William Gqizenboded holds Cloptune in Ceolfede hundred. A house-carle held it in the time of king Edward. There are ten hides, and three plow-tillages in demean, and twelve villeins, and four bordars, and one radechenister, with nine plow-tillages. In Wicelcumbe there is one burgage [belonging to it.] It was worth 8*l.* now 100s.' D. B. p. 74.

This manor was given to the priory of Bonhommes at Eddington in Wiltshire, and was granted by the crown to Michael Ashfield 32 H. 8. It afterwards passed to the family of the Overburies, then to Thomas Rowney, of Oxfordshire, esq; and was given by a descendant from him to the honourable Mr. Noel, who is the present lord of the manor, and proprietor of a considerable estate in this place.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, worth 80*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Benjamin Feild is the present incumbent.

The rectory belonged to the abbey of Eynsham, and was granted to Roger Mannors, esq; 18 Eliz. and now belongs to the honourable Mr. Noel, who has all the great tithes; and the vicar hath all the vicarial tithes. Tithes in Mickleton and Hedecot belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6.

Twenty-eight acres belong to the glebe.

The church is very handsomely pewed. It consists of a nave and two side ailes, with a large chancel, and a gallery at the west end, and a spire steeple in the middle, with six bells.

In the window of the north aile, are several scutcheons with the family arms of Graves, impaling those of Bates and Swan; also France and England quarterly. In two compartments, it is thus written in the Saxon character :

Benefactions.

In the year 1513, Richard Porter of Campden, gent. gave a messuage and yard-land in Mickleton, and a close in Overton, now worth 60*l.* a year; which income, by a decree in chancery, is first to repair the church, then 20*l.* a year to be paid to the master of a free-school, and the remainder, if there should be any, to go to the poor.

In 1612, at the inclosing of the fields, thirty-three acres of land, called Horestone, were laid out by the land-owners, for the poor.

In 1623, Mr. Thomas Perks of this place, charged his four meadows next Long Marston-way, with 20*s.* a year to the poor.

In 1678, Mrs. Dorothy Swan charged Tym's close with the payment of 40*s.* a year, 10*s.* of which to the minister for a sermon on Christmas-day, the rest to be given in bread to the poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 83 houses in this parish, and about 375 inhabitants, whereof 54 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 8. Atkyns. But by the parish register it appears that in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptisms were 73, and the burials 63; which is widely different from sir Robert's account. Also in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 106, and the burials 97. And in the year 1773, there were 68 householders, and only 231 inhabitants. This account is more unfavourable to population than any I have found throughout the county, yet I have great reason to think think the numbers are accurately taken, as I counted the names upon the register myself; and the minister gave me the number of souls in his parish. The whole parish is in dairy and grazing, in which fewer hands are employ'd than in tillage.

M I N E T Y.

THE church lies six miles distant westward from Cricklade in Wiltshire, six eastward from Malmesbury, and twenty-five south-eastward from Gloucester. The parish church, the parsonage, the vicarage house, and a very small hamlet, called Wiltshire-row, lie in the hundred of Malmesbury in Wiltshire; the rest, and far the greater part of the parish, lies in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety in Gloucestershire. But the whole parish is detached from the body of this county, and totally invironed by Wiltshire.

This place in part gives name to the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety. What Crowthorne, the other part, signifies, will be the subject of immediate inquiry. When king Henry the Fourth came to the crown, all those places now lying in this hundred were comprised in that of Cirencester, there being then no such hundred as Crowthorne and Minety, which was erected soon afterwards upon the following occasion. The townsmen of Cirencester having suppressed a dangerous rebellion in the first year of that reign, the king, at their request, granted them a Statute-Merchant, and other privileges, particularly that the town should from thence-forward be a separate hundred, and hold a distinct torn, or court. And all those villages which 'till then belonged to the hundred of Cirencester, together with Minety, which was part of the manor of Cirencester, and the precincts of the abbey, were erected into a new hundred, and a distinct torn, or court, was held for them. The court held within the town was called the hundred of Cirencester, and so for some time was the other, but it was necessary to distinguish them. The In-torn, or hundred within the town, retained the old name, whilst the new torn, or court, held without it, received the appellation of Tb' Out-torn and Minety; and in process of time has been corrupted, by vulgar speakers and ignorant writers, to the unmeaning name of Crowthorne and Minety. Thus, the proper and significant name being lost, the new one was supposed to be taken from a place within the district, and some very sagacious person fixing on a thorn-bush in Stratton field, declared it to be the place in question. The solution was easy, and suited the vulgar. The notion was inconsiderately adopted upon the credit of tradition, and it has for some time appeared in history.

The names of several other hundreds are as strangely corrupted as this. I shall instance one only. It was antiently and properly written Grimboldestow, i. e. Grimbold's-place; but at length the original signification was lost, and, for a course of five hundred years, it has been written nearly as we now write it, Grumbald's Ass; and I have no doubt but there are many persons who pretend to know the very tree which gave name to that hundred. But I return from this digression to the parish of Minety.

Some part of it was full of wood in its antient state, as appears by king John's confirmation of former grants to the abbey of Cirencester, wherein he reserves his forest of Minchey, which I apprehend to be what we now call Brecon.

Minety is situated in a vale, and consists chiefly of rich pasture land, some wood land, and very little arable. Here they make very good cheese, as they do also in most parts of North Wiltshire, with which this parish is intermixt. But the most uncommon and remarkable of its natural productions is a kind of fibrous talky substance, white, opaque, and laminated, called by some the Silver Mica, by others the Fibrous Plaisier-stone. It is found in many parts of the parish, at the depth of nine or ten feet from the surface. There is also a spring of purging water, formerly much recommended by physicians, and drank by great numbers of people; but since so many springs at other places have been frequented, it has sunk into neglect, and is at present very little regarded.

Should business or curiosity lead a stranger into this country, I advise him to make his visit in the summer, lest he be either drowned, or stifled in the mire; for here Swill-brook overflows its banks, and fills the road (through which travellers must pass) with water from three to eight feet in depth, and notwithstanding some have lost their lives, and many others are endangered every year, there is no order taken to carry off the water, nor to raise the road; so insensible, from habit, are these people to inconvenience and danger.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In the reign of king Richard the First, the town of Cirencester, and the town of Minchey or Minety, with the appurtenances, made and were the manor of Cirencester, as it is expressly mentioned in an inquisition taken 1 H. 4. in order to discover the particulars of that manor. And it is very probable, that at the time of the general survey, Minety was included in the account of the manor of Cirencester, wherefore we find no mention of this place in Domesday.

King Richard the First, in the ninth year of his reign, granted the manor of Cirencester to the abbey of that place, including so much of the town of Minchey as lay in Gloucestershire, and which was a member and barton of that manor; but he reserved his forest of Minchey, as already taken notice of. Another part of Minchey or Mynety, which lay in Wiltshire, belonged to the abbey of Malmesbury. John de Canning held Minety of the abbey of Cirencester, 20 E. 3. After

After the dissolution of abbies, this manor was granted to Edward Bridges and Dorothy Praye 36 H. 8. Sir Edmond Bridges, lord Chandos, knight of the garter, died seized of Minety 15 Eliz. and livery of it was granted to Giles lord Chandos, his son and heir, the same year. Grey lord Chandos was lord of this manor in the year 1608. The reversion of the manor of Minety was granted to sir William Sandys, and Thomas Spencer, 3 Jac. Lord Rivers is the present lord of the manor, and keeps a court leet here. See Sudely.

Adam de Periton purchased lands in Minety of Hugh de Peverell 33 H. 3. Other lands in Minety, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to William earl of Southampton, and to his heirs male, 31 H. 8. The same were afterwards granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, in the thirty-fifth year of that reign, and were again granted to John Pope 36 H. 8. Lands in Minety, and the tithes of the demans which belonged to the same priory, were granted to William Fitz-Williams and Arthur Hilton 7 E. 6.

There are several estates of inheritance in this parish, held of the lord by copy of court-roll, after the custom of the manor, which can neither be alienated nor incumbered but by surrender in court.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the diocese of Sarum, worth about 90*l.* a year. The archdeacon of North Wiltshire is patron, and Mr. Bricken- is the present incumbent. The impropriation belongs to the same archdeacon.

The church stands in Wiltshire, and therefore does not properly fall under consideration; yet as the greater part of the parish lies in Gloucestershire, I shall give some account of it. It is dedicated to St. Leonard, and consists of the nave, and an aisle on the north side, and has a low embattled tower, with pinnacles, and a ring of six bells at the west end. Round the canopy over the pulpit is written in capitals, FIDES EX AUDITU, VERITAS AUTEM PER VERBUM DEI. ROM. 10, 17.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

The most antient monument is a brass plate set in the wall of the aisle, and divided into two compartments by a pillar engraved in the middle. On the dexter side of it, are engraven the effigies and names of Nicholas Powlett, and Ames Powlett, son, kneeling; and over the father's head are the arms, Sable, three swords in pile, the points in argent, pomels and hilts Or. The crest stands separate on one side of the arms, A dexter arm bent, brandishing a broad sword, all proper; and the motto on a label on the other side, GARDES TOY. On the sinister side of the pillar, facing the church, are the figures of Mary Powlett, his wife, Elizabeth, Mary, and Edith, their daughters, kneeling, with the wife's family arms, Sable, two lions passant guardant, in chief three plates, a crescent for difference, for Hungerford; with the crest on one side, A garb erected between two sickles proper. And on the other side, Three sickles braced in a triangle. I take this Nicholas Powlett to be the second son of sir Hugh Poulett, who died in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and was ancestor to the present earl Poulet.

Upon a marble table in the chancel, it is thus written :

Near this place lyeth the body of CHARLES PLEYDELL of Minty, the youngest Son of S^r CHARLES PLEYDELL of Midg-Hall, K^t. in the County of Wilts, who died the 15th Day of June 1704, Aged 76.

Lyeth also near this place the body of ARABELLA his Wife, the youngest daughter of S^r ROBERT LOVET of Lyfcomb in the County of Bucks, who died the 24th day of June, 1704, Aged 72.

This Marble was erected to their Memories by W^m PLEYDELL, Vicar of Wotton-Basset in the County of Wilts, their Son and Heir. — Arms, at the top of the monument, Per pale, baron and femme, 1. Argent, a bend gules gutty d'Or, between two Cornish choughs proper, a chief counter compony Or and sable. 2. Argent, three wolves passant in pale sable, langued gules.

There is also a monument and memorial for some of the descendants from Charles Pleydell; a memorial for Joseph Not, who died in 1705; and another, upon a flat stone, for Godfrey Jenkinson, vicar of this place, who died the same year.

William Penn, ancestor to sir William Penn, the admiral, and to the present proprietor of Pensylvania, died in the year 1591, and was buried in this chancel. Atkyns. But I could find no memorial for him.

At the beginning of this century, there were 96 houses, and about 480 inhabitants in the Gloucestershire part, whereof 32 were freeholders. In Wiltshire-row were 9 houses, and about 40 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly births 12, and burials 10. Atkyns. There are only 5 houses at present in Wiltshire-row, yet the inhabitants in general are computed to be about the same number as above. The freeholders, however, fall short of the number mentioned by sir Robert Atkyns. It is supposed he included the copyholders of inheritance.

M I N S T E R W O R T H.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of the Dutchy of Lancaster, in the Forest division, six miles north-east from Newnham, seven east from Mitchel-Dean, and three south-west from Gloucester. It extends near three miles in length, and consists of rich meadow and pasture, with some arable land, and has a very large common lying on the south side of it next the Severn.

The turnpike-road from Gloucester to Newnham runs through it, by the side of the river, which has a bold shore, finely wooded, and breaks upon the view in a very agreeable manner, in the course of the road between those places.

It is almost singularly circumstanced, in not being limited by the Severn, as other parishes are that lie on the banks of that large river, but stretching over it, has some of its lands intermixed with Elmore parish, on the opposite side, at a place called Elmore's Back. How a division so unnatural and extraordinary could originally take place, is difficult to conceive, unless the abbey of Gloucester having lands in Elmore, by its influence procured them to be allotted to the parish of Minsterworth, where they had larger possessions.

Part of this parish lay formerly in the hundred of Westbury, and part in that of Langebrige, now included in Dudston and King's-barton; but when the Dutchy hundred was first erected, this parish and Bully were taken out of the hundred of Westbury, which at that time had some other places added to it by way of compensation, as appears by comparing those which lay in that hundred when Domesday was compiled, with those of which it consisted some ages afterwards.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The church of St. Peter of Glowec' holds Hamme and Mortune in Wesberies hundred. 'There are five hides in wood and in plain, and two plow-tillages in demean, and seven villeins, and two bordars, with six plow-tillages; a wood one mile long, and one broad. The church had venison in three parks in the time of king Edward, and so she hath in the time of king William. It was worth 20s. now 40s.' D.B. p. 71.

The reader may possibly be surprized, that in the above abstract from the record, Minsterworth is not so much as mentioned. The reason is, that there was then no place so called. Its original name was Mortune, which signifies the town or place upon the great water, from Mor, British, the sea, or some very large river. This is perfectly descriptive of the situation of Minsterworth. And that Mortune could be no other, I am induced to believe for the following reasons.

All the other places in Westbury hundred are expressly mentioned in that record by their present names, or by such as, varying but little from the present, cannot be mistaken, viz. Neunham, Staure, Hope, Bicanofre, Dene, Bulelege, and Rodele. Beside these, the manor of Hamme and Mortune lay in the same hundred. Now Hamme must be either Hampton, a place at present so called in this parish, or else Churcham, the next adjoining parish. And as Hamme and Mortune were originally joined in one manor, where is the latter so likely to be situated as adjoining to the former? Besides, we find the very name still subsisting in that of the hamlet of Morcote, in Minsterworth; for what is Morcote but a contraction of Mortune-cote. Here the Severn frequently overflows its banks, and makes a kind of sea, by laying the ham or common under water, which corroborates the foregoing arguments that the antient name of Minsterworth was Mortune; for the names of places are mostly descriptive of their situations, or expressive of some accidents attending them.

This Mortune was afterwards called Minsterworth, because it belonged to the minster or abbey of Gloucester; which alteration in the name took place sometime before the reign of king John, for the records mention, that Henry de Bohun was created earl of Hereford in the first year of that king's reign, and had the Tertium Denarium Comitatus granted to him, in consideration that he had released all his right in his lands in Dimmock, Minsterworth, and Rodley, to the king, the same year.

The records, and other evidences of the following dates, shew to whom this manor descended down to the present time. Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, was seized of Minsterworth 43 H. 3.

Walter de Stukeley, the sheriff of Gloucestershire, being commanded by the king's writ to return into the exchequer the names of all the cities, boroughs, and vills in every hundred in his said county, certified that Henry de Lancaster was lord of Mynsterworth and Rodley, in the hundred of Westbury, 9 E. 1. Edmond earl of Lancaster, the king's brother, was seized of the same, and his right to court-leet and free warren therein was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. He gave this manor and that of Rodley, or Rodele, to William Grandison, brother and heir to Otho de Grandison, who was summoned as a peer to parliament 27 E. 1. This William had been a domestic servant to the earl, and these manors were given to him and his heirs male in reward for his services.

On default of the male heirs of William Grandison, this manor reverted to the house of Lancaster, and accordingly we find that Henry duke of Lancaster died seized of it 35 E. 3. He left two daughters, of whom Maud, the eldest, was married to William duke of Bavaria, and surviving her husband, died seized of this manor 36 E. 3. John de Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, married Blanch, the younger daughter, who together levied a fine of Minsterworth, Rodley, and Tiberton, to the use of themselves in special talle 39 E. 3.

Sir Fulk Boucher, lord Fitz-Warren, died seized of it 19 E. 4.

The manor of Minsterworth, late belonging to the dutchy of Lancaster, was granted to the archbishop of York, and several other great persons, in trust, 3 H. 5. and was afterwards held by several leases granted from the crown to various persons at yearly rents, 'till the same was granted in fee to Salter and Williams, 7 Jac. 1. under an annual rent of 20 l. 6 s. 11 d. Mr. Pury was lord of it about the middle of the last century, whose heir about the year 1704, sold it to Mr. Thomas Burgeffe. From his heir it passed by purchase to Mr. Cook of Highnam, whose only daughter and heir sold it to Charles Barrow, esq; who is the present lord of this manor, and has a handsome some feat here, called Hygrove, commanding an extensive prospect over the vale on the east side of the river Severn. He is the heir male of the Barrows, otherwise Berrows, of Field-Court and Awre in this county, and one of the representatives of the city of Gloucester, for which he has sat in five successive parliaments. His arms are, Argent, three bears heads erased sable, muzzled Or, a chief azure, as I find them on a monument in Quedgley church.

There are some copyhold estates of inheritance in this parish, held according to the custom of the manor, which custom is, that if a tenant die without male heir, and leave more daughters than one, such estate goes to the eldest of them, as at Cheltenham, and some other places.

In this manor, and at Rodley in the parish of Westbury, acknowledgments are paid to the lord for fishing in the river Severn, some of which were antiently called Prid-gavel, from the old word Gavel, a rent, and Pride, the name of a kind of wicker'd putt, or pouchin, which is laid in the water to catch the fish. So that Prid-gavel seems not to have the least relation to Lampreys, as sir Robert Atkyns, and some others, after him, have fancied.

There is a considerable estate in this parish called Hatheways, from Ralph Hatheway, who was seized thereof by the title of a manor 5 E. 2. The records 14 E. 2. mention Henry Casy, and 15 E. 2. Walter Helvin, as being each of them seized of a manor in this parish; but they were not distinct manors. The fact is, that here, as in many other places, the owners of estates having little tenements erected on several detached parcels of their lands, granted some on leases for lives, and sold others absolutely, reserving small chief-tents, and thereby dignified their estates with the titles of manors, or reputed manors, tho' they had no copyhold tenants, which are necessarily incident to courts baron.

Bogo Gofeline was seized of a rent of 7*l.* 9*s.* in Minsterworth 13 E. 2.

Thomas Sayvill and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Minsterworth to John Wordroff and others 16 R. 2. John Elis de Fishley and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Minsterworth to the use of themselves in fee taille, the remainder to Alice their daughter, 7 H. 4. Roger Gregg and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Minsterworth to the use of John Daberton, and to the right heirs of Alice 7 H. 6.

Lands formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to Thomas Reeves and Christopher Bullet 5 Mariae. But the messuage called Leedwood House, which sir Robert Atkyns, by mistake, represented as lying in this parish, is in Yorkshire, tho' inserted in the forementioned grant to Reeves and Bullet.

HAMLETS. 1. Morcote, or Boyfield, is a hamlet and manor, or at least a reputed manor, in this parish. The names are nearly synonymous.

The Britons called it by the former, from Coed, Br. a wood, because it was a woody place, which, after the conquest, the Normans translated by Bois, a word of the same signification in their language; and thence came Boiville, and Boyfield as it was afterwards written. At the time of the general survey, Morcote lay in a different hundred from Minsterworth, as appears by the following extract:

' William the son of Norman holds Morcote in Langebrige hundred. Ulfegh held it in the time of king Edward. There is one hide, and in demean one plow-tillage, with two bordars. It was worth 8*s.* now 10*s.* This estate doth not pay tax.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

If by Langebrige in the record, which gave name to the hundred, is meant the long bridge at Gloucester, of which I think there can be no doubt, then Nicholas Walred, clerk, was not the first builder of a bridge there, as it is said, in the reign of king Henry the Second, but only built that bridge anew.

Richard Veel was seized of Morcot 16 E. 3. John Boteler of the Park held the manors of the Park and of Morecot 36 E. 3. John Kenn was seized of both manors 6 H. 4. and another John Kenn died seized of one messuage and one plow-tillage in Morecot 16 H. 6. which descended to his son Robert Kenn, esq; who was possessed of them 31 H. 6.

This estate was afterwards purchased by Thomas Elmbridge, who died 27 H. 7. and was succeeded by John his son and heir, and he dying without issue 17 H. 8. sir John Danet, who had married Anne his sister and heir, had livery of Morecot the same year. John Danet, son of sir John, sold this manor to Thomas Atkyns, of Tufleigh, esq; and Thomas Hoard, esq; who married a coheiress of that family, and the reverend Mr. John Chamberlayne of Mauerfbury, descended from the other coheiress, are the present proprietors, and have a good estate in this place.

2. Hampton, lies in the middle part of the parish, adjoining to the great ham or common. It is not a manor, but having antiently a distinct name, intitles it to our notice. Roger Boyfield was seized of one messuage and one yard-land in Hampton, parcel of the manor of Minsterworth, 15 E. 2. It is probable that this Roger Boyfield, or de Boyfield, took his name from the place of his residence in the hamlet of Boyfield, according to the custom of early times.

3. Dunny, lies in the lower part of the parish. It is not called by any particular name in Domesday; but the following abstract seems to relate to it:

' William Goizenboded holds half a hide of land, and half a fishery in Westberie hundred. Alwin the sheriff held this estate, and gave it to his wife. It belonged to the king's farm in Westberie.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

Roger de Staunton gave a yard-land called Duni, in Minsterworth, and a husbandman with his his land, to Gloucester abbey, when Hameline was abbat. Roger earl of Hereford gave half the fishery of Duny to the same church, which king Henry the Second confirmed; and king Edward the Third granted to the monks of that church the other half of that fishery, with the fishery in the standing pools within Minsterworth, at a fee farm rent, in exchange for the church of Wyardsbury, when Adam Staunton was abbat, 18 E. 3. as appears by an Inspeximus and confirmation of those grants 1 R. 2. And these fisheries were afterwards granted with the manor 7 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, to which the king's auditor pays 10*l.* a year, and the impropiator four loads of hay. It has been augmented by the queen's bounty, and is now worth 30*l.* a year. The bishop of Bristol is patron, and Mr. Draper the present incumbent.

Thomas Foliot was possessed of the church of Minsterworth 45 H. 3. and Nicholas le Bath was seized of the advowson 5 E. 2. The rectory was appropriated to St. Oswald's priory in Gloucester 22 R. 2. and the rectory and advowson of the vicarage belonged afterwards to the monastery of Boileau in Hampshire, and were granted to the bishoprick of Bristol 34 H. 8. and the impropriation is now in lease from the bishop of Bristol to Mr. Joseph Brown, for three lives.

The parson was to have tithe of all the fish in the pools on the Severn within this parish, and he enjoy'd the same in Dunny and Minsterworth 15 E. 2.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a double building, supported by pillars in the middle. It had a spire, which was destroy'd, and the bells melted by lightning in the year 1702, and now it has a low tower at the west end.

Benefactions.

Mr. John Hyett, citizen of London, who had been a poor boy of this parish, has given by his last will, dated Sep. 5, 1719, 20*l.* to 'prentice out a poor boy here every second year, in the choice of whom a preference is to be given to the names of Hyett and Phelps.

In the year 1763, Susanna Crump, widow, in her life time, settled an annuity of 4*l.* a year for a school-mistress, to teach ten poor children of this parish to read. Joseph Wintle of Gloucester, gave 20*l.* to be laid out in land, which hath been done in this parish, the rent whereof is to be expended in bread, and given yearly to twenty poor housekeepers in this parish, on Christmas Eve.

At the beginning of this century, there were 60 houses, and about 300 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 7. Atkyns. The houses are now between 60 and 70, and the inhabitants about 300; but the parish was formerly more populous, and had upwards of 100 houses in it, as appears by a yearly payment to the lord of 2*d.* for every house, and for every meese-place where a house formerly stood, which payment is called Smoak-silver.

MISERDEN, or MUSARDEN.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Bisley, distant about two miles and a half north-east from the town of that name, seven and a half north-west from Cirencester, and nine south-eastward from Gloucester. It is bounded on the south-east by Winstone and Duntsebourne, from which it is separated by the brook Froome; on the south by Edgworth, with Bisley on the west, Painswick and Cranham on the north-west, and Brimpsfield and Side on the north and north-east of it.

The village lies two miles south-westward of the Irminstreet, one of the Roman consular ways. It is situated on the declivity of a hill, fronting northward, which makes it extremely bleak in the winter; but the cold, clear air braces the muscles, and contributes to the health and longevity of the inhabitants. It is nevertheless better suited to hypochondriacal than consumptive habits.

Here is a park about seven miles in circumference, full of fine beech-wood. It is watered by the Froome, which receives a supply at this place, from a confluence of little streams running from Brimpsfield and Winstone, that abound with small trout and cray fish. The uninclosed part of the park resembles a forest. It is a fine recess for game, wild fowl, and many sorts of singing birds; particularly here are seen two birds which are rare in this country, the French pye, and a water-fowl of a fierce nature, whose name I am not acquainted with. The enthusiastic lover of nature, walking in the flowery glades of this retreat, might fancy himself in the primeval groves of our first progenitors.

Seated in a valley in this park is a mount of a circular form, now overgrown with trees. It is the scite of an antient castle, built in the reign of king John, by Ralph Musard, one of the great barons of the realm, and lord of this manor. It is called Castle-hill, and the piece of ground below it, Castle-meadow. Part of the moat which inclosed the building is still to be seen, and large hewn stones were dug up, and an apartment discovered beneath the rubbish, on this mount, a few years ago, but of no great extent; for the materials of the castle had been removed, according to tradition, and appropriated to the building of the present manor-house. The scite of the castle is most most romantically encompassed with adjacent woods and hills; and upon that spot a little hermitage might be erected, which would have the accompaniments of bubbling waters, impenetrable shade, and the various notes of the feathered tribes to heighten the idea of solitude and retirement.

The latter part of the name of the village was suggested by the situation of the castle, for den, signifies a dale, a glyn, a deep valley, or woody place. The former part of the name is that of a family who held the manor, from the conquest till the reign of king Edward the First; but the village was not called Mufarden, but Grenhamstede, till some time after it was the residence of that family, as appears by Domesday-book.

Hazlehouse is the feat of William Mills, esq; who served the office of high sheriff of this county in the year 1756. At Hazlehouse-yate, now called the Camp, are several barrows, one of which was opened about forty years ago, and the skulls and skeletons of eight bodies found lying in order in a vault beneath, which was then decently closed up again. There is another of those barrows in the west field, near the Gloucester road, which a few years since was found to contain human bones, and an urn, supposed to be Roman.

The face of this country is very uneven. The lands are mostly arable, and bear good crops. About 300 acres lie in downs and common-fields. Wild thyme grows in great plenty, and the various species of the Orchis are found here. Much of the beech-wood in this parish and neighbourhood, of which there is great abundance, is converted into gun-stocks for Birmingham market, and of some they make charcoal. Here is a very good and durable sort of tiles for covering houses, which are sold at 5s. a thousand; but the difficulty of the roads is a great obstacle to the sale of them.

The clothing business is carried on very extensively in the adjoining places to the southward and westward, but there are only two clothiers in this parish, by whom the women and children are chiefly employ'd in spinning woollen yarn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following is a translation of the antient record respecting the manor:

'The same Hascoit [Mufard] holds Grenhamstede in Biselege hundred. There is one hide taxed. Ernest held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and five bordars, and a priest, and one radchenister. They have between them nine plow-tillages. There are ten servi, and eight acres of meadow, a wood a mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth 100s. and is now worth 7l.' Domesday-book, p. 78.

This Hascoit Mufard attended the conqueror in his expedition against England, as appears by the written's list, and was rewarded with great estates in the counties of Berks, Oxford, Derby, Warwick, and Gloucester; but the principal feat being at Mufarden, those estates were in that respect all comprehended in the expression Baronia de Mufarden, as appears by several records in after ages. Sir William Dugdage speaks of him as being eminent for his piety and virtue, and says he at length became a monk in the monastery of Ely. His arms were to be seen in the windows of the parish church of Tamworth, Gules, a lion rampant argent, crowned Or.

Richard Mufard was son and heir of Hascoit, and Hascoit the second was son and heir of Richard, and had fifteen knights's fees 12 H. 2. He died 33 H. 2. and was succeeded by Ralph his son and heir, who was sheriff of Gloucestershire from the 17 Joh. to 9 H. 3. He married Isabel the widow of John de Nevill, without the king's licence, and paid a hundred marks for his transgression. He was a baron, and built the castle as before observed, and dying 14 H. 3. was succeeded by Robert his son, who entering upon his lands without suing forth livery, his castle of Mufarden and all his lands were seized into the king's hands, but were shortly after restored upon composition. He died without issue, when Ralph Mufard, his brother, was a minor, in ward to Jeffrey Despencer, who paid 500 marks to the crown for his wardship. Ralph had livery of his lands 31 H. 3. and died 49 H. 3. Ralph, son of the last Ralph, died 1 E. 1. and was succeeded by John Mufard, who had livery of the manor of Mufarden 15 E. 1. and died two years afterwards. Nicholas Mufard, uncle to John, and youngest brother of Ralph, had livery of this manor 17 E. 1. and died without issue 29 E. 1. whereby sir Ralph Frescheville, son of Amicia, his elder sister, then dead, and Margaret his sister then living, and Joan, (wife of William de Chelardiston) the daughter and heiress of Isabel, his third sister, then dead, were his heirs, and had livery of the manor of Mufarden granted to them 29 E. 1.

This manor soon after came to Hugh le Despencer the younger, who being attainted in the turbulent reign of king Edward the Second, it was granted to Edmond of Woodstock, earl of Kent, youngest son of king Edward the First, who being also attainted, and beheaded at Winchester in the beginning of the reign of Edward the Third, it was granted to Geoffry Mortimer, son of Roger Mortimer, earl of March. This earl was also executed at Smithfield the same year, his sons attainted by parliament, and the sons of Edmond of Woodstock restored in blood. John, son of Edmond of Woodstock, died seized of Mufarden 26 E. 3. which Elizabeth, his widow, held in dower 'till her death, 12 H. 4.

Joan, commonly called the Fair Maid of Kent, was sister and heir to John. She was married to sir Thomas Holland, who in her right was created earl of Kent. Elianor, sister and coheiress of the Hollands, was married to Roger earl of March, in the reign of king Edward the Third, and Edmond Mortimer was their son and heir; but he dying without issue, the manor of Musfarden, or Miserden, descended to Anne, sister and coheirefs of Edmond, who was married to Richard duke of York, heir to the crown of England; whereby this manor descended to his son, king Edward the Fourth, and continued in the crown 'till the latter end of the reign of king Henry the Eighth.

The manor and park of Miserden were granted to sir Anthony Kingstonⁿ 38 H. 8. in whose family they continued down to William Kingston, esq; who was lord of the manor in the year 1608. He sold it to Henry Jernegan the younger, son and heir of Henry Jernegan the elder, of Coffey in the county of Norfolk, esq; of whom it was purchased by sir William Sandys^o, of Fladbury in Worcestershire, and hath descended thro' several collateral branches, down to Samuel Sandys, esq; the present lord of the manor.

The manor-house stands upon an eminence in the park, which is a collection of hills. The best front is on the side next the garden to the south-east. The court and offices stand to the north-west. It is seen for many miles round, except to the south-west, where the hills are a little above it. There are many handsome apartments in it, particularly the dining-room, with a large chimney-piece ornamented with the Sandys's arms. The story of Jephthah is well executed in tapestry, and the old furniture, remaining in the drawing room, bespeaks the taste and grandeur of its former inhabitants. In the hall was a compleat suit of armour. In the garden are many yew-trees of an extraordinary size and shape.

ⁿ Sir William Kingston, son of sir Anthony, was provost-marshal in the reign of king Edward the Sixth. He seems to have been a man divested of common humanity, and his name is preserved in history to be execrated for his infamous, sportive cruelty. He ordered the mayor of Bodmin to erect a strong and lofty gallows in the market-place, and after feasting with him in a familiar manner, caused him to be truss'd up on it to experience its strength and firmness. A miller who had been concerned in some insurrection in the same country, flying from his house, his man pretended to be the master, wherefore sir William caused him to be executed, saying, he could do his master no better service than to be hanged for him. This was the behaviour of him to whom the king had intrusted the administration of justice, and who for the sake of a joke, condemned and executed the innocent for the guilty.

^o This antient family is descended from William Sandes of Rottenby-castle in the parish of St. Bees in Cumberland, whose son William married the daughter of ——— Bonham; and had issue William Sandes, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of William Rawson, of the county of York, and cousin and heir to ——— Rawlinson, abbat of Furnes in Lancashire; and a daughter Margaret, married to Richard Bray, a privy counsellor to king Henry the Sixth.

Which last William Sandys had issue three sons, George, who married the daughter of ——— Curwin; William, and Oliver.

George had issue William Sandys, who married Margaret, daughter of John Dixon, by which marriage the antient houses of Roos and Sandys were united. They had issue six sons, and two daughters; George, slain at Musselborough field, in 1547; William, who married the daughter of ——— Strickland, of Westmoreland; Edwin, who was arch-bishop of York; from whom the present lord Sandys of Omberley in the county of Worcester is descended; Christopher; Miles, from whom the last lord Sandys was descended; and Anthony. Archbishop Sandys was an excellent man, and suffered a years imprisonment on account of his attachment to the reformed religion, in the reign of queen Mary. He was vice-chancellor of Cambridge, where, in the time of trouble, most of his former acquaintance deserted him. After his enlargement from prison, he went abroad, whence he returned at the death of queen Mary, and was made successively bishop of Worcester, of London, and archbishop of York, by queen Elizabeth. His son, sir Edwin Sandys, was a person of great learning and abilities; and George Sandys, the bishop's youngest son, was a most ingenious gentleman, whose book of travels and poetical writings are well known and much esteemed.

Myles Sandys, the fifth son of the said William and Margaret, was of Lattimer's, alias Ischemstead, in the county of Bucks. He married Hester, the daughter of William Clifton, of Barrington in Somersetshire, and had four sons, George, who was knighted, but died without issue; Edwin, who was also knighted; William, who was also knighted; and Henry. He had also three daughters.

Sir Edwin Sandys, the second son, married Elizabeth, sister and heir of William lord Sandys, by whom he had three sons and six daughters. William, who for his prodigality was called Gollen Sandys. He was lord of the manor of Brimpsfield, which he sold to his uncle, sir William Sandys, hereafter mentioned, and died without issue; Myles, who died unmarried; Henry, afterwards lord Sandys of the Vine, in the county of Southampton. The daughters were Bidget, Mary, Dorothy, Amy, Jane, and Hester.

Sir William Sandys, third son of the said Myles Sandys, married Margaret, daughter and heir of Walter Culpepper, of Hanborough in the county of Oxford, esq; by whom he had issue 1. sir Myles Sandys, who had Brimpsfield park and estate settled on him on his marriage with Mary, the daughter of sir John Hanbury, of Kelmarsh in the county of Southampton. He died before his father, and was buried at Miserden. 2. William, who settled in Kent, and was called Water-work Sandys, from his taste in improvements of that kind. 3. Thomas, who died unmarried. They had also five daughters.

Sir Myles Sandys of Brimpsfield had issue three sons, 1. William Sandys of Miserden, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Stephen Soames, of Haydon in the county of Essex. 2. Edward Sandys of Brimpsfield, esq; of whom hereafter; 3. Myles Sandys, who died unmarried. And one daughter Mary.

William Sandys, the eldest son of sir Myles, died in 1647, leaving issue two sons, Myles Sandys, who married Mary, daughter of Stephen Soames, of Thurloe in the county of Suffolk, esq; William, who took to wife Philadelphica Uphill, of Harwell-Rumford in the county of Essex. And one daughter Mary, who died a nun in France.

Myles Sandys, son of William, had issue by his said wife Mary, two sons, William Sandys of Miserden, and Myles, who died unmarried in 1706.

Which William Sandys married Barbara, the daughter of sir William Kerle, of Herefordshire, and dying without issue, was buried at Miserden in 1712. He sold the manors of Brimpsfield and Cranham to his cousin Windfor Sandys the elder, as also Cranham and Winston woods. He left the reversion of Miserden and Winston, subject to his mother's and wife's jointures, to his cousin and heir at law, Windfor Sandys the elder, and his heirs.

I return now to Edward Sandys, the second son of sir Myles Sandys of Brimpsfield. He married Hester, the daughter of Fulke Walwin, of Much Marcle in the county of Hereford, by whom he had issue, 1. Myles Sandys, who left two daughters, who died unmarried; 2. Edward Sandys, who died without issue. 3. Windfor Sandys of Brimpsfield park. 4. Robert Sandys, who died unmarried; 5. Hanbury Sandys; and six daughters, Mary, Anne, Hester, Frances, Dorothy, and Martha.

Windfor Sandys, the third son, married first, miss Aubery, by whom he had issue Aubery Sandys, who died an infant: Secondly, Alice, the daughter of Matthew Lock, of Boddington in the county of Gloucester, esq; by whom he had issue three sons, 1. Windfor Sandys. 2. William Sandys, afterwards a captain. 3. Myles Sandys, of the Middle Temple, esq; who married and died without issue. Windfor Sandys, the father, died and was buried at Miserden in 1729, and was succeeded by his son and heir.

Windfor Sandys, who was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1725, and served that office with great splendor again in 1745. He married Elizabeth, the only surviving daughter and at length heir of Richard Browne, of Gonthrop in the county of Nottingham, and of Illington in the county of Middlesex, esq; and became possessed of the manors of Miserden park and Winston, and dying in 1754, was buried in the family vault at Miserden. He left issue five children, i. e. 1. Browne Sandys, who died unmarried in 1761; 2. Samuel Sandys, the present proprietor of Miserden and Winston; 3. Catherine, married to William Baynton, of Gray's Inn, esq; F. A. S. 4. Anne, and 5. Mary.

Mr. Sandys's arms are, Or, a fess dancetty between two staff crozets fit by gules; a crescent within an annulet for difference.

And notwithstanding the whole now wears the melancholy aspect of desertion and decay, yet few gentlemen's seats have more natural advantages.

In the hamlet of Miserden there are 39 houses, and 166 inhabitants.

HAMLETS. 1. Wishanger. This hamlet is situated a mile north-west of Miserden. A sculf Mufard, of Mufarden, gave Wishanger, then called Rifeanger, to the knights-templars, from whom it went to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem; after whose dissolution, it was granted to sir Thomas Palmer, 6 E. 6. and upon his attainder, it was granted to William lord Howard, 1 Mar. Christopher Bumpsted levied a fine of the manor of Wishanger to John Brown 4 Mar. very soon after which it came into the family of the Partridges. The principal house in this hamlet is the mansion and usual residence of that family, who have enjoy'd this estate ever since, and have possessed many large estates in this county. Mr. John Partridge is the present owner thereof. His arms are, Checky, argent and sable, on a bend gules three escallops Or. Honeycombe is the name of a good house in this hamlet, belonging to the reverend Mr. Mills, the present rector. There is a small valley in this hamlet, called the City, where are several cottages. On the opposite side of the valley is the Camp, where are ten houses. The whole number of houses in this hamlet is 22, and of inhabitants 91.

2. Sudgrove, i.e. Southgrove, is situated on the south-west of the village. There are two good houses built of hewn stone; one of them was the seat of the Warnefords, a knightly family, of which the reverend F. Warneford, LL.D. now living at Sevenhampton in the county of Wilts, is the representative. This house, with the remaining lands belonging to it, was lately purchased by Mr. John Mills. The other is a more modern building, first erected by the reverend Mr. Durston, then rector of Miserden; and afterwards purchased and augmented by Mr. Temple, who sold it to the late William Trye, esq; of the family of the Tryes of Hardwick. His son, Mr. Thomas Trye, disposed of this last patrimony of a once respectable, tho' now declined house, to John Selse, late of Cirencester, esq; who, from its pleasant situation for prospect, agreeable gardens, and plantations, has made it the place of his residence. Milo constable of Gloucester, gave the tithes of Sutgrove-Restald to the church of Lanthony. In this hamlet are 24 houses, and 103 inhabitants.

3. The Slad, or Slade, from the Saxon word Slabe, a slip of ground. There are several places of this name in Gloucestershire, all situated on the slopes of hills. The springs collecting on the sides of such hills loosen the earth, and frequently by their force drive whole acres of ground into the vallies beneath, a remarkable instance of which happened lately at the Throp in the parish of Stroud. Hence the name Slade. This hamlet lies three miles north-west of the village of Miserden, towards Painswick. It contains 26 houses, and 117 inhabitants.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth 140*l.* a year. Samuel Sandys, esq; is patron, the reverend Mr. Giles Mills is the present incumbent. There are ninety acres of glebe, of which forty-four lie in common field.

The church is dedicated to St. Andrew, on whose anniversary the feast is kept. It hath a tower at the west end, with one large bell. There are two cross ailes; that on the south side, with its vault, was built by the late Mr. Temple, and now belongs to Mr. Selse. The north aisle was erected by William Mills, of Hazlehouse, esq; and the present rector.

The parsonage-house was repaired, if not wholly built, by William Wolley, a former rector, the initial letters of whose name are on a sun-dial thus (W 1665 W).

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On the south side of the chancel, separated by a wire lattice, is a fine monument of alabaster, whereon lie the effigies of sir William Sandys and his lady, most curiously wrought, with their crests at their feet. Sir William is in compleat armour, finely gilt; and his lady very richly dressed with point and bracelets, according to the high taste of those times; with their ten children kneeling round the several sides of the tomb, which is decorated with scutcheons of arms. At the head of the tomb against the wall, upon a black marble, is the following inscription in gold letters:

Here Lyeth the Bodie of Sr Will^m Sandys of Mufarden in the Countie of Glouc^r Knight. He departed this Life Mar 2. 1640 Aged 77. And Dame Margaret his Wife, Daughter and Heire of Walter Culpepper of Ha^rborough in the County of Oxon Esquire, and she departed this Life June 13, 1644. Aged 64 Haveinge Issue five Sons & five Daughters

*This monument was made for sir William in his life time. The whole is exquisitely finished and finely preserved. It was executed in Italy, at the expence of 1000*l.* from two paintings of him and his lady, done by sir Cornelius Johnson, which are now in the manor-house.*

Within the rails of the communion table, is a raised tomb decorated with arms, and the effigy in stone of a man in armour, with this memorial:

Here lyeth the Body of William Kingston of Misarden Esquier, Sonne & Heire to Anthony Kingston Esquier who married Mary Daughter to John Washborne of Wichentord in the County of Worcester, Esquier, the which William Kingston was Faithful to his Prince, and Loving to his Country, departed this Life the 12th day of December 1614 Aetatis 39.——The arms are, 1. Azure, a cross Or, between four leopards faces argent, for Kingston; impaling 2. Argent, on a fess gules three roses of the first, between six martlets of the second, for Washbourne.

Near the above, on the north side, a stone monument with the effigies of a man and woman kneeling, kneeling, and four children, with their arms, Cbecky argent and sable, on a bend gules three escallops Or. And the following inscription :

Mr. John Durston, Interred here, was born at Ripple, Worcestershire, educated at Winchester, elected into New Coll: Oxon, presented by that Coll: to the Rectory of Alton, Wilts. Rector likewise of this Church above 40 years, died 29th Feb: 1727 Æ. 82.

At the foot of the steps of the altar is a flat stone, with a patriarchal cross, within a bordure of alabaster. It has no inscription, but was probably intended for one of the Musards.

A flat stone at the entrance of the chancel, at top, Per fess crenelle sable and argent, six crosses patty counterchanged, and this inscription :

In the church-yard is a memorial for Anthony Ockhold and Tacy his wife, 1605. The Ockholds were once freeholders of note in this parish, as were the Clements, and many others, who are now melancholy tho' common instances of the fluctuation of property. The event however, is an incitement to frugality and industry; for generally, property flies from the indolent and profligate, to be cherished and improved by the diligence of the industrious. The Ockholds arms are, Vaire, argent and sable, on a pale gules three leopards faces Or.

Thomas Muggleton, who lies buried in the church-yard 1659, gave by his will to the poor of this parish, (with others) 15 s yearly, charged on lands in Duntisbourn Abbats.

Land-tax at 3 s. in 1770, £ 50 4 0

About the year 1712, the poor-tax amounted to 2 s. in the pound, and at this time (1773) it is advanced to 5 s. in the pound.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 54 houses, and about 250 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 9, burials 6. But in seven years, from 1766 to 1772, both inclusive, it appears that there have been entered in the parish register 80 baptisms, and 68 burials. And the people having been numbered in 1762, they were found to be 112 families, and 460 inhabitants, who occupied 105 houses. Also by an account taken in 1767, the number of souls was 451; and by the last account taken in 1773, there were 111 houses, and 477 inhabitants, of whom 16 were freeholders.

From these data it appears, that the average of annual baptisms is 11.3, and of burials 9.7; that the average of persons to each house is 4.3; and that the proportion of annual burials to the whole number of inhabitants is nearly as 1 to 49, which shews the place to be healthy.

MORTON-HENMARSH.

THIS small parish lies in the upper division of Westminster hundred, four miles distant north from Stow, five south-east from Campden, and twenty-nine north-east from Gloucester.

It lies in the vale, with a ridge of hills on the west of it, whence the water flows down upon the low lands in a wet season, and cannot readily pass off again; wherefore it was called Mortune, from Moor, a marsh, or tract of low ground. Henmarsh, i. e. the old marsh, is almost of the same signification, but of much later standing than the former name. Indeed some persons write Morton in the Marsh, and for aught I know, with equal propriety. But Henmarsh may be, as sir Robert Atkyns seems to think, from Hen, old, and meape, a limit, or boundary, for there is one corner of this parish, about two miles east of the village, which borders on three other counties; and on that spot stands a handsome stone pedestal, about twelve feet high, with a dial at top, and an inscription to inform travellers that This is the four Shires Stone. Oxfordshire lies on the east, Gloucestershire on the west, Warwickshire on the north, and Worcestershire on the south, which happens by Evenlode, a detached part of the last mentioned county, running up to this point.

The Roman Foss leads from Cirencester thro' this place northwards, and the great road from Worcester to London crosses it here, where are two pretty good inns to accommodate travellers. The greater part of the houses are arranged on the sides of the Foss, and about the middle of the village stands a public building upon pillars, which gives gives it something of the air of a market-town. Indeed it had formerly a charter for a market and fair, which it enjoy'd with other privileges a long time; and not more that two centuries back, when many parts of the country were visited with the plague, a market was kept here, and was at that time pretty much frequented.

The abbats of Westminster, who were lords of this manor, have several times endeavoured, by various ways, to encourage the increase of inhabitants, and to raise this place into greater eminence. In the reign of king Henry the Fourth, the abbat procured a charter to exempt the burgesses, as they were then called, from paying toll in the several counties of Gloucester, Oxford, Warwick, and Worcester; and granted them their burgages in fee, paying a small fine upon alienation. They had also a grant of courts for pleas of debt, and for the trial of some criminal actions.

What immediate effect these privileges had, does not appear, but as large plants require room for a vigorous growth, so it is probable that this place lay too near the neighbouring market-towns to become anywise considerable; for Morton, in its present state, is no more than a pretty little village, where the women and children are employ'd in spinning of lincn yarn for coarse sewing threads, cheese cloth, and linseys.

As the place lies upon the Foss, it was natural, on my visit, to inquire after Roman antiquities, when the account in Dr. Parsons's manuscript was confirmed by the inhabitants, that about a mile further northwards, in the fields, at a place called Dorn, great quantities of Roman coins have been formerly found. And not far from thence, but in this parish, are two considerable barrows; whence it seems probable, that there has been a small post or station at or near that place.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Notwithstanding sir Robert Atkyns has appropriated to this place a large extract from Domesday, concerning Moreton, (as he has it) in Celfledestern hundred, yet those particulars have not the least relation to any Morton whatever, but really belong to Nortune, or Norton, in the parish of Weston-Subedge, as may be seen by referring to the printed copy of the record, at p. 78. And what the same learned author asserts, of this manor belonging to the family of the Cormeiles, is equally erroneous. Indeed this place does not appear to have been a distinct manor at the time of the general survey, but as it was antiently part of the parish of Bourton on the Hill, so it seems to belong to the eight hides which the church of Westminster had there, dependent on the large manor of Derhurst.

Domesday specifies the number of hides in each place, belonging to that extensive manor, and declares that, 'Certain radchenisters held part of those lands of the church of Westminster, in the time of king Edward, and tho' they were free men, yet they plowed, harrowed, reaped, and 'mowed at the lord's work;' and that 'Elfrid held half a hide at Montune, and holds the same;' i. e. he held it when the inquisition was taken. This Montune is supposed to be the same with the parish of Morton, for the Saxon m may have been mistaken for the letter n, to which it bears some resemblance.

The abbey of Westminster purchased a charter for a market in this place in the eleventh year, and another charter for a fair, in the fifty-third year of the reign of king Henry the Third.

The learned author to whose labours I am so greatly indebted, observes, that William de Barking, the thirtieth abbat of Westminster, new built the village of Moreton, of which the profits were assigned to observe an anniversary for him, and the overplus to the benefit of the convent. And further, that he purchased the manor-house, and half the forest of Moreton, and two plow-tillages of assart land, and the castle of Moreton Foliot, with a moiety of that manor, and gave them to the convent of Westminster. But he undoubtedly meant Richard de Barking, who was the twenty-second abbat of Westminster, according to Mr. Willis's list, in whose epitaph mention is made of some of these particulars.

At the dissolution of the abbey, the manor was granted to the dean and chapter of Westminster 34 H. 8. Queen Mary regranted it to the abbey, which she had restored, 4 Mariae, but it was again confirmed to the dean and chapter 2 Eliz.

William Bateson, esq; is lessee of the manor, under the dean and chapter, and holds a court-leet here.

Richard Dalby and his wife levied a fine of lands in Moreton-Henmarsh 9 H. 7. Mr. Cresswick has a large estate in this parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Campden. It is a chapel of ease to Bourton on the Hill, and has the same incumbent.

There is no glebe-land. Bourton-farm is tithe free, but the rest of the parish is tithable, and pays 53*l.* 11*s.* yearly for composition.

The church is dedicated to St. David. In the year 1512, pope Julius granted right of sepulture to this parish, the inhabitants of which formerly buried at Blockley in Worcestershire.

Benefactions.

A close called Greenhill was given towards the repair of the church. Mr. Cook, a rector of Bourton, gave 40*s.* yearly to put out an apprentice, as the money should grow sufficient. Several persons have also given small sums, amounting in the whole to 60*l.* to be a stock for the poor.

Land-tax at 3*s.* 1770, £ 42 9 0

At the beginning of this century, there were 120 houses, and about 526 inhabitants in this parish, parish, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 16. Atkyns. But this was not the true average state of the register, for in ten years, beginning with 1700, the baptisms were 157, and the burials 120. And in a like period, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 212, and the burials 131; and the present number of inhabitants is 579; so that they are to the average of annual burials nearly as 44 to 1.

MORETON VALENCE.

THIS parish lies in the vale, in the hundred of Whitstone, eight miles north from Dursley, four west from Painswick, and six southward from Gloucester.

It is laid out in dairy-farms, with some orcharding, and produces good cheese and stout cyder; but it is subject to inundations from its flat and low situation.

Mortune was the antient name of the village, and signifies the town upon the water, as already explained under Minsterworth, and might very properly be given to this place which is washed on the south by the river Froome, and on the west by the Severn. It received the addition of Valence from a family of that name, who were earls of Pembroke, and lords of this manor in the reigns of Edward the First and Edward the Second.

Antient foundations of hewn stones have been found in a piece of ground near the church, which appears to have been moated round, and is supposed to have been the scite of the mansion-house of the Valences, or some of their successors, lords of this manor.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

‘Durand of Glowec’ holds Mortune in Witestan ‘hundred. There are three hides taxed. Auti ‘held it. In demean is one plow-tillage, and ‘four villeins, and six bordars, with three plow-tillages and a half. There are four servi, and ‘twenty acres of meadow. It was worth 4*l.* now ‘40*s.*’ Domesday-book, p. 77.

Robert de Pont de Larch, or Pont de l’ Arch, was seized of this manor 30 H. 3. and gave it, together with several others, to William de Valencia, afterwards created earl of Pembroke, who was son of Hugh le Brun, by Isabel widow of king John, and uterine brother to king Henry the Third, by whom this grant was confirmed 36 regni. He married Joan, daughter of Gwarine de Monte Canisio, or Montchensy, a great baron, (in that age esteemed the Crassus of England, the bequests in his will amounting to above 200,000 marks) and afterwards heiress to William her brother. He was slain by the French at Bayonne, seized of Moreton and Whaddon 23 E. 1. and was succeeded in honour and estate by

Audomar de Valencia, his second and surviving son, who was killed in France 17 E. 2. on account of the part he had taken in the death of the earl of Lancaster, and left no issue, whereby his three sisters became his coheireses. Joan, the youngest, was married to John Comyn of Badenagh, son of John Comyn, one of the competitors for the crown of Scotland. They left only daughters, of whom Elizabeth was married to Richard Talbot of Goderick Castle, ancestor to the earls of Shrewsbury, who, in her right, was seized of a third part of this manor 20 E. 2. and died 30 E. 3.

John earl of Shrewsbury, and Thomas viscount Lisle, joined in levying a fine of the manor of Moreton to sir Richard Bingham, and others, 9 E. 4.

Elizabeth countess of Shrewsbury died seized of Moreton Valence 11 H. 8. and Arthur Plantagenet and Elizabeth his wife had livery granted them the same year.

The manor soon after came to the crown, and was granted to Thomas Cromwell, earl of Essex, and after his attainder, to sir William Kingston 32 H. 8. who dying the same year, livery was granted to sir Anthony Kingston his son and heir.

The manor was afterwards purchased by the Jerninghams of Norfolk. Henry Jerningham, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608. Sir Ralph Dutton was proprietor of this manor when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. James Lenox Dutton, esq; died in the year 1776, and James Dutton, esq; his eldest surviving son and heir, is the present lord of the manor of Moreton Valence, and has a good house on Gab’s-hill, which commands an extensive prospect. For his arms, see Sherborne.

Audomar de Valencia granted two acres and a half in Moreton to the abbey of Gloucester 10 E. 2. Lands in Moreton Valence, lately belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to Edward duke of Somerset 1 E. 6.

H A M L E T S. 1. Horse-Marley, in the upper part of the parish.

3. Epney, which extends down to the Severn. Lands in this place were granted to sir William Kingston.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth 50*l.* a year. It has been augmented by the queen’s bounty. The impropriation, worth 75*l.* a year, belongs to one of the prebendaries of Hereford, whose lessee is patron, and pays the curate 15*l.* a year; Mr. Jones is the present incumbent. Twenty-four acres of meadow and pasture, and eight acres of arable, belong to the glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Stephen, has a large aisle on the south side, and a high embattled tower at the west end. Over the church door is a representation of St. Michael fighting with the dragon, very rudely carved in stone.

Several small parcels of land, worth about 6*l.* a year, are given for the repair of the church. William How gave 20*s.* a year, charged on a piece of ground called Stack's-Bridge, to buy coals in winter for such poor as do not receive alms. The church house, worth 50*s.* a year, belongs to the poor. Sir Edmund Penne, lord of the manor of Longney, gave a donation of bread to the poor, for which a composition of 20*s.* a year was formerly paid, but neither the money nor bread has been paid for more than eighty years past.

N A U N T O N

LIES partly in the hundred of Slaughter, and partly in that of Bradley. It is situated six miles south-westward from Stow, seven south-east from Winchcombe, and nineteen east from Gloucester, and the turnpike-road from Stow to Gloucester runs through the parish near four miles in length. The greater part of the parish is arable land. It has a little brook running thro' it from Guiting, which empties itself into the Windrush, and serves as a nursery to supply that river with trout, for which it is so deservedly famous.

The present name of the village is so corrupted and altered from its original purity, by vulgar use, as not to bear the least resemblance to the ancient and significant appellation. It was written Niwetone in Domesday-book, and was so called, because something later cultivated or inhabited than the other villages in the neighbourhood, in comparison with which it was a New town. It was afterwards written Niuenton, Newinton, and sometimes Newinton in Cottswold, probably to distinguish it from Newinton (now called Naunton) in the parish of Winchcombe, and Newinton, or Newton in Ashchurch.

The parish is of a middling size, situated in a fine open country, but has neither curious fossils, rare plants, nor other uncommon natural productions to distinguish it; and the only custom proper to the place seems to be, that of breaking common called Naunton-downs, on the fourteenth day of May, for depasturing milch-cows, young heifers, and cow-calves only. Antiquities are matters of accident and curiosity, and tho' Naunton has none of them to boast of, yet it enjoys one blessing in a very eminent degree, which may well compensate for all its deficiencies. Whether from its open situation among the downs, free from woods, and far distant from marshy lands and large waters; or occasioned by what other cause I know not, but certain it is, that it enjoys a fine healthy air, scarcely to be equalled, not to be exceeded, by any spot in the kingdom.

Dr. Percival, in his curious inquiries concerning population, and the healthiness of many places in and about Lancashire, finds, that at a village called Estham, one in thirty-five of the inhabitants dies in a year; at Cokey, one in forty-four; at Royston, one in fifty-two; at Edale, one in fifty-nine; and at Hale, which is the healthiest place of all the examples he produces, one dies annually out of sixty-nine: And the result of my own inquiries through this county is nearly the same. But how much more healthy than any of those is the parish of Naunton, where, from the most authentic particulars given at the close of this account, it appears, that not one in a hundred dies in a year! The inhabitants are farmers and husbandmen, living remote from any market-town, and there is not a public house in the village.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There were antiently three manors in this parish, reckoning Ayleworth for one.

' Roger de Olgi holds Niwetone in Salemanesberie hundred of Osbern the son of Richard. There are five hides taxed. Turstan held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, with four plow-tillages and a half. It is worth 3*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 76.

' Cvenild the monk holds nine hides in Niwetone in Salemanesberie hundred of the king, four of which pay tax. Eflmer held them for a manor. In demean are four plow-tillages, and seven villeins, with five plow-tillages: And he has now one plow-tillage, and a mill of 5*s.* and thirteen among the servi and ancillæ. It was worth 8*l.* now 5*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 79.

In tracing the descent of the manor, sir Robert Atkyns has fallen into the grossest errors, by mingling and confounding the records, and appropriating to this parish the particulars which relate to Naunton in Winchcombe. He applies the same abstract from Domesday-book to both places, which serves to shew that this manor, or one of these manors, was held by the abbey of Winchcombe; and then asserts, that this manor continued in the abbey of Winchcombe until its final dissolution; that a lease of lands in Naunton, lately belonging to Winchcombe abbey, was granted to Henry Tracy 36 H. 8. that another grant was made to Henry Tracy and Elizabeth his wife 7 E. 6. and lastly, that the tithes in Naunton did formerly belong to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to sir

Thomas

Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6. Whereas it does not appear that the abbey of Winchcombe ever had any property in this parish, nor had the Tracies any 'till by purchase within a few years past. In short, the above particulars should have been applied to the hamlet of Naunton in Winchcombe.

King Edward the First commanded his sheriff of Gloucestershire to make a return of all the vills, &c. in the said county, with the several proprietors of them; and the sheriff returned, that the prior of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and the prior of the Lesser Malvern were lords of Newnton in the hundred of Salmonsburys, 9 E. 1.

Giles Venfield and John Collet were joint lords of the manor in the year 1608, since which it has been divided between several freeholders. The late William Moore, esq; by his marriage with the heiress of Mr. Collet, claimed this manor; Powell Snell, esq; also claims it, who now pays a fee-farm rent for it to the crown; and Thomas Stone has some pretensions to it; but no court has been held within memory.

John lord Clinton, John Smith, and William Warburton, levied a fine of lands in Naunton to John Twineho and John Underhill 1 R. 3. The capital messuage of Naunton was granted to John Baile who died 1 E. 6. and Thomas Baile, son of John, had livery thereof the same year. Robert Ashton levied a fine of the manor of Naunton to Henry Moody 2 Mar.

HAMLETS. 1. Ayleworth, situated about a mile from the church. It lies in the hundred of Bradley, and gave name to a family who resided here from the time of the conquest 'till the beginning of the present century. In Domesday-book it is thus recorded:

' William Goizenboded holds Ailewrde in Salemanesberie hundred. Aluvin held it in the time of king Edward. There is one hide taxed, and one plow-tillage in demean, and two servi. It was worth 6s. now 3s.' p. 74.

' Gislebert the son of Tuold holds Elewrde in Salemanesberie hundred, and Walter holds it of him. Aluvin held it. There are four hides taxed, and two plow-tillages in demean, and three villeins with two plow-tillages, and six between the servi and ancillæ. It is and was worth 40s.' p. 76.

The subsequent records shew, that Petronella de la Mere died seized of Elworth 47 E. 3. Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, proved his right to court leet and other privileges in this manor, and in Harford, in a Quo warranto brought against him 15 E. 1. At the dissolution of religious houses, this manor belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8. But there was a farm in Ayleworth which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and was granted to Vincent Calmudee and Richard Calmudee, 6 Eliz. Other lands in Ayleworth, and a grove, belonged formerly to the chantry of St. Mary in Westbury, and were granted to Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

Richard Ayleworth had livery of the manor and capital messuage of Ayleworth, with lands lately belonging to St. Oswald's priory; and of a farm called De Lantone, 9 Eliz. But John Ayleworth was seized of lands in Naunton, Calcot, and Ayleworth, as early as 16 E. 4. Joshua Ayleworth, the last of this family, died in 1718, as did his widow the following year, aged ninety, as appears by the parish register, and both were buried in the church, without any memorial. The manor and estate of Ayleworth were purchased by — Herring, esq; but Henry Blagg, of the county of Nottingham, is the present lord of the manor.

2. Harford. ' Gislebert the son of Tuold holds Hurford in Salemanesberie hundred. Alfer held it. There is one hide taxed, and two plow-tillages in demean, and four villeins, and one bordar, with two plow-tillages, and two servi, and a mill of 5s. It is worth and was worth 40s.' Domesday-book, p. 76.

William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, was seized of the manor of Harford 28 E. 3. as was Richard the son of John Browning 2 H. 4. and the priory of Lanthony had lands in Harford and Ayleworth 13 H. 4. William Moore, esq; died seized of Harford, in right of his wife, about the year 1771.

Lower Harford is an estate belonging to Corpus Christi College in Oxford, now in lease to Mrs. Tracy, relict of Thomas Tracy, esq; deceased, and heiress of the late sir William Dodwell.

Bayle-farm is unworthily distinguished by sir Robert Atkyns as a hamlet. It was so called from a family of that name, to whom it belonged, and from whom it went afterwards to the Ayleworths, and is now called Round-hill farm.

Of the Church, &c.

NEWENT.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Botloe, eight miles north-eastward from Mitchel-Dean, thirteen westward from Tewkesbury, and ten north-westward from Gloucester.

It is situated in the north-west part of the county, upon the borders of Herefordshire. It is a large parish, extending full seven miles from east to west, and about six from north to south. By much the greater part of it lies in pasturage and orcharding, for the soil is very deep and good, and better suited to pasture than corn. The roads in this part of the country are so intolerable, that the writer of this account found it necessary to desert his horse, and to travel with a guide on foot from one village to another.

A rill, or brook, called the Ell, runs through the north part of it, and after driving several mills, empties itself into the Leden.

Leland and others say, the name of this place signifies the New Inn, and that it was given it because very antiently an inn was erected here for the convenience of travellers passing between England and Wales, which was then the only house in the place, but others being afterwards added, it increased gradually to the size of a town.

The town once consisted of nine streets and lanes, which are thus enumerated in a small manuscript, intitled Fragmenta Newentensia, kindly communicated to me by Mr. Foley, the resident minister of the place.

1. New Street, or Upper Town, or Altus Vicus, so called in the time of king Henry the Fifth, extending from Ellbridge to Peacock's brook.
2. Lewall-street, from Peacock's brook to the market-place.
3. Church-street, from the market-house, along by the church, to the turnings where the right hand way leading towards Gloucester is called Old Church-street, or the Bartholomew's, and the left hand way, Curryar's-lane.

4. Lux-lane, from Lewall-street southward, as far as the houses are contiguous.

5. Colford-street, from Lux-lane southward, to the cross way that leads from Gloucester to Bowldon, comprehending the green leading towards Colford, in the forest of Dean. This is said to be within the perambulation of the forest.

6. Lift-bridge-lane, leading from the south end of Lux-lane westward, over the bridge towards Bridge-field.

7. Berry-Bar.

8. The Horse-fair.

9. Park-lane, leading from the rock, by the crown, eastward to the parks. But several of these lanes have at this time no houses in them.

It appears that iron has been made in or near the town, before large bellows were driven by water, so as more perfectly to extract the metal from the ore, for here vast quantities of rich iron cinders have been dug, and smelted over again at a furnace in this parish, not many years ago, tho' the furnace has been for some time out of blast. In digging for those cinders, the workmen found several coins of Julius Cæsar, Nerva, Vespasian, &c. and some pieces of fine Roman pottery, now all dispersed or destroyed.

The town had a charter for a market, and two fairs, as early as the reign of king Henry the Third, which was renewed in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. And king James the First granted it a new one, to hold two additional fairs, so that it has now four in the year, viz. on the Wednesday before Easter, the Wednesday before Whitsunday, on the first day of August, and on the Friday next after the 8th day of September. The market was originally on Tuesday, but it is now held on Friday.

The town had formerly a bailiff for its chief officer, mentioned in an antient deed concerning half a yard-land, called Totteland in Newent, granted by Nicholas son of John de Camma, to the abbey of Cormeille and to the said bailiff, to which Reginald de Acle, then sheriff of Gloucestershire, was one of the witnesses, in the reign of king Henry the Third. William White, who lived towards the end of the seventeenth century, was the last bailiff.

There was a small priory here, for some time dependent on the abbey of Cormeille in Normandy, and the court-house adjoining to the church-yard, stands on the scite of the priory-house.

As the priory must have contributed to the growth and increase of the town, by procuring grants of a market, fairs, and other privileges for it, and by the company it drew thither, so the loss of that house was very probably felt by it, at the dissolution of alien priories. But this country, formerly so remarkable for old English hospitality, has sustained a greater loss in the course of the present century, by the general and too fashionable desertion of the manor and other houses by their owners.

Newent, at present, is a small market town, very irregularly built, and tho' there are a few pretty good houses, the greater part are mean buildings, and some covered with thatch at the entrance into the town. It has no manufacture, except a little frame-knitting, nor trade, but with the neighbouring villages for common necessaries. The market, which is held on Fridays, is of necessity small; for the bad condition of the roads makes it almost impossible for carriages to reach it, except on the side next Gloucester, where there is a turnpike-road very ill repaired. Here was formerly a little clothing, and the place where a cloth-mill stood is still called the Tuck-mill pool, but the trade is intirely lost.

' In demean are three plow-tillages, and nine
' villeins, and nine bordars, with twelve plow' tillages. There is a steward having one villein ' and a half, and five bordars. They have amongst ' them all five plow-tillages, and a mill of 20*d.*
' [rent.] There are two servi, and two mills of ' 6*s.* and 8*d.* [rent,] and in wood 30*d.* Durand ' holds one hide of this land of the abbat, and he ' has there one plow-tillage, and five bordars, and ' two servi, with two plow-tillages. There are ' two parks, [or inclosures] which the king hath ' seized. All the manor was worth 4*l.* in the ' time of king Edward, it is now worth 100*s.*
' Durand's hide is worth 12*s.* William the son ' of Baderon holds one yard-land by force.'
Domesday-book, p. 72.

This manor was afterwards confirmed to the abbey of Cormeille, by king Henry the First, by pope Alexander the Third, and by king Henry the Second. See Appendix, N^o. 22, & 23.

The same abbey purchased two several grants of fairs and markets, with other privileges, in Newent, 10 & 37 H. 3. which were allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

King Edward the Third, during his wars with France, seized this manor into his hands; and king Richard the Second, in the 5th year of his reign, granted it to sir John Devereux, and Margaret his wife, and to John and Joan his children, to hold during the war, at the rent of 126*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* which rent was remitted 9 R. 2. But when the college of Fotheringhay, in Northamptonshire, was founded by king Henry the Fourth and Edward duke of York, that king, by virtue of an act of parliament, granted to the said college all the manors, with their appurtenances, that belonged to the priory of Newent, which was subject to the abbey of Cormeille; and at the suppression of alien priories, this grant was confirmed by statute 2 H. 5.

After the general dissolution of religious foundations, the manor of Newent, and a wood called Yarkledon, were granted to sir Richard Lee 1 E. 6. Sir Nicholas Arnold was afterwards lord of it, and sold it to sir William Wintour, upon which occasion he punningly said, There had been fair weather for some time, but now Winter was come. Sir Edward Wintour succeeded his father in this manor, and from him it descended to his son sir John Wintour.

Mr. Thomas Foley purchased it of sir John Wintour, and was succeeded therein by his son Paul Foley, esq; whose son Thomas Foley was the next possessor; and Thomas lord Foley, grandson of the last mentioned Thomas, is the present lord of this manor. He was created a baron by patent, May 20, 1776, and took his seat in the house of peers, on the 22d day of the same month. His lordship's arms are, Argent, a fess within a bordure ingrailed between three cinquefoils sable.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

Besides the town, this large parish contains five tithings, divisions, or holy waters.

1. Compton. Compton-house was formerly called Walden's Court. This house, with a good estate belonging to it, was the property of Reginald Bray, esq; out of whose family it was sold to Mr. Edward Rogers, who left two daughters coheiresses, one married to Edward Bearcroft, esq; an eminent barrister; the other to Mr. Charles Jones, who, in right of their wives, are proprietors thereof.

Carfwell is an antient manor in this tithing, thus described in Domesday: 'Roger de Laci holds Crasowel in Botelau hundred, and Odo holds it of him. Ulfel held it in the time of king Edward, and could go wherever he would. There is one hide and one yard-land, and in demean one plow-tillage, and three villeins, and one bordar, with three plow-tillages. It is worth and was worth 20s.' p. 75. This estate, which was formerly the Pauncefoots, now belongs to Mr. Bromley and Mr. Smith.

The Waters End, or the Scarre, formerly called Atterlord's Place, which was Mr. Dobyns's, is now the property of Mr. Sergeant.

The Hays is an antient place in this tithing. Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds one hide [in] Hege, which [with other lands] he had of Walter de Laci, as a portion with his niece.' Dom. B. p. 78. This formerly belonged to the Walls, and is now the estate of Mr. Pritchard.

2. Maulfwick, in which are comprehended Okely-Clifford, Okely-Pritchard, and Okely-Grandison. These are not always distinguished in the records. Philippa the widow of Henry Masham died seized of Okely 8 H. 4. Elizabeth the widow of Robert Lovell died seized of Okely-Grandison 16 H. 6. Sir James Ormond (son of James earl of Ormond) and Amice his wife levied a fine of it 23 H. 6.

and the latter died seized of this estate in the 35th year of that reign. James earl of Wiltshire was seized of it 1 E. 4. John Roberts and his wife levied a fine of the manor of Okely-court 23 H. 7. The manor of Okely-Grandison belonged to Thomas duke of Norfolk, who being attainted, it was granted to Paul Withepool and others, as a security for money borrowed, 36 H. 8. Thomas Brook, esq; died seized of Okely-Grandison, without issue, 38 H. 8. and Joan Arrowsmith, his sister and heir, had livery thereof 1 E. 6. Mr. Rogers was lord of the manor of Okely, and proprietor of a good estate in this place, at the beginning of the present century, which are now come to Mr. Bearcroft and Mr. Jones, in right of their wives, who were the daughters and coheirs of the late Mr. Rogers. There was formerly a chapel in the manor-house.

Okely-Pritchard is the estate of George Smith, esq.

3. Cugley. William Gerand of Matifden, and Catherine his wife, levied a fine of lands in Cugley 8 E. 2.

Mr. Chin has a good house and estate in this tithing, called the Moat, formerly belonging to the Woodwards.

In the common, at the foot of Yartleton-hill, part of which lies in this tithing, there was formerly a glass-house, and the place where it stood it is still called the Glass-house. Near the top of the same hill is Crocket's Hole, so called, because one Crocket and his companion Horne used to hide themselves there, in the persecuting reign of queen Mary. Horne was taken, and burnt in the yard belonging to the priory-house in Newent, which is not mentioned in Fox's Acts and Monuments. His story is briefly thus, as related by Horne's son, who had it from his mother. Horne was a papist and a man of parts, and meeting with several protestants who had assembled near the side of Yartleton-wood to discourse on religious subjects, at length became a proselyte, and refused to go to mass; for which he was taken before the bishop, in his consistory court at Gloucester, and committed to some prison within the verge of the college. But escaping from it in the night, he returned home, and lay concealed in various manners; at last, his wife being with child was delivered, and an entertainment made at the baptizing of the child, when the mother desired a cutting of some meat, (probably what she knew her husband loved) which having received, she laid it by: This being observed by the midwife, created a suspicion, whereupon she procured an officer to search for poor Horne, whom they found concealed under a vessel with the head out. He was immediately carried to his trial, condemned, and led to the place of execution, singing the 146th psalm, where he suffered with great Christian fortitude. Horne was so well beloved by his neighbours, and his execution so much execrated, that when the news was but whisper'd of queen Mary's Mary's death, the women, (men not daring to appear) took the priest that supply'd the church upon a horse, with his face towards the tail, and leading him thro' the town, sent him away. Fragment. Newentensia.

About the year 1665, one Fairfax, a disbanded foldier, advised by Lilly the astrologer, came down from London, and opened this hole, in hopes of discovering great riches therein, which drew many people thither. Some of them went into the hole, and told incredible things concerning it; at last, one Witcombe going in drunk, and dying there, put an end to all further examination.

4. Boulesdon, or Boldesdon. John Atwood had one messuage and six acres of land in Boulesdon, and being attainted of felony, his lands were seized by the king 29 E. 1. Thomas Boulesdon died seized of this manor 14 E. 4. whose family took their name from this place, where they enjoy'd a considerable estate for several generations. Thomas Porter, esq; had livery of this manor 1 Eliz. Walter Nourse was lord of it at the beginning of this century; but it is now the property of lord Foley. The manor house is down. From a place called the Castle-mount, there is a good prospect over the vale. Woeful-hill in this tithing, is a place where it is said criminals were formerly executed.

5. Kilcot, perhaps from the British Cyll Coed, a hazle-wood. This place is taken notice of in Domesday. 'Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds one hide [in] Chilcot, which he had of Walter de Laci, in marriage with his niece.' p. 78.

Robert de Musgrove died seized of Kilecot 38 H. 3. Bogo de Knovil had a grant of free warren in Kilcot 13 E. 1. and Bogo his son died seized of this manor 12 E. 3. Sir John de Verdune levied a fine of it to sir Richard Pembroke, who granted the same to Thomas Moine 37 E. 3. and Beatreaux the wife of Richard Burly died seized of it 16 R. 2. This manor lately belonged to Walter Nourse, esq; and is now the property of Mr. Lewis, who holds a court leet here.

There was formerly a chapel in this tithing, supposed to have been dedicated to St. Hillary, because the ground where it stood lying high, is still called St. Tilly's Nap, near Ghostly or Gorstly common.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the Forest deanery. It is a vicarage endowed. Lord Foley is patron, and Doctor Foley is the present incumbent.

The rectory belonged to the college of Fotheringhay, and after the general dissolution of religious foundations, was granted to sir Richard Lee, 1 E. 6. It afterwards came to sir John Wintour, who sold it to Edward Warcup, esq; who, in the year 1665, sold it to Paul Foley, esq. His grandson, Thomas Foley, esq; endowed the vicarage, which makes it a very valuable living, worth about 350*l.* a year. The rectory pays 10*s.* a year to the crown.

Dr. John Craister, who died vicar of this church in the year 1737, by his will, gave his library to the succeeding vicars.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is large, and neatly pewed, and the roof is supported without pillars. It has a spire steeple over the porch, with six bells and a set of chimes in it, and a small chancel on the side of the great one. The steeple is 153 feet high from the ground, the top of which was blown down in 1662; and the whole roof of the body of the church fell down on Sunday after evening service, Jan. 18, 1673, but no person was hurt by the fall. The inhabitants did for some time commemorate this accident, by observing that day with thanksgiving for their deliverance. Under one of the pillars was found a tomb stone, with this inscription: Hic jacet W. de capella monac. Corder. cuj' est p'pic' D'; and a gilt altar-piece was taken out of the wall. These circumstances shew that the church has been thrice built.

There were two chantries in this church, one dedicated to St. James and St. Anne, whereof Philip Wyat was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 4*l.* The other was dedicated to St. Mary, of which William Brook was the last incumbent.

Lands in Newent, formerly belonging to these chantries, were granted to Ralph Dobbins and others, 3 Jac. And a tenement called the Porphouse, and Culford in Newent, late belonging to St. Mary's chantry, were granted to Robert earl of Leicester, and John Morley, 24 Eliz.

All Yartleton-wood, except Jordan's grove, and a few other lands are tithe free.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

The most antient monument in the church is a very fine alabaster tomb, without insignia, on which are lying the effigies of a man in armour, with his lady by his side, designed, it is supposed, for a lord Grandison.

In the year 1676, there were in the town and parish 943 inhabitants, of sixteen years old and upwards, and about 1570 souls in the whole.
About the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 270 houses, and about 1100 inhabitants, whereof 93 were freeholders; yearly births 38, burials 37.
But sir Robert's numbers were probably too low. On an average of seven years, beginning with 1761, the annual baptisms were 58, and the burials 39; and the inhabitants are at present about 1560.

There is the following entry in the parish register. A. D. 1602, Feb. 24, Anne Wilson, widow, mother of John Wilson, buried, aged 115.

NEWINGTON BAGPATH

IS a small parish in the hundred of Berkeley, four miles eastward from Wotton-underedge, six west from Tetbury, and seventeen south from Gloucester. It is full of little hills and steep acclivities, and the lands are mostly employ'd in tillage. The houses stand at the head of a very narrow comb, or valley, which extends westward to Ozleworth, Alderley, and Kingswood, gradually opening itself 'till it joins the great vale a little below the last mentioned place. It has Simondshall, (a tithing in the large parish of Wotton) to the north, Kingscot to the east, and Boxwell and Lasborough to the south and south-eastward of it. The church stands at a distance from the houses, which is said to have been occasioned by a dispute between the joint patrons; and because neither of them would suffer it to be built near to the other's mansion house, they agreed that it should stand about the midway between them.

The antient name of this place is Neuetone, which was given it from its being later inhabited or cultivated than some of the neighbouring villages. In order to distinguish it from several other places of the same name, the addition of Bagpath was afterwards made, and taken probably from a family of the name of Bagpaze, who might have property here sometime between the Norman conquest and the reign of king Edward the First; but as this is a matter unsupported by positive proof, it must rest solely on conjecture.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

When Domesday-book was compiled, this manor was a member of the great lordship of Berkeley; for under the particulars of that manor, it is there said, 'Roger has seven hides at Neuetone of the land of this manor.'

What sir Robert Atkyns says of its being held of the honour of Hereford, is most probably a mistake. It was a member of the lordship of Berkeley before the conquest, and it has continued to be so ever since.

John, son of William de Berkeley, was lord of Newington in Berkeley hundred (as appears by the sheriff's return of all the vills in the county, with their several proprietors) 9 E. 1. John de Berkeley, of Dursley, and Hawise his wife, levied a fine of this manor 5 E. 3. Sir Nicholas Berkeley was seized of Newington 2 R. 2. and was living 6 R. 2.

The manor soon after passed to the Wekys's, descended from an heiress of the Berkeley family, as may be seen under Dodington. John Wekys died seized of Newington, leaving Edward his son and heir, who likewise died seized of this manor 6 H. 8. and livery was granted to Nicholas Wekys, son of Edward, the same year. He died 5 Mariae, and was succeeded by Robert Wekys, his grandson and heir, who was likewise lord of the manors of Dodington and Dursley, both which he sold in the reign of queen Elizabeth; and it is probable that he sold this about the same time, for sir Thomas Low was lord of the manor in the year 1608. Edward Webb was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. It soon after passed to Nigel Kingscot, esq; whose nephew — Kingscot, esq; is the present lord of this manor.

HAMLET. Bagpath, lying half a mile from the church. Sir Robert Pointz, died seized of this estate 12 H. 8. and was succeeded by sir Anthony his son and heir, whose son, sir Nicholas, died seized thereof 4 Mariae, and livery was then granted to Nicholas Pointz, son of sir Nicholas. Mr. Edward Webb was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and it is now vested in Mr. Kingscot.

Calcot, or Caldecot, is a farm in this parish, formerly the demans of the abbey of Kingswood. It was granted to sir Nicholas Pointz 31 H. 8. and from his family passed to the Estcourts. Thomas Estcourt, of Shipton Moyne, esq; is the present proprietor.

A moiety of lands in Bagpath, and in Bemerton and Sedworth near Bagpath, formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, was granted to sir Walter Rawleigh, and upon his attainder, to Peter Vanlore, merchant, and William Blake, scrivener, 3 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Dursley, worth 120*l.* a year. Mr. Cliffold is the present incumbent. In 1503, the rector of this church was discharged from keeping a curate at Olepen, which is a chapel annexed to this church. The abbey of Gloucester had the patronage of the rectory, in the year 1512.

The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and has a large tower at the west end.

NEWLAND.

THIS parish is situated within the perambulation of the forest of Dean, and is bounded on the west by the river Wye. It is the largest parish in the county, with great variety of soil and of produce. It abounds with iron ore and ochre, and with a kind of coal that burns freely, and and makes a stronger fire than the Kingswood coal, but is not so lasting.

Newland was originally taken out of the forest, and granted away by the crown. When it became private property, it was then first assarted and cultivated, which gave occasion to the name of Nova Terra, as it is called in antient records, and so that by which it is at present known. But this event had not taken place when Domesday was compiled, as there is no mention of Newland in that record, but the name occurs in others as early as the reign of king Henry the Third.

The face of this country is full of little hills and vallies, intermixt with swells and slopes that form an infinite and pleasing variety. The village of Newland lies on the side of one of those vallies, not to be seen at any great distance, and consequently has not the advantage of extensive prospect, but is nevertheless one of the handsomest villages in the county. It is the residence of several persons of considerable fortune, whose houses are suitable to their condition in life. They are not arranged in a straight line, but form part of a square, with the church and church-yard, which are both very large and handsome, situated where the area would be, if the square were compleat. This may serve to give a general notion of the place, but the description is not exact and perfect, as it may be supposed that many houses are out of this order, in a country village, where the figure of the whole could not to be attended to when the houses were erected.

Higmeadow, the seat of lord viscount Gage, lies about half a mile eastward from the village. The house is large and handsome, built in the form of the letter H, and from its elevated situation, commands a bird's-eye view of the village, and of the beautiful lawns and groves on the other side of the valley, at a very agreeable distance. Were his lordship possessed of the whole landscape, he could not wish to displace a single object; yet the prospect might be improved by the addition of water, which it wants to make it compleat. Part of this seat is said to stand in this parish, and part in that of Staunton.

There are several good houses and pleasant gardens in the village of Newland, of which the seat of Edmund Probyn, esq; is the principal. He has a large estate in this parish, and in several other parts of the county.

The reverend Mr. Ball, the present incumbent of Newland, is possessed of a curiosity that deserves to be mentioned. It is the cradle of king Henry V. who was born at Monmouth. The whole is made of oak, and the part where the infant lay is in an oblong chest, open at top, with an iron ring at the head, and another at the feet, by which it hangs upon hooks fixt in two upright pieces, strongly morticed in a frame which lies upon the floor. Thus suspended, the cradle is easily put in motion. Each of the upright pieces is ornamented at top with the figure of a dove, gilt, and tolerably executed.

There is an iron-furnace in this parish, and two copper-works at a place called Red-Brook, but they have the copper ore from Cornwall, and other parts.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The records shew, that John de Kinerdsley died seized of Newland in the forest of Dean 39 H. 3. and was succeeded by his son Hugh, who was attainted of treason, and his lands seized into the king's hands. The manor of Nova Terra was found to be in the crown by an inquisition 4 E. 1. but it was granted to Richard Harine and his heirs the following year.

Sir John ap Howel was afterwards seized of the manor, which he forfeited by rebellion against king Edward the Second, but it was restored to him 15 E. 3. William Baynham levied a fine of it 6 E. 6. after which it escheated to the king, and the manor is now vested in the crown.

But there was a reputed manor, or some estate dignified with the title of a manor, in this parish, formerly belonging to the abbey of Flaxley, which was granted, with the manor of Ruredean, to sir Anthony Kingston 36 H. 8.

Of the other estates the records shew, that sir John de Wysham and Joan his wife levied two fines of lands in Newland and St. Briavel's 20 & 30 E. 3. Joan the widow of Robert Grinder was seized of the patronage of a chantry in the church of Newland, and of one messuage, three tofts, and 200 acres of land 24 H. 6. James Bell died seized of two messuages, and three parcels of meadow, a piece of pasture called Tyllo's Hill, and twenty-four acres of arable land in Hymeade, in Newland, and of a close in Ashrydge, in the parish of Staunton, 43 Eliz. Esch.

Wye-Seal is an estate in Newland, belonging to the dean and chapter of Hereford, and is exempt from tithes.

T I T H I N G S and H A M L E T S.

1. Clowerwall, antiently called Wellington, and afterwards Clowerwall, and Clearwell, from a fine transparent spring of water rising in this tithing. It antiently belonged to the Joyces, from whom it went to the family of the Grinders or Grendours. Robert Grendour died seized of Clowerwall 22 H. 6. and was succeeded by his son John. Alice Grendour, daughter and heiress of John, was married to William Walwyn of Herefordshire.

William Walwyn, son of William and Alice, married Elizabeth, daughter of William Lanks, by whom he had an only daughter and heiress Alice, who, by her marriage, carried this estate to Thomas ap Enion, alias Baynham, who was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 18 E. 4. But he had a former wife, Margaret, daughter of Richard Hoddy, a judge in one of his majesty's courts.

Sir Christopher Baynham, of Clowerwall, son of Thomas by the said Alice, married Joan, daughter of Thomas Morgan of Monmouthshire, and and was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 3 & 9 H. 8. He was succeeded by his son sir George Baynham, who married to his first wife a daughter of sir William Kingston, whom he survived; secondly, Cicely, daughter of sir John Gage. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 36 H. 8. and dying 38 H. 8. his son Christopher had livery of this manor 3 E. 6. Thomas Baynham, son of Christopher, married Mary, daughter of sir William Wintour, of Lidney. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 25 Eliz. and again in the last year of the same reign.

Sir William Throckmorton of Tortworth, baronet, married Cicely, daughter and coheirefs of Thomas Baynham, with whom he had Clowerwall.

This estate was afterwards vested in Francis Wyndham, esq; descended from the antient family of that name in Somersetshire, and passed from him to Thomas Wyndham, esq; whose son, Charles Wyndham, esq; is the present proprietor of Clowerwall, where he has a very handsome house, built by his father in the Gothic stile, and a park, with a large estate, and fine plantations. In the year 1762, he married Eleanor, the second daughter of James Rooke, of Bicksweare, esq; by Jane his wife, daughter of Tracy Catchmay, esq; of the same place, and by her hath issue one son. His arms are, Azure, a chevron between three lions heads erased Or.

2. Colford. This is a tithing, and a small market town, on the turnpike-road from Gloucester to Monmouth, about four miles distant eastward from the latter. King James the First granted it a market to be held on Friday, and two fairs annually, one on the 9th, now held on the 20th of June, for wool; the other on the 24th of November, for cheese, &c. The market house was built by contribution, in the year 1679, towards which king Charles the Second gave forty pounds.

King Offa's dyke passes thro', and I am inclined to think gave name to this tithing, which from Claudb Offa, by a strange and unaccountable corruption, is now pronounced Covert, but written as at the beginning of this account.

Corbet, in his Military Government, relates, that before the siege of Gloucester happened, the forces raised by the earl of Worcester, and his son, lord Herbert, attacked a regiment of the parliament's party under colonel Berrowe, at this place, which had been made a kind of loose garrison for the defence of the forest. 'Here the Welch fell on,' says he, 'but their officers, with strange fury, drove our party before them, which was borne down by their multitudes, yet with a greater loss on their part. Divers officers were slain, and with the rest their commander in chief, sir Richard Lawdy, major-general of South Wales. Of ours few were slain, but lieutenant-colonel Winter, and some inferior officers, with about forty private soldiers taken prisoners.' p. 26.

There is a chapel of ease in this town, of which the bishop of Gloucester is patron. The chapel was destroy'd in the civil wars, and remained in ruins 'till it was repaired about the year 1704, and queen Anne gave 300*l.* out of the sale of wood in the forest of Dean, to endow it, which sum hath purchased a house and lands in Whitechurch and Ganerew, in Herefordshire, now let at 18*l.* a year. And the trustees of the queen's bounty have given a further sum of 200*l.* to augment the curacy, which is not yet laid out on land. There is no house for the curate.

3. Bream. This tithing lies four miles distant from the church. The name signifies sharp, severe, (from bremma, Sax. to rage or fume,) and it is used in that sense by Spencer in the following line, Comes the breme winter with chamfred brows.
And perhaps the name was given to this place from its exposed situation. Here is a chapel of ease.

Bream's-Lodge, is a large handsome house, late belonging to Mr. Barrow Lawrence, deceased. It stands part in this tithing, and part in that of Ailberton. He died about the year 1773, seized of a good estate here, and in the adjoining parish of St. Briavel's, as well as in Ailberton, with an extensive warren in the last mentioned place, called Prior's Meen, (because it formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony) whence there is a very extensive view of the vale of Gloucestershire, from Frampton downwards, to the extremity of the county at Kingroad; and a distant prospect of the counties of Worcester, Wilts, Somerset, Monmouth, Brecon, Radnor, and Hereford. He was son of Anthony Lawrence, gent. of the Shurdington family, by Mary his wife, the only daughter of James Barrow, gent. (whose family long resided at the same place) by Beata his wife, only sister and heiress of Mr. serjeant Powlet, once recorder of the city of Bristol, and one of the justices of South Wales, who resided at Bream's-Lodge many years, 'till the time of his death in 1703.

Pastors-Hill in this tithing, is the house and estate of Mr. William Gough the younger, great grandson of the late William Gough of Willbury, by Mary his last wife; which estate was given to him by James Gough, gent. younger son of Warren Gough of Willbury. Which James Gough, by his last will, dated Sep. 7, 1676, devised to trustees an estate at Stroate, in the parish of Tiddendenham, to pay five shillings to an able divine, for every Sunday that he shall read prayers and preach once in the day in the chapel of Bream. On every default, the five shillings to be laid out in repairing the chapel, or given to the poor. And if the said estate should exceed 13*l.* yearly, the overplus to be given to the poor of this tithing. Mr. serjeant Powlet added 2*s.* 6*d.* weekly to this donation, and subjected his lands in Ailberton to the payment thereof.

Mary the widow of the above James Gough, by her will, gave 50*l.* the interest to be paid for ever to a poor woman, to teach the children of this tithing to read

4. Le Baily, formerly the estate of John Tiptot, of Tiptoft, earl of Worcester, and afterwards of the Talbots, earls of Shrewsbury. There is nothing worthy notice in this tithing.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, worth about 90*l.* a year. The bishop of Landaff is patron, and Mr. Peregrine Ball is the present incumbent. The tithes of all the allart lands in the forest were granted to the church of Newland 4 E. 1. and the great tithes of this church were appropriated to the bishoprick of Landaff in the year 1399. The glebe and great tithes of this parish are worth about 200*l.* a year.

The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is very large for a country village, with a gallery, and a handsome tower at the west end, adorned with pinnacles, and furnish'd with a clock. The church-yard is also large, with handsome walks, crosses, gravelled and kept in good order.

There was a chantry erected in this church, and endowed with 12*l.* a year by Robert Grendour and Joan his wife 24 H. 6. There were also several other chantries, one dedicated to St. Mary, whereof George Wadham was the last incumbent, and enjoy'd a pension of 4*l.* a year in 1553. The lands belonging to it were granted to sir Oliver Cromwell 5 Jac. and to Francis Philips and Richard Moor 6 Jac. Another was called king Edward's chantry, whereof Edward Brior was the last incumbent, and received a pension of 4*l.* a year. There was also Newland chantry, some of the lands belonging to which were granted to Lewis Williams 1 E. 6. and others were granted the same year to Robert Lea. Edward Sowice was a chantry priest here, and enjoy'd a pension, at the same time with the above, of 4*l.* a year. Willis.

Benefactions.

Mr. William Jones, a Hamborough merchant, founded a large hospital in this parish, consisting of sixteen tenements for as many women and children, and endowed it with a rent-charge on lands in the county of Kent, to the amount of 2 s. a week to each of the poor people, and a new gown yearly. He also founded a lectureship here, and endowed it with a rent-charge on lands in the said county, of one hundred marks yearly, paid by the company of haberdashers in London, who choose the lecturer out of three clergymen returned to them by the parishioners. The lecturer has a house, orchard, and a close of ground at Newland, worth about 20 l. a year. He is chaplain to the hospital. Mr. James Birt is the present lecturer.

In the year 1633, Mr. Edward Bell, of Writtle in Essex, founded a grammar-school here, and gave a school-room, with a house and garden for the master, with a salary of 10 l. a year. He also gave eight almshouses and gardens for eight poor people of this parish, and 20 s. a year to each, and left 40 s. a year to repair the buildings, with the payment of which sums he charged his estate; in lieu whereof his son Edward Bell, gent. granted the said houses and gardens, and other lands in this parish, then worth 20 l. a year. And Mr. John Whitton, alderman of Bristol, afterwards, by his will, left a further sum of 10 l. a year to the master, and 12 l. a year to the poor of Clowerwall, payable out of houses in Bristol.

George Bond of Wyfeal, gent. and Christopher Bond of Redbrook, gent. gave a meadow by the side of the Wye, then let at 5 l. a year, 20 s. of which to keep the church clean and repair the clock; the rest to the eight almshouses. And Mr. Bromwich has given 24 s. yearly to the same poor people. William Hopkins of London, gent. charged his estate at Stow Grange with 40 s. a year for ever to the poor.

For Mr. Hall's benefaction, see the inscription.

With monies arising out of the above donations, and some others at present not well known, an estate has been purchased at Awre in this county, worth 30 l. a year, for the use of the poor of this parish.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 480 houses, and about 2200 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 150 were freeholders; yearly births 48, burials 47. But the people are pretty much increased since that time, so that the present number of souls is about 2997. At the raising of the militia in the year 1760, one man was taken out of every 29 upon the lists throughout the county, and this parish then found fifteen men for its proportion.

NEWNHAM.

THIS is a market town, in the hundred of Westbury, in the Forest division, sixteen miles distant north from Chepstow, ten east from Colford, five south-east from Mitchel-Dean, and ten south-westward from Gloucester. It lies fourteen miles from the mouth of the river Wye, and sixteen from Kingroad, where the Bristol Avon empties itself into the Severn.

It is pleasantly situated on an eminence along the west side of the Severn, which is here something less than a mile over at high water; and, by means of that river, has a constant communication with London by ships of about 160 tons burthen. Here is a very safe passage or ferry over the river for horses and carriages, and a ford passable at low water, the resort to which, before ferries were established, was most probably the original occasion of the building of the town.

At this place was the first fortification erected on the west side of the Severn against the Welch. And Strongbow earl of Chepstow, after having made very considerable conquests in Ireland, being commanded by king Henry the Second to appear before him, obeyed the royal mandate, and met the king at this town; wherefore we may suppose it to have been a place of good security at that time. Indeed here was antiently a castle, as appears by several grants of lands in Newnham to the prior and brethren of St. Bartholomew's hospital at Gloucester, wherein the lands are described as lying next the castle and castle-ditch, on the one part, and extending to Staure's-mill on the other.

This town had some share in the military transactions in the reign of king Charles the First. Corbet, who wrote of those affairs, professedly favoured the parliament's interest, and gives an account that the royalists garrisoned Newnham, where colonel Congreve was governor, who was taken and killed at Little Dean, as I have related under that head. And that immediately afterwards, colonel Massie, governor of Gloucester, came to this place, where sir John Winter's forces kept garrison in the church, and had a pretty strong fortification adjoining. Massie possessed himself of the town without opposition, and drew up two pieces of cannon within pistol-shot of the works, under cover of a blind of faggots; and having made every thing ready for a storm, the king's party desired a parley, but Massie insisted on their immediate surrender. In the interim, the king's troops deserting the works, fled into the church, and were so closely pursued that the assailants entered along with them. 'Then' says Corbet, 'they cry'd for quarter, when in the very point of victory, a disaster had like to befall us; a barrel of gunpowder was fired in the church, undoubtedly for the purpose, and was conceived to be done by one Tipper, a most virulent papist, and sir John Winter's servant, despairing of his 'redemption, being a prisoner before, and having 'falsified his engagements. This powder-blast

'blew many out of the church, and sorely singed
'a great number, but killed none. The soldiers 'enraged, fell upon them, and in the heat of 'blood flew near twenty, amongst others this 'Tipper. All the rest had quarter for their lives,
'(save one Butler, an Irish rebel, who was knock'd 'down by a common soldier) and an hundred 'prisoners taken. The service was performed
'without the loss of a man on our side.' Corbet's Military Government of Gloucester.

Mention is made of Higb-street, Horman-lane, and Shop-row, as the names of places in grants of land in the borough, 15 E. 3. But the town at present consists chiefly of one street, and is distant about a mile from the forest of Dean, to which there is an immediate ascent, and a spacious road from the river: The lands are perfectly dry and healthy, and the inhabitants are not subject to agues and other disorders, from noxious vapours and exhalations, as those commonly are who live in low countries, near great rivers. It was an antient borough, of which, in the time of king Edward the First, the sheriff returned only five in the county, Bristol, Gloucester, Berkeley, Dursley, and Newnham; and it was governed by a mayor and burgeses. The sword of state, given to them with their charter by king John, and still preserved to be shewn in testimony of their former greatness and better condition, is of steel, finely polished, and ornamented with curious workmanship. Its whole length is six feet, and the length of the blade four feet four inches, on which is this inscription: John Morse being Maier, this Sord did repaier, 1584. Having lost their charter, they still continue, by prescriptive right, to elect a mayor annually on the Monday after St. Hillary; but neither the mayor nor aldermen, of whom there are six, have any authority over the town, which is governed by two beams, or constables.

There are two fairs in the year, on the 11th of June, and the 18th of October, for cattle, horses, and sheep; and the market is held on Friday, but it is not much used, for the town is daily well supply'd, at an easy rate, with variety of the best provisions of every kind from the neighbouring villages in the forest.

Tho' the town is extremely well situated upon a fine river, where ships of burthen may safely come to anchor, yet its trade has been very inconsiderable, and almost wholly confined to the exportation of oak bark to Ireland, 'till a few years ago, when Mr. Robert Pyrke, merchant there, built a commodious quay on the side of the river, with cranes and store-houses, for the convenience of shipping and landing all sorts of goods; and from that time the manufacturers at Birmingham and other places have brought great quantities in barges down the river to this town, where they are shipped in vessels from one to two hundred tons burthen, and carried to London.

And

And of late, many ships of large burthen have been built here. This seems to be an auspicious beginning, which time and industry may improve to the great advantage of the town, especially as it lies in a country full of an excellent kind of coal, which is brought hither on horses backs, from the pits two or three miles off in the forest of Dean, to be sent to other places by water, and may prove an inexhaustible fund of wealth. Besides, the forest and all the country hereabout is famous for fine styre, and other prime sorts of cyder, which liquor finds a ready market here, and is become a very considerable article of commerce to London and Ireland.

Sir Edward Mansell, in the reign of king Charles the First, erected here the first glass-house in England, which was work'd with stone-coal, the foundation of which still remains. The glass manufacture has been discontinued a long time, but there is lately a very considerable verdigris-work set up in its room, and carried on with a laudable spirit, and the trade of ship-building is much encouraged; from all which circumstances, Newnham bids fair to be a flourishing little town, and is already much improved in its buildings. Roynon Jones, esq; and Mr. Robert Pyrke, merchant, reside in two of the principal houses, very pleasantly situated upon the river. A turnpike-road from Gloucester leads through the town, and so to Chepstow and South Wales.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The town of Newnham was distinct from the manor, but they are both called Newnham in the records, which is the reason that so many different families seem to have been possessed of the manor; whereas the fact is, that the records sometimes speak of the town, and sometimes of the manor, in the same terms, tho' they were different and distinct estates. The manor was given by king Canute, in the year 1018, to the Benedictine abbey of Pershore in Worcester-shire; and the town was given, with twenty-four other vills, by Leofric earl of Mercia, to an abbey of black monks which he had founded in Coventry, in the year 1050. How long they continued in possession of these estates, I cannot precisely tell, but the manor was in lay hands in the reign of the Conqueror, as appears by the following extract:

' William the son of Baderon holds Neuneham.
' There is one hide, and three villeins, and three ' bordars paying 20 sol. This land pays no tax.
' There is a wood two furlongs long, and one ' broad.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

This manor was afterwards enjoy'd by the Bohuns earls of Hereford and Essex, together with the manors of Haresfield and Whitenhurst, by the tenure of which they held the great office of Constable of England, by grand serjeanty, as of inheritance. And that office was afterwards of right in the line of the Staffords, and dukes of Buckingham, as heirs general to them, and descended to Edward duke of Buckingham, who was attainted of treason 13 H. 8. whereby it was forfeited to the crown; and since that time, both in respect of the amplitude of the authority, in war and in peace, and of the charge, it hath never been granted to any subject, but now of late hac vice. Coke's Institutes, part 4.

Henry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, released all his right in Newnham to king John, in the first year of his reign. The manor was granted to William earl of Salisbury 2 H. 3. who died seized of it the 10th, as did Thomas Foliot 45 H. 3. It was in the crown 4 E. 1. and yielded 10*l.* a year, as appears by an inquisition of that date. Walter de Stukeley was sheriff of the county of Gloucester 9 E. 1. in which year he returned into the king's exchequer, that the king was then lord of the borough of Newnham.

Roger de Mortimer held this manor 11 E. 1. and Walter le Marshal was seized of it in the 21st year of that reign, when he was convicted and attainted of felony, whereby the manor escheated to the crown. It was afterwards granted to Thomas earl of Norfolk and the heirs of his body 4 E. 3. and was again granted to William Bohun and the heirs of his body 6 E. 3. in which grant it was mentioned to have lately belonged to Thomas earl of Norfolk. William de Bohun, earl of Northampton, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Newnham to the archbishop of Canterbury and others, to the use of themselves in taille special, the remainder to the king and his heirs, 20 E. 3. Humphry de Bohun earl of Hereford and Essex, and Joan his wife, were seized of the manor of Newnham 46 E. 3.

Thomas duke of Gloucester, the youngest son of king Edward the Third, marrying Eleanor, the daughter and coheirs of Humphry de Bohun, became possessed of the earldoms of Hereford, Essex, and Northampton, and was constable of England. He, in right of Eleanor his wife, was seized of the manor of Newnham, of Calcot-castle and Newton 21 R. 2.

Upon the dissolution of the abbey of Flaxley, an estate called the manor of Newnham, late belonging to that abbey, was granted to sir Anthony Kingston 36 H. 8.

The manor of Newnham was afterwards granted to Henry lord Stafford and Ursula his wife 2 Mar. Edward lord Stafford, son of Henry, died seized thereof 2 Jac. and left Edward lord Stafford his son and heir, thirty years old at his father's death. This last Edward had a son of his own name, who died before him, and left one son Henry, and a daughter Mary. Henry died unmarried in 1637, whereby his sister Mary became sole heiress. She was married to sir William Howard, younger son to Thomas earl of Arundel and Surrey, who, in her right, was seized of the manor of Newnham. He assumed the name of Stafford, on account of his wife's being heir to so great a family, and was created viscount Stafford by king Charles the the First, but was attainted upon account of the popish plot, and beheaded in 1678. Henry, their son, was created earl of Stafford 4 Jac. and succeeded to this manor. The earl of Effingham is the present lord of the manor of Newnham, and holds a court leet for the manor and borough once a year. His lordship's arms are, Quarterly, 1. Gules, in the middle of a bend between six cross crozlets fitchy argent, a shield Or, therein a demi lion rampant (pierced through the mouth with an arrow) within a double tressure counterflory gules, being an augmentation for the victory at Flodden, for Howard. 2. Gules, three lions passant paleways Or, a label in chief of three points argent, for Brotherton. 3. Chequy Or and azure, for Warren, earl of Surry. 4. Gules, a lion rampant argent, armed and langued azure, for Moubray, duke of Norfolk.

The records shew, that William Bleith and Joan his wife were seized of one messuage and six acres of land in Newnham 34 E. 1. William Marshal levied a fine of a fishery in Newnham and Rudle 16 H. 7. and Jeffry Griffith and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Newnham 21 H. 7.

HAMLETS. 1. Ruddle. Ralph Bluet, soon after the conquest, gave this manor of Rodele, and a fishery, to the abbey of Gloucester, which king William the Second confirmed in the year 1096, at the petition of abbat Serlo, and some of his nobles. And king Henry the First gave and confirmed the manor of Rudele to the abbey, to and lights to burn continually before the high altar of St. Peter's, for the soul of duke Robert Curthoise, his brother. He also granted and confirmed to them a fishery in the Severn as far as their lands extended, and a grove or wood there, called Sudrug, to do as they pleased with it; and the sacrist of the abbey, common for all his little through the whole forest of Dean. And Henry the Third, by his charter dated at Newnham, confirmed this fishery to the abbey, as fully Henry the First gave it.

The manor continued in the possession of the abbey of Gloucester 'till the dissolution, and was then granted to William earl of Pembroke 7 E. 6. who sold it to sir Giles Pool 4 Mar. It is now the property of Roynon Jones, of Nafs in the parish of Lidney, esq; who hath lately built a handsome house, very pleasantly situated at Hayl in this hamlet, and annually holds a court leet for this manor.

2. Stairs, antiently written Staure, of which mesday makes the following mention: 'William the son of Baderon holds Staure in Westberie hundred. Ulfeg held it in the time of king Edward. It was worth 10 s. now 5 s. There is one hide which doth not pay tax.' p. 74. William de Staure died seized of one messuage, twenty-seven acres of arable, three acres of meadow, and 3 s. rent at Staure, in the manor of Rodley, of the fee of Henry de Lancaster, by the service of paying 3 s. 4 d. a year, and doing suit at the court of the said Henry, 2 E. 2. Esch. William Morwent, esq; had formerly a good house here, now fallen to decay.

Cockshoot, Bleythe's Court, and Hill-house, are unworthily distinguish'd by sir Robert Atkyns as separate hamlets.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation belonging to the corporation of Gloucester, as trustees of Bartholomew's hospital, who let the impropriation to the curate on lease for 8 l. a year, and a salmon to the mayor, tho' it is of much greater value; and this and Little Dean are in the same presentation. Mr. John Webb is the present incumbent.

William de Bohun gave the advowson and impropriation of this church to the prior and brethren of St. Bartholomew's hospital 25 July, 17 E. 3.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The piece of ground where the church stands was given to the mayor and burgeses of Newnham, by Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, paying 4 d. yearly to the see of Rome, to pray for his soul. The church-yard is bounded by the Severn; but the old church stood at a place called Nab's End, and being undermined by the river, was obliged to be taken down.

Benefaction.

Mr. James Jocham, late of the city of Bristol, deceased, by his will, in 1764, gave 1000 l. after the decease of his son James, the interest of which to be applied to the clothing of fifteen poor boys of the parish of Newnham yearly for ever; and if any thing should remain, he directs it to be given to poor lying-in women of the same parish. James, the son, is since dead, and the charity is applied according to the donor's will.

At the beginning of this century, according to fir Robert Atkyns, there were 90 houses, and about 400 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 40 were freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 18. But by the parish register it appears, that in ten years, beginning with 1701, the average of annual baptisms was 15.6, and that of the annual burials 12.1. And in a like series, beginning with 1761, the average of annual baptisms is 17.7, and of burials 10.5; which shews that the place continued nearly in the same state as to population for the last sixty years; but I am informed that the inhabitants now amount to the number of a thousand at least.

N I B L E Y.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Berkeley, two miles distant north-westward from Wotton-underedge, three south-westward from Dursley, and eighteen south from Gloucester.

It is sometimes called North-Nibley, to distinguish it from Nibley, a hamlet in Westerleigh. Some part of it shoots up eastward over the hills between Wotton-underedge and Dursley, to the distance of near three miles from the church; and between those hills there is a long and narrow dingle, gradually opening towards the west, called Waterley-Bottom, from a rivulet running down it. The steep sides of the hills in this part of the country are covered with beautiful hanging woods, in which the beech predominates; and the little combs between them, of which there are many, are richly cultivated in small inclosures of pasture grounds, interspersed with here and there a cottage or a little dairy farm. This variety of objects and of situation is very picturesque, and the different lights and shades they produce have a most agreeable effect.

The other part of the parish lies in the vale, and consists of rich pasture ground, with very little arable. The lands are in dairy farms, and produce excellent cheese. The dairy business is unfavourable to population, yet the inhabitants are pretty numerous, and are chiefly employ'd in rug-making, and in the clothing business.

Leland speaks of a camp here, but I apprehend that which he meant lies in the parish of Wotton-underedge.

But what more particularly distinguishes this village in history, is the engagement that happened between William lord Berkeley and Thomas viscount Lisle. The quarrel arose in the following manner: Thomas fourth lord Berkeley, left Elizabeth, an only daughter and heiress, married to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick; but by a special entail and fine, settled the castle and lordship of Berkeley, with its appurtenances, on his nephew James, the next heir male of his family. This settlement produced a law-suit between James fifth lord Berkeley, and Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who, in right of his wife, claimed the Berkeley estate, and violently seized Nibley and several other manors into his own hands. He and his posterity kept possession of this manor one hundred and ninety-two years, for which space of time the law-suit was carried on with unprecedented violence. During the continuance of this suit, Thomas Talbot, viscount Lisle, descended from the before mentioned Elizabeth, sent a letter with a challenge^p to William sixth lord Berkeley, wherein he desired him to fix a time and place for deciding their title by the sword. The lord Berkeley, by his answer^q, appointed the next morning for the time, and Nibley-green for the place

^p Lord Lisle's challenge was as follows:

'William, called Lord Berkeley, I marveill ye come not forth with all your Carts of Gunnes, Bowes, with oder Ordinance, that ye set forward to come to my Mannor of Wotton, to bete it down upon my Head. I let you witt, ye shall not nede to come so nye, for I trust to God to mete you nere home, with English Men of my own Nation, and Neighbours. Whereas ye by subtle Craft have blowin about in divers Places of England, That I should intend to bring in Welchmen for to destroy and hurt my own Nation and Cuntry. I lete the wit, I never was so disposed, nere never will be. And to the Proof hereof I requyre thee of Knighthood and of Manhood, to appoint a Day to mete me half way, there to try between God and our two Hands, all our Quarrel and Title of Right, for to eschew the shedding of Christian Mannis Blood, or else at the same Day bring the uttermost of thy Power, and I shall mete thee. An Answer of this by Writing, as ye will abide by, according to the Honor and Ordre of Knighthood.

'Thomas Talbot the Vicount Lisle.'

^q To this challenge, Lord Berkeley returned the following answer:

'Thomas Talbot, otherwise called Vicount Lisle, not long contened in that Name, but a new found thing brought out of strang Country; I marveil greatly of thy strange and lewd Wrytinge, made I suppose by thy false untrue Counsel, that thou hast with thee, Hugh Mull and Holt; as for Hugh Mull, it is not unknown to all the worshipful learned Men of this Realm how he is attaynt of falsenes, and raisinge of the King's Records; and as for the false mischevous Holt, what his Rull

'hath be to the Distruction of the King's lege Pepull in my Lordship of Berkeley, as well to the Hurt of their Bodies as the Loss of their Goods, against God's Law, Conscience and all Reason; it is openly known, so that every worshipful Man should refuse to have them in his Fellowship. And also of his own free Will, undesired of me, before worshipful and sufficient Witnes, was sworne on a Masse-Booke, that he should never be against me in no matter that I had adoe, and especially in that untrue Title that ye clayme, which ye hold my Lyvelode with wrong. And where thou requirrest me of Knighthood that I should appoint a Day, and mete thee in the myd way betwene my Mannor of Wooton and my Castle of Berkeley, there to try betwixt God and our two Hands all our Quarrels and Title of Right, for to eschew the shedding of Christen Mens Blood, or els the same Day to bring the uttermost of my Powers, and thou would mete mee. As for the determining betwixt our two Hands, of thy untrue Clayme, and my Title and Right of my Land and true Inheritance, thou wottest right well there is no such Determination of Land in this Relme used. And I ascertayne thee, that my Lyvelode, as well my Mannor of Wooton, as my Castle of Berkeley, be entayled to me by Force of Record in the King's Courts, by the Advise of all the Judges of this Lond in that Days beinge. And if it were so, that the matter might be determined by thy Hands and myne, the King our Sovereigne Lord and his Laws not offended, thou should not soe soone desire, but I would as soon answer thee in every Point that belongeth to a Knight: For thou art, God I take for record, in a false Quarrel, and I in a true Desfiance and Title. And where thou delirett and requirrest me of Knighthood and Manhood to appoint a Day, and that I should be there with place of action, and both parties meeting on the 20th of March, 1470, 10 E. 4. with their respective followers, amounting in the whole to about 1000 men, a furious engagement ensued, wherein about 150 men were slain, in which number was lord Lisle himself, being shot in the mouth with an arrow by one James Hiatte, of the forest of Dean. Lord Berkeley, after his victory, hastened to Wotton, where the lady Lisle resided, who being then big with her first child, miscarried through the fright. His lordship rifled the house, and carried away some of the furniture, and many deeds and evidences which concerned the lord Lisle's own estate, and they remain to this day preserved in Berkeley castle. Government was at that time prevented from taking cognizance of this violent outrage, by the civil wars which raged in the kingdom during great part of the turbulent reign of Edward the Fourth.

Nicholas Smyth, esq; has a large estate here, and a very handsome seat, built about the year 1763, by his father, George Smyth, esq; upon the scite of an old mansion house, which had been long in his family. His arms are, Sable, on a chevron engrailed between six crosses patty fitchy Or, three fleurs de lis argent, each charged on the top with a plate.

John Smyth of Nibley, ancestor to the present proprietor, was very eminent for his great assiduity in collecting every kind of information respecting this county and its inhabitants. He wrote the genealogical history of the Berkeley family, in three folio manuscripts, which sir William Dugdale abridged, and published in his Baronage of England. In three other folio manuscripts, he has registered, with great exactness, the names of the lords of manors in the county, in the year 1608, the number of men in each parish able to bear arms, with their names, age, stature, professions, armour, and weapons. The sums each land-holder paid to subsidies granted in a certain year are set down in another manuscript. He likewise committed to writing a very particular account of the customs of the several manors in the hundred of Berkeley, and the pedigrees of their respective lords. These, and some other manuscripts which cost him forty years in compiling, are now in the possession of Nicholas Smyth, esq; the fifth from him in lineal descent.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

As this place is not mentioned by name in Domesday-book, it was probably included, at the time of the general survey, in the accounts of the manors of Wotton and Dursley; and part of the parish is now within the manor of Woodmancot, in the parish of Dursley.

King Henry the Second gave this manor to Robert Fitz-Harding, ancestor of the earls of Berkeley, in whose family it continued 'till they were violently dispossessed of it, as before related. Lord Lisle was lord of this manor in 1608. But the great law-suit concerning the Berkeley estate being determined 7 Jac. after 192 years continuance, the earl of Berkeley obtained possession, and the present earl of Berkeley is lord of the manor.

The prior of Lanthony's claim to free warren in Nebele was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. Roger Bavent was seized of lands in Nebele 47 E. 3. William lord Berkeley, earl marshal and earl of Nottingham, levied a fine of lands in Nibley 3 H. 7. John Stanshaw and Humphry his brother joined in levying a fine of lands in North Nibley 12 H. 7. Lands in Nibley, formerly belonging to the abbey of Kingwood, were granted to Drew Drewry and Edward Downing 16 Eliz. and Edward Downing and John Walker had a grant of lands belonging to the same abbey 21 Eliz. The knights hospitallers had formerly lands in Nibley, which were granted to Edward Sallus and William Blake, scrivener, 3 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Dursley, worth about 50*l.* a year. Christ Church college, Oxford, has the patronage and impropriation; Mr. Hayward is the present incumbent. The vicar receives 20*l.* a year out of the impropriation, and the living has been augmented with the queen's bounty. This was formerly a chapel united to Wotton-underedge, and belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury.

The church, dedicated to St. Martin, or as some say, to St. Andrew, has an aisle on the south side, a low embattled tower at the west end, with five bells, and a small spire for a saint's bell, between the chancel and the body of the church. Here was formerly a chantry, dedicated to the virgin Mary.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 200 houses, and about 1000 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 34 were freeholders; yearly births 26, burials 24. The people are now increased to upwards of 1700.

NIMPSFIELD.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Berkeley, four miles north-east from Dursley, four south-west from Minchin-Hampton, and about fourteen south from Gloucester.

The greater part of the parish is uneven ground, with a considerable proportion of woodland. The turnpike-road from Bath to Gloucester leads down Nimpsfield-hill, which is very steep and woody. Colonel Massie, famous for his memorable defence of Gloucester against king Charles the First, being disgusted at some of the parliament's proceedings, deserted their party, and about the year 1659, formed a design of seizing on Gloucester, in which however he was disappointed, and forced to take refuge in a little house near Simonshall. There he was seized by a party of horse, who mounted him before one of the troopers, and carried him towards Gloucester; but in going down the steep part of Nimpsfield-hill, Massie tumbled himself and the trooper from the horse, and being a stout man, and his guards a little intoxicated, made his escape under favour of a dark tempestuous night.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, this was a berewic or member of the extensive lordship of Berkeley, belonging to which there were then 'In Nimdesfelle three hides.' Dom. Book, p. 68.

This estate, like Berkeley, descended from Roger de Berkeley, who held it temp. W. 1. to his nephew Roger, whom king Henry the Second dispossessed of his whole estate, for joining with his competitor Stephen. The castle and lordship of Berkeley, of which this was a member, were granted to Robert Fitz-Harding, who therefore assumed the name of Berkeley. He gave Nimpsfield to Nicholas his fourth son, whose posterity took the name of Fitz-Nichols. Nicholas Berkeley, or Fitz-Nichols, son of Ralph held tenements in Hull and Nyndesfeld of the king in capite, by the service of half a knight's fee. At Nyndesfeld he had 100 acres of arable land, at 2 d. per acre; 3 acres of pasture, at 1 s. per acre; and a wood worth 2 s. per ann. as appears by the escheator's inquisition after his death. His claim to free warren was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. and he died seized of the above particulars 6 E. 2. leaving John, his son and heir, twenty-two years old. John Fitz-Nichols, son of Nicholas, died seized of this manor 15 E. 2. and John his son died seized of Nimdesfield, and of the advowson of the chantry of Kinley 29 E. 3. Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols, son of the last John, was lord of this manor at the time of his death, 7 R. 2. Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols, son of sir Thomas, died seized of the manor of Nimpsfield, and of the advowson of the chantry at Kinley 6 H. 5. leaving two daughters coheiresses; Catherine, married to Robert Pointz, esq; and Elianor, married to John Browning, esq. The same John Browning, son of John, was seized of a moiety of the manor of Nimpsfield, and of the advowson of the chantry at Kinley 8 H. 5. which he soon after conveyed to Robert Pointz, esq.

Sir Edmond Tame of Fairford purchased this manor, and dying 26 H. 8. was succeeded by Edmond his son and heir, who died without issue 36 H. 8. leaving three sisters coheiresses. Margaret, the eldest, was married to Humphry Stafford; Alice to Thomas Verney; and Isabel, the youngest, was the wife of Lewis Watkin, who all had livery 37 H. 8.

In the partition of the estates between the sisters, this manor was settled on sir Thomas Verney, 1 E. 6. Richard Verney, son of sir Thomas, had livery 1 Eliz. as had George Verney, son of Richard, in the 14th, and died in the 16th year of the same reign, leaving sir Richard Verney his son and heir, who was lord of this manor in 1608.

The manor soon after passed to the Bridgmans, and John Bridgman, of Prinknash, esq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Lord Ducie is the present lord of the manor.

HAMLETS. 1. Kynley. Here was an antient priory, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, and incorporated by the name of warden and brethren, to which the manor of Kynley belonged. This manor was seized by William the First, and restored to the priory by William the Second, 1093. Here was also a chantry chapel, dedicated to St. Anthony, whose figure was painted at the east end of the chapel, with a great boar by his side. And

* Sir Robert Atkyns, in some places, calls them daughters of Edmond Tame, in others, his sisters, and in one place his coheiresses, without further explanation. That they were his sisters, not his daughters, will appear from what Leland says, who, after taking frequent occasion to speak handsomely of the family, observes, that 'Syr Edmunde Tame of Fairford up by

'Crekelade cam oute of the house of Tame of Stowel. Tame that is now at Fairford hath be married a xii yere and hath no childe. Wherefore belikelihod Syr Humfre Stafford, Sun to old Staford of Northamptonshire, is like to have the landes of Tame of Fairforde, for he married his Sifter, and so the name of the Tames is like fore to decay.' Leland's Itin. V. 6. p. 16. hither.

hither, it is said, the West Britons usually came once a year to offer oblations for their sins. In the year 1542, Edmond Tame presented to this chantry James Ruthbone, or Ratterbone, who was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 6*l.* The priory, tho' converted to a dwelling house, is still charged with the payment of Tenths.

After the dissolution of religious foundations, the manor of Kynley was granted to William Stump, esq; who died seized thereof 6 E. 6. and livery was granted to sir James Stump, his son and heir, the following year.

The chantry lands of this place have been the subject of long contentious law-suits between sir Thomas Throckmorton of Tortworth, and sir Henry Winston of Standish.

2. Tinkley is another hamlet, of which there is nothing remarkable.

Aldred, governor of Gloucestershire, gave three tenements in Nympsfield to the abbey of Gloucester. King William the First gave lands in Nindesfelle to the same abbey, to be held as freely as in the reign of king Edward his kinsman, with the privilege of hearing and determining judicial causes.

John Gifford de Nymdesfeld died 7 E. 2. seized of lands and tenements in Nymdesfeld, which he held of the king in capite by the service of two pounds of pepper. Esch. sub anno.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 60*l.* a year. Lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Hayward is the present incumbent. Frocester is the mother church, where the inhabitants baptized and buried in 1185. The chapel of Nympsfield, and the advowson of the church of Frocester, were given to the abbey of Gloucester, by William de Blois, bishop of Worcester, at the request of John de Columna, cardinal of Rome, in the year 1225.

The church is dedicated to St. Margaret, and has a tower at the west end, adorned with pinnacles and battlements, in which are two bells.

At the beginning of this century, there were 56 houses in this parish, and about 250 inhabitants, whereof 18 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 6. Atkyns. But examining the parish register, I find that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 112 baptisms, and 57 burials; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 137, burials 107, and the inhabitants are now about 497.

NORTH HAMLETS.

THESE hamlets, consisting of very rich meadow and pasture lands, lie in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, and join to the north side of the city of Gloucester.

1. The Vineyard. It lies in the parish of St. Mary de Lode, on a fine elevation, upon the side of the Severn, beyond Over's bridge from Gloucester, and commands a very agreeable prospect of the city, the river, and the rich meadows adjoining. Induced by so fine a situation, abbat Staunton built a large house here, and moated it round, which was afterwards one of the country houses belonging to the abbats of St. Peter's at Gloucester. This excited an emulation in the prior of Lanthony, who soon after built a rival house, and called it Newark, on a little hill on the other side of the Severn. The Vineyard and park were given to the bishoprick of Gloucester, by its charter of foundation, and were confirmed 6 E. 6. And here the bishops frequently resided, 'till the house was demolished in the great civil war.

2. Walham-Mead, Portham-Mead, and many other rich meadows lying between the Westgate-bridge at Gloucester, and Over-bridge, make another division of the North Hamlets. The river Severn dividing its waters, incloses many of those meadows, and forms the island which our Saxon ancestors called Olanze, and we Alney, famous for the single combat fought in the year 1016, between Edmund Ironside, king of England, and Canute the Dane, to decide the fate of the kingdom. The story is told in all our histories of those times, that having fought for some time without much advantage on either side, the combatants made peace, and agreed to divide the kingdom between them; but Edmund dying soon after, the Dane seized the whole. Some of these meadows are extraparochial, others are in the parishes of St. Mary de Lode and St. Catherine, and belong to various proprietors. The prior of Lanthony held the meadow of Prestenham, containing 40 acres, (lying under the castle of Gloucester) in exchange for Southmead. He likewise held the meadow of Walham without Gloucester, and Madley's-land, 49 H. 3. The town of Gloucester held Prestenham and Southmead 54 H. 3. Portham-Mead belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and was granted, after the dissolution of that house, to John Arnold, 33 H. 8.

3. The Castle of Gloucester, and divers adjoining messuages and lands, are extraparochial, and lie close to the city of Gloucester. These three hamlets are jointly rated to the public taxes.

Lands in Longford belonged to the Augustin nunnery of Dartford in Kent, founded by king Edward the Third, in 1373. After the dissolution, these lands were granted to Thomas Babington 35 H. 8. Tithes in Longford belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and were granted to the dean and chapter of Bristol 34 H. 8. A messuage in Longford, formerly belonging to the same priory, was granted to John Fernham and John Doddington 17 Eliz. Other tithes in this hamlet, which belonged to the same house, were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz. Tithes in Longford and Wotton, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to sir William Rider 7 Jac. 1. Longford is now divided among several freeholders.

Robert le Savage held one yard-land in Twigworth at the yearly rent of 5s. and by the service of carrying the king's writs to the sheriff at his own charges 5 H. 3. Robert le Savage and Maud his wife were seized of one yard-land in Twigworth 35 & 44 H. 3. John de Akerly was seized of twenty acres of arable, and six acres of meadow in Twigworth 2 E. 2. This manor afterwards belonged to the Beauchamps, and by marriage came to the Grevils. Fulk Grevil had livery thereof 4 Eliz. It is now divided among several proprietors, but the greatest part belongs to Samuel Hayward, esq. The chapel of Twigworth was seized into the king's hands 4 E. 3. The tithes of Twigworth belonged to the priory of St. Oswald, and were granted to the bishoprick of Bristol 34 H. 8. This hamlet has its proper officers.

6. Kingsholm, in the parish of St. Mary de Lode. William de Alba Mara was seized of two plow-tillages in Kingsholm in the reign of king Henry the Third; which king granted Kingsholm, then valued at 8l. a year, to Robert le Savage, to be held by the service of door keeper of the king's pantry. From him it descended to his son Robert le Savage, who granted it to John d'Aubeny 32 E. 1. John d'Aubeny, son of John, was seized of it

6 E. 3. and dying 19 E. 3. Cicely his widow continued in possession. John Boteler of the Park held the manor of Kingsholm 36 E. 3. John son and heir of Elizabeth Giffard held it 16 R. 2. John d'Aubeny and Cicely his wife and Elias de Godeley held it 18 R. 2. Nicholas Maddesdon, esq; was seized of the manor of Kingsholm, and of three acres in Twigworth and Walham, 14 H. 6. This manor came afterwards to the Beauchamps. Sir Richard Beauchamp died seized thereof, and left Elizabeth his daughter and heiress married to sir Robert Willoughby, lord Brooke. They had three granddaughters their coheiresses. Anne Willoughby, one of the sisters, died seized of a third part 25 H. 8. whereupon Francis Daughtry and Blanch his wife, another of the coheiresses, had livery of a moiety of her third part the same year. Thomas Thorp died seized of part of this manor 17 H. 8. and Thomas his son had livery thereof 29 H. 8. Rowland Arnold, esq; died seized of the manor of Kingsholm, and left Dorothy, his only daughter and heiress, married to Thomas Luci, who, in her right, had livery of the manor 15 Eliz. The hamlet is now divided among several proprietors.

John Dingbull was seized of lands in Kingsholm and Twigworth 15 H. 6. Christopher Throckmorton, and Richard Buckland and Elianor his wife levied a fine of lands in Kingsholm to William Henshaw and Alice his wife 21 H. 7. Tithes of corn and hay in Kingsholm belonged to the priory of St. Oswald, and were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz. This division has its proper officers.

N O R T H L E A C H.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Bradley, in the Cotswold country, ten miles distant northward from Cirencester, nine westward from Burford in Oxfordshire, and twenty east from Gloucester.

The soil is generally light and stony, but produces pretty good crops of corn. Plenty of petrifications, particularly of the cockle and star fish, are found here, and in some parts there is very good free-stone.

The little river Lech, which rises in the neighbouring parish of Hamnet, runs through and gives name to this place, as well as to some others lying in its course. In Domesday there are four manors of the name of Lecce, or Lece, which in subsequent records are thus distinguished. The most southerly of them dropped the name of Lece, and was called Southrop. This place, from its situation, was called Northleach; and the two remaining villages, which lie eastward, received the appellation of Eastleach.

There is a small market town within this parish, of the same name. It lies about half a mile on the east side of the Roman Foss-way, in a little valley, and was formerly a thriving place, where several clothiers and merchants of the staple resided, about two centuries ago. King Henry the Third, in the year 1220, granted to the monks of St. Peter's at Gloucester, two yearly fairs, on the feasts of St. Peter and St. Paul; and the abbey had a confirmation of markets and fairs in Northleach 5 H. 3. Here was a public market for wool and cloth, and some of the buildings for stowing of those commodities are now standing, with a spacious area in the middle, and galleries round for a communication. One part of those buildings is now the Lamb inn. The other parts, no longer employ'd according to the original intention, serve for barns and receptacles of lumber.

From the remains of those buildings, and from several memorials in the church for clothiers, and for respectable persons, denominated wool-men, and merchants of the staple, who died about 300 years ago, it appears that this was formerly one of the principal clothing towns in the county. It was conveniently situated for buying the raw materials, in a country abounding with sheep; but on the other hand, it is destitute of water sufficient for driving the machinery used in that trade, and this natural disadvantage is alone sufficient to account for the loss of the manufacture. The town soon felt that loss, and seems to have been declining ever since. Many houses are fallen down, many uninhabited, and the greater part of the rest are going fast to decay. And there are not quite seven hundred inhabitants in the whole parish.

There is a free grammar-school in this town, nobly endowed by Hugh Westwood, esq; who, by his will, gave the impropriation of Chedworth for its maintenance. By a decree in chancery 4 Jac. the patronage of the school is vested in Queen's college, Oxford. The master has 80*l.* a year, and a house, and the usher 40*l.* a year. It has been commonly reported, that Mr. Westwood being reduced in the latter part of his life, requested of his trustees to be appointed master of his own school, but was refused. From a regard to truth, and to prevent the further propagation of this groundless story, I assure the public, that this establishment did not take place 'till three years after Mr. Westwood's death; and it is wonderful how such a tale could be first set a going.

There are two constables for the town, and an officer called a bailiff, annually appointed at the lord's court, whose office is only to collect the tolls which belong to the town, and to let and receive the rents of the town estate. The market is held on Wednesday, and here are three fairs in the year, viz. on the Wednesday before the 23d of April, on the third Wednesday in May, and on the Wednesday before the 29th of September.

The turnpike-road from South Wales, through Gloucester and Oxford to London, passes through this town, and is pretty much frequented.

There is a very large camp, with a double agger, called Norbury, in the hamlet of Eastington in this parish, which some have supposed to be Roman, from its lying near the Foss-way, but I have never heard that any Roman coins have been found there. It incloses an area of about eighty acres; but is not every where perfect, having been levelled and destroy'd in some parts by the husbandman.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Before the conquest, the church of St. Peter at Gloucester held divers lands in this place, by the gift of Athelred, king of England.

In Domesday-book, under the title Terra Thome Archie'pi, it is thus recorded:

' St. Peter of Glouuec' held Lecce in Bradelege
' hundred, and Eldred archbishop [of York] held
' it with the abbey. There were twenty-four ' hides. In demean are four plow-tillages, and ' thirty-three villeins, and sixteen bordars, with ' thirty plow-tillages. There are four servi, and ' two mills of 7*s.* 4*d.* [rent.]

' Stanuuelle adjoins to this manor. There are ' two plow-tillages in demean, and five villeins,
' with five plow-tillages, and a mill of 40*d.* and ' four servi, and two ancillæ; and in Culberlege
' is one hide belonging to this manor.

' Of the land of this manor, Walter the son of ' Pontz holds one manor of twelve hides, which ' lay in the same manor in the time of king
' Edward. There are two plow-tillages in demean
' at Tormentone, and twenty-five villeins, with ' twelve plow-tillages, and four servi.

' The whole manor in the time of king Edward ' was worth 18*l.* Thomas archbishop [of York]
' put it to farm for twenty-seven hides. The hide
' at Culberlege is worth 20*s.*

' That

'That which Walter [the son of Pontz] holds is worth 14*l.* Archbishop Thomas claims it.' Domesday-book, p. 70.

To make the above extract more intelligible, the reader will observe, that the monastery of St. Peter at Gloucester had run greatly to ruin, when Aldred, bishop of Worcester, afterwards archbishop of York, taking it in hand, pulled down the old church, and built a new one at his own expence. And to reimburse him, the abbat gave him possession of the manors of Lecce, Otintune, Stanedis, and Bertune, which were appropriated to the archbishoprick of York. This is what is meant in the record by Eldred holding this manor with the abbey. Archbishop Thomas succeeded Aldred, and claimed all those manors at the time of the general survey, yet he afterwards restored them to the abbey, expressing contrition for having detained them so long; however the succeeding archbishops renewed their claim, and the dispute between the see of York and the abbey was not finally determined 'till the year 1157, as particularly set forth at p. 133. From that time the manor of Northleach, and the rectory and the advowson of the vicarage, continued in the abbey of Gloucester 'till its dissolution, when the manor was granted to lay hands. Sir Ralph Dutton was lord of the manor of Northleach at the beginning of this century, and it continued in his family 'till it was given, about the year 1769, by the will of John Dutton, eldest son of James-Lenox Dutton, of Sherbourn, esq; to the reverend Mr. Rice, who is the present lord of the manor.

The abbey of Winchcombe granted a fishery in the Severn, near Framilode, to the abbey of Gloucester, in exchange for 4*l.* yearly rent issuing out of the manor of Northleach 14 E. 2. The prior of Lanthony was seized of lands in Northleach 13 H. 4. John Purlwyn and Anne his wife, daughter and heir of John Doding, levied a fine of lands in Northleach to William Midwinter 2 R. 3. Richard Hercourt and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in this parish to Simon Hercourt 23 H. 7. Lands in Northleach, and the inn called the Crown, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to sir Baptist Hicke 7 Jac.

TITHING. Eastington lies on the east side of the town, agreeable to its name. It comprehends the greater part of the land in the parish, maintains its own poor, and pays taxes independently of Northleach. Here was formerly a chapel dedicated to Mary Magdalen, now demolished; but the chapel yard belongs to the vicar.

John Baluc was seized of the manor of Eastington 3 E. 1.

Pinficell, in Cubberly, is the hide of land mentioned in Domesday as belonging to the manor of Lecce. It is now charged to the land-tax jointly with Eastington, and has paid to the relief of the poor of this tithing.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 70*l.* a year. The bishop of Gloucester is patron; the rev. Thomas Hodson is the present incumbent, and master of the free-school. The rectory and advowson were granted to the bishoprick of Gloucester 33 H. 8. and the grant was confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church lies in the tithing of Eastington. It is a large, handsome building, dedicated to St. Peter, and consists of the nave and two aisles, with a chapel on each side of the chancel, and a strong well built tower, with six bells, at the west end. The porch at the south entrance is remarkably handsome. The chancel belongs to the impro-priator, the north chapel to the parish, and the south chapel to the lord of the manor. There was a chantry in this church, dedicated to St. Mary, whereof Henry Bridge was the last incumbent, and enjoy'd a pension of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in the year 1553. Willis.

The roof of the nave was considerably raised at the expence of John Forty, a wealthy clothier of this town, who died in 1458, and lies buried in the middle aisle. William Bicknell built the south chapel, in the year 1489, and he and his wife lie buried there.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There are several antient grey marble stones, with effigies and memorials engraven on brass, now mostly imperfect; but I thought proper to give some account of the remains of them. Upon one in the chancel, is the figure of a man kneeling, with uplifted hands. Over him was another figure, now torn off. Proceeding from his mouth, it is thus written in old characters:

O regina Poli mediatrix esto Lawnder Willi.
O numen celi Lawnder miserere Willi.

On plates round the margin of the stone,
Man In what state that euer thou be * Timor mortis shoulde

In the south chapel, a man and his wife, with eight sons and seven daughters, and beneath, the representation of a wool-pack, and a sheep couchant. Round the verge,

On another stone, (the brass now torn off) was written,

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 200 houses, and about 900 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 34 were freeholders; yearly births 23, burials 21.
The present number of families in the whole parish is 149, of inhabitants 683, by actual numeration; which shews the declining state of the town.

N O R T O N

IS a small parish in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, six miles distant south from Tewkesbury, seven west from Cheltenham, and four north from Gloucester, from whence the turnpike-road leads through this parish to Tewkesbury.

It is situated on the east bank of the Severn, and consists chiefly of rich meadow and pasture, with a small portion of arable land. Wainload-hill stretches along the river, and lies part of it in this parish, from the top of which there is an extensive and very agreeable prospect of the rich circumjacent country.

Norton, i.e. North Town, was so called from its relative situation to Gloucester.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Stigand [archbishop of Canterbury] held Nortune. There were five hides and a half. In demean were two plow-tillages, and fifteen villeins, with fifteen plow-tillages, and four servi, and a mill of 22*d*. It was then and is now worth 4*l*. Thomas archbishop [of York] now holds these three manors [i.e. Circesdune, Hochilicote, and Nortune]. Walchelin the nephew of the bishop of Winton holds Nortune of him. Domesday-book, p. 69.

This manor was afterwards divided into two, which were held of the honour of Gloucester, and were distinguished from each other by the names of Bishop's Norton, and Prior's Norton. Bishop's Norton was so called because it was the estate of the archbishop of York. Jeffery Giffard, archbishop of York, held the manor of Bishop's Norton 7 E. 1. It continued in the archbishoprick of York 'till the Reformation, and was granted to sir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6. William Whitmore, of Lower Slaughter, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and — Whitmore, esq; son of the late general Whitmore, is the present lord of the manor. His arms are, Vert, fretty Or.

The other manor was called Prior's Norton, because it belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and continued in that house 'till the general dissolution of religious foundations. It was granted, with the chapel called St. John's, and a portion of tithes, to John Bloxholm, 36 H. 8. John Read had livery of the manor granted to him 9 Eliz. as had Oliver St. John in the eighteenth year of the same reign. The manor came afterwards to Mrs. Prince, daughter to lord viscount Scudamore, who was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. It is now vested in the honourable Charles Howard the younger, in right of his wife Frances-Fitz-Roy Scudamore, daughter and heiress of colonel Fitz-Roy Scudamore.

William Britton gave five virgates of land in Norton to the abbey of Gloucester, and the grant was confirmed by king Henry the First. Nicholas Chamberlain and Agnes his wife were seized of lands in Norton 29 E. 1. John le Brun was seized of lands in Norton 31 E. 1. and a seat and estate here continued in the family of the Browns down to the beginning of the present century, when they were sold to Daniel Lysons, of Hempsted, esq; of whose family they were purchased, and William Singleton, esq; is the present proprietor.

A wood in Norton, called Prior's Wood, was granted to Thomas Bell, 36 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Gloucester, but belonging to the dean and chapter of Bristol, who have the patronage of the curacy, and pay the incumbent 20*l*. a year.

Elmelina gave the advowson of Norton to the abbey of Gloucester, and the grant was confirmed by her grandson Robert, son of Walter, and by Avelin his wife, in the year 1126.

The rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Norton belonged to the priory of St. Oswald, and were granted to the dean and chapter of Bristol 34 H. 8.

The church is small, but has a handsome embattled tower at the west end.

In the year 1562, there were 31 householders in this parish: At the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 62 houses, and 300 inhabitants, whereof 17 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 5. But the people are now decreased to about 240.

N O T G R O V E

IS a parish in the hundred of Bradley, about seven miles south-westward from Stow, four north-westward from Northleach, and seventeen north-eastward from Gloucester.

It lies high in the Cotswold, in a fine open country for the chase, with many bold acclivities without hills, and little bottoms between them that cannot be called vallies. It enjoys a fine healthy air, and the soil, tho' light and stony, produces pretty good crops of corn, from the late improved method of husbandry, and feeding large flocks of sheep, to the breed and management of which the farmers hereabout give great attention. Here are some downs, and a little pasture beside, but no meadow lands.

The name of the place was antiently written Nategrauc, from the Saxon gnæp, a grove or cauc; so it may either signify a grove of nut-trees, agreeable to sir Robert Atkyns's opinion; or it may be resolved into Nate's Grove, upon the supposition that Nate was the name of the antient proprietor of the place.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Sir Robert Atkyns represents this place as lying in the old hundred of Witelai, and as dependent on on the manor of Condicote, but he was certainly mistaken in both particulars; and was probably led into those errors by the account of Condicote being intermixt with the particulars of the manor of Withington, in that copy of Domesday which he used; and this I believe to have been the case, as I have myself seen the very same interpollation in another copy of that record.

Domesday recites, that 'the church of Wirecestre holds Widindune in Wacrescumbre hundred, consisting of thirty hides.' And after enumerating many other particulars, it is said, 'Schelinus holds five hides of the land of this manor in Nategrau.' p. 70. So that Schelinus was under-tenant to the bishop of Worcester; and the manor continued in the bishoprick of Worcester till the Reformation; but had been held successively by the Rodboroughs, Brownings, and Whitingtons, as mesne lords under the bishop, from the time of Edward the Third down to the Reformation.

John Browning, who is sometimes stiled lord of Natgrove, married Agnes, sister and heir of William de Rodborough, lord of the manor of Rodborough. Richard Browning, their son, was seized of lands in Notgrove 2 H. 4. and died 21 H. 4. Richard Tame and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Notgrove to John Tame and others, 9 E. 4. Richard Pole and Elizabeth his wife and Thomas Kepel levied a fine of lands in Notgrove 14 H. 7.

After the Reformation, this manor was granted to the Whitingtons. John Whittington, descended from the family of that name at Pauntley, was lord of it in the year 1608. It came afterwards to sir Clement Clerk, and was purchased by Nathaniel Pyrke, of Mitchel-Dean, esq; about the beginning of this century. He died in 1715, and Thomas Pyrke, of Little-Dean, esq; his eldest son and heir, was lord of the manor in the year 1750. He married Dorothy, daughter of Richard Yate, of Arlingham, esq; by whom he had issue two sons and a daughter, who all dying before him, he bequeathed this manor, and the house and estate at Little-Dean, to Joseph Watkyns, (descended by his mother's side from a brother of Thomas Pyrke) who now assumes the name of Pyrke, and is the present lord of the manor of Notgrove.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 200*l.* a year. Lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Gough is the present incumbent.

Four yard-lands belong to the glebe. Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was seized of the advowson of Notgrove 9 E. 2. Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, levied a fine of the advowson, to the use of himself for life, with several remainders, 35 E. 3. Richard Nevil, earl of Warwick, and Anne his wife, levied a fine of the fourth part of the advowson to the use of themselves in special talle, 6 E. 4. Anne countess of Warwick afterwards levied a fine of this advowson to the use of king Henry the Seventh, and has continued in the crown ever since.

The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew, and has a low spire, with three bells, at the west end, and a cross aile on the north side.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Against the south wall of the chancel, is the effigy in stone of a man in armour, lying along, intended, as supposed, for John Whittington, of Pauntley, esq; and beneath him another figure in a long robe, supposed to be for William Whittington, his son by a second wife. There are three scutcheons over them, of which that on the dexter side is, Per pale, 1. A fess checky, in chief a mullet, for John Whittington. 2. Quarterly 1 & 4. A lion rampant, for Pool. 2. A fess dancetty, for Solers. 3. On a bend four roundlets.—The middle scutcheon bears, 1. Whittington. 2. Argent, a chevron ermine between three escallops, for Milbourne. The sinister scutcheon bears Whittington, with a mullet for difference.

Under a niche, on the north side of the chancel, is the figure of a lady, supposed to be for one of the Whitingtons, lying along, in the fashionable dress of her time, with no other memorial than the date, 1630.

In the north cross aile is a very antient free-stone figure, in a long robe, and in the church-yard are two other such antient figures in stone, lying along in full proportion, concerning which I find the following strange story in Dr. Parsons's MS. About the year 1650, some of the parishioners removed one of those stones, which was hollow, to make a trough for the cattle to drink out of; but there was such a lowing and disturbance amongst them the day and night following, as struck the people with terror and amazement, and caused them to bring back the stone to its former place, and then all was quiet again. This was attested by the minister of the parish, and several of his neighbours of good credit, in the year 1680.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 33 houses, and about 150 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders, yearly births 5, burials 4. But since that time population is very much increased, and the present number of souls is exactly 218.

O D D I N G T O N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Slaughter, two miles distant east from Stow, six south-westward from Chipping-Norton in Oxfordshire, and twenty-seven north-eastward from Gloucester.

Otintune is the antient manner of writing the name, which seems easily and naturally resolvable into Otin-tune i. e. the Town of Otin, or Odin, some very antient proprietor, long before the conquest.

Part of the village lies on the slope of a hill, and part in a fine valley, on the east bank of the river Evenlode, which separates it from Oxfordshire. It consists of about nine hundred acres of land, pretty equally divided into pasture and tillage. The air is remarkably healthy, as appears by the account of burials in the parish register. In the year 1734, there was not one person buried, tho' the parish consisted of about eighty families; and only three very antient people died in the year 1773.

The herb Colchicum, or Meadow Saffron, grows plentifully in the meadows; and the Juncus Floridus, or Flowering Rush, is found on the west side of the river Evenlode, near Addlestrop-bridge. Also between that place and the parish of Dailford, grows a great quantity of the Nymphaea Major Lutea, or the Greater Water Lilly, bearing a yellow flower.

Crayle Crayle, esq; has an estate, and a handsome seat in this parish, (formerly belonging to the late judge Talbot) where, in the summer months, he usually resides.

Of the Manor, and other Estates.

'Eldred archbishop [of York] held Otintune in Salmansberie hundred, with its hamlet Condicote. There were ten hides, and two plow-tillages in demean, and sixteen villeins, and two radechenisters, and four bordars, with fourteen plow-tillages. This estate never paid tax. It was worth 6*l.* in the time of king Edward, and is now worth 10*l.* Thomas archbishop [of York] holds it. St. Peter of Glouuecestre had it in demean 'till king William came into England.' Domesday-book, p. 69.

For the better understanding the Domesday account, it is necessary to observe, that archbishop Eldred, or Aldred, had been at great expence in repairing the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, and this manor, and those of Lecce, Stanedis, and Bertune, were mortgaged to him, and put into his possession, to secure the payment of his money.

Archbishop Thomas, successor to Aldred, restored the mortgaged manors to the abbey, and expressed great penitence that he had so long and so unjustly detained them, from which it may be supposed that the mortgage had been then paid; yet notwithstanding, the succeeding archbishop claimed all those manors, and abbat Hameline found himself obliged to compromise matters with the archbishop, by making him an absolute grant of Oddington, in the year 1157, from which time this manor continued in the possession of the see of York 'till the general Reformation. Ottington was then taken from the archbishoprick, and given to sir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6.

Thomas Chamberlain, esq; a descendant from sir Thomas Chamberlain of Presbury, by Anne his third wife, was lord of this manor in the year 1608; and another Thomas Chamberlain, esq; possessed it at the beginning of this century.

The manor came afterwards to Charles Coxe, esq; descended, by his mother, from this family of the Chamberlaynes; from whom it passed by purchase to Nathaniel Piggot, esq; who is the present lord of this manor, and has a large estate in the parish; but he usually resides in Yorkshire.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 190*l.* a year. The precentor of York cathedral is patron, and Mr. Joseph Mellar is the present incumbent.

The parsonage house was built by Dr. Parsons, arch-deacon of the diocese, and sometime rector of this church. One yard-land belongs to the glebe, and a meadow called Fowl-moor, which is instead of tithe of the meadow grounds.

The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and stands at a considerable distance from the houses. It has two ailes, a large chancel, and a handsome embattled tower on the south side. The windows of the church and chancel were formerly ornamented with painted glass, which the rigid anti-papal principles, prevailing in the latter part of the reign of king Charles the First, would not suffer to remain undemolished.

OLDBURY on the HILL,

IS a small parish in the upper division of the hundred of Grumbald's-ash. It lies on the north side of the turnpike-road from Cirencester to Bristol, in an open champaign country, about six miles south-westward from Tetbury, twenty north-eastward from Bristol, and twenty-three south from Gloucester. The air is esteemed to be very healthy, and the lands are mostly in tillage.

Some barrows remain to shew that this place has formerly been the scene of war and bloodshed; but I find no camp, intrenchment, or fortification in the parish, nor can I learn that any thing of the kind is remembered here. Aldeberie, however, the old name, seems to indicate that here was antiently some place of defence, tho' the work itself is now totally demolished, and there is not so much as a tradition of its former existence.

The parish is generally called Oldbury on the Hill, to distinguish it from Oldbury on the Severn, a tithing in Thornbury.

The Bisfort, or Snake Weed, is a curious plant found in this parish, in a ground belonging to Mr. Watts.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Hernulf de Hefding holds Aldeberie in Grimboldestou hundred. There are five hides taxed. Edric held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and four villeins, with four plow-tillages; and there are nine servi, and one francigena, having one plow-tillage. There are six acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 10*l.* Dom. Book, p. 77.

Nicholas Burdon died seized of this manor, with free warren, 36 H. 3. leaving Nicholas his son, who died seized of Aldebury 29 E. 1. and another Nicholas Burdon died seized thereof 17 E. 3. Edward Burdon, son of the last Nicholas, was seized of Oldbury at the time of his death 36 E. 3. and was succeeded by John his son and heir, whose widow, Joan, died seized of the manor of Oldbury H. 4.

From the Burdons the manor passed to the Thorps. Henry Thorp, esq; was seized of it, and left it in jointure to Cecilia his widow, who died seized thereof 10 H. 5. Ralph Thorp, son and heir of Henry, and Amice his wife, levied a fine of the manor and advowson of Oldbury, to the use of themselves in special taille, 2 H. 6. William Thorp, son and heir of Ralph, died seized thereof 5 H. 6. Ralph Thorp, son of William, died seized of this manor 2 E. 4. and John Thorp had the reversion thereof 4 E. 4. whose son, William Thorp, succeeded him, and was found by inquisition to be an idiot. Thomasin Thorp, sister to William, was married to Thomas Clifford, who left Thomas Clifford, their son and heir. He was twenty-eight years old at the time of the death of his uncle, William Thorp, whose heir he was in right of his mother Thomasin. He had livery of the manor of Oldbury 1 H. 8. and was succeeded by William his son, who died seized of this manor 26 H. 8. Henry Clifford, son and heir of William and Elizabeth Clifford, had livery 28 H. 8. and he and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the manor and advowson of Oldbury to Hugh Dennis 4 Mar. Livery of the manor and advowson was granted to Henry Dennis 4 Eliz. after whose death it was granted to another Henry Dennis 14 Eliz. John Dennis, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, and the two coheiresses of William Dennis, of Pucklechurch, esq; were proprietors of the manor, and patrons of the rectory, at the beginning of this century. His grace the duke of Beaufort is the present lord of the manor.

Amice le Walsh was seized of one messuage and one plow-tillage in Oldbury and Dodington 18 E. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 90*l.* a year. His grace the duke of Beaufort is patron, and Mr. Cook is the present incumbent. This church was united in one presentation with that of Didmarton, in the year 1735.

The church, dedicated to Arild the virgin, consists of the nave only. It is decently pewed, and has two bells, in a low embattled tower, at the west end.

The register being very ill kept, gives but little light as to the salubrity of the place; but the people are greatly increased within the last sixty or seventy years, and are at present exactly 232.

OLDBURY upon SEVERN.

SEE THORNBURY.

OLEPEN, vulgarly OLDPEN,

IS a small parish in the hundred of Berkeley, three miles distant east from Dursley, five south-westward from Minchin Hampton, and about fifteen south from Gloucester.

It is a kind of gloomy retreat. The church and houses lie dispersedly at the top of a deep and narrow combe, almost environed by steep hills, covered with hanging beech woods, and forming a kind of amphitheatre, except to the west, where there is an opening towards the adjoining parish of Uley.

This situation undoubtedly gave rise to the name, which I find variously written, as Olepenne, and Ullepene, (and latterly, tho' very corruptly, Oldpen) which signifies the Top of Uley, from the British word Pen, the head or top of any thing.

Sir Robert Atkyns was mistaken in saying, This place is so called from the family of the Oldpens, who antiently lived here, and whose coat of arms were owls; for the fact was the reverse, as will appear from the slightest attention to the family name, which was more antiently written De Olepenne, and not as he produces it. The herald gave the arms for a rebus on the name, but he was ignorant perhaps, that Ole, or Ulle, did not mean the bird of night, but was really a word of two syllables, and only a different manner of writing Uley, of which this place was probably once a part; for there is no mention of Olepenne in Domesday, nor in any other record that I have seen earlier than the reign of king Edward the First.

The parish consists almost wholly of pasture land, and several springs rising here, form a brook, which runs down to Uley and Dursley, and so, with the waters of those places, into the Severn. There is no manufacture carried on here, but the inhabitants are employ'd by the clothiers at Uley, in the different branches of their manufacture.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It is recited in the escheator's inquisition, taken 4 E. 2. that John de Olepenne granted one messuage and half a yard-land in Olepenne to Edmond Basset; and the same John de Olepenne occurs as a benefactor to St. Bartholomew's hospital in Gloucester 18 E. 2. Bartholomew de Ullepene occurs about the same time in the list of benefactors to the abbey of Gloucester. These were then lords of the manor of Olepenne, which continued in the family of the same name 'till it came to John Daunt, by his marriage with Margery, the daughter and heiress of Robert Oulepen. He died 13 H. 8. and Thomas Daunt, esq; a descendant from him, is the present lord of this manor, and

* The family of Daunt is very antient, and formerly of considerable eminence both in England and Ireland. The following pedigree is authenticated by Peers Mauduit, Windsor herald of arms, and by William Hawkins, Ulster king at arms of all Ireland.

Nicholas Daunt, son of Simon, married Alice, daughter of Tracy, by whom he had a son Nicholas, who was living 24 H. 6. He married Alice, daughter and heir of Walter Jurden of Camme, and left two sons, Nicholas and John. John married Anne, daughter of sir Robert Stowell, of Somersetshire, by whom he had three sons, John, Thomas, and Stephen; and three daughters, Margaret, Maud, and Alice. He was a person attached to the Lancastrian family, and of considerable power, as may be gathered from the following letter, written in the year 1471, by Edward prince of Wales, son to king Henry the Sixth.

By the Prince.

EDWARD.

To our trusty and welbeloued John Daunt.

John Daunt, son and heir of John, married Margery, the daughter and heiress of Robert Oulepen, esq; in whose right he became seized of this manor. They had issue five sons, Christopher, John, George, Robert, and William; and two daughters, Jane, and Alice.

Christopher Daunt, son of John, married Anne, daughter of Giles Basset, of Yewley, esq; by whom he had three sons, Thomas, William, and Giles; and one daughter, Faith.

Thomas Daunt, the eldest son, married Alice, daughter of William Throgmorton, of Tortworth, esq; and had issue five sons, Henry, Thomas, Giles, William, and John; and four daughters, Mary, Elizabeth, Joyce, and Florence.

Henry, the eldest son, married Dorothy, daughter of Giles Hully, of Motcombe in Somersetshire, and left Frances, his only daughter and heiress, married to John Bridgman, of Nimpfield, esq.

Thomas Daunt, second son of Thomas, upon the death of Henry his elder brother without male issue, succeeded to this manor and estate. He married Mary, daughter of Brian Jones of Glamorganshire, by whom he had Thomas, his only son and heir, and one daughter, Margaret.

Thomas Daunt, son of Thomas, married Katherine, daughter of John Clayton, of the county of Chester, and had issue four sons, Thomas, John, Achilles, and George, who continued the family; and four daughters, Frances, Katherine, Mary, and Elizabeth.

Thomas Daunt, the eldest son and heir, married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Gabriel Lowe, of Newark in the parish of Oze-worth, and left Anne, his only daughter and heiress, who was married to Thomas Webb of Stone, in this county, and died in childbed, without issue; whereupon George Daunt, youngest brother of the last Thomas, and next male heir of the family, succeeded to this manor and estate. He married Martha, daughter of major Henry Turner, of Bandon Bridge, in the county of Corke, in Ireland, by whom he left issue two sons, Thomas, his successor, and Henry, who settled in Ireland, and married Anne, daughter of Thomas Knolles of Killehegh, in the county of Cork, and by her had issue five sons, Thomas, George, Henry, Achilles, and John, and one daughter Martha.

Thomas Daunt, eldest son of George, succeeded to the manor of Olepen, and married Elizabeth, daughter of George Singe, alias Millington, of Bandon Bridge, clerk. They had issue two sons, twins, Thomas and Achilles, born in 1702; and four daughters, Martha, Hannah, Elizabeth, and Mildred.

Thomas Daunt, esq; eldest son and heir of Thomas and Elizabeth, is the present lord of the manor of Olepen.

In the roll of the above pedigree are depicted the arms of the families with whom the Daunts have inter-married, viz. Gules, a cross lozengy argent, for Stowell. — Olepenne, as afterwards, — Ermine, on a canton gules a mullet pierced Or, for Basset. — Gules, a chevron argent three bars gemels sable, for Throgmorton. — Barry of six, ermine and gules, for Hully. — Sable, ten bezants 4, 3, 2, 1, on a chief argent a lion passant of the first, for Bridgman. — Gules, three lions rampant guardant argent, on a canton Or, a fret sable, for Jones. — Argent, a saltire between four martlets gules, for Clayton. — Per fess on a bend engrailed azure three cinquefoils Or, for Lowe. — Per fess sable and ermine, a pale countercharged; on the sable parts three links Or, for Turner. — Ermine, on a chief sable two bears heads caboshed Or, for Knolles. — Quarterly 1st and 4th, Azure, three mill-stones argent, each charged with a mill ink sable. 2d and 3d, Argent, an eagle with two heads display'd sable, for Singe, alias Millington.

resides here. His arms are, Argent, a chevron sable between three Cornish choughs heads erased proper. But he quarters the arms of the family of de Olepenne, viz. Sable, a chevron between three owls argent.

Edmond Basset of Uley died 4 E. 2. seized of one messuage and half a yard-land in Olepenne, which he held of John Olepenne by the service of 6d. a year.

There was a place called Schescombe in this parish, as appears by a deed of sale of lands there, from Henry de Olepenne to the brethren of St. Bartholomew's in Gloucester, in the reign of king Henry the Third. And the mayor and corporation of Gloucester have those lands, as patrons of the Bartholomew's.

OLVESTON.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Langley and Swineshead, ten miles distant north from Bristol, three south-west from Thornbury, and twenty-seven south-westward from Gloucester.

It is situated in the vale, and consists of rich meadow, pasture, and marshy land, with some orcharding, and a small proportion of arable.

The Vervain, or Herba Sacra, grows spontaneously and plentifully in the upper part of this parish, which herb has been very much celebrated of late, in the writings of John Morley, Esq; as a specific for that dreadful disorder the King's Evil.

This and the adjoining parish of Alveston are not distinguishable by their names in Domesday, which made sir Robert Atkyns place the extracts from that record, relating to both, under Alveston, and I have been led into the same mistake in following him. They were, without doubt, originally one parish, but in process of time became two distinct manors, whose common name Alveston, or Alveston, (i. e. Alwy's-town) shews whose property they were. When property was divided, and they were afterwards enjoy'd by different persons, future ages thought proper to distinguish these places by a small diversity, which affects only the first letter of their names, and this was then called Olveston.

There is a very high strong wall in this village, inclosing several acres of ground, which is the site of the antient seat of the Dennises, who had considerable property here, and some ruins of that seat are still remaining.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday it is thus recorded :

' Saint Peter of Bath held Alvestone in Langelei hundred. There are five hides, of which three pay tax, and two do not pay, by the grant of king Edward and king William. There are two plow-tillages in demcan, and nine villeins, and six bordars, and a priest, and one radchenister, with ten plow-tillages. There are seven servi, and meadow and wood sufficient for the manor. It was worth 100s. now 4l. The same church holds it still.' Domesday-book, p. 71.

The priest, mentioned in the record, shews that the above particulars belong to this parish, and not to that now called Alveston, because here was the mother church, to which that of Alveston is only a chapel of ease. And consequently sir Robert Atkyns was mistaken in saying that William the Conqueror gave the manor of Alveston (meaning this manor) to Guarine de Meez, whereas it was most probably Alliston in Lidney, for reasons assigned under that head.

The manor of Olveston, and the rectory and advowson of the vicarage, were part of the possessions of the abbey of Bath 'till the dissolution. The manor was then granted to sir Ralph Sadleyr 1 E. 6.

But there was an estate dignified with the title of a manor, called Alveston and Berwick, of which Roger Crook was seized 1 E. 3. and Robert Green de Bristol was seized of Olveston and of Berwick's tenement 27 E. 3.

Edward lord Stafford, duke of Buckingham, was seized of a manor here, which by his attainder came to the crown, and was granted to Thomas Henage and Catherine his wife, for life, 23 H. 8. Sir John Walsh died seized of Olveston 38 H. 8. and left Maurice his son, thirty years old, who had livery granted to him the same year. Nicholas Walsh, son of Maurice, died seized thereof 20 Eliz. whose son Henry had livery granted to him the same year.

The manor of Olveston came by purchase to sir Robert Cann, who was succeeded by his younger son sir Thomas Cann.

Sir Thomas left two sons, of whom Robert, the elder, came to the title of baronet, on the death of his cousin sir William Cann. William, the second son, was town clerk of Bristol, and succeeded to the title and estate of his brother, who died unmarried. Which sir William Cann had issue one son Robert; and one daughter Elizabeth, married to Mr. Jefferies of Bristol, by whom she had one son Cann Jefferies, and one daughter.

Sir

Sir Robert Cann succeeded his father, and having married the daughter of — Churchman, esq; died without issue in the year 1765, whereby the title is extinct. The estate descended to his nephew Cann Jefferies, esq; who dying unmarried, it came to his sister, married to Henry Lyppingcott, esq; who, in her right, is lord of this manor.

Roger Crook was seized of six librats of land in Olveston, for the use of the bishop of Bath, 16 E. 2. Sir Hugh Stafford was seized of thirty-six acres of land in Olveston 1 H. 6. John Parmiter and Richard Forster levied a fine each of lands in Olveston 12 H. 7.

HAMLETS. Tockington is a very considerable hamlet, of which it is thus recorded :

‘ Wlgar, one of king Edward’s thanes, held ‘ Tockintune in Langenei hundred. There were ‘ eight hides, and five plow-tillages in demean, and ‘ twenty villeins, and twelve bordars, and ten ‘ servi, with twenty plow-tillages. This manor
‘ did not pay farm in the time of king Edward,
‘ but he lived upon it whose property it was.
‘ Earl William held it in demean, and the steward ‘ added one plow-tillage, and a mill of 8*d*. It ‘ now pays 24*lib*. of white money, of which 20*lib*.
‘ are in Ora.’ Domesday-book, p. 69.

Sir Nicholas Ponz, or Pointz, lord of Corey Mallet in Somersetsire, was lord of this manor in the reign of king Henry the Third, as appears by a grant from him of a yard-land in Tockinton, to Clement Parmiter and his heirs, whose posterity enjoy’d that estate, with a handsome seat in this place, down to the present century, but it is now the property of Mr. Casmajor.

Nicholas Pointz died seized of Tockinton 5 E. 2. which he held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, for one knight’s fee, and left Hugh Pointz his son, eighteen years old. Esch. This manor continued in the Pointz’s for many generations, ’till Alice, the heiress of the family, carried it by her marriage, to sir Edward Berkeley, and dying 1 H. 8. it passed into that name and family. John Lawford, esq; was lord of this manor at the beginning of this century. A daughter of the Lawfords married Mr. Goodyer, and afterwards Mr. Rayner, who survived her, and sold the manor to the reverend Mr. Degge, whose sister, Mrs. Wilmott, is the present lady of the manor.

Hugh de Kilpeck was seized of one plow-tillage in Tockington, and left two daughters coheiresses; Isabel, married to William Walter, and Joan, married to Philip Marmion; and those lands were assigned to Isabel for her share 42 H. 3. John Newton, burges of Bristol, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Tockington, to the use of themselves in special talle, 8 H. 5. There was a free chapel in this place, belonging to the abbey of St. Augustin’s in Bristol, whereof Richard Berry was the last incumbent, and enjoyed a pension of 2*l*. 17*s*. in the year 1553. It was in the tenure of — Partridge, at the dissolution of that abbey, and was granted to sir Arthur Darcy 7 E. 6.

There are two fairs held annually at Tockington, one on the 9th of May, the other on the 6th of December, for cattle, &c.

Ingst is another hamlet. There are also places of the following names in this parish, viz. Hazel, Freeze-wood, Shipcombe, Old Down, Haw, the Holm, Walning, Gredige, Pilnend, Akely, Woodhouse, Ridgeway, and Cote, which last not having been rated to the land-tax, sometime after the establishment thereof, the commissioners ordered it to be assessed in aid of Thornbury, and it still pays that tax in conformity with such order.

Elizabeth Harrison, widow, late wife of Thomas Stanshaw, and daughter and heir of Alice, daughter of James lord Berkeley, levied a fine of lands in Coat, to the use of John Walsh, 13 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Bristol, to which Alveston is annexed, worth together about 200*l*. a year. The dean and chapter of Bristol are patrons, and John Camplin, M. A. præcentor of the church of Bristol, is the present incumbent.

Walter the sheriff gave the church of St. Helen’s in Alveston to the monastery of St. Peter of Gloucester 7 H. 1. The church of Olveston was appropriated to the priory of Bath 8 E. 2.

The rectories of Hampton, Alveston and Forde, late belonging to the monastery of Bath, and the patronage of the vicarages, were granted to the dean and chapter of Bristol 34 H. 8. And the impropriation still belongs to the church of Bristol, and is now in lease to — Willoughby, esq.

A portion of tithes in Tockington, formerly belonging to the college of Fotheringhay in Northamptonshire, was granted to Francis Barnham and Martin Barnham 11 Eliz.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has a low pinnacled tower in the middle, with six large bells. The spire which stood upon it was thrown down by lightning, in the year 1603. The chancel is handsomely wainscotted with Dutch oak, and the altar-piece and communion table are inclosed with circular palisadoes, all in a very pretty taste.

There was a chantry in this church, and a school, of which sir John Berkeley had the advowson 6 H. 6.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a grey marble stone against the wall of one of the arches which support the tower, with plates of brass, on which are engraven the figures of two men kneeling, upon whose surcoats are the arms of Dennis, with those of Gorges, Russel, and Milborn, in quarterings. From the mouth mouth of him on the dexter side proceeds a label, on which is written,

Unicus et trinus bone Ihū fis Nobis Ihūs :

From the other's mouth,

In Trinitate p'fecta fit nobis requies et et'na vita.

Between them, on a scroll,

Benefactions.

A messuage, garden, and orchard; two closes called the Hayes, one close called the Hilland, as also a smith's shop, house, and garden, and another house; also a paddock in Tockington, and another in Woodhouse, together with other lands in this parish, in all worth 17*l.* a year, were left to be repaired by Jenkin Kite, to repair the church.

George Moss gave a rent-charge of 10*s.* on the New Leases, for a sermon; as did another person the like rent-charge on Gayner's Lease for another sermon.

John Hancock, of Ingst, gave 20*s.* a year by will to the poor, charged on a tenement in Bedminster. In 1717, Martha Baker, of Aust, gave a rent-charge of 40*s.* a year; and in 1719, John Tapson, of Tockington, charged his lands in Tockington with 40*s.* a year, each for the use of the poor; and in 1722, Edward Wade, of Woodhouse, gave 15*s.* a year out of a ground, to be distributed to the poor in bread on Good Friday.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 50 houses, and about 100 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 8. In ten years, beginning with 1760, the average of annual baptisms was 19.9, of burials 15.3, and the present number of souls is 593; so that about one in thirty-eight dies in a year. In 1742, the inhabitants were 588; and it is remarkable that only one person, (a woman upwards of eighty years old) was buried from Feb. 20, 1751, to March 21, 1753.

O X E N H A L L.

THIS parish lies in the vale, in the hundred of Botloe, one mile north-west from Newent, eight north from Dean, and eleven north-westward from Gloucester.

It is by no means a flat country. The lands lie dry and healthy, in very beautiful slopes and swells; and the soil, which is a rich, sandy loam, inclining in some places to clay, produces the great necessaries of life in perfection and abundance. This parish, and those of Dimmock, Kempley, Preston, and Pauntly, make as fine a district of country as any in the county of Gloucester, but it is not, perhaps, equally well cultivated. The roads cannot be commended at any time, but in the winter they are almost impassible.

The arable lands, which constitute the greater part of the parish, are intersected with rows of fruit-trees, whose blossoms, in the spring, are captivating to the senses, and from whose fruit, in the autumn, the farmer derives no inconsiderable profit.

The church and tower are chiefly built with a red kind of sand stone, very hard and durable, if kept dry. This stone lies in one intire stratum, and may be dug on the spot, of any size or shape at pleasure. It is ponderous, and full of shining particles, which I take to be iron: About fifty years ago, upwards of twenty tons of that metal were cast weekly at a furnace here, which has been out of blast for some time.

Among other vegetable productions, the following plants, viz. Hoarhound, Wood-Wax, Wild Sorrel, Fox-Glove, and Daffodil, grow plentifully here.

A stream called Ellbrook rises in Herefordshire, and after running through this parish, and Newent, falls into the Leden, near Leden-court.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Roger de Laci holds Horsenchal in Botelau hundred. Turchil held it of earl Herald, and could go where he would. There are three hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and five villeins, and three bordars, with five plow-tillages. There are two servi, and in Gloucester three burgages of 15*d.* It is worth and was worth 40*s.*' Domesday-book, pp. 74, 75.

William de Ebroecis, or de Evers, obtained a charter of free warren in Oxenhall 36 H. 3. His son, William de Evers, succeeded him, and Maud, widow of the last mentioned William, held lands within this manor in dower, and her right to free warren was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

William de Grandison was lord of the manors of Oxenhall and Dimmock 9 E. 1. as appears by the sheriff's return of all the vills in the county, with their respective lords, the same year. He was summoned as a baron to parliament, and married Sybil, younger daughter and coheirefs of John de Tregoz, with whom he had the manor of Lydiard-Tregoz in Wiltshire.

The manor came afterwards by marriage to the earls of Ormond. Sir James Ormond, son of James earl of Ormond, and Amice the wife of fir James, levied a fine of this manor, and of Okely Grandison in Newent, to the use of themselves in taille, the remainder to the right heirs of Amice, 23 H. 6.

James earl of Wiltshire was seized of the manor at the time of his attainder 1 E. 4. and the manor and advowson were granted to fir Walter Devereux and his heirs male the same year.

The manor afterwards reverted to the crown, and was granted to the duke of Northumberland, upon whose attainder it came again to the crown, and was mortgaged, as security for money borrowed, to Paul Withepole, and other citizens of London, 36 H. 8.

Thomas Brook, esq; died seized of the manor 38 H. 8 whereby Joan his sifter, the widow of — Arrowsmith, became his heir, and had livery granted to her 1 E. 6. William Pigot, esq; died seized of Oxenhall and Kempley 7 E. 6. leaving Edward his son, forty years old, who had livery of those manors the same year. Henry Pigot, son of Edward, left Anne, his only daughter and heirefs, married to Henry Finch, esq; who, in her right, was seized of this manor in the year 1608, and died in 1631. Francis Finch, only son and heir of Henry, married Jane, daughter of Dr. Thornborough, bishop of Worcester, and left John Finch his son and heir; but Mr. Foley was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and it is now the property of lord Foley.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, worth about 15*l.* a year. The patronage was formerly in the impropriator, but the living has been held by licence from the bishop ever since the year 1636. Mr. Serjeant is the present incumbent. An acre of land, and twenty marks yearly, were decreed to the curate by the court of exchequer 15 C. 1. and the impropriator still continues to pay him 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* a year.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the preceptory of Dinmore in Herefordshire, which was a cell to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem. It is now the property of Maynard Colchester, of Westbury, esq.

The church is small, with a spire at the west end.

At the beginning of this century, there were 46 houses in this parish, and about 200 inhabitants, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 6. Atkyns. The present number of families is 46, of inhabitants exactly 202.

IS a small parish in the lower division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, about four miles distant eastward from the town of that name, five westward from Winchcombe, and twelve northward from Gloucester.

Part of it lies in the vale, and part stretches over one of those hills that bound the Cotswolds. The soil is good in general, but sheep depasturing on any part of the parish are very subject to the rot. The village consists only of one or two ordinary farm houses, and a few mean cottages.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'In the time of king Edward there were five 'hides and a country-seat [aula] at Oxendon 'belonging to Teodekesberie. There are five 'plow-tillages in demean, and five villeins, and 'two radchenisters, having seven plow-tillages, 'and twelve among the servi and ancilla. There 'are twenty-four acres of meadow. At Wince- 'combe three burgages pay 40*d.* The whole is 'worth and was worth 8*l.*' Dom. Book, p. 68.

John de la Hay held the manor very antiently. Sir Ralph de la Hay and Eustachia his wife held the manor early in the reign of king Henry the Third, as appears by an agreement made between them and Peter the abbat of Tewkesbury concerning tithes, and other things; which agreement is inserted in Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon, Vol. 2. Appendix, p. 205. He was seized of this manor 30 H. 3.

William Totchett was lord of the manor of Oxendon 9 E. 1. as appears by the sheriff's return made the same year; and a fine of the manor of Oxinton was levied to his use by Roger de Moreton and Isabel his wife 27 E. 1. He had a confirmation of free warren in this and other manors granted him in the 28th, and was summoned as a baron to parliament in the 34th year of the same reign, and died soon after, without issue. William Tuchet, son of Nicholas, was his heir. In the escheator's inquisition, taken after the death of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, it is said that William Tuchet held half a knight's fee in Oxinton and Aston (upon Carant) of the said Gilbert, worth 15*l.* a year, 8 E. 2. Taking part with the earl of Lancaster, in his endeavours to expel the Spencers, he was made prisoner at the battle of Burrowbridge, and hanged at York as a rebel.

rebel 15 E. 2. The manor thereupon was seized into the king's hands, and granted to Hugh le Dispencer the younger, the same year.

This Hugh being afterwards attainted, the manor was granted to Bartholomew Badlesmere, (heir to the former Touchets) who was hanged at Canterbury for rebellion 2 E. 3. notwithstanding which, Giles Badlesmere, son of Bartholomew, succeeded in this manor. He was summoned as a peer to parliament 9 E. 3. and died seized of Oxinton 12 E. 3. leaving four sisters, his coheiresses; Maud, was married to John de Vere, earl of Oxford; Elizabeth, to William de Bohun, earl of Northampton; Margaret, to Sir John Tibitot; and Margery, to Willial lord Roos.

In the partition of the estates, this manor was assigned to sir John Tibitot, who was summoned as a baron to parliament 9 E. 3. and died 41 E. 3. Robert lord Tibitot, son of John, succeeded him in the manor of Oxinton. He married Margaret, daughter of William Deincourt, and died 46 E. 3. leaving three daughters, his coheiresses, who were granted in ward to Richard le Scroop, lord treasurer of England. Margaret, the eldest daughter, was married to Roger le Scroop, eldest son of Richard le Scroop, whereby the manor of Oxenton came into that name and family, in which it continued down to the beginning of the present century.

Sir Stephen le Scroop and Millefent his wife levied a fine of the manor of Oxenton 3 R. 2. Sir John Scroop died seized of this manor 8 H. 8. and Richard Scroop, his son, had livery thereof 17 H. 8. George Scroop had livery of this manor granted to him 15 Eliz. John Scroop, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608, as was Charles Scroop, esq; at the beginning of this century. Edmund Lechmere, esq; is the present lord of this manor, and holds a court here.

There was another estate in this parish, entered in Domesday-book among the lands belonging to the church of St. Dennis at Paris. 'Five hides in Olfendone belong to the same manor [Derhest].' p. 72. Accordingly it appears by the terrier of the priory of Derhurst, that the prior had twelve oxhillages of land in Oxendon, and 4*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* rents of assize, and 4*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* from his villeins.

It does not appear to whom the above estate was granted at the general dissolution, but it is probable that it became the property of the lay lord of the manor of Oxinton.

John de la Hay purchased lands in Oxendon of Ralph de la Hay and Eustachia his wife 30 H. 3. and his claim to free warren was allowed in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. A house and lands in Oxendon were granted to sir Christopher Hatton 24 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Winchcombe. The earl of Coventry is patron and impropiator; Mr. Roberts is the present incumbent. The living was augmented with the queen's bounty, in the year 1746, and the curate receives 6*l.* a year out of the impropriation.

The rectory of Oxenton, and lands called Parson's, with the tithes of Kemp, lately belonging to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to James Gunter and Walter Lewis, in trust, 37 H. 8. Other tithes in Oxenton, lately belonging to the same abbey, were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget, 36 H. 8.

There is no glebe, nor house for the curate.

The church is small, and has a small tower at the west end.

IS a small parish in the hundred of Berkeley, about two miles eastward from Wotton-underedge, three south-eastward from Dursley, and about eighteen south from Gloucester.

It is situated on the verge of the hill country, with large woods adjoining, and is most remarkable for the number of foxes killed in one year, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, which amounted to two hundred and thirty-one.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Ozleworth was a berewic, or member, belonging to the manor of Berkeley, at the time of the general survey, as appears by Domesday-book, where it is said, that 'half a hide in Olfuuorde belongs 'to Berchelai.' p. 68.

The manor was afterwards granted by the Berkeley family to St. Augustin's abbey in Bristol, whose claim to a court leet was allowed 15 E. 1. The abbey of Kingswood in Wiltshire was seized of Ozleworth 12 H. 4. and continued possessed of it till the general dissolution of religious foundations, when it was granted to sir Nicholas Pointz 31 H. 8. whose family were before seized of it as tenants under the abbey of Kingswood, for sir Robert Pointz, grandfather of Nicholas, died seized of the manor of Ozleworth 12 H. 8. Sir Nicholas Pointz, above mentioned, died 4 Mar. Nicholas Pointz, son of sir Nicholas, had livery of the manor granted to him the same year, and sold it to sir Thomas Rivet, alderman of London, of whom it was purchased by sir Gabriel Low, likewise alderman of London.

Sir Thomas Low, son of sir Gabriel, was lord of this manor in the year 1608, and sir Gabriel Low, Low, ſon of ſir Thomas, died ſeized thereof in 1704. Timothy Low, eſq; ſon of ſir Gabriel, was lord of this manor when ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his History. The late James Clutterbuck, eſq; who died in the latter part of the year 1776, was lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good eſtate in the pariſh, where he had a handsome feat called Newark, originally built by ſir Nicholas Pointz, out of the ruins of Kingswood abbey, but repaired and greatly improved by its ſeveral ſucceſſive proprietors. The houſe ſtands on high ground, and commands an extenſive and very agreeable proſpect. The arms of Clutterbuck are, Azure, a lion rampant argent, in chief three eſcallops of the laſt.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectorſhip, in the deanery of Durſley, worth about 60*l.* a year, of which the late James Clutterbuck, eſq; was patron.

Roger lord Berkeley gave this church to the priory of Stanley St. Leonard, which was a cell to the abbey of Glouceſter, and the patronage was veſted in that abbey 2 H. 8.

The rectorſhip pays 6*s.* 8*d.* a year to the crown.

The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and has a round tower, with a wooden ſpire in the middle.

When ſir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this pariſh, there were 17 houſes, and about 70 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. The people are increaſed ſince that time, and are now about 80 in number.

PAINSWICK.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Biſley, four miles north-weſt from the town of that name, four north from Stroud, and ſix ſouth from Glouceſter.

At the time of the general ſurvey, the name of it was ſimply Wiche. About the reign of king John, it received the addition of Pain, from Pain Fitz-John, who was then lord of the manor; but ſir Robert Atkyns ſays, it had been called Michaelſwick before that time, of which, however, I have found no inſtance in the records.

The pariſh produces no very curious or uncommon plants or foſſils, except a very fine kind of white freſtone may be ſo eſteemed. The ſoils are ſuch as are moſt commonly found in a country full of hills and uneven ground, with little bourns and meadows between them, and well cultivated paſture grounds and arable fields on the higher ſituations. Here is alſo a very large proportion of woodland, conſiſting almoſt intirely of beech.

There is a ſmall market town, about the middle of the pariſh, of the ſame name, very irregularly built, with ſhort ſtreets and frequent turnings, but pleaſantly ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the acclivity of the great hill Sponebed. It has two fairs in the year, one held on Whit-Tueſday, the other on the 19th of September, for ſheep and horned cattle; beſides a very large fair, or great market, for ſheep, on the Tueſday before All-Saints-day, according to the old ſtyle. The market is held on Tueſday, by a royal charter firſt granted 17 E. 2. and afterwards renewed in 1627. But the town is ſo environed with hills on every ſide, as not to be eaſily acceſſible to loaded carriages, and it is ſo nearly ſituated to Glouceſter and Stroud, that the market is very little frequented.

There is an antient fortification of double intrenchments upon the top of Sponebed-bill, about a mile above the town, called Caſtle-Godwin, and Kimſbery-Caſtle; of which it is obſervable, that the word caſtle, in the latter name, is redundant, as being fully expreſſed by bery, (from the Saxon beoꝛꝝ) a camp, or fortification. It is a ſquare camp, incloſing about three acres of ground, and has ſome advanced works belonging to it. Several Roman coins have been found there at different times, and not above thirty years ago, a ſword, and ſome heads of ſpears were taken up, but ſo corroded with ruſt as hardly to hold together. It commands an extenſive proſpect over the vale and the Severn, from Newnham, below Glouceſter, as far as the city of Worceſter, which the eye can eaſily diſtinguiſh in a fair day. Theſe circumſtances put the matter out of doubt that this was one of the Caſtra Exploratoria of the Romans. I ſuppoſe it to have been occupied by earl Godwin, (from its bearing his name, and from other circumſtances related under Beverſtone) in that inſurrection, in the reign of king Edward the Confeſſor, to expel all foreigners out of the kingdom, of whom the nation was very jealous, and whom the king, who then lay at Glouceſter, was thought to favour too much.

King Charles's army occupied this poſt after quitting the ſiege of Glouceſter; and there is a tradition, that the king, ſitting on a ſtone near the camp, was aſked by one of the young princes, When they ſhould go home? To which his majeſty answered, a little diſconſolately, that He had no home to go to.

The clothing manufacture has been long eſtabliſhed in theſe parts, by which many have acquired large fortunes. It is ſtill conſidered as a lucrative and genteel employment, capable of any extenſion; and it certainly deſerves the greateſt encouragement, becauſe it furniſhes labour for the poor of both ſexes, and all ages, who derive from it the neceſſaries and comforts of life; and the air air of this pariſh, which is remarkably ſalubrious, gives them a great ſhare of health to enjoy them.

The principal houſes in the pariſh are,

1. The Lodge, or manor-houſe, which is a large and handſome ſeat belonging to ſir James Jerningham, baronet, who keeps it in repair; but it has not been the reſidence of any of his family for many years.

2. The ſeat of Benjamin Hyett, eſq; ſituate a little above the town. It is an elegant houſe, with offices, finiſhed by his late uncle, who called it Buenos Ayres.

3. Paradiſe, a handſome ſeat, the property and reſidence of Charles Sheppard, eſq.

4. A very handſome, new-built houſe in the town, the reſidence of John Gardner, eſq.

The turnpike-road leads through the town from Stroud to Glouceſter.

Of the Manor and other Eſtates.

The following record was over-looked by ſir Robert Atkyns :

‘ Roger de Laci holds Wiche in Biſelege hundred. One hide there pays tax. Erneſi held it. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and twenty-five villeins, and ſixteen bordars, and a prieſt, and three radcheniſters, having amongſt them all fifty-two plow-tillages. There are eleven ſervi, and four mills of 24*ſol.* and a wood five miles long, and two broad. It was worth 20*l.* now 24*l.* The thane himſelf could go where he would. St. Mary of Cireceſtre holds one vill [or the land of one villein] and part of a wood, which king William granted to her, worth 10*s.*’

Domeſday-book, p. 75.

The above Roger de Laci, taking part with Robert Curthoiſe, had his poſſeſſions taken from him by king William the Second, who gave them to Hugh de Laci, his younger brother. Hugh left no ſurviving iſſue, whereby his inheritance deſcended to Gilbert, ſon of Emme, his ſiſter and ſurviving heiress, which Gilbert aſſumed the name of Laci. Hugh de Laci was ſon and heir of Gilbert, and died 31 H. 2. about which time this eſtate went out of the name of Lacy.

Robert and Ivo, or John, were two potent Normans, who came into England with king William the Conqueror. John married the daughter and ſole heiress of William Tyfon, lord of Alnwicke in Northumberland. His ſon was Euface Fitz-John, who married Beatrix, a great heiress, and by her had iſſue William Fitz-John, who took the name of Veſci, one of his mother’s titles. Pain Fitz-John, ſays ſir Robert Atkyns, younger brother of Euface Fitz-John, and ſecond ſon of Ivo, was ſlain by the Welch

1 Joh. But ſir Robert was probably miſtaken, for it was 133 years from the conqueſt to 1 Joh. and it is not likely that the ſon of that Ivo, who came into England with the Conqueror, ſhould ſurvive ’till that time. It is ſufficient, however, for our preſent purpoſe, that ſome Pain Fitz-John then died ſeized of the manor of Painſwick, which from him took its name.

Pain Fitz-John left two daughters, Cicely, married to Roger the ſon of Milo of Glouceſter; and Agnes, married to William de Monte Caniſio, or Monchenſy, who was ſeized of this manor in right of his wife; and William Fitz-Warine de Monchenſy pleaded his right of privileges in Painſwick, in a writ of Quo warranto brought againſt him, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1.

Dionifia de Monchenſy, daughter of William Fitz-Warine, and widow of Hugh de Vere, died ſeized of this manor 7 E. 2. and was ſucceeded by Joan the ſiſter, and at length heiress of the aforeſaid William Fitz-Warine de Monchenſy; which Joan was married to William de Valentia, of the family of Luſignia, in Poictiers in France, and half brother, by the mother, to king Henry the Third.

Audomar de Valentia, earl of Pembroke, third ſon of William, after the death of his brothers, became heir to his father, and purchaſed a charter for a weekly market in Painſwick, to be held on Tueſday, and a yearly fair on the eve of the nativity of the virgin Mary, 17 E. 2. and dying the ſame year, his three ſiſters were his coheiresses. Joan, the youngeſt, was married to John Comyn, of Badenagh in Scotland, ſon of John Comyn, one of the competitors for that kingdom. They left only daughters coheiresses.

Elizabeth, one of thoſe daughters, was married to Richard Talbot, of Goderick-caſtle in Herefordſhire, whereby the Talbots were poſſeſſed of the manor of Painſwick, which continued a long time in that family. This Elizabeth was taken by the two De Spencers, and confined by them near a twelve-month, during which ſhe was compelled by threats to paſs this manor to the eldeſt of them, and his heirs. But on the change of affairs, the ſame Richard Talbot and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the manor of Painſwick, to the uſe of themſelves in ſpecial taile, 12 E. 3.

John Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury, was lord of this manor, and held a court on the 21ſt of April 1 H. 4. to which he came, and by the advice and conſent of his homage, made ſeveral alterations in the cuſtoms of the manor, very much to the advantage of the tenants.

From the proceedings of this court, we learn the original of the widows free bench in copyhold ‘ Dugdale’s Baronage.

‘ The following proceedings at this court contain ſeveral curious particulars, and ſhew the nature of ſome things which length of time has made obſcure.

Sir John Talbot and Margaret his wife levied a fine of this manor to the use of themselves in special tittle, the remainder to the right heirs of sir John, 20 H. 6. John Talbot, the great earl of Shrewsbury, died seized thereof, and of a tenement called Damsels-land, 31 H. 6. It was afterwards settled on John viscount Lisle, a younger branch of the earl of Shrewsbury, by Margaret, eldest daughter of Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and of Elizabeth, the great heiress of Thomas lord Berkeley. John earl of Shrewsbury and Thomas viscount Lisle levied a fine of this manor 9 E. 4. After the death of the said Thomas viscount Lisle, it was granted to Margaret his widow for life, 11 E. 4. Elizabeth Courtney, countess of Devonshire, died seized of this manor 21 H. 7. Sir Arthur Plantagenet and Elizabeth his wife, cousin and heir of the countess of Devonshire, had livery thereof granted them 11 H. 8.

The manor afterwards came to the crown, and was granted to Thomas Cromwell, earl of Essex, upon whose attainder it was granted to George earl of Shrewsbury 30 H. 8. And it was again granted by the crown, with Sponebed, and lands in Thescomb, Stroud-end, and Horfwarly near Painswick, to sir William Kingston 32 H. 8. who died seized thereof the same year, and sir Anthony Kingston, his son and heir, had livery upon his father's death, and levied a fine of this manor to sir Nicholas Pointz 5 E. 6.

The manor afterwards passed to the Jerninghams, of Coffey in Norfolk. Henry Jerningham had livery of it 15 Eliz. and conveyed this manor to his son Henry Jerningham, esq; who was lord of it in the year 1608. John Jerningham was son and heir of Henry. Sir Francis Jerningham was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, from whom it has descended, through several generations, to sir James Jerningham, baronet, who is the present lord of the manor, and proprietor of a large estate in this parish. His arms are, Argent, three buckles gules. But in the last herald's survey, I find them, Argent, three bucks trippant gules.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. The tithing of Edge, alias Rudge.
2. Tithing of Sponebed.
3. Tithing of Shepscombe. In the reign of king Edward the Sixth, there were several insurrections in the west, and other parts of the kingdom. At that time sir Anthony Kingston was knight-marshal, and lord of the manor of Painswick. He caused a gallows for the insurgents to be erected upon Shepscombe-green, and made a prison in Painswick to secure all sorts of offenders: And supposing they might be useful to posterity, he also gave three estates in his lordship, since called Gallows-lands, one always to maintain the gallows, a second to keep two ladders in readiness, and the third to provide halters; and that nothing in so necessary a business might be wanting, provided that the tithingman of Shepscombe should be hangman, and that he should enjoy an acre of land in that tithing for his service. I find this account in Mr. Wantner's Collections, in the Bodleian library. There are many people now living who remember the gallows, and the tithingman for the time being still enjoys a piece of ground there called Hangman's Acre; but in this respect his office is a sine-cure.

4. Stroud-end tithing.

Beside these, there are places in the parish of the following names, the Slad, Steanbridge, Wickstreet, Halcomb, and many others.

Many customary tenants hold of the manor of Painswick, whose customs, as settled by the court of chancery 11 Jac. are as follow:

1. The tenants hold by copy of 'court-roll, sibi & suis; whereby they have an estate of inheritance, which may be alienated by surrender to the steward in court, in the presence of two customary tenants. Upon every descent, the lord to have one year's rent, and an heriot, if the lands are heriotable; but upon surrenders, the fine to be seven years rent.

2. After the death of a tenant, his wife, if he had any, shall be admitted to her free bench during her life, paying one penny.

3. If a tenant has several sons, and the eldest die leaving issue, such issue shall inherit as next heir to the grandfather. And if a tenant die, leaving several daughters only, and as many yards or half yards of land as daughters, then every daughter shall have a yard or half yard land; and the like order is observed with tenements.

4. No sheriff, &c. to serve any process upon any person within this liberty, unless it be with a commandment, or subpœna. There are many other articles of less consequence, which are here omitted.

The records shew, that the prior of Lanthony had an estate in this parish, which has been called a manor. After the dissolution of the priory, it was sold to Arthur Porter, esq; and has been since sold and divided amongst several freeholders.

Walter Wilton and Isabel his wife recovered lands in Painswicke against Osbert Giffard 28 E. 1. John Mandevil was seized of lands in Painewick and Edgworth 34 E. 3. And Robert Hill and his wife levied a fine of lands in Painswick and Edgworth 1 H. 7. A messuage and lands in Painswick, called Combe-house, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8.

Ebworth is a considerable estate in this parish. Walter le Bret was seized of lands and tenements in Ebworth, worth 40s. yearly, in trust for the abbat of Gloucester 31 E. 1. The abbey of Gloucester was seized of the manor of Ebworth 17 E. 3. Ebworth-farm is now the property of

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 200*l.* a year. The vicar is elective by all the payers in the parish. Mr. Mosely is the present incumbent.

The rectory of Wyche was given by Hugh de Laci, and confirmed by earl Roger to the priory of Lanthony, as appears by king John's confirmation of grants to that priory, in the Appendix N^o. 19. But sir Robert Atkyns mentions it to have been annexed to that priory 21 R. 2. The impropriation is now vested in several proprietors.

A rent of 21*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* reserved out of the rectory, and divers lands in Painfwick, were granted to Francis Maurice and Francis Philips 9 Jac.

The advowson of the vicarage of Painfwicke, which belonged to the priory of Lanthony, was granted, at the dissolution, to Thomas lord Seimour, and upon his attainder, it was again granted to sir Christopher Hatton 21 Eliz. William Newport, nephew and heir to the lord keeper Hatton, sold it to sir Henry Winston, of whom it was purchased, in the names of trustees, for the inhabitants of the parish.

There is a large glebe belonging to the vicarage, worth 60*l.* a year. The demans of the manor pay no tithes, because the vicar hath Bangrove-mead in lieu of them.

The church consists of a nave, with two ailes, and three galleries; and there are three chancels, of which, that next the communion rails, extending to the altar-piece, belongs to the vicar; another, between the vicar's and the nave, is appendant to one portion of the rectory; and a third, on the north side, was formerly a chantry chapel, of which William Corbust was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 5*l.* 10*s.* This belongs to the lord of the manor.

The south aile is built in the modern taste, supported by Doric pillars, with capitals. The grand entrance into the church is at a portico on the south side, of the Ionic order. The north aile is a Gothic building, decorated with battlements, under which issue four antique water-spouts, representing so many evil demons flying away from the sound of the bells, according to some received notions in former days, when it was customary to sprinkle them with holy water at their being first placed in the tower, to give them a power of repelling evil spirits by their sound. And if agreeable and musical tones have any effect on a distempered mind, the ten bells in this tower have as much merit as any peal in the kingdom.

The altar-piece is of freestone, of the Ionic order, given by the late Benjamin Hyett, esq; and executed by John Bryan, of this place, in the year 1743.

The tower stands at the west end, with a handsome steeple on it, fifty-eight yards high from the ground.

The church-yard is laid out in handsome gravel walks, with yew-trees on each side, cut into the form of cones, and is the place of resort for the ladies and the polite inhabitants of the town in fair weather.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There are no very antient monuments in this church. The most antient was a grey marble tomb, against the wall of the north chancel, for sir William Kingston, with his effigy and an inscription on brass fixt in the wall; but his figure is intirely gone, and the brasses are stolen away. And to mingle and confuse one thing with another, there are now the effigies of doctor Seaman and his lady, placed on sir William's tomb. They are in a praying posture, with a desk between them; he in a doctor of laws gown, and a shield, with their arms lying by, viz. Baron and femme, 1. Gules, three bears heads couped argent, 2. Argent, on a bend between two lions rampant sable, three ascallops of the field, for Norton. The doctor's monument, with a memorial, was placed in the chancel, and taken down to make room for the new altar-piece, see p. 163.

There are several memorials on flat stones for the Jerninghams, in this chancel, containing very little more than their names.

In the vicar's chancel,

Arms, Baron and femme, 1. Argent, a cross raguly gules, for Lawrence. 2. Azure, a chevron ermine between three ascallops argent, for Townsend.

There are also several memorials for Edmund Webb, and others of his family, with their arms; for Henry Townsend, and others of that name, with their arms; for George Wick, gent. and Anne his wife, with these arms, Gules, a chevron between three wicks (or gates) Or; for Nathaniel Adams, and Anne his wife, with their arms, viz. 1. Gules, on a bend Or three trefoils sable, for Adams, impaling, 2. Sable, a lion passant argent, for Taylor.

Against the north wall of the church, without, are several memorials for the Massingers, formerly of Gloucester, whose arms are, Argent, a chevron gules between three helmets sable.

There is a burying-place in the church-yard, inclosed with handsome iron palisadoes, with tombs and memorials for Mr. Daniel Gardner, of this parish, clothier, and others of his family.

And there are two or three tombs with memorials for the Pools, with their arms, Azure, femy of fleurs de lis Or, a lion rampant argent. And upon another tomb, on the south side of the church, are memorials for John Edwards and his wife, and Mary their daughter, wife of Richard Pulton, apothecary, with the arms of Pulton, viz. Argent, on a fess azure, between three mullets sable, as many bezants.

Benefactions.

Here is a free-school, endowed with lands in the parish of Haresfield, worth 20*l.* a year, for teaching twenty poor children to read and write; towards the purchase of which lands, Mr. Giles Smith gave 200*l.* Mr. Samuel Cole 50*l.* Mrs. Elizabeth Townsend 50*l.* Mr. Castleman 10*l.* John Downs, the vicar, Thomas Rawlins, clerk, William Palling, sen. Edmund Wick, William Capel, John Palling, and Mary Shipton 20*l.* each; Luke Gardner 10*l.* and John Twining and Nathaniel Adams 5*l.* each.

Mr. Richard Cliffold, in the year 1683, gave 10*s.* a year to the poor. Mr. Samuel Webb, in 1687, and Mr. Stephen Gardner, in 1695, and Mrs. Mary Shipton, in 1753, gave the interest of 10*l.* each to the use of the poor. In 1722, Mr. William Hill, of Cirencester, gave a large silver flaggon and plate, worth 40*l.* for the communion service; and Mr. Joseph Hilman gave a silver basin for the font.

In ten years, beginning with 1652, I counted from the parish register 309 baptisms, and 180 burials. At the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, the annual baptisms were 50, burials 47; and in ten years, beginning with 1760, I find, by actual numeration, that the baptisms were 629, and the burials 583, which numbers, at distant periods, shew the gradual increase of population. When the militia was first raised by the new law, in the year 1758, there were 16 men chosen by ballot out of this parish, which was the twenty-ninth part of the whole number upon the list; and the present number of souls is about 3300.

P A U N T L E Y.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Botloc, in the Forest division, four miles distant northward from Newent, and ten north-westward from Gloucester. It is bounded by Upleden and Oxenhall on the south, by Kempley and Dimmock on the west, and the river Leden separates it, on the north and east quarters, from Worcester-shire.

The face of the country, throughout the whole parish, is full of swells, and slopes, and little vallies; whence it obtained the name of Pantelie, from Pant, British, a valley.

The upper part of the parish is a sandy soil, which the antient inhabitants constantly planted with Rye, from a supposition that it was not capable of producing any other sort of grain, and so called it the Ryelands, which name it still retains. The other part is inclined to clay, and has obtained the name of the Wheatlands, for a similar reason.

The Ryelands have usually been depastured by a small species of sheep, with fine wool, and flesh of a sweet and delicious flavour, much sought after by persons of taste and fortune. The common weight of a leg of one of those animals, well fattened, is about four pounds.

These lands now produce pretty good crops of wheat, and other grain, but they seem to require a better cultivation; for in some fine pieces of land I have seen as much fern as corn. The farmers plant a few turnips, which they pull for the sheep and horned cattle. Near to these sandy fields, are beds of clay and marle, but they never use either of them for manure. They neither water their meadows, nor drain their wet lands as they ought: In short, nature is bountiful, but judgment and industry are wanting.

A spring of water, of a brackish taste, and very strong purging quality, rises out of a swampy place by the side of the Leden; and flocks of pigeons resort thither to eat the salt made by evaporation from the water.

As cyder is a principal object with the farmer, the apple-tree is cultivated here, and in the neighbouring parishes, with an attention which seldom fails of being amply rewarded.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

‘ Ansfred de Cormeliis holds one hide and a half in Pantelie, and one hide in Chilcot, and one hide in Chitiford, and one hide in Hege; in the whole four hides and a half. Ulfel, and Eluard, and Wiga, held them for four manors. One hide and a half is free from tax. There are

' are two plow-tillages in demean, and seven
' villeins, and three bordars, with seven plow' tillages. There are two servi, and a mill of ' 7s. 6d. It was worth 3*l.* 10*s.* now 4*l.* They ' who held these lands could go where they would.

' Ansfrid had the above written estates, and ' Winestan, and Tantesborne, of Walter de Laci,
' when he married his niece. But he holds his ' other lands of the king.' Domesday-book, p. 78.

Walter de Pauntelye died seized of an estate called Pauntelye, leaving Margery, his daughter and heiress, married to John de Solers. Walter de Solers, son of Margery, was seized of Pauntelye 32 H. 3. in which year his mother, then the wife of Richard de Sutton, released to him all her right. Thomas de Solers, son of Walter, was succeeded by his son, John de Solers, who died seized of Paunteleye, which he held of the heir of the countess of Lincoln, as of the honour of Clifford, by the service of one knight's fee 4 E. 2. as appears by the escheator's inquisition of that year. Maud de Solers, daughter and heir of John de Solers-Hope, in Herefordshire, was married to William de Witinton, or de Vyteinton, and brought this estate into his family.

But tho' the above was a large estate, it seems not to have been the manor, for the sheriff returned, that William de Whytington was lord of the vill of Paunteley 9 E. 1. He died 12 E. 1. and another William Witinton, son of William, by the before-mentioned inquisition taken 4 E. 2. was found to be the next heir of John, son of Thomas de Solers, being then twenty-four years old; and in him the manor and estates seem to have been united. Sir William de Whittington, son of William, married Joan, daughter and heiress of Robert Linet. He levied a fine of the manor of Pauntley to the use of himself for life, the remainder to William his son, and Joan the wife of William, and daughter of William Mansel, and their heirs, 4 E. 3. and died seized of Pauntley in the fifth year of that reign. Sir William Whittington, son of sir William, died seized of Pauntley 33 E. 3.

Another William de Whittington, son of sir William, married Catherine, sister and heir of John de Staunton, and died seized of Pauntley 22 R. 2. which he held of Roger de Mortimer earl of March, as of the honour of Clifford-Castle. Robert de Whittington, son and heir of William, was high sheriff of the county 3 & 8 H. 4. Richard de Whittington, younger brother of Robert, was thrice lord mayor of London, and a great benefactor to that city.

Sir Guy de Whittington, son and heir of Robert, married Cicely, sister and heiress of Richard Browning, mesne lord of Notgrove, and lord of Lye and Rodborough. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 6 & 12 H. 6. and died seized of the manors of Notgrove, Lye, Rodborough, and Pauntley, 20 H. 6.

Robert Whittington, son of sir Guy, died before his father, 15 H. 6. leaving Robert his son, who was heir to his grandfather sir Guy; but he died under age, in ward to the king, and was succeeded by his brother and heir William Whittington, who married Elizabeth, the aunt and coheirefs of sir Edmond Arundel, and died seized of Pauntley 11 E. 4. John Whittington, son and heir of William, married first, the daughter of Richard le Croft; secondly, Elizabeth, daughter and coheirefs of Simon Milbourn, and by her had William Whittington, on whom he settled the manor of Notgrove. Thomas Whittington, son and heir of John by his first wife, married Margery, daughter of sir William Needham, and died seized of the manor of Pauntley in the year 1546. 38 H. 8. leaving six daughters his coheireffes; Blanch, married to John St. Aubin; Anne, to Brice Berkeley; Jane, to Roger Bodenham; Margaret, to Thomas Throgmorton; Alice, to — Nanfan; and Elizabeth, married to sir Giles Pool of Saperton, who, in right of his wife, died seized of this manor in the year 1588. Sir Henry Pool, son of sir Giles, was lord of it in the year 1608, and died in 1616.

The manor came afterwards to Henry Somerset, esq; whose son, Edward-Maria Somerset, was lord of it at the beginning of this century. Henry Scudamore, of Canons-bridge, near Hereford, esq; is the present lord of the manor, by purchase from lady Somerset.

The large manor house at Pauntley-court is taken down, having been long since deserted by its owners.

The house and estate called Holend, formerly belonging to Henry Cruys, and the White House estate, which belonged to the Atwoods, are now the property of Mr. Scudamore.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, worth 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* from the impropiator, beside the privy tithes. The impropiator was patron, but there has been no presentation for many years, and the vicarage is now held by licence from the bishop.

The impropiation belongs to the lord of the manor, who pays 2*s.* 6*d.* out of it to the crown. The rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Pauntley, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Cormeile in Normandy, and afterwards to the college of Fotheringhay, were granted to sir Richard Lee 1 E. 6.

The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, and has a low tower at the west end, with three bells. There was a chantry in this church, dedicated to St. George, of which Hugh Dowllins was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Willis.

On an old raised tomb in the church-yard,

To the Memory of Poole Pauncefoote, of Carlswalls, Esqr. Justice of the Peace of the Quorum, who married Elianor, the Daughter to William Rogers of Dodswell Gent. by whom he had 1 Son & 3 daughters, William, Elianor, Mary, & Elizabeth; he was born at Newent upon St. Thomas day 1612, & died full of honour, wisdom, and virtue, 13 April, 1687, leaving to his family the benefit of his providence and good example.

The old man's missing, whither is he gone?
Sure on no law suit of his own;
His lease is out, not short'ned by the prayers
Of injur'd neighbours, or expecting heirs.
We wept his losse half blind, to whom we owe
The good we say, the goodness that we show.
Take friendship, learning, prudence, piety,
Wealth, beauty, kindness, equanimity,
You have a looking glass made of his dust,
And ashes, for to dress the great & just.

On another,

Here lyeth in assurance of a glorious resurrection the body of William Pauncefoote, of Carlswalls, Esqr. who lived a true Christian, a good Subject, a loving Husband, a kind Parent, a faithful friend, & a good example; he was born April 5, 1645, & having the comfortable memory of a well led life, he beheld Death without dread, & the grave without fear, & embrac'd both as necessary guides to endless glory, March 28, 1691. He left William, Henry, Grimbald, John, Elianor, Elizabeth, & Anne, All of probity, beauty, and hopes.

Dear Children all I pray take some Advices from your Father's tomb:
Still pray to God, & give him praise
For all you have; walk in his ways,
Be humble, just, to ev'ry one,
Give to the poor, save for your own,
And do your best one for the other,
Then ev'ry Child's an elder Brother.

LIES in a fine vale, in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftsgate, seven miles distant north-east from Evesham in Worcestershire, five northward from Campden, and thirty north-eastward from Gloucester.

Who that Pebe was, whose name is transmitted down to us in that of this village, and what age he lived in, are matters of which history is totally silent, and perhaps it little concerns us to know.

The whole parish consists of 2960 acres, pretty equally divided into pasture and arable, and a good part lies in common fields. It is destitute of antiquities, and yields nothing remarkable either in the fossil or vegetable kingdoms. The most curious of its natural productions consist of fine grass and corn, which the rich soil produces very plentifully.

It lies on the northern limits of the county, and on the verge of the parish, in the hamlet of Ullington, stands an elm-tree, where Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, and Warwickshire meet in a point. The little brook Noleham runs from Mickleton, through Pebworth, in its course to the Avon. The houses are built chiefly of wattling, some of brick, and fewer of stone; but there is not a good house in the village, nor any thing else, that I could either see or hear of, to distinguish it.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

William Goizenboded holds Pebeworde, in Ceolfede hundred, of the king. Vlucet and Uluard held it in the time of king Edward for two manors. There are six hides, and one yard-land. In demean is one plow-tillage, and one bordar, and one servus. It was worth 7*l.* now 4*l.* 10*s.* Domesday-book, p. 74.

Hugo de Grentemaisnil holds Pebeworde, in Ceolfede hundred. There are two hides, and one yard-land. Two thanes held it for two manors. There are three plow-tillages, and one villein, and one bordar, and seven servi. p. 77.

The manor of Pebworth was held of Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchester, 55 H. 3. It sometime belonged to the Grevills of Campden. William Grevil was seized of Pebworth, and died in 1401. Sir Richard Vernham died seized of the manor, and left Elizabeth, his only daughter, married to John Vampage the elder. They joined in levying a fine of the manor to the use of themselves in special taille, 26 H. 6.

The manor came afterwards to the Fortescues, heirs of lord chancellor Fortescue. Hugh Fortescue, esq; was lord of it in 1608, as was another Hugh Fortescue, at the beginning of this century. Matthew lord Fortescue is the present lord of this manor, whose pedigree and arms are inserted under Ebberton.

John Rouse, son and heir of John Rouse de Rageley, was seized of a yearly rent of 100*s.* in Pebworth, 20 R. 2. Christian Rouse, widow of John, and William Rouse, son of Robert, and grandson of the said Christian, were seized of seven yard-lands, and of Marston-wood in Pebworth, 8 H. 6. Thomas Saunders and Elizabeth his wife, sister and heir of Edward Ipewell, levied a fine of lands in Pebworth and Broad Marston 15 H. 7.

Another

Another manor in Pebworth belonged to the abbey of Evesham in Worcestershire, and after the dissolution of that house, was granted to Thomas Cromwell, earl of Essex, upon whose attainder it was again granted to Richard Farmer, 36 H. 8. Thomas Andrews obtained from the crown a reversionary grant of this manor, after the death of sir Thomas Andrews, 4 Eliz. It was again granted to John Fernham in the 18th year of the same reign. Robert Martyn, esq; is the present lord of this manor, and resides here.

This estate pays an audit to the crown, and acknowledges a dependance on the Dutchy of Lancaster, and therefore the inhabitants claim to be toll-free throughout the kingdom.

HAMLETS. 1. Broad Marston, about a mile eastward from the church. This hamlet lies very flat and low, and is commonly overflowed in the winter, for which reason it was called Merestone, i. e. Marsh-town. The prenomens Broad is of later date, and was probably given it in contradistinction to the adjoining parish of Long Marston.

Domesday mentions this manor, and says 'Hugo de Grentemaisnil holds Merestone in Ceolfede hundred. There are two hides.' p. 77.

Sir Alan Bushel was lord of this manor, and dying in the year 1245, was buried in Pebworth church. Richard Bushel, son of sir Alan, married Idonea, daughter of sir John Cantilupe, of Smithfield in Warwickshire, and was succeeded by Richard his son and heir, who married Elianor, daughter and heiress of Clement Mufard. Roger Bushel, son of Richard, married Eve, daughter of Jeffery d'Abitot, of Redmarley in Worcestershire. Richard Bushel, son of Roger, married Emme, daughter of Hugh Ernold, of Gloucestershire, and had a son Richard, who married Katherine, daughter and coheir of sir William Saltmarsh. Robert Bushel, son of the last Richard, married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Hugford, of Edmedscot in Warwickshire, and had a son Edmond, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Blount, of Granden. Thomas Bushel, son of Edmond, married Anne, daughter of John Normid, of Broadway, and had a son Edward, who married Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Andrews, of Winwick in Northamptonshire, and died before his father; but left a son Thomas, who succeeded his grandfather in the manor of Broad Marston, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Winter, of Ardington in Warwickshire. Thomas Bushel, son and heir of the last Thomas, married Margaret, sister of Edward Grent, of Milcot in Warwickshire; and the manor of Broad Marston continued in his descendants, till it passed to the earl of Salisbury. James earl of Salisbury is the present lord of this manor.

Lands in Broad Marston belonged to the abbey of Evesham, and were granted to William Sheldon and Francis Sheldon 35 H. 8.

2. Ullington lies westward from the church, and consists of three families. Here was formerly a chapel, the remains of which are still to be seen.

3. Winekton. 'William Goizenboded holds Wenitone in Ceolfede hundred. A thane held it in the time of king Edward. There are five hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and two villeins; and one francigena holds one hide and a half, with one plow-tillage. Earl Algar joined this manor to Pebeuorde. It was worth 10s. now 40s.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

The present inhabitants of the parish know nothing of the hamlet of Winekton, or Wenitone. Indeed it might not have been within the parish, tho' a member of the manor of Pebworth.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, worth 24*l.* a year. The earl of Salisbury is patron and impropiator; and Mr. Mould is the present incumbent. The impropriation is worth 131*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* a year, and is subject to the annual payment of 14*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* to the vicar.

Richard, the son of Roger de Fredvill gave the church of Pebworth to the Benedictine priory of Alcester in Warwickshire, founded by Ralph Butler, in the year 1140, and valued at the dissolution at 101*l.* 14*s.* He also gave a water mill in this place to the Cistercian abbey of St. Mary, at Combe in Warwickshire, which was founded by Richard de Camville, in the year 1150, and valued at the dissolution at 343*l.* 0*s.* 5*d.* a year. The rectory and church of Pebworth were granted to Lawrence Baskervill, and William Blake, scrivener, 3 Jac.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter, and consists of two ailes, with a tower, and five bells at the west end.

At the beginning of this century, there were 95 houses in this parish, and about 400 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 9. Atkyns. But sir Robert Atkyns's numbers were not accurately taken, for in ten years, beginning with 1700, there are entered in the register 133 baptisms, and 58 burials; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 143, burials 96. The present number of families is 104, of inhabitants exactly 436; and the average of annual burials is to the whole number of souls, nearly as 1 to 45.4.

St. PHILIP's and St. JACOB's.

THE district of which I am to give some account, is only so much of this parish as lies in the hundred of King's-barton near Bristol, most commonly called Barton Regis, to distinguish it from the hundred of King's-barton, near Gloucester.

This district is bounded on the east by St. George's, lately taken out of this parish; and on the west by Laford's gate, and the city of Bristol. It extends about three quarters of a mile eastward of that gate, a great part of it consisting of several streets of good houses, like the city; which were most of them built in the last century, occasioned by the resort of considerable numbers of French and Flemings, who came over to carry on a manufacture of woollen-stuffs. Not being allowed to settle within the city, they took up their residence as near to it as possible, at a place just without Laford's gate, where they continued many years; but at length the stuff trade declining, this part of the parish is now occupied by tradesmen of every denomination.

Kingswood forest antiently extended westward very near to Laford's gate, and was much larger than the chase described in the perambulation under the account of the parish of St. George's. At the distance of a few yards from this gate, there is now a house of public resort, known by the sign of the Forester, or Green Man; which, it is said, was either itself a lodge, or stands on the site of the lodge where a keeper resided, who had in adjacent gate of the forest under his care, and received a penny a piece from travellers passing through it, at two seasons of the year, to the fairs at Bristol. One of those keepers was buried in St. Philip's church; and round the verge of his grave-stone, placed within the rails which inclose the communion-table, is this inscription, THOMAS BUTLEY SVMTIMS KEPER OF THE QVEANNE FOREST DEPARTED THE LAST DAY OF OCTOR ANO DOMIN. 1596. And upon the same stone, there very rudely sketched the outlines of a bow and arrow, or rather cross-bow, and of the keeper's faithful dog.

The city of Bristol following the laudable example of the metropolis, pulled down Laford's gate in the year 1767, to give a free current to the air, so necessary to health, and to prevent such accidents as had frequently happened there by the continual interruption of passengers, and the unavoidable intermixture of carriages, horses, and foot travellers, in so long and narrow an entrance. At that time the curious antient carved figures with which the gate was ornamented, were taken away, and Mr. Reeve placed them at his country-seat at a little without the city, at Brislington in Somersetshire. They formerly belonged to the castle of Bristol, as appears by a passage extracted from the annals of that castle, lately found among a collection of antient papers, records, and other curious particulars, discovered in a room belonging to the parish church of St. Mary Redcliff in Bristol, and supposed to have been there deposited by the order of the great Mr. Canning, who was six times mayor of that city, viz. in the years 1372, 1373, 1375, 1381, 1385, and 1389. The passage alluded to is as follows:

' Allwarde, a Saxon skylld Carveller in Stone and Woude. He lyved in the reygne of Eldred: He carvelled the worke of y^e Castle & y^e Imageries whyen they stoude yn said Chapel of Alle [and] Coernicus, wardens of the Castle yn daies of Yore. Rob' of Glowester removed them to y^e Walle of the Inwarde Tower, from whence the present Lorde Warden has tane them: Master Canynge fayne woulde have the same to be in his Cabynette, but my Lords entente is to place them at y^e Gate of y^e Castle or owtside of y^e Walls as a goodlie Specktalle for Menne to beehoulde and in sothe goodelie Specktalle thei have beeing seated & couronued in Roabes of Estate & paramented. Ne are enfayrer [inferior] Carvel then those of our Daies, of durable Stone and y^e Depicture of the Faces still remayneynge bie means of theyre beeing Keepen from the Wnwer [weather].'

The above seems not to have been written by Mr. Canning, as it speaks of him in the third person. I cannot answer for its being correctly copied, as I never had access to the original, but I give it exactly as I received it from my friend at Bristol. Alle is said to have been warden of the castle in the year 915, and Coernicus was his successor.

In this district there are several large works carried on by the wealthy citizens, such as iron-founderies, glass-houses for making crown glass, and glass bottles; a work for making of white lead, one for smelting lead ore, and particularly a very large one at Baptist-mills for transmuted of copper into brass. Formerly brass kettles and other utensils have been made there, chiefly, in its first institution, by Germans; but that part of the business is now performed at the battery mills in the parishes of Sifton, Bitton, and elsewhere.

The vestiges of an old chapel, dedicated to St. Lawrence, are to be seen adjacent to the high road on Lawrence-hill, and there is a field contiguous to it, with which it had been endowed, and is now exempt from tithes. I have taken notice of this piece of ground, and of the hospital of St. Lawrence, under St. George's parish, and am not absolutely certain to which head these particulars belong; but they lay in the out-part of this parish, before St. George's was taken from it.

The records, also, relating to this district, are inserted under the head of St. George's, because both were called the out-parish of St. Philip's and Jacob's till the year 1756, when St. George's was erected into a distinct parish, and the records could not be properly separated.

This district is very populous; but the account of baptisms and burials is necessarily omitted, as they are intermixt in the register with those belonging to the inner part of the parish.

The parish church lies within the city of Bristol, and not in Gloucestershire, wherefore an account of it is not to be expected in this work; but an office copy of the endowment of the vicarage falling into my hands, I have subjoined it as follows:

P I N N O C K.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of Kiftgate hundred, at the foot of that range of hills which divides the vale from the Cotefwold, about two miles north-eastward from Winchcombe, ten east from Tewkesbury, and seventeen north-east from Gloucester.

The name is written Pignocfire in Domesday. It seems to carry in it that of some Saxon proprietor, and to signify nothing more than Pignoc's Portion, or Estate; from the Saxon word Scipe, a Portion or Division.

Whether Pinnockshire enjoyed any particular privileges and immunities, is now difficult to determine. But it is thus taken notice of among the counties of England, in some verses concerning their properties, inserted in Leland's Itinerary, Vol. 5, p. 26.

— *Pynnokshire is not to prayse:
A man may go it in to dayes.*

Pinnock, Ford, and Hyde, in Guiting-Temple, make one constablewick, and seem to have constituted the district of Pinnockshire; but the poet, on the supposition that he meant to make the perambulation of the circumference two days journey, has greatly magnified its dimensions, for the sake of his rhyme, since it is no more than a man could walk in three hours.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Alwold holds Pignocfire, in Holeford hundred,
' of the king. He held it in the time of king
' Edward. There are four hides, one of which ' did not pay tax. In demean are four plow' tillages, and eleven villeins, and five bordars,
' with

with four plow-tillages. There are eight servi, and a mill of 30*d*. In Wicelcumbe is one bur- gage yielding 8*d*. A wood half a mile long, and one furlong broad. It is worth and was worth 4*l*. Domesday-book, p. 79.

The abbey of St. Averel held Pinnockshire 56 H. 3. And the abbey of Hayles was seized of court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Pinnock- shire 15 E. 1.

After the dissolution, it is probable that this manor descended like that of Hayles, till it was purchased by lord Tracy, whose descendant, Thomas-Charles viscount Tracy, is the present lord of it, and resides at Todington.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 30*l*. a year. Pinnock, Didbrook, and Hayles, were consolidated into one presentation, in the year 1738. Lord Tracy is patron, and the honourable Dr. John Tracy is the present incumbent.

The advowson formerly belonged to the abbey of Hayles, and was granted to sir Thomas Seymour, Aug. 19, 1 E. 6.

There is no house for the rector, and the church has been demolished many years.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 2 houses, and about 24 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 2 were freeholders; yearly births 1, burials 1. There are now 25 inhabitants. The baptisms and burials are intermixed with those of Hayles and Didbrook, without distinction, and are given together under the account of Hayles.

PITCHCOMBE

IS a very small parish, in the hundred of Dud- ston and King's-barton, two miles south-west- ward from Painswick, five northward from Stroud, and five south-eastward from Gloucester.

The village is situate in a combe, or valley, agree- able to the signification of its name, with a pleasant aspect towards the south, and has a small stream running through it from Painswick, which empties itself into the Froome below Stroud. It consists of rich pasture, but is not distinguished by any curious productions of nature or art.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This place is not mentioned in Domesday, where- fore it could not be a distinct manor at the time when that record was compiled; but was probably included in the account of Haresfield and Hascomb.

Osbern Giffard and Alice Mordack held Pitch- combe 31 H. 3.

In the extract out of the pipe office, formerly sent to the sheriffs of the city of Gloucester, for levying certain sums due to the crown, it is said, De Osberto Giffard de firma de Pinchcomb 5*s*. and in Mr. Pury's account, drawn up about the year 1653, it is said, Feoda firma de Pikelescumb concess. Osberto Giffard anno 15 H. 3. sub annuali redditu 5*s*.

Walter de Bruht released to Gloucester abbey, and to the almoner of Standish, a messuage, lands, and one hundred acres of wood in Pychenecombe, 31 E. 1. and Gilbert de Mayinton gave two messuages and lands in Pynchenecombe to Glou- cester abbey, the same year.

The abbey of Gloucester had free warren in all their demean lands in Pychenecombe 28 E. 3. and the manor continued in the abbey till the disso- lution; but was held from time to time by various persons, either as tenants or trustees for the abbey. Thus we find that Robert de Mandevil died 22 E. 3. and Isabel his widow 30 E. 3. seized of this manor. Joan the widow of William Bokeland held it at the time of her death, 35 E. 3. and Robert de Wolverton died seized thereof, 44 E. 3.

After the general dissolution of religious houses, this manor, a messuage and lands in this parish, and a wood called Pitchcombe-wood, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8. Thomas Porter, knight, died July 2, 40 Eliz. seized of the scite and capital messuage of the manor of Pitchcombe, which (with many other lands) he had settled in jointure on Anne his daughter in law, to be enjoy'd after his decease. This estate was then held of the queen, by the 20th part of a knight's fee, and was of the clear yearly value of 3*l*. 10*s*. 8*d*.

John Throckmorton, esq; was lord of the manor in 1608, as was Thomas Stephens, of Lypiatt, esq; at the beginning of the present century, and John Stephens, of Lypiatt, esq; is the present lord of it.

Walter de Wilton and Isabel his wife recovered lands against Osbert Giffard 28 E. 1. Walter survived his wife, and died seized of one plow- tillage, and of a yearly rent of 22*s*. issuing out of Pitchencombe, 17 E. 2. Another Walter de Wilton died seized of the same plow-tillage and rent 1 R. 2. Richard More of Picket, and Elizabeth his wife, were seized of seven messuages, 180 acres of land, eight acres of meadow, and ten acres of wood, and of the advowson of the church of Pychencombe, 11 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Gloucester, united with Harescombe, and together worth about 60*l*. a year. Mr. Purnel is patron, and Mr. Rice Jones is the present incumbent. The parsonage house is at Harescombe.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Derhurst, about two miles northward from Cheltenham, seven southward from Tewkesbury, and about eleven north-eastward from Gloucester.

Part of it is in the vale, and consists of rich pasturage, with a small proportion of tillage; and part stretches up the western side of that range of hills which separates the Vale from the Cotswold. The river Swilyate rises out of Presbury-hill, and passing by Swindon, Elmstone, and Tredington, empties itself into the Upper Avon, a little below Tewkesbury.

This was formerly a market town; for king Henry the Third, at the instance of Peter, bishop of Hereford, who was lord of the manor, granted it a charter of a weekly market on Tuesday, and a yearly fair, to begin on the eve of the feast of St. Peter ad vincula, and to continue for three days. And these privileges were confirmed in the 14th and 19th years of the reign of king Richard the Second. It may be supposed that the market was not very large, but such as it was, it must have suffered greatly by a conflagration which happened in the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and reduced the town to ashes. Some efforts were made to recover the market in the succeeding reign, according to Leland, who then visited this place, and says, It is now made a Market Towne againe a 20 Yeres syns. How long it continued to be considered as such, does not appear, but I apprehend not a great while afterwards. It was too near to Winchcombe and Cheltenham to flourish together, and losing the patronage of the bishop of Hereford, from whom the manor was taken at the Reformation, the town soon fell into the condition of a country village, and has continued so ever since.

A fine, clear spring of saline purging water rises at a place called Hyde, in this parish, on an estate belonging to lord Craven; and about the year 1750, when the Cheltenham Spaw was in the meridian of its reputation, doctor Linden analyzed the Hyde water, and wrote an Experimental Dissertation on its nature, contents, and virtues; wherein he compares it with, and gives it the preference to, the Cheltenham waters, 'which have undoubtedly' says he, 'manifested themselves to be of excellent virtues; but as the Hyde Spaw is of the very same nature, (and perhaps the mother-spring) and contains at least four grains of salt more in each quart, (which is a considerable increase) it is but just to prefer them before the Cheltenham waters, &c.' The pamphlet was intended to bring Hyde waters into general use; salts were extracted from them, and advertised to be sold at the Spaw warehouses, and shops; and some conveniencies for bathing were made at the place, and lodgings provided for the reception of patients; but the doctor was mistaken in some particulars, his treatise was ill written, and failed in the design.

This place hath had some share in ancient military transactions. Presbury signifies the Priests camp, not that the camp here was made by religious men, but the manor in which it lay took its present name from its becoming the property of the church of Hereford. Whether the camp is Saxon or Roman is uncertain.

But to come nearer to our own time. In the last century, during the great civil war, colonel Maffie, governor of Gloucester, placed a garrison of one hundred and fifty foot in a strong house in this village, to protect the market of that city. It served also to preserve a communication between the parliament's garrisons at Gloucester and Warwick, and to check the king's in Sudely-castle. Corbet.

Hewlets is an ancient feat, lying one part in this parish, the other in Cheltenham. It commands an extensive prospect over the vale towards the river Severn, and is the property of Thomas Baghott, esq; whose family has resided in this village upwards of four hundred years.

Sebastian Benefield, Margaret professor in Oxford, was a native of this place, and rector of Meysey Hampton, where he died in the year 1630.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Under the title Terra Eccle de Hereford, in Domesday, it is thus recorded:

'The bishop of Hereford holds Presteberie in Chiltenham hundred. There are thirty hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eighteen villeins, and five bordars, with nine plow-tillages. There is a priest, and one radchenister with two plow-tillages, and one burgage in Wicelcumbe paying 18d. and eleven [plow-tillages] among the servi and ancilla. There are twenty acres of meadow, and a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad.

'Sevenhantone is a vill adjoining to this manor, [but] without the hundred. And twenty hides out of the thirty abovementioned, are in that place; and there are two plow-tillages, and twenty-one villeins, with eleven plow-tillages. There are three free men having seven plow-tillages with their men.

'Durand holds three of those twenty hides of the bishop.

'Durand holds three of those twenty hides of 'the bishop.

'The whole manor, in the time of king Edward, was worth 12*l.* now 16*l.*

'Robert bishop of the same city [Hereford] holds this manor.' Domesday-book, p. 70.

Soon after the Norman conquest, the earls of Gloucester, by usurpation, possessed themselves of this manor; but Gilbert de Clare restored it again to the bishoprick of Hereford. Peter, bishop of that see, purchased a charter of free warren, court leet, and a yearly fair in Presbury 25 H. 3. and the claim to those privileges was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. The bishoprick had a further confirmation of those privileges 14 R. 2. and had an additional grant of fairs and markets in the 19th year of the same reign.

This manor continued in the bishoprick of Hereford 'till the reformation, after which, sir Thomas Chamberlain, ancestor to the family of that name at Maugerbury, and eminent for his many embassies in four succeeding reigns, obtained a long lease of this manor, and resided here.

The scite of the manor, and lands called Middle Breach, were granted to Robert earl of Leicester, 16 Eliz. The scite was again granted by the crown to Henry Chilman and Robert Knight, 3 Jac.

Reginald Nicholas, a servant to sir John Chamberlayne, son of sir Thomas, purchased a grant of the reversion of this manor, and supplanting his master, was lord of it in 1608. Lord Craven is the present lord of the manor, and holds a court leet.

The priory of Lanthony had lands in Presbury, and free warren in them, 15 E. 1. and the tithes were appropriated to that monastery 21 R. 2. This estate was reputed a manor, and was granted, with the advowson of the vicarage, to Thomas Gatwick and Anselme Lamb 5 Mar. The same rectory, church, and tithes, then in the tenure of George Badget, alias Badger, were granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor, 6 Jac. William Baghott, esq; was lord of this manor, and proprietor of a good estate here, at the beginning of this century, which are now the property of Thomas-Baghott De-la-Bere, of Southam, in the parish of Cleeve, esq.

Robert Presbury was seized of lands in Presbury 8 E. 2. Thomas Rawlins and his wife levied a line of lands in Presbury, Gineton, Charleton, and Cheltenham 9 H. 7. Lands called le Brook, lately belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Cicely Pickerel 4 Eliz. Other lands called Maywood's Plots were granted to sir Edward Warner the same year. Lands in Presbury, belonging to the bishop of Hereford, were granted to Christopher Hatton 18 Eliz.

Mr. Caple has a good estate in this parish, and elsewhere, and a good house near the church.

HAMLET. Overton is a small hamlet, lying little eastward of the church, on a rising ground towards the bottom of the hill. The name is descriptive of its situation.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 80*l.* a year. Thomas-Baghott De-la-Bere, esq; is patron and impropiator, and the reverend Kinard Baghott is the present incumbent.

There are certain lands called the Barton De-means, once the property of the bishop of Hereford, two thirds of the great tithes of which belong to the dean and chapter of Hereford, the remainder to the impropiator. There are also other lands called Farm Lands, originally belonging to the priory of Lanthony, of which the impropiator has the tithes. All other tithes of the parish, great and small, are equally divided between the impropiator and the vicar.

Mortuaries are due to the impropiator and vicar, according to the worth of the parishioners, at the time of their death.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a large aisle on the north side, and a smaller one on the south, with a strong embattled tower at the west end. The windows were formerly ornamented with variety of paintings and inscriptions on the glass, all which are now defaced except the letters I. W. which still remain in several places, and are the initial letters of the name of John Wich, prior of Lanthony.

P R E S C O T

IS an extraparochial place, in the upper part of Tewkesbury hundred, six miles eastward from Tewkesbury, two westward from Winchcombe, five north from Cheltenham, and sixteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

The little river Tirle washes the north part of Prescot, and after dividing Cleeve from Woolston, falls into the Carrant.

This place was covered with wood in its antient state, and belonged to the monks of Tewkesbury, wherefore it was called Priest Coed, and by contraction Prescot, that is, the Priest's wood. In the progress of cultivation, those woods were assarted, and the greater part of the place now lies in pasture lands.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday has not taken notice of it by its present name, which very probably it had not obtained when that record was compiled; but the abbey of Tewkesbury had a grant of courts leet, waifs, and felons goods in Prescot, from king William the Second, which was proved, and allowed, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto brought against the abbat, 15 E. 1.

It was the constant practice of the monks every where to separate and distinguish their property from that of the laity, and to hold their estates as unconnectedly as possible. Hence we see that where they held lands in fee, they commonly obtained the privileges of courts leet, and free warren; and in many instances, especially where they had no concern in the church affairs of the parish to which their estates belonged, they procured a total separation, and so their lands became extraparochial, as in the present case.

This manor continued in the abbey of Tewkesbury till the dissolution, when it was granted, together with a wood called Prescot Coppice, and the tithes, to Walter Compton, 36 H. 8. John Tracy, of Stanway, esq; was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and John Tracy, esq; is the present lord of the manor.

P R E S T O N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, about a mile and a half south-eastward from Cirencester, six north-westward from Cricklade in Wiltshire, and about nineteen south-eastward from Gloucester.

Preston is evidently Priest's town, for the manor antiently belonged to Reinbald the priest, who was chancellor to king Edward the Confessor.

The lands are chiefly arable, with some pasture, and very rich meadows on the side of the river Churn, which are occasionally covered with water, by means of trenches cut from that river, and drained again at pleasure, whereby vegetation is surprizingly strong and early; and these works may very well serve for a pattern to such as are unacquainted with this branch of husbandry. A large meadow, (upwards of a hundred acres) called Kingsmead, lies one part of it in this parish, the other, and by far the greater, in the parish of Cirencester, and is in common to both places after the first vesture is taken off.

This parish is bounded to the westward by the Irminstreet, one of the Roman ways passing thro' Cirencester; and at the distance of two miles from the town, but in this parish, there stands an antient, rude stone, about four feet high, lately painted and mark'd as a mile stone. This is vulgarly called Hangman's Stone, because, it is said, a fellow resting a sheep thereon, (which he had stolen, and tied its legs together for the convenience of carrying it) was there strangled, by the animal's getting its legs round his neck in struggling. But this does not account for the stone's being placed there, and considering the common propensity of inventing stories to obviate names and things not generally understood, I have sometimes been of opinion that all this is fiction, and that the right name of the stone is Hereman-stone, so called, like the Roman way upon which it stands, from Hereman, a soldier; and that the stone is an antient monument for some military person.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Under the title Terra Renbaldi Pr'bi in Domesday-book, it is thus recorded:

'The same Rainbald holds Prestetune in Cirecestre hundred. Elaf held it in the time of king Edward. There are eight hides taxed beside the demean. In demean are four plow-tillages, and seven villeins, and six bordars, with six plow-tillages. There are nine servi, and twelve acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 8 l. The same Elaf could go where he would.' D. B. p. 73.
'Hunfridus the chamberlain holds one hide in Prestitune in Cirecestre hundred. Æluuin held it for a manor. In demean is one plow-tillage, and two servi, and three bordars, with one plow-tillage. It is and was worth 30 s. He who held it could go where he would.' Dom. Book, p. 79. King

King Henry the First having built the abbey of Cirencester, endowed it, among other things, with the estates that had before belonged to Reinbald the priest, dean of the collegiate church of Cirencester; by which means this manor came into the possession of the abbey, and so continued 'till the dissolution of religious foundations.

The manor of Preston, with the advowson of the vicarage, and the tithes in Northcote, were granted to John Pope 37 H. 8. All which came afterwards to the family of the Masters of Cirencester. William Master, esq; was lord of Preston in the year 1608, and Thomas Master, esq; descended from him, is the present lord of the manor.

One messuage, and half a yard-land in Preston and Northcote, belonged to the hospital of St. John Baptist in Cirencester 33 E. 1.

HAMLET. Northcote is a hamlet and an antient manor, thus described in Domesday-book :

'The same Rainbald holds one hide in Nortcote in Cirecestre hundred. Godric held it in the time of king Edward. In demean is one plow-tillage, and two villeins, and two bordars, with two plow-tillages. There are six servi. It is worth 40s. This thane could go where he would.' Domesday-book, p. 73.

'Hunfridus the chamberlain holds one hide in Norcote in Cirecestre hundred. Eluard held it for a manor. In demean are two plow-tillages, and two bordars, with half a plow-tillage. It is worth and was worth 40s. William held these two estates [Prestitune and Norcote] of Humphry. They who held them could go where they pleased.' Domesday-book, p. 79.

Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, had his right to court leet in Northcote, allowed in a writ of Quo warranto brought against him 15 E. 1.

Anselm de Gournay held two knights fees in Sodinton and Northcote, value 63*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* of Gilbert de Clare earl of Gloucester 8 E. 2. as appears by the escheator's inquisition taken after the death of the said Gilbert.

Hugh le Dispencer and Elizabeth his wife, the widow of Giles de Badlesmere, were seized of Churncote and Northcote 23 E. 3.

John Coaffe, or Cove, who was found by inquisition to be an idiot 32 E. 3. died seized of this manor and Lassington 36 E. 3.

Thomas Raleigh died seized of Northcote 21 R. 2. and was succeeded by Thomas his son, who died seized of it 6 H. 4. Walter Raleigh, son and heir of the last Thomas, had livery of the manor, and died 8 H. 5. Edward Rawleigh died seized thereof 5 H. 8. George Rawleigh, esq; died 37 H. 8. seized of Northcote and of lands in Preston, leaving Simon his son twenty-two years old, and Leonard a brother, who had a son Thomas.

Henry Willoughby had livery of the manor granted to him 4 Eliz. The estate was afterwards divided, and part of it belonged to Thomas Master, of Cirencester, esq; about the beginning of this century, whose descendant, Thomas Master, esq; is the present proprietor. The other part was vested in William George, of Cirencester, esq; whose widow, the late Mrs. Rebecca Powell, gave it, with other lands, for the support of the yellow school in Cirencester, and it now lets for 15*l.* a year.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 150*l.* a year. Thomas Master, esq; is patron and impropiator; and the reverend Mr. Daubeny is the present incumbent.

Seventeen acres of meadow and pasture, and fifty of arable, belonged to the glebe, before the common fields were inclosed by act of parliament about the year 1771, when lands were laid out for the impropiator and vicar, in lieu of tithe.

Two small parcels of land, and a rent charge of 3*s.* are given for the use of the communion.

The church is dedicated to All Saints. It is small, with a chapel on the north and another on the south side, and a low stone tower at the west end, in which are four bells.

IS a small parish, belonging to the hundred of Dudston and King's-Barton, but separated from it by the intervention of Botloe hundred. It lies upon the river Leden, at the north-western extremity of the county, towards Herefordshire, about three miles southward from Ledbury, fourteen west from Tewkesbury, and seventeen north-west from Gloucester.

This manor antiently belonged to the monks of St. Peter's at Gloucester, which accounts for the name.

The Herefordshire method of planting orchards prevails in this and the neighbouring parishes, where they make excellent cyder, already observed in the accounts of Dimmock, Kempley, Oxenhall, and Pauntley.

PRESTON upon STOUR.

THIS parish lies in the upper part of Derhurst hundred, at the northern extremity of the county towards Warwickshire, about two miles distant southward from Stratford upon Avon, nine north from Campden, and twenty-nine north-eastward from Gloucester. The village is situated upon the river Stour, and the manor antiently belonged to the monks of Derhurst, wherefore it was called Preston [i.e. Priest-town] upon Stour, to distinguish it from two other parishes of the name of Preston in this county.

The parish is about two miles long, and one broad. It is divided into two hamlets (Preston and Alscot) by the river Stour, which runs thro' it, and falls into the upper Avon about two miles below.

There is a handsome seat at Alscot, which belonged to the late James West, esq. The house is of freestone, in the Gothic taste, and stands about half a mile to the left of the road leading from Oxford to Stratford, in the midst of a park of excellent pasturage. The river Stour meanders before it, through a serpentine channel, — boasting as he flows of growing fame,

And wond'rous beauties on his banks display'd —
Of Alscot's swelling lawns, and fretted spires,
Of fairest model, Gothic or Chinese.

At this place I saw a natural curiosity. It was the skulls of two stags, with their horns so entangled by the animals fighting in the park when alive, that they could never disengage themselves, and so perished with hunger. They now remain not to be separated by human force, without cutting or breaking some part of them.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The church of St. Dennis at Paris holds ten hides in Preston in Derhest hundred.' D. B. p. 72.

It appears by the terrier of the lands of the priory of Derhurst, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis, that the prior had the patronage of the church of Preston, and two plow-tillages, worth 18 s. a year, and 4 l. 13 s. 6 d. from his plowmen and rents of assize, and 17 s. from his villeins. At the dissolution of alien priories, this estate was given to the abbey of Tewkesbury by king Henry the Sixth, and confirmed to that abbey 7 E. 4.

After the dissolution of the abbey of Tewkesbury, the manor of Preston, two mills, a messuage called the Miller's-house, and the fishery, were granted to the viscount Lisle 37 H. 8. The manor was afterwards purchased by — Hunks, who died seized thereof 1 Eliz. when livery was granted to Robert Hunks, his son and heir. Thomas Hunckes, son of Robert, had livery of the manor, rectory, and advowson, granted to him in the latter part of the reign of queen Elizabeth. Sir Hugh Brawne was lord of the manor in the year 1608. From him it descended to his son sir Richard Brawne, who died seized of it in 1650.

Thomas Marriot, esq; married one of the daughters and coheiresses of sir Richard Brawne, and in her right, became lord of the manors of Preston and Alscot, which, at his death, descended to John Marriot, his son and heir, who was lord of them when sir Robert Atkyns wrote his History, about the year 1710. The late James West, of Alscot, esq; was lord of this manor at the time of his death, in the year 1772.

William Dalby and his wife levied a fine of lands in Preston upon Stour and Alscot 11 H. 7.

H A M L E T. Alscot is a hamlet separated from the rest of the parish and county by the river Stour. Here was an antient chapel, now wholly demolished, out of the ruins of which Alscot house is said to have risen.

William Fravileworth died seized of Little Wormington and Alvescot 33 E. 3. William Wilicotes held the manor of Alvescot upon Stour, and had a grant of free warren, 2 H. 4. Sir William Bishopshort was seized of it in the reign of king Henry the Fifth, and resided there. It is probable that he left Joan and Margaret his daughters and coheiresses; for William Wickham and Joan his wife, and sir William Fennes and Margaret his wife, levied separate fines of the manor of Wilcot, and of lands in Alvescot, to the use of themselves for life, 31 H. 6.

Thomas Conyers, esq; levied a fine of the manor of Alvescot, to William Broom and William Cobcot, 37 H. 6. William Catesby had livery of this this manor 9 Eliz. It soon after passed to sir Hugh Brawne, and descended, like Preston, to the late James West, esq; who was lord of the manor at the time of his death, in the year 1772.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 8*l.* a year. The lord of the manor is patron and impropriator; Mr. Green is the present incumbent. The impropriation pays 8*l.* a year to Christ-church college, Oxford.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, stands on a rising ground. It is small, but neatly fitted up within. The windows are of painted glass, put up, at a great expence, by the late Mr. West; but the subjects are uncommon for a church. The east window consists of two compartments. One seems to represent the universal dominion of Death, who is the chief figure in front, with Des Dæts B. written at his feet; a young man lies prostrate behind him; and a military person appears on the right, just falling backwards, and close by him a female figure leaning on the point of a sword. On the left, another figure of death driving a carriage, as coachman, attended by three women on foot, and the devil appears behind. In the other compartment, the principal figure is a young man, with an olive-branch in his hand, and behind him sits a young woman asleep. Two figures, with each a standard, one inscribed Ermoet, the other Arbeit, walk before a carriage drawn by unicorns, and a woman sits on the fore-part of it, holding an olive-branch, whilst three other female figures attend on foot.

P R I N K N A S H

IS a small extraparochial place, adjoining to Upton St. Leonard's, in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, distant about three miles east from the city of Gloucester.

The whole estate consists of one hundred and ninety acres of meadow and pasture land, and thirty-seven of arable. It belonged antiently to the abbats of St. Peter's at Gloucester, who had a handsome country seat, and a park there.

King Edward the Third granted to the abbey of Gloucester free warren in all their demean lands in this place, in the 28th year of his reign, which privilege was confirmed 1 R. 2. and by the interest of the abbat, the place became extraparochial.

This estate continued in the abbey of Gloucester 'till the general dissolution of monasteries, and was granted, under limitations, to Edward Bridges and Dorothy Praye, 36 H. 8. and the reversion of the house and park was granted to sir William Sandys and Thomas Spencer 3 Jac.

The estate was soon afterwards purchased by sir John Bridgman, chief justice of Chester, descended from an antient family who resided at Little Dean in this county. John Bridgman, esq; was lord of the manor of Prinknash, when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his Antient and present State of Gloucestershire, and it descended to Henry-Toy Bridgman, esq; of whom it was purchased, about the year 1770, by — Howell, esq; the present proprietor, who resides there.

This seat has lately been very much improved by the present proprietor. It is situated on an eminence, from whence there is an agreeable prospect of the city of Gloucester, and a more extensive one of the fine country round about it. There was a room in the house consecrated for a chapel, in the year 1629, and dedicated to St. Peter.

P U C K L E C H U R C H.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of its own name, seven miles west from Marshfield, seven east from Bristol, five south from Chipping-Sodbury, and thirty-four south-westward from Gloucester.

It is about three miles in length, and two in breadth; bounded by Durham on the east, Siston on the west, by Weiterleigh on the north, and by Abston and Wick on the south. It enjoys a fine healthy air, being pleasantly situated on an easy elevation in the vale. The brook Filtham divides it from Durham, but the Boyd does not touch on its borders, as some topographers have affirmed.

The name of the village was antiently written Pulcrecerce, and signifies the stately and magnificent church, which was given it, most probably, from its agreeable situation, and the beauty of that building. Camden calls it Villa Regia, because it had been the residence of some of the Saxon kings; and there is a house now standing on a rising ground, in the way to Durham, said to be built on the very site of the palace of Edmund king of the West Saxons, which by the ruins in hillocks still remaining, seems to have been of large extent.

It was customary, in early ages, to celebrate yearly the feast of St. Augustin, who first preached the gospel to the Anglo-Saxons; and as the above king Edmund was solemnizing this feast at his palace here, in the year 946, he took notice of one Leolf, a notorious robber, who, notwithstanding he had been banished for his villainies, had the assurance to seat himself at one of the tables in the hall, where the king was at dinner. This villain attacked Leon, the king's sewer, (who endeavoured to apprehend him) with a naked dagger, which the king seeing, flew upon Leolf himself, and in the scuffle was stabbed in the breast, so that he expired upon the body of his murderer; but the villain made his escape in the confusion, as the guests were drunk when the fray happened. And it is said, the king's remains were deposited in the abbey of Glastonbury.

There was formerly a weekly market held here on Wednesday, now long since disused, and perhaps never much used; but it appears by the antient court papers, that the tenants have been amerced for not coming to the mercat here, for buying and selling elsewhere, for usury, for taking the first tonsure to the prejudice of the lord, for suing a tenant of the lord's court by the king's writ, for conversing with those who had the leprosy, for marrying without the lord's licence, &c. all which serve to shew the great power which the lords of some manors exercised over their tenants, under the feudal system.

The antient roads from London and Oxford to Bristol passed through this place, and a turnpike-road from Christian Malford in Wiltshire, has lately been carried through it to Mangotsfield near Bristol.

There are also some vestiges remaining of an antient road leading from Bath, the Aqua Solis of the Romans, to the Trajectus at Oldbury; but it has been long since disused, and stopt up in many places, since that over the hills has been opened.

This parish consists chiefly of pasture ground, but, below the surface, it is full of a very bituminous kind of coal, which all the country abounds with, from Toghill and Lansdown westward, as far as the city of Bristol; and most of the poor inhabitants are employ'd in the coal-mines, and in a small manufacture of felt-hats carried on here, and in some of the neighbouring villages. Here are quarries also of a coarse kind of black marble, used for chimney-pieces and grave-stones; and plenty of marle, which in some places would be highly valued, but the use of it is here intirely neglected. The waters of Holy-well and St. Bridget's-well in this parish, were formerly in repute for curing sore eyes, and for their virtues in diet-drinks; but they really possess no others than are common to pure spring water in general.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

King Edmund coming to an untimely end at this place, as already related, was buried in the abbey of Glastonbury, wherefore this manor was afterwards bestowed on that house, to sing masses for the repose of his soul; and accordingly in the book of the general survey, I find it thus recorded:

' Saint Mary of Glastingeberie holds Pulcrecerce
' in Pulcrecerce hundred. There are twenty hides.
' In demean are six plow-tillages, and twenty-
' three villeins, and eight bordars, with eighteen
' plow-tillages. There are ten servi, and six men
' pay ninety bars of iron, and in Gloucester is ' one burgage paying 5*d.* and two free men [colli-
' berti] paying 34*d.* and there are three foreigners
' [fracig.] and two mills of 100*d.* [rent]. There ' are sixty acres of meadow, and a wood half a ' mile long, and half a mile broad. It was worth
' 20*l.* and is now worth 30*l.*' Dom. Book, p. 71.

At that time the manor was much more extensive than it is at present, and included Westerleigh, and Abston and Wick. Under the latter of these parishes, it has been shewn, that the monks of Glastonbury quitted their right to this large manor, and to the advowson of the church, to Joceline the bishop of Bath and Wells, 7 Joh. on condition that he would restore to them the election of their own abbat.

A good part of this parish, when it was so extensive, (probably the hamlet of Wick) was within the forest of Kingswood, and the bishop of Bath procured it to be disforested 12 H. 3. The bishop also purchased a charter of free warren in Pucklechurch, 41 H. 3.

The hundred and manor of Pucklechurch remained annexed to the see of Bath and Wells, till king Edward the Sixth, in the second year of his reign, took them, with the manor of Westerleigh, and others, by exchange, and granted the management of the former to sir Nicholas Pointz; but as they produced no profits, the king's commissioners recommended the letting of them on a small annual rent. They were, however, by letters patent, bearing date the 25th of June, in the seventh year of his reign, granted to William earl of Pembroke, to hold to the said earl, his heirs and assigns, of the king in capite, with an exception only of the lands called Pucklechurch park; from whom they passed by sale to sir Maurice Dennys, knight; and from him to the family of Codrington, who sold them to another branch of the Dennises. From them Mr. William Hallidaie purchased them, and with his daughter they went in marriage to Edward Hungerford, of Corsham in Wilts, esq. From this family they passed with an heiress, to Robert Sutton, lord Lexington, whose only daughter carried them to John Manners, duke of Rutland; from whom, in 1717, they were transferred by purchase to sir Edward Bouverie, of Longford-castle in Wilts, baronet; and from him, by devise, to his brother Jacob viscount Folkestone, grandfather of the earl of of Radnor,* the present possessor of the hundred and manor of Pucklechurch.

William de Cheltenham was seized of lands in Pucklechurch, 16, 33, & 40 E. 3. William Gatelin died seized of lands in Pucklechurch 20 E. 3. Sir John Bar died seized of lands in Pucklechurch 22 E. 4. Richard Forster, and Thomas Moor and his wife levied a fine of lands in Pucklechurch 1 & 6 H. 7. Giles Cotherington died seized of the capital messuage and other lands in Pucklechurch 20 Eliz. of which messuage livery was granted, the same year, to his son Richard; and of the lands to Francis, another of his sons.

A capital house and estate at Pucklechurch, formerly belonging to William Dennis, esq; is now the property of John-Hugh Smyth, esq; (eldest son of sir Jarrit Smyth, bart.) in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter and sole heiress of Henry Woolnough, esq; who purchased them of Mrs. Mary Butler, eldest daughter and coheir of William Dennis, esq. There is a large scutcheon, in the front of this house, with the following arms carved in stone: Quarterly of eight. 1. Gules, a bend ingrailed azure, between three leopards faces Or, jessant fleurs de lis of the second, for Dennis. — 2. Or, within a bordure a raven proper, for Corbet. — 3. Argent, on a chief gules three besants, for Ruffel. — 4. Or, five fusils in fess azure, for Pennington. — 5. Lozengy Or and azure, a chevron gules, for Gorges. — 6. Argent, on a bend gules three martlets Or, winged vert, for Danvers. — 7. Two bars, on a chief three stags heads caboshed. — 8. Ermine, three roses gules, 2 & 1, for Still.

* This family (whose name has been variously written, De la Bouverie, Des Bouveries, Des Bouverie, but now established by act of parliament Bouverie) is of ancient and honourable extraction in the Low Countries, and quartered, with their own original arms, those of Melun and Wallincourt, more of which may be seen in Collins's Peerage, V. 6, p. 413. Ed. 1768. whence the following short account is extracted.

The first of this name who appears to be settled in England was Lawrence Des Bouveries, a younger son of Le Sieur Des Bouveries, of the Chateau de Bouverie, near Lille in Flanders. He fled on account of religion to Franckfort on the Maine, where he married his wife Barbara, and coming with her to England, settled at Canterbury. By her he had five sons, Edward, John, Jacob, Valentine, and Samuel; and three daughters, Leah, Elizabeth, and Jane.

Edward Des Bouveries married Mary, daughter of Jasper de Fournestraux, by Mary Tiberkin, whose father was burnt in Germany for the protestant religion. He had by her one son, Edward Des Bouverie, and three daughters.

This Edward Des Bouverie was born in Nov. 1621, and being an eminent Turkey merchant, acquired a very ample fortune. He was knighted by king James II. and died in 1694. He married Anne, daughter of Jacob Forterye of London, merchant, by whom he had seven sons, and four daughters.

William, the eldest son, was created a baronet Feb. 19, 1713-14. He married first, Mary, daughter of James Edwards, of London, esq; and by her had a son Edward, who died young. His second wife was Anne, daughter and sole heir of David Urry, of London, esq; by whom he had several children, whereof only the following survived him, viz. sir Edward, his successor; Jacob, successor to his brother; Christopher, who died unmarried; Jane, wedded to John-Allen Pusey, of Pusey, in Berks, esq; and Anne, who died unmarried.

Sir Edward Des Bouverie, baronet, succeeded his father. He married Mary, daughter of John Smith, of Beaufort-buildings in London, esq; and died without issue.

He was succeeded in dignity and estate by his only surviving brother, sir Jacob Bouverie, baronet, who by letters patent, dated June 29, 1747, was created lord Longford, baron of Longford, in the county of Wals, and viscount Folkstone, of Folkstone in

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth upwards of 200*l.* a year, including the churches of Westerleigh and Abston. Ralph Ergam, bishop of Bath, gave the advowson and impropriation to the chapter of Wells, in the year 1388; and the dean and chapter of that church are patrons and impropiators, and the reverend Walter Swayne is the present incumbent.

Fifty acres belong to the glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the martyr, is situate on an eminence, and seen at a great distance, It has an aisle on the north side, and a tower at the west end, with pinnacles.

By the first lady he had several children, who died young, besides two sons, and four daughters, who survived him, viz. William, (the late earl of Radnor) the honourable Edward Bouverie, married (1764) to Harriot, only daughter of the late sir Everard Fawkener, kn'. Anne, married (1761) to the honourable and reverend George Talbot, third surviving son to William lord Talbot, lord high chancellor of Great Britain; Mary, wedded to Anthony Ashley, earl of Shaftesbury; Charlotte, and Harriot. His lordship, (who by his second lady had two sons, Jacob, who died an infant; and Philip, born Oct. 8, 1746) departed this life Feb. 17, 1761; and was succeeded in honours and estate by his eldest son was succeeded by William Dodington, esq; his son and heir, who murdered his mother by running her through the body with his sword; wherefore the manor came to his two nieces, coheiresses, one of whom was married to Thomas Hobbey, esq; the other to lord Brooke, who, in her right, was lord of the manor and patron of the church. The manor belonged to Mrs. Anne Chapman about the beginning of this century; and it came, not long after, to Thomas Whorwood, esq; who was proprietor of it about the year 1738, from whom it was purchased, and Robert-Gorges-Dobyns Yate, of Bromsborow, esq; is the present lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good estate in the parish. His arms are given under Bromsborow.

William, then viscount Folkstone. His lordship married first, Harriot, only child of sir Mark-Stuart Pleydell, of Colehill, baronet, by whom he had issue one son named Jacob; secondly, Rebecca, daughter of John Alleyne, of Barbadoes, esq; by whom he had issue four sons, viz. William-Henry, Bartholomew, Younge, who died an infant, and Edward; and two daughters, who also died infants. He married thirdly, Anne, relict of Anthony Duncombe, lord Feversham. By letters patent, dated Sept. 25, 1765, his lordship was advanced to the higher dignity of earl of the county of Radnor, with the additional honour of baron Pleydell-Bouverie, of Colehill in the county of Berks; and dying in the year 1776, was succeeded in honour and estate by his eldest son Jacob, now earl of Radnor.

The knights templers were seized of lands in Quedgley 2 E. 3.

John Hanborow, and Thomas Bruges and Maud his wife, levied a fine of the third part of lands in Quedgley, 2 E. 4. and John Garrine and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Quedgley the same year. Another fine of lands in Quedgley was levied by William Bruges and Alice his wife, 21 H. 7. Lands called Rogers, in Quedgley, were granted to John Arnold 33 H. 8.

Netheruge, was a considerable place in this parish; for John the prior, and the convent of Lanthony, on the 8th of June, 8 H. 5. granted to James le Walfshe, or Waleys, son and heir of Giles le Walfshe, their lands in Netheruge in Quedgley, to be held by the service of one knight's fee, paying 100s. for a relief, and subject to the yearly payment of one pound of pepper at Michaelmas, and doing suit twice in the year at the priory court at Lanthony. William le Walfshe, son and heir of another James le Walfshe, on the eve of St. Matthew, 1511, after having done homage to Edmond Forest, the prior, and paid 100s. for a relief, was admitted a free tenant of the land called Netheruge, by the service of one knight's fee.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth 60*l.* a year. The duke of Manchester is patron, and Mr. Palmer is the present incumbent.

Earl Milo gave all the tithes of this church to the priory of Lanthony, in the year 1137, and the priory continued possessed of them 'till the dissolution. Lord Brooke, ancestor to the present patron, created a trust to certain persons for leasing the great tithes to the curate, and they accordingly granted him a lease for 70 years. Before this grant, the incumbent had only the privy tithes, and a small piece of glebe. The great tithes are subject to the payment of a fee farm rent of 12*l.* a year to the crown.

The church is dedicated to St. James, and has a handsome spire on the south side, in which are five bells, and a clock.

Hujus Ecclesiæ per 50 annos pastoris seduli,

Viri vere pacifici,

Simplicitatis innati et antiquæ fidei,

This Robert Marmion took away the abbey of Polefworth from the nuns of that place, and drove them to Oldbury. But when Marmion was in bed at Tamworth, says the legendary story about that matter, Saint Edyth, to whom the abbey was dedicated, appeared to him with her crozier, and told him, that unless he restored the abbey to the nuns, he should have an evil death, and go to hell; and then striking him on the side with the crozier, she vanished. Upon which, under great anxiety, he confessed to a priest, restored the abbey immediately, and was well.

He left issue William, who married Lora, the daughter and heir of Roese de Dover. John Marmion was son and heir of William. He obtained a charter of free warren in Over Queinton and Nether Queinton, 20 E. 1. and died 16 E. 2. but he gave this manor to his son John, and his wife Elizabeth, ten years before his death, and so, says the record, Nichil tenet in balliva mea. Esch. He married Maud, the daughter of the lord Furnival, and left John his son and heir, who held Queinton of the earl of Lancaster by one knight's fee, and died 9 E. 3.

Robert, son and heir of the last John, died without issue, leaving two sisters; Joan, married to sir John Burnack, and Avice, married to sir John Grey of Rotherfield. Robert settled the manor of Queinton on the said sir John Grey and his wife Avice, and the heirs of their bodies, on condition that their issue should take the name of Marmion.

Maud the widow of John Marmion levied a fine of the manor of Queinton to the use of herself for life, the remainder to John de Grey of Roderfield and Avice his wife in special talle, the remainder to John de Burnack and Jean his wife in special talle, 14 E. 3.

Sir John Grey died seized of Queinton 33 E. 3. and was succeeded by John his son, who in observance of the marriage settlement, assumed the name of Marmion. But he dying without issue, it went to Robert Marmion his brother; who married Lora, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Herbert de St. Quintine, and left Elizabeth, an only daughter and heiress, married to sir Henry Fitz-Hugh, whom she survived, and died seized of the manor of Queinton 6 H. 6.

Sir William Fitz-Hugh, son of sir Henry, and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Queinton 8 H. 6. Sir John Burg died seized thereof 11 E. 4. and some time afterwards the manor was vested in Magdalen college, Oxford, to which it still belongs.

Of the other estates the records shew, that Thomas Andrews and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Queinton to Edmond Dalby 1 E. 6.

The editor of the Magna Britannia says, Here was once a preceptory of the knights templers; but that is a mistake, which was occasioned by confounding this parish with that of Quenington, near Fairford, where the knights hospitallers had a preceptory.

H A M L E T S. There are six hamlets in this parish.

1. Upper Queinton. There was formerly a considerable family in this hamlet, of the name of Rutter, which have severely felt the vicissitudes of fortune, and are now reduced. Michael Rutter of Queinton paid 300*l.* composition for his estate, on account of the part he took with the king in the great civil wars. Some part of this hamlet claims to be toll free, as belonging to the dutchy of Lancaster.

2. Lower Queinton, of which there is nothing further observable, except that the church stands in this hamlet.

3. Adminton, or Adderminton, or more antiently Edelminton. Among the lands belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, in Domesday-book, are the following particulars, which sir Robert Atkyns overlook'd :

'The same church [of Wincelcumbe] holds 'Edelmintone in Celfede hundred. There are 'three hides and a half. In demean are two 'plow-tillages, and thirteen villeins, with six plow-tillages. There are four servi, and two ancilla. 'It was worth 4*l.* now 3*l.*' Domesday-book, p. 71.

The abbey purchased a charter of free warren in Adelminton 35 H. 3. which privilege was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. The abbat of Winchcombe assigned this manor to the abbey of St. Ebrulf in Normandy 12 E. 2. but it reverted to the monks of Winchcombe, who were the proprietors of this manor 'till their house was dissolved. Tithes in Adelminton, which belonged to that abbey, were granted to sir Thomas Seimour † E. 6. The manor and chapel of Adminton, and lands called Wind-Cerney, &c. formerly belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to William Brent, alias Barston, 7 E. 6. Earl Brooke is the present lord of this manor, and has a large house here.

John Whitchurch granted ten librats of land in Adelminton to the abbey of Evelham, 6 E. 2.

4. Radbrook. John de Hirford died seized of Radbrook, and of lands in Over Queinton and Nether Queinton, 15 E. 3. Sir William Clopton died seized of Radbrook 7 H. 5. Roger Lingen, esq; was seized of an estate in Radbrook, which was sequestered in the great rebellion, and restored for a composition of 283*l.* Robert Burton, esq; whose family name was Lingen, is the proprietor of this estate, and has a good house here. He assumed the name of Burton from his mother, who was sole heiress of a family of that name in Shropshire, as appears by a memorial for her in Queinton church. His arms are blazoned under Monuments and Inscriptions.

John Riland, son of Richard Riland of Radbrook, was fellow of Magdalen college Oxford, archdeacon of Coventry, and rector of Birmingham in Warwickshire. He was an orthodox divine, and and published several religious discourses; and was buried in Birmingham church 1672.

5. Wincot, so called because Wenric was lord of it. Part of this hamlet is in Clifford Chambers, and part in this parish. The latter lay in the old hundred of Witelai, now comprized in that of Kiftgate, as appears by the following extract:

'William the chamberlain holds Wenecote in Witelai hundred. Wenric held it in the time king Edward. There are three hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and two villeins, and two bordars, with one plow-tillage. There are four servi. It is worth and was worth 4*l*. This manor is taxed.' Domesday-book, p. 74.

Richard Wincote levied a fine of this manor 9 H. 7. George Throgmorton died seized of it 6 E. 6. and Robert his son had livery thereof the following year. Livery of one part of Wincot, but of which it is not said in the record, was granted to William Barnes 9 Eliz. This manor and estate belonged afterwards to Mr. Robert Loggin, late chancellor of the diocese of Sarum; but they are now, by purchase, the property of Robert Burton, esq; of Radbrook, abovementioned. There is only one house in this hamlet, which, as well as the land, is in two parishes; one part in Clifford, the other in Queinton.

6. Mæon, or Meen, whose etymology is given in the former part of this parish. This was antiently a member of the manor of Longborough, as appears by the Domesday account of that manor. King John granted this manor to William de Gamash. John de Pembroke held two parts of the manor of Meen, and Walter de Pedwardine held the third part, and their claim was allow'd in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. This manor afterwards came to the Grevills. William Grevill of Campden was seized thereof, as a member of the manor of Milecot in Warwickshire, 3 H. 4. John Grevill died seized thereof 1 E. 6. and livery was granted to Edward Grevill, son of John, 2 E. 6. Lewis Grevill, of Weston upon Avon and Milcot, had livery of this manor granted to him 1 Eliz. It is now the estate of Mr. Noel.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 90*l*. a year, before the parish was inclosed by parliamentary authority in 1772; but it is considerably improved by inclosing. Robert Marmion gave the advowson of the church of Queinton to the nuns of Polesworth 4 Steph. to whom the tithes were appropriated 12 R. 2. At the dissolution of religious foundations, the rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Queinton, late belonging to the nunnery of Polesworth, were granted to the dean and chapter of Worcester 33 H. 8. and were again confirmed to the church of Worcester 6 Jac. The dean and chapter of Worcester are patrons, and Mr. Taylor is the present incumbent.

Ninety-eight acres of arable land, and five of meadow, belonged to the glebe before the inclosing; but the vicar hath other lands set out by the commissioners in lieu of tithe; and he receives besides, from the impropiator, four quarters of wheat, four of barley, and 45*l*. in money.

The church is large, with an aisle on each side of the nave, and a handsome spire at the west end, with six bells; and according to bishop Benson's book, it is dedicated to Saint Swithin. There is a gallery at the west end of the church.

There were 120 houses, and about 500 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 32 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 13. Atkyns. But having examined the register, I find, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 129 baptisms, and 98 burials; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 221, the burials 103; and the inhabitants are now about 547.

The vicinity of Lark Stoke to this parish occasioned sir Robert Atkyns to subjoin an account of it to Queinton; and as it escaped my notice 'till it was too late to insert it under the proper letter, I must place it here in like manner.

L A R K S T O K E.

THIS place is a hamlet in the parish of Illmington, or Illmington, in Warwickshire, but the hamlet itself lies in Gloucestershire.

It is mentioned as a distinct manor in the antient survey, of which the following is a translation:

'The same church [St. Mary of Evesham] holds Stoch in Widelei hundred. There are two hides, and one plow-tillage in demean, and seven villeins, and two bordars, with two plow-tillages. There is one servus. It is and was worth 40*s.*'

Domesday-book, p. 72.

The manor antiently belonged to the family of the Bishopstones. John de Bishopdon died seized of Lark Stoke, with free warren therein, 13 E. 2. Sir William Bishopstone levied a fine of this manor to the use of divers persons for life, the remainder to himself, and the heirs of his body by Philippa his wife, 11 H. 7. John de Vall was seized of lands in Larkstoke and Queinton 36 E. 3.

This estate was afterwards in the possession of the Brents, who were seized of it when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of Gloucestershire, in which he has fallen into several mistakes concerning it, and has placed the abstract from Domesday under Stoke Archer, in the parish of Cleve.

Lark Stoke has been lately purchased by John Hart, esq; who is the present lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good estate there.

Q U E N I N G T O N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Britwell's-barrow, about two miles northward from Fairford, five north-westward from Leachlade, eight north-eastward from Cirencester, and twenty-six, through the last mentioned town, from Gloucester.

The greater part of the parish consists of arable land, but there is a considerable proportion of good meadow and pasture on the banks of the Coln, which bounds it on the east and south-east sides next to Hatherop and Fairford.

Quenington seems to be nothing more than a different manner of writing Coln-ing-ton, or Conington, for the letter l is dropt in pronunciation. It is descriptive of the situation of the village, and signifies the town upon the river Coln.

The knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem had a preceptory here, surrounded with a moat, now in a good measure filled up; but part of the antient building, with a cross at the top of it, and an old gateway on the east side, which belonged to it, are yet remaining, and constitute the Court, or manor house, occupied by the tenant of the principal farm.

The church and the principal houses are situated on the bourn, where is a mill for making of writing paper, which furnishes employment for a few hands; but the bulk of the people are engaged in husbandry business.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Roger de Laci holds Quenintone in Britwoldesberg hundred. There are eight hides. Three free men, Dodo, and another Dodo, and Aluold held it for three manors, and could go where they pleased, and paid tax. There are three ' three plow-tillages in demean, and twenty villeins,

' and seven bordars, and a priest, and a bailiff.
' They have among them all twelve plow-tillages;
' and two radchenisters, with one plow-tillage.
' There are twelve servi, and two mills of 20s.

Walter de Laci came into England with William the First, and by him was rewarded with this and many other manors in Gloucestershire. His son Roger de Laci succeeding him, was lord of this manor, and of nineteen others in Gloucestershire, when Domesday was compiled.

Agnes Laci, William de Poictou, and the countess Cecilia, founded a preceptory for the knights-hospitallers in this place, and endowed it with their lands here. And Mabilia, the wife of William de Mara, and Robert de Mara, gave them their demesns in Camlden, belonging to Quenington. And William de Lega' also gave many lands and tenements belonging to Quenington, to the knights of the same preceptory.

The prior of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, residing in England, was seized of the manor of Quenington 9 E. 1. as appears by the sheriff's list of all the vills in the county, with their respective lords, returned into the exchequer in that year.

The preceptory at Quenington, lately belonging to the knights hospitallers of St. John at Jerusalem, was granted to sir Anthony Kingston, 37 H. 8.

William Kingston, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, from whom it passed, thro' several hands, 'till it came into the possession of Henry Powle, esq; whose only daughter and heiress Catherine, carried it by marriage to Henry Ireton, esq; who, in her right, was lord of the manor when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. Brooke Forrester, esq; was afterwards lord of it, from whom it passed to Humphry-Mackworth Praed, esq; who sold it to Samuel Blackwell, of Williamstrip, esq; the present lord of the manor.

Court-farm belonged to the preceptory of St. John at Jerusalem, and is therefore tithe free. It is now the property of the lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Fairford, worth about 140*l.* a year. Samuel Blackwell, esq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. Rice is the present incumbent. The rector pays 13*s.* 4*d.* a year to the patron.

Walter de Lacy, (or according to some, Hugh de Lacy) gave the church of Quenington, a yard land, and the tithes of the vill, to the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, and the grant was confirmed by king Stephen, at the request of Walter de Lacy, abbat of Gloucester, in the year 1138.

Ninety-two acres of arable, and twenty-six acres of pasture, belong to the glebe.

The church is an antient, low building. It had formerly a spire between the nave and chancel, as appears by a part still remaining. There is a rude carving in stone, over the north door, of Christ treading the devil under his feet, with the figures of three persons in a praying posture. Over the south door is the representation of God the father, God the son, and the beasts mentioned in the Revelations, executed in the same gross, unworthy manner.

R A N D W I C K

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Whitston, about three miles distant north-westward from Stroud, three south-westward from Painwick, and about eight southward from Gloucester.

Randwick, from the Saxon randan, to divide, and wic, a street, hamlet, or small village, signifies a hamlet separated from the mother parish. And the silence of the antient survey concerning this place, is a sufficient indication that it was formerly included in the account of some neighbouring manor, and I think none so likely as Standish, whose church is even at this time the mother church to Randwick.

The village lies on the south-east acclivity of a hill, that rises with a pretty steep ascent above the church, to a moderate height. The hill is lined with freestone, and several springs issue from the sides of it. The situation, for air, water, and exposure, is extremely advantageous and pleasant.

Randwick-ash, on the ridge or summit of the hill, is a noted land-mark, from which there is an extensive prospect to the south-west, of the lower part of the vale of Gloucestershire, and the river Severn, with part of the Bristol-channel and Somersetshire; and a view, directly west, of the forest of Dean, and of the Welch mountains in the back ground. To the east is seen the country called the Bottoms, that is, the narrow vallies of Painwick, Stroud, Woodchester, or Nailsworth; and the towns of Stroud and Painwick, with the neighbouring hills.

At this place an annual revel is kept on the Monday after Low Sunday, probably the wake of the church, attended with much irregularity and intemperance, and many ridiculous circumstances in the choice of a Mayor, who is yearly elected on that day, from amongst the meanest of the people. They plead the prescriptive right of antient custom for the licence of the day, and the authority of the magistrate is not able to suppress it.

The whole parish is not estimated at more than 1000 l. per ann. but is very populous, chiefly inhabited by poor people employ'd in the woollen manufacture, and the rates for the relief of the poor have amounted, of late years, to 800 l. communibus annis.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Little can be said of a place of which scarce any thing is recorded; but it appears that William ap Adam died seized of Randwick 18 H. 6. Thomas Whiston and Anne his wife levied a fine of the manor to Thomas Mills & Mariæ. And Mr. Mitchel was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester, to which the vicar of Standish presents, and pays the curate 8 l. 8 s. a year. The living has been augmented by the queen's bounty, in the year 1719, and by another benefaction of 200 l. in the year 1733.

The church is dedicated to St. John. It was very small, but a new aisle was added to it about fifty years ago, and the profits of the seat-places were intended, by the contributors to the building, to be applied to the support of an afternoon lecturer on Sundays; which, with the augmentation, a subscription for the lecture, an allowance from the vicar of Standish in lieu of small tithes, and the surplice-fees, make up 60 l. a year, or upwards.

John Cook, Thomas Framilode, and John Cugley, lords of one moiety of the manor of Randwick, by their deed dated 37 H. 6. granted to Thomas Hort, Thomas Holder, and fourteen other persons, a piece of ground, sixty-five feet in length, and thirty-five in breadth, in trust for them, to build a house to the honour of God, the blessed Virgin Mother, and All Saints, in the church of Randwick. How it was endowed I cannot find. There remains now only a decay'd old house, called the Church-house, inhabited by poor people.

The tithes and some glebe land belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and were granted to the bishoprick of Gloucester 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The parish pays 3 s. 4 d. a year to be exempt from contributing to the repair of the mother church of Standish, which parish pays 10 d. a year to be exempt from relieving the poor of Randwick.

Benefactions.

Here is a charity school, in which forty children of the poorest of the inhabitants are taught to read, and have bibles when they quit the school. It has been well inspected and conducted, and is of great use in this poor place, where numbers of children would otherwise be deprived of all instruction. It is endowed with lands worth 11 l. a year, and a house has been built for the master; but the school has been chiefly supported by small donations and legacies, and for many years by the benefactions of the truly honourable lady Betty Germaine, and for some years past by the generosity of John Elliot, esq; late of London, now of Binfield, Berks, and of Bridgend in the parish of Stonhouse, in this county.

Mr. Chandler left 150 l. to purchase land, the produce of which is given one third to the minister, and the rest to the poor. A pasture ground in

Hayward's

Hayward's field in Stonehouse, is charged with the payment of 30s. yearly to the minister, and 30s. to the poor; and another estate in the same parish is charged with the payment of 2s. 6d. yearly to the minister, and the like sum to the poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 80 houses, and about 400 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 16. Atkyns. The average of baptisms, for five years preceding 1767, was 30, of which 9 belonged to neighbouring parishes; of burials 14, of which 3 were not inhabitants of this parish. For some time subsequent to 1766, the proportion of the burials to the baptisms has been greater, from the small pox being epidemical, and other causes; but in 1776 the births were 37, the burials 18. And according to an exact account taken a few years since, there were 140 houses, and 650 inhabitants. From these particulars it appears to be a healthy and prolific place, still increasing in population.

R A N G E W O R T H Y

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Thornbury, about five miles south-east from the town of that name, three south-west from Wickwar, and about twenty-five southward from Gloucester.

The name of this parish took its origin from circumstances similar to those of Randwick, and was most probably derived from the Saxon penban, to divide, and peopðig, a habitation, or village; and was so called because it was separated from some larger place, of which it had been antiently a member. Domesday taking no notice of it, shews that it was not a distinct manor when that record was compiled, but was probably taken out of Thornbury, tho' it has since acquired manerial rights, and is now become a distinct parish.

Rangeworthy is reputed to be within the jurisdiction of the honour of Gloucester. It consists almost wholly of pasture land, with a pretty large common of a strong soil, overgrown with fern, where a coal-pit has lately been opened. This part of the vale is susceptible of very considerable improvement.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor was held of Hugh de Audley, earl of Gloucester, and Margaret his wife, 21 E. 3. John Talbot, viscount Lisle, in right of Margaret his mother, descended from Warine Gerard lord Lisle, was seized of this manor; and Joan, his widow, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Thomas Chedder, of Chedder in Somersetshire, held it in dower, and died seized thereof 7 E. 4.

Elizabeth Courteney, countess of Devonshire, died seized of Raingworthy, Nethercot, and Kingston Lisle, 11 H. 8. Sir Arthur Plantagenet and Elizabeth his wife, heiresses to the countess of Devonshire, had livery of the above mentioned manors the same year.

The manor of Rangeworthy was vested in Robert Hale, esq; in the year 1608, and Matthew Hale, esq; was the proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. John de la Field Phelps, esq; was lord of the manor at the time of his death, in the year 1771. His son and heir, John de la Field Phelps, is a minor. The arms of Phelps are, Argent, a lion rampant sable between six crosses crozlets fitchy gules.

Sir Thomas Brook died seized of lands in Raingworth 5 H. 5. and Joan his widow held them in dower, and died seized of one messuage, one plow-tillage, ten acres of meadow, and twenty acres of wood in Raingworthy, 15 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 16l. a year; and in the gift of the vicar of Thornbury. Christ Church college in Oxford has the impropriation.

The church is a small building, dedicated to the holy Trinity, and has a low tower at the west end.

Pentecostals - - - - 6d.

Benefactions.

The curate receives 6s. 8d. for a sermon on Trinity Monday; and an estate worth 27l. a year has been given by an unknown benefactor, the rent of which is received by the overseer of Rangeworthy, who pays 7l. to the curate, and the remainder is appropriated to the use of the poor. A cottage, worth about 18s. a year, has been given half to the curate, and the other half to the poor.

Land-tax at 3s. 1770, £. 29 10 3

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this place, there were 30 houses, and about 120 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 7, burials 7. The people are now decreased to 120.

R E N D C O M B E.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Raingate, six miles northward from Cirencester, six south-westward from Northleach, and the fourteen south-eastward from Gloucester.

It consists chiefly of arable land, with woodland and pasturage. The river Churn flows through it, and abounds with small trout and minnows.

Rendcombe, more antiently Rindecome, is a peculiar situation. It is moated almost round the nature, with a very narrow combe, or agreeable to the signification of the name; for ring, in the Saxon language, is a circle. Within this ring or circle, which does not encompass the whole, but only a large portion of the parish, the ground lies high and lofty, and at the south-west extremity stands the village of Rendcombe.

Here sir William Guise has a noble seat, with a park, sheltered on the north and east quarters by a fine grove of lofty trees, and open for prospect to the south and west; where the river Churn glides along reluctantly, at the foot of a fine slope, not two hundred yards from the house. It is only of late that this antient family has resided here; and there cannot be a more healthy situation, with an open country round about, for the rational and gentleman-like exercises of riding and hunting. They formerly resided at Elmore and Brockworth, in the vale part of the county.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There were two distinct manors in Rendcombe, as appears by the antient survey.

‘Gislebert the son of Tuold holds Rindecome in Respiget hundred. There are five hides taxed. Aluric held it. In demean is one plow-tillage, and three villeins, and seven bordars, with three plow-tillages. There are seven servi, and one foreigner [francigena] holds the land of two villeins, and a mill of 8s. and four acres of meadow. It was worth 7l. now 100s.

‘The same Gislebert holds Rindecumbe in Respiget hundred, and Walter [holds it] of him. There are three hides taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and four villeins, and three bordars, with two plow-tillages. There are six servi, and a mill of 5s. and three acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 6l.’ Dom. Book, p. 76.

This Gislebert, the son of Tuold, taking part with Robert Curthoise, against king William the Second, in their contest for the crown, his estates in England were seized, and this manor, with the honour of Gloucester, and many other great estates belonging to the crown, were granted to Robert Fitz-Haman, or Hayman, of whom, and of many others herein after-mentioned, I have treated more largely in the accounts of the Honour, and of the Earls of Gloucester, p. 91, & seq.

Mabel, or Sibil, eldest daughter of Robert Fitz-Haman, carried this manor, by her marriage, to Robert Melhent, or Fitz-Roy, natural son of king Henry the First, who was created earl of Gloucester by his father, and dying in the year 1147, left William, his eldest son and heir. William had a daughter Amice, married to Richard de Clare, earl of Hertford, who, in her right, died seized of this manor 8 Joh.

Gilbert de Clare, son of Richard and Amice, was the first earl of Gloucester and Hertford jointly, and died at Penros in Brittany, seized of the manor of Rendcombe, 14 H. 3. Richard de Clare, eldest son and heir of Gilbert, succeeded to this manor, and died 46 H. 3. Gilbert de Clare was son and heir of Richard. His right to court leet in Rendcombe and Rendcombe Over, was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, brought against him 15 E. 1. and he died in the 24th year of the same reign, leaving this manor in jointure to Joande Acres, his second wife, daughter to king Edward the first, who died seized of it in 1307, the 35th and last year of her father's reign. Gilbert de Clare, son of Gilbert and Joan his wife, was the next possessor. He was slain at the battle of Bannockburne, in Scotland; 7 E. 2. having no issue, and was found by the escheator's inquisition taken the next year, to have been seized of the manor of Ryndecombe, which he held of John de la Mare by the service of 2s. a year; of the advowson of the church, worth 100s. of 100 acres of arable land, worth 12s. 6d. per ann. of four acres and a half of meadow, worth 18d. per acre; of pasture worth 2s. and his free tenants paid him 41s. 10d.

Upon the partition of his estates between his three sisters and coheiresses, this manor fell to Margaret, then the wife of Piers Gaveston, but married afterwards to Hugh de Audley, who was created earl of Gloucester, and died 21 E. 3. Margaret, his only daughter and heiress, was married to Ralph lord Stafford, who, in her right, died seized of this manor 46 E. 3. and was succeeded by his son, Hugh earl of Stafford, who died at Rhodes 9 R. 2. in his return from a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, as appears by the escheator's inquisition taken the following year. Thomas earl of Stafford, son of Hugh, married Anne, daughter of Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester, by Eleanor his wife, eldest daughter and coheiress of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford; but died before the marriage was consummated, 16 R. 2. seized of the manors of Rendcombe, North Cerney, and Thornbury, and was succeeded by his brother William, who died unmarried 18 R. 2. Edmond earl of Stafford was heir to his two brothers, Thomas, and William, and by special licence from the king, married Anne, widow of the former, with whom he had the manor of Wheatenhurst, alias Whitminster. He was killed at the battle of Shrewsbury, July 12, 1403, 4 H. 4. Humphry earl of Stafford, son and heir of Edmond, married Anne, daughter of Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmoreland, and was created duke of Buckingham 23 H. 6. He was slain at the battle of Northampton, in the 38th year of the same reign, at which time he was seized of the manors of Eastington, North Cerney, Rendcombe, Wheatenhurst, and Thornbury. He was attainted by parliament, after his death, whereby Rendcombe came to the crown, when it had continued near 400 years in the same family, from the grant of king William the Second to Robert Fitz-Haman, down to the death of Humphry duke of Buckingham.

King Edward the Fourth, after the duke of Buckingham's attainder, granted this manor to Richard Nevil, the great earl of Warwick, commonly called the Make King, who fell a victim to his his own ambitious designs, for he was slain at the battle of Barnet, April 14, 1471, in attempting to depose king Edward the Fourth, whom he had before advanced to the throne, and was attainted in his turn; so that this manor came again to the crown.

John Tame, a wealthy merchant, obtained a grant of it, and purchased the manor of Fairford of king Henry the Seventh. He was succeeded by his son sir Edmond Tame, whose son Edmond dying without issue 36 H. 8. his estates came to his three sisters, of whom Margaret, the eldest, was married to sir Humphry Stafford, and they had livery of this manor the same year. See other particulars under Fairford.

The manor of Rendcombe, formerly the duke of Buckingham's, was granted to Henry lord Stafford, and to the lady Ursula his wife, 2 Mar. and Edward lord Stafford had livery thereof 13 Eliz.

From the Staffords this manor passed by purchase to sir Richard Berkeley, whose widow, Elianor, was seized of it in the year 1608, and dying in 1629, it descended to sir Maurice Berkeley, son and heir of sir Richard. His estate was sequestered by the parliament in the great civil wars, for which he paid 1372*l.* composition. Sir Christopher Gyse soon afterwards purchased Rendcombe from the Berkeley family, and sir William Guise,² baronet, is the present lord of this manor. His arms are, Gules, seven lozenges vair, 3, 3, 1; on a canton Or, a mullet pierced sable.

Robert de Mara purchased lands in Rendcombe of Jordan his brother 1 Joh. Lands in Rendcombe and Calmsden belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget 36 H. 8.

Thomas Rich died seized of Green's and Upner's farms in Rendcombe, and was succeeded by William his son, who likewise died seized of them 15 Car. leaving Thomas his son seven years old.

Marisden, in this parish, has been esteemed a distinct manor, and is so called in the records.

The manor of Marisden, in Rendcombe, belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, and was granted to sir John Berkeley 28 H. 8. who dying seized thereof 37 H. 8. Richard Berkeley, his son, had livery of it 6 E. 6. It now belongs to sir William Guise.

Eycot, (from the British Y'coed, the wood) is a considerable estate in this parish; but it was formerly a member of the manor of Bibury, as appears by the following translation from Domesday:

'The church of St. Mary of Worcester holds Aicote in Respigete hundred, and Ailric holds it of her. It lies in Begeberie. There is one hide. Indemean are two plow-tillages, and two villeins, and four bordars, with two plow-tillages. There are two servi, and eight acres of meadow, and a mill of 64*d.* It was worth 20*s.* now 30*s.* Ordric holds it of the bishop.' Dom. Book, p. 70.

Thomas de Berton died seized of the manor of Eycot, held of the manor of Bibury 49 E. 3. John Penger died seized thereof 7 H. 4. Catherine War 6 H. 6. granted the manor of Eycot, lying in Rendcombe, North Cerney, and Woodmancot in North Cerney, to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and others; and they, two years afterwards, granted the same to the abbey of Winchcombe. Sir William Guise is the present proprietor of this estate.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 130*l.* a year; Mr. Warner is patron, and the reverend Mr. Shellard is the present incumbent.

The lords of the manor were patrons of the church until the attainder of Humphry duke of Buckingham, after which the advowson was granted to sir Richard Cornwall, and his heirs males, 1 H. 7.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a handsome structure, consisting of the nave, and an aisle on the south side, with two chancels, and has a square tower at the west end. Whether it was ² This antient family has been possessed of estates in Gloucestershire ever since about the year 1262, when Nicholas de Gyse, son of Robert, of the family of Gyse of Asple-Gyse, or Gowiz, in Bedfordshire, married a near relation of John de Burgh, son of Hubert de Burgh, earl of Kent, and with her had the manor of Elmore in this county, by the gift of her relation John de Burgh, out of respect to whom, Nicholas assumed the arms of de Burgh, which have ever since been born by this family.

Sir Aunselme de Gyse, son of Nicholas, died 23 E. 1. John de Gyse, was son and heir of sir Aunselme, and had a son John de Gyse, who was living 32 E. 3. Sir Anselme Gyse, son of the last John, died 13 H. 4. and Reginald Gyse, his son, died 8 H. 5.

John Gyse, son of Reginald, married the daughter and heir of ——— Wistam, and resided at Asple-Gyse in Bedfordshire, which place took the latter part of its name from his family. Sir John Gyse, of Asple-Gyse, son of John, married Agnes, or Alice, daughter of ——— Berkeley, and dying in the year 1479, was succeeded by John Gyse, of Elmore, esq; who had a grant of the manor of Brockworth in this county from king Henry the Eighth, 32 regni, in exchange for the manors of Widdington in Oxfordshire, and Asple-Gyse in Bedfordshire. He married the daughter of lord Grey of Wilton, and dying 4 Maria, left Anselme his eldest son and heir forty-six years old; which Anselme dying without issue 5 Eliz. was succeeded by his brother William Gyse, who married Mary, the daughter of William Ratsey of Colmore. John Gyse, son and heir of William, married Jane, daughter of Richard Pauncefoot of Hasfield, and was succeeded by his son sir William Gyse, who married to his first wife, Margaret, daughter of Christopher Kenn, of Somersetshire, and after serving the office of high sheriff of Gloucestershire, in the year 1608, died in 1642. William Gyse, eldest son of sir William by Margaret his first wife, married Cicely, daughter of John Dennis of Pucklechurch. He resided at Brockworth, and was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in the year 1647, and dying in 1653, was buried at Elmore.

Sir Christopher Gyse, son and heir of William, purchased the manor of Rendcombe of the Berkeley family, and was created a baronet by king Charles the Second, in the year 1661. He married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Lawrence Washington, of Gaisden in Wiltshire, and dying in 1670, was buried at Brockworth. Sir John Guise, son of sir Christopher, married Elizabeth, daughter of John How, of Compton, esq; and served in several parliaments as knight of the shire for this county. Sir John Guise, son and heir of sir John, married first, ——— daughter of sir Nathaniel Napper of Dorsetshire, by whom he had one son, John; secondly, Anne, one of the daughters and coheirs of sir Francis Russel, of Strensham in Worcestershire, baronet, but by her had no issue. He represented the county of Gloucester in several parliaments, and died about the year 1732. Sir John Guise, only son of sir John, married Jane, the daughter of ——— Saunders, of Mungwell in the county of Oxford, esq; by whom he had issue two sons and two daughters. Sir William Guise, second and only surviving son of sir John, is the present lord of the manors of Brockworth, Elmore, and Rendcombe, and one of the present representatives of this county in parliament. built built by sir Giles, or by sir Edmond Tame, is not agreed, but all accounts allow that it was built by one of that family; and E. T. the initials of the latter person's name are in the window of the south chancel. There is a crucifix still remaining intire on the east wall of the chancel, having remarkably escaped the observation of the parliament's party in the great civil wars, who destroy'd every thing they found of that kind.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

At the east end of the south chancel, which belongs to the lord of the manor, is a large pyramid of black and white marble, intended as a monument for the late sir John Guise and his lady, but the inscription is not yet engraved.

Close to the above, round the verge of a tomb, it is thus to be read, in capital letters relieved on the marble, Here lyeth Elenor Jermye first married to Robert Roe, esq; & secondly to S^r Ry: Berkeley Knt. Dyed: 17: March: 1629.

There is a scutcheon at the head of the tomb, bearing, [Argent] a lion rampant [gules] a crescent for difference, supposed for Jermye. At the other end, Baron and femme, 1. Checky, a fess ermine. 2. A maunch. In the front are two large scutcheons; one shews the marriage of Roe with Jermye, viz. Baron and femme, 1. a chevron between three wresails for Roe. 2. Quarterly 1st and 4th, Jermye. 2d and 3d, [Argent] a bend between six martlets [sable] supposed for T'empelt. The second scutcheon denotes the second marriage, viz. Baron and femme, 1. [Gules] a chevron ermine between ten crosses patty [argent] for Berkeley, with quarterings. 2. Jermye, with quarterings as before.

Against the east wall of the rector's chancel, are two handsome monuments, with the following inscriptions :

In Memory of Robert Berkeley, Esq; who died Febr. y^e 2^d 1690 Aged 76 years. And Rebecca his Wife, who died August y^e 16th 1707 Aged 83 Years. This Monument was erected by their most Dutifull and most Oblequious Daughter Rebecca Berkeley.

This is followed by the underwritten poor versification,
Robert, that always was both good and iust;
Of high descent, years since return'd to dust:
Who on his God at home, and Church did call;
Was ever Loyal, and Episcopal.
The best of Husbands; and so loving was
That he to Fathers been a pattern has.
And now prepared for her long repose,
His Wife Rebecca by his side lies close:
A tender Mother, of a Godlike mind;
Was to her Children all, and neighbours kind:
A pious dame, still ready to fulfill
Her God's, and her obligeing Husband's will.
Thrice happy souls, They never can miss rest,
Who striving here each other to love best,
Were then with peace, and now in heav'n are blest.

Arms, Baron and femme, 1. Gules, a chevron ermine between ten crosses patty argent, for Berkeley. 2. Azure, on a cross sable five besants.

Near to this place lies interr'd the Body of JANE Daughter of ROBERT BERKELEY of Rendcombe Esq; by REBECCA his Wife, Descended from an Antient and Noble Family. She was of a Meek Temper, and obliging Behaviour, Dutiful to her Parents, Pious and Exemplary in her life and Conversation, & a true Daught: of the Church of England. She died in the 19th Year of her Age, Anno Dom. 1672. This monument was erected by REBECCA her eldest sister, out of her tender Love and Affection. — Arms, Berkeley as above.

RISINGTON (GREAT.)

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, seven miles south from Stow, five north-eastward from Northleach, and about twenty-five east from Gloucester.

It is bounded by part of Oxfordshire on the east, by the river Windrush on the west, by the other Rifingtons to the north, and by part of Great Barrington to the southward of it. It consists of rich meadow and pasture on the side next the river, with very good arable land in the higher situations.

It is sometimes called Broad Rifington. Risefdone, Risedune, and Rifendune, which are the several manners in which the name was antiently written, signify that the village lies on the side of a rising ground, which is exactly the situation of it, with an agreeable prospect of the vale beneath, through which the river Windrush flows, in its course to Burford and Witney.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Rotbert de Todeni holds Risedone in Sale-manesberie hundred. Ulf held it. There are thirteen hides taxed. In demean are three plow-tillages, and twenty-three villeins, and six bordars, with ten plow-tillages. There are eight among the servi and ancillae, and a mill of 10*s.* and one burgage in Glouuecest' of 3*d.* [rent.] ' It was worth 12*l.* now 10*l.*' Dom. Book, p. 76.

The above mentioned Robert de Todeni died seized of the manors of Risefdone, Horedone, Saperton, and Frampton, in the year 1088, and was succeeded by William his son and heir, who took the name of de Albin, with the addition of Breto, to distinguish himself from William de Albin, chief butler of the realm.

The manor did not continue long in the family of Todeni, for Alard le Fleming was seized of it and of Saperton in the reign of king John, and both those manors continued in his descendants down to the reign of king Richard the Second. Henry le Fleming, son of Alard, died 5 H. 3. and was succeeded by John le Fleming, his son and heir, who was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 31 H. 3. and dying without issue, was succeeded by his kinsman Alard le Fleming, whose widow Anne was afterwards married to Henry de la Lay. A Quo warranto was brought against them for marrying without the king's licence, but the writ was discharged, on producing a licence from king Henry the Third.

The last Alard le Fleming left two daughters, coheiresses; Anne, (or as she is called in the escheator's inquisition, Florence,) the eldest, was married to William de Infula, or de Lisle; and Joan, the other daughter, was married to Henry Hoese, or Hufsey. Which said William and Henry were jointly seized of the manor of Great Risindon in right of their wives, as appears by the sheriff's return of all the vills in the county with their respective lords, made in obedience to the king's writ, 9 E. 1. From this time they and their descendants held this manor and that of Saperton jointly, for many successive generations.

William de Infula, or de Lisle died 3 E. 2. seized of a moiety of the manor of Great Risindon in right of Florentia his wife, and left William, his son and heir by his said wife, twenty-eight years old, (Esch.) who also died seized of the same moiety 19 E. 3. His son, Walter de Lisle, with Joan his wife, levied a fine of a moiety of the manor of Broad Risington to the use of themselves in special taille; remainder to sir Henry Hoese in taille, remainder to Elizabeth, the daughter of sir Henry, 21 E. 3. and died 31 E. 3. as did Joan his widow, in the forty-ninth year of the same reign, seized of the same moiety in dower. William de Lisle, son of Walter, was seized thereof, with a moiety of the advowson of the church, 51 E. 3. and dying 8 R. 2. was succeeded by John Lisle, esq; his son and heir.

I now return to Henry Hoese, or de Hufsey, who had married Joan, one of the coheiresses of Alard le Fleming, and in her right, was seized of a moiety of this manor 9 E. 1. He was several times summoned to parliament among the barons in the reigns of E. 1. and E. 2. and died seized of [a moiety of] the manor of Rufsindon 6 E. 3. Dugd. Sir Henry Hufsey, his son and heir, levied a fine of a moiety of the manor and advowson of Broad Risington to the use of himself for life; the remainder to Henry his son, and to Elizabeth, the daughter of John de Bohun, in special taille; remainder to Richard, brother of Henry, in taille; remainder to Elizabeth, the daughter of Henry, in taille; remainder to John de Huntingfield, and his heirs, 21 E. 3. and died 7 R. 2. Anchoret, his widow, was seized of two acres of land in Risington, and of a moiety of the manor of Saperton, in dower, at the time of her death, 13 R. 2.

The manor came afterwards to the Grevils. John Grevil died seized thereof 23 H. 6. and his son, John Grevil, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of it 14 H. 7. William lord Sandys and Margaret his wife were seized of the manor of Broad Risington. He died 32 H. 8. and livery was granted the same year to Thomas lord Sandys, his son; upon whose death, William lord Sandys, son of Thomas, had livery of the manor granted to him 9 Eliz.

About this time the manor came to the Brays of Great Barrington. Edmund Bray, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, and it continued in his family 'till it was purchased of Reginald-Morgan Bray, esq; about the year 1734, by lord chancellor Talbot, for the use, and with part of the fortune, of Mary, daughter and heiress of Adam de Cardonnel, esq; now countess Talbot, who is the present lady of the manor. Her ladyship's paternal arms are, Argent, two chevronels azure, between three trefoils vert.

Lands in Broad Risington belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire; and sir John Lovel and others were seized of one messuage, one plow-tillage, 3s. yearly rent, and half a yard-land in Risington, in trust for that abbey, 16 R. 2. These lands, after the dissolution of the abbey of Bruern, were granted to Thomas Reeve and George Cotton 1 Mariae.

A tenement and lands in Great Risington belonged to a house of the knights hospitallers of St. John at Jerusalem in Burford, and were granted to Edmond Hermon 35 H. 8. The advowson of the church belonged to the same knights, but was excepted in this grant to Edmond Hermon.

Richard Gilpyn and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Risington Great 19 R. 2. Thomas de Lee and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Broad Risington to the use of themselves 20 R. 2. Lands in Broad Risington belonged to sir William Berkeley, upon whose attainder they were granted to Jasper duke of Bedford 1 H. 7. and John Walters and Thomas Carpenter obtained another grant of them 1 Mariae.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 250*l.* a year. Lady Talbot is patroness, and the reverend Richard Hayes, M.A. is the present incumbent.

Henry le Fleming levied a fine of the advowson of Risington to the use of Alice, widow of John le Fleming, 51 H. 3.

Four yard lands and a half belong to the glebe. Knightly Chetwood, D.D. and dean of Gloucester, who was presented to this rectory in the year 1686, built the parsonage house for the benefit of his successors; but it has been greatly improved by Mr. Upton and Mr. Hayes, the late and present incumbents.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptist, is large, and built in the form of a cross, with a strong low tower in the middle, in which are six bells, and a gallery at the west end. In three niches in the wall of the south porch, are the figures of our Saviour on the cross, and one of his disciples on each side of him; and in the chancel is a place formerly used for auricular confession.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 75 houses, and about 277 inhabitants, whereof 36 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. In ten years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 74, burials 37, and the number of inhabitants is now about 252, which shews the place to be very healthy.

Rifington (Little,) or Rifington Bassett.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, four miles south from Stow, six north-eastward from Northleach, and about twenty-five east from Gloucester.

It is bounded on the south by Great Rifington, on the north by Wick Rifington, on the east by Westcot, and on the west by Bourton on the Water.

The name has been already explained under the preceding parish; but the cognomen was given it from the family of the Bassets, to whom the manor antiently belonged.

Most of the lands lie in a valley on the banks of the Windrush, but the village itself is seated on a pleasant slope, with a fine aspect to the south-west.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Roger de Laci holds Rifedune in Salemanes-berie hundred, and Hugh holds it of him. There are eight hides taxed. Aluard, and Aschill, and Aluard, and Uluui, held it for four manors. In demean are seven plow-tillages, and four villeins, with two plow-tillages. There are twelve servi, and two ancille. There is a mill of 10*s.* It is worth and was worth 7*l.* and 10*s.* Domesday-book, p. 75.

Roger de Laci taking part with Robert Curthose against king William the Second, his estates were seized by the latter, and given to Hugh de Laci, his younger brother, who leaving no surviving issue, they passed to Gilbert, son of his sister Emme, who afterwards assumed the name of Lacy.

Soon after this time, Ralph Bassett, chief justiciar of England, purchased, among other large estates, the manor of Little Rifington, which he gave to Gilbert a younger son. Thomas Bassett, son and heir of Gilbert, was justice itinerant for Gloucestershire, and married Alice, the daughter of — Dunstanvil. Gilbert Bassett, son and heir of Thomas, married Egeline, daughter of — Courtney; and vesting the knights templers with lands in this parish, he died 7 Joh. leaving an only daughter and heiress, married to Richard de Comvil.

Robert de Briwes, or Brus, was possessed of the manor 53 H. 3. and died seized of it 4 E. 1. Robert Burnel, bishop of Bath and Wells, the next lord of this manor, purchased a charter of free warren 9 E. 1. and dying in the 21st year of that reign, was succeeded by Philip Burnel, his nephew and heir. The family of Burnel is descended from sir Robert Burnel, who came into England with the Conqueror, and died in the last year of that reign. His heirs settled at Acton Burnel in Staffordshire, where they had a castle, which was honoured by an assembly of parliament in the reign of Edward the First; and the famous statute of Acton Burnel, so often mentioned by our historians, was so called from being enacted at that place. The above mentioned Philip Burnel married Maud, the daughter of Richard earl of Arundel, and dying 22 E. 1. was succeeded by Edward his son and heir, who came of age 1 E. 2. and had then livery of his lands. He was summoned as a baron to parliament 5 E. 2. and died without issue in the 9th year of the same reign, seized of the manor of Little Rifindon, which he held jointly with Alina, or Aliva, his wife, of the king in capite, as of the honour of Wallingford, by the service of half a knight's fee. The manor then paid 10*l.* a year to the abbess and convent of Godstow, as appears by the escheator's inquisition, which found that Maud, his sister, the wife of John Lovell, was his heir; but the manor was assigned to Aliva, the widow of Edward lord Burnel, in dower.

John de Handelo married Maud, sister and heir of Edward lord Burnel, and widow of John lord Lovell; and they joined in levying a fine of this manor to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to Nicholas their son, 17 E. 3. John de Handelo, after the decease of his wife, held this estate by the courtesy of England 'till his death 20 E. 3. Nicholas de Handelo had livery of the manor on the death of his father, and assumed the name of Burnel from his mother. He was summoned as a baron to parliament 24 E. 3. and dying 6 R. 2. left sir Hugh lord Burnel his son and heir, who married Joyce, daughter and heiress of sir John Botetourt. He was one of the lords that received the resignation of the crown from king Richard the Second, and died 8 H. 5. seized of the manor of Rifindon Bassett, and other great estates. Edward Burnel, only son of sir Hugh, married Alice, daughter of the lord Strange, and died in the lifetime of his father, leaving three daughters, coheiresses to their grandfather; Joyce, married married to Thomas Erdington; Margery to Edmond Hungerford; and Catherine, afterwards married to sir John Ratcliffe.

The heirs male of Nicholas, son of Maud Burnel, by John de Handelo, being thus extinct, the manor reverted to the heir of Maud by her first husband, John lord Lovel, who was William lord Lovel, her great grandson. He died seized of this manor 33 H. 6. and was succeeded by John his son, who married Joan, sister of William viscount Beaumont, and died 4 E. 4. Francis lord Lovel, son of John, married Anne, daughter of Henry lord Fitz-Hugh. He was very much in favour with king Richard the Third, and equally hated by the people. Of him, and two others, Catesby, and Ratby, the following distich was commonly repeated:

The Cat, the Rat, and Lovel the Dog, Rule all England under the Hog.

It fared with him, as it has often done with favourites exercising undue influence over their sovereign, for he was attainted 1 H. 7. for divers misdemeanors, and fled out of the kingdom; but returning, was slain near Newark 3 H. 7. leaving no issue. His two sisters, Joan, married to sir Brian Stapleton, and Fridiswid, married to sir Edward Norris, could not inherit, on account of their brother's attainder, wherefore this manor came to the crown.

It was afterwards granted to Thomas duke of Norfolk, by whose attainder it came again to the crown, and was granted to Paul Withepool and other citizens of London, as security for money borrowed, 36 H. 8. John Fettiplace, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608. It was afterwards purchased by seven persons, who held it in common, and is now divided among several freeholders, and held of the honour of Ewe Elm in Oxfordshire.

There was a manor, or at least a reputed manor in this parish, which belonged to the Benedictine nunnery of Godstow in Oxfordshire, and was granted, after the dissolution of religious foundations, to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberlain, 34 H. 8. The knights templars were seized of lands in this parish 2 E. 3. Certain lands in Little Risington belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, and were granted to Thomas Reeve and George Cotton 1 Mar.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 145*l.* a year; the lord chancellor is patron, and the reverend John Dachair, D. D. is the present incumbent.

There was formerly a composition between the rector of this church and the abbey of Osney concerning tithes. An acre of furze, an acre of arable, and half an acre of pasture belong to the church-wardens.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has a small aisle on the north side, and a tower, with one bell.

RISINGTON (WICK)

IS a small parish, in the lower division of the hundred of Slaughter, three miles south from Stow, six north-eastward from Northleach, and about twenty-five eastward from Gloucester.

It lies on the slope of an easy hill, which bounds a pleasant little valley to the southward of it. This part of the country being at a great distance from any coal mines, has induced several gentlemen to bore, and sink pits in their estates in search of that necessary fossil, and particularly the late Mr. Dickenson persevered for three years in experiments of that nature. The attempt was laudable, but the business terminated in disappointment to himself and the whole neighbourhood. This gentleman built a handsome house that gives dignity to the estate, and ornaments the village. It is called Wick-Hill, and stands at a small distance from the turnpike-road from Stow to Burford, commanding a most agreeable prospect of the valley, and particularly of the pleasant village of Bourton on the Water.

The soil of this parish is very fertile, and the lands pretty equally divided between arable and pasture, but the village seems to have nothing more to distinguish it, beside the particulars already mentioned.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following record was overlooked by sir Robert Atkyns:

' Rotbert de Olgi holds Risendvne in Salemanes-
'beric hundred. There are ten hides taxed.
' Siuuard held four plow-tillages in demean, and ' twelve villeins, and two bordars, with five plow-
' tillages. There are eight serui, and two mills
' of 20*s.* It was worth 10*l.* now 8*l.* D. B. p. 76.

Robert de Briwes was seized of the manors of Little Risington and Risington Wyke 53 H. 3. and died 4 E. 1. at which time he was likewise seized of the church of Wike Risindon. The sheriff returned that the abbat of Evesham and William Lucy were lords of Wyke in Salmonef-burye hundred 9 E. 1. Thomas Spencer and Walter de Burghton were seized of it, probably in trust.

trust, 5 E. 3. for it was afterwards vested in the Lucies, and sir Thomas Luci died seized of Risindon Wike 3 H. 5. as did William Luci, esq; 6 E. 4.

The manor passed some time afterwards to the Stratfords. John Stratford died seized of Risindon Wike 7 E. 6. and livery was granted the same year to Henry Stratford, his cousin and heir. George Stratford was lord of this manor in the year 1608, in whose family it continued for more than a century afterwards; Mr. Coxe, by purchase after the death of Mr. Dickinson, is the present lord of the manor, and proprietor of Wick-Hill.

John Rouse and others were seized of lands in Wike Risindon 49 E. 3.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 150*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and Mr. Woodroffe is the present incumbent.

Robert le Bruse, or de Briwes, was seized of this church 4 E. 1. as was Edward Burnel 9 E. 2. at which time the inquisition found that the advowson was worth 202*s.* Sir Hugh Burnel was seized of the same advowson 8 H. 5. and the bishop of Bath and Wells, lord Hungerford, and Thomas duke of Norfolk have likewise presented.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter, and has a tower at the west end, which was built by — Wakefield, who lies buried in the chancel.

ROCKHAMPTON

LIES in the vale, in the hundred of Langley and Swineshead, about two miles north from Thornbury, five south from Berkeley, and twenty-two southward, inclining to the west, from the city of Gloucester.

The soil is rich, and mostly in pasture, but the parts next the river Severn, which bounds the parish on the west, are subject to inundations, which sometimes do considerable damage. A small stream rises here, and empties itself into the Severn, at Shepardine.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Osbern Gifard holds Rochemtune, in Langeleie hundred, of the king. There are three hides taxed. Dunne held it in the time of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and six villeins, and seven bordars, with three plow-tillages. There are five servi, and twenty acres of meadow, and a salt-pit at Wich [paying] four seams of salt, a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. It is worth 6*l.* Domesday-book, p. 76.

The above Osbern Gifard, or Giffard, was a noble Norman, who attended king William the First in his invasion of England, and for his services, was rewarded with the manors of Rochemtune, Stocche, Brimesfelde, and Aldeberie, in this county.

John Giffard of Brimpsfield purchased a charter of free warren in the manors of Badgworth, Stonehouse, Rockhampton, Stoke-Giffard, and Tetbury, in this county, as already related under Brimpsfield, 9 E. 1. and his claim to court leet and waifs in Rockhampton was allowed, in a Quo warranto brought against him in the 15th year of that reign. He was succeeded by his son John Giffard, the last of that name, (commonly called John the Rich) who taking part with the barons against the Spencers, his castle of Brimpsfield was demolished, his lands seized, and he himself being made prisoner at the battle of Burroughbridge, was attainted and executed at Gloucester as a traitor. The manor was thereupon granted to Hugh le Despencer the younger, 17 E. 2. But after the deposition and murder of king Edward the Second, this manor and Brimpsfield were granted to John Maltravers, for his service in that bloody affair, and to him John de Callew, heir to the Giffards by a daughter, released all his right. This manor was taken from John Maltravers, on account of his being convicted of divers misdemeanors, and the inheritance of it was granted to Maurice, second son of Maurice lord Berkeley, 11 E. 3. but John Maltravers having found means to make his peace with the king, was restored to this estate, of which he died seized, together with the advowson of the church, 38 E. 3.

The manor nevertheless reverted to the Berkeleys, in consequence of the above grant to Maurice Berkeley, and continued in his family till sir William Berkeley fled beyond sea, after the battle of Bosworth-field, and was attainted 1 H. 7. for his attachment to king Richard the Third; whereupon the manors of Rockhampton and Shepardine, with many others, were granted to Jasper duke of Bedford, and his heirs male, the same year.

But

But fir William Berkeley being afterwards received into the king's favour, obtained a reverfionary grant of this, and many of his other estates, after the duke of Bedford's entail, 4 H. 7. and upon the death of that nobleman, without issue, 11 H. 7. came again into possession of them, and died in the 16th year of the same reign. Richard Berkeley of Stoke-Giffard, son of fir William, died seized of Rockhampton 5 H. 8. leaving John, his eldest son and heir, three years old, who likewise held this manor at the time of his death, in the 37th year of that reign. Richard Berkeley, son and heir of fir John, had livery of the manors of Stoke-Giffard and Rockhampton 6 E. 6. and died 2 Jac. 1.

This manor came afterwards to the Willoughbys. Henry Willoughby had livery of it 4 Eliz. Edward Hill of Alveston was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century, and Mr. Pinfold and Mr. Hoskyns are the present lords of the manor.

William Warine held lands in Rockhampton 38 E. 3. William Warren of St. Briavel's, a descendant from him, held lands in Rockhampton, of which he died seized 14 Eliz. and Warren Goughe, his grandson, had livery thereof in the 21st year of the same reign, and together with Dorothy his wife, levied a fine of lands in Rockhampton and Shepardine, in Michaelmas term 12 C. 1.

William Goughe of Woollaston died seized of lands in Rockhampton 5 E. 6. and was succeeded by his grandson George Goughe, son of William, who was then sixteen years old, and had livery of his lands 21 Eliz. as appears by the Ouster le Mayne sued out in that year. It may not be improper to take notice that the family name is Goughe, or Gough, not Goffe, as fir Robert Atkins has it, which is pronounced Gove, and signifies a blacksmith in the British language. A gentleman of this family being so unfortunate as to have his name written Goffe, agreeable to the English orthography, had a good estate given away from him, through the inadvertency of the writer.

John Wither was seized of lands in this parish, which he left to Margaret his daughter and heirs, married to Thomas Seger, and died 36 Eliz. Two tenements in Rockhampton belonged to the abbey of Hayles, and were granted to Theophilus Adams and Robert Adams 25 Eliz.

H A M L E T S. 1. Rockhampton, of which already.

2. Newton. Philip Jones died seized of two messuages, and divers lands in Newton in Rockington, alias Rockhampton, Mar. 23, 41 Eliz. and left John Jones, his son and heir, eighteen years old. Esch.

3. Shepardine, lying three miles westward from the church, on the bank of the Severn, and consisting principally of marsh-land. Here was once a chapel, in which Thomas lord Berkeley founded a chantry 25 E. 3. It has long been converted to profane uses, but still retains the name of Shepardine chapel. And at this place there was formerly a passage over the Severn, but it is now wholly disused.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Dursley, worth about 100*l.* a year. Mr. Jenner is patron, and the reverend Henry Jenner, M.A. is the present incumbent.

Eighteen acres in several grounds, and eight acres and a half of meadow, belong to the glebe, as satisfaction for all tithes in the meadow. Seventy acres of land in the common field are tithe free.

The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is small, and has a tower at the west end, in which are three bells.

At the beginning of this century, there were 26 houses, and about 120 inhabitants in the parish, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 4. Atkins. But it appears from the register, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 48 baptisms, and 29 burials; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, there are entered 38 baptisms, and 35 burials. The number of houses is 22, of inhabitants about 122.

R O D B O R O U G H.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Longtree, about three miles westward from Minchin-Hampton, one southward from Stroud, and ten south-eastward from Gloucester. The lands are pretty equally divided into pasture and arable, and a small brook, rising at Avening and Horfley, runs through it, and falls into the Froome at Dudbridge, a little below Stroud.

It stretches along the north and west sides of a lofty hill, at the top of which the Cotswold-country commences, whence the great road leads through Hampton, and so down this hill to both the passages over the Severn next below Gloucester; on which account Hampton is sometimes called called Hampton-Road; and Rodborough, which was once a part of that parish, and is still in some measure dependent on it, derives the former part of its name from the same Road, but the latter part was taken from the Berg, or Camp, by which the road is carried.

The beautiful villa or seat of sir Onesiphorus Paul, baronet, called Hill-house, erected a few years ago by his late father, is situated on an eminence in this parish, with a pleasant prospect of the river which runs from Nailsworth, of the village of Woodchester, and of the populous country towards Stroud and Painswick. This gentleman's father, the late sir Onesiphorus Paul, was appointed high sheriff of Gloucestershire, and knighted, in the year 1760, and on the 3d of September, 1762, was created a baronet of Great Britain.

Near the summit of Rodborough-hill, facing the west, stands the Fort, a pleasure-house, built scarce twenty years ago, after the manner of a castle, by George Hawker, esq; the present proprietor. From this place there is a most agreeable prospect of the river Severn, and part of the vale through which it passes. There is a large tract of rich country in the fore ground of the landscape, interspersed with good houses, gardens, and highly cultivated plantations and inclosures; and these are improved with the beautiful colouring of clothes on the tenters, accompanied with a variety of other objects peculiar to a clothing country. Here the fancy glows, and agreeable ideas rise of the benefits and extensiveness of trade and manufactures, which flourish most in free countries; and of the affluence and riches which are at once incitements to, and the rewards of integrity and industry.

Mr. James Winchcombe, an eminent clothier, has built a good house at a place called Bownbam's, situate on the brow of the hill northward, where he enjoys a fine healthy air, and a pleasant prospect of a well inhabited valley, extending several miles along the Stroud river from the Golden Valley in Chalford, and gradually opening as it approaches the vale below Stroud.

I have not heard of any very curious natural productions at present existing in this parish; but Richard Clutterbuck, born here in the year 1638, was a person of extraordinary endowments. Mr. Timothy Nourse saw him in the year 1698, and relates the following particulars, which I have in his own hand writing. At three years old, this person enjoy'd only such a portion of sight as enabled him to discern a difference between white and black, and at twelve he was totally dark, and so continued to his death; notwithstanding which he walked up and down all the uneven ground in the neighbourhood, (and no ground can be more uneven) without a guide. He could tell when an hour-glass was run out by his hearing, which was so acute as to discover the lowest whisper in an adjacent room. He was a curious mechanic, and made oatmeal-mills, and pepper-mills, and could make a wheel for a cloth-mill with great advantage. He took a watch in pieces and mended it, and made a handsome chain for his own watch. He made violins, bass-violos, and citterns, and a set of virginals with double jacks, and other improvements which were of his own invention; and play'd on each of those instruments. He taught music according to a scale of his own forming, and cut his notes upon pieces of wood. He ran a race of two hundred yards length, after being turned three times round, in many difficult circumstances, and could not be deceived. These are some of the particulars of this extraordinary man, whom Dr. Plott takes notice of amongst his curiosities, in his Natural History of Staffordshire.

Sir Leonard Holiday, lord mayor of London in the year 1605, was a native of this place.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Rodborough is not to be found in Domesday, but is included in the account of Hampton. It belonged antiently to a family who took their name from it, of whom Thomas de Rodburg was lord of the manor of Lye, as well as Rodborough, and high sheriff of Gloucestershire 1 & 4 E. 3. William de Rodborough, son and heir of Thomas, succeeded him in his estates, and dying without issue 10 R. 2. Agnes his sister, married to John Browning, mesne lord of Notgrove, was his heir, and had livery of them the same year. Richard Browning, son and heir of John and Agnes, dying also without issue 21 H. 4. the manor of Rodborough descended to Cicely his sister, married to sir Guy de Whittington of Pauntley, who died seized of the manors of Notgrove, Lye, and Rodborough, in right of his wife, 20 H. 6. Thomas Whittington, the fifth in lineal descent from sir Guy, died seized of this manor 38 H. 8. leaving six daughters coheiresses, whereby it passed out of the name of Whittington.

Philip Sheppard, of Hampton, esq; son of Samuel Sheppard, died seized of it in the year 1713, and Edward Sheppard, of Hampton, esq; a direct descendant from him, is the present lord of this manor. See his arms, &c. under Avening.

Of the other estates, the records shew, that Roger Gulden levied a fine of lands in Rodborough and Minchin Hampton to John de Pearle and others 14 R. 2. John Pentour and Agnes his wife levied a fine of lands in Rodborough and Hampton to their own use 22 R. 2. John Frye, son and heir of John Frye, levied a fine in like manner of lands in Minchin Hampton and Rodborough to John Moody, esq; 4 E. 4. and he also levied another fine of lands in Rodborough and Rooksmore to William Elland 7 H. 7. Lands in Rodborough belonged to the nunnery of Sion in Middlesex, and were granted to Andrew lord Windsor 34 H. 8. Thomas Rogers of Wotton-Basset was seized of lands in Rodborough by descent from his mother 15 Eliz. and he had a posthumous son, Thomas.

There are places of the following names in this parish, beside those already mentioned, viz. Dudbridge, Walbridge, Froomill, Spilman's-Court, Rooksmore, and Lightpill.

Of the Church, &c.

The church lies in the deanery of Stonehouse, and is a chapel of ease to Minchin Hampton, to which it is annexed. The rector of Hampton, by a decree in chancery in the reign of king James the First, is obliged to provide a curate to officiate in this chapel.

Here is a lecture every Sunday morning, endowed with lands, which at present yield 56*l.* a year, and are specified under the account of Benefactions. Brazen Nose college, Oxford, has the appointment of the lecturer, who is generally one of the fellows of that college. Of late years, the rector of Hampton, by agreement, has provided a curate to serve the church, and preach the lecture.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen. It has an aisle on the south side, and a pinnacled tower at the west end. The parish acknowledges Hampton for the mother church, by the payment of 6*s.* 8*d.* a year towards the repairs of it.

At the east end of the church is a monument for Doctor Stanfield, the greatly respected lecturer of this parish, and rector of Woodchester, who left behind him a great reputation, and whose memory is still revered in these parts. Under his influence and direction, the clothiers of this parish and neighbouring bottoms, by their contributions in cloth and money, intirely clothed the regiment raised by sir John Guise, at the revolution in 1688. On the monument is the following inscription :

Hic subtus jacet

Jacobus Stanfield A. M. hujusce Eccl^{ie} Prælector, Vicinæq; Woodchestriæ Pastor fidelis, Theologus nulli Secundus, Catechistes sui temporis facile Princeps, Et Genio et Literis Ornatissimus: Quilicet ad annum Ætatis nonagesimum pene pervixisset, Morte tamen nimis immatura præreptus, Utpote qui sui Memoriam laboribus extendunt His nulla Mors non repentina. Obijt Dec. 25^o.

Under this place lies James Stanfield A. M. A faithful Preacher of God's Word in this and the neighbouring Church of Woodchester. A Man of rare Wit and uncommon Learning. A profound Divine. An incomparable Catechist, & a most excellent Physician: Who, tho' he lived to a great Age, may very justly be said to have died too soon; since his death must always be untimely whose pious Labours make his Life a Blessing and his Memory Great. Died Dec. 25, 1722.—No arms.

Near the above, on a separate table,

The Reverend Mr. James Stanfield had Issue one Son and three Daughters. James his Son died at Burnco in the East Indies in his 3^d Voyage. Elizabeth his Daughter died October 29, 1724. Mary his daughter died Nov. 14, 1707. Anne his Daughter died Nov. 12, 1725. These three last named lye buried near this Place.

On a small, but neat marble monument in the chancel,

Beneath this Monument lie the Remains of Samuel Hawker, Esquire, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, who died 15th Sept^r. 1760, aged 67. Also of Mary his Wife, who died 14th Jan^r 1738, aged 34. — Arms, Sable, a fess Or between three hawks argent.

On a neat monument against the south wall,

This Monument is erected in Memory of Thomas Baylis of Newmills in the Parish of Stroud, Clothier, who departed this Life the 31st of March 1754, Aged 67.

Also of Jane his first Wife, Daughter of Sidham (+) Pain of this Parish, who was buried the 16th of June 1721, Aged 38.

Also of Elizabeth his last Wife, Daughter of Daniel Window of Brimscombe Clothier, who departed this Life the 30th of Novem^r 1742, Aged 46.

And also of five of his Children who were all interred in this Place.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were, according to him, 160 houses, and about 750 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 26, burials 34. But the two last particulars are very injudiciously given, and differ widely from the average numbers of baptisms and burials. In the year 1756, the burials were 27, and the whole number of souls 1481.

R O D M A R T O N .

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Longtree, something more than five miles west from Cirencester, and above four miles eastward inclining to the north from Tetbury, fifteen miles south from Gloucester, and about eight north from Malmesbury in Wiltshire. It is situate in a fine, healthy, open country, on the north-west side of the Roman way leading from Cirencester to Bath, which separates it from part of Wiltshire.

The parish consists mostly of arable land, is totally without wood land, and seems almost peculiarly unfortunate in having no continual brook or stream of water running through it. It is supposed to have derived its name from its lying on the Roman way, and being on one side a boundary of the county; for mer, contracted from merc, signifies a boundary; so that Rod-mar-ton, (or Red-mer-tone, which is the antient manner of writing the name) signifies a boundary town upon the road.

It is a place of considerable antiquity, as appears by a tessellated pavement discovered by some people at plow, in the year 1636; and Mr. Yate, who was a learned and judicious person, and at that time rector of the church, has entered it on record in the parish register, from which the following passage is literally taken: Hoc anno [1636] in agris in loco Hocberry vocato, dum sulcos aratro ducunt, discooperta sunt tessellat. pavimenta, tegule quibus ferrei clavi infixi subrutæ, nummi quoque ænei Antonini et Valentiniani Imp. Incolæ mihi dixerunt, se æneos et argenteos nummos sepius ibidem reperisse, nescientes quid rei essent: A patribus autem audivisse, Rodmarton ab illo loco translata[m] olim ubi nunc est positam esse. Aparent autem stationem aliquam Romanorum ibidem aliquando fuisse. Which may be thus translated: This year [1636] in a field called Hocberry, as the people were at plow, the plow-share turning up some tiles, discovered a tessellated pavement, and they found also some brass coins of the emperors Antoninus and Valentinian. The inhabitants told me that they had oftentimes found brass and silver coins, but did not know what they were, and that they had heard their ancestors say, that Rodmarton was formerly removed from that place to where it now stands. However, it appears that there was once a Roman station there.

It seems this pavement was covered with slates, and perhaps other rubbish, with a view to its preservation; for since coverings of the same kind have been found upon several other tessellated pavements, it seems not to be a matter of mere chance or accident, but a cautionary method taken by the Romans themselves when they left this island, upon a prospect of their return hither again.

About the year 366, the Picts and Scots had broke in upon the Roman territories, and committed innumerable outrages, insomuch that Theodosius was sent over hither to prevent a general insurrection and revolt, as it was feared that the Britons were not a little disposed to join the enemy. And this place lying upon the Roman way, at a convenient distance from Corinium, now Cirencester, which was a place of strength, and of great consequence to the Romans, they placed a garrison here, to give early notice of the approach of any formidable body of the enemy, and to curb the insolence of such small parties of them as should straggle in their way. This is consistent with their practice in other places of less note, where tessellated pavements have been found, found, and which are supposed to have belonged to the house of some principal officer of the garrison.

The Roman generals, amongst their other baggage, used to carry about with them a quantity of lapilli, or tessellæ, made of bricks or tiles, not much bigger than dice, sufficient to pave the place where they set the Prætorium, or general's tent, or at least some part of it, which is particularly related of Julius Cæsar, by Suetonius, in his Life of that general. And we learn from Salmasius, in his Commentary on Suetonius, and from Pliny, in his Natural History, that such of these as were made of small square marbles, of various natural colours, were called Lithostrata; but if of small bricks, artificially tinged with colours, they were distinguished by different names, as Pavimenta Tessellata, or Opus Musivum. But it is said that they had all one common name, Asarota, from their not being to be swept, but wiped with a sponge.

What figures were represented on the pavement I have been speaking of is uncertain, as it is intirely destroy'd, and the register gives no further particulars.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

In Domesday-book are the following particulars:
 ' Hugo Maminot holds Redmertone in Lange-
 ' trew hundred of Gislebert bishop of Lisieux, [in ' Normandy,] and he holds it of the king. There ' are two hides. In demean are two plow-tillages,
 ' and one villein, and two bordars, and a priest,
 ' with one plow-tillage. There are two servi. It ' was worth 4*l.* and is now worth 3*l.* Leuvinus
 ' held it of king Edward.' Domesday-book, p. 73.

But in the same record it is written, ' Osward
 ' holds of the king Redmertone in Langetreu
 ' hundred. There are three yard-lands taxed.
 ' He held the same in the reign of king Edward.
 ' There is one plow-tillage. It was worth 20*sol.*
 ' now 10*sol.*' Ibid. p. 79.

This Osward was one of the king's thanes, whose estate was the smaller of the two at that time in Redmertone, but it is not possible to shew the descent of them distinctly from each other. All that can be done, is to set down the few records relating to this division of the parish, in the order of time wherein they were made.

This manor was held of the honour of Gloucester, by one knight's fee, 47 H. 3. The sheriff returned that John Maltravers, the abbat of Kingswood, John Bardone, Stephen de Chiltham, and Peter de la Mare were lords of the vill of Rodmerton 9 E. 1. Peter de Braose, or Breuse, purchased a charter of free warren in Rodmerton 29 E. 1. and dying 5 E. 2. left Thomas, his son and heir, ten years old. Thomas de Berton died seized of Rodmerton 49 E. 3. as did John Langley, of Rodmerton and Torleton 10 H. 4. William Fitz-Warren was seized of the manor and advowson of Rodmerton, and of lands in Torleton, and levied a fine of the same to sir Ralph Boteler and John Edwards, and to the heirs of John, 19 H. 6.

Robert Cox was lord of this manor in the year 1608; sir Walter Long was proprietor of it in the year 1710; but Charles Coxe, of Kemble in the county of Wilts, esq; is the present lord of it. His arms are, Sable, a chevron between three harts attires, each fixt to its proper scalp, argent.

Lands in Rodmerton did belong to the abbey of Cirencester, and were granted to John Pope, 37 H. 8.

HAMLETS. 1. Culkerton. There were three small estates in this hamlet at the time of the general survey. Of one it is said, ' The same ' William [de Owe] holds Culcortone, and Her' bert holds it of him. Scireuold held it in the ' reign of king Edward. There are three yard-
 ' lands and five acres. In demean is one plow' tillage, and three servi. It is worth and was ' worth 35*sol.* Radulphus de Limesi held this ' land; but it was never Alestan's.' D. B. p. 73.

The particulars of another are recorded as fol' low: ' The same Durand [de Glowec'] holds
 ' Culcortone, and Roger Ivri holds it of him.
 ' There are two hides, and two yard-lands and an ' half. Grim held it. There are two plow-tillages
 ' in demean, and six villeins, with three plow-
 ' tillages. It is worth and was worth 4*lib.*'
Domesday-book, p. 76.

The third estate is thus described: ' The same
 ' Roger [de Lueri] holds Culcortone. Aluric held
 ' it, and Anschitil held it of him. There is one
 ' hide and a half. In demean are two plow-
 ' tillages, and four servi. It was worth 20*sol.*
 ' but it is now worth 30*sol.*' Dom. Book, p. 75.

This manor belonged to the knights templers, who purchased a charter for court leet, waifs, and felons goods in the reign of king Henry the Third, and their claim to these privileges was allowed 15 E. 1. Culkerton was held of William de Clinton earl of Huntingdon 28 E. 3. It afterwards came to the Monoxes. Richard Monox died seized thereof 5 Mariae. His son Thomas Monox, had livery granted to him the same year. Sir William Webb was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Charles Coxe of Lypiatt, was lord of it about 1710, and his grandson, Charles Coxe, of Kemble, esq; is the present proprietor.

Adam de Smethelie granted one messuage, and one yard-land in Culkerton, to the abbey of Kingswood, 5 E. 2.

Milo, constable of Gloucester, gave the tithes of Culkerton to the church of Lanthony, in the year 1137.

2. Hafleden. The greater part of this hamlet is in Rodmerton, the rest in Cherington. It contains only one farm-house. Here are two large tumuli, or barrows, that have never, that I know of, been opened. In Domesday-book it is thus recorded: ' The same Roger [de Lueri] holds ' Hafedene in Langetrewes hundred. There are ' three hides and three yard-lands taxed. Elnoc
 ' held

held it in the reign of king Edward. There are four plow-tillages in demean, and seven half villeins, and one bordar, with three plow-tillages, and seventeen servi, and half a mill of 30*d.* and fifteen acres of meadow. One Roger held this manor of the bishop of Baieux for 16*l.* Afterwards the bishop gave it to the same Roger with the farm.' Domesday-book, p. 75.

Reginald de St. Waleric, whose family name was taken from the port of St. Valerick in Normandy, and whose ancestors came over with the conqueror, was lord of Hasleden about the year 1140. Having been disseized of this manor for rebellion against king Stephen, he recovered it again, and built a monastery for Benedictine monks at this place; but the monks removed hence, for want of water, to Tetbury, where they were not likely to be much better supply'd. Thence afterwards they moved, for want of wood, to Kingswood, where they continued 'till that abbey was dissolved. The abbey of Kingswood held Hasleden grange and Culkerton 12 H. 4.

The abbey barn at Hasleden is still remaining, within the east porch of which is this inscription: ANNO DNI: M^oCC^oXC^o: HENRICI: ABA^τIS: XIX^o: FUI^τ: IS^τUM: CON^τRUC^τ. i.e. This was built in the year of our Lord 1290, and in the 19th year of Henry the abbat.

The abbat of Kingswood paid a yearly pension of two pounds for lands at Culkerton and Hasledene, to the prior of Lanthony, several receipts for which are mentioned in the prior's registers.

It is remarkable that the inhabitants of this hamlet have no seat-place in either of the churches of Rodmarton or Cherington, wherein it lies; but it is said they have a seat at Kingswood.

This large farm or grange is now the property of lord Ducie.

3. Torleton. Part of this hamlet lies in the parish of Cotes. At the time of the general survey, this hamlet lay in the hundred of Cirencester. In Domesday-book it is expressed after this manner: 'William de Ow holds one hide in Tornentone, in Cirecestre hundred, and Herbert holds it of him. Leuric held it in the reign of king Edward, and he might go where he pleased. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four servi. It was worth 40*sol.* It is worth 20*sol.*' Domesday-book, p. 73.

John Langley was seized of one messuage and one plow-tillage in Torleton 18 E. 2. This is now a corps to a prebend of the church of Salisbury. John Ebdon, D.D. a prebendary in that church, was owner of this manor in the year 1608. John Cox, esq; is the present lessee, and it has been in that name for many generations. Here is a chapel, but divine service is discontinued.

Tithes in Torleton, with the chapel, lately belonging to the Benedictine nunnery at Rumsley in Hampshire, founded by king Edgar in the year 107, were granted to Giles Pool 34 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouse. It is a rectory worth 200*l.* a year. Samuel Lysons, A.M. is the present patron and incumbent. It formerly belonged to the abbey of Osney in Oxfordshire. Mr. Yate, a rector of this parish, in the year 1641, recovered the tithes of Torleton, having proved it to have been a member of Rodmarton in the 14th year of king Edward the Third.

A yard-land in each field belongs to the glebe.

The church hath two ailes, and a spire in the middle. In the north aile were formerly the arms of the family of the Wyes, and the name of Allen in a window of the south aile; whence it seems probable that some persons of these families either built, or were large contributors towards the building of the respective ailes.

Note, this monument was put up many years before Mr. Yate's death, as I find by a memorandum which he made himself in the register. i.e. Mense Decembri hujus anni mortalitatis memor, ipse mihi posuit tale monumentum in Cancelllo. He died Jan. 13, 1668.

Within the rails in the chancel, on a blue stone,

In the south aile, against the wall, is a handsome marble monument, with this inscription:

Near this place lie the Remains of the Reverend John Cox M. A. Rector of North Cerney in this county, and of this parish. He was what his holy Profession called upon him to persuade others to be. The duties he constantly taught he as constantly transcribed into his own practice, and was therefore an eminent example of all those virtues that ought to be endearing to mankind (which was the chief view) that he knew well pleasing to his God. Reader, if thou canst be prevailed upon to learn from him how to live, thou wilt secure to thyself the inestimable blessing of dying the death of the Righteous. He died on the 14th of February, in the year of our Lord 1730, and the 75th of his age. — Arms, at top, Sable, a chevron between three bucks attires with the scalps argent.

In the north aile are several flat stones over the family of the Coxes. On one of them, Here lyeth the body of Mary the daughter of John Coxe, Gent. dec^d. and wife of George White, Gent. who departed this life the 12th Day of November, 1693.

Heavens grant it to the world no ill presage,
Here lyes intomb'd the Phoenix of her age;

According to fir Robert Atkyns, when his account of this parish was publish'd, there were 37 houses, and about 180 inhabitants, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. But the following is a true state of the register. In a series of ten years, from 1700 to 1709 inclusive, there were 38 baptisms, and 31 burials. In a like series of ten years, from 1760 to 1769, both inclusive, the births were 100, and the burials 43. The exact number of houses is 56, of inhabitants 241; so that upon an average of ten years, the proportion of annual burials to the number of surviving inhabitants, is nearly as 1 to 56; an incontestible proof of the healthy situation of this place, where the inhabitants are increasing very fast.

R U D F O R D

IS a small parish, lying one part in the hundred of Botloe, the other in the united hundreds of Dudstun and King's Barton, five miles distant south-eastward from Newent, nine north-east from Mitchel Dean, and four north-westward from Gloucester.

The parish is bounded on the north by the river Leden, and a small brook which rises at Tainton runs through it, in its course to that river. Rudford may be so called from the Road at the Ford, or from the Redness of the soil there; for red was called Rud by our Saxon ancestors. But if neither of these conjectures should be satisfactory to the reader, it does not occur to me upon what other occasion the name was given it.

The soil is deep and good, but it is in a bad state respecting cultivation. The greater part is pasture, with orcharding and arable. The manor and most of the lands are held by lease under the church of Gloucester, whence it happens, that, except the manor house, there is scarcely a habitable dwelling in the village. I mean not to reflect on that reverend body, for it is in general the case with the estates held under all fluctuating proprietaries, whose interest in such estates being only for a short duration, they will not be at the expence of improvements from which they cannot expect to reap suitable advantages. This is an evil which can only be lamented, as perhaps it does not admit of a remedy.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Madoch holds Rudford, in Botelau hundred, of the king. He held it in the time of king Edward. There are two hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and three villeins, and four bordars, with three plow-tillages; and a mill paying as much corn [annonam] as can be earned by it. It is worth and was worth 40*s.* D. B. p. 80.

King William the Second gave Rodesford to the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, when Serlo was abbat. Winebald de Balun, a great baron, with the consent of Roger his son, gave the manor of Rudford to the same church, in the year 1126. The abbat of Gloucester was seized of the manors of Rudford, Leden, and Mude Leden, and his right to free warren was allowed in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1.

The abbey continued possessed of the manor 'till the dissolution, when it was granted to the dean and chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8. Mr. Edward Holder is the present lessee of the manor under the dean and chapter. His arms are, Sable, a chevron between three anchors argent.

HAMLET. High Leden is a hamlet in this parish, and in the hundred of Dudstun and King's Barton. Richard de Wigmore gave his lands in Hyneledene, with the groves, pastures, meadows, and all appurtenances, which had belonged to Jeoffry de le Dene, to the abbey of Gloucester, in the year 1239. And king Edward the Third, by his charter, dated 23 Dec. in the 28th year of his reign, granted to the abbey of Gloucester, free warren in all their demean lands in Hyneledene.

The tithes of High Leden were granted to the dean and chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the Forest deanery, worth 80*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Gloucester are patrons, and Mr. George Bishop is the present incumbent.

The church is a small building, dedicated to St. Mary, with a tower at the west end.

IS a small parish, in the hundred of St. Briavel's, in the Forest division, two miles south-westward from Mitchel Dean, five southward from Rofs in Herefordshire, and about fourteen westward from Gloucester.

It is bounded on the east by Great and Little Dean, on the north by Herefordshire, on the south by the Forest, and on the west by the river Wye, which separates it from Welch Bicknor, a detached parish in Monmouthshire.

It is called Ruerdean, (supposed to be a corruption of Riverdean) because it is situated upon the river Wye, and to distinguish it from the neighbouring places of Mitchel Dean and Little Dean. All these places abound with pit-coal and iron ore, of which more is delivered under the general account of the Forest.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday-book takes no notice of this manor, as distinct from the other Deans, whence I conclude that they became separate manors since that record was compiled.

William de Alba Mara died seized of an estate called Ruerdean 40 H. 3. Thomas Deverty held the same, and St. Briavel's castle, 21 E. 1.

The sheriff returned that Alexander de Byknore and William Hatheway were lords of the vill of Rewardyne 9 E. 1. Alexander de Byknore held one messuage in Ruerdean and Ludbrook, with the bailiwicks of Ruerdean and St. Briavel's castle in the forest of Dean, 34 E. 1.

A manor in Ruerdean belonged to the abbey of Flaxley, at the dissolution, and was granted to sir Anthony Kingston 36 H. 8. It was soon after conveyed to the Baynams. Thomas Baynham and Joseph Baynham were lords of this manor in the year 1608, from whose family it passed to the Vaughans. John Vaughan, esq; was lord of the manor about the beginning of this century, and the sisters and coheiresses of Richard Clark, of the Hill, in Herefordshire, esq; are the present proprietors of the manor.

Hatheways was a distinct manor, antiently, and for many generations, enjoyed by a considerable family of the same name. Thus the sheriff returned that William Hatheway was lord of Rewardyne, as before recited, 9 E. 1. The escheator's inquisition found that William Hatheway died 10 E. 2. seized of several lands and tenements in Rewardyne, which he held of Alexander de Byknore, paying 4 s. 9 d. yearly, and left William Hatheway his son and heir. Thomas Hatheway died seized thereof 5 R. 2. and William Walleyne was seized of a tenement called Hatheways, 11 E. 4. This estate came afterwards to the Baynams, and the distinction of the manors was by that means lost by unity of possession.

Walter de Clare was seized of one messuage and one plow-tillage in Ruerdean, 18 E. 2. Alexander Carent was seized of a mill, and of a yearly rent in Ruerdean, 50 E. 3. and John Carent, his son, was seized of the same mill, and of a yearly rent of 26 s. 8 d. in Ruerdean 6 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Rofs, worth 15 l. a year, to which the vicar of Walford in Herefordshire presents. Mr. Jones is curate. The small tithes belong to the minister, and the great tithes to the præcentor of Hereford.

The church, dedicated to St. John Baptist, is large, and has a handsome spire at the west end.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 100 houses in the parish, and about 500 inhabitants, 12 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 13. The present number of inhabitants is about 758.

S A I N T B U R Y.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of the hundred of Kiftgate, about two miles westward from Campden, five south-east from Evesham in Worcestershire, and about twenty-six north-eastward from Gloucester.

The present manner of writing the name is a deviation from the antient and true orthography, and proceeded originally from want of knowing the true signification of it. In Domesday it is written Suineberie, (i. e. Suine's, or Swain's Camp;) and it was so called from the Berg, or Camp, not far above the church, where the intrenchments are still visible, which the inhabitants call Castle-Bank.

This camp, which has so fixed its name on the parish, seems to have been dependent on another very large one, higher up on the top of the hill, inclosing near sixty acres of ground, raised probably by the same people, and still remaining pretty perfect; but the latter lies in the adjoining parish parish of Willersey. Suine, or Swain, to whom these intrenchments are attributed, was undoubtedly one of those Danish locusts who for many years carried desolation wherever they went, and raised most exorbitant contributions all over England, and occasioned that grievous tax called Dane Geld, which was at length stately levied on the people, and continued for several ages before the nation could get rid of it.

The village of Saintbury is situated on the north-west side of the great hill country, facing the vale of Evesham, with a steep ascent from the houses to the church. It consists of a few farm houses and cottages, but affords nothing worth the traveller's attention.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Hascoit Musard holds Suineberie in Witelai hundred of the king. Chenuicelle held it. There are ten hides. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eighteen villeins, and three bordars, with nine plow-tillages, and ten among the servi and ancilla, and a mill of 6*d.* It was worth 12*l.* now 10*l.* Domesday-book, p. 78.

Of the above Hascoit Musard, many particulars are set down under Miserden. Richard Musard was son and heir of Hascoit, and Hascoit the second, was son and heir of Richard, and held fifteen knights fees 12 H. 2. He died 33 H. 2. and was succeeded by Ralph his son and heir, who had livery of this manor 2 R. 1. and paid 100*l.* for his relief. He married Isabel, the widow of John de Nevill, without the king's licence, and paid 100 marks for his transgression. He was a baron, and built the castle of Miserden, and was high sheriff of Gloucestershire from the 17 Joh. to 9 H. 3. and died in the 14th year of the last mentioned reign.

Walter de Abbytot was seized of this manor 1 Joh. but it is probable that it was only in trust, for the manor continued in the Musards for several generations after.

Robert Musard, son of Ralph, entered upon his lands without suing forth livery, wherefore his castle of Miserden, and all his estates, were seized into the king's hands, but were shortly after restored upon composition. He died without issue 24 H. 3. leaving Ralph Musard, his brother and heir, a minor, whose wardship was granted by the crown to Jeffery Despencer, in consideration of 500 marks. Ralph had livery of his lands 31 H. 3. and died in the 49th year of that reign, leaving Ralph his son and heir, who died seized of this manor and of Musarden 1 E. 1. John Musard, the next possessor, died 17 E. 1. Masculine Musard became seized of this manor 28 E. 1. and in the 31st year of that reign granted it to the abbey of Evesham; but he continued in possession 2 E. 2.

It appears by the records, that this estate was afterwards in lay hands, but they could only be tenants, or trustees for the abbey. Thus we find that Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and others, were seized of Seinbury in trust, 24 E. 3. and John Rouse, and others, held the same 49 E. 3.

The abbey of Evesham was seized of the manor of Seinbury, and of the impropriation of the church, in the reign of king Richard the Second, and continued in possession 'till the general dissolution of religious houses.

The manor, and two mills, lately belonging to the abbey of Evesham, were granted to Richard Bartlet 35 H. 8. whose son, Richard Bartlet, had livery 20 Eliz. He married Alice, daughter of — Ruding of Worcestershire, and left Henry, his eldest son and heir, who married the daughter of — Dutton, of Dutton in Cheshire, but died without issue. Sir Thomas Bartlet, brother of Henry, had livery of this manor 25 Eliz. He married Mary, daughter of sir John Dauntifer, and was succeeded by John Bartlet, who married Jane, daughter of Robert Kelway of Dorsetshire.

From the Bartlets the manor passed to the Brawnes. Sir Hugh Brawne was lord of it in the year 1608, and the three coheireffes of the family of Brawne were proprietors of it at the beginning of this century. Hugh Brawne, esq; was lord of this manor at the time of his death, in the year 1726. It has since been purchased by Mr. Joseph Roberts, who is the present proprietor.

An estate in this parish, sometimes also called a manor, consisting of lands and tithes, belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and was granted to the chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8. Other tithes in Saintbury, alias Senebrig, belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 170*l.* a year. The rev. Mr. Hudson Boyce, the present rector, has two turns in the presentation, and the lord of the manor has the third.

The manor having belonged to the abbey of Evesham, the demans thereof are free from tithes.

A piece of ground is assigned to the minister, in satisfaction for inclosures.

The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas, and has a chapel on the north, and a steeple on the south side, in which are six bells.

Salperton, or Cold Salperton,

Is a small parish, in the hundred of Bradley, twelve miles north from Cirencester, six southward from Winchcombe, four north-westward from Northleach, and sixteen eastward from Gloucester.

It lies very high and bleak on the Cotswold, for which reason it obtained the addition of Cold.
Notwithstanding this exposed situation, agriculture is carried on with a spirit and success that do honour to the occupiers, and shame the indolence of many of the vale country farmers, who, with every advantage of a richer soil, and milder air, trudge on in the old beaten track of their ancestors, almost without an attempt at improvement. It is disgusting to see some of the best land in the county lie in a miserable, unimproved state, while the Cotswold-hills, naturally bleak and barren, have, within a few years past, been rendered fruitful by judicious management, and the occupiers are become a thriving and opulent people.

The downs and common fields in this parish have been lately inclosed, greatly to the interest of the landholder, and no less to the advantage of the labouring people, because those lands, now chiefly converted to tillage, afford more constant and abundant employment for the labouring poor than in their former condition.

A small stream rises here, and runs down to Sherborne, in its course to the Windrush.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Hugo Lafne holds Salpretune, in Bradelege
'hundred. There are ten hides taxed. Uuluuard 'held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and
'ten villeins, and a priest, with seven plow-tillages,
'and eleven among the servi and ancillæ, and five
'acres of meadow. It was worth 9l. now 7l.
Domesday-book, p. 78.

Among the particulars of the estates of the church of Worcester, it is said, 'Of the land
'belonging to this manor [Clive] Ralph holds four
'hides in Sapleton of the church.' Ibid. p. 70.

The knights templers were seized of the manor, and had a grant of court leet, waifs, and felons goods from king Henry the Third, which they pleaded in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and those privileges were then allowed. The same knights continued seized of the manor 2 E. 3.
when it was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon.

The manor was afterwards granted to the Benedictine nunnery of Stodely in Oxfordshire, founded by Bernard de St. Waleric in the reign of king Henry the Second, and valued, at the dissolution, at 102l. 6s. 7d. After the dissolution, the manor was granted to Winchester college, to which it still belongs. Thomas Browne, esq; is the present lessee of the manor, and proprietor of all the freehold lands in the parish. He has a very good stone-built house near the church, where he resides.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Stow, worth 8l. a year from the impropiator. Mr.
Browne is patron and impropiator, and Mr.
Lawrence is the present incumbent. The living has been twice augmented with the queen's bounty.

Robert de Chandos, who came in with the Conqueror, gave the advowson of the church of Salperton to the monks of Lyra in Normandy. The impropriation was afterwards appropriated to the use of the nunnery of Stodely; and upon the dissolution of that house, it was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8. The fee of the impropriation was vested in Mr. Bee, about the beginning of this century, and was sold, by him, to Mr. Cosley of Bristol; of whom it was purchased by the earl of Westmoreland, and sold to Thomas Browne, esq; the present proprietor, who pays 4s. a year out of it to the crown.

The church is small, dedicated to All Saints, and has a handsome new built tower at the west end.

About seventy years ago, when sir Robert Atkyns collected the materials for his History, there were in this parish 15 houses, and about 60 inhabitants, whereof 4 were freeholders; yearly birth 2, burials 1. But since that period, the condition of this country has been greatly altered. The downs and commons, which were easily managed by two or three shepherds and herdsmen, have been inclosed, and converted to tillage; and new cottages have been erected, so that the present number of houses is 23, of inhabitants 155.

SANDHURST, or SANTHURST.

THIS parish lies in the Vale, in the united hundreds of Dudston and King's-barton, thirteen miles east from Newent, seven south from Tewkesbury, and three north from Gloucester. It is bounded on the north by Norton, on the east by Twigworth, on the south by Longford, and on the west by the river Severn.

The soil is sandy next the river, and being antiently overgrown with wood, gave occasion to the name of the parish, which is supposed to be compounded of Sand, and of the Saxon word Dejrrt, a wood. The rest of the parish is much inclined to clay, and consists chiefly of meadow and pasturage, with about a hundred acres of arable in common field.

Walsworth is a very handsome seat in this parish, belonging to Samuel Hayward, esq; who has a good estate here, and in several other parts of the county. The house is new, with proper offices, and the gardens are well laid out, and very pleasant. He has favoured the public with an elegant engraving of it, to decorate this work.

Not far from this house, there is a spring of medicinal or purging water, like the Cheltenham spaw, but it is sometimes dry in the summer. And there is also a salt-spring, upon the discovery of which, about twenty years since, a pit was opened to a considerable depth, with an intention of erecting a salt-work; but not proving so strong as was expected, that project was then dropt, and the mouth of the pit stopt up with bricks to prevent accidents.

Part of Wainlode's-hill lies in Sandhurst, the rest in Norton. It does not rise to any great height, but stretching along the south-east side of the Severn, affords an extensive prospect over this part of the vale country, which lies flat and low, and therefore, in wet seasons, is subject to inundations from the river.

Two brooks, which rise at Shurdington and Witcombe, after uniting their streams, fall into the Severn near Ablode's Court. The turnpike-road from Gloucester to Tewkesbury, and so to Worcester, passes through the parish.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Edmar, a thane, held three manors in Dudesstan hundred, Hersefel, Athelai, and Sanher. The same man could give or sell his land to whom he pleased. This estate claimed to be taxed but for two hides [pro ii hidis se defendebat], In demean are eight plow-tillages, and four villeins, and four bordars, and thirty servi, with five plow-tillages. There is meadow sufficient for the plowed land.'

' Earl Herald took away these five estates [Hersefel, Athelai, Sanher, Hersecome, and Brostrop] after the death of king Edward, and Robert de Lurei put them to farm for 46l. 13s. 4d. Domesday-book, p. 67.

This manor, soon after the Norman conquest, belonged to the family of de Willington, from whom the manor house obtained the name of Willington-Court. Ralph de Willington and Olimpias his wife gave six ridges of land behind Ablode Court in this parish to the abbey of Gloucester 12 H. 1. The sheriff returned that John de Willington and the abbat of St. Peter at Gloucester were lords of Sandhurst 9 E. 1. John de Willington had a charter of free warren in Sandhurst 4 E. 2. and died seized of this manor, and those of Ablington in Bibury, Poulton in Awre, Frampton Cotterel, and Yate, 12 E. 3. Sir Ralph de Willington, son of John, held the same manors, and Westonbirt, at the time of his death 22 E. 3. whereupon livery was granted the following year to Henry his son, who was living 26 E. 3. John de Willington, son of Henry, was seized of Poulton, Ablington, Yate, Frampton Cotterel, Sandhurst, and Morellade, adjoining to Sandhurst

WALLSWORTH-HALL.

To Samuel Hayward Esq. of WALLSWORTH
This Plate is Inscribed by his

HALL, in the County of Gloucester:
most obliged humble Servant J. Rudder.

2 R. 2. and his son, Ralph de Willington, was lord of the same manors, and of Culverden in this parish, at the time of his death 6 R. 2. Joan his wife survived him, and was endowed with the third part of the manor of Sandhurst. She was afterwards married to Thomas West, whom she likewise survived, and died seized of her third part, and of tenements in Moreflade, 6 H. 4. Ralph, son and heir of Ralph and Joan de Willington, died 19 R. 2. possessed of the other two thirds of the manor, and was succeeded by his brother John de Willington, who died without issue 20 R. 2. seized of the manors of Poulton, Ablington, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, Sandhurst, and Culverden and Moreflade in Sandhurst, all in the county of Gloucester, which thereupon came to Joan, his sister and heiress, who was married to John Wrath. John Wrath, son of John, and of Joan de Willington, died without issue 13 H. 4. and sir John Wadham was seized of this manor the same year; but he could be only in trust, for the last mentioned John Wrath left his two sisters coheiresses to his great estate; Elizabeth, married to sir William Poulton, and Isabel, the widow of William Beaumont.

Sir William Poulton and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the sixth part of this and other manors, to the use of themselves in tail, the remainder to Isabel the widow of William Beaumont. They dying without issue, Isabel became possessed of the whole family estate, which after the death of her son John Beaumont, without issue, descended to Isabel her daughter, who died unmarried 2 H. 6. seized of the manors of Ablington, Poulton, Yate, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurst, all which were the patrimony of her ancestors the Willingtons.

Sir Thomas Beaumont, kinsman and next heir to Isabel, succeeded her, and dying 29 H. 6. this manor descended to his son, sir William Beaumont, (in some records stiled William Beaumont, esq;) who died in the thirty second year of the same reign. Philip Beaumont, brother and heir of William, died 13 E. 4. seized of the manors of Poulton, Ablington, Yate, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurst, of all which Hugh Beaumont and Elizabeth his wife, John Basset and Elizabeth his wife, John Beaumont, clerk, John Chichester and Margaret his wife, and John Croker and Anne his wife, levied several fines 16, 18, & 20 H. 7. to Richard bishop of Durham, and other bishops and great persons, (among whom was Giles lord d'Aubeny) probably for the use of the king.

This and the before recited manors were granted to Giles lord d'Aubeny, who died seized of them 6 H. 8. and livery was granted to his son Henry lord d'Aubeny the same year. They afterwards reverted to the crown, and were granted to Edward duke of Somerset, upon whose attainder they came again to the crown. James Basset obtained a grant of the manors of Yate, Ablington, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurst, 4 Mariae, and the grant was confirmed to Arthur Basset 7 Eliz.

The manor of Sandhurst came afterwards to the Winston's. Philip Winston, of Willington Court, died in the year 1672, and lies buried in the church. John Viney, esq; was lord of the manor of Sandhurst-Willington at the beginning of this century, and John Viney, esq; a descendant of the above John, is the present proprietor.

Ablode's Court, written Abbelode in the time of king Edward the First, is another reputed manor, situate on the south side of the parish, and was so called, because it belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and lies at the place where a brook empties itself into the Severn; for to such a confluence the name of Lade, or Lode, was frequently given by our Saxon ancestors.

King Henry the First granted lands in Ablode, and the grove of Barton, called Paygrove, to the abbey of Gloucester, in exchange for the place where the tower of the cathedral now stands, which was then an orchard belonging to the monks. The same king, in the 9th year of his reign, further granted to the abbey six ridges of land behind Ablode's Court. Ralph de Willington and Olimpias his wife gave six other ridges of land behind Ablode's Court to the same abbey 12 H. 1.

The sheriff returned, that the abbat of St. Peter of Gloucester was lord of a moiety of Sandhurst 9 E. 1. and it is probable that the abbat's part was what is now called Ablode. The abbey of Gloucester was seized of the manor of Abbelode 17 E. 3. and had three carucates of land there, worth 14s. each; rents of assize worth two marks; profits of the stock 10s. composition for work and taxes 6s. total 4l. 4s. 8d. and the same house had free warren in all their demean lands there 28 E. 3.

The manor continued in the abbey 'till the general dissolution, after which it was granted, together with half a wood called Woolridge in Ablode, to the dean and chapter of Gloucester 33 H. 8.

By an ordinance of parliament, Apr. 3, 1648, the scite or farm of the manor of Ablode, which belonged to the dean and chapter of Gloucester, and the yearly rent thereof, being 22l. 7s. 4d. was settled upon the mayor and burgeses of that city, for the support of preaching ministers. But after the Restoration of king Charles the Second, this ordinance was annulled, and the dean and chapter were reinstated in the manor of Ablode, which is now in lease from them to George-Augustus Selwyn, esq; whose arms are given under Matson.

Bruerne, is another ancient manor in this parish, supposed to have been so called from the French word Bruyer, a beath, which might have been perfectly descriptive of its condition at the time the name was given it. A fair for cattle was formerly held here.

'Ældred archbishop [of York] claims Brewere, one member of this manor [Bertune]. There are three yard-lands, and three men. Milo Crispin holds it.' Domesday-book, p. 67.

'Milo Crispin holds three yard-lands in Bruerne in Dudestan hundred. Wigot held them. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and seven bordars, with two plow-tillages, and half a fishery. It was worth 40s. now 30s.' Ib. p. 78.

In the extracts out of the pipe rolls in the exchequer, formerly sent to the sheriffs of the city of Gloucester for levying certain fums, it is said, De Almerico de Parco de firma duarum virgatum terræ in Brawer 12 den. This Almeric of the Park was lord of the manor of Brawer in the reign of king Henry the Third. John le Boteler was seized of the manor of Bruerne, and of the Barton near Gloucester 15 E. 1. at which time his right to several privileges in this manor was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto. John le Boteler of Lansart held the same 2 E. 3. Beatrix le Boteler was seized of Bruerne, which she held of the manor of Berton 33 E. 3. John Boteler of the Park held the manors of the Park in Haresfield, Morecot in Minsterworth, Bruerne, and Kingsholme, 36 E. 3. Elianor le Boteler held Bruerne and Kingsholme 46 E. 3. John Kenn died seized of the manors of Hardwick, la Bruerne in Sandhurst, the Park in Haresfield, and Morecot in Minsterworth 6 H. 4. The late Thomas Vernon, esq; died about the year 1775, possessed of this estate, by purchase from the descendants of the late general Carpenter.

Culverden, is another antient manor in this parish, the lordship of which is very extensive. It has already been shewn, in the descent of the manor of Sandhurst, that Culverden was part of the possessions of the antient family of de Willington, and it seems very probable that it passed through the same hands with Sandhurst, down to the reign of king Henry the Seventh.

Christopher Throckmorton died seized of Culverden 5 H. 8. and William his son had livery thereof, and of twenty messuages in Sandhurst, the same year. Livery of the manor of Culverden was granted to Thomas Throckmorton 9 Eliz.

It came afterwards to the family of Bell, and was purchased, after the death of Mr. William Bell of Gloucester, by Samuel Hayward, esq; the present lord of the manor, who has built a handsome seat at Wallsworth, as mentioned in the introductory part of this account. His arms are, Argent, on a bend sable, between two roses gules, a rose between as many fleurs de lis Or; on a chief of the second a lion passant of the fourth.

Of the other estates, the records shew, that Robert le Savage held lands in Sandhurst 44 H. 3. Adam de Ardeen was seized of lands in Sandhurst and Culverden 56 H. 3. Robert de Aston held lands in Sandhurst 23 E. 3. of which John de Aston, his son, died seized 7 R. 2. John Gaby, alias Withely, was possessed of one messuage, forty-two acres of arable, and six acres of meadow in Sandhurst, 15 R. 2. Edward Brug held lands in Sandhurst 16 H. 4. and Edward Brug, esq; died seized of lands and tenements in the same place 15 H. 6. Two yard-lands in Sandhurst belonged to the Augustin nunnery of St. Mary and St. Margaret at Dartford in Kent, which was founded by king Edward the Third, in the year 1373, and valued, at the dissolution, at 400l. 8s. a year. These lands were granted to Thomas Babington 36 H. 8. at which time they were in the possession of Richard Amenell. Other lands in Sandhurst, then in the tenure of Richard Gibbs, were granted to William Wit and William Bryton 2 Mariae. Richard Wight died seized of six acres of meadow in Sandhurst 44 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth 63l. a year, including 30l. a year given by Mr. Giles Coxe, for a lecture sermon every Sunday morning. The bishop of Bristol is patron and impropiator.

The rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Sandhurst belonged to the monastery of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and were granted to the bishoprick of Bristol 34 H. 8. and valued, in a survey taken about that time, at 10l. 19s. Willis.

The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence, and consists of the nave and chancel, with a low tower, in which are six bells, at the west end. The pews are in the old taste, but in exceeding good preservation. The church is fitted up with three handsome galleries, and the chancel has lately been repaired and ornamented at a very considerable expence, by the munificence of Samuel Hayward, and Thomas Vernon, esq;.

Benefactions.

Giles Cox, of Ablode's Court, gent. in the year 1626, by his will, gave 30*l.* per ann. for a lecture sermon in this church. He likewise gave a portion of rent issuing out of an estate in Upton St. Leonard's, (being originally the sum of 5*l.*) to be divided among the poor labourers of this parish that receive no alms.

William Hayward, of Willington's Court, gent. built a gallery in the church; and in the year 1646, gave 5*l.* towards building the vicarage house; the Book of Martyrs, in two volumes; and a large silver bowl for the communion service. He likewise subjected his estate to a rent charge of 3*l.* a year to find bread and wine for a monthly sacrament for ever.

Thomas Church, gent. gave a house in Gloucester, of the yearly rent of 2*l.* 10*s.* which is to be received by the churchwardens and overseers, and by them to be distributed (after deducting 2*s.* 6*d.* for chief rent and their trouble) to twenty-four poor persons of this parish not receiving alms.

Richard Cox, gent. and ——— gave six acres of land in the parishes of Norton and Down Hatherley, and one acre in this parish, for the repair of the church house; or if that should not want repairing, then for some other charitable use.

Mr. Shewell gave the interest of 40*l.* to buy coal for the poor.

In the year 1562, there were 42 householders in the whole parish; about the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 60 houses, and about 300 inhabitants, whereof 10 were freeholders; yearly births 9, burials 8. The people are now reduced to about 260 souls.

SAPERTON.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Bisley, five miles distant north-eastward from Minchin-Hampton, five west from Cirencester, and fourteen south-east from Gloucester.

The little river Froome runs by, and separates Bisley from Saperton, and gives name to Frampton, a hamlet in this parish, stretching along the side of that river.

This village enjoys a healthy air, but it has long since been deprived of its greatest ornament, the large and handsome manor house, which stood near the church, and was formerly the residence of the Atkyns family.

In the month of February, 1759, there was a large quantity of Roman coins found near a place called Lark's Bush, in the hamlet of Frampton, by a waggon casually passing over and breaking the urns that contained them. They had suffered by rust as little as could be expected from lying so long under ground, for they are supposed to have been placed there by the Romans. They were soon dispersed into many hands, but no person, I believe, collected a more compleat series of them than Mr. James Dallaway, who has favoured me with the following particulars.

Not far distant from the place where the above coins were deposited, are the remains of a camp, where it is supposed those soldiers were posted to whom the money belonged. When this treasure was hid is uncertain, but some probable conjectures may be formed of the occasion of it.

It was a prudential maxim with the Romans to conceal their money before they were drawn out to battle, or went on distant expeditions, lest any part should fall into the hands of the enemy; and because the soldiery had relaxed in this necessary precaution, it is related by Sparcian, that Pescennius Niger published an edict, commanding them to carry no gold nor silver coin with them at any such time. This money, therefore, must have been concealed immediately before some engagement or expedition, from which the owners never returned; or else, perhaps, was hid at the time of the final departure of the Romans out of Britain, which happened in the year 476, when, by their troubles at home, they were unable to return any more.

Upon a high spot of ground, a little south-eastward of the camp, stood an antient beacon, wherefore the field is called the Beacon-field, and the turnpike-road from Cirencester to Minchin Hampton and Stroud leads through it, close by the beacon-hill.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Under the title Terra Roberti de Toden it is recorded after this manner:

‘ Robert de Toden holds Sapeltorne and Fran-
‘ tone, in Bifelege hundred. There are five hides
‘ in each. Ulf held them. There are seven
‘ plow-tillages in demean, and seventeen villeins,
‘ and nine bordars, with ten plow-tillages. There
‘ are thirteen servi, and two mills of 6s. and a
‘ wood half a mile long, and two furlongs broad.
‘ These two manors together were worth 14*l.* in
‘ the time of king Edward, and are now worth 16*l.*
Domesday-book, p. 76.

The above Ulf might possibly be the fourth son of king Harold, who had a son of the name of Ulf, or Wolfe, according to Speed. In sir Robert Atkyns’s quotation from Domesday, it is said, He was third Son of King Harold, and therefore in the Reign of King William the Conqueror, he was deprived of these manors, and confined, &c. But the record says no such thing, and the whole passage printed in Italics was injudiciously inserted by the compiler of the Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire.

Robert de Toden gave a plow-tillage in Saperton to the priory which he had founded at Belvoir in Lincolnshire, to pray for the soul of Adela his wife. He died seized of Great Risindon, Horedon, Saperton, and Frampton, in Gloucestershire, in the year 1088, and the manors of Saperton and Frampton descended from him to the several proprietors, as it is related of Great Risington, down to the time of king Richard the Second, when one moiety thereof was vested in William de Lisle, who died 8 R. 2. and Anchoret, widow of Henry Hufley, the elder, was endowed with the other moiety of Saperton, and died in the 13th year of the same reign.

Sir William Nottingham purchased both the moieties, and died without issue, seized of the intire manor, 2 R. 3. leaving it to Elizabeth his wife, for her life, the reversion in trustees.

Not far distant from the place where the above coins were deposited, are the remains of a camp, where it is supposed those soldiers were posted to whom the money belonged. When this treasure was hid is uncertain, but some probable conjectures may be formed of the occasion of it.

It was a prudential maxim with the Romans to conceal their money before they were drawn out to battle, or went on distant expeditions, lest any part should fall into the hands of the enemy; and because the soldiery had relaxed in this necessary precaution, it is related by Sparcian, that Pescennius Niger published an edict, commanding them to carry no gold nor silver coin with them at any such time. This money, therefore, must have been concealed immediately before some engagement or expedition, from which the owners never returned; or else, perhaps, was hid at the time of the final departure of the Romans out of Britain, which happened in the year 476, when, by their troubles at home, they were unable to return any more.

Upon a high spot of ground, a little south-eastward of the camp, stood an antient beacon, wherefore the field is called the Beacon-field, and the turnpike-road from Cirencester to Minchin Hampton and Stroud leads through it, close by the beacon-hill.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Under the title Terra Roberti de Toden it is recorded after this manner:

‘ Robert de Toden holds Sapeltorne and Fran-
‘ tone, in Bifelege hundred. There are five hides
‘ in each. Ulf held them. There are seven
‘ plow-tillages in demean, and seventeen villeins,
‘ and nine bordars, with ten plow-tillages. There
‘ are thirteen servi, and two mills of 6s. and a
‘ wood half a mile long, and two furlongs broad.
‘ These two manors together were worth 14*l.* in
‘ the time of king Edward, and are now worth 16*l.*
Domesday-book, p. 76.

The above Ulf might possibly be the fourth son of king Harold, who had a son of the name of Ulf, or Wolfe, according to Speed. In sir Robert Atkyns’s quotation from Domesday, it is said, He was third Son of King Harold, and therefore in the Reign of King William the Conqueror, he was deprived of these manors, and confined, &c. But the record says no such thing, and the whole passage printed in Italics was injudiciously inserted by the compiler of the Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire.

Robert de Toden gave a plow-tillage in Saperton to the priory which he had founded at Belvoir in Lincolnshire, to pray for the soul of Adela his wife. He died seized of Great Risindon, Horedon, Saperton, and Frampton, in Gloucestershire, in the year 1088, and the manors of Saperton and Frampton descended from him to the several proprietors, as it is related of Great Risington, down to the time of king Richard the Second, when one moiety thereof was vested in William de Lisle, who died 8 R. 2. and Anchoret, widow of Henry Hufley, the elder, was endowed with the other moiety of Saperton, and died in the 13th year of the same reign.

Sir William Nottingham purchased both the moieties, and died without issue, seized of the intire manor, 2 R. 3. leaving it to Elizabeth his wife, for her life, the reversion in trustees.

Richard

Richard Poole, of Cotes, son of John Poole, of the antient family of that name in Cheshire, married Elizabeth, the widow of sir William Nottingham, and purchased the inheritance of the manor from the trustees, 7 H. 7. and was high sheriff of the county in the 13th year of the same reign. Sir Leonard Poole, son of Richard, succeeded to this manor, and marrying Katherine, daughter of sir Giles Brydges, died 30 H. 8. Sir Giles Poole, son of sir Leonard, married Elizabeth, one of the six daughters and coheiresses of Thomas Whittington of Pauntly. He served the office of high sheriff of Gloucestershire, in the year 1565, and died in 1588. Sir Henry Poole succeeded his father sir Giles in this manor, and was eminent for his great housekeeping and hospitality. He married Anne, daughter of sir William Wroughton, and having served the office of high sheriff 31 Eliz. died in 1616, and lies buried under a noble monument in Saperton church. Sir Henry Poole, son of sir Henry, was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 8 C. 1. and married Beatrix, daughter of Grey lord Chandos. He was sequestered for his attachment to the royal cause in the great civil war, and paid 1494*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* composition for his estates. Sir William Poole, son of the last sir Henry, married Marial, daughter of lord Tracy, and was succeeded by his son, sir Henry Poole, who was the last male heir of his family, and sold the manor of Saperton, in the year 1660, to

Sir Robert Atkyns, knight of the Bath, and chief baron of the court of exchequer, who died in the year 1709, and was succeeded by his son sir Robert Atkyns. He died in 1711, and the manor of Saperton passed out of his family, by purchase, to Allen first earl of Bathurst, whose son, Henry earl of Bathurst, lord high chancellor of Great Britain, is the present lord of this manor. His lordship's pedigree and arms are given under Cirencester.

Saperton was held of Cicely dutchess of York, mother to king Edward the Fourth, as of the manor of Bisley.

HAMLETS. 1. Frampton, which lies westward from the church, and belonging antiently to the Mansels, was called Frampton Mansel, to distinguish it from two other parishes of the name of Frampton, in this county. Henry earl of Bathurst is lord of the manor.

2. Hayly is another small hamlet in this parish, lying a mile south-westward from the church. It is a manor within a manor, and belongs to Charles Coxe, of Kemble, in the county of Wilts, esq; whose arms are given under Rodmarton.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, improved of late to about 200*l.* a year, by inclosing the parish, and allotting lands to the rectory in lieu of tithes. The earl of Bathurst is patron, and James Benson, LL.D. and chancellor of this diocese, is the incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Kenelm, and built in the form of a cross, with a small spire in the middle.

The parsonage house was built by Mr. Davis, a rector of this church, about seventy years ago; but it has been since repaired, and greatly improved, by the honourable and reverend Allen Bathurst, the late incumbent, who died Aug. 21, 1768, and lies buried in the chancel.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a noble monument in the north cross aisle, for sir Henry Poole and his lady, who are represented kneeling, with books before them, and richly habited in the dress of their time. A marble table bears this inscription:

Here Resteth the Bodies of Sir Henry Poole Knight & of Anne his Wife, Daughter to Sir William Wroughton of Broadehintō in The Cōty of Wilts Knight By Whome hee had Issu 3 Sonns & 4 Daughters, That is to say, Deuereux, Gyles, & Henry, Elinor Francis Dorothey & Anne, Elinor married Sir Richard Fettiplace of Bezelsleigh in the County of Barck^s Knight Francis

* The family of Atkyns formerly resided in Monmouthshire. Thomas Atkyns lived in the reign of king Edward the Third, and dying in London, was buried in the church of St. Peter Cheap, in the year 1401, 2 H. 4. Richard Atkyns, son of Thomas, followed the profession of the law, in Monmouthshire, and Thomas Atkyns, his son, was of the same profession. Richard Atkyns, son of Thomas, died 11 H. 7. and Thomas Atkyns, his son, died 4 H. 8. He was succeeded by David Atkyns, who married Alice, daughter of _____ and was an eminent merchant in Chepstow, from whence he moved to Tuffley, near Gloucester, and died in the year 1552. Thomas Atkyns, son of David, married Margaret, daughter of John Cook of London, and was judge of the Sheriff's court there. He argued the first case in Plowden's Commentaries, and dying before his father, in the year 1551, was buried in Aldermanbury church, in London.

Richard Atkyns, son of Thomas, was under age at his father's death, and was granted in ward to Thomas Wendy, esq; physician to king Edward the Sixth. He was found by inquisition to be seized of the manors of Tuffley, Hempsted, Morecot in Minsterworth, and Brickhampton in Churchdown, held of the king in capite; and of lands in Sodbury, Betesley, and Tudenham, all in the county of Gloucester. He married Elinor, daughter of Thomas Marthe, of Waresley in Huntingdonshire, esq; and was one of the judges of Wales, and one of the council of the Marches there, and dying in the year 1610, was buried at Hempsted, where there is a handsome monument erected to his memory. Sir Edward Atkyns, third son of Richard, (whose elder brothers and their issue have since been extinct) married Ursula, daughter of sir Thomas Dacres, of Cheshunt in Hertfordshire, and died one of the barons of the court of exchequer, at the age of 82 years. When king James the Second removed some of the judges for denying his dispensing power, he replaced them with others of more pliant tempers, of whom this sir Edward was one. Sir Robert Atkyns, son of sir Edward, was created knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles the Second, and was chief baron of the court of exchequer. He purchased the manor of Saperton of sir Henry Pool, in the year 1660. He married, first, Mary, daughter of sir George Clerk, of Watford in Northamptonshire; secondly, Anne, daughter of sir Thomas Dacres, son of sir Thomas, and dying in 1709, aged 88, was succeeded by his son, sir Robert Atkyns. Sir Robert, the son, married Lovise, daughter of sir George Carteret, of Hawnes in Bedfordshire, and was the author of that well known book, the Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire, printed in the year 1712, but he did not live to see it published, for he died in 1711.

It is remarkable that there has been always one of this name and family presiding in some of the courts of judicature in this kingdom above three hundred years. Atkyns.

In the south aile is a very handsome freestone monument for sir Robert Atkyns, with his effigy in white marble, in a recumbent posture, leaning on his left elbow. Behind him, on a marble table, is this inscription :

In memory of S^r. ROBERT ATKYNS of Pinbury Park in Gloucester Shire Knight, Son of S^r. ROBERT ATKYNS, one of y^e Iustices of y^e Court of Common Pleas in y^e Reign of K. C. II. afterwards Lord Chief Baron of y^e Exchequer and Speaker of y^e house of Lords and Grand Son to S^r. EDWARD ATKYNS who was one of y^e Barons of y^e said Court.

While He lived He was beloved and honoured, and when He died y^e loss of him was lamented by all who knew his private and his publick Vertues.

He was always Loyal to his Prince, Loving to his Wife, Faithful to his Friends, Charitable to y^e Poor, Kind & Courteous to his Neighbours, Iust to All, Sober and Serious in his Conversation, and a Peace-Maker to his utmost Power.

His obliging Vertues endear'd him to his Country, who chose him for their Representative in Parliament as often as He would accept of their Choice. He lived with great indifference for life, and without y^e fear of Death: and dyed of a Dysentery at his House at Westminster, on y^e XXIX day of November, in y^e year of our Lord MDCCXI, and of his Age LXV. He left behind him LOUISE Lady ATKYNS, Daughter of S^r. GEORGE CARTERET of Hawns in Bedford-Shire, his most dear and sorrowful Widow, who erected this monument to his memory, though He left behind him one more durable, The Ancient and Present State of Gloster-Shire.

This Lady who was altogether worthy of so Good and Great a Man, Was Her-Self Interred in the same Vault with him. She died the 2^d of Dec. 1716, Aged 63.

Arms, at top, Per pale, baron and femme, 1. Argent, a cross cotized with demy fleurs de lis between four mullets sable, pierced of the field, for Atkyns. 2. Gules, four fusils in fess Or, for Carteret.

Under a niche in the east wall of the north aile, is the effigy in freestone of a man in armour, girt with a sword, and over him are the arms of Poole. There is no inscription, except the date, 1574.

Benefactions.

Leonard Poole, esq; gave the church-house, two acres of arable in each field, and one beast pasture, for the use of the church. Nathaniel Butler, who was presented to this rectory in the year 1603, gave 10s. a year, of which 6s. 8d. for a sermon on the 5th of November, the remainder for the poor. By a decree in chancery, an estate worth 23l. a year has been purchased with money left by lord chief baron Atkyns, and lady Atkyns; 5l. of which is allotted for a charity school, the remainder to be given in bread to the poor.

IS a very small parish, in the hundred of Whitston, about four miles south-eastward from Newnham, six northward from Dursley, and nine southward from Gloucester.

It is bounded on the east by the Froome, which separates it from Moreton Valence and Whitminster; on the west by Frethorn; on the north by the great river Severn, and on the south by the parish of Eastington.

A considerable proportion of the parish is arable, the rest is rich pasturage and meadow ground.

The air is rendered impure and unwholesome by the copious vapours and exhalations rising from the Severn, and from the low lands that are constantly drowned by floods and spring tides, which particularly affect Saul, Moreton, and Frethorn. Yet here I was told, that this village was perfectly healthy, tho' it appeared to be far otherwise, from the pallid countenances of those I conversed with, who allowed, however, that the two other above-mentioned neighbouring villages were greatly afflicted with agues and asthmatic disorders. On the contrary, the good people of Moreton assured me, that they were themselves free from those disorders, but that Saul and Frethorn were very subject to them. Thus wisely has providence reconciled mankind to their various situations, which Mr. Pope has elegantly expressed in the following lines :

*Ask where's the North? at York 'tis on the Tweed:
In Scotland, at the Orcaes; and there
At Greenland, Zembla, and the Lord knows where.
No Creature owns it in the first Degree,
But thinks his Neighbour further gone than he.*

Ethic Epist. B. 2.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The sheriff returned, that the abbat of St. Peter's at Gloucester, and Galfrid de Frethorne, were lords of the vill of Salley, in the hundred of Wyston, 9 E. 1. Galfrid de Fretherne died 14 E. 2. at which time he was seized in fee of one messuage and one plow-tillage in Fretherne. Ejcb.

The manor came afterwards to the Staffords of Thornbury, and continued for many generations in that family. Sir Hugh Stafford was seized of the manor of Salle 1 H. 6. It came afterwards to the Lloyds of Wheatenhurst. George Lloyd, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and Mr. Richard-Owen Cambridge is the present proprietor.

Lands and tithes in Saul, which belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to Edward duke of Somerset 1 E. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester, to which the vicar of Standish presents. Mr. Davis is the present incumbent. The curate has small tithes, and some glebe, worth about 7l. a year. The living has been augmented with with the queen's bounty, and by a benefaction from Mr. Hodges, with which money an estate has been purchased at King's Stanley, worth 30*l.* a year.

The tithes of Saul belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and were granted to the bishoprick 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6. The impropriation, worth 60*l.* a year, is in lease to Mr. King.

The church is a small building, with a low embattled tower at the west end, in which is one bell. It is dedicated to St. James, on whose feast day an annual fair was formerly held here.

There is a memorial on a tomb in the church-yard, for Thomas Swanley, who died in 1653, and for others of that family. The arms on the tomb are, A fess undy between three unicorns heads erased.

Land-tax at 3*s.* 1770, £. 34 19 6

At the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 30 houses in the parish, and about 130 inhabitants, whereof 7 were freeholders. There are now 29 families, and 151 inhabitants.

SEISINCOT

IS a small parish, in the upper division of Kiftsgate hundred, four miles northward from Stow, six southward from Campden, and about twenty-seven north-eastward from Gloucester.

The name of this place was antiently written Chiesnecote, and Chesnecote; and since Chesne, according to sir Robert Atkyns, signifies an Oak, and Coed is British for a Wood, there is reason to suppose that the name signifies the Oak Wood, and expresses the antient state of the place; yet there is nothing in the present condition of it to confirm this etymology.

The parish was totally depopulated in the great civil war, and is intirely destitute of antiquities and curiosities. The village consists at present of six or seven houses, which sir William Juxton built for the use of the farmers, when he was lord of the manor.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This parish was divided into several manors at the time of the general survey; one of them lay in the old hundred of Celfledetorne, the others in Witelai, but both those hundreds are now comprized in that of Kiftsgate.

'Durand of Glowec' holds Chiesnecote in Celfledetorne hundred, and Walter holds it of him. There are two hides and a half. Leuain and Leuui held it for two manors. In demean are two plow-tillages, and four bordars. It was worth 40*s.* and is now worth 60*s.* D. B. p. 76.

'Walter the Deacon holds Chesnecote in Witelai hundred of the king. There are four hides and a half. Goduin held it, and could go where he pleased, [i.e. was perfectly a free man.] There are two plow-tillages in demean, and eight villeins, with six plow-tillages, and ten servi. It is worth and was worth 3*l.* Ibid. p. 77.

'Urfo de Abetot of Wirecestre holds one hide in Cheisnecote, in Witelai hundred. Eluain held it for a manor, and paid tax. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four servi. It was worth 40*s.* now 10*s.* Ibid. p. 78.

'Hafcoit Musard holds one hide in Cheisnecote in Witelai hundred, and pays tax. Uluuin held it for a manor. There is one plow-tillage, and one bordar. It is worth and was worth 10*s.* Ibid. p. 78.

'Hunfridus de Medehalle holds one hide in Cheisnecot, in Witelai hundred. Aluui held it for a manor, and paid tax. In demean were two plow-tillages, and six servi, and one bordar, and it was worth 50*s.* but it is now worth only 12*d.* on account of the meadows.' Ibid. p. 79.

Urfo de Abetot, hereditary sheriff of Worcestershire, left Emeline, an only daughter and heiress, who was married to Walter de Beauchamp, whereby this manor came to the Beauchamps, and continued in that family for many generations. William de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, son of William de Beauchamp, and of Isabel, the sister and heiress of William Manduit de Hanslape, earl of Warwick, died 52 H. 3. seized of the hamlet of Cheisnecot. William de Beauchamp, son of the last William, died 26 E. 1. and Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, his son and heir, had livery the same year, and died 9 E. 2. leaving Thomas, his infant son, only two years old. He died 43 E. 3. and was succeeded by Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, his surviving son and heir, who died seized of Seisincote 2 H. 4. whereupon the manor descended to his son Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and lord Bergavenny, who died 17 H. 6.

The manor of Seisincot was soon afterwards vested in the Grevils. Sir John Grevil died seized of it, and of the hundred of Kiftsgate, 20 E. 4. Ludowick Grevil was lord of the manor, and resided here in the reign of queen Elizabeth. The memory of this man seems to be preserved only to be execrated for his rapacious avarice, and inhuman barbarity. He invited to his house one Web, who had been his servant, but was now grown rich, and there treacherously caused him to be assassinated in bed, by two domesticks, and afterwards, by means of a forged will, got possession of the whole estate of his murdered guest. But one of the assassins, afterwards in liquor, dropping some hints that he could hang his master, so alarmed Grevil, that he procured the other to dispatch him also. Divine providence, however, would not permit these complicated acts of wickedness to remain long unpunished. Grevil was arraigned and executed for his crimes, who stood mute to preserve his estates in the family; but his family never flourished afterwards, and soon fell fell to decay; as if heaven would shew that the horrible crimes of murder and forgery draw after them a curse on posterity for several generations.

Sir Edward Grevil was lord of the manor in the year 1608. Sir William Juxton, nephew of Dr. William Juxton, archbishop of Canterbury, was possessed of it in the reign of king Charles the Second, and sold it to lord Guilford. The earl of Guilford is the present lord of the manor, and proprietor of a good estate in the parish.

A considerable estate here belonged to a family of the same name with the parish, for Thomas Chesnecot died seized of one messuage, and two plow-tillages in Chesnecot 33 E. 1. Alice his widow was married to Henry de Duffeld, and they joined in a fine, acknowledging the estate to be the right of Maud, daughter and heiress of Thomas de Seifincote. She was afterwards married to Peter de Wallingford.

John de Minera, and Alice his wife, granted lands in Chesneton to William Camera, and Alice his wife, 20 H. 3. Nicholas de Sherborne was seized of one plow-tillage in Seifincote 15 E. 1.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stow, and in the gift of the earl of Guilford, who pays about 8*l.* a year to the incumbent, and lets his estates tithe free. The living was augmented by lot in the year 1737. The parish was depopulated, and the church demolished, during the civil wars, in the reign of king Charles the First.

The glebe lands and tithes belonged antiently to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, and were granted to Anthony Stringer, and John Williams, 34 H. 8. Other tithes in Seifincote belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to sir Thomas Seimour 1 E. 6.

When sir Robert Atkyns wrote his account of this parish, there were 7 houses, and about 30 inhabitants, whereof 2 were freeholders. There are now 6 farm houses only, with 43 inhabitants.

SEVENHAMPTON.

THIS large parish lies in the hundred of Bradley, in a lofty part of the Cotswold country, about five miles eastward from Cheltenham, four south from Winchcombe, and thirteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

The village, like most others on the Cotswolds, is seated in a bottom, sheltered by bold rising grounds, and the lands are principally in tillage. The river Coln rises in two heads, here and at Whittington, and after passing by, and giving name to several villages, as Coln Dennis, Coln Rogers, Coln Aldwings, falls into the Thames below Fairford.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The Domesday account of this parish is given under Presbury, on which it was once dependent, and was therefore sometimes called Presbury on the Hill.

The manor of Sevenhantone belonged to the bishop of Hereford at the time of the general survey, and Peter bishop of that see had free warren in Presbury and Sevenhampton 25 H. 3. and obtained a confirmation of that privilege 14 R. 2. In a taxation of the temporalties of the see of Hereford, in a MS. in the Cottonian Library, Tiberius, C. x. F. 76. is the following entry. *Item apud Pulcomb & Sevenhampton, de reditu 7*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* 6*ob.* & 3 caruc. terre & valet caruc. 20*s.* Et unum molendinum aquaticum, quod valet 1 marc. et de placitis & perquisitis 20*s.

Sir Robert Atkyns says, that Elizabeth Courtney, countess of Devonshire, died 11 H. 8. seized of this manor, which thereupon descended to Elizabeth, her granddaughter and heir, married to sir Arthur Plantagenet, who had livery granted them the same year. But that seems most likely to be the manor of Brockhampton in this parish, or perhaps some lands only, and not the manor; for the latter continued in the bishoprick of Hereford 'till long afterwards, as appears by a grant of several particulars made to Scory bishop of that see, by queen Elizabeth, March 23, 1562, in the fourth year of her reign, in consideration of several manors therein mentioned, of which Sevenhampton was one.

Lands in Sevenhampton, which formerly belonged to the bishoprick of Hereford, were granted to Christopher Hatton 18 Eliz. Mr. Robert Lawrence died seized of the manors of Sevenhampton and Brockhampton in the year 1700. Mr. Anthony Lawrence was proprietor of the manor of Sevenhampton when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his History. It belonged afterwards to Walter Lawrence, esq; and is now vested in Mr. Walter Lawrence, who has a good estate in the parish, and resides there. His arms are, Argent, a cross raguly gules.

HAMLET. Brockhampton is a considerable hamlet in this parish, formerly belonging to the antient family of de Croupes. Edward Croupes, son of Richard de Croupes, died seized of the manors of Upper Dowdeswell, Whittington, and Brockhampton, 35 E. 3. The manor was afterwards vested in the Lawrences, of whom it was purchased by sir William Dodwell, whose only daughter and heir, Mrs. Tracy, relict of Thomas Tracy, of Sandiwell in this county, esq; is the present lady of the manor.

Puckham is the name of a place in this parish, antiently written Pulcumb, which belonged to the bishop of Hereford. Puckham-farm is now the property of Mr. Reddall.

The prior of Lanthony had free warren in this parish 21 E. 1.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Winchcombe. The incumbent receives 10*l.* a year out of the impropriation, which formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and is now vested in Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Hincksman, who pay a small quit-rent for it to the bishop of Hereford. The living was augmented with Mr. Aylworth's benefaction, and by the queen's bounty, about the year 1733. There is no house for the curate.

The church is built in the form of a cross, with a low embattled tower in the middle. It is dedicated to St. Andrew, and was built by John Camber, for whom there was the following inscription upon a stone in the wall of the chancel, Hic iacet Iohes Camber, qui obiit xxvi Feb. 1448.

At the beginning of this century, there were 47 houses in the parish, and about 180 inhabitants, of whom 8 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. There are now 63 families, and about 288 inhabitants.

S H E N I N G T O N.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, about five miles westward from Banbury in Oxfordshire, six eastward from Shipston upon Stour in Warwickshire, and about thirty-nine north-eastward from Gloucester.

The south and east sides of this parish are bounded by Oxfordshire, and the north and west by Warwickshire; being intirely disjointed, and many miles distant from the county to which it belongs.

Part of Edgehill lies in this parish, and is rendered famous by the engagement fought on the 23d of October, 1642, between the forces of king Charles the First and his parliament. Mr. Jago wrote a poem in blank verse, intituled Edgehill, which was published about the year 1764.

It

It is both descriptive and historical, comprehending the villas and towns which lie round about the hill he professes to celebrate.

From the top of Shunlow-hill in this parish, there is a very pleasant and extensive prospect into the counties of Oxford, Warwick, Gloucester, Northampton, Bucks, Worcester, Salop, and Stafford.

Two small streams run from hence, and fall, at last, one into the Severn, the other into the Thames.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday-book, under the title Terra Regis, recounts the particulars of the extensive manor and lordship of Tewkesbury, and says,

'Ten hides in Senendone belong to the same manor [Teodechesberie]. There are four plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and four bordars, and five radchenisters, with eight plow-tillages. There are twelve servi, and a mill of 3 s. This estate is taxed for seven hides. In the time of king Edward it was worth 20 l. now 8 l. It is in the king's hands, and Robert de Olgi farms it.' Domesday-book, p. 68.

The records relating to this parish, which was divided into two manors, are very confused and deficient, therefore as it would be difficult, if not impossible, to apply them with precision, they are set down in order of time.

The manor of Shenington was held of Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, 47 H. 3. John de Suor held this manor, with free warren, 15 E. 1. and John le More was seized of a manor in this parish, with free warren, the same year.

The family of the Peches held Shenington for several generations. John Peche died seized thereof 47 E. 3. and left two daughters his coheiresses; Joan dying without issue, Margaret, the surviving daughter, married to sir John Montfort, of Colehill in Warwickshire, became sole heir. Catherine the widow of sir John Peche, William Montford [probably sir John Montfort] of Colehull, and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Shenington to the use of Catherine for life, the remainder to William and Margaret in taille, 12 H. 4.

John Salisbury was seized of Shenington 11 R. 2. Joan the widow of — Rustin of Norfolk, was seized of the manor of Shenington 7 H. 5.

Gerald earl of Kildare, and Elizabeth his wife, had a grant of the manor of Shenington, and of the advowson, to them and their heirs males, 18 H. 7. which was confirmed 2 H. 8. Henry Fitz-Gerald, son of Gerald, granted the manor to his brother sir Thomas Gerald, who died seized thereof 23 H. 8. and livery was granted to James Fitz-Gerald, son of sir Thomas, 24 H. 8.

The manor of Shenington, and the advowson of the rectory, were granted to John Coke, and John Basslet, 4 E. 6. and it is recited in the grant, that the manor was lately John Fitz-Gerald's.

John Wigate, upon the death of his father, had livery of the manor of Shenington granted to him 20 Eliz.

Richard Pigot died seized of the manor 12 Eliz. and Robert Pigot, son and heir of Richard, dying unmarried, it came to Agnes, his sister and heiress.

Mr. Richard Gooding was lord of one manor in the parish at the beginning of this century, and it now belongs to Mr. Sheldon. Oriel college, Oxford, has another manor.

Henry le Fend and Isabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Shenendon to William Giffard, archbishop of York, 7 E. 1. By another fine levied 20 E. 1. a third part of lands in Shenendon is acknowledged to be the right of Henry le Fend and of Isabel his wife. John de Shokereiwel and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Shokereiwel and Shenendon, to John de Doweneved, 27 E. 1. John le Strange, of Knokyn, held one messuage, three yard-lands, and five acres of meadow in this parish 3 E. 2. John le Strange, of Walton, and Mabel his wife, levied a fine of lands in Shenington to Roger le Strange, and others, to the use of Philip le Strange, 15 E. 2. Henry Vyell and Alice his wife levied a fine of a rent in Shenington, to the use of Joan Scovile for life, the remainder to Henry Vyell and Alice, 3 H. 4. James Veel and Joan his wife levied a fine of a moiety of the manor of Shenington to sir Reginald Bray, and others, 17 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 160 l. a year, of which the earl of Litchfield is patron.

The advowson of the rectory belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and was granted by the crown to Richard Andrews and Thomas Hyfley 36 H. 8. and was afterwards vested in Mr. Sheldon.

The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and has a tower at the west end, in which are five bells.

S H E R B O U R N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Slaughter, three miles distant east from Northleach, five west from Burford in Oxfordshire, and twenty-three east from Gloucester.

The village is situated on a brook, or Bourn, which rises at Farmington, and being augmented in its course by some fine, clear springs, at the top of this parish, empties itself, a little below, into the Winrush, near Barrington. It was undoubtedly this Bourn that gave name to the place, which was called Sherbourn, not because it lies on the border of the Shire, as some have imagined, (for that is not the fact) but from the clearness of the water, for the Saxon word Scipeburn, in old writings, is translated by Fons Clarus. Shakespeare, Milton, and other good writers, used the word Sheer, for pure, clear, neat, unmixed; and tho' it is now grown almost obsolete, yet we still apply it to wit, in the like sense or signification.

There is an easy descent on each side to this little river, and the slopes are covered with a beautiful verdure. Not two hundred yards distant, on the south side, stands Sherbourn-House, the seat of James Dutton, esq; where the antient family of that name has resided upwards of two hundred years. It consists of two quadrangles. That on the east, where the offices are, is the most antient building, supposed to have been one of the seats formerly belonging to the abbats of Winchcombe, who held the manor of Sherbourn 'till the dissolution. The west quadrangle consists of the principal apartments, and the grand entrance into the court, or area, is by a large gateway. The south side, and part of the east side of this square, were built by Inigo Jones, but the rest is about the age, and very much in the stile, of the public schools at Oxford.

Over the gateway, on the west side, are the Duttons arms, in freestone, with quarterings of the arms of other antient families, which by marriage they have a right to use.

There are two parks belonging to this seat, one adjoining to the house, the other lies at a little distance from it, with a beautiful lodge-house, and a paddock-course near it.

Of this seat, sir Robert Atkyns has given a plate in his Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire, but it is not a true representation. One side of the west quadrangle does not appear in the engraving, tho' the house was exactly as it now stands, when that book was published. And besides, the pallisadoes, gardens, and other decorations in the plate, are all imaginary, and never had existence.

This seat will very shortly undergo considerable alterations. The late Mr. Dutton new built the coach-houses and stables, which form a noble square, but he was prevented by death from doing any thing further. The present proprietor has obliged the editor and the public with a beautiful plate of this seat, as it will appear when the design is completed.

James Bradley, D. D. and Regius Professor of Astronomy, who died in the year 1762, was a native of Sherbourn, but was buried at Minchin Hampton, in this county, where is an inscription to his memory, on a brass plate fixt to a tomb in the church-yard.

There is nothing further remarkable in this place, only it may not be amiss to observe, that a bill is now depending in parliament for inclosing the common fields here, which, properly executed, will greatly improve and beautify the country.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' are thirty hides, of which ten are free, as be-

' bordars, with twenty-two plow-tillages. There ' are twelve servi, and four mills of 40s. and ' thirty acres of meadow. It was worth 20*l.* in ' the time of king Edward, and is now worth 14*l.*'
Domesday, p. 71.

This manor was discharged from the hundred court 8 H. 3.

The abbey of Winchcombe purchased a charter of free warren in Shirburn 35 H. 3. and assigned the manor to the abbey of St. Ebrulph in Normandy, 12 E. 2. Yet the first-mentioned abbey retained an estate here, for Richard Bushel was seized of one messuage, two tofts, and of pasture for eight cows, in Winchcombe and Shirbourn, in trust for the abbey, 18 R. 2.

After the dissolution of religious foundations, this manor, and the rectory and advowson of Sherbourn, were granted to sir Christopher Alleyn, who joins with Ethelreda his wife, and levies a fine of them to Thomas Dutton, esq; 6 E. 6. whose descendants have enjoy'd them ever since.

A mea-

^b This family is of great antiquity. It appears by the antient roll of the barons of Halton in Cheshire, that at the time of the conquest, Hugh Lupus, earl of Chester, brought with him out of Normandy one Nigell, a nobleman, and his five brothers, viz. Hudard, Edard, Wolmere, Horfwyne, and Wolsaith. And the same Nigell gave to Hudard, or Odard, the township of Great Aston, and a moiety of Weston, in Cheshire, pro uno feodo militis. This Odard was seated at a place called Duntune, in the same county, which was given him by Hugh Lupus, from whence his descendants took the surname of De Duntune, or Dutton, as appears by several deeds of great antiquity among the evidences of the Dutton family; and Hudard's sword has passed over from heir to heir, as an heir-loom, and is still very carefully preserved.

Hugh, son of Odard, had those lands, which he held, as it were in capite, of the earl of Chester, confirmed to him by Randle the Second, earl of Chester, about the latter end of the reign of Henry the First.

Hugh de Dutton, son of Hugh, had those lands which his father held of the baron of Halton confirmed to him by William son of Nigell, constable of Chester, and by William son of William, when they visited Hugh de Dutton the elder, on his death-bed at Kekwick, about the end of the reign of king Henry the First: and thereupon Hugh de Dutton, the father, gave to William the elder, his coat of mail, and his charging-horse; and Hugh, the son, gave to William the younger, a palfrey and sparrow-hawk. This Hugh had issue Hugh, eldest son; Adam de Dutton, from whom the Warburtons are descended, who took their name from Warburton in Cheshire, the place of their residence in the reign of Edward the Second; Geoffrey de Dutton, another son, ancestor of the Chedhills of Chedhill, and Ashleys of Ashley, who assumed those names from the places of their residence, according to the custom of antient times.

Hugh de Dutton, the third of that name, and great grandson of Odard, married ——— daughter of Hamon Mally, of Dunham Mally, in the reign of king Henry the Second, and had issue

A meadow in Sherbourn belonged to the priory of St. John the Evangelist in Burford, (which priory was valued at 13 l. 6 s. 6 d.) and was granted to Edmund Herman 35 H. 8.

Hugh Dutton, who married Muriel, daughter of Thomas le Dispencer, by whom he had Hugh, who died without issue, Thomas, John, and Adam; and a daughter Alice, married to William Boydell, of Dodleston. Randle, surnamed Blundevill, the sixth earl of Chester from Hugh Lupus, had been successful in many conflicts against Llewellyn prince of North Wales, but was at last surprized, and forced, for his present security, to take refuge in the castle of Rothlent in Flintshire, to which the Welch laid siege. In this distress, Randle dispatched a messenger to his constable, Roger de Lacy, surnamed Hell, for his fierce spirit, to come to his relief with what forces he could collect. The news of the earl's distress reached Chester on Midsummer-day, which being the time of the principal fair, Roger de Lacy collected a rude multitude out of the city of Chester, composed of cobblers, players, fidlers, and debauched persons of both sexes, and marched with them to the earl's relief. The Welch supposing a great army to be coming, raised their siege, and fled precipitately to their own country. In commemoration of this signal piece of service, the earl granted to Roger de Lacy authority over all the shoemakers, fidlers, &c. within the county, and the city of Chester. Some time afterwards, John, constable of Chester, son of Roger de Lacy, who had rescued the earl, reserving to himself and his heirs authority over the shoemakers, granted the patronage of the rest to his steward, Hugh de Dutton, of Dutton, and his heirs, (not Ralph de Dutton, as sir Robert Atkyns has it) as will more clearly appear by the grant, which follows:

Sciant presentes & futuri, quod ego Johannes Constabularius Cestrie dedit & concessi, & hac presenti charta mea confirmavi Hugoni de Dutton, & heredibus suis, Magistratum omnium Leccatorum & Meretricum totius Cestresbirie, sicut liberius illum Magistratum teno de Comite; salvo jure meo mihi & heredibus meis. Hiis testibus, Hugone de Boidele, Alano fratre ejus, Petro de Goenet, Liulfo de Twamlow, Adam de Dutton, Gilberto de Aston, Radulfo de Kingsley, Hamone de Bordington, Alano de Waleie, Alano de Mulinton, Willielmo filio Ricardi, Martino Angevin, Willielmo de Savill, Galfrido & Roberto filiis meis, Blebero, Herberd de Waleton, Galfrido de Dutton.

This grant was made about the end of the reign of king John, from which time this family have exercised their jurisdiction with many ludicrous ceremonies; for on every Midsummer-day the heir of Dutton, or his steward, rides through the city of Chester, attended by all the fidlers in the county in procession, playing on their several musical instruments, to St. John's church; and after divine service, the cavalcade proceeds to the court house, where laws and ordinances are made for their better government; and here all the fidlers take out licences, none being permitted to follow their profession in that county without them.

A writ of Quo warranto was brought against Lawrence Dutton, of Dutton, esq; 14 H. 7. to shew cause why he claimed that all the minstrels of Cheshire, and the city of Chester, should meet before him at Chester, on the feast of St. John Baptist yearly, and give unto him Quatuor Lagenas Vini et unam Lanceam, i. e. four flaggons, or bottles, of wine, and one lance; and that every minstrel should pay unto him, at the said feast, four-pence half-penny. And why he claimed from every whore in Cheshire and the city of Chester, Officium suum exerente, i. e. following her profession, four-pence yearly, to be paid at the feast aforesaid, &c. Whereunto the said Lawrence Dutton pleaded prescription.

And here it must be observed, that in the statutes for punishing rogues and vagabonds, 39 Eliz. cap. 4. and 1 Jac. 1. cap. 25. the licenced fidlers of Cheshire are excepted; and care is taken, by an especial proviso, that no clause in those acts shall prejudice the right of John Dutton, of Dutton, esq; which he or his ancestors have lawfully enjoyed in the county and city of Chester.

Sir Thomas Dutton, second son of Hugh and Muriel, married Philippa, daughter and heir of Vivian de Sandon, or Standon, by whom he had Hugh, Thomas, and Robert; and two daughters, Margaret, married to William Venables, son and heir of Roger Venables of Kinderton, in the year 1253; and Katherine, married to John, son of Vrian de Sancto Petro. Sir Thomas was sheriff of Cheshire 1268, and died in the beginning of the reign of king Edward the First.

Sir Hugh Dutton, of Dutton, knight, son and heir of sir Thomas, married Joan, daughter of sir Vrian de Sancto Petro, vulgo Sampier, and by her had issue Hugh, William, and Robert; and a daughter Margaret. Sir Hugh, the father, died in the year 1294, and was succeeded by Sir Hugh Dutton, his son and heir, born at Dutton, Dec. 8, 1276, 5 E. 1. He married Joan, daughter of sir Robert Holland, of Holland in Lancashire, by whom he had Thomas, William, Geffery, and Robert; and died in the year 1327, 1 E. 3.

Sir Thomas Dutton, of Dutton, knight, son and heir of sir Hugh, was fifteen years old on Whit-sunday, 1329. He purchased those lands in Dutton which had belonged to Halton tce; and likewise those lands in the same place which formerly belonged to Boydell of Dodleston, and so became possessed of the whole township of Dutton. He was made seneschal, governor, and receiver of the castle and honour of Halton in Cheshire, by William Clinton, earl of Huntingdon; and of his lands and manors in Cheshire and Lancashire, all which the earl farmed to him for 440 marks yearly, by his deed, dated at Maxstock, 19 E. 3. He was sheriff of Cheshire 30 & 33 E. 3. and married to his first wife, Ellen, eldest daughter and one of the coheirs of sir Peter Thornton, of Thornton, by whom he had sir Peter, who died without issue 35 E. 3. Thomas; Lawrence, his successor, who likewise died without issue; Edmund, the continuer of the family; Henry; and William. His second wife was Philippa, widow of sir Peter Thornton, but not the mother of his first wife. Sir Thomas died in the year 1381, 4 R. 2. aged 66.

Edmund Dutton, fourth son of sir Thomas, married Joan, daughter and heir of Henry Minshull, of Church Minshull, and by her had issue sir Peter, who was heir to his uncle sir Lawrence, and continued the elder branch of the family seated at Dutton; Hugh, second son, from whom the Duttons of Sherbourn are descended; Lawrence, and Thomas; and two daughters, Agnes, married to William Leycester, of Nether Tabley; and another daughter, Ellen.

Hugh Dutton, second son of Edmund, married Petronilla, daughter and heir of Ralph Vernon of Hatton, by whom he had four sons, John, Lawrence, Randle, and Hugh; and a daughter Elizabeth, married to Richard Manley of Manley.

John Dutton of Hatton, eldest son of Hugh, was mayor of Chester 30 H. 6. and married Margaret, daughter to William Atherton, of Atherton in Lancashire, by whom he had issue, Peter, Richard, and Geffery; and two daughters, Cicely, and Ellen.

Peter Dutton of Hatton, son and heir of John, in the year 1464, married Elizabeth, eldest daughter and one of the coheirs of Robert Grosvenor of Holme, by whom he had Peter, eldest son, who married Elenor, daughter of Robert Foulshurst, of Crew in Cheshire, (and whose son, sir Piers Dutton, became heir to the lands of Dutton, on the death of Lawrence Dutton, of Dutton, esq; without lawful issue, in the year 1526,) and Ralph Richard, and Randle.

Richard Dutton, third son of Peter Dutton of Hatton, the elder, married Mary, daughter of — Mainwaring of Croxton, by whom he was father of Ralph Dutton, who had two sons, William, his heir, and Richard, who settled at Cloughton in Pickering in Yorkshire, and was ancestor of the Duttons of Cloughton.

William Dutton of Chester, eldest son and heir of Ralph, married Agnes, daughter of John Conway of Flintshire, and had issue

Thomas Dutton, who purchased the manor of Sherbourn of sir Christopher Alleyn, 6 E. 6. He married three wives; by the first, Mary, daughter of Robert Taylour, of Gloucestershire, he had one daughter Anne, married to John Warnesford, of Gloucestershire: By his second wife, Anne, daughter of Stephen Kyrton, alderman of London, and relict of sir Thomas Wyther, knight, he had issue William, his heir, Thomas, and Elenor. Thomas Dutton, of Sherbourn, died in the year 1581, aged 74, and was succeeded by his eldest son, William Dutton, of Sherbourn, esq; who had livery of the manor and advowson of Sherbourn the same year his father died. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1590, and 1601, and having married Anne, daughter of sir Ambrose Nicholas, knight, lord mayor of London, deceased in the year 1618, leaving issue by his lady three sons, John, Ralph, and Giles.

John Dutton, of Sherbourn, eldest son of William, married first, Elizabeth, daughter of sir Henry Baintun, of Brumham in Wiltshire, by whom he had one son, over whose education he appointed Oliver Cromwell to be guardian, and the protector nominated a tutor to discharge his important trust; but the son died young. He had also three daughters, two of whom survived him, viz. Elizabeth, married to George Colt, esq; and Lucy, married to Thomas Pope earl of Down. To his second wife, he married Anne, fourth daughter of John King, bishop of London, who out-lived him, and was afterwards wedded to sir Richard How. John Dutton died Jan. 14, 1656, in the 63^d year of his age, and was buried at Sherbourn.

Sir Ralph Dutton, knight, died before his elder brother John. He was gentleman of the privy chamber in extraordinary to king Charles the First, and high sheriff of this county in 1630. His estate, according to sir Robert Atkyns, was sequestered in the great rebellion, and he was forced to fly beyond seas, but being driven back by contrary winds, in his passage from Leith to France, he was cast on Burnt Island, and there died in 1646. He married Mary, daughter of sir William Duncombe, of London, by whom he had issue William, and Ralph.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, as it is said in bishop Benson's visitation book, but in the deanery of Fairford, according to sir Robert Atkyns, and is worth about 40*l.* a year. James Dutton, esq; is patron, and Mr. Twining is the present incumbent.

The vicarages of Sherbourn and Winrush were consolidated into one presentment in the year 1776, and a bill is now depending in parliament, whereby the lands belonging to the vicarage of Sherbourn are to be given up, and others of equal value to be allotted to the glebe at Winrush in lieu of them. The vicarage house at the former parish is to be taken down, and another built for the incumbent at the latter, and the lands laid contiguous to it. The business was not completed when this account was printed, but will be further advanced before that of Winrush goes to the press, where a more perfect account may be expected.

The church is newly built, at the sole expence of the late James-Lenox Dutton, esq; and consists of the nave only, with a portico on the north side, supported by two freestone pillars, of the Doric order, and has a handsome spire at the west end.

And the body of William Dutton his sonne who died in the yeare 1618.

And Anne his wife the daught^r of Sir Thomas Nicholas of London.

And the body of Thomas Dutton the sonne of William Dutton who died in the year 1610.

Within the communion rails are two noble marble monuments. That on the left hand is the more antient. In a niche, between two Corinthian pillars supporting a pediament, is the figure, in white marble, of John Dutton, esq; standing erect, and covered with a winding sheet, the folds of which are very gracefully disposed, and the whole figure exceedingly well executed. On a table at his feet, it is thus engraven in capital letters :

JOHN DVTTON

On the sinister side of the figure is this inscription :

The other is a very large monument of white marble, representing sir John Dutton in the William Dutton, son of sir Ralph, succeeded his uncle John Dutton in the manor of Sherbourn, and other great estates. He married Mary, daughter of lord Scudamore, and widow of Thomas Russel, of Worcestershire, esq; and having served the office of high sheriff of Gloucestershire, in the year 1667, died without issue, and was succeeded by his brother, Sir Ralph Dutton, baronet, son of sir Ralph, who married Grise, daughter of sir Edward Pool, of Kembles in Wiltshire, by whom he had an only daughter, who died without issue. By his second wife, Mary, daughter of Dr. John Barwick, he had issue two sons, John and Ralph, and many daughters. He served in several parliaments as knight of the shire, and was lord of the manor of Sherbourn at the beginning of the present century.

Sir John Dutton, baronet, son of sir Ralph by his second wife, married first, Mary, only child of sir Rushout Cullen, of Upton Warwickshire, baronet, by whom he had no issue; secondly, Mary, daughter of Francis Keck, of Great Tew, in the county of Oxford, esq; and by her had an only daughter, who died an infant. Sir John himself deceasing without issue, in the year 1742-3, bequeathed his estates to James-Lenox Naper, esq; of the kingdom of Ireland, his father's son, who assumed the name and arms of Dutton. He married two wives; by the first he had one son John, who died unmarried before his father. By his second wife, Jane, daughter of Edmund Bond, of Newland, in this county, esq; he left issue three sons, James, William, and Ralph; and four daughters, Anne, married to Samuel Blackwell, of Williamstrip, in this county, esq; Mary, married to Thomas Master, of Cirencester, esq; Frances, married to Charles Lambart, of Beaupark in the kingdom of Ireland, esq; and Jane, married to Thomas-William Coke, of Longford in Derbyshire, and Holkham in Norfolk, esq; one of the knights of the shire for the county of Norfolk. James-Lenox Dutton died in the year 1776, and was succeeded by his eldest surviving son, James Dutton, esq; who married Elizabeth, the youngest sister of the before-mentioned Thomas-William Coke. He is the twenty-third in lineal descent from Hudard, or Odard, the Norman, who came into England with king William the First, and is the present lord of the manor of Sherbourn, where he resides. His arms are, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Argent; 2d and 3d, Gules, a fret Or.

N.B. This is extracted from the elaborate and well authenticated pedigree of Dutton of Dutton, compiled about the year 1669, from original records and other evidences, by sir Peter Leycester, bart. of Nether Tabley in Cheshire, and continued down to the end of the year 1694, by George Ven, vicar of Sherbourn. All since that time falls within the reach of memory.

A ground called Cruckmore, worth 40*s.* a year, is given towards the maintenance of a school-master. Atkyns. Alexander Ready permitted the issues and profits of this ground to be applied to the use of a school, so long as there was a master ; but I don't find that it was a permanent establishment.

At the beginning of this century, there were 60 houses, and about 300 inhabitants in the parish, 5 of whom were freeholders ; yearly births 10, burials 9. Atkyns. The present number of houses is nearly the same, but the people are increased to about 360.

SHIPTON MOIGN and DOVEL

IS a pleasant, healthy village, in the hundred of Longtree, three miles south from Tetbury, three north-westward from Malmesbury in Wiltshire, and about twenty-one southward from Gloucester.

The parish is bounded on the east by Wiltshire, and a small stream, which rises at Westonbirt, runs through it, and falls into the Avon at Malmesbury.

Shipton, antiently written Scriptune, is of doubtful original. Sir Robert Atkyns conjectured that it was so called from the sheep kept here. But Scip may be the name of the proprietor whose town it was. Moign and Dovel are additional names, of later date, taken from the families of Le Moyn, and De Dove, who were owners of the respective manors so called, and were given to distinguish them from two other places of the name of Shipton, in this county.

The village is ornamented with two gentlemen's seats, of which one belongs to the reverend Mr.

Nowel, who, in right of his wife, is lord of the manor. It is of freestone, built about half a century ago, with balustrades over the Attic story, and the family arms of Hodges in a large shield (Azure, a fess between three crescents argent) are placed in the centre of the principal front, facing the north.

The other is the antient seat of the Estcourts. It is a large old house, with a great gate-way in front, and has a venerable and respectable appearance. This is at present the seat and residence of Thomas Estcourt, esq; who is preparing to build a new house on his estate at Long Newton, near Tetbury.

This parish is distinguished for having been the birth-place of John Oldham, an ingenious person of the last age, who was the author of a well known, and much admired book of poems, and died in the prime of life, in the year 1683, aged 30.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Domesday-book takes notice of three manors in this parish, but the accounts of the two most considerable were overlooked by sir Robert Atkyns. They are set down under the title Terra Mathiu de Moretanie, and are thus described in the record:

' Maci de Mauritania holds Scipetone in ' Langetrewes hundred, of the king. Strang, the ' Dane, held it. There are ten hides taxed. In
' demean are two plow-tillages, and four villeins,
' and two bordars, with four plow-tillages. There ' are four servi, and a mill of 10*s.* and pasture
' worth 2*s.* It was worth 15*l.* now 8*l.*'

' The same Maci holds Scipetone in Lange-
' trewes hundred, and Rumbald holds it of him.
' There are ten hides taxed. John held it in the ' time of king Edward. In demean are three ' plow-tillages, and four villeins, and eight bor-
' dars, with four plow-tillages. There are four
' servi, and a mill of 12*s.* and pasture worth 2*s.*
' It was worth 15*l.* now 8*l.*'

' The same Maci holds one hide there, and ' Rumbald holds it of him. Aluuin held it, and ' could go where he pleased, and Rainbert Flan-
' drensis likewise enjoyed it. There is one plow' tillage in demean, and one villein, and one bor-
' dar, with half a plow-tillage. It was worth
' 20*sol.* now 14*sol.*' Domesday, p. 79.

There was another manor, thus described in the antient survey :

' The same William [de Ow] holds Sciptone in ' Langetreu hundred, in the same manner as
' Ralph de Limefi held it. Wluui held it in the ' time of king Edward. There are two hides.
' In demean are two plow-tillages, and two bor-
' dars, and eight servi. It is worth and was worth
' 40*sol.* Wluui could go where he pleased. Hugh ' holds it of William.' Ibid. p. 73.

William le Moynne was seized of a manor in this parish 5 H. 3. which he held of the crown by the service of keeping the king's larder ; and he pur-purchased a charter of free warren in all his lands in Gloucestershire in the 37th year of the same reign. Walter de Stukeley, sheriff of Gloucestershire, in obedience to the king's writ, returned into the exchequer the names of all the vills in the county, with their respective proprietors; and in his list it is said, that Johanna le Moyn, Margaret Gifford, William Skay, and William de Dowe, were lords of the vill of Shipton Moynt, in Langtree hundred 9 E. 1. This return seems to have been preparatory to the writs of Quo warranto that were brought against almost every considerable landholder in the kingdom, by king Edward the First, in the fifteenth year of his reign, in order to oblige them to shew by what title they held their estates, or enjoyed certain privileges therein. However necessary such a method of proceeding might have been in certain cases, it was made use of by that king, who was chief lord of many manors, and other estates, as an expedient to fill his own coffers, by extorting exorbitant fines from the subject for fresh grants, where the title-deeds and evidences respecting estates were lost or destroyed, as was frequently the case, during the civil commotions that distracted the kingdom in his father's reign. And as the fines for renewal were arbitrary, and generally excessive, this measure was regarded by the subject in a light little better than confiscation by lawless violence.

A writ of Quo warranto was brought against William le Moygne, son of William, to oblige him to shew by what right he enjoyed divers privileges in Schipton, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1. and he died seized thereof in the 23d year of the same reign. Henry le Moygne, son of the last William, was seized of the manor and advowson of Shiptone Moygne 1 E. 2. and dying 8 E. 2. the escheator's inquisition found that John le Moygne was his son and heir; but Joan, the widow of Henry, was endowed with the manor; upon whose death, 14 E. 3. livery was granted to Robert le Moygne, son of Henry, the same year. Sir Henry Moigne, son of Robert, succeeded his father, and died seized of Shipton Moigne and Hullecot [Hull-court] 49 E. 3. Sir John Moigne, son and heir of sir Henry, died seized of the manor of Shipton Moign, and left Elizabeth, his only daughter and heiress, who carried this estate by her marriage with William de Stourton, into that name and family. Upon occasion of this alliance, the Stourtons took for their crest, A demy monk, with a penitential whip in his hand, alluding to the name of Moign, which signifies a monk.

William de Stourton, descended from an antient family residing at Stourton in Wiltshire, was seized of Shipton 21 R. 2. in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter of sir John Moigne, and died 1 H. 5. John de Stourton, son of William, was under age at his father's death, and had not livery of this manor until 9 H. 5. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 18 H. 6. and having been created a baron in the 28th year of that reign, died seized of Shipton Moign, Hull-court, and Hamvelle, alias Vetham, or Veelham near Berkeley, and was succeeded by William lord Stourton, who had livery of this manor the same year. He married Margaret, one of the daughters and coheiresses of sir John Chidioc, and died 17 E. 4. likewise seized of Shipton, and of Veelham near Berkeley. John lord Stourton, son and heir of William, had livery of the manor upon the decease of his father, and dying 2 R. 3. William lord Stourton, his son, had livery the same year, and having married the sister of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, died 14 H. 8. William lord Stourton succeeded his father, but dying soon after, Edward lord Stourton, his brother, had livery 16 H. 8. and died seized of Shipton Moign in the 27th year of the same reign. William lord Stourton, son of Edward, had livery of this manor 33 H. 8. and dying 2 E. 6. left Charles lord Stourton, his son, who was hanged at Salisbury for murder, 3 Mariæ.

The manor came very soon after to the family of Hodges, or as they are sometimes called Hedges. John Hodges, or Hedges, esq; upon the death of his father, had livery of the manor of Shipton Moyne 20 Eliz. and died seized of Shipton Moyne and Shipton Dovell, and of the advowson of the church, in the 40th year of the same reign. He was likewise seized of the neighbouring manor of Eston Grey, in Wiltshire, and of the advowson of that church, at the same time. The escheator's inquisition found that Shipton Moyne and Shipton Dovell, and the advowson of the church, were held of the queen in capite, by the 40th part of a knight's fee, and were worth 21 l. 2 s. 0 d. ob. clear of all reprises. Thomas Hodges, son and heir of John, was twenty-one years old and upwards at the taking of the inquisition, and was lord of this manor in the year 1608, and high sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1622. Another Thomas Hodges, esq; was lord of the manor, and died in the year 1696. He married Edith, youngest daughter of Thomas Estcourt, of this parish, esq; who surviving him, died in the year 1717. Thomas Hodges, esq; son of the last-mentioned Thomas and Edith his wife, dying under age, in the year 1708, this manor and estate came to his younger brother, Estcourt Hodges, esq. The reverend Walter Hodges was lord of this manor, and the last male heir of his family. He was provost of Oriel college, Oxford, and vice-chancellor of that university, and died in the year 1757, aged 62. The reverend Mr. Nowel, in right of his wife, one of the coheiresses of the Hodges family, is the present lord of the manor, and resides here.

There is another very considerable estate in this parish, belonging to the antient family of the Estcourts, who have resided in this place upwards of 300 years, and seem to have taken their name from a manor they enjoyed here, called Le Estcourt, because it lay eastward of the before-mentioned manor.

John Estcourt died seized of a manor in Shipton Moigne 14 E. 4. And it appears by the escheator's inquisition, taken 42 Eliz. that Thomas Estcourt, of Shipton Moigne, esq; died Oct. 25, 41 Eliz. seized of a manor, and lands in Shipton Moigne called Le Estcourt, worth 8*l.* per ann. which he held of Thomas Hedges, gent. as of his manor of Shipton Moigne. And of another manor and lands in Shipton Moigne, worth together 40*s.* which he held of the queen in common soccage, as of her manor of East Greenwich in Kent; and of the manor of Wynston, in the county of Gloucester, worth 5*l.* which he held of Anthony Hungerford, as of his manor of Wynston. And that in the 39th year of the same reign he had enfeoffed Ralph Sheldon, and others, with his manor or farm and lands at Combsend; and with lands in Old Sadbury, Little Sadbury, Dodington, Tormarton, and Yate, in this county, in trust, by way of jointure for Mary, daughter of William Savage, and wife of Thomas Estcourt, his son and heir apparent. Thomas Estcourt, the father, died seized also of other very considerable estates in Long Newton, Westport, Malmesbury, Burton Hill, Sherston, Sherston Magna, Pynckene, Willesley, Chippenham, Rowden, Waddefwycke, Box, and Haselbery, all in the county of Wilts, and left Thomas his son thirty years old at the time of his death. Walter Estcourt, esq; son of Thomas, died in the year 1726, and left this manor and estate to Thomas Estcourt, esq; upon whose death, in 1746, the manor came to Edmond Estcourt, esq; his only brother and heir. He married Anna-Maria, third daughter and coheirefs of Charles Yate, late of Colthrope in this county, by whom he had one daughter, Anna-Maria, who was married to the late Thomas Earl, of Malmesbury, esq; deceased; but he bequeathed the bulk of his ample fortune to Thomas Estcourt, esq; son of Matthew Estcourt, of Cam in this county, who is the present lord of this manor, and proprietor of many great estates in this parish and elsewhere. His arms are, Ermine, on a chief indented gules three estoiles Or.

Jeffry Pulham granted two yard-lands in this place to the abbey of Cirencester, 32 E. 1. Lands in Shipton Moigne, belonging to the abbey of Cirencester, were granted to John Dudley and John Ascough 17 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth 160*l.* a year. Mrs. Nowel is patroness, and Mr. Huntely is the present incumbent.

The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, consists of the nave and two ailes, with a tower, in which are five bells.

Bequeathed his Estate to the latter,
That the Fame so long conserved of his Ancestors,
Might again revive and flourish,
Through the participation of his distinguished Merit.
An Intention so great, so glorious, in the bountiful Testator Worthy of better Times, a kind of Prodigy in these.

With a Zeal uninstigated by Profit; [Welfare,
He considered private Happiness as dependant on the publick

SHIPTON OLIFFE

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Bradley, five miles distant east from Cheltenham, six north-westward from Northleach, and fourteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

It lies on the Cotswold hills, and has nothing curious of any sort to distinguish it. The etymology of Shipton is uncertain; but Oliffe, or Olive, is an addition taken from a family of that name, who were owners of the manor, and resided in the parish for several generations.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor belonged to the archbishop of York, at the time of the general survey, wherein it is thus recorded, under the title Terra Thome Archiepi, viz.

' Gundulf held, and [still] holds, Scipetune, in ' Wacrescumbe hundred, [as] one manor of one
' hide, and pays tax. There is one plow-tillage
' in demean, and it is worth 8 sol. He holds it
' of archbishop Thomas.' Domesday-book, p. 69.

This manor is not always distinguished in the records from the neighbouring parish of Shipton
Solers, which necessarily occasions confusion.

John de Turbervil died seized of this manor 17 Joh. In the sheriff's return of all the villis in this

this county, 9 E. 1. there is mention of one Shipton only, in the hundred of Bradley.

It came afterwards to the Olliffs, who continued in possession 'till the end of the seventeenth century, when Ralph Olliff, gent. sold it to William Peachy, esq; whose two daughters, Margaret Peachy, and Susanna Peachy, are the present ladies of the manor.

Lands in Shipton belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and were granted to Cicely Pickerel 17 Eliz.

H A M L E T. Hampen is a hamlet in this parish, in which there were two estates mentioned in Domesday. ' Pin held one manor, of one hide, ' in Hagepine, in Wacrescumbe hundred, and it ' paid tax. Ansgar holds it of archbishop Thomas, ' and has one plow-tillage in demean. It was ' worth 20s. and is now worth 10s.' p. 70.

' William the son of Baderon holds Hagenepene ' in Wacrescumbe hundred, and Goisfrid holds it ' of him. Eduui held it, and there were five ' hides. There are two plow-tillages in demean, ' and six villeins, with three plow-tillages, and ' there are four servi. This land pays tax. It ' was worth 100s. now only 60s.' p. 74.

These estates were afterwards distinguished by Upper and Lower Hampen. King Henry the Third granted court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Shipton, (by which I understand Hampen in Shipton) to the knights templers, whose right to those privileges was allowed in the proceedings on a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. They were seized of Shipton near Withington (i. e. Hampen in Shipton) 2 E. 3. and the manor was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3. The order of knights templers was suppressed in England, and their estates given to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem; and at the general dissolution of the knights hospitallers, this estate was granted to Edward Fiennes, lord Clinton and Say, and to Robert Tyrwit, 35 H. 8.

But there was another estate at Hampen, dignified with the title of a manor, held of the archbishop of York, by Thomas Lane, who died seized of the same 37 H. 8. and left Thomas his son eighteen years old. Hampen was afterwards the property of Lionel Rich, of Upper Dowdeswell, esq; out of whose family it passed lately, by purchase, to Mr. Van Notten, of London.

William Docket, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of lands in Over Hampen, and Nether Hampen, to Edward Tame, 19 H. 7. Lands in Hannypen belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and were granted to William Sharrington 34 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, according to the bishop's visitation book; but was formerly accounted to lie in that of Wincombe. It is worth 85*l.* a year. The ladies of the manor are patrons, and Mr. Chapone is the present incumbent.

Tithes in Shipton Oliffe, formerly belonging to Gloucester abbey, were granted to sir Edward Warner 4 Eliz. and are now the property of Thomas Browne, esq.

The church is small, with a cross aisle on the south side, and a low spire at the west end.

There are memorials in the chancel, for Gyles Olliff, gent. who died in 1699, aged 72; Ralph Olliff, gent. who died in 1702, aged 39; Gyles and Robert Olliff, sons of Ralph Olliff, gent. who died in 1696 and 1697 respectively; and for several other persons of that family, whose inscriptions are now obliterated.

SHIPTON SOLERS

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Bradley, about five miles eastward from Cheltenham, six westward from Northleach, and fourteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

It is severed in the middle, by the intervention of Shipton Oliffe, and the lands of both parishes are very much intermixed. The turnpike-road from Gloucester, to Oxford and London, leads through the parish, where there is a good inn, called Frogmill, on the east bank of the river Coln, which separates it from Withington.

Solers is the name of an antient family of eminence, who owned the manor, and had other considerable property in Gloucestershire, about the time of king Edward the Second.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There were several estates in Shipton, at the time of the general survey.

' William Leuric holds three hides, less one ' yard-land, in Scipetune in Wacrescumbe hun- ' dred, and pays tax. Goisfrid holds them of him. ' Osgot held them. There is one plow-tillage in ' demean, and a priest, and one villein, and four ' servi, without any plow-tillage. It was worth ' 40s. now 20s.' Domesday, p. 74.

' Durand of Glowec' holds Sciptune in Wacres- ' cumbe hundred, and Radulf holds it of him. ' Eduui held it. There are three hides and a half ' taxed.

'taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and three villeins, with two plow-tillages, and four servi, and ten acres of meadow. It was worth 4*l.* now 40*s.*' Ibid. p. 77.

'Hugh Lafne holds Sceiptune in Wacrescumb hundred. There are five hides taxed. Uluward held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and four villeins, and one bordar, with two plow-tillages. There are five servi, and a mill of 10*s.* It was worth 4*l.* now 3*l.*' Ibid. p. 78.

'Ansfrid de Cormelies holds three yard-lands in Sceiptune, in Wacrescumb hundred. Bil held them for a manor, and paid tax. There is one plow-tillage in demean. It is worth and was worth 10*s.* This Bil could go where he pleased. Ib. p. 78.

Sir Robert Atkyns says, Walter de Lacy 'gave sixteen manors in Glostershire to Ansfrid de Cormeiles, who had married his niece. This Shipton was one of those manors, of which Ansfrid de Cormeile was seized at the time of the general survey, by virtue of the gift from Walter de Lacy.' But sir Robert was not aware that his assertion is a flat contradiction to the authority of Domesday, where, under the title Terra Ansfridi de Cormeliis, it is said, These lands [i. e. Pantelie, Chilecot, Chitiford, and Hege,] and Winestan, and Tantesborne, above-written, Ansfrid received of Walter de Laci, when he married his niece. But he holds the other estates of the king; among which Shipton was one.

Richard de Cormeile was son and heir of Ansfrid, and dying 23 H. 2. his wife, Beatrix, surviving him, enjoyed this manor in dower; but after her death, it descended to Walter de Cormeile, son of Richard, who left three daughters coheiresses. Margaret, the eldest daughter, was married to Hugh Poyer, and died 20 H. 3. leaving issue two daughters coheiresses, the elder married to Robert Archer, and the younger wedded to Simon Solers, who held this manor in right of his wife, and from him it obtained the name of Shipton Solers.

Thomas Solers was son and heir of Simon, and John Solers, son of Thomas, died seized of Shipton 4 E. 2. from which time I find no mention of this family at Shipton.

John Tyrrel held the manor of Shipton Solers 34 E. 3. which passed afterwards into the family of the Twiniho's, who were proprietors of this manor for several generations. Edward Twiniho, the last heir male, died 22 H. 8. and left two daughters coheiresses, who had livery of it the same year. Anne, the elder daughter, was married to Henry Heydon; and Catherine, the younger, wedded to John Daunsey.

This manor was assigned to the Heydons. Edward Heydon, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608; and the heirs of that family carried it by her marriage to William Peachy, esq; who was owner of it when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it; and was succeeded by his son William, whose son, William Peachy, esq; is the present lord of this manor, but resides at Petworth in Essex. His arms are, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Argent, within a bordure ingrailed azure. 2d and 3d, Azure, a bordure ingrailed argent.

A messuage in this parish, which belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, was granted by the crown to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple 35 H. 8.

What sir Robert Atkyns says of the knights templers being seized of Shipton, should not, as I apprehend, be applied to this manor; but to Hampen in Shipton Oliffe, where they had an estate, which was granted away by the crown, at the general suppression of knights hospitallers, as mentioned in the proper place.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 65*l.* a year, of which Mr. Peachy is patron, and Mr. Chapone is the present incumbent.

Two yard-lands belong to the glebe.

A portion of tithes in Shipton Solers, which belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, was granted to the bishoprick 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6.

The church is small, with a low turret at the west end.

S H U R D I N G T O N

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, about five miles southward from Cheltenham, six northward from Painswick, and about six east from Gloucester.

It is pleasantly situated under the west side of that ridge of hills which separates the Vale from the hill country, and shelters it from those chilling easterly winds that generally prevail in the spring. A small brook runs from hence into the Severn at Sandhurst.

There is a large tumulus, or barrow, in this parish, which was opened by some workmen, not many years ago, to dig for stone, and having sunk to the depth of about sixteen feet, they discovered a stone sepulchre, seven feet long, and four broad, and in it a perfect skeleton. The bones were fresh and firm, and the teeth white as ivory. Over the head hung a helmet, which was so entirely corroded by rust, that it fell to pieces on the slightest touch. I am informed that there was nothing beside the helmet, with the remains of the corps in the tomb, that could lead to any discovery, except some characters, which those who saw them read for One thousand; as if designed to point out the year when the corps was interred, answering to the 21st year of the reign of king Ethelred, commonly called the Unready. This was probably the corps of some great man, slain in the war between our own countrymen and the piratical Danes, who in the nineteenth year of that king's reign, failed up the mouth of the Severn, and made inroads up the country, perhaps to these parts.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It was found by inquisition, taken 8 E. 2. that the manor of Scherneton, with view of frank pledge, was held of Gilbert de Clare, the last earl of Gloucester and Hertford of that name, at the time of his death. Peter de la Mere held this manor, with free warren, 12 E. 2. and John Maltravers was seized thereof the same year. John Maltravers, the elder, died seized of this manor 31 E. 3. whereupon sir John Maltravers, his son, had livery the same year, and died 38 E. 3. Agnes, the widow of John Maltravers, died seized of the third part of this manor, which she held in dower, 49 E. 3. John lord Maltravers, son of the last John, died 5 R. 2. and Henry Maltravers, his only son, deceasing without issue, the manors of Shurdington, King's Stanley, Woodchester, and Stonehouse, came to Elianor, sister and heiress of Henry Maltravers, who being married to John Arundel, sometimes called John Fitz-Alan, second son of Richard earl of Arundel, carried those manors into that name and family. Eleanor Maltravers, after the death of John Arundel, was married to Reginald lord Cobham, who was seized of Shurdington, in her right, 4 H. 4. and she continued to hold the manor 'till her death, 6 H. 4.

John Fitz-Alan, son of John, and grandson of John Fitz-Alan and Elianor, the heiress of the Maltravers's, became earl of Arundel, by the death of Thomas earl of Arundel without male issue. He was slain near Beauvois in France, and by an inquisition taken 13 H. 6. was found to have died seized of the manors of Shurdington, Stonehouse, Stoke Archer, King's Stanley, and Woodchester, in Gloucestershire, beside great estates in other counties. Humphry earl of Arundel, son and heir of John, was six years old at his father's death, and dying soon afterwards, William earl of Arundel, his uncle, was next heir, and had livery of this manor 18 H. 6. But Elianor, the widow of John earl of Arundel, held the manor in dower. She was afterwards married to sir Richard Poinings, and sir Walter Hungerford, successively, and died 33 H. 6. The before-mentioned William earl of Arundel married Joan, daughter of Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury; and dying 3 H. 7. was succeeded by his son, Thomas earl of Arundel, who married Margaret, daughter of Richard Widevile, earl of Rivers, and died seized of the manors of Shurdington, Archerds, King's Stanley, Stonehouse, and Woodchester, 16 H. 8. William earl of Arundel, son of Thomas, had livery of these manors the same year, and having married Anne, sister to Henry earl of Northumberland died seized of all the above-mentioned manors, 35 H. 8.

The archbishop of York was seized of the manor of Shurdington 14 E. 3. and it seems that the great persons before-mentioned held it of the archbishops; for in the grant of the manor to sir Thomas Chamberlayne, 6 E. 6. it is mentioned to have belonged to the archbishop of York.

Edmond Chamberlayne, of Mauerbury, esq; great grandson of sir Thomas, was lord of it about the year 1691, and dying in 1755, was succeeded by his only son Edmond, upon whose death, in the year 1774, the manor descended to the reverend John Chamberlayne, his eldest son and heir, who is the present lord of the manor. His pedigree and arms are given under Mauerbury, in the parish of Stow.

Henry de Pet held one plow-tillage in Great Shurdington, of John Giffard of Brimpsfield, and was seized of it 1 E. 3.

HAMLET. Uphatherly has been considered by some as a distinct parish, but it is now esteemed a hamlet in Shurdington. It has its own constable, and overseer of the poor. John de Chanfy held the hamlet of Atherley, of the honour of Walingford, by the service of half a knight's fee, 6 E. 2. and held a court, the perquisites of which were valued at 12*d.* Esch. Robert Presbury was seized of lands in Uphatherly 18 E. 2. John Moor, the younger, levied a fine of lands in Uphatherly, to the use of Thomas Lane, 15 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, within the deanery of Winchcombe, and is annexed to Badgworth. Jesus college, Oxford, and Christ college, Cambridge, have the impropriation.

The tithes of Shurdington belonged antiently to the Benedictine nunnery of Uske, in Monmouthshire, and were granted, together with the chapel of Uphatherly and South Hatherly, to James Gunter and Walter Lewis, 37 H. 8.

Tithes in Shurdington and Uphatherly, lately belonging to the nunnery of Uske, were granted to John Fernham 22 Eliz.

The chapel is dedicated to St. Paul, and has a handsome steeple at the west end, and an aisle on the north side, called Hatherly aisle, which is kept in repair by the inhabitants of the hamlet of Uphatherly.

Benefactions.

Nicholas Blount gave 40*s.* a year for six sermons. William Mills, yeoman, gave 5*s.* a year to the poor, charged on lands in Little Shurdington.

SIDDINGTON St. MARY

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, one mile south from Cirencester, six north-westward from Cricklade in Wiltshire, and eighteen south-eastward from Gloucester. It is bounded by Cirencester on the north and west, by Lower Siddington and South Cerney on the east, and by part of Wiltshire on the south.

The greater part of the parish is in tillage, the rest is good meadow and pasture ground.

The antient and significant name is Sudintone, or Suditone, that is, the South-town, in respect of Cirencester; but it is most usually called Upper Siddington. Both the Siddingtons formerly made but one vill, tho' the manors were held independently of each other, and often by different owners; for which reason the sheriff, in his return of all the villis of this county, 9 E. 1. mentions one Siddington only, under which both manors were included, for he says, Sodington, et sunt Dni eiusd. vill. Hugo de Spencer, et Johannes de Langley, et Gualter de Langley; that is, Sodington, and Hugh de Spencer, and John de Langley, and Walter de Langley are lords of the same vill.

Doctor George Bull, was rector of this place, and afterwards bishop of St. David's. He told Doctor Parsons, chancellor of this diocese, a remarkable anecdote of the longevity of his parishioners here, ten of whom he had buried, whose ages together made about a thousand years, and two of them were one hundred and twenty-three years old each.

Cotemporary with doctor Bull, was one John Roberts, alias Hayward, who lived here upon a little estate of his own, which is still the property of a descendant from him, of the same name, now a merchant in London. That man was of a religious turn, and seems to have been the chief in these parts, of the people called Quakers. In the reign of king Charles the Second, when persecution for religion ran high, he drank a potion of that bitter cup, as appears by the memoirs of his life, written by his son, and published in 1725. Bishop Nicholson, however, before whom he was many times cited, is represented in that narrative to have been a person of greater moderation than most of his brethren, and was far from being displeased with the moral principles, plain dealing, and sensible answers of that man, tho' he could not consistently approve some of his religious notions.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The same Humphry [the chamberlain] holds two hides in Sudintone, in Cirecestre hundred, and Anschitil holds them of him. Aluuard held them for a manor. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and two bordars, with half a plow-tillage, and a mill of 5*s.* [rent]. It is worth and was worth 40*s.* He that held it could go where he pleased.' Domesday, p. 79.

'The same William [the son of Baderon] holds one hide in Suditone in Cirecestre hundred. Ofuid held it in the time of king Edward, and could go where he pleased. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four servi. It is worth and was worth 24*s.*' Ibid. p. 73.

The sheriff returned that Hugh de Spencer was lord of this manor 9 E. 1. as already observed, and it is very probable that his family continued possessed of it 'till the latter part of the next reign, for the manor of Over Sodington was granted to Edmond earl of Kent, 1 E. 3. subject to a reserved rent of 23*l.* and it is recited in the grant to have lately belonged to Hugh le Dispencer the younger. Edmond earl of Kent being attainted of treason, and executed at Winchester by the villainous contrivance of Roger Mortimer, earl of March, in the year 1330, this manor, together with great part of that nobleman's estate, was granted to Jeffery Mortimer, third son of the earl of March, 4 E. 3. who enjoyed his ill-got possessions but for a few months, when Roger Mortimer being himself attainted, and executed at a place called the Elms, about a mile from London, the sentence of Edmond earl of Kent was reversed, his widow admitted to the enjoyment of her jointure, and his son, John earl of Kent, was restored in blood, and became possessed of this manor, of which he died seized 26 E. 3. without issue; and Elizabeth his widow held it in dower, and died 12 H. 4.

Sir Edward le Dispencer, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Bartholomew Burghurst, were seized of the manor of Sodington, 49 E. 3. probably in trust for the widow of John earl of Kent.

Edmond Mortimer, earl of March, descended from the heiress of the earls of Kent, died seized of this manor without issue, 3 H. 6. and Joan his sister, then the widow of sir John Grey, had livery thereof 4 H. 6.

The manor came soon afterwards to Walter Langley, lord of Lower Siddington, whose widow, Isabel, died seized of both those manors 14 E. 4.

Henry Kettleby was seized of Over Sodington, and Nether Sodington, in right of Isabel his wife, (perhaps the heiress of the Langleys) who died 31 H. 8. and John Kettleby, their son, had livery granted to him 32 H. 8. Andrew Kettleby died died 1 Jac. without issue, seized of the manors of Over Suddington, and Nether Suddington, then worth 19*l.* 10*s.* a year clear, which he held of the king in capite, and by will gave all his lands in Gloucestershire, and Wiltshire, to his wife Jane, and her heirs. Esch.

From the heir of Kettleby, the above-mentioned manors passed, by purchase, to the Danvers family, 5 Jac. Henry Danvers, earl of Danby, was lord of both manors in the year 1608, and sold them to sir Henry Poole, in the 13th year of the same reign. Sir William Poole settled the manor and hundred of Cirencester, and the manors of Upper and Lower Siddington, on Anne his daughter, who was married to James earl of Newburgh. Charles earl of Newburgh, their son and heir, left the above manors to Frances his widow, in fee; and she sold them, about the year 1695, to sir Benjamin Bathurst. Allen, first earl of Bathurst, son and heir of sir Benjamin, dying in the year 1775, these manors descended to his son, Henry earl of Bathurst, the present proprietor. For his lordship's pedigree and arms, see Cirencester.

John de Langley, at the time of his death, 18 E. 2. was seized of one messuage, one plow-tillage, and fourteen acres and a half of meadow in Over Suddington, in trust for a chantry in the church of Lower Suddington. Richard Urdle levied a fine of lands in Siddington Over, to John Young and William Lypiat, 18 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester. This and the vicarage of Siddington St. Peter, are worth together 210*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron of both livings, and John Washbourne, M. A. is the present incumbent.

The church is a small building, dedicated to St. Mary, and has a small chapel on the north side, which was likewise dedicated to the same saint, as may be gathered from two verses against the south wall, which were legible a few years ago, but now obliterated, viz.

Cælos assumpt. cū nato virgo Maria
Crimina tu cuncta dilue virgo pia.

At the east end is a niche, where the statue of the saint stood; and the whole chapel was ornamented with a profusion of painting, carving, and short sentences and verses, which are decay'd, except the following lines in old characters, painted on the inside of the door, which are very legible:

Annā solet dici tres concipisse Marias

SIDDINGTON St. PETER

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, one mile south from Cirencester, six north-westward from Cricklade in Wiltshire, and eighteen south-eastward from Gloucester.

It is seated on a flat, on the banks of the Churn, which runs through the parish; and it is commonly called Lower Siddington, in contradistinction to the adjoining village of Upper Siddington, which lies on a pleasant elevation at the distance of about half a mile. The parish has likewise been distinguished by the addition of Langley, which it received from the family of that name, who were lords of the manor for many generations, and had a large mansion house near the church; but it has been long since razed to the ground, and nothing remains to show where it stood, but part of the moat with which it was surrounded.

During the winter, and the former part of the spring, the farmers here lead the water over the meadows, (which they call drowning) by means of sluices from the river Churn, after the example of their neighbours at Driffild, under which parish I have given the method of doing it, with a view to promote the public good.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The same Hascoit [Mufard] holds Sudintone, in Cirecestre hundred. There are ten hides taxed besides the demean. Ernesi held it. In demean are three plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and ten bordars, with a priest, having five plow-tillages and a half. There are seven servi, and twenty acres of meadow. It was worth 10*l.* now 8*l.* Domesday, p. 78.

From the above Hascoit Mufard, who accompanied king William the First in his invasion of England, this manor descended, like Miserden, down to 1 E. 1. when Ralph Mufard died seized of it. Jeffry de Langeley held Southington and Weston the following year, and Walter de Langley, son of Jeffry, was lord of the manor of Sodington 8 & 9 E. 1.

It was held of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, 15 E. 1. against whom a writ of Quo warranto was then brought, to set forth his right to the privilege of a court leet in Siddington; and he pleaded a grant to his ancestor Richard de Clare, 47 H. 3. and his claim was allowed.

John de Langley, son of Walter, was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 1 E. 2. and died seized of this manor in the 18th year of the same reign. William de Caroswell, and Mary his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Nether Sodington to the use of themselves for their lives, the remainder to Jeffry Langley, son of Jeffry, in taille, 4 E. 3. Joan, the widow of John Trillow, died seized of Nether Sodington 49 E. 3. It must be supposed that she had been the wife of Jeffry Langley, and held the manor in dower. John Langley, grandson of John, was seized of Sodington Langley, alias Nether Sodington, Rodmarton, and Torleton, 10 H. 4. Jeffry Langley held Sodington of Edmond earl of March, 3 H. 6. and John Langley, esq; died seized of it, and of a manor in Turk Dean, in the 39th year of that reign. The manors of Upper and Nether Sodington, and Turk Dean, came next to Walter Langley, whose widow, Isabel, died seized of them 14 E. 4. and from that time both the Siddingtons have been enjoy'd by the same proprietors. The earl of Bathurst is the present lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 30*l.* a year, and has the same patron and incumbent as Siddington St. Mary, under which parish the outgoings are set down; except that the vicarage pays 7*s.* 8*d.* yearly to the crown, for tithes and glebe in Chesterton.

Jordan de Clinton gave the manor of Sodington, consisting of lands and tithes, with their appurtenances, to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. The impropriation was vested in Mr. Coxwell of Turk Dean, at the beginning of this century, and passed afterwards to sir John Nelthorp, of whom it was purchased, in the year 1776, together with the impropriation of Chesterton, in Cirencester, by the earl of Bathurst, the present proprietor.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It has a handsome chapel on the north side, and an unfinished tower, with three bells, at the west end of the chapel.

The chapel was built by Edmund Langley, in honour of the salutation of the virgin Mary. It is a handsomer structure than the church, from which it is separated by pillars. There is a cut through the stone-work that divides the chancel from the body of the church, that the people in the chapel might see the elevation of the host.

In the upper part of the east window of the chapel, there are three large figures painted in the glass, of which only that of the virgin mother remains intire; and under their feet it is thus written: Orate: p: aīabs: edmūdi: lāgley.—et: iohē: et elizabeth: ux: ei: qui:—hāc: capellā: ī honor: salutacionis: bē. marie: fecit:

Beneath are several of the Langleys, kneeling, with books before them, and the family arms on their surcoats, viz. Gules, a saltire Or. Their respective names are written over their heads, viz. Benet Langley armig. Richard, William, William, William, Waltr, Edmude. There are several scutcheons of arms cut in stone, and fixed in the walls, and over the pillars; but they are filled up with white-wash, so that only the two following can now be distinguished; 1. (Argent) a fess, in chief three pellets. 2. Quarterly, per fess indented (Or and sable.) both which coats have likewise been born by persons of the name of Langley.

The east window of the chancel is likewise ornamented with paintings, representing several of the same family, and others, in compleat chain armour, kneeling, and the following names inscribed on the glass, viz. Galfrus langel', Iobes, Galfrus, Iobanna, Iobes fil' Iobis fili Iobis langel'. Iobes Worth, miles, and his arms, A fess, in chief three pellets.

There is a scutcheon in the south window of the chancel, bearing Argent, two chevronels gules, in chief a label of five points azure, with the name, Nichole de Semour

In the north window is this coat, Paly of six, Or and azure, with the name, Thom. Gurney

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a large grey marble stone in the chancel, which had once the effigy of a man in armour upon it, said to have been intended for one of the Langleys, but the brass is now torn off.

Upon a white marble in the chancel, is this inscription :

Here lyeth the Body of THOMAS DEACON, Esq^r.
late of ELMSTREE in the Parish of TETBURY and County of GLOUCESTER who Departed this life the 24th Day of April in the Year of our LORD
MDCCLXXXVI
and in the 46th Year of his Age.

Arms, at top, [Argent] a cross between four lions rampant [sable], on a chief [azure] three roses proper.

A neat table of white marble, against the south wall, bears this inscription :

Here lye the Remains of
The Hon^{ble} BENJAMIN BATHURST, Eldest Son of
ALLEN LORD BATHURST.
He was born the 12th: of August 1711,
And died the 23^d: of January 1767.
He married ELIZABETH BRUCE,
Second Daughter of CHARLES EARL of Ailesbury, on the 14th of December 1732.
He was a true Friend to the Poor.
This Monument is erected by his affectionate Widow.

Arms, at bottom, Sable, two bars ermine, in chief three crosses paly Or, for Bathurst. On a scutcheon of pretence, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Or, a saltire and chief gules, in a canton argent a lion rampant azure, for Bruce earl of Ailesbury. 2d and 3d,

Sir Robert Atkyns has not given the state of population as it stood at the beginning of the present century; but there are now 35 householders, and 153 inhabitants.

S I D E.

THIS small parish lies in the hundred of Rapsgate, about seven miles distant north-westward from Cirencester, four northward from Bisley, and ten south-eastward from Gloucester.

It was called Side, from its lying on the sides and slopes of hills; for the country hereabout is remarkably uneven and turgid, as at Edgworth and Miserden. The lands are chiefly arable, with some pasture ground, and woodlands, in which the herb Valerian is found in great plenty.

It is separated from Brimpsfield by a small rivulet, which is one of the heads of the river Froome, that runs to Stroud, and gives name to several places lying in its course towards the Severn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The manor is thus described in the ancient survey :

'Ansfred de Cormeile holds Side, in Respigete
'hundred, and Turstin holds it of him. Leutin
'held it of king Edward. There are three hides
'which pay tax. In demean are two plow-tillages,
'and one villein, with a priest, and three bordars,
'with one plow-tillage, and six fervi, and four
'acres of meadow. It was worth 4*l.* now 40*l.*
Domesday, p. 78.

This manor came to the Giffards of Brimpsfield, soon after the Norman conquest, and continued in that family till the reign of king Edward the Second, when John Giffard of Brimpsfield was seized of the manor of Side and Wallifwood, and of the advowson of the church; but joining with the earl of Lancaster, and other barons, in endeavouring to expel the Spencers, he was taken prisoner at the battle of Burroughbridge, in Yorkshire, attainted, and executed at Gloucester as a traitor.

Upon Giffard's attainder, the manor was granted to Hugh le Dispencer the elder, with remainder to Hugh le Dispencer the younger, 15 E. 2. The Spencers, however, enjoyed it but for a short time, and then fell a sacrifice to the fury of an injured people, the father being executed at Bristol, and the son at Hereford, in the year 1326, 20 E. 2.

The manor of Side was soon after granted to John Maltravers the younger, as a reward for murdering king Edward the Second, and he procured a fine of it from John de Callew, who was heir to the Giffards by a daughter, 4 E. 3. But Maltravers did not long enjoy the reward of his villainy, for he was soon convicted of high misdemeanors, and obliged to fly into Germany, where he lurked for many years; till having found means to perform some signal service for king Edward the Third, he threw himself at his feet, and obtained a pardon for the murder of the late king, and was restored to some of his estates. But this manor had been before granted to the Berkeleys, and Thomas lord Berkeley, the third of that name, was seized of it, and founded a chantry in his manor of Side, in the reign of king Edward the Third.

Sir John Berkeley was seized of Side, and of the advowson of the church, held of the manor of Brimpsfield, 6 H. 6. Sir Maurice Berkeley of Beverston was possessed of the manor in the 35th & 39th years of the same reign, and died seized of it 14 E. 4. as did sir William Berkeley 5 E. 6. and John Berkeley, son of sir William, had livery of it the following year.

Robert Partridge died seized of the manor of Side, alias dict. Side et Leckeampton, 42 Eliz. Esch. John Partridge, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608, and conveyed it to sir William Sandys, in trust. Mr. Nathaniel Ridler, of Edgworth, was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century. It passed afterwards to Nigel Kingscot, of Kingscot, esq; whose nephew, — Kingscot, esq; is the present proprietor of it.

Of the Church, &c.

This is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 40*l.* a year, of which the lord of the manor is patron.

The church is a small building, dedicated to St. Mary, with a low tower at the west end. There was formerly a chantry in this church, which was founded by William de Side, who took his name from the parish.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 17 houses, and about 70 inhabitants in the parish, 3 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 1. The present number of houses is only 11, and the people are decreased to 47.

S I S T O N.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Pucklechurch, seven miles distant north-eastward from Bristol, eight northward from Bath, and about thirty-six southward from Gloucester.

It is situate in the Vale, and consists principally of rich pasture ground. A rivulet rises here, and runs to Bitton, the next parish, where it falls into the Avon.

Siston House is the seat of Trotman, esq. It consists of an extensive front, and two large wings, and is ornamented with a great number of arms of families which the Dennys's have a right to quarter with their own; for the house was built by one of that family, about the time of king Charles the First, as appears by the style of the architecture, and has undergone no alterations. It is not seen at any great distance, tho' seated upon a little eminence, as it is approached to from the south and west; but the best front faces eastward.

Moon's Court, or Mound's Court, was an antient feat belonging to the Stranges, who resided there for several hundred years; and tho' now a farm house, it is rendered famous by queen Catherine Par keeping her court there, seven or eight weeks, after visiting Bath and Bristol.

This parish constitutes part of the forest of Kingswood, where coal is found in the greatest plenty; and I have it on the authority of Dr. Parsons's Manuscript Collections, which he finished about the end of the last century, that at a place called Berry, in this parish, there was then lately discovered a vein of tin-ore, intermixed with grains of silver. I made some enquiry concerning this matter, without being able to get any further information from the present inhabitants, who know nothing of it; and therefore I conclude, that the vein was very inconsiderable, and either exhausted in working, or would not bear the expence of it, and so became neglected and forgotten.

There is a large work, in the hamlet of Warmly, for converting copper into brass. They fetch the Lapis Calaminaris used in that process from Mendip-hill, in Somersetshire. There are also five or six furnaces for making of Speltre. This work now belongs to a company in Bristol; but it was carried on, 'till lately, in a more extensive manner, by gentlemen, who, about the year 1770, sold it to the present proprietors. Under the first masters, the machinery was put in motion by water, and there was a fire engine to return into the pond that water which had passed thro' the works. But the engine is now taken down, and part of the manufacture carried on at the adjacent works in the parish of Bitton.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'The same Roger [de Berchelai] holds Siston, in Pulcrecerce hundred. Anne held it. There are five hides taxed. In demean are two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and ten bordars, with four plow-tillages. There are four servi, and eight acres of meadow. It is and was worth 100*sol.*' Domesday, p. 75.

— Serlo died seized of this manor, and left his two sisters coheiresses, Agatha, the wife of Henry —, and Juliana, the wife of William de Stratton; but Anne, the widow of Serlo, had the manors of Siston, Campden, and Whittington assigned to her in dower, 4 H. 3. at which time she was the wife of Hugh de Stratton.

Siston came soon after to the Walerans. Robert Waleran married Maud, the daughter of Ralph Russel, of Durham in this county, and purchased a charter of free warren in Siston 31 H. 3. He was governor of St. Briavel's castle, warden of the forest of Dean, and four times sheriff of Gloucestershire in that reign, and died without issue 1 E. 1. Robert Walerand, uncle of John Walerand, died seized of the manor of Siston 2 E. 2. which he held only for the life of his sister Cecilia. And the escheator's inquisition found that the manor manor was holden of the heir of William de Berkeley, by the service of one knight's fee; and that it ought to devolve to Alan Plokenet, son of Alan Plokenet, son of Alice, daughter of Isabel, daughter of Thomas de Rochesford and Agatha his wife, who was the daughter of Roger de Berkeley, and had Sifton given to her in free marriage by her father. Alan Plokenet, whom sir Robert Atkyns, by mistake, calls Alan Blakeman, held Sifton 19 E. 2.

Sir Peter Corbet died seized of this manor 36 E. 3. He had married the daughter of Walter of Gloucester, and with her had the manors of Alveston and Urcot, which past, by the marriage of Margaret his daughter and coheireffes, to sir Gilbert Dennis, who was seized of the manors of Sifton, Alveston, and Erdecot, 44 E. 3.

Richard Dennis levied a fine of the manor to sir Maurice Dennis, 7 E. 6. Sir William Dennis was son of sir Maurice; and Maurice Dennis, son of sir William, died seized of the manor 5 Eliz. and left Walter Dennis his brother and heir, who was then sixty years old, and had livery of this estate the same year.

Henry Billingsley, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608. It was vested in Samuel Trotman, esq; at the beginning of this century, and descended to Thomas Trotman, whose son, Trotman, esq; is the present lord of the manor, and resides here. His arms are, Argent, a cross between four roses gules.

Henry Gildeney, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Sifton, to Henry Harshfield, clerk, to the use of themselves in taille, 7 H. 5. John Kemys died seized of lands here, 16 E. 4. and Roger Kemys, his son and heir, was found to be a lunatick, 21 E. 4. Sir John Bar was seized of an estate in Sifton 22 E. 4.

HAMLETS. 1. Warmly. 2. Breach Yate, which lies one part in Abston and Wick, the other in this parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth 130*l.* a year. Mr. Trotman is patron, and Christopher Haynes, M. A. is the present incumbent.

The present church is small, and dedicated to St. Anne, the mother of the virgin Mary. There were formerly two others in the parish; one dedicated to St. Bartholomew, which was the mother church, the other to St. Cuthbert, bishop of Lindisfern, now called Holy Island, on the coast of Northumberland, to whom many miracles were attributed in the dark ages of ignorance and popish superstition. The wakes, or feast days, of all three churches are observed by the inhabitants to this day.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his History, there were 98 houses in the parish, and about 450 inhabitants, 12 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 12, burials 11. I have not been able to obtain any satisfactory information concerning the present state of population.

SLAUGHTER (LOWER)

IS a small parish, in the hundred of its own name, three miles distant south-westward from Stow, six northward from Northleach, and twenty-three north-eastward from Gloucester.

The name was antiently written Scloftre, that is, Sclo's Place, for I have shewn, in several instances, that tre, signifies a Place.

George Whitmore, esq; has a feat here, with handsome coach-houses, and stables, newly built. The house is situated in the midst of the village, which consists of one street, with a pretty trout river running through the middle of it; and a pin lying on the gravelly bed of the river, may be seen through the transparent stream, which makes it very pleasant in the summer. This stream falls into the Winrush, near Bourton on the Water, and is one of the heads of that river.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In the antient survey, are the following particulars:

' Roger de Laci and his mother hold Scloftre, in Salesmanesberie hundred. There are three hides. Offa and Leuin held it for two manors, and might go where they would. There are four plow-tillages in demean, and four bordars, and eight servi, and a mill of 12*s.* [rent]. It is worth and was worth 6*l.* One of these three hides paid 10*s.* tax every year for the king's use.' Domesday, p. 75.

This manor, soon after the conquest, belonged to the alien priory of Mountberg in Normandy, the possessions of which house being taken away by act of parliament, 2 H. 5. this estate, together with the manor of Cheltenham, and the hundreds of Salemanesberie and Cheltenham, passed to the nuns of Syon in Middlesex. Maud, abbess of Syon, levied a fine of this manor, and of the hundred of Salemanesberie, to the bishop of Exeter, to the use of the nunnery of Syon, 22 H. 6. and that house had a confirmation of the above particulars 1 E. 4.

Upon the dissolution of religious foundations, this manor came to the crown, in which it continued, tinued, 'till it was granted in fee, together with the hundred of Slaughter, to George Whitmore, esq; by king James the First, in the 8th year of his reign.

Richard Whitmore, son of George, married Katherine, daughter of John George, of Baunton, esq; and dying in the year 1667, being then high sheriff of Gloucestershire, was succeeded by his eldest son, Richard Whitmore, esq; to whom the manor of Lower Slaughter belonged at the beginning of this century. The late lieutenant general William Whitmore, (next brother to sir Thomas Whitmore, knight of the Bath) died in the year 1771, and was succeeded by his son, George Whitmore, esq; the present lord of the hundred and manor of Slaughter, and proprietor of many good estates in the county. His arms are, Vert, fretty Or.

Thomas Everdon, and Alice his wife, levied a fine of lands in Lower Slaughter and Upper Slaughter, to William Wiggeston, and others, 19 H. 7.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, but annexed to Bourton on the Water. The patronage is vested in All Souls college, Oxford, and Mr. Vernon is the present incumbent.

The advowson of the chapel of Lower Slaughter was granted to sir Christopher Hatton, 21 Eliz. and passed, like Bourton on the Water, to the present patrons.

The church is small, but neat, having been lately fresh pewed, and otherwise repaired. The inhabitants buried at Bourton on the Water 'till within these seven or eight years, but they have since obtained right of sepulture, and now bury here.

Monument and Inscription.

A flat stone in the north aisle bears the following inaccurate inscription :

Here lyeth Interred the Body of Richard Whitmore Esq' who Departed this Life the 20th Day of August Anna Dom. 1667 being then High Sherriff of the County of Gloucester, who left behinde him Katherine his Wife And four Children Elizabeth Richard Katherine and George.

At the beginning of the eighteenth century, when sir Robert Atkyns drew up his account of his parish, there were 32 houses, and about 150 inhabitants, 11 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. There are now 39 families in the parish, and the people are increased to 194, by actual numeration.

Slaughter (Upper) and Eyford.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of its own name, three miles distant south-west from Stow, seven miles north from Northleach, and twenty-three north-eastward from Gloucester.

Several large springs rise in the upper part of it, and run through the village to Lower Slaughter, and at length empty themselves into the Winrush.

The parish is divided into farms, and has no gentleman's seat within it; for Eyford, which has sometimes, tho' improperly, been considered as a hamlet belonging to it, is extraparochial; yet I shall so far follow the example of other topographers, as to place the account of it after this parish.

There are no antiquities here, but nature has display'd herself in a most extraordinary manner, in the growth and size of a child, the son of Mr. John Collet, a gentleman farmer of this village. He was not eight years old in February, 1777, when this account was taken; but measured over the breast, fifty-two inches round, and round the thigh twenty-eight inches. His height I cannot exactly ascertain, but when I saw him, it appeared to be about four feet nine or ten inches. He has a jolly, manly countenance, and florid complexion; is healthy, active, sprightly, and sensible, and is much displeas'd with the curiosity of strangers coming to see him.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor was part of the antient demesns of the crown, as appears by the following translation from Domesday :

' King Edward held Scloftre in Salemanesberie
' hundred. There were seven hides, and three ' plow-tillages in demean, and nine villeins, and ' eleven bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There ' are seven servi, and two mills of the rent of one
' mark of silver; and meadow of [the rent of] 10s.
' and 10s. [rent issuing] out of one of these hides,
' and 5s. for the dogs. The sheriff paid what ' he would for this manor, in the time of king
' Edward, so that they [the inquisition] know
' not how to value it. Now the sheriff hath added
' one plow-tillage there, and five bordars, with ' one plow-tillage; and he now pays for the ' manor itself, and for the hundred, 27*l.* by tale.'

Domesday, p. 67.

Edward de Bona Vera held Sclaughtre with its appurtenances 5 Joh. Thomas Basset held twenty librats of land in Sloutres, Wales, and Cotes, which were in the possession of Edward de Bona Vera, 4 H. 3.

But it was afterwards vested in the crown, for king Henry the Third, in the 36th year of his reign, granted the manors of Cheltham and Sclaughtre, and the hundreds of Cheltham and Salemanesberie, with free warren, to the abbey of Fischamp in Normandy, in exchange for lands in Winchelsea and Rye in Suffex. Their claim to free warren and other great privileges in Cheltenham and Slouster was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and they purchased a licence from the crown, in the 18th year of the same reign, to sell the above-mentioned manors and hundreds. The abbey, however, did not part with this manor, but continued possessed of it 5 E. 2. and it appears by the records that it was held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3.

Upon the dissolution of alien priories, this estate was disposed of to several religious houses. A messuage in Slaughter belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, and was granted to Edward Powel 36 H. 8. A meadow, called the Hay-meadow, which belonged to the abbey of Evesham, was granted to sir Philip Hobby 37 H. 8. Lands in Slaughter, called No Man's Lands, belonged to the bishop of Hereford, and were granted to Robert earl of Leicester 16 Eliz.

The antient family of the Slaughters were lords of the manor for many generations, and took their name from the parish, in which they resided upwards of three hundred years.

John Slaughter, esq; of Over Slaughter, died in the year 1583, and Paris Slaughter, his son and heir, died in the year 1597. Chambers Slaughter, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, Another Chambers Slaughter died in the year 1718, and William Slaughter, esq; son of a third Chambers Slaughter, was lord of this manor, and died in the year 1740. From this family the manor and advowson passed, by purchase, to Mary, daughter and sole heiress of sir William Dodwell, of Sevenhampton, knight, afterwards married to the late Thomas Tracy, of Sandiwell in this county, esq; deceased, and she is the present lady of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 120*l.* a year. Mrs. Tracy is patroness, and the reverend Mr. Ferdinando-Tracy Travel is the present incumbent. It was formerly appropriated to the abbey of Evesham.

Two yard-lands belong to the glebe.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, consists of two ailes, and has a handsome tower at the west end.

Sacred to the Memories of SARAH, Daughter of OBEDIAH SEDGWICK, Merchant, and Wife to CHAMBERS SLAUGHTER, Esq; She was born Octo. 29, 1675, died Sept. 16, 1733.

Endow'd with all the virtues Mortals know

The knowledge of them, and the practice too;

Propitious Heaven indulged her Life to see

Generall esteem attend her piety.

Death gave the stroke, and wing'd her to her God.

If Fame in what she says sincere can be,

(When in the same her hundred tongues agree)

More fond, more dutifull, or more sincere

No Friend, no Son, no Brother will appear :

In Manners skill'd, in Books well read, of truth

A Lover, strict in Morals, tho' a Youth.

About seventy years ago, when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 70 houses, and about 150 inhabitants, of whom 12 were freeholders; yearly births 4, burials 3. The present number of families is 84, and the people having been numbered, are found to be increased to 178.

E Y F O R D.

THIS little place lies in the hundred of Slaughter, three miles distant south-westward from Stow, twelve north-westward from Burford in Oxfordshire, and twenty-two north-eastward from Gloucester.

It adjoins to the parish of Upper Slaughter, within which sir Robert Atkyns understood it to be a hamlet; but he was mistaken in that particular. The antient grants and evidences stile it the parish of Eyford, and declare it to be Parochia de se, and the constant usage supports its claim to independency. It is extraparochial, having no church, and maintains its own poor.

Eye, says the above-mentioned learned historian, signifies water, and Eyford is the same with Waterford. The turnpike-road from Stow to Gloucester leads through it, and the place unquestionably took its name from the road crossing the rivulet, formed by the union of several fine springs of water, which rise here, and run purling down to Slaughter.

On the west side of this stream, in a little sequestered valley, stands a pleasant villa, with large gardens, canals, and beautiful plantations and pleasure-grounds, now the seat, and sometimes the residence of John Dolphin, esq; but formerly the retreat of the duke of Shrewsbury; where, in a summer-house, built over a cascade, long since fallen into ruins, the inimitable Milton wrote part of his Paradise Lost. The duke sometimes retired hither, being delighted with the solitariness of the place, and the pleasantness of the neighbouring country for recreations. King William the Third made the duke a visit, and was wonderfully taken with his solitude and privacy, so different from a royal court, that he thought himself out of the world.

Before the Norman conquest, this place was a distinct manor, which is next to be considered.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Eyford estate consists of one thousand two hundred and fifty acres of land, of which Domesday gives the following particulars:

‘ Hascoit Mufard holds Aiforde in Salemanesberie hundred. There are five hides, which pay tax. Ernesi held it. There are two plow-tillages in demean, and twelve villeins, and one bordar, with five plow-tillages; and there are eight among the servi and ancillæ. It is worth 4*l.*’ Domesday, p. 78.

Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, held Heyford 47 H. 3. The sheriff returned to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer that Roger de la Mare was lord of Hayford, in the hundred of Salmonesberie, 9 E. 1.

John le Rous, and others, held this manor, and the advowson of the church, 49 E. 3. in which year John le Rous of Raggeleye, William Gille, clerk, William Alewy, chaplain, and Richard Patty, chaplain, obtained a licence of the king to grant to the abbat and convent of Evesham, and their successors for ever, the manor of Eyford, with the appurtenances, and the advowson of the church of the same manor, and one messuage, three yardlands and a half, and nine acres of land, and six acres of meadow, with their appurtenances, in Stow St. Edward's, Malgaresbury, Burghton, and Wykeryfyndon, worth together twelve marks and nine shillings per annum, as it was found to be by the escheator's inquisition; and the abbat and convent had a licence at the same time to empower them to take this estate.

After the dissolution of the abbey of Evesham, Eyford, called the parish of Eyford, part of the possessions of that abbey, was granted by the crown to sir Philip Hobby, knight, 11th May, 37 H. 8. Sir Thomas Hobby, knight, brother to sir Philip Hobby, died seized of Eyford 9 Eliz. His widow was married to lord Russell, whom she survived, and after his death she demised Eyford to the earl of Huntingdon, and the lord treasurer Burleigh, 18th Jan. 34 Eliz. all which particulars appear by authentic evidences in the possession of the present owner.

The earl of Worcester was lord of this manor in the year 1608. It was afterwards purchased by Mr. Andrew Wanley, and descended from him through several generations, till it came to the late William Wanley, esq; who died seized of Eyford in the year 1762. After his death, it passed, by purchase, to John Dolphin, esq; of Shenstone in the county of Stafford, who has made a large addition to, and greatly improved the house, and frequently resides here. He married Margareta Eeles, daughter of Isaac Eeles, of Amertham in the county of Bucks, esq; by whom he hath issue two sons, and two daughters. His arms are, Azure, three dolphins nayant Or.

There were, most probably, about thirty inhabitants in this place at the time of the general survey, in the Conqueror's reign, for the villeins and bordars were thirteen, who had five plow-tillages; and there were eight other plow-tillages, which the servi and ancillæ had between them, so that they may be estimated at fifteen or sixteen more. But sir Robert Atkyns says, 'this place was appropriated to the abbey of Evesham, for a stipend to teach youth, in the year 1472, at which time it had no inhabitants.' So destructive had the civil wars between the Yorkists and Lancastrians been to this country, as to depopulate whole villages. Eyford now consists of two houses, two families, and twenty-five souls.

S L I M B R I D G E.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Berkeley, six miles distant north from the town of that name, four north-west from Dursley, and eleven south from Gloucester.

The name is written Hiflinbruge in Domesday, the signification of which I don't understand.

It is bounded on the north-west and north-east by the rivers Severn and Cam, and consists chiefly of rich pasture and meadow land, with some arable, and produces good cheese and cyder.

Here is a large tract of land called the Dumballs, but more commonly the New Grounds, consisting of above a thousand acres, which have been gained from the Severn many ages ago, and belong to the earl of Berkeley, because his manors extend to the middle of that river. King Charles the First, by his attorney general, commenced a suit in the exchequer against lord Berkeley, for those lands; but after the jury was impanelled, and evidence begun, the attorney general dropt the suit.

I could never learn when this acquisition was first made from the river, and perhaps it is not any where recorded. The like has happened at Lidney, on the other side, but lower down the river. And the same has been in much greater degree in other countries. One Hubert Thomas, who was secretary to the elector palatine of the Rhine, in his description of the country of Liege, affirms, that the sea once came up to the walls of Tongres, now said to be about fourscore miles distant from it; which he proves (among other reasons) by the great iron rings then to be seen there, to which the ships were used to be fastened. So Michael Hospitalis, giving an account of the present state of a place, antiently the Forum Julij, on the coast of Narbonne in France,

Apparet moles antiqui diruta portûs
Atqui ubi portus erat, sicum nunc littus & horti.

*The ruins of an antient port are seen,
And lands and garden grounds where ships have been.*

These great changes were most likely occasioned by earthquakes or volcanos, which have happened in distant parts of the globe, and of which it is impossible for us to estimate the effects, or to ascertain how far their influence extends.

But to return to Slimbridge. Against one side of the New Grounds, next the river, the earl of Berkeley (I believe the grandfather of the present earl) built a vast wall of large stones, firmly cramped together, to break the violence of the waves, and to preserve the land from being washed away by floods and high tides. This work is called the Hock Crib.

Great numbers of cattle are depastured upon these grounds; and it is thought that the herbage has stronger nutritive powers, and makes cattle fat sooner, than the grass of common meadows. Here grows the true Samphire in great plenty, which is much esteemed in pickling, and sometimes used in medicine.

There is another very large piece of rich ground in this parish, called the Wharfe, or Wartbe. It is in common all the year, and, as well as the Dumballs, subject to floods and spring-tides. If it could be inclosed, it would be worth 1500l. a year.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This was a member of the manor of Berkeley, at the time of the general survey, as it is expressly mentioned in Domesday, where it is said, that 'Roger [de Berkeley] holds two hides in Hiflinbruge, belonging to the manor of Berkeley.'

Maurice lord Berkeley died seized of Slimbrugge in the year 1281, 9 E. 1. and his grandson, Thomas lord Berkeley, held it 17 E. 3. and died seized of it in the 35th year of the same reign. Maurice lord Berkeley, son of Thomas, died seized of Slimbrugge 42 E. 3. of the wounds he had received ten years before at the battle of Poictiers.

Ralph Walers was seized of this manor 49 E. 3. Thomas lord Berkeley, son of Maurice, held the manor 6 R. 2. and Nicholas Barstable was seized of Slimburg 13 H. 4. but it seems to have been only in trust for Thomas lord Berkeley, who did not die 'till July 13, 1416, at which time he was possessed of the manor, and of a tenement called Sage's Place, in Slimbridge.

Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, married Elizabeth, the only child of Thomas lord Berkeley, and by that means became possessed of this manor, and many others in Gloucestershire, notwithstanding a special entail and fine in favour of James lord Berkeley. He had issue, by Elizabeth his wife, three daughters, Margaret, married to John Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury; Elianor, married to Edmund duke of Somerset; and Elizabeth, married to George Nevil, lord Latimer; and died possessed of this manor 17 H. 6.

Sir Edward Ingoldsthorp was seized of Slimbridge 35 H. 6. probably in trust, for

Margaret

Margaret countess of Shrewsbury, eldest daughter of Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and Elizabeth his wife, died seized of Slimbridge, Goffington, Hurst, Cambridge, Arlingham, &c. 7 E. 4.

William lord Berkeley, created earl of Nottingham, and earl marshal, levied a fine of this manor, and of the manor and castle of Berkeley, and other great estates, to the use of king Henry the Seventh, and his heirs males; by virtue of which fine they came to the crown, and continued in it till the death of Edward the Sixth, when they reverted to Henry lord Berkeley, the fifth in lineal descent from Maurice, brother of William lord Berkeley, who had livery granted to him 1 Mariae; and from him the manor of Slimbridge descended to Frederick-Augustus, earl of Berkeley, the present lord of the manor.

HAMLETS, and places of distinct names.

1. Hurst. Maurice lord Berkeley died seized of the manor of Hurst 9 E. 1. and was succeeded by his son, Thomas lord Berkeley, who was seized of it in the 17th, and died in the 35th year of the reign of king Edward the Third. Maurice lord Berkeley, son of Thomas, died seized of it 42 E. 3. It passed afterwards to the crown by fine, as already related under Slimbridge, Berkeley, &c.

2. Sages, probably so called from a family of the name of Sage, one of whom gave lands in Brickhampton in Churchdown, to the abbey of Hayles, 6 E. 2. This manor likewise belonged to the Berkeleys, but was not conveyed to king Henry the Seventh. Thomas lord Berkeley died seized of it 24 H. 8. and Thomas lord Berkeley, his son, had livery of it the same year.

3. Church-end.

4. Moor-end.

5. Goffington. Lands in this place belonged to the abbey of Kingswood, and were granted to sir Baptist Hickes, 7 Jac.

6. Kingston.

7. Slimbridge Street. Slimbridge Wharfe was given, by one of the Berkeley family, to the abbey of St. Augustin in Bristol; and after the dissolution of that house, it was granted to the bishoprick of Bristol 34 H. 8. A tenement in Slimbridge belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, and was granted to sir Baptist Hickes, 7 Jac. Nicholas Hawling was seized of lands in Slimbridge 36 E. 3.

8. Cambridge, lies on the little river Cam, from which it takes its name. Huntingdon, Hoveden, and Florence of Worcester, make mention of a great victory obtained here by king Edward the Elder over the plundering Danes, whom he attacked as they returned from an excursion, loaded with booty, and killed many thousands of them on the spot, together with Healfden, Cinvil, and Inguer, three of their princes. Here was formerly a chapel, in which Thomas lord Berkeley founded a chantry 17 E. 3. Lands in this place, which belonged to the chantry in the chapel of Cambridge, were granted to sir Oliver Cromwell, 5 Jac.

William lord Berkeley, by the name of earl marshal, and earl of Nottingham, levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge, to Edward Willoughby and Robert Legg, 3 H. 7. in order to convey them to the king. Thomas Baker levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge to John Esterfield, John Walfh, John Heming, Richard Bolton, and Thomas Broom, 9 H. 7. Thomas Laney and Catherine his wife levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge and Goffington to Edmund Tame 16 H. 7. John Woodard levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge to John Bower; and William Bridgman and Anne his wife levied a fine of lands in Slimbridge and Goffington, to Francis Cotherington, 3 E. 6. John Pleydell levied a fine of seven messuages in Slimbridge, Ham, Hinton, and Berkeley, to his son, in fee taille, 31 Eliz. Esch.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Dursley, worth about 300*l.* a year. The patronage is vested in Magdalen college, Oxford, and the reverend Mr. John Stone is the present incumbent.

The patronage of the church was antiently in the Berkeley family, and was granted to the priory of Stanley St. Leonard's, by Roger de Berkeley. But Thomas de Bredon, abbat of Gloucester, afterwards released the advowson of Slimbridge to Thomas lord Berkeley, in consideration of lands near Cam, called Lorlynge, or Lorrenge, as the reader may see more at large under Stanley St. Leonard's.

The rector pays 10*l.* a year to Magdalen college, for choir-music on the top of the college tower on May-day.

Twelve acres of arable land, and about thirteen acres of small inclosures, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. It is a very neat one, newly pewed, and consists of the nave, and two side ailes, with a gallery, and a handsome lofty spire at the west end.

The Berkeley arms are painted in the windows of the chancel and south aile. And in the south window of the chancel, Quarterly, Per pale and per fess indented, ermine and gules.

There were two chantries in the parish, dedicated to St. Catherine, and St. John Baptist. One of them was founded by Thomas lord Berkeley, in the chapel of Cambridge, in this parish, 17 E. 3. The last incumbents were John Browne, who had a pension of 4*l.* and William Willington, who received a pension of 5*l.* in the year 1553. Willis. Lands belonging to one of these chantries, were granted to Ralph Sherman, by king E. 6.

James Berkeley, third son of Thomas lord Berkeley, was rector of Slimbridge, and afterwards consecrated bishop of Exeter, in the year 1326. Henry Stokesley, presented to this rectory in 1509, and consecrated bishop of London in 1536, distinguished himself as a violent persecuter of the protestants, protestants, in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. Owen Ogleshorpe, likewise rector of this church, was advanced to the bishoprick of Carlisle in 1556, by queen Mary. He crowned queen Elizabeth Jan. 15, 1559, being the only bishop that could be prevailed on to assist at the ceremony; but he was deprived the same year, with thirteen other popish bishops, for refusing to comply with the laws enacted in favour of the reformation.

A Child of God's can never be forgot.

At the beginning of this century, there were 120 houses in the parish, and about 560 inhabitants, 40 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 15. Atkyns. The present number of souls is estimated at about 800.

S N O W S H I L L.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Kiftsgate, seven miles north-east from Winchcombe, five south-west from Campden, and twenty-three north-eastward from Gloucester.

A fine spring rises in the village, and being joined with others a little below, they form a small brook, which falls into the Avon near Evesham.

The parish is situated on the high part of the Cotswold country, and consists chiefly of arable land; but the village and church stand in a little bottom, and are not to be seen, except from the brow of those high lands which encompass them.

Near the north-east border of it, in the finest open hunting country imaginable, the honourable John-Coventry Bulkeley has built an elegant house, called Spring Hill, standing upon an eminence, with a large piece of pasture ground sloping from the front, which he has improved to a good verdure, and adorned the face of this naked country with fine plantations of beech and fir, that before produced nothing but furze. Part of this gentleman's estate lying in Snowhill, gave me an opportunity of taking notice of his seat, which, however, stands just without the boundaries of the county, in the parish of Broadway, in Worcestershire.

Snowhill was inclosed by parliamentary authority, about the year 1761. Were the manor house in a better situation, it would be called handsome. It is occupied by the principal farmer; but not many years ago, it was the residence of a family of the name of Sambach, who have now left the county.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor is said to have been given to the abbey of Winchcombe, by Kenulph, or Kenwolf, the thirteenth king of Mercia, who died in the year 819, and was buried in that monastery, of which he was the founder. And it was part of the possessions of that abbey at the time of the antient survey, as appears by the following extract from Domesday:

'The church of St. Mary of Winchelcumb holds Snawefille, in Holefordes hundred. There are seven hides taxed. In demean are three plow-tillages, and twelve villeins, and two bordars, with six plow-tillages. There are six serci. It is worth and was worth 100 sol.' Domesday, p. 71.

The abbey was seized of this manor 35 H. 3. and the same year purchased a charter of free warren, which privilege was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. The abbat and convent of Winchcombe assigned the manor to the monastery of St. Ebrulf, at Utica in Normandy, 12 E. 2. but it returned to them again, most probably by another grant, at the time when alien monasteries were divested of their lands in England, 2 H. 5. and it continued in the possession of the abbey of Winchcombe, 'till that house was dissolved.

King Henry the Eighth assigned the manor of Snowhill to queen Catherine, in part of her dower. After her death it was granted, by king Edward the Sixth, to John earl of Warwick, afterwards created duke of Northumberland, and executed executed for treason in the beginning of the reign of queen Mary. Henry Willoughby had livery of the manor granted to him 4 Eliz. And John Warren died seized of it 19 C. 1. William Sambach, esq; was lord of the manor of Snowhill when sir Robert Atkyns wrote his History; and from him it descended to his son, William Sambach, esq; who died without issue, in the year 1743.

This manor and estate was purchased in 1759, by Samuel Blackwell, esq; who sold it, soon afterwards, to John Small, of Clapham in Surrey, esq; the present lord of the manor, whose family arms are emblazoned p. 471.

William Fravileworth held lands in Snowhill 33 E. 3. as did John Daston 6 E. 4.

Brockhampton is a small hamlet in this parish, consisting of two farms.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is annexed to Stanton. It is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 85*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Reginald Wynniat is patron, incumbent, and impropiator.

The impropiation belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe; and a portion of tithes, lately belonging to that house, was granted to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6.

The manor of Stanton, and the free chapel of Snowhill, were granted by the crown, 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. to John Elliot, who obtained a licence to alienate them to Thomas Doleman the same year; and John Doleman, son of Thomas, had livery of the advowson of this church 15 Eliz.

Two hundred and two acres of land were allotted to the rector, at the inclosing of the downs and common fields, in lieu of all tithes in Snowhill, except of the two farms in Brockhampton; and those lands are now let at 85*l.* a year.

The church is small, and has a tower at the west end, ornamented with pinnacles and battlements.

Monument and Inscription.

A small marble monument in the church, bears this inscription:

In the Chancell of this Church near the Communion Table is deposited the Body of William Sambach, Esq^r. (son of William Sambach, Esq; who also is interred in the Chancell of this Church) He was a zealous Friend to the Church of England, and the true Interest of his Country. He married Ann third daughter of William Batson, Esq^r. of Bourton on the Hill in this County, and died the twenty ninth Day of July, 1743, aged 40, without Issue.

This Monument was erected to his Memory by his equally loving and beloved Widow Ann Sambach.

At top are these arms; Baron and femme, 1. Azure, a fess between three garbs Or, for Sambach. 2. Argent, three bats wings sable, on a chief gules a lion passant of the first, for Batson.

SODBURY (CHIPPING.)

THIS is a small parish, in the hundred of Grumbald's-ash, twelve miles distant north-eastward from Bristol, seven north-westward from Marshfield, thirteen north from Bath, and thirty south from Gloucester.

It lies in the Vale, about a mile westward of the great Howby hill, (which is part of that chain that stretches lengthways through the county) and is watered by a little brook which runs from hence into the Froome, and so to Bristol.

There are three places, all lying together, of the name of Sodbury, which they take from the camp on Little Sodbury hill; and in general, the termination bury, in the names of places, is taken from the Saxon beoꝛg, a camp, or fortification, as I have frequently observed in the course of this work. If Sopeberie, as I find it in Domesday, were the true reading, it would lead me to conjecture, that Sope was the name of some considerable person in these parts, to whom the manor belonged; and this opinion is in some measure strengthened by the name of another place, a few miles distant, being Sopworth; which, in all likelihood, belonged to the same person. But if it should be alledged, that the name is ill written in the antient record, and that Sodbury is the true orthography, then it may signify the South Camp, for Sod is often put for South. And in that case, I should suppose it to have been so called on account of its situation from the Castles, another camp, lying about a mile northward, upon the edge of Horton-hill. The prenomens, Chipping, has been already explained under Campden, and it remains only to observe, that it was first added to the name of this place, after the market was established here, in the reign of king Henry the Third, and served to distinguish it from the other Sodburies.

This is a small market town, consisting of two streets, lying something in the form of the letter L, upon the turnpike-road from Bristol, through Oxford, or Abingdon, to London; and is lately much improved in its buildings. The market, which is held on Thursday, is very little frequented, being nothing more than a few neighbouring people assembled in the public houses. The town lies in a great dairy country, and formerly the market is said to have been very considerable for cheese; but things are diverged from their proper point, and markets in general are reduced to almost nothing, owing to factors, jobbers, and forestallers buying up the great necessaries of life at the farm and dairy houses. It is a pernicious, if not an illegal practice, fraught with with many evils, and particularly injurious to market towns, which are taxed higher than villages, and made subject to many charges unknown to the latter; but are thus more and more deprived of the means of bearing them. Here are two fairs in the year, held on Holy Thursday, and on the 24th of June, for cattle and pedlery.

There is a great deal of travelling through the town to Bristol, and waggons are continually passing through it to the coal pits, which lie two or three miles further westward, whence many parts in Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, and even some places in Berkshire, are supply'd with coal. And the whole tract of country from Sodbury and Lansdown hills westward, as far as the city of Bristol, seems to be full of that necessary fossil.

Here, also, is an excellent sort of lime stone, called the White-lays, of a blue cast, very compact and ponderous, and burns into a strong lime, as white as snow. Considerable quantities of this lime are sent into various parts of the country, not only on account of its goodness, but it is rendered cheap, also, from the low price of coal.

Here is no prevailing manufacture at present. One master clothier employs a few hands, but the women and children have sufficient spinning-work brought them from other parts.

This town was made a corporation by charter, in the year 1681, whereby the government of it was vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and twelve burgesses, with a high steward, recorder, and town-clerk; and a court of record was erected for trying all manner of personal suits, actions of debt, &c. arising within the borough, and not exceeding the value of five pounds. But this weight of honour was too great to be sustained by so weak and feeble a body, and so the charter was annulled by proclamation, at the request of the inhabitants themselves, as I am informed, in the year 1688; and from that time the town recurred to its antient government by a bailiff, who is annually chosen by the lord of the manor, or his steward, out of three persons returned to him by the jury at the leet.

By very antient grants from two persons, who were lords of the manor in the reigns of king Henry the Second and king John, (as will be more particularly shewn under the account of the manor) the bailiff, and bailiff burgesses, (who are such as have been bailiffs) have the disposal of two estates, of which one is called the Stub Riding, consisting of about one hundred acres. And annually on the 14th of May, they grant the summer pasture of it, under such regulations as they think proper, for sixty-eight cow-beasts, to persons who have inhabited the town fourteen years; one pasture to each.

The other estate, called the Meadow Riding, is divided into eighty-one lots, or portions, besides two others, called the Bailiff's Piece, and the Hayward's Piece. Each of those eighty-one lots, being more than a statute acre, they lease out to certain persons for the lives of the lessees, and for the lives of their widows.

The lord of the manor receives five pounds yearly out of the Ridings, and the vicar of Old Sodbury 1 l. 13 s. 4 d. in lieu of tithes. The bailiff, besides his allotment, receives 50 s. and the custom is, for him to provide an ox, and two barrels of ale, at an annual feast on St. Stephen's day, to entertain the inhabitants.

The most memorable transactions at this place have been of the melancholy kind. Here one John Piggot was burnt at the stake, to satisfy the sanguinary spirit of the popish religion, in the second year of the reign of queen Mary; and two other persons, John Barnard, and John Walsh, were ordered to be apprehended and prosecuted, because they often came to the town, and showed Piggot's bones, with a design of animating the people to a perseverance in the reformed religion. It is also related in Fox's book of Martyrs, that doctor Whittington, who was vicar-general for some part of this diocese, having condemned a woman to death for heresy, about the same time, and attending himself at the execution, a bull that had broke out of the town, ran furiously to the place, and without doing the least injury to any other person, killed the doctor on the spot, and carried his entrails away upon his horns.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This belonged to the antient demesne of the crown, and was part of the manor of Old Sodbury at the time of the general survey, wherefore there is no distinct account of it in Domesday, which was finished in the fourteenth year of the Conqueror's reign. Sometime afterwards, king William gave this manor to Odo earl of Champagne, his near kinsman, who attended him in the invasion of England, and for his good service was rewarded with the earldom of Holderness in Yorkshire, and with that of Albermarle in Normandy.

Stephen, son of Odo, succeeded his father in these earldoms, and marrying Hawise, daughter of Ralph de Mortimer, died seized of this manor. William was son and heir of Stephen, and was surnamed Le Gros from his great corpulency. He had made a vow to go a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, but growing very fat, obtained a dispensation from the pope to release him from the performance of it. He was a great benefactor to this place, and granted to the burghers of Sodbury the like liberties which the burghers of Bristol enjoyed, with licence for every burgher to have common for one heifer in the place now called the Ridings, which they still enjoy; and dying 25 H. 2. left Hawise his only daughter and heiress. She carried her great possessions by marriage, first, to William de Mandeville, earl of Essex, who dying without issue, she was married, secondly, to William de Fortibus, an admiral, and very gallant officer, by whom she had a son, called also William de Fortibus.

tibus. She was married, a third time, to Baldwin de Betune, earl of the isle of Wight, whom she survived, and died 16 Joh. She was succeeded by her son William de Fortibus, whose original confirmation of the aforelaid privileges to the burgesſes of Sodbury the editor has ſeen, and it is now in the poſſeſſion of the bailiff of the town; but time has impaired the parchment itſelf, ſo that the writing is deſtroyed in ſome parts. By that confirmation it appears that he aſſumed the name of Craffus. It runs thus, n'ra conſirmaſſe burgenſibus noſtris de Sobbur' et hereditibus ſuis totum quod Willus Craffus primogenitus avunculus noſter eiſdem fecit & per cartam ſuam conſirmaſſe, videlicet, Quod habeant et teneant omnes libertates que ſpectant et pertinent ad leges de Britoill, &c. &c. &c.
Will. Craffus primogenitus filius Willi Crassi junioris ſalutem. Noveras nos conſeſſiſſe & hac preſenti carta

About this time, William Green of Sodbury, by his deed without date, gave Gaunt's fields to the burgesſes of Sodbury. And at the ſame time Jurdan Biſhop, who was lord of Little Sodbury, granted them common of paſture for cattle in Dymershed and Norwood. Theſe grants are ſuppoſed to have been made in the reign of king Henry

The original grant runs thus :

The townſmen's privileges were diſputed by the lord of the manor of Little Sodbury, in the reign of king Edward the Sixth, and both parties appealing to the council of the Marches, the following order was made to ſettle the right, viz.

Apud Chipping Sodbury decimo die Septembris anno Regni Regis Edwardi Sexti, jexto.

WHEREAS great controverſie and debate before this time hath riſen and been depending between John Wirrett the younger, bailiff of Chipping Sodbury, Richard Norris, and Thomas Smith, and all other the burgesſes and inhabitants of the town of Chipping Sodbury, within the ſaid county of Glouceſter, complainants, and Maurice Welch of Little Sodbury within the county of Glouceſter aforeſaid Eſq; and other his tenants and inhabitants of Old Sodbury, within the ſaid county of Glouceſter, of, for, and concerning certain common which the ſaid burgesſes and inhabitants of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid pretend and claim to have in certain parcels of ground now incloſed, called the Nokes and Hangers, and in a certain paſture called the Leyes, and in another parcel of ground called the Kinley, and of and in certain parcels of ground called the Meadows and Marſhes, which ſaid parcels of ground be the inheritance of the ſaid Maurice Welch, and be parcels of the manor of Old Sodbury aforeſaid. Whereupon the ſaid bailiff and burgesſes before this time have made their complaint to the lord reſident and others the king's majeſty's council in the marches of Wales: Whereupon the ſaid Maurice Welch and other defendants made their answers, and ſo the ſaid parties deſcended to an iſſue concerning the premiſſes. By their books of record remaining before the ſaid council, it doth appear, for the trial whereof divers witneſſes have been produced by the ſaid parties before the ſaid council and there examined, whole ſayings and depositions in that behalf do likewise remain before the ſaid council of record; which matter being well weighed and conſidered by the ſame council, the ſaid lord reſident and council, by the mutual aſſent of the ſaid parties, directed the king's majeſties letters hereunto annexed, dated the 10th day of July, in the ſixth year of our ſovereign lord's reign king Edward the ſixth, to ſir Walter Dennis, knight, David Brook, the king's erjeant at law, ſending them the ſaid books, together with the ſaid letters, giving them authority by the ſame letters to call the ſaid parties before them, and thereupon to conſider the whole matter with the circumſtances thereof, and to make ſome final ſentence between the ſaid parties concerning the premiſſes: By virtue whereof, we the ſaid ſir Walter Dennis, knight, and David Brook, calling before the ſaid parties, have, by good advice, peruſed the contents of the ſaid books, and deliberately heard the allegations of the ſaid parties, and thereupon conſidered the ſame, earneſtly travailling therein, Have and do, by their mutual aſſent, conſent and agreement of the ſaid Maurice Welch, and the ſame bailiff and burgesſes, and by virtue of the ſaid letters to us directed, and for the avoiding of further ſuit and trouble that otherwiſe might enſue, grow and ariſe between the ſaid parties concerning the ſaid premiſſes, do make this our preſent order, final and determinate end, in manner and form following, that is to ſay: We order and decree by the authority aforeſaid, and by the aſſent and full agreement of the ſaid Maurice Welch, that the ſaid burgesſes and inhabitants that now be, or hereafter ſhall be, of the town of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid, ſhall from henceforth have, uſe and enjoy common for their cattle in the ſaid waſte ground called Horwood, in all places of the ſame waſte, ſit, lying and being without the hedge of the ground called Little Sodbury Park, and lately diſparked, and in the way or lane leading unto the Yate that divideth and incloſeth the ſaid waſte ground from the common meadow of Old Sodbury aforeſaid, in like manner and form as they have had and uſed the ſame in times paſt, and ſhall likewise uſe, and enjoy, have common for their cattle in the ſaid ground called Kinggroves wood, and likewise upon the conſideration hereafter expreſſed, it is further ordered by the aſſents aforeſaid, that the ſaid burgesſes and inhabitants which now be, or hereafter ſhall be, of the town of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid, ſhall have their common in one parcel of ground called the Gaunt's field, in Old Sodbury aforeſaid, as they have at this preſent time, or have uſed or had moſt uſually within the ſpace of xxth years next before the date hereof: Further it is ordered and decreed by the ſaid ſir Walter Dennis, knight, and David Brook, Eſq; that the ſaid burgesſes that now be, or hereafter ſhall be, in the ſaid town of Chipping Sodbury, ſhall not at any time hereafter claim, have, or uſe any common for their beaſts or cattle in any lands ſeveral or waſte ground, commonly called the Hangers, the Nokes, the Kinly, the Leyes, the Marſhes, the Meadows, or elſewhere, ſet, lying and being in the eaſt part or eaſtward from the ſaid waſte ground called Horwood, and from the eaſt part and eaſtward from the ſaid ground called Kinggrove wood, nor eaſtward from the Yate before rehearſed. And forasmuch as on the examination of the matter concerning the premiſſes, it appeared to us the ſaid ſir Walter Dennis and David Brook, that before this time there were certain grounds incloſed in the Meadows and Marſhes aforeſaid, by the aſſents of the copyholders aforeſaid, which ſeverally and particularly were limited and appointed to the copyholders hereafter mentioned, which grounds do at this preſent remain ſtill incloſed, and are occupied in ſeveral by the ſame copyholders, whereof there was very little in quantity appointed and limited to any cottager, cottagerholder, or half yard-land within Old Sodbury aforeſaid, by reaſon whereof the ſame cottages were impaired by loſs of ſuch common as they pretended to have in the meadows and marſhes aforeſaid, and the ſaid copyholders thereby much bettered and amended; it is therefore ordered by the authority aforeſaid, and by the aſſent of the ſaid Maurice Welch, and alſo his aſſent for his tenants as much as in him lieth, or may do, that the copyholders of the ſaid manor of Old Sodbury hereafter named, and all ſuch as hereafter ſhall have and hold ſuch copyhold lands as they now have, ſhall not at any time after the feaſt of St. Michael the Archangel, which ſhall be in the year of our lord God MDLij uſe, have, or enjoy any common for any manner of cattle in the ſaid waſte ground called Horwood, and that the cottagers of the manor of Old Sodbury which now be, or hereafter ſhall be, dwelling in the cottages or half yard-lands where they now dwell, ſhall have reaſonable common after the rate of their cottages or half yard-land in the waſte ground called Horwood, any thing before expreſſed to the contrary notwithstanding. And furthermore, for a further quietneſs to be had between the ſaid parties, it is ordered by their aſſents, and the aſſent of the aforeſaid Maurice Welch, that the ſaid bailiffs and burgesſes of Chipping Sodbury aforeſaid, for the time being, ſhall yearly chuſe a Hayward from time to Henry the Third, because John Bishop, who was grandson to Jurdan Bishop, was seized of Little Sodbury as early as 9 E. 1.

The earl of Albemarle was seized of Sodbury, with fairs and markets, 10 H. 3.

William de Weyland was afterwards seized of this manor, with which Marcella, his wife, was endowed. She surviving him, was married to John de Bradeston; and Thomas de Weyland, son of William, acknowledged their right by a fine levied 4 E. 1. But Thomas de Weyland had been possessed of this estate before that time, which he held jointly with Margery his wife, and had markets and fairs, court leet and gallows granted to him 55 H. 3. and was seized thereof 8 E. 1. and pleading his right in a writ of Quo warranto, his claim was allowed in the fifteenth year of the last-mentioned reign.

Sir Edward Burnell died seized of this manor, and Elianor his widow was endowed with it, and with the borough, of which she died seized 37 E. 3. Edward Burnell, son and heir of sir Edward, had livery of the town, and of two fairs, the same year.

Hugh le Dispencer, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Sodbury, to the use of themselves in fee, 38 E. 3. and Edward lord Dispencer, and Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of Bartholomew Burghurst, held it, and died seized thereof, and of the borough of Chipping Sodbury, 49 E. 3.

It passed soon afterwards into the family of the Stanshaws. Elizabeth Stanshaw was seized of the manor of Chipping Sodbury 13 H. 4. as was John Stanshaw, at the time of his death, 37 H. 6. He was succeeded in this estate by his son, Robert Stanshaw, who died seized of it 12 E. 4.

time, which shall have full power and authority to take and impound all such cattle which shall be taken in or upon Horwood and King grove aforesaid, of all such persons which have not common there, and the same to impound in the lord's pound at Old Sodbury appointed for the same, and to have yearly half the profits of the pound to be taken for the same for his labour and travel in that behalf: And for a final conclusion and peace to be had and concluded concerning the premises, at the request and desire of the said parties, the said sir Walter Dennis, knight, and David Brook, the king's serjeant at law, humbly desireth this honourable council, that they will by their honourable order, affirme and confirme all these former orders contained herein, that to the intent that the same may remain of record, and also the same and every part thereof wherein they shall dislike to add, diminish, or more plainly declare according to the true meaning of the said parties before rehearsed, adding thereto if it may stand their pleasures that if any ambiguities, doubt, or doubts shall happen hereafter to arise in any order or branch concerning the premises, or any part thereof, that then the same ambiguities, doubt, or questions shall by a commandment out of this honourable court be expounded, judged, and ordered by the said sir Walter Dennis and David Brook; and on lack thereof, the parties to be called into this honourable court, to abide such further order therein as to justice shall appertain, and as to them shall seem good in that behalf. In witness whereof to this our present order filed unto this book, and sent unto this honourable council, we the said sir Walter Dennis, knight, and David Brook, the king's serjeant at law, have severally put to our seals, and subscribed our names to this our order, made the xth day of September, in the said sixth year of the reign of our said sovereign lord Edward the Sixth, by the grace of God, of England France and Ireland king, defender of the faith, and in earth of this church of England, and also of Ireland the suprem head.

The manor passed to the Walshes in the time of king Henry the Seventh, and was sold out of that family, in the reign of king James the First, to Thomas Stephens, esq; attorney-general to prince Henry and prince Charles. Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, esq; one of the knights of the shire for the county of Berks, is the present lord of the manor, of whose family and arms, some account may be seen under Little Sodbury.

John Cotherington, and Alice his wife, levied a fine of lands in Chipping Sodbury, to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to Humphry, John, and Thomas, their sons, successively, in taille; the remainder to Margaret Basiles, late wife of sir Peter Basiles, in taille; the remainder to the king, 49 H. 6. which was the year when that king, for a short time, recovered the crown. Richard Forster, and John Moor and his wife, levied a fine of lands in Chipping Sodbury, to the use of John Walsh, 1 & 6 H. 7. John Stanshaw, and Humphry his brother, levied a fine of lands in Chipping Sodbury, to William Fream, and others, 12 H. 7.

A gild was founded in this borough, and dedicated to St. Mary, in the reign of king Henry the Sixth, of which John Glover was the last incumbent, and received a pension of 4*l.* a year, in 1553. The lands belonging to this gild were granted to Miles Patrick 2 E. 6. who granted them, the same year, to Richard Pate, who also granted them, 5 Mar. to the burghers of Sodbury, part for a town-hall, and part for an almshouse. An information was brought in the court of exchequer 14 Eliz. for lands in Sodbury, called Town-lands, formerly belonging to the dissolved gild, which information was dismissed upon a full

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a chapel of ease to Old Sodbury. The church consists of the nave and two aisles, of the same length with the body, and a large gallery. It is handsome, but not uniformly pewed. The tower, which stands at the west end, is ornamented with pinnacles and battlements, and has in it a clock and chimes, and six musical bells. There was a chantry in this church, called Borler's chantry, of which William Williams was the last incumbent, and received a pension of 6*l.* in the year 1553. Willis.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is an antient tomb, without inscription, at the end of the north aisle. It belongs to the Walshes, as appears by their arms thereon, viz. Azure, five mullets in saltire Or.

In the same part of the church, are several memorials on brass plates, for the family of the Burcombes, of which the following is the most observable :

Here lyeth the Body of ANNE the Wife of SAMUEL BURCOMBE, who departed this life the 27th of August 1703 aged 64 Years.

Benefactions.

There are certain lands lying in the parishes of Chipping Sodbury, Old Sodbury, and Wickwar, the rents of which amount, at present, to above 100*l.* per ann. which are settled by a decree in chancery 30 Car. 2. to the following uses ; viz. 20*l.* yearly to be paid to the master of the free school ; 20*l.* yearly to apprentice out poor children with 4*l.* each. 4*l.* yearly to be laid out on the roads of the parish ; and 20*l.* to be given annually to such persons of this parish, of good name, as do not receive alms ; and, according to sir Robert Atkyns, 10*l.* to the repair of the church.

Beside the above provision for the maintenance of the free gramar school, Mr. Robert Davis of Little Sodbury, who died May 16, 1680, added 10*l.* yearly to the school-master's salary, and there have lately been some donations from doctor Hardwicke, Stanhaws, who continued possessed of it down to the reign of king Edward the Fourth.

Richard Forster was seized of this manor in the beginning of the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and joined with Thomas Moor and his wife in levying a fine of the manor of Little Sodbury, and of the advowson of the church of St. Adeline there, to John Walsh of Olveston, who had married Elizabeth his daughter and heir; by virtue of which fine this manor passed into the family of the Walshes, 1 H. 7.

Sir John Walsh, son and heir of John Walsh, married Anne, daughter of sir Robert Pointz, and having served the office of high sheriff of Gloucestershire 18 & 27 H. 8. died seized of Little Sodbury in the 38th year of the same reign, leaving Maurice his son thirty years old, who had livery of the manor the same year, and married Bridget, daughter of — Vause. Nicholas Walsh, was son of Maurice, and succeeded him in the manor of Little Sodbury. He was high sheriff of this county 4 Eliz. and having married Mary, daughter of sir John Berkeley, died in the 20th year of that reign. Henry Walsh, son and heir of Nicholas, had livery of the manor of Little Sodbury on the death of his father, and was killed by Edward Winter, in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Walter Walsh, cousin of Henry Walsh, and son of another Henry, who was a younger brother of Nicholas before-mentioned, was lord of the manors of Little Sodbury and Old Sodbury, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and continued possessed of them in the year 1608.

The manors of Little Sodbury and Old Sodbury passed by purchase, from the heir of the Walshes, to Thomas Stephens, esq; third son of Edward Stephens of Eastington, in the reign of king James the First. This Thomas Stephens was eminent in the profession of the law, being attorney general to the princes Henry and Charles. By his wife Elizabeth, daughter and coheiress of John Stone of London, he had three sons, Edward, the eldest, who succeeded him in the manors of Sodbury; John, the second, ancestor of the Stephens's of Lypiat; and Nathaniel. Thomas Stephens died in the year 1613, and was succeeded in the manors of Sodbury by his eldest son Edward, who married Anne, the daughter of — Crew, and served the office of high sheriff of this county 10 C. 1. Sir Thomas Stephens, son and heir of Edward, married Katherine, the daughter of — Combs, and was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in the years 1644 & 1671. He was succeeded by his son Thomas Stephens, esq; who married Anne, the daughter of — Neale.

From him the manor and estate descended to Edward Stephens, after whose death, in the year 1728, they came to Robert Packer, esq; as heir at law, whose mother was a daughter of Richard Stephens of Eastington.

Robert Packer married Mary, one of the daughters and at length sole heiress of sir Henry Winchcombe, of Bucklebury in the county of Berks, baronet, son of sir Henry Winchcombe, baronet, by Frances, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Thomas earl of Berkshire, and had issue four sons, Winchcombe-Howard, John, Robert, and Henry, who all died without issue; and one daughter, Elizabeth, second wife to David Hartley, M.D. a person of great abilities, extensive learning, and distinguished eminence in his profession. He was son of the reverend John Hartley, and was lord of this manor in right of his said wife Elizabeth, by whom he had issue one son, Winchcombe-Henry, and one daughter, Mary.

His son, Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, esq; is the present lord of this manor, and one of the knights of the shire for the county of Berks, where he has several estates, particularly Donnington and Bucklebury, at the latter of which he resides. His arms are, Argent, on a cross azure, voided in the center, four cinquefoils Or, and in the first and fourth quarters a martlet sable. CREST, A martlet sable holding in its mouth a cross crozier fitchy of the third.

The records shew, that John Smith held lands in Little Sodbury. John Smith was his son and heir, and dying seized of them 9 C. 1. left John his son nine years old.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth 100*l.* a year. Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, esq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. Coats is the present incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Adeline. It is a low building, with an aisle on the north-east, belonging to the lord of the manor. There is no chancel, and the inhabitants bury at Old Sodbury, for which 10*s.* per ann. is paid to the minister.

IS a parish in the hundred of Grumbald's Ash, about one mile distant north-east from Chip-ping Sodbury, six north-west from Marshfield, and twenty-nine south from Gloucester.

One part of it stretches over that ridge or chain of hills that divides the Cotswold country from the vale, and the other lies in the vale. It affords nothing observable in natural history or antiquities, except part of the camp described under Little Sodbury, which lies within its boundaries. The turnpike-road from Gloucester to Bath runs through the parish, and a small brook from hence empties itself into the Froom.

The etymology of the name is given under Chipping Sodbury, which was originally a part of this parish, and is now intirely encompassed by it; wherefore this was called Old Sodbury, with respect to the former.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The particulars which Domesday gives of this manor, are totally omitted in sir Robert Atkyns's History, and part of those belonging to Little Sodbury are placed, by mistake, in their room. The following is a translation of the record:

' Brictric the son of Algar held Sopeberie in ' Edereftan hundred. In the time of king Edward
' there were ten hides, and four plow-tillages in
' demean, and twelve villeins, with five plow-
' tillages; and four bordars, and eighteen servi,
' and one park, and a mill of 5*s.* [rent]. The ' steward hath lately added one mill of 40 den.
' There is a wood one mile long, and one broad.
' Hunfrid pays for this manor 16*l.* 10*s.* One ' yard-land in Wiche belongs to it, which paid
' twenty-five sextaries of salt. Urfus the sheriff
' has so oppressed the men, that now they cannot ' pay the salt.' Domesday, p. 68.

This manor antiently belonged to the earls of Gloucester and Hertford, and continued by descent in that family, 'till the reign of king Henry the Seventh. During this long succession, it passed by female heirs into the great families of Dispencer and Beauchamp, and at last ended in Anne, the great heiress and sister of Henry Beauchamp, duke of Warwick. She was married to Richard Nevil, generally called the Stout earl of Warwick, who being slain in Barnet field, fighting for the house of Lancaster, this Anne, his widow, became obnoxious to the succeeding reigns: But upon the turn of affairs, by the success of king Henry the Seventh, that subtle prince prevailed on her to settle the greatest part of her vast inheritance on him and his heirs, and accordingly she levied a fine to that purpose 3 H. 7.

King Henry the Eighth gave the manor of Old Sodbury to sir John Walsh, who had been his champion, and it continued in the family of the Walfhes 'till it was purchased, in the reign of king James the First, by Thomas Stephens, attorney general to prince Henry. From him it descended, like Little Sodbury, down to Winchcombe-Henry Hartley, esq; who is the present lord of the manor.

Several other persons were seized of lands in this parish, as appears by records of the following dates. John de la Wild held lands in Sodbury 10 E. 3. Elizabeth Stanshaw died seized of lands in Old Sodbury 13 H. 4. John Stanshaw held lands in Old Sodbury 37 H. 6. which were held by Robert Stanshaw, together with an estate called Kengrove, 12 E. 4. John Stanshaw, and Humphry his brother, levied a fine of lands in Old Sodbury to William Freem 12 H. 7.

The capital messuage of Old Sodbury belonged to the college of Westbury, and was granted to sir Ralph Sadleyr 35 H. 8.

Hamsteed, an estate in this parish, formerly belonged to the monastery of Bradenstoke in Wiltshire. It was granted, by the name of the manor, grange, or farm of Hampsteed, to Anne, widow of sir Adrian Fortescue, for her life, and after to her son, John Fortescue, in fee, 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. It was sold by that family to Edward Stephens, esq; 9 C. 1. Sir Thomas Stephens sold it to William Clutterbuck, in 1675; after which it was purchased by — Okey, from whose family it passed, by purchase, to the trustees of Henry Woolnough, esq; and it is now the property of John-Hugh Smyth, of Long Aston in the county of Somerset, esq; in right of Elizabeth his wife, sole daughter and heiress of the said Henry Woolnough. His arms are, Gules, on a chevron between three cinquefoils argent, as many leopards faces sable.

Lygrove is a considerable estate in this parish, where was a good house, now in decay, and a park. John Cotherington, and Alice his wife, levied a fine of lands in Lygrove, to the use of themselves for life, the remainder to Humphry, John, and Thomas, successively in taille, the remainder to Margaret Basile, late wife of sir Peter Basile, in taille, 49 H. 6. Lygrove estate is now the property of Mr. Hartley.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 300*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Worcester are patrons, and the reverend Mr. Duvall is the present incumbent. The chapel of Chipping Sodbury is annexed to it.

In the year 1218, the bishop of Worcester gave the rectory of Old Sodbury to the monastery of Benedictine monks at Worcester, founded originally by king Ethelred, for secular canons; but Oswald placed the Benedictines in it in the year 991. The advowson, which had belonged to the same monastery, was granted to the chapter of Worcester 33 H. 8. confirmed 6 Jac. and still continues in the same.

The church has two cross ailes, and a low tower at the west end. It is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. It is the mother church to Chipping Sodbury, but yields the superiority in size, beauty, and convenience to her rival daughter.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

In the north aile, which is the burying place of the Stephens's, under two niches, lie the effigies in stone of two persons, with their legs across, after the manner of the knights templers, and scutcheons on their arms, but the bearings are not not distinguishable, and there is no tradition concerning them.

Against the north wall of the same aisle, upon the table of a marble monument, it is thus written :

Here lyeth the Remains of SOUTH HAMLETS.

THESE hamlets lie in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, on the south side of the city of Gloucester ; and being either extraparochial, or within some of the city parishes, are therefore jointly called the South Hamlets.

1. Lanthony, the scite of an antient priory of that name. The reader will see a large account of this hamlet placed among the parishes in alphabetical order, under the proper title of Lanthony.

2. Sudmead, so called from its lying south from Gloucester. It is extraparochial, and formerly belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and after the dissolution of that house, was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple 35 H. 8. but it belongs at present to several proprietors.

3. Tuffley. This place lies in the parish of St. Mary de Load, in the city of Gloucester, but in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton. It is a place of considerable extent, about two miles south-east from the city, consisting of rich meadow and pasture, and very good arable land. In the time of king Edward the Confessor, Tuffelege was held by the church of St. Peter at Gloucester, as a member of the great manor of Bertune, of which the particulars from Domesday are set down p. 206. It had been alienated from the church of Gloucester, but was again recovered to them by Osborn bishop of Exeter, when Serlo was abbat, and king Henry the Second confirmed it to them by his charter. It continued in the abbey of Gloucester 'till that house was dissolved, and was then granted to the dean and chapter of Gloucester, 33 H. 8. But the tithes of Tuffley, and a pasture called Sudgrove, late belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, were granted to Arthur Porter 32 H. 8.

The Atkyns's were antiently tenants of the manor, and of a large estate in this place, where they had a good house and park, which they held for several generations, by lease under the dean and chapter. Colonel Richard Atkyns, the last of that name who was possessed of this estate, suffered much for his loyalty to king Charles the First. He raised a troop of horse at his own charge, and was afterwards sequestered, and paid 140*l.* composition. He was son of Richard Atkyns, of Tuffley, Tuffley, esq; who married Mary, the daughter of sir Edwin Sandys, and not the daughter of lord Sandys of the Vine, as sir Robert Atkyns represents it, for she was sister to colonel Henry Sandys, the father of that lord Sandys, as appears by a well authenticated pedigree of the Sandys family, communicated to me by William Bayntun, of Gray's Inn, esq; who married Catherine, eldest daughter of Windsor Sandys, lord of the manors of Miserden and Winston in this county.

There are about 140 inhabitants in this hamlet.

4. Wolstrop, antiently written Wolrichesthorp and Wolverstrop. This place is extraparochial, and lies in the hundred of Dudston and King's-barton, about two miles from Gloucester, adjoining to the parish of Quedgley, and is bounded on the north-west by the river Severn. Robert de Pont de Larch held Wolrichesthorp 30 H. 3. and granted the same, with Lanwarrine, to William de Valencia, earl of Pembroke; and king Henry confirmed the grant in the 36th year of his reign. William le Walsh died seized of Wolverstrop 3 E. 3. which was held by Giles Walsh, of Richard lord Talbot and Anchoret his wife, by the eighth part of a knight's fee 20 R. 2. and it was held of Gilbert Talbot 7 H. 6. Here Thomas Hayward, esq; has a pleasant seat, and a large estate in this and other places. His arms are, Argent, on a bend sable, three fleurs de lis Or, on a chief of the second a lion passant of the third.

S O U T H R O P .

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Britwell's Barrow, eight miles distant south-east from Northleach, five south from Burford in Oxfordshire, and twenty-six east from Gloucester.

It consists chiefly of arable land, and the river Lech runs through it to Leachlade, where it empties itself into the Thames.

There are four manors described in Domesday by the name of Leccc, all lying on the river of the same name. Three of them are now called Northleach, Eastleach-Martin, and Eastleach-

Turville; and this is the fourth, which, for distinction, obtained the name of Southrop, from its being situated more southward than the others; for Southrop signifies the South Village.

The air of this village is wholesome, and the soil, tho' light, produces good corn.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following are the particulars of this manor from the antient survey:

'Walter the son of Ponz holds Lecc in Bric-stuoldes hundred of the king. There are ten hides taxed. Earl Tofti held it. There are four plow-tillages in demean, and sixteen villeins, and six bordars, and a priest, with eight plow-tillages. There are twelve servi, and a mill of 10s. [rent] and twenty acres of meadow. It was worth 12l. and is now worth 15l.' Domesday, p. 77.

Robert Creping and Nicholaa his wife held the manor and advowson 31 H. 3. and Benedict Blakenham, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of the manor to the use of themselves 1 E. 1. which said Benedict obtained a licence to alienate two plow-tillages in Southrop to Henry de St. Philebert 26 E. 1.

John de St. Philebert, son of Henry, was seized of Southrop, with free warren, 10 E. 2. and died 7 E. 3.

Henry de Grey died seized of a manor in Southorpe 8 E. 2. which he had of John the kinsman and heir of Robert de Grey, and held it by the service of one fourth part of a knight's fee; and sir Ralph Grey, son of Henry, levied a fine of those lands 22 E. 3.

John de St. Philebert, son of John, levied a fine of Southrop to the king 27 & 31 E. 3. and the king granted the same (lately belonging to John de St. Philebert, as the grant expressly mentions) to William Herney and Mary his wife, and to the heirs males of their bodies, 50 E. 3. The same year, also, the king granted one plow-tillage in Southrop, held by John Short for life, to William Herney and Mary his wife, and to their heirs males. Mary the wife of William Herney survived him, and died seized of Philebert's Court, and Grey's Court, in Southrop, 7 H. 4.

Robert Liversedge died seized of this manor 4 E. 4. and it was granted by the king to Robert Horsely, for life, in the twelfth year of the same reign. The crown granted it, as part of the dutchy of Lancaster, to Peter Bradshaw, 3 Jac. and it was again granted to Robert earl of Salisbury 5 Jac. Sir Thomas Row was lord of this manor in the year 1608, which passed soon afterwards to Wadham college, in Oxford, to which it now belongs.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Fairford, worth 100l. a year. It is in the presentation of Wadham college, and Mr. Baldwin is the present incumbent.

Alice de Clermont gave the church of Southrop to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, in Clerkenwell, London, which grant was confirmed by Richard de Clare, earl of Hertford.

The church is small, without any thing to distinguish it, except a monument in the south aisle for sir Thomas Conway and his lady, with his arms, viz. Sable, on a bend cotized argent, a rose proper between two annulets; but there is no inscription. Sir Thomas had been lord of this manor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 38 houses, and about 170 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 8 were freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 4. Atkyns. There are now, by an exact survey, 47 families, and 216 souls.

STANDISH.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Whitston, four miles distant north-westward from Stroud, eight north from Dursley, and seven south from Gloucester.

It consists of rich pasture ground, with some arable and woodlands, and produces excellent cheese and good cyder.

Here was antiently a pretty large house, with several offices, belonging to the abbey of Gloucester. It was called the Almerly of Standish. Part of it still remains, and particularly the arches of the gateway. An old building, which belonged to that house, stands intire on one side of the church-yard, strongly secured by buttresses; and the farm house, close by the church, seems to be a part of the old Almerly, of which the reader, turning to p. 141 of this book, may see many particulars.

There is a spring in Standish park, called the Red Well, which most probably runs thro' a bed of iron ore, as it tinges the stones with a red ochry colour; and it incrusts sticks, and other substances lying in the course of its waters, with a stony substance. These waters may be beneficial in disorders for which preparations of iron are prescribed.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Beornulph king of Mercia, in the year 821, gave fifteen hides in Standish under Ezimbury to the church of St. Peter at Gloucester, which was then occupied by secular canons. Eldred archbishop of York afterwards became possessed of the manors of Stanedis, Otintune, and Lece, (now called Northleach,) as a security for the money he had expended in the repair of the monastery of Gloucester, a little before the Norman invasion; and Thomas archbishop of York held Stanedis at the time of the general survey, as appears from a passage in Domesday, of which the following is a literal translation:

‘ Archbishop Eldred held Stanedis, in Witestan hundred. It was [part] of the demean of St. Peter of Glouuecestre. There were fifteen hides in the time of king Edward. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and nine villeins, and fourteen bordars, with sixteen plow-tillages; and seven radechenisters, having seventeen plow-tillages. There are eight serui, and half a fishery; a wood half a mile long, and one furlong broad. In the time of king Edward the whole manor was worth 16*l.* now [only] 12*l.* Archbishop Thomas holds it, and it pays tax in the same manner.

‘ The abbat of Glouuec holds two hides of the land of this manor, and he ought of right to hold them.

‘ Earl Hugh holds one hide unjustly. Durand the sheriff holds three hides which earl William gave to Roger his brother. Archbishop Thomas claims them.’ Domesday, p. 70.

The before-mentioned Thomas archbishop of York restored this manor to the abbey of Gloucester, about the year 1094-5, and that house continued possessed of it till the dissolution of the monastery. But it had been held by mesne lords, as in the 7th of H. 8. when John Huntley was tenant under the abbey.

Edward duke of Somerset had a grant of the manor 1 E. 6. and after his attainder, it was granted to sir Anthony Cook, in the 6th year of the same reign.

Sir Henry Winstone was lord of it in 1608. Sir Ralph Dutton, baronet, was seized of it at the beginning of this century; and from him it descended to his great grandson, James Dutton, esq; who is the present lord of the manor. His pedigree and arms are given under Sherbourn, the place of his residence.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Colthrop, or Coldrup, which is separated from the rest of the parish by the intervention of part of Haresfield. Thomas Crook held Coldthrop 10 E. 3. Charles Yate, esq; was proprietor of it, and had a good seat here, about the beginning of this century. He was the youngest son of William Yate, esq; and married, to his second wife, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Richard Yate of Arlingham, and dying in the year 1721, left issue, by his said wife, six daughters coheireses. Elizabeth, the eldest, and Sophia, the fourth daughter, died unmarried:—Dorothy, the second, was married to Powell Snell, of Guiting Grange in this county, esq; by whom she had three sons, Powell, John, and Charles; and one daughter, Dorothy:—Anna-Maria, the third daughter, was married to Edmund Estcourt, of Shipton Moign, esq; whose only child, Anna-Maria, was wedded to William Earle, late of Malmesbury in the county of Wilts, whom she survived, and died in the year 1775:—Caroline, the fifth daughter, was married, first to Jacob Elton, son of sir Abraham Elton, baronet; and secondly, to John Aspinel, esq; serjeant at law, but died without issue by either:—Henrietta, the youngest, was the wife of Mr. Richard Warren, of Bristol, by whom she had one daughter, Charles Snell, third son of Powell Snell, esq; and Dorothy his wife, sold this estate to Mr. Samuel Niblet, of the city of Gloucester, who is the present proprietor of it. Colthrop, and part of Hardwick make one tithing.

Livery of a close in Coldrup was granted to John Bound 4 Eliz.

2. Putloe. Livery of this manor was granted to sir John Lutterel 1 Eliz. It is now the property of James Dutton, esq.

3. Standish Morton. 4. Little Haresfield. 5. Oxlinch; all which belong to Mr. Dutton. Lands in Nether Oxlinch belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and were granted to Edward duke of Somerset 1 E. 6.

6. Part of Pitchcombe, which is intirely separated from the main body of the parish, by the interposition of Randwick. This estate belonged to John Bridgman, of Prinknash, at the beginning of the present century, and is now vested, by purchase, in Mr. Page, of Painswick in this county.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth about 230*l.* a year, and in the patronage of the bishop of Gloucester.

The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is small, but neatly pewed with Dutch oak, and has a handsome spire at the west end.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is an old monument for sir Henry Winstone, but the inscription and arms are covered with white wash.

Upon a flat stone, within the rails inclosing the communion table, is this inscription, exactly taken.

Robertus Frampton
Episcopus Gloucesteriensis,
(Cætera quis nescit?)
Ob. 8 Calend: Junij,

On the upper part of the stone are the arms of his diocese, impaling Gules, three bars argent, in chief three crescents Or, for Frampton.

Against the south wall of the chancel, there is a marble monument, with this inscription:

Near this place lies interred the Body of Charles Yate, late of Colthrope in this County, Esq. He was the youngest Son of William Yate, Esq; & died the Day of May, 1721, Aged 79 Years.

He married two Wives, y^e first was Elizabeth, the only Daughter of John Scote, Doctor in Divinity, by whom he had one Daughter Mary. And his second was Elizabeth, eldest Daughter of Richard Yate, late of Arlingham in this County, Esq; his now Widow & Relict, by whom he left six Daughters, viz. Elizabeth, Dorothy, Anna-Maria, Sophia, Carolina, & Henrietta.

Elizabeth Yate, Relict of the above Charles Yate, died July 17th 1759, Aged 76. Elizabeth their eldest Daughter died June 7th 1756, Aged 49.

About the beginning of the present century, there were 123 houses in the parish, and about 500 inhabitants, of whom 14 were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 15. Atkyns. Here the small farms have been joined together, and the cottages suffered to fall down, which has obliged the poorer sort of people to remove to other places, and reduced the number of inhabitants to about 400.

STANLEY, or KING'S STANLEY.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Whitston, three miles distant south-westward from Stroud, seven north-eastward from Dursley, and ten south from Gloucester.

Sir Robert Atkyns was of opinion, that Stanley is derived from the Saxon Stan, a stone, and leaz, a pasture ground, as though it were a stony soil; but the parish in general consists of strong, deep land, not at all consistent with that explanation. It is probable, that in the time of the Saxons, the capital mansion-house being of stone, (a thing not then very common in the vale country) gave name to the parish; for Leaz signifies a place, and Stanleaz, the Stone-place, i.e. the house; as we sometimes say the manor place for the manor house. And I am the rather of this opinion, since other villages and towns derive their names from the same thing. Thus Stanley, and Stonehouse, the name of an adjoining village, tho' different in sound, have a like signification; and both are similar to Bodmin, British, the name of a town in Cornwall.

This is supposed to have been the residence of one of the Mercian kings, wherefore it was called King's Stanley, to distinguish it from the parish of Leonard Stanley, next adjoining.

Part of the village is called the Borough, for which two bailiffs are annually chosen, who execute the office of constable within its precincts. In it, stands a building which the inhabitants say was once a jail, and a piece of ground, now belonging longing to the rectory, is called Hanging Close, where it is said criminals were formerly executed. These are as so many shadows of particular privileges, which I suppose the place antiently enjoy'd when it was a borough, and of greater consequence than at present, for so it appears to have been by the names of Pig-street, High-street, &c. mentioned in old writings.

The poor people are chiefly employ'd in the clothing business, which is the general manufacture of this part of the county.

Here are two meadows, called Selsley-meadow, and Stanley-meadow, each containing about fifty acres, which after the hay is taken off, are common to all the inhabitants.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The manor was given to Walter Despencer by king Henry the Second, to whom he was usher of the chamber. This Walter was eldest son of Thurstan le Despencer, the son of William le Despencer, who were both of them stewards to king Henry the First; and Robert Despencer, father of William, bore the same office under king William the Conqueror, with whom he came into England, and received the name of Despencer, i.e. steward, from his employment. Walter died without issue, and was succeeded by his second brother, Almerick le Despencer,¹ who was sheriff of Rutlandshire 34 H. 2. & 1 R. 1. and being steward to the latter, enjoyed, of his gift, the manor of King's Stanley. And in the 5th year of the reign of king John, he had a confirmation in fee of the lordships of Wurdie and Stanley in the vale of Gloucester; which lordship of Wurdie king Henry the Second had formerly given to Walter, brother of Almerick, for his homage and service, paying for the same a pair of gilt spurs, or 12*d.* yearly into the exchequer, on the feast of St. Michael the archangel, and to be held by the service of half a knight's fee. He married Amabel, daughter of Walter de Chesnei, or Chenei, by whom he had issue three sons, Thurstan, Almerick, and Philip.

Almerick le Despencer, the second son, enjoyed the manor of Stanley, but joining with his brother Thurstan, and other barons, in taking up arms against king John, his lands were seized, and granted by that king to Olbert Giffard, his own natural son².

Sir Robert Atkyns says that this Almerick le Despencer was seized of King's Stanley, and had a grant of free warren, fairs, and markets 53 H. 3. which he pleaded in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. and died in the 34th year of the same reign; and that Almeric, son of the last Almerick, was seized of two yard-lands, and of eight acres in this place 4 E. 2. But it appears by a list of all the vills in the county, and their respective lords, which was returned into the exchequer by Walter de Stukely the sheriff 9 E. 1. that John Giffard was then seized of the vill of Stanley Regis, in the hundred of Wyfton. He married Maud, the widow of William Longespee, and died 27 E. 1.

John Giffard of Brimpsfield, son of John and Maud his wife, was seized of the manor of King's Stanley, of the advowson of the church, and of Walliswood 6 E. 2.

Stephen Mareschall held the manor, and one messuage, and one yard-land therein, 7 E. 2.

John Giffard of Brimpsfield last mentioned, continued seized of King's Stanley 16 E. 2. but being taken in open rebellion against that king, at the battle of Burroughbridge in Yorkshire, he was executed at Gloucester as a traitor, and his lands confiscated. John lord Maltravers obtained a grant of this manor, and procured a fine of it to be levied by John Calew, heir to John Giffard by a female. He was soon after convicted of sundry misdemeanors, whereupon his estates were seized, and this manor, with several others, was granted to Maurice, son of Maurice lord Berkeley, 11 E. 3. but Maltravers being again received into the king's favour, recovered this manor in the 27th, and died seized of it in the 31st year of the same reign. John lord Maltravers, son of John, succeeded his father, and died 38 E. 3. but Agnes, the widow of John lord Maltravers the elder, was endowed with this manor, and died 49 E. 3.

A third John lord Maltravers, son of the last John, died seized of the manor of King's Stanley 5 R. 2. and his son Henry deceasing without issue, the manor came to Elianor, sister of Henry, who by her marriage with John Fitz-Alan, or Arundel, second son of Richard earl of Arundel, carried it into that name and family.

John Arundel, son of John and Elianor, had likewise a son John, who became earl of Arundel, on the decease of Thomas earl of Arundel without issue male. He was slain near Beauvois in France, and by an inquisition taken 13 H. 6. was found to have been seized of King Stanley, Stonehouse, Shurdington, Archers [Stoke Archer,] and Woodchester in Gloucestershire, besides great estates in other counties.

Elianor the widow of sir Walter Hungerford, late wife of sir Richard Poinings, and formerly the wife of sir John Arundel, and mother of John earl of Arundel, held this manor in dower till her death 33 H. 6.

Humphry earl of Arundel was son and heir of John, but dying under age, the honour and manor of King Stanley came to his uncle, William earl of Arundel. He married Joan, daughter of Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury, and dying 3 H. 7. was succeeded by his son Thomas earl of Arundel, who married Margaret, daughter of Richard Widvile earl of Rivers, and died seized of King Stanley 16 H. 8.

William earl of Arundel, son of Thomas, had livery of the manors of King's Stanley, Stoke Archer, Shurdington, and Woodchester upon the decease of his father; and having married Anne, sister sister to Henry earl of Northumberland, died 35 H. 8. Henry earl of Arundel, son of William, had livery of King's Stanley the following year, and died 22 Eliz. He was a zealous friend to queen Mary, and greatly instrumental in her advancement to the throne; an action laudable perhaps in the intention, but direful in its consequences, and productive of those shocking barbarities which marked the short but tragical reign of that female zealot; when fire and faggot were thought the fittest instruments to promote that religion whose distinguishing characteristics are patience, meekness, and universal philanthropy; when the bishops Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer were burnt at the stake; men that for learning, piety, and exemplary manners, were the most illustrious of their age, an honour to the nation wherein they lived, and whose names will be remembered with veneration by latest posterity. But to return:

The manor was in the crown 6 Jac. and was granted the next year to George Walter, and John Williams, in trust for William Garraway, and others. It came soon afterwards to the Ducie family, and lord Ducie is the present lord of the manor.

Of the other estates the records shew, that John de Clavile died seized of half a yard-land in King's Stanley 4 E. 2. and his son John de Clavile was likewise seized of the same lands 11 E. 3.

John Notelin was seized of lands in King's Stanley; and Joan, his widow, was endowed with them, and died 14 E. 3. John Notelin, son of John, died seized of the same lands 36 E. 3. and John Notelin, his son, likewise died seized of them 1 R. 2. Another John Notelin, a descendant from the last-mentioned John, died seized of an estate in King's Stanley 29 H. 6.

Hugh Twifel held one messuage, twenty-four acres of arable, and two acres of meadow in King's Stanley 7 R. 2. John Twifel died seized of lands here 32 H. 6. and John Twifel, son of John, died possessed of the same lands 11 E. 4. John Barton, and Richard Ruffel and Margaret his wife, levied a fine of lands in King's Stanley to William Cale 1 E. 6. Thomas Rogers of Wotton Bassett, son and heir of Agnes, died seized of lands in this parish 15 Eliz. leaving Thomas, a posthumous son, his heir. Lands in King's Stanley, which belonged to Henry earl of Arundel, were granted to Christopher Hatton 18 Eliz.

At the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns's account, there were 250 houses in the parish, and about 1100 inhabitants, of whom 60 were freeholders; yearly births 22, burials 19. The average of annual burials is now 32, and there are at present 1257 inhabitants; so that about one in 42 dies annually.

STANLEY St. LEONARD'S.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Whistone, four miles distant south-west from Stroud, six north-east from Dursley, and eleven south from Gloucester.

It is bounded by King's Stanley on the east, Easington on the west, Stonehouse to the north, and Woodchester on the south; and is situated on the north side of a lofty wood, called Bucholt, which in the Saxon language signifies the Becch-wood, and without doubt did antiently, as it does at present, consist chiefly of the beech tree. The greater part of the parish is rich pasturage and orcharding, and produces good cheese, and stout cyder.

The etymology of Stanley is given in the preceding parish. This was called Leonard Stanley, (from a priory here, dedicated to St. Leonard) to distinguish it from the adjoining parish of King's Stanley.

King Edward the Second granted a charter of a weekly market, to be held on Saturday, at Stanley St. Leonard's; and of two annual fairs, one on the 6th day of November, which is St. Leonard's day; the other on the Saturday after the 15th of July, which is St. Swithin's day; these being the saints to whom the priory and the parish church were respectively dedicated; and that charter was renewed in the year 1620.

This was the only market-town in the hundred, and was formerly more populous than at present, having been much reduced by a dreadful fire, which happened in May, 1686, and almost consumed it. There was a brief, soon after, for the benefit of the poor sufferers; but the national revolution taking place about that time, and men's minds being employ'd on greater concerns, the catastrophe was too much neglected, and not one sixth part of the money collected was remitted to the parish, nor was the remainder ever accounted for by the farmers and officers of briefs at that time. It continues, however, to rank as a market town in our books and maps, and has a right to hold markets and fairs, but wants interest and conveniencies to bring people together. In short, the market has been long since disused, and is totally lost. The houses stand in a discontinued, stragling form, and the only appearance of its having been a market town, is a little shed, which was the market house, still remaining about the middle of the place.

There was a small monastery founded here, dedicated to St. Leonard, of a prior and canons, as they are expressly called, in archbishop Theobald's confirmation of several gifts to them, a translation of which I have inserted in the Appendix, N^o. 24. And here it is proper to observe, that only the former part of that confirmation, as far as the word appurtenances, (which stands in the twelfth line, as I have printed it) is given in sir Robert Atkyns's History; and that what follows in that book, is the latter part of king Henry the Second's charter to the priory of Newent, which, by some unaccountable mistake, was joined to it, and makes an incongruous medley of two distinct writings.

It is not absolutely certain who was the founder of this priory, but it has been commonly attributed to Roger de Berkeley, who gave it the advowsons of the several churches of Ozleworth, Cowley, Erlingham, Uley, and Slimbridge; and in the year 1146, gave the patronage of the priory, with all its rights, to the abbey of Gloucester, with the consent of Sabrith, or Sabrath, the prior of the monastery, and the rest of the monks, and with the approbation of Simon, bishop of Worcester, whereby it became a cell of Benedictine monks to that abbey. And in the year 1156, the same Roger de Berkeley gave the church of Cam, with the appurtenances, to this priory, and a grove called Fysacre; which were afterwards confirmed by king Henry the Third, and by John, bishop of Worcester. But this Roger de Berkeley could not be that Roger who came in with the Conqueror, to whom sir Robert Atkyns (p. 25.) has attributed several of these donations. Robert de Berkeley, son of Maurice, gave also to this priory, a mill in Cowley^b, and a messuage with lands, belonging to the same mill, in the reign of king Henry the Second.

There was afterwards a law-suit commenced concerning the church of Slimbridge, between Thomas lord Berkeley, and Thomas de Bredon, abbat abbat of Gloucester, which was adjusted by composition. Maurice lord Berkeley, grandson of Harding, had founded an hospital at Lorwing, or Lorling, by the name of the Master and brethren of Lorwing, and endowed it with lands there; which hospital, lands and appurtenances, Thomas lord Berkeley gave to the priory of Stanley, in consideration whereof the church of Slimbridge was released to him 8 H. 3. And thus it happened, that Lorenge-farm became appurtenant to this parish, tho' seven or eight miles distant from the body of it; and the occupiers of the farm have paid the parochial taxes, and served the offices to this parish time immemorially; but the land-tax goes in aid of the parish of Cam, to which Lorenge is contiguous.

Sir Robert Atkyns, in his History of Gloucestershire, and Mr. Stevens, in his Supplement to the Monasticon, were both mistaken, in representing Geoffry Mandevil, earl of Essex, as a great benefactor to this priory; in which they have confounded it with that of Stonely in Huntingdonshire, of the order of St. Augustin, founded by William Mandeville, earl of Essex, who lived in the year 1180; whereas this priory of Stanley St. Leonard's was of the Benedictine order.

I have no where found a catalogue of the priors, nor can I make out a list of them from the papers which have fallen into my hands. Doctor John Crosse was prior here in 1189, and not in 1449, as sir Robert Atkyns has it. He lies interred in the south aisle of the church, with an old monkish inscription on the stone, (as I have it in some manuscript papers concerning the priory) and tho' the date has been effaced for above a century past, yet it appears, from the most probable accounts of him, that he died in 1199. The inscription was as follows:

*Qui jacet hoc tumulo Doctor John Crosse nominatur
Ille Prior Stanly Sancti fuerat Leonardi
Hunc sancto rotulo scribat Deus et tueatur.*

This priory was dissolved with the abbey of Gloucester; but before that event took place, there being only two monks in the priory, king Henry the Eighth, by a letter, dated June 11, in the 30th year of his reign, desired that those monks might be recalled to the abbey, and that the abbat and convent would grant a lease of this cell, for ninety-nine years, to sir William Kingston, knight; which was done accordingly, July 18, at the yearly rent of 36*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* with some few reservations, as appears by abbat Malvern's manuscript. The annual revenues of the priory, at the dissolution, amounted to 126*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.* according to Speed's account; and the clear value was 106*l.* 17*s.* according to a table of valuations in Stevens's Supplement.

The scite of the cell of Stanley, formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, and all the lands in England belonging to that cell, were granted to sir Anthony Kingston, reserving a rent of 40*s.* per ann. 36 H. 8. Sir Anthony conveyed them, by licence of alienation, to Anthony Bouchier, esq; 2 E. 6. Mr. Bouchier conveyed them to John Sandford, on the 2d of Feb. 3 E. 6. and they were then properly enrolled in chancery, as appears by evidences and writings in the possession of Robert Sandford, esq; the present owner of the scite of the priory. He is descended from an ancient family in Shropshire, who sprung from the same stock with the Sandfords in Westmoreland, mentioned by Leland, among the families of note there in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, one of whose descendants, Thomas Sandford, esq; of Hougil-castle in that county, was created a baronet 17 C. 1. Anselm Sandford was son of the above-mentioned John Sandford, and upon his father's death, had livery of the priory of Stanley, and of the manor of Stonehouse, in this county, 13 Eliz. Robert Sandford, gent. was a direct descendant from Anselm. He died in the old priory of Stanley, which was the seat of his family, in 1719; and was succeeded by his only son Robert Sandford, esq; who resided at Stratton, and was an acting magistrate in the commission of the peace for the county of Gloucester, which office he discharged with judgment and integrity upwards of forty years; and dying in 1769, he was succeeded by his son Robert Sandford, esq; the present proprietor of the priory, and lord of the manor of Stanley. His arms are, Per chevron, sable and ermine, in chief two bears heads coupéd Or.

The old priory house was taken down about thirty years ago, and the outward walls of a good house were built on the very spot of ground whereon it stood; but the inside is not yet finished.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The earliest account of this manor is thus recorded in the antient survey:

' Radulf de Berchelai holds Stanlege in Blacelew
' hundred. There are four hides and a half.
' Godric and Wisnod held it for two manors.
' There are two plow-tillages in demean, and six ' villeins, and fourteen bordars, with twelve plow' tillages. There are five servi, and ten acres of ' meadow. It was worth and is worth 100*s.*
Domesday, p. 75.

Henry de Berkeley was seized of the manor of Stanley St. Leonard's, and of the advowson of the church; and his right to certain privileges formerly granted to him, was allowed in the proceedings on a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. John Berkeley of Dursley, and Hawise his wife, levied a fine of this manor, to the use of themselves in taille, 5 E. 3. and were seized of it 19 & 22 E. 3. Sir Nicholas Berkeley held lands in Stanley St. Leonard's 2 & 6 R. 2.

Maud de Cantelupe, descended from the Berkeleys, died seized of this manor 4 H. 4. Richard Cheddre married a daughter of Robert de Cantelupe by Maud his wife, and by her had a daughter and heirs, married to Thomas Wekys, who, in right of his wife, died seized of this manor 13 E. 4. Nicholas Wekys died also seized of it 5 Mar. and livery was granted to Robert Wekys, his grandson and heir, the same year.

The manor passed afterwards to the Whitmores, a Staffordshire family, who enjoyed it for a considerable time, 'till it was purchased not long ago of the late William Whitmore, of Slaughter in this county, by Robert Sandford, the father of Robert Sandford, esq; the present lord of the manor, of whose family and arms, I have given a short account under that of the priory.

Roger Barber was seized of four messuages, and three shops, in Gloucester and Stanley St. Leonard's, for the use of the abbey of Gloucester, 16 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouse. It is a donative, and was for many years an impropriation, subject only to the annual payment of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to the curate. There used to be a lease granted by the impropiator, of most of the tithes, except of the priory lands, to the curate; which seldom amounted to more than 3*l.* a year; but the church has received a double augmentation from queen Anne's bounty, with some further additions from the impropiator and others, about forty years ago; so that by the purchase of an estate, and the settlement of the greater part of the tithes of the parish, except of the priory lands, the benefice is now worth 60*l.* a year neat, and is subject to episcopal jurisdiction. Robert Sandford, esq; is patron, and his brother, the reverend John Sandford, D.D. is the present incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. It is built in the form of a cross, and the tower, which is very large, stands in the middle of it, containing four great bells, and a clock. There are private recesses between the outer and inner walls of the tower, the use of which is not certainly known; and there was formerly a high spire on the top of it.

Third Son of Robert Sandford, Esq;
of Stratton in this County.
A Youth of amiable Dispositions
And of an Exemplary Conduct.
Earnestly desirous of Knowledge,
He pursued his Studies with a laudable Industry,
yet confined not his Search to Knowledge alone,
But joined with his Improvements in useful Learning
The more valuable Attainments of Piety & Virtue.
As he lived under the habitual Influence of Religion
So was he supported by it in Death:
He met the Approaches of it with Peace & Composure,
Declaring his Confidence in the Merits of Xst's Blood,

And his intire Resignation to the Will of God.
Reader, imitate thou the Example of his Life
That thy last End may be like his.
He died June 10th, 1749, Aged 23.

The arms upon the monument are, Baron and femme, 1. Checky Or and azure, on a bend argent three lions of the first, for Clifford.
2. Sheppard, as at Hampton.

There is an elegant latin inscription for Henry Rishton, A.M. who died in the year 1741, and for his wife Elianor, who were both buried here, and who gave 200*l.* for the use of the poor of this parish for ever, which has been laid out in the purchase of land here, and the profits of it are applied to that use by the patron and incumbent, who are perpetual trustees.

and heirs, married to Thomas Wekys, who, in right of his wife, died seized of this manor 13 E. 4. Nicholas Wekys died also seized of it 5 Mar. and livery was granted to Robert Wekys, his grandson and heir, the same year.

The manor passed afterwards to the Whitmores, a Staffordshire family, who enjoyed it for a considerable time, 'till it was purchased not long ago of the late William Whitmore, of Slaughter in this county, by Robert Sandford, the father of Robert Sandford, esq; the present lord of the manor, of whose family and arms, I have given a short account under that of the priory.

Roger Barber was seized of four messuages, and three shops, in Gloucester and Stanley St. Leonard's, for the use of the abbey of Gloucester, 16 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouse. It is a donative, and was for many years an impropriation, subject only to the annual payment of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* to the curate. There used to be a lease granted by the impropiator, of most of the tithes, except of the priory lands, to the curate; which seldom amounted to more than 3*l.* a year; but the church has received a double augmentation from queen Anne's bounty, with some further additions from the impropiator and others, about forty years ago; so that by the purchase of an estate, and the settlement of the greater part of the tithes of the parish, except of the priory lands, the benefice is now worth 60*l.* a year neat, and is subject to episcopal jurisdiction. Robert Sandford, esq; is patron, and his brother, the reverend John Sandford, D.D. is the present incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. It is built in the form of a cross, and the tower, which is very large, stands in the middle of it, containing four great bells, and a clock. There are private recesses between the outer and inner walls of the tower, the use of which is not certainly known; and there was formerly a high spire on the top of it.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Upon flat stones in the chancel, are the four following memorials:

Here lyeth the Body of Ralph Sandford B. A. of Trinity College in Oxtord,
Third Son of Robert Sandford, Esq;
of Stratton in this County.
A Youth of amiable Dispositions
And of an Exemplary Conduct.
Earnestly desirous of Knowledge,
He pursued his Studies with a laudable Industry,
yet confined not his Search to Knowledge alone,
But joined with his Improvements in useful Learning
The more valuable Attainments of Piety & Virtue.
As he lived under the habitual Influence of Religion
So was he supported by it in Death:
He met the Approaches of it with Peace & Composure,
Declaring his Confidence in the Merits of Xst's Blood,

And his intire Resignation to the Will of God.
Reader, imitate thou the Example of his Life
That thy last End may be like his.
He died June 10th, 1749, Aged 23.

There is also a monument in the church for Mr. Nathaniel Badger, clothier of this parish, who dying in 1707, settled 40*s.* a year for ever, to be paid out of lands in Slimbridge, for the establishment of a charity school in this parish, to teach children to read, &c. which, with some additions by subscription, is at present kept up by the minister, who is trustee for this purpose.

There were, about seventy years ago, according to sir Robert Atkyns, 90 houses, and about 400 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 17 were freeholders; yearly births 12, burials 11. The number of souls at present is about 512.

STANTON, or STAUNTON.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Kiftgate, seven miles distant south-west from Campden, seven north from Winchcombe, and twenty-two north-east from Gloucester.

One part of it lies in the Vale, the other on the ridge of hills that divides the vale from the Cotswolds. Here are no curious natural productions, nor any antiquities, except a large camp on Shunborow-hill, fortified with double intrenchments, and overlooking the vale, but to what age or people it owes its existence, is utterly unknown.

This place was probably called Stanton from the stone-quarry on the side of the hill.

The parsonage house is a very good one. It was built by the reverend Mr. Henry Izod, as appears by his arms on the chimney-piece in the hall.

A small brook runs from hence into the river Idbourn, which empties itself into the Avon below Evesham.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor is supposed to have been given to the abbey of Winchcombe, by its founder, Kenulph king of Mercia, who died in the year 819; and it continued in the possession of that house at the time of the general survey, as appears by a passage from Domesday, of which the following is a translation:

‘ The church of St. Mary of Wincelcumbe holds Stantone in Gretestanes hundred. There are three hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and fourteen villeins, with seven plow-tillages. There are three borders, and six servi, and six acres of meadow. A wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. It is worth and was worth 3*l.*’ p. 71.

The abbey of Winchcombe purchased a charter of free warren in Stanton and Snowhill 35 H. 3.

and their right to that privilege was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. Peter de Stanton was tenant of the manor 16 E. 1. The abbey of Winchcombe assigned the manors of Stanton and Snowhill to the abbey of St. Ebrulph at Utica in Normandy, 12 E. 2.

Upon the general dissolution of abbies, this manor came to the crown, and was assigned as part of the jointure of queen Katherine, and holden, together with the advowson of the church, as of her manor of East Greenwich.

The king and queen granted their house in Stanton, and the manor, with its rights and members, to John Elliot, to hold by the fourth part of a knight’s fee, 4 & 5 Ph. & M. and Elliot, obtaining a licence of alienation, conveyed them to Thomas Doleman the same year. John Doleman, son of Thomas, had livery of the manor, and of the advowson of the church of Snowhill, 15 Eliz. Matthew Doleman, of London, haberdasher, was seized of the manor, and of lands here, which he sold to William Jackson, alias Boothe, Thomas Warne, Nicholas Kirkham, Humphry Wrighte, Nicholas Izode, and others.
