William Jackson died in the year 1602, seized of part of the demean lands of the manor, of common of pasture in Dukemead and Berry Wormington, of the Sheephuse, and of the tithes of Sheephay; which particulars, except the tithes, were part of the late manor of Stawnton; and William Jackson, son and heir of the said William, was upwards of forty years old at his father’s death, as appears by the escheator’s inquisition 2 Jac.

Mr. Izod had a good estate here, which he gave by will to Reginald Wynniat, esq; from whom it descended to his son, the reverend Reginald Wynniat, M.A. who has lately purchased several others in the same place, so that he is now possessed of the greater part of the parish; but all courts and royalties have been long since neglected. For his arms see Dimmock.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 180*l.* a year. The rev^d. Mr. Reginald Wynniat, M.A. is patron, incumbent, and impropriator.

The chapel of Snowhill is annexed to this church, and the advowson of them was lately given in exchange, by the reverend Lionel Kirkham, B.D. with the present patron, for the rectory of Salford in Oxfordshire.

The rector has one fourth of the great tithes, and the impropriator has the other three parts. The demean lands are free from tithes.

One yard-land belongs to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael, and built in the form of a cross, with a steeple at the west end.

Sir Robert Atkyns reckons 60 houses in the parish, and about 300 inhabitants, whereof 29 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. The present number of people is about 310.

STANTON or STAUNTON.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of St. Briavell's, in the Forest division of the county, five miles east from Monmouth, two west from Colford, and twenty-three south-westward from Gloucester.

It is full of iron ore, the getting of which is the chief employment of the labouring people, who make very good wages at it.

The name of the village is derived from the Saxon Stan, a stone, and ton, a common termination; but whether it was so called from the stony soil, or from a stone of a prodigious size standing here, I shall not determine. This stone is placed as it were on a point, so as to fill the beholder with apprehensions of its being ready to fall. It is supposed to have been a Rocking Stone, placed here in the time of paganism, and if so, it is the only one of that kind in Gloucestershire; but it has now lost its motion. There are various opinions concerning these stones. Some have supposed them to be rude, pagan deities, which the people worshipped on particular occasions; but I rather think the Rocking Stone was not the immediate object of worship. The more probable opinion seems to be, that it was an instrument in the hands of the priest to assist his authority in matters of moment and difficulty; who, the better to affect his purpose, taught the people, by example and precept, to approach it with great veneration and respect. Being so nicely adjusted as to move with ease, it seemed calculated to decide any question that might be put, by its motion one way or the other, agreeably to the will of the person officiating; and so of answering the purpose intended by the antient oracles among the Greeks and Romans.

This village stands at the bottom of a high hill, which overlooks the town of Monmouth, and part of the counties of Monmouth and Hereford.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

‘Turstin the son of Rolf holds Stantone in Blachelaue hundred. There are five hides. Tovi held it of king Edward. In demean are two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and six bordars, with ten plow-tillages. There are four servi, and two mills of 35*sol.* and ten acres of meadow; a wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. It is worth and was worth 100*sol.* Tovi holds two hides of this land by the gift [elemosina] of king William.’ Domesday, p. 78.

An inquisition taken 15 E. 1. before William de Saham, Richard de Boyland, Roger Toveday, and John de Mettingham, itinerant justices for the county of Gloucester, recites, That Thomas

Walding de Stanton ought to hold the vill of Stanton with the bailiwick, of the king, in capite, viz. one carucate of land, which paid 26s. 8d. a year; and that Richard de la More then held it, together with the bailiwick, but the jurors knew not how.

John Walding held this manor 13 E. 3. He is soon afterwards called John de Stanton, and held the manor and bailiwick of Stanton in the forest of Dean, with its fees and profits, in the 16th, and died seized thereof in the 22d year of the same reign. Thomas Walding de Stanton died seized of the manor, and of the advowson of Stanton, 8 R. 2. and another Thomas Stanton died seized of Stanton 16 E. 4.

The manor came afterwards to the family of Baynham. John Baynham died seized of it 20 H. 8. William Baynham, son of John, had livery of it 26 H. 8. and levied a fine of it, and of Newland, 6 E. 6.

From the Baynhams it came to the Brains, a respectable family in this part of the county. Robert Brain, upon the death of his father, had livery of the manor 1 Eliz. George Winter, esq; younger brother of sir William Winter of Lidney, married Anne, one of the sisters and coheires of Robert Brain, and in her right was seized of this manor, and died possessed of it, and of Dyrham and Hinton in this county, in the year 1581. John Winter, son of George, had livery of Stanton, Dyrham, and Hinton, the same year his father died. He commanded the Elizabeth, of eighty tons burthen, as vice admiral under sir Francis Drake, in his famous voyage round the world in 1577, but he did not accompany him thro' the expedition, for being separated from the admiral in a violent storm, on the 8th of October, 1578, he repassed the straits of Magellan, and returned to England.

The Halls were afterwards lords of the manor. Benedict Hall, son of Henry-Benedict, and grandson of Benedict Hall, of Highmeadow, esq; was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century. His only daughter and heiress, Beata-Maria-Theresa, was married to sir Thomas Gage, created viscount Gage of Castle-Island in the county of Kerry, and baron Gage of Castlebar in the county of Mayo, Sep. 14, 1720. She deceasing in the year 1749, was buried at Newland, and his lordship likewise dying in 1754, was buried at Firle in Suffex, and was succeeded in title and estate by his eldest son, William-Hall viscount Gage, the present lord of the manor of Stanton. His lordship married Elizabeth, daughter of Sampson Gideon, esq; and sister of sir Sampson Gideon, of Spalding in Lincolnshire, baronet, and has a fine seat at Highmeadow, one part (as it is said) in this parish, the other in that of Newland, under which head it has already been taken notice of. His lordship's arms are, Per saltire sapphire and pearl, a saltire ruby. CREST. On a wreath, a ram proper, armed and ungued topaz. SUPPORTERS.

Two greybonds tenne, gorged with coronets of fleurs de lis topaz. MOTTO. COURAGE SANS PEUR.

William Hall, who married Juliana Nurse, died seized of lands in Staunton, Ashrug, and Highmeadow 37 H. 8. and left Christopher his son twenty-three years old. James Bell died seized of lands in Newland, and of a close in Ashrydge in this parish 43 Eliz. Esch.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the forest deanery, worth about 70l. a year, of which lord Gage has the patronage.

The advowson of the rectory of Stanton was granted to William Rigg and Peter Gering 5 Mar. and it was again granted to Richard Robson 6 Eliz. Mistakes often arise from two places being of the same name; thus, what sir Robert Atkyns says of queen Katherine being endowed with this rectory, and of the grant to John Elliot and Alexander Chesnal 4 Mar. must be understood of Stanton in Kiftsgate hundred.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a double building, supported by pillars, and has a handsome tower in the middle, adorned with pinnacles.

S T A N W A Y.

THIS parish lies in the upper part of Tewkesbury hundred, seven miles distant south-west from Campden, six north from Winchcombe, and twenty-one north-east from Gloucester.

The great road from Tewkesbury to London leads up Stanway-hill, from which the place took its name, for Stanway, signifies the stony road.

The abbats of Tewkesbury had a country seat here, situated a little eastward of the church. It was rebuilt and enlarged by abbat Richard Cheltenham.

tenham, in the time of king Henry the Seventh, and Leland calls it a fayre Mannour Place, in the succeeding reign. The present manor house is large and handsome, situated on the slope of the hill, with good gardens, and a cascade of water, seen from the vale below at the distance of several miles. It was built by sir Paul Tracy, in the reign of king James the First, and was the seat and residence of Robert Tracy, esq; 'till the time of his death, in the year 1767. The famous doctor Dover, who instituted the Cotswold Games, died at this house in the year 1742, and was buried, at his own request, in the vault belonging to the Tracy family. No gentleman resides at Stanway-house at present.

A small brook, called the Leame, runs from hence into the river Isbourn, which empties itself into the upper Avon, near Evesham; and another spring, rising in the higher part of the parish, runs into the river Winrush, and so into the Thames.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It is said that this manor was given to the abbey of Tewkesbury by the two brothers Odo and Dodo, who founded that monastery in the year 715. It was part of the possessions of the same abbey at the time of the general survey, as appears by the following extract from the record:

'Seven hides in Stanwege belong to the church [of Tewkesbury]. There are two plow-tillages in demean, and eight villeins, and two bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There is a monastery, and five [plow-tillages] among the servi and ancilla, and a salt pit at Wich, and eight acres of meadow. A wood three furlongs long, and one broad. In the time of king Edward it was worth 8*l.* now 7*l.*' Domesday, p. 68.

From this time I find no further mention in the records of the monastery at Stanway.

King William the Second granted to the abbey of Tewkesbury court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Stanway, which grant was pleaded and allowed in a Quo warranto 15 E. 1. Thomas de Cannings was tenant of the manor 9 E. 3.

This estate continued in the abbey of Tewkesbury 'till the dissolution of monasteries, and was then granted by the crown to William Tracy, of Toddington, esq; ancestor of the present lord Tracy. He settled it on Richard Tracy, his second son, who married Barbara, daughter of Thomas Lucy, of Charlecot in Warwickshire, and was high sheriff of this county 3 Eliz. Sir Paul Tracy, baronet, son and heir of Richard, married Anne, daughter of sir Ralph Shakerly, and served the office of high sheriff of this county 11 Jac. 1. Sir Richard Tracy, son of sir Paul, married Anne, daughter of sir Thomas Coningsby, of Hampton in Herefordshire, and was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 4 C. 1. Sir Humphry Tracy, succeeded his father sir Richard, and served the office of high sheriff 15 C. 1. His attachment to the royal cause in the great civil war, which distracted the kingdom in that reign, occasioned the sequestration of his estates by the victorious party, nor did he recover the possession of them 'till he had paid 1600*l.* composition. Upon his death, without issue, in the year 1651, the manor of Stanway devolved to his next brother, sir Richard Tracy, who also died without issue, and was succeeded by sir John Tracy, his younger brother; but he likewise deceasing without issue, in the year 1677, left the manor of Stanway to Ferdinando Tracy, younger son of John third lord Tracy, who married — daughter of sir Anthony Keck, lord commissioner of the great seal, and left John Tracy, esq; his only son and heir. He married Anne, daughter of sir Robert Atkyns, lord chief baron of the exchequer, by Anne his second wife, daughter of sir Thomas Dacres of Hertfordshire, and was lord of this manor at the beginning of the present century. By his said wife Anne he had issue five sons, Robert and John, twins; Ferdinando, Anthony, and Thomas; and five daughters, Anne, Catherine, Martha, Elizabeth, and Frances. Robert Tracy, esq; succeeded his father John, and marrying Anna-Maria, daughter of sir Roger Hudson, knight, died at Stanway without issue, Aug. 26, 1767. And Edward Devereux, lord viscount Hereford¹, in right of his lady, Henrietta-Charlotte, daughter of the late Anthony-Keck Tracy, esq; is the present lord of the manor of Stanway.

H A M-

¹ This noble family derive their surname from Evereux, a town in Normandy. The first of them who settled in England was Robert, youngest son of Walter earl of Rosmar. This Robert, who in antient records is sometimes stiled de Ebrois, and de Ebroicis, accompanied William duke of Normandy in his invasion of England, and had an only son and heir, Reginald d'Evereux, whose son and heir, William d'Evereux, had to his wife Helewysse, who survived him, and gave to the monks of St. Peter's at Gloucester, certain lands called the Hyde, in Herefordshire, which were given her in marriage by Walter de Laci. Eustace d'Evereux, son of William, impleaded Herbert Walteran for one knight's fee in Kington, 5 Joh. Stephen, only son of Eustace, having attended the king in his wars against the Welch, as appears by the Clause Rolls 7 H. 3. had scutage of his tenants in the counties of Gloucester and Hereford. By Isabel his wife, he had a son William d'Evereux, who was one of the barons marchers, and was slain fighting against the king in the battle of Evesham, 49 H. 3. By Maud, sister to Walter de Gifford, he had an only son William, who paid a composition of three years value to have livery of his father's lands. He was summoned to parliament in 1298, and, by Alice his wife, left a son sir William d'Evereux, knight, whose son, sir Walter d'Evereux, knight, by Margery his wife, had issue sir John d'Evereux, his heir, and sir William d'Evereux, seated at Bodenham and Whitechurch in Herefordshire, of whom hereafter.

Sir John married Margaret, daughter of John Vere, earl of Oxford, and having served under the Black Prince in France and Spain, and in various wars by sea and land, was made a knight banneret, and installed knight of the garter 9 R. 2. He filled many places of great trust and honour, and was summoned to parliament among the barons, from the 8th to the 16 R. 2. He died in 1394, leaving issue one daughter Joan, and one son sir John d'Evereux, who married Philippa, daughter of Guy de Bryan, and died without issue.

I now return to sir William Devereux, of Bodenham and Whitechurch, before mentioned, who by Anne his wife, daughter of sir John Barre, had issue sir Walter Devereux, who married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Crophull, and left issue four sons and two daughters, viz. Walter, John, Richard, Thomas, Elizabeth, and Margaret. Walter, the eldest, marrying Elizabeth, daughter of sir Thomas Bromwich, knight, had issue sir Walter, his son and heir, and a daughter Elizabeth; which sir Walter,

About seventy years ago, here were 49 houses, and about 240 inhabitants, of whom 7 were freeholders; yearly births 8, burials 7. Atkyns. The people at present are estimated at about 260.

Walter, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir of sir John Merbury, knight, had issue sir Walter, his heir; sir John; and two daughters, Anne and Sibil.

The last mentioned sir Walter married Anne, sole daughter and heir to William lord Ferrers of Chartley, and was summoned to parliament by the title of lord Ferrers, 1 E. 4. and had a grant the same year of several manors, &c. in recompence of his services in the wars against king H. 6. He was slain, Aug. 22, 1485, in Bosworth-field, fighting for king Richard the Third, leaving issue three sons, sir John, sir Richard, and sir Thomas; and one daughter Elizabeth.

John, the eldest son, was summoned to parliament from the 3d to 12 H. 7. and wedding Cecilie, sister and heir of Henry Bourchier, earl of Essex, had issue by her Walter, his only son, and one daughter Anne, married to Henry lord Clifford. Which Walter, for his gallant behaviour in the king's wars, was elected one of the knights companions of the garter, 15 H. 8. and afterwards, in further recompence of his great prudence, loyalty, and valour, was advanced to the dignity of viscount Hereford, to him and his heirs males for ever, 4 E. 6. He had issue by Mary, daughter of Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorset, three sons, viz. Henry, who died unmarried; sir Richard Devereux, who died before his father; and sir William Devereux, who, by his first wife Jane, daughter of John Scudamore, of Home Lacy in com. Hereford, esq; having no male issue, after her decease married Margaret, daughter of Robert Garnish, of Kenton in Suffolk, by whom he had issue sir Edward Devereux, of Castle Bromwich, in the county of Warwick, of whom hereafter as continuator of the male line.

Sir Richard Devereux, by Dorothy his wife, eldest daughter of George the first earl of Huntington, had issue two sons, Walter and George; and two daughters, Elizabeth and Anne, and dying in his father's life-time, 1 E. 6. Walter, his son, became 2d viscount Hereford, and was created earl of Essex 14 Eliz. By Lettice his wife, daughter of sir Francis Knolles, knight of the Garter, he had issue three sons, Robert, his successor; Walter, slain at the siege of Rouen, without issue; Francis who died young; and two daughters, Penelope and Dorothy.

Robert, the eldest son, 3d viscount Hereford and 2d earl of Essex, the famous favourite of queen Elizabeth, was beheaded in 1601, leaving issue by Frances his wife, daughter and heir to sir Francis Wallingham, one son and two daughters, viz. Robert, Frances, and Dorothy, who were restored in blood 1 Jac. 1. whereby

Robert, the son, succeeded as 4th viscount Hereford, and 3d earl of Essex, and was general of the parliament's forces in the reign of king Charles the First. His lordship dying without surviving issue male, in 1646, the earldoms of Essex and Eu became extinct; but the title of viscount Hereford devolved on sir Walter Devereux, eldest surviving son of sir Edward Devereux, of Castle Bromwich, before mentioned, only son of sir William Devereux, by his second wife, Margaret Garnish: which sir Edward Devereux, by Catherine his wife, daughter of Edward Arden, of Park-hall in Warwickshire, had six sons and four daughters. Ambrose, the eldest, died unmarried; the others were sir Walter; William; sir George, the continuator of the male line; Edward, who died unmarried; and Henry: The daughters were Margaret, Anne, Howard, and Grace.

Sir Walter Devereux, the second son, succeeded to the title of viscount Hereford, in 1646. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Knightley, of Borough-hall, in the county of Stafford, esq; and had issue by her five sons, Essex, Leicester, Walter, Edward, and John; of whom the first, third, fourth, and fifth died without issue.

Leicester, the second son, succeeded as 6th viscount Hereford. He had issue, by Elizabeth his first wife, daughter and heir to sir William Withipole, knight, one daughter Frances, married to William viscount Tracy. And by Priscilla, his second wife, daughter of John Catchpole, of the county of Suffolk, esq; left issue two sons, Leicester and Edward; and two daughters, viz. Elizabeth, who died unmarried; and Anne, misrepresented in Collins's Peerage (V. 6, p. 213) as the wife of John-Symes Berkeley, esq; and mother of the present dutchess dowager of Beaufort; whereas he married Elizabeth, relict of Edward the 8th viscount Hereford, as appears by his memorial in the church of Stoke-Giffard, in this county.

Leicester, the eldest son, succeeded as 7th viscount Hereford; but dying in 1682-3, being then about nine years of age,

Edward Devereux, his brother, became 8th viscount Hereford. He married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir to Walter Norborne, of Calne in the county of Wilts, but died without issue in 1700, and in him the male issue of this branch became extinct.

I return therefore to sir George Devereux, fourth son of sir Edward Devereux; which sir George, by Blanch his wife, daughter and heir of sir John Ridge, of Ridge in Shropshire, left an only son and heir, George, who by his wife Bridget, daughter and heir to Arthur Price, of Vaynor in Montgomeryshire, esq; had two sons, Price, his heir apparent; and Vaughan Devereux, esq; seated at Nantaribba in the last mentioned county, and the continuer of the male line. Price, the eldest son, died in his father's life-time, leaving, by Mary his wife, daughter of — Stephens, of the city of Bristol, esq; an only son,

Price, the 9th viscount Hereford, who married Mary, second daughter of Samuel Sandys, of Ombersley-court, in the county of Worcester, esq; by whom he had issue one son, Price Devereux, born in 1694; and one daughter, Mary; and dying in 1740, aged 77, was succeeded by his said only son,

Price Devereux, 10th viscount Hereford. His lordship was twice married, but died in 1748, without issue; wherefore the honour descended to the male heir of Vaughan Devereux, esq; who, as before recited, was seated at Nantaribba in the county of Montgomery, and by Mary his wife, daughter of — Fox, esq; left a son Arthur Devereux, who married two wives; first, a daughter of Evan Glynn, of Glynn, esq; and by her had two sons, Arthur, buried at Forden in 1737, without issue; and Vaughan, who died an infant in 1712. By his second wife Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Glynn, esq; he had issue

Edward, 11th viscount Hereford, who took his seat in the house of peers in 1750. His lordship married Catherine, daughter of Richard Mytton, of Gattle in the county of Montgomery, esq; by whom he had issue three sons and two daughters, viz. Arthur Devereux, born in 1740, and died in 1743; Edward, the present viscount Hereford; George, Bridget, and Catherine. And dying in 1760, his lordship was succeeded by his said eldest surviving son, Edward, now 12th viscount Hereford, who married Henrietta-Charlotte, daughter of Anthony-Keck Tracy, esq; and in her right is lord of the manor of Stanway. His lordship's arms are, Argent, a fess gules, in chief three torteauxes. CREST. In a ducal coronet Or, a talbot's head argent, eared gules. SUPPORTERS. On the dexter side, A talbot argent, eared gules, with a ducal coronet of the second. On the sinister, A Rein-deer of the last, attired, gorged with a ducal coronet, and chained Or. MOTTO. BASIS VIRTUTVM CONSTANTIA. His lordship's chief seat is at Nantaribba, in the county of Montgomery.

This pedigree is extracted from Collins's Peerage, where the reader may see the authorities.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Barton Regis, three miles distant north-east from the city of Bristol, nine west from Marshfield, and thirty-three south-westward from Gloucester.

It is a very pretty village, with several good houses, of which the following are the chief:

Heath House is situate on a great eminence, about half a mile on the north side of the turnpike-road to Bristol. The terras commands an exceeding fine prospect of Stoke House, of the village of Stapleton, and of the above-mentioned city, with the pretty villas and populous country about it. The prospect is closed by Lansdown and Sodbury hills on one side, and by Dundery and the Somersetshire hills on the other; and in the intermediate spaces of this extensive landscape, are beautiful and well cultivated inclosures and plantations, thro' which the river Froome, with various meanders, takes its course to Bristol, and forms the quay of that port. There is nothing, for healthiness of air, can exceed this situation, in which respect it may emulate even Stoke itself. This house and estate belong to Mrs. Whitchurch, the sole heiress of the family of the Walters, who have resided in this parish ever since the second year of the reign of king Edward the Sixth.

Oldbury House is the seat of Thomas-Hayward Winstone, esq; who resides there. Near to it, upon the hill, is a small camp, which gave name to the place.

At Ridgway Doctor Drummond has a good house, pleasantly situated in the road leading to Chipping Sodbury, a little more than two miles distant from Bristol.

Mr. Lockwood, Mr. Hart, and Mr. Harford have very handsome houses, and pleasant gardens, in the village of Stapleton, and others may possibly deserve mention that have escaped particular notice.

Here is a well, whose waters gush out from many places in a perpendicular direction, like a boiling caldron, and has been used as a cold bath, with great success, in disorders for which cold bathing is prescribed; however, my inquiries concerning it will not authorize me to attribute to this water any greater virtues than cold springs possess in general. This is called the Boiling-well, and is so copious as to drive a mill at about a quarter of a mile from its source.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There is no particular mention of Stapleton in Domesday, wherefore it must be included in the account of some other manor. Sir Robert Atkyns, in the 26th page of his Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire, speaking of Robert de Todeni, says, 'He was posselt of eighty one Mannors, whereof Risendon, Horton, Stapleton, and Frampton were in Gloucestershire. He gave a ' Plow's Tillage in Stapleton to the Priory which he had founded at Belvoir, to pray for the Soul of Adela his Wife.' But this is all mistake respecting Stapleton, of which it does not appear that Robert de Todeni was ever possessed; but Saperton and Frampton in the hundred of Bisley, were antiently the estates of Robert de Todeni.

This manor belonged to the Berkeleys of Stoke Giffard for a long course of time. Richard Berkeley, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608. Sir Maurice Berkeley sold out divers tenements to the citizens of Bristol, and others, but reserved the royalty, which is now vested in her grace the dutchess dowager of Beaufort, sister and heiress of the late Norborne Berkeley, lord Botetourt, a more particular account of whose family is given under Stoke Giffard.

John de Alleber (Delabere) held one yard land in Stapleton, by the service of carrying the king's writs one day's journey from the castle of Gloucester at his own charges, and the rest of the journey at the king's expence, 5 H. 3. Roger de Goffenton was seized of lands in Stapleton for guarding the king's forest of Kingswood 15 E. 1. Roger Kemys, a lunatick, held lands in Stapleton 21 E. 4. John White levied a fine of lands in this place to Roger Walroon 1 E. 6.

HAMLETS. 1. Oldbury. William Dodisham levied a fine of the manor of Oldbury in Stapleton, to the use of William Dodisham his son, and Joan his wife, in taille, 8 H. 6. Thomas Winstone, esq; died seized of it in 1757, and gave it to Mrs. Winstone, his widow; in virtue of whose will it passed afterwards to Thomas Hayward, (second son of her brother Thomas Hayward, of Quedgley, esq;) who marrying a niece of the late Mr. Winstone's, assumed his family name, and is the present proprietor of Oldbury, and high sheriff of this county, 1777.

2. Ruggeway, or Ridgway, is a distinct manor, lying one part in this parish, the other in Mangotsfield, under which head some account of it has already been given. Sir Jarrit Smyth, baronet, is lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Bristol, worth about 20*l.* a year, before it was augmented, in the year 1720, by a donation from Edward Colston and Thomas Edwards, esq; and with the queen's bounty. Mrs. Whitchurch is patroness, and the reverend Mr. Shute is the present incumbent.

The impropriation belonged to St. James's monastery in Bristol, and was granted to ——— Brain 35 H. 8. It came afterwards to the Walters, and is now vested in Mrs. Mary Whitchurch, widow of the late Joseph Whitchurch, esq; and sole heiress of the Walter family. The arms of the Walters are, Azure, upon a nut bough issuing from the sinister base proper, a squirrel sejant Or.

The church is small, but neat, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and has a low pinnacled tower at the west end, with six bells in it.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

A brass plate, fixt to a flat stone in the chancel, bears this inscription :

Hic jacet Sepultum Corpus

in respectful Memory of her much beloved Husband & Friends.

Arms, Gules, three talbots heads 2 and 1 erased Or; on a chief argent, gutty du sang, a lion passant sable, for Whitchurch.

Upon a brass plate in the chancel,

Under this Stone by his own appointment lie interred the Relicks of JOSEPH WHITCHURCH, Esq; who dyed 6th August 1772. He was an affectionate Husband, a kind Father, and a sincere Friend, and rejoiced in every Opportunity of rendering Service to the Distressed.

Upon the vase of a neat marble monument against the south wall, it is thus inscribed :

Benefactions.

Mrs. Anne Whittington gave 5*l.* per ann. together with the interest of 115*l.* 16*s.* to be distributed to the poor; also, 1*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* to the minister, at Christmas, for ever.

Thomas Webb, esq; gave the interest of 50*l.* to the poor; and Mrs. Mary Webb gave 10*s.* a year to the minister for a sermon, 2*s.* to the clerk, and 2*s.* in bread to the poor on Good Friday, for ever.

Mrs. Sarah Packer, in 1754, and Mrs. Mary Packer, in 1757, gave the interest of 100*l.* each to such poor people as do not receive alms.

Mrs. Frances Berkeley gave 20*s.* yearly for ever, for a sermon on the 30th of January, and the like sum to the poor in bread on that day.

Thomas Bubb, esq; gave 10*s.* a year for a sermon on Trinity Sunday, for ever. And Mr. John Widlake gave 10*s.* a year to the rector of St. Peter's church in Bristol, for a sermon here on St. John's day, for ever.

Here is a charity school, founded and supported by the following contributions: Mrs. Mary Webb, in 1729, gave 450*l.* A person unknown, in 1731, gave 100*l.* Mr. Berkeley, in 1744, gave 85*l.* 10*s.* George Packer, esq; in 1745, gave 50*l.* And in 1754, Miss Elizabeth Bayly gave 50*l.* So that from the interest the school-master's income is about 24*l.* a year, besides a house to live in.

At the beginning of this century, there were about 160 houses, and 700 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 30 were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 13. Atkyns. Since that time population has very much increased, for the average of annual baptisms from 1773 to 1776, both inclusive, have been 41, of burials 42. And deducting 10 from the burials, on account of persons brought hither from other places, and then reckoning the number of living in the proportion of 40 to 1 of the annual burials, the present number of inhabitants will be about 1280.

IS a small parish, in the lower division of the hundred of Derhurst, five miles distant south from Tewkesbury, four west from Cheltenham, and five north from Gloucester.

It lies in the Vale, yet the greater part is in tillage, and most of the arable lands in common fields.

fields. It has nothing curious in natural history or antiquity.

The turnpike-road from Gloucester to Cheltenham leads thro' the south part of the parish, and all besides are very miry and founderous. The poor are chiefly employ'd in husbandry.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following is all that is recorded of this manor in Domesday:

'The church of St. Dyonisius at Paris holds three hides in Staverton.' p. 72.

John Browning held the manor of Staverton and Yenington 3 H. 5. Sir Richard Baker was lord of the manor of Staverton in the year 1608. The earl of Oxford was proprietor of it, and of Uckington in the parish of Elmston, at the beginning of this century. From his heirs it passed, by purchase, as a member of the manor of Uckington, to Mr. Rogers of Dowdeswell, and Mrs. Rogers, widow of the late John Rogers, esq; is the present lady of the manor of Uckington in Elmston, where she holds a court leet, at which the inhabitants of Staverton attend.

Edward Brugge, esq; held lands in Staverton 15 H. 6.

Part of Haydon lies in Staverton, and pays to the parochial levies; the other part is in the parish of Bodington.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, within the peculiar of Derhurst, worth about 120*l.* a year, to which Bodington is annexed. Mrs. Lock is patroness, and Mr. Kipling is the present incumbent. The vicar has the great tithes of the manor of Staverton.

The advowson of the church, as well as the manor, formerly belonged to the priory of Derhurst; but when that house was suppressed with other alien priories, the advowson was granted to the abbey of Tewkesbury, in which it continued 'till the general dissolution of religious foundations, in the reign of king Henry the Eighth. It was afterwards granted to Thomas Gatwick and Anselm Lamb, 5 Mariæ.

The church has a very low tower, with three bells, at the west end, and is dedicated to St. Catherine, who is said to have been a virgin, martyred in the year 307, by means of a wheel stuck full of iron hooks, which from her is called a Catherine Wheel.

Lands worth 6*l.* a year are given for the use of the poor, and there is besides, a small donation of 6*s.* a year left for such poor people as do not receive parish collection. The lands given to the poor were formerly of much greater value, but a considerable part has been long since lost.

Uckington, tho' a hamlet in Elmston, is joined in some payments with this parish:

About the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 40 houses in the parish, and about 200 inhabitants, 8 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 6, burials 6. But sir Robert's estimate must have been much too high; for I am informed by a person who has resided in the parish upwards of seventy years, that there are now three houses more than when he first knew it, and the present number is only 24. His extract from the register is equally incorrect, for in ten years, from 1700 to 1709 inclusive, there are entered 34 baptisms, and 19 burials; and in the same number of years, from 1760 to 1769 inclusive, there are registered 58 baptisms, and 29 burials. The people are supposed to have increased since the beginning of this century, and are now estimated at about 120.

IS a parish in the hundred of Berkeley, four miles distant east from the town of that name, two west from Dursley, and fifteen south from Gloucester.

It adjoins to the parish of Cam, of which it was formerly a part, and consists chiefly of fine pasture land, with some good arable, and produces excellent cheese, and pretty good cyder.

This village is sheltered on the east by a lofty hill, on whose top there is a large plain, which formerly the people of this part of the country very much frequented to play at the robust game of stoball. The west summit of this hill commands a bird's-eye view of Berkeley-castle, and a most extensive prospect into Somersetshire, Monmouthshire, Herefordshire, Worcestershire, and several parts of South Wales. Some indeed pretend, that thirteen counties, and thirty parish churches may be seen from it in a very fair day, but I mention this only from Dr. Parsons's manuscript Collections, and not from my own knowledge. The several prospects are no less rich than extensive. North-westward, the fine verdure and beautiful inclosures in the Vale, and the long course of the river Severn, with its windings, make the fore ground of the landscape; beyond, are the venerable oaks of Dean forest, towering one above the other, and waving in all the grandeur of sylvan majesty; and lastly, the Welch Mountains, at a great distance behind, appear like a cloud faintly coloured, and close the prospect.

Great quantities of fossils, consisting of petrifications of the cockle, muscle, scallop, and other fish fish of the bivalvular kind, are found incorporated in a reddish stone, of a coarse grit, at a place called Newnham's quarry; and several of the Cornua Ammonis have also been found there. These are all the curious natural productions which the parish affords, and it seems to be totally destitute of antiquities.

William de Alba Mara held the manor of Stinchcombe and Thorp 40 H. 3.

Thomas de Braddeston, a very eminent person in his time, was advanced to the dignity of a peer of the realm 16 E. 3. and died seized of the manors of Stinchcombe, Horton, and Bradestone (from the latter of which he took his name) in the 34th year of the same reign. Agnes, the widow of Thomas de Braddeston, died seized of Stinchcombe, Arlingham, and Horton, in dower, 43 E. 3. Thomas lord Braddeston, son of Robert, and grandson of Thomas, was possessed of the manors of Stinchcombe, Arlingham, Horton, and Bradestone in Berkeley, at the time of his death, 48 E. 3. and Ela, his widow, died seized of Stinchcombe and Stancombe 11 H. 4.

Richard Seimour seems to have been a trustee of the Bradstones, for he was possessed of all the before-mentioned manors 2 H. 4.

Sir Walter de la Pool, in right of Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heiress of the last Thomas de Braddeston, was seized of Stinchcombe, Arlingham, Draycot's Place in Horton, and Bradstone in Berkeley, 12 H. 6. And sir Edward Ingoldsthorp was seized of this manor, and of others which had belonged to the Bradstones, in the 35th year of the last-mentioned reign.

Stinchcombe came afterwards to lord Wentworth, who sold it to divers persons, in the reign of queen Elizabeth. John Hollister was lord of it in the year 1608. It was vested in Thomas Pinfold, esq; when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it, and John Pinfold, esq; is the present lord of the manor, and resides at Peer's-Court in this parish. His arms are, Azure, two couple closes Or, between three hickwalls, or French pies, argent, beak'd and member'd of the second.

The Tyndales, (from whom the reverend Mr. Richard Tyndale of Charfield is descended) were a very respectable family, long resident in this parish, where they had a good estate. Thomas Tyndale died some time before 33 H. 8. as appears by a deed of that date, to which Edward Tyndale of Pull Court in Worcester-shire, (ancestor of the present Tyndales of Bathford) was a party. By Alicia his wife, daughter and sole heir of Thomas Hunt, he had issue five sons, Richard, William, Henry, Thomas, and John; and one daughter Elizabeth. Richard, the eldest son, had a son and heir Richard, who had issue eight sons, and four daughters. Thomas Tyndale of Stinchcombe, clothier, was his eldest son and heir. He married Catherine, the daughter and heir of John Harris, gent. by whom he had issue Thomas Tyndale, and making his will, died in 1637, as appears by the Probat dated Oct. 12, the same year. Thomas Tyndale, his son, lived at Stinchcombe in the reign of king Charles the First, and being inimical to the king's cause, fled from his house at the approach of a party of royalists, and hid himself for three days and nights in a large yew-tree, now growing at the top of Stinchcombe wood, whence he had the mortification to see Mr. Pinfold's house and his own burnt to the ground.

Richard Tyndale, uncle to the last Thomas, and fourth son of the last Richard, had issue Daniel Tyndale of Stinchcombe, who married Katherine, daughter and heir of John Wilkins, by whom he had two sons, Richard, who died a bachelor, and John Tyndale, clerk; which said John, about the year 1724, married Mary, daughter of Thomas Lodge, clerk, and had issue four sons, and one daughter, Mary. William, the first son, married Mary, daughter and heir of Nicholas Lodge, of Bristol, and had issue one son William, who died an infant; and one daughter Mary. He died rector of Charfield in 1764. John and Daniel, the second and fourth sons, died without issue; and Richard, the third son, is now rector of Charfield. See more of the Tyndales under the account of Eastwood, in the parish of Thornbury.

Langley-hill in Stinchcombe, with the chapel called St. Michael's chapel, and lands in Stancombe, were granted to Thomas lord Seimour, after whose attainder, they were granted to William marquis of Northampton, 5 E. 6.

2. Stancombe is another hamlet.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Dursley, worth about 45*l.* a year. The bishop of Gloucester is patron and impropiator, and the rev. Mr. John Webb is the present incumbent.

The living has been augmented by a donation from Mr. Pinfold, and the queen's bounty, with which lands in Bradstone have been purchased, now let at 25*l.* per ann. 'Till then, the incumbent only received 20*l.* a year from the lessee of the great tithes.

The church is dedicated to St. Cyril, and has a small steeple with one bell in it. The whole building was repaired in the year 1763, and is now both handsome and convenient.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

inscription is not legible.

Benefactions.

Lands worth 7*l.* a year were vested in feoffees for charitable uses, by a person unknown, 1 Jac. 1.
Matthew Tyndale of London, merchant, in 1676, gave two grounds, worth about 8*l. per ann.* the income of which to be thus disposed of; one third to the minister, one third for teaching children to read, and the remainder to the poor. And Mr.
year to buy New Testaments for poor children.

STOKE GIFFARD.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Hen-bury, four miles distant northward from Bristol, nine south-west from Chipping Sodbury, and twenty-two south-westward from Gloucester.

It is a large parish, consisting of some arable and woodlands, but the greater part is pasturage.

There are several Stokes in this county, as Stoke Archer, Stoke Bishop, and this Stoke, which received the additional name of Giffard, by way of distinction, from the family of that name, who enjoyed it for many generations immediately after the conquest.

Stoke House is the seat of the dutchess dowager of Beaufort. It was built originally in the time of queen Elizabeth, by sir Richard Berkeley, and was greatly damaged in the civil wars in the reign of king Charles the First. The present house was partly rebuilt, and otherwise beautified and repaired, by the late lord Botetourt, about the year 1760; and the motto, (MIHI VOBISQUE) placed in the front by his lordship, is strongly expressive of the amiable disposition and generosity that so eminently distinguished its owner.

It is a noble pile, exquisitely situated, like Windfor Castle, to command a great extent of rich country to the east and south of it, with a large view of the city of Bristol, and its populous environs. The prospect closes with the great chain of hills about Sodbury on one side, and with the Somersetshire hills on the other.

The lofty terras in front gives it an air of grandeur and magnificence not to be described.
It stands about three hundred yards distant from one of the great roads leading to Bristol, and a beautiful lawn, interspersed with trees, slopes down from it, in all the unaffected elegance of nature.

The muse that sung of Clifton, paid her devoirs to Stoke; but, like the writer of this account, she was too deficient in descriptive powers to do it justice.

I cannot find, upon inquiry, that Stoke affords any curious natural productions, or antiquities.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Osbern Giffard assisted king William the First in the conquest of England, and was rewarded, for his services, with twenty manors, of which four were in Gloucestershire, viz. Rochemtune, Brimesfelde, Aldeberie, and Stocche; which latter is the subject under immediate consideration, and Domesday gives the following particulars of it:

‘ Osbern Giffard holds Stocche, in Letberg hundred. There are five hides taxed. Dunne held it. In demean are four plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and three bordars, and a priest, with eight plow-tillages. There are four servi. It was worth 6*l.* and is now worth 8*l.*’ p. 76.

The Giffards had a castle at Brimpsfield, which was the residence of the family, and continued in the name, till John Giffard was taken prisoner at the battle of Boroughbridge, in open rebellion against king Edward the Second, and afterwards attainted, and executed at Gloucester as a traitor; till which time this manor of Stoke descended in succession, like Brimpsfield, to the several branches of that family.

The manor of Stoke was held of the honour of Gloucester, and was granted to sir Maurice de Berkeley, after the death of Margaret Giffard, the third wife of John Giffard, 11 E. 3. This Maurice de Berkeley was the second son of Maurice lord Berkeley, of Berkeley castle, by Eve his first wife, daughter of Eudo la Zouch, lord Zouch, as may be seen more at large, (p. 274) in the account of the ancestors of the earl of Berkeley. He died at Calais, 21 E. 3. leaving issue by Margaret his wife,

Sir Thomas Berkeley, who married Catherine, daughter of sir John de Bitton, knight, and dying in the year 1360, left issue one son,

Maurice, who married Catherine, youngest daughter and coheir of John lord Botetourt. He was seated at Stoke Giffard, and dying in 1361, left issue,

Sir Maurice Berkeley, who took to wife Joan, daughter of sir John Dynham, knight, and dying in the year 1400, left her with child of Maurice Berkeley, who held Stoke Giffard and Uley 10 H. 5. He married Ellen, daughter of sir William Montford, knight, and died 4 E. 4. leaving by her an only son,

Sir William Berkeley, who was made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of Richard the Third, and was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in the third year of that reign. He left the kingdom

when king Richard was slain in Bosworth-field, and being attainted 1 H. 7. his estates were seized into the king's hands, and the manor of Stoke Giffard was granted the same year to Jasper duke of Bedford, and his heirs males; but sir William was afterwards received into favour, and Stoke Giffard was granted to him 4 H. 7. after the entail on the duke of Bedford, who died without issue 11 H. 7. when sir William came into possession again; but his estates were much impaired during the alienation. He died seized of Stoke Giffard in 1501, leaving issue, by his wife Anne, daughter of sir Humphry Stafford, knight, one son,

Sir Richard Berkeley, who married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Humphry Coningsby, knight, and by her had issue two sons, and three daughters, viz. sir John, sir Maurice, afterwards of Bruton in Somersetshire, ancestor of the lords Berkeley of Stratton; Mary, Frances, and Anne, married to Thomas Speke, esq. He died in 1514, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir John Berkeley, of Stoke Giffard, who died in 1546, having married Isabel, daughter of sir William Dennis, knight, by whom he had issue a son and heir,

Sir Richard Berkeley, who received the honour of knighthood Aug. 1, 1574. He married two wives, viz. Elizabeth, daughter of sir William Read, of Gloucester, knight, and Elianor, daughter of Robert Jermie, of Norfolk, esq; and relict of sir Robert Roe, knight, and alderman of London. By the former he had issue two sons, Henry and William; and three daughters, Elizabeth, Mary, and Catherine; and dying in 1604, was succeeded by his eldest son,

Henry Berkeley, esq; who dying Feb. 7, 1607, left issue by his wife Mariel, or Myrriel, daughter of Thomas Throckmorton, of Coughton in Warwickshire, esq; an only son,

Richard Berkeley, esq; who had two wives, Mary, daughter of Robert Roe, esq; by whom he had a son Maurice; and Jane, daughter of Thomas Mariet, of Berkshire, by whom he had no issue. He deceased May 12, 1661, and was succeeded by his grandson Richard, son of sir Maurice Berkeley, who died in his father's life-time, in 1654. This sir Maurice was twice married, first to Elizabeth, daughter of sir Edward Coke, lord chief justice of the king's bench, by whom he had one daughter Frances, who died in 1660, without issue; secondly, to Mary, daughter of sir George Tipping, of the county of Oxford, knight, by whom he had issue the said

Richard Berkeley, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Symes, of Frampton Cotterel in Gloucestershire, esq; by whom, at his death in 1671, he had issue two sons, George, and John-Symes.

George Berkeley, esq; married Jane, daughter of Maurice Berkeley, viscount Fitz-Harding, and died without issue in 1685, and was succeeded by his brother, John-Symes Berkeley, who married first, Susan, daughter and sole heiress of Sir Thomas Fowles, knight, banker, and citizen of London, but by her, who died in 1696, had no issue. His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Walter Norborne, of Caln in Wiltshire, esq; (by his wife Frances, daughter and coheir of Sir Edmund Bacon, of Redgrave in Suffolk, baronet,) and relict of Edward viscount Hereford, by whom he had issue a son Norborne; and a daughter Elizabeth, married to Charles-Noel, duke of Beaufort, by whom she is mother of the present duke of Beaufort.

Norborne Berkeley, esq; claiming the barony of Botetourt, which had long been in abeyance, after a solemn hearing in the house of peers, had his claim allowed; and his majesty was pleased to summon him to parliament, as baron Botetourt, by descent, 5 Geo. 3. While his lordship was a commoner, he served in the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th parliaments of Great Britain, as knight of the shire for the county of Gloucester; and upon his present majesty's accession to the throne, was appointed groom of the bed-chamber, which he resigned when he took his seat in the house of peers. In 1768, the government of Virginia was committed to his care, and during his residence in that colony, he was seized with a fever, of which he died, unmarried, greatly lamented by all, in 1770, and in the 53d year of his age. He was succeeded in this estate by his sister, Elizabeth, dutchess dowager of Beaufort, who is the present lady of the manor of Stoke Giffard. The Beaufort arms are given under Badminton. Her grace's paternal coat is thus blazoned, Gules, a chevron ermine, between ten crosses pattee (six above, and four below) argent.

HAMLETS. 1. Great Stoke, of which already.

2. Little Stoke.

3. Harris Stoke. Elias de Filton was seized of Stoke Herry 4 E. 3. Edward Blount and Margaret his wife were seized of the manor of Harris-stoke 4 R. 2. Sir Thomas Fitz-Nichols held the same manor 7 R. 2. and Thomas Fitz-Nichols, son of Sir Thomas, was seized thereof 6 H. 5. John Browning, son of John, was seized also of this manor 8 H. 5.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Bristol, but in the diocese of Gloucester. It is a vicarage, valued at 6*l.* in 1534; and now of the clear value of 20*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.* It was antiently appropriated to the priory of Little Malvern in Worcester-shire, for which John Giffard was seized of the advowson, in trust, 20 E. 1. The dutchess dowager of Beaufort is patroness, and the reverend Mr. Shute is the present incumbent.

The church is said to be dedicated to St. Michael. It is neatly and uniformly pewed, and has a north aisle separated from the nave by two fluted pillars, and as many pillasters, with capitals. The inhabitants of one part of the parish bury at Stapleton; and others bury at Almondsbury.

On a plain table of white marble, on the south side of the chancel, it is thus written.

SACRED

There were two chantries in this chapel, one founded by John Sergeant 30 E. 3. Richard Lane, the last incumbent, received a pension of 6*l.* in the year 1553. The revenues of it were granted to Thomas Throckmorton 6 E. 6. The other chantry, dedicated to All Saints, Mr. Willis gives no account of. It was endowed with lands in Ham, Alkinton, Cam, and Berkeley, which were granted to sir John Thynn 6 E. 6.

The benefactions have been mentioned in the account of the curacy.

The public payments, and yearly baptisms and burials, are set down under Berkeley.

Sir Robert Atkyns reckoned 44 houses, and about 200 inhabitants in this parish, and there are now about the same number of houses and people.

STONEHOUSE.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Whitston, four miles distant west from Stroud, seven north from Dursley, and nine south from Gloucester.

It is situated in the Vale, and consists chiefly of pasture, with some good arable land. It was so called from the chief or manor house being of stone, which was not common in the vale. The same thing gave denomination to other places, as observed under Stanley.

The turnpike-road from the town of Stroud to the next passages over the Severn, at Framilode and Arlingham, runs thro' this parish; and a canal is now cutting thro' it, to open a navigation from that town to the above-mentioned river.

Mr. Ellis has a very handsome new house at Ebley, built by his uncle Mr. Joseph Ellis, who acquired a large fortune in the clothing business, with the highest reputation, and was in the commission of the peace for this county when he died, in the year 1771. Mr. Elliott, Mr. Reddall, and Mr. Andrews have also very good houses and estates in this parish.

The clothing business has flourished here for many generations, to which the fine appearance and improved condition of this country is to be attributed; for nothing is more certain, than that trade and manufactures encourage agriculture.

Here are no antiquities, nor curious plants. The natural productions of the place consist at present of grain, cheese, and cyder, all excellent in their kinds. But it appears on record, that there was a vineyard in this parish above seven hundred years ago. The expression is, Ibi duo arpenz vinee, which sir Robert Atkyns translates two acres of orchard, for he had conceited that there could be no vineyards in England, because our climate is not so favourable to the ripening of the grape as some others. But that way of reasoning might be extended to prove, with equal truth and certainty, that melons and cucumbers do not grow in our country, because there are climates that suit them better.

Here are two fairs in the year, one on the 1st of May, the other on the 10th of October.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following is a translation from Domesday:

' William de Ow holds Stanhus in Blachelew hundred. Tovi held it in the time of king Edward. There were seven hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and twenty-one villeins, and nine bordars, with twenty plow-tillages. There are four servi, and two mills of 17*sol.* and 6*den.* There are two arpenz of vineyard. It is worth and was worth 8*l.* This manor pays tax.' Domesday, p. 73.

This manor was held of the bishop of Worcester. John Giffard of Brimpsfield had a grant of free warren in Stonehouse 9 E. 1. Upon the attainder of another John Giffard, the last male heir of that family, in the reign of king Edward the Second, Stonehouse came to the crown, and was granted to John lord Maltravers by king Edward the Third, who procured a release and confirmation from John Calew, heir to the Giffards by one of their daughters, 4 E. 3. But John lord Maltravers incurring the king's displeasure by committing certain misdemeanours, his lands were seized by the crown, and Stonehouse was granted to Maurice de Berkeley, after the death of Margaret Giffard 11 E. 3.

The lord Maltravers being soon afterwards restored to the king's favour, and to his estates, joins with Agnes his wife in levying a fine of this manor to the use of themselves in special taile, the remainder to the right heirs of the lord Maltravers, 30 E. 3. and he died in the 31st year of that king. Another John lord Maltravers, with the before-mentioned Agnes, levied a fine of this manor to the use of themselves in taile; the remainder to John, son of Richard earl of Arundel, and to Eleanor the wife of John in taile, for John Fitz-Alan, second son of Richard earl of Arundel, had married Eleanor, the daughter of John lord Maltravers, and sister and heiress of Henry lord Maltravers, whereby the manor of Stonehouse came by descent to the Fitz-Alans, earls of Arundel, descended from Alan lord of Clun in Shropshire, who came into England with king William the Conqueror; for John Fitz-Alan, grandson* of John and of Eleanor, came to be earl of Arundel, by the death of Thomas earl of Arundel without issue. The before-mentioned Eleanor Maltravers married to her second husband Reginald Cobham the elder, of Sternbrugh, by whom she had no issue; and surviving him, died seized

* Sir Robert Atkyns says son of John in this place; but he has made him to be the grandson, who became lord Arundel after the death of Thomas earl of Arundel, in his account of these persons under King's Stanley.

of Stonehouse, Shurdington, and other estates in this county, 6 H. 4.

This estate continued for several generations in the earls of Arundel. Thomas earl of Arundel died seized of it 16 H. 8. and was succeeded by his son William earl of Arundel, upon whose death 35 H. 8. livery was granted to Henry earl of Arundel, son of William.

This manor came soon afterwards to the Sandford family. William Sandford was seized of it 9 Eliz. and in that year assigned it to William Fowler, who died seized of it 41 Eliz. as appears by the escheator's inquisition taken that year. Daniel Fowler, his son and heir, was upwards of thirty years old at his father's death, and was lord of the manor in the year 1608. Daniel Fowler was his son and heir, whose daughter and heiress, Mary, was married to Thomas Smyth, esq; of the family of that name then residing at Nibley in this county, who, in her right, was lord of this manor, and was succeeded by Thomas Smyth, his son and heir, who died in 1684. He left a daughter and heiress, married to Mr. Ball of London, whereby the manor passed into another name; and Mrs. Ball, widow of Robert Ball, esq; is the present lady of the manor. The family arms of Ball, as I find them in the church, are, A lion rampant, holding a ball or roundlet in his dexter paw.

The hamlets of Ebley and Westrip lie partly in this parish. Richard, son of John Browning, was seized of Ebbeleigh 2 H. 4.

William Elland and his wife levied a fine of lands in Stonehouse and Ebley to Robert Kyll 7 H. 7. John Stanshaw and Humphry his brother joined in levying a fine of lands in Stonehouse 12 H. 7. The abbey of Gloucester had a water mill here, and a fulling mill, called Coneham Mill, with some lands, 8 H. 8. A messuage and a mill in Stonehouse belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and were granted to the city of Gloucester 34 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage endowed, in the deanery of its own name, worth 180*l.* a year. It is in the immediate presentation of the crown, and the rev. John Pettat, M.A. is the present incumbent.

The advowson formerly belonged to the nunnery of Hellenstow, to which house the vicar paid 6*l.* a year, and the same annual sum is still due to the crown.

Twenty-one acres of pasture, and ten of arable land, belong to the glebe.

The church is dedicated to St. Cyril, and has a low tower at the west end, in which are six bells. It was newly roofed, leaded, and otherwise beautified, and repaired, in 1713. And I find the following memorandum in the register: The congregation being much larger than the church would receive with convenience, and the church itself darkened and deformed by two galleries in the midst of it;

*in the year 1746 I built a new isle, with stone from Devro wood, which was given by Robert Ball, esq; and brought gratis to the church-yard by Mr. Richard Merret of Ebley; besides this, I had great encouragement by fair promises, but no other assistance, so that the building cost me above 150*l.* which I shall think well laid out, if it serves, as I intended it should, to the Glory of God, the convenience of the people, and for the benefit of my successors.*

S. Harris.

The minister receives an annual sum for the pews in this aisle.

There was a handsome monument erected in the church-yard, in the year 1776, which is now taken down to be repaired. Upon one table was the following memorial :

This Monument
 is erected to the Memory of JOSEPH ELLIS, Esq^r.
 of Ebley in this Parish, who died greatly regretted
 Sep^r. 3^d, 1771, Aged 53,
 at Spa in Germany;

 Widow and Relict of JOSEPH ELLIS, Esq^r.
 of Ebley in this Parish,
 to whose Memory
 she erected this Tomb.
 She died March 28th 1776,
 in the 57th Year of her Age.

On the north side of the church-yard, inclosed within iron rails, is a handsome marble tomb, in memory of Giles Nash, esq; who served the office of high sheriff of this county in the year 1764, and was for many years in the commission of the peace. He departed this life the 12th of January, 1767, aged 63. This gentleman, for a long time, employed a very large fortune in the clothing business, with the greatest honour and integrity, and was supposed to be the best scarlet dyer in the kingdom. There are also two old tombs adjoining, in memory of persons of this respectable family.—Sir Nathaniel Nash, knight, (the last of his name and family) younger brother of the late Giles Nash, esq; and for some years alderman of Castle-baynard ward, in the city of London, died August 28th, 1769, and his remains are deposited in the same grave with his lady, in St. Paul's cathedral.

Benefactions.

In the year 1775, the principal inhabitants raised upwards of 600*l.* by subscription, for the establishment of two schools, one at each end of the parish, for teaching the poor children to read, and instructing them in the principles of the Christian religion. Some part of the money has been since laid out in the purchase of a schoolhouse, with an orchard adjoining; and the remainder placed out on government security, and the interest duly applied to the maintenance of those schools, wherein about forty children are taught by this charity.

Taxes.	{	The Royal Aid in 1692, £. 155 12 8

About the beginning of this century, there were, according to sir Robert Atkyns, 100 houses in the parish, and about 500 inhabitants, of whom 30 were reputed to be freeholders; yearly births 18, burials 16. But by an accurate survey, taken a few years ago, the people were found to be increased to 759.

S T O W.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Slaughter, ten miles distant south from Campden, nine north-west from Burford in Oxfordshire, and twenty-five north-eastward from Gloucester.

Stow, in the Saxon language, signifies a Dwelling. It is sometimes called Stow on the Wold, because it lies in the high Cotswold country; but in antient deeds it is written Edwardestou, and Stow St. Edward's, for king Athelred gave one hide of land in this place to the church of St. Edward.

It is a market town, situated, in a very peculiar manner, on the summit of a high hill, about three miles diameter in base, and exposed to every inclemency of the weather, without the least shelter or protection. The base of the hill is encircled by a kind of narrow valley, and the great Roman Foss Way runs a little northward of the town.

It is commonly said, that Stow wants three elements out of the four. It wants water, from its high situation, and having little or no land belonging to the town, and consequently no produce of fuel, it is deficient in earth and fire; but it has air enough, which in this mountainous and exposed situation, must necessarily be very sharp and piercing, tho' pure, and perhaps, for strong constitutions, healthy. The church is pretty lofty, and as there is nothing to obstruct the view, it is seen, like a land mark, from every place for many miles all round that part of the country.

The town is small, and very irregularly built, with two or three mean houses in the midst of the principal street. It has a weekly market on Thursday, pretty well frequented; and two fairs in the year, held, since the rectification of our Calendar, on the 12th of May, and the 24th of October, for all sorts of cattle, hops, cheese, Birmingham wares, linen of the manufacture of this part of the country, and other valuable commodities. The fairs were formerly very large, but are much declined; tho' it is said, that the tolls of them, and of the markets, are at present worth 80*l.* a year.

Its charter for fairs and a market was granted in the fourth year of king Edward the Third, and has since been confirmed by king James the First.

The turnpike-road from Coventry and Warwick leads thro' this town to Bath and Bristol, and the antient Roman Foss is high, and very visible in many places, for miles between this town and Cirencester.

There is a free-school, hospital, and almshouse in this place, of antient establishments, of which further particulars are given under the account of Benefactions.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the general survey, Stow does not seem to be a manor distinct from Magerbury, and as both places are connected in the antient record, I have placed the account of them under this head, as follows:

' The church of St. Mary of Evesham holds
' Malgeresberie at Edwardestou, in Salemones
' hundred. There were eight hides in the time ' of king Edward, and the ninth hide, which ' adjoins to the church of St. Edward, king Adel-
' red gave quit from tax. There are three plow' tillages in demean, and twelve villeins, and one
' free man, and a priest, having amongst them
' seven plow-tillages. There are six servi, and a ' mill of 8 solid. and a little quantity of meadow.
' In the time of king Edward, it was worth 100*sel.*
' and is now worth 7 lib.' Domesday, p. 72.

The abbey of Evesham purchased a charter of free warren in Stow, Mageresbury, &c. 35 H. 3. and had a grant of markets and fairs in Stow 4 E. 3. of which it was seized in the 45th year of that reign. It is mentioned, notwithstanding, in another record, that Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and others, were seized of Stow St. Edward, Donington, and Mageresbury 24 E. 3. but it does not appear on what account, and the manor continued in the abbey of Evesham till its dissolution.

The manor of Stow, and of Nethercot near Stow, and a yearly rent of 20*s.* in Stow, lately belonging to the abbey of Evesham, were granted to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6. and upon his attainder, were afterwards granted to John earl of Warwick, 3 E. 6. It was again granted to—Willoughby; for Henry Willoughby, upon the death of his father, had livery thereof granted to him 4 Eliz.

It passed, soon afterwards, to the Chamberlains, and the reverend John Chamberlain is the present lord of the manor, and resides at Mageresbury, a hamlet in this parish, under which head there is some account of his family.

HAMLETS. 1. Donnington, where lord Aston was totally defeated by colonel Morgan, on the 21st of March, 1645; upon which all hopes of preserving the king's garrison in Oxford were lost. Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, was seized of Donnington 7 E. 2. Livery of this manor was granted to the coheir-esses of Thomas Hale 1 & 15 Eliz. In the year 1765, the common fields here were inclosed by act of parliament, and lands allotted to the rector in lieu of tithes.

2. Mageresbury. The abbey of Evesham purchased a charter of free warren in Mageresbury and Dinington 35 H. 3. After the dissolution of religious foundations, Mageresbury was granted to sir Thomas Leigh. Rowland Leigh, son of sir Thomas, had livery of Mageresbury granted to him 15 Eliz. It soon afterwards came to the Cham-

Chamberlaynes. The reverend Mr. John Chamberlayne¹ is the present lord of the manor of Mangersbury, and has a handsome seat in this place, and a large estate in this and other parts of the county.

John Rouse and others were seized of lands in Stow St. Edward, and Mangersbury, 49 E. 3. Lands in Stow belonged to the abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire. They were in the possession of Richard Jarvis, 36 H. 8. and were then granted to Edward Powell.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stow, to which it gives name. It is a rectory worth 400*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Hippisley is patron and incumbent. The rector had only a third part of the great tithes in Donnington and Mangersbury, and the other two parts belonged to the impropiators of those places; but in the years 1765 and 1766, the common fields of both places were inclosed by act of parliament, and then the rector had lands allotted to him in lieu of tithes.

The rectory of Stow on the Wold, and a portion of tithes, formerly belonging to the abbey of Evesham, were granted to William Wright, esq; and William Breme, 8 Jac. The rectory pays 5*s.* yearly to the crown, and 20*s.* yearly to the patron.

The church is large, and the tower, which is 81 feet high, and adorned with battlements and pinnacles, stands on the south side of it. The original church was built in the 10th century, by Ethelmere, (sometimes called Ailmere) earl of Cornwall, and of Devonshire, on a ground then called St. Edward's Close, and dedicated to St. Edward, who is said to have been an hermit of great sanctity, and an eminent confessor.

There was a chantry founded in this church 4 H. 6. by William Chestre, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It was valued at 15*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* a year 21 E. 4. and the officiating priest had a salary of 5*l.* There was another chantry, dedicated to All Saints, which was endowed with a messuage in Overwell.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Near the vestry door in the chancel, is a marble monument, with this inscription:

Aesdum lector, qualis quantusq; cinis hic juxta conditus, paucis te monitu velim.

Dormit humatus Joannes Chamberlayn Armiger, Vir multis notus, nulli non mirabilis; clarus profapia, sed virtute clarior; fuis multa debens avis, at plura sibi; fidelis Principi (vel exulanti) Subditus, devotissimus Eccles: Anglicanæ (vel spoliatae) filius;

¹ This antient family is descended from John count de Tankerville, of Tankerville-castle in Normandy, who came into England with king William the Conqueror, but returned again into Normandy. John de Tankerville was a younger son of the former earl, and was lord chamberlain to king Henry the First. Richard Chamberlayne, son of the last John, was lord chamberlain to king Stephen, and thereupon assumed the surname of Chamberlayne. He married the daughter of — Galfrey. William Chamberlayne, lord of North Riston, was son of Richard. He also was lord chamberlain to king Henry the Second, and married the daughter of — Clifton. He had taken prisoner Robert de Bellemont, earl of Millain in Normandy, and earl of Leicester in England, commonly called Blanchmains, who had taken part with young king Henry against the king his father; and for that service the king granted him to quarter the arms of the earl of Leicester with those of Tankerville, in the year 1174. Robert Chamberlayne was son of William, and sir Richard Chamberlayne was son of Robert. He married Jane, daughter and heir of John Gatesden. Sir Robert Chamberlayne, son of sir Richard, married the daughter of — Griffith of Northamptonshire; by whom he had issue sir John Chamberlayne, who married Jane, daughter and heir of John Mortein, descended from an antient family of that name, and whose mother was an heiress of the name of Ekney.

Sir Richard Chamberlayne, son of sir John, married Jane, daughter of sir John Reins, of Clifton Reins. Their eldest son, sir Richard Chamberlayne, settled at Sherborne in Oxfordshire, where his posterity continued 'till John Chamberlayne, the last of that branch, died in the reign of king James the First, and left two daughters coheires, the elder of whom was first married to sir Thomas Gage, and afterwards, to sir William Goring of Suffolk; and the younger daughter was married to the lord Abergavenny.

John Chamberlayne, of Hopton in Derbyshire, was second son of sir Richard, the elder, and brother to sir Richard Chamberlayne, the younger. He married the daughter of — Bensted, and had issue Thomas Chamberlayne, who married Isabel, the daughter of — Knifton. John Chamberlayne, son of Thomas, married the daughter of — Elton, and had a son John, who married Agnes, the daughter of — Keynes. William Chamberlayne, son of the last John, married Elizabeth, daughter of — Fleming, of Dartmouth.

Sir Thomas Chamberlayne of Presbury, son of William, married Anne Vander Zenny, of the house of Naflaw in the Low Countries. His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter of sir John Luddington, and widow of — Machine, from whom are descended the Chamberlaynes of Mangersbury. His third wife was Anne, sister of sir — Monke of Devonshire, grandfather to the duke of Albemarle, from whom the Chamberlaynes of Oddington were descended. This sir Thomas was eminent for his many embassies in the reigns of king Henry the Eighth, king Edward the Sixth, and queen Elizabeth.

Edmond Chamberlayne, of Mangersbury, esq; was son of sir Thomas, and brother and heir to sir John Chamberlayne of Presbury. He married Anne, the widow of — Moulton, of Surry. His second wife was Grace, daughter of John Strangers, of Melbury in Dorsetshire. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 39 Eliz. and died in 1634. John Chamberlayne, son of Edmond by his second wife, married Elizabeth, daughter of sir William Leigh of Longborough; and having been sequestered for his loyalty to king Charles the First, paid 1246*l.* for composition. He died in 1668, and was succeeded by his son John Chamberlayne, who married Mary, daughter of Walter Savage, of Broadway in Worcestershire, esq; and died in 1691. Edmund Chamberlayne, son of John, married Emma, the daughter of James lord Chandos, and served the office of high sheriff of Gloucestershire 4 Anne. He died in the year 1755, and was succeeded by his only son Edmund, who married one of the daughters and coheires of Robert Atkyns, of Nether Swell in this county, esq; by whom he had a numerous issue. He died in the year 1774, and was succeeded by his eldest son, John, rector of Little Ilford in the county of Essex, who married Martha, third daughter of Henry Doughty, of Broadwell, in this county, esq; by whom he has one son and one daughter. This family bears two coats, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Gules, an inescutcheon argent between eight stars in orle Or, for Chamberlain; 2d and 3d, Gules, a chevron between three escallops Or, for Tankerville.

To the above pedigree, sir Robert Atkyns subjoins, that sir John Chamberlayne, of this family, was a great soldier, and eminent in the court of king Edward the Third. It appears by a record in the tower of London, that the king granted to him, by the name of count Chamberlayne, earl of Tankerville, viscount de Millaine, and high constable of Normandy, a warrant to receive 10,000 marks, which he had lent to the king's son in the wars with France. He married the daughter and heir of the lord Harling, governor of Paris, who was seized of the manor and castle of East Harling in Norfolk, and of many other considerable estates in that and other counties. She was reputed the greatest heiress in England, and refused many suitors of the chiefest nobility, and with leave of the king, married this sir John Chamberlayne. She afterwards married the lord Scrope, and had for her third husband — Benefield, of Norfolk; but she chose to be buried near her husband sir John Chamberlayne, in the church of East Harling; all which was inscribed in the window of the great chamber of East Harling castle.

There is a scutcheon over the monument, Parted per pale baron and femme, 1. Chamberlayne. 2. Gules, a cross engrailed, and in the dexter quarter, a lozenge argent.

There is a memorial on a flat stone in the chancel, for colonel Edmund Chamberlayne, who died in 1676; and an inscription upon another flat stone there, for Edmund Chamberlayne, gent. eldest surviving son of colonel Edmund Chamberlayne, who died in 1696, aged 52. And upon another flat stone, it is thus written:

There is also a handsome mural monument in the chancel, and upon the table this inscription:

This monument is ornamented with a scutcheon, bearing the family arms, quartered as already mentioned in the close of their pedigree.

There is also upon a flat stone, a latin inscription for James-Montague Chamberlayne, eldest son of Edmund Chamberlayne, esq; who died in 1754, in the 25th year of his age. And another for Edmund Chamberlayne, esq; who died in 1755, aged 84; and for the honourable Emma Chamberlayne, his wife, who died in 1738.

On a very large raised tomb standing in the middle of the chancel, is engraven the bust of a soldier, and this memorial beneath it:

Over the bust, and round the tomb, are scutcheons of the arms of Keyt, late of Ebrington.

Benefactions.

Ethelmere, founder of the church, erected an hospital in this place, which was valued at 25*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* yearly, and is charged, in the first fruits office, with the annual sum of 13*s.* 4*d.*

Thomas Belleny, chief justice of England, Henry Spelman, and others, were seized of lands called the Gleame, situate in the parish of St. Olave, Southwark, and conveyed them to William Chestre, Richard Chestre, &c. and their heirs. William Chestre, by his will, dated in May 16 E. 4. gave those lands for divers uses, viz. part for an almshouse in Stow for eight poor men and women, and a woman to wash for them, each to have 8*d.* weekly, but a man and his wife 12*d.* Another part was for the maintenance of Trinity chantry. These lands came to Richard Chestre by survivorship, having only one daughter, Joan, married to Thomas Bittlefen, against whom William Martin recovered in Trinity term 3 H. 7. and he conveyed the same lands, then worth 18*l.* per ann. to seven trustees in Stow, to be applied to the above uses, and appointed 6*l.* a year to the chantry priest, who was to keep a school, and instruct the children of the town. At length the lessees of those lands built upon them, and greatly improved the rents, so that they now amount to several hundred pounds a year; and the estate is charged with 40*l.* a year for the use of the school and almshouse. In the front of the school-house is this inscription:

SCHOLA INSTITUTIONIS PVERORVM IMPENSIS RICHARDI STEPHAM CIVIS ET MERCATORIS LONDINENSIS EXTRVCTA ANNO DOMINI 1594.

Lands in Maugerbury, worth upwards of 3*l.* a year, are given for the repair of the church; and 5*s.* yearly are paid out of the meadows there, which formerly belonged to sir James Rushout, in lieu of rushes, which by custom were cut in those meadows, to be spread over the floor of the church.

Mr. Thomas Chadwell, Mr. Richard Hodges, and Mr. Anthony Hodges have given 20*s.* a year each to the poor.

George Townsend, esq; gave 4*l.* yearly to teach children to read, and 2*s.* weekly in bread for the poor.

In 1690, William Cope, of Icombe in this county, esq; gave 12*l.* a year for the use of the poor, and 5*l.* a year for ever for apprenticing out poor children. He also gave 100*l.* for stock to set the poor at work.

In 1702, lady Juliana Tracy gave 50*s.* a year for ever. In 1715, Mr. Thomas Compere, of London.

don, gave the interest of 150*l*. In 1716, Mr. John Grayhurst, of Bledington, gave the interest of 50*l*. In 1720, Joshua Aylworth, of Aylworth, esq; gave the interest of 100*l*. all to be distributed yearly in bread to the poor.

In 1744, Richard Freeman, of Batsford, esq; gave 20*l*. a year for ever to the use of the poor. And about the year 1767, Mr. Mince, by his will, gave the interest of 200*l*. to buy clothes, to be given, on New-years day, to the nine poor people in the almshouses.

The town of Stow, and the two hamlets of Mauerbury and Donnington, are rated distinctly to the land-tax.

At the beginning of this century, there were 329 houses, and about 1300 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 60 were freeholders; yearly births 32, burials 31. Atkyns. I examined the parish register, and found that the average of annual baptisms in ten years, beginning with 1700, was 39.1; and of burials in the same number of years, (beginning with 1708, the burials not being entered till that time) 29.2. Again, the medium of annual baptisms for ten years, beginning at 1760, was 36.9; and of burials 23.6; whereby it appears that the parish declines in population. And reckoning the proportion of the living to the medium of annual burials as 50 to 1, the present number of souls will then be 1180, which is supposed to be very near the truth.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Bradley, two miles south-westward from Northleach, nine northward from Cirencester, and eighteen east from Gloucester.

The great Roman Foss leads along the east side of it, and the river Coln waters it on the south-west side, on whose banks there are some meadow grounds; but the greater part of the parish lies high, and is of a light stony soil, most suitable to, and chiefly employ'd in tillage.

The antient name of it was Stanuelle. And since the little river Lech, in this neighbourhood, which in the British language signifies a stone, was so called on account of the petrifying quality of its water; it is not improbable that the name of Stanuelle, i. e. Stone-well, was given to this place, from a spring within it, that incrusts with a strong stony substance, sticks, and other things lying in its course. The soil is naturally stony; and there is plenty of petrified shell-fish, of the smaller kinds, turned up in the fields almost every where about it.

Lord Chedworth has a seat here, where he resides. The turnpike-road upon the Foss runs above a mile along the side of the deer park, and his lordship's house is situated about half a mile north-westward from it, but the plantations prevent its being seen from that quarter. It stands upon an eminence fronting to the westward, with the river Coln about a quarter of a mile below it, and very pleasant woods on the opposite slope, on the other side of the bourn. The house was built about the reign of king James the First, by one of the Atkinsons, as appears by the arms of that family, carved in freestone over the north door, viz. Azure, a cross flossy argent, between four lions rampant Or.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This seems antiently to have been a member of the large manor of Northleach, for which reason I have given the extract from Domesday concerning it under that head; but it may be proper to repeat it in this place, and thus says the record:

‘Stanuelle adjoins to this manor [Lecce.] ‘ There are two plow-tillages in demean, and five ‘ villeins, with five plow-tillages, and a mill of 4*od*. ‘ and four servi, and two ancilla, and there is one ‘ hide in Culberlege belonging to this manor.’ [i. e. to Lecce, and not to Stanuelle]. p. 70.

Richard Martell died seized of the manor of Stowell 56 H. 3. and Adam Martell, a descendant from Richard, purchased a charter of free warren in it 19 E. 3. How long it continued in that name and family I cannot tell; but it passed afterwards to the Tames, the elder house of which family resided at Stowell in the time of John Leland the antiquary. Mr. Horne of Oxfordshire, says he, *dwelling by Langeley, hath married this Tame daughter and heir, and shal have by her a 8*oli*. land by the yere.* Itin. vol. 6, p. 16. Edmond Horn levied two fines of the manor and advowson of Stowell, 1 & 4 E. 6. His only daughter and heiress was married to Anthony Bourn, who had livery of the manor granted to him, in right of his wife, 2 Mar.

Stowell passed afterwards to the Atkinsons, and Henry Atkinson, esq; was lord of it in 1608. He was son of Robert Atkinson, of the Inner Temple, and grandson of Richard Atkinson, of the city of Bristol. Anne, his eldest sister, was married to sir William Wentworth, of Wentworth-Woodhouse in Yorkshire; and sir Henry Atkinson

Atkinson, the last heir male of this family, dying without issue, gave this manor to William earl of Strafford, son of Thomas earl of Strafford, and grandson of the before-mentioned William Wentworth.

John How, esq; purchased the manor of the earl of Strafford, and it has descended from him in a direct line to Henry-Frederick How,^m lord Chedworth, the present lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Cirencester. It was annexed to Hampnet in the year 1660, by the consent of the bishop and patron. Agnes Harcourt, the widow of John Harcourt, presented to it in 1503.

The church was built in the form of a cross, but the north aisle has been long since taken down. Divine service is not performed in it.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Some of the Atkinsons have been buried in the church; as was John How, father of the first lord Chedworth, but there are no monuments for them. Upon a plain marble table, against the north wall of the chancel, is this memorial:

In Memory of the Truly Pious the Lady ANNABELLA HOWE, one of the Daughters of Emmanuel Lord Scrope, earl of Sunderland, the Widow of JOHN-GRUBHAM HOWE of Compton, and the most Indulgent Mother of JOHN-GRUBHAM HOWE of Stowell in the County of Gloucester. She died the 20th of March, 1703-4.

Quem semper Acerbum
Semper Honoratum Habebo.

^m This family has been long seated in Somersetshire and Wiltshire, John How, of Stanlighth, in the diocese of Bath and Wells, by his will, dated in 1529, (to which Henry How was one of the witnesses) among other things, bequeathed 6s. 8d. each, to fifteen churches where he had lands, and to three others 3s. 4d. each.

Henry How was father of John How, gent. who dwelt in the parish of St. Helen's London. Which John, by his will 16 Eliz. among other things, bequeaths to his son John Howe, his best chain of gold, weighing 16 ounces; and to the poor of the parish of Usculme, where he was born, 6l. 13s. 4d. His will was sealed with his seal, a fess ingrailed, between three wolves heads, as born by his descendants. He had lands in the counties of Somerset, Devon, Essex, and in the city and suburbs of London; and bequeathed his manor and lordship of Hunsfel de la Heies, with many other estates in London and elsewhere, to John his son and heir.

Which John took to wife Jane, daughter of Nicholas Grubham, of Bishop's Lidiard, com. Somerset, who brought him a very large fortune. He had issue by her three sons, John, George, and Lawrence; and one daughter Elizabeth, married to John Bainton, esq. George the second son, was created a baronet on the restoration of king Charles the Second; but the title became extinct with his son James, who died without issue.

John, the eldest son, had the manor of Compton in Gloucestershire, and Wishford, and other estates in Wiltshire, by the gift of his uncle sir Richard Grubham. He was created a baronet in 1660, and had issue by Bridget, daughter of Thomas Rich of North Cerney, master in chancery, three sons, sir Richard-Grubham How; John, ancestor to the present lord Chedworth; and sir Thomas How, who died without issue.

Sir Richard-Grubham How married Anne, daughter of John King, bishop of London, and widow of John Dutton of Sherbourn, in the county of Gloucester, esq; and had by her one son Richard, his heir.

Which Richard married Mary, daughter of sir Henry-Frederick Thynne, of Kempsford in the county of Gloucester, baronet, and was one of the representatives for the county of Wilts in nine parliaments. But dying without issue in 1730, the title became extinct.

John How, esq; second son of sir John How, baronet, above-mentioned, married Annabella, third daughter of Emanuel Scrope, earl of Sunderland, and had, in her right, the manor and seat of Langar in Nottinghamshire, with other estates. She survived him, and dying in 1703-4, was buried at Stowell, having had issue by her said husband, four sons and five daughters, whereof Bridget was married to John Bennet, lord Osulston; Elizabeth to sir John Guise, of Rendcombe in this county, baronet; and Diana to sir Francis Molineux, of Tiversfall in Nottinghamshire, baronet; but of the two others I find no account. The sons were Scrope, John, Charles, and Emanuel.

Scrope How was born in 1648, and served in several parliaments as knight of the shire for the county of Nottingham, in the reign of king Charles the Second, by whom he was knighted, and in several parliaments afterwards. He concerted with the earl of Devonshire the means of bringing the prince of Orange into England, and on his landing, united with the earl of Nottingham in a declaration of their principles, on Nov. 22, 1688, We own it rebellion to resist a king that governs by law; but he was always accounted a tyrant that made his will the law; and to resist such a one, we justly esteem no rebellion, but a necessary and just defence. He was one of the grooms of the bed chamber to king William, and was created baron of Clenawly, in the county of Fermanagh, and lord viscount How, of the kingdom of Ireland, by patent dated May 6, 1701. He died Jan 16, 1712-13, having been twice married. By his first wife, lady Anne, daughter of John,

8th earl of Rutland, he had issue one son, John-Scrope How, and two daughters. By his second wife, Juliana, daughter of William lord Allington, he had Emanuel-Scrope lord viscount How, and three daughters. Which Emanuel-Scrope lord viscount How, was appointed governor of Barbadoes in 1732, and died there in 1735; leaving issue by his lady Mary-Sophia-Charlot, daughter of the baron Kilmansegg, three sons, George-Augustus, Richard, and William; besides six daughters. George-Augustus, succeeded his father, but being killed on July 6, 1758, near Ticonderoga in North America, the honours and estate devolved upon his brother Richard, the present lord viscount How, who is an admiral in the British navy. But I leave this elder branch, and return to John How, second son of the before-mentioned John How, and lady Annabella. He served in several parliaments for the borough of Cirencester, and afterwards as knight of the shire for the county of Gloucester, and distinguished himself very remarkably by his speeches in the house of commons, which shewed his extensive knowledge in the laws, and aversion to unconstitutional measures. It is said, that when the partition treaty was under consideration of that house, he expressed his sentiments of it in such terms, that king William declared, that if it were not for the disparity of their rank, he would demand satisfaction with the sword. In the reign of queen Anne, he was sworn of the privy council, constituted vice-admiral of the county of Gloucester, and pay-master general of her majesty's guards and garrisons, which last place he enjoy'd 'till after the accession of king George the First. He married Mary, daughter and coheirefs of Humphry Baskerville, of Pentryllos in Herefordshire, esq; and widow of sir Edward Morgan, of Llanternam in Monmouthshire, bart. and dying in 1721, left issue by her, his son and heir.

John How, of Stowell, esq; who, on the decease of sir Richard How, of Compton in Gloucestershire, and Wishford in Wiltshire, bart. in 1730, without issue, succeeded to those estates, and was several times elected one of the knights of the shire for the county of Wilts. In 1741, he was created lord Chedworth, baron of Chedworth in Gloucestershire. His lordship married Dorothy, eldest daughter of Henry-Frederick Thynne, esq; and had issue by her six sons and two daughters; John-Thynne How, his successor; Henry-Frederick, now lord Chedworth; Thomas; Charles; James, who in 1755, married — daughter and heir of Humphry Howorth, of Maselwyche in Radnorshire, knight; and William. The daughters were Mary, and Anne. His lordship departed this life in April 1742, and was succeeded in honour and estate by his eldest son,

John-Thynne How, second lord Chedworth, who in 1758, was declared lord lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Gloucester, and constable of the castle of St. Briavell's, upon the resignation of Matthew lord Ducie. His lordship married, on Sept. 23, 1751, Martha, daughter and coheir of sir Philip-Parker Long, of Arwarton in Suffolk, baronet, but died without issue May 10, 1762, and was succeeded in title and estate by his next brother, Henry-Frederick, now lord Chedworth.

His Lordship's ARMS are, Or, a fess between three wolves heads coup'd sable, a crescent for difference.

CREST. On a wreath, a dexter arm in armour, erazed below the elbow, lying fess-ways, and holding in the hand a scimitar erected, all proper, hilted and pomelled Or, pierced through a bears head coup'd fess.

SUPPORTERS. On the dexter side a lion argent, pelleted, armed and langued gules; and on the sinister side an angel proper, the face profile, with brownish hair, habited crimson, the under garment azure, the wings argent, pinioned of the fourth, and supporting the shield with both hands.

MOTTO. JUSTUS ET PROPOSITI TENAX

Over the table, in a lozenge, are, 1. the arms of How, impaling
2. Azure, a bend Or, for Scrope.

Opposite to the above, on a small marble monument, is this inscription :

In Memory of the truly excellent M^{rs} ANNE MORGAN Daughter and Coheirefs of S^r EDWARD MORGAN late of Llanternam in the County of Monmouth, Bar^t. who dyed the 24th of Aug^r 1712, in the 35th Year of Her Age.

Her Person was Beautifully Agreeable. She had Wit without Levity, Knowledge without Affectation, a penetrating Understanding, with a sound Judgment. She was Pleasant in Conversation, Modestly Reserved, without Severity; Just, Beneficent, Charitable, and Generous. Endued with a Sweetness and Firmness of Temper above the power of common Accidents, civil & well-bred towards all; but where she professed Friendship, in every Part of that Duty without Equal. For ever to be Honoured, Lov'd, and Lamented.

The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the Name of the Lord.

Over the monument, are her family arms, viz. Or, a griffon rampant sable. The same arms are given by the Morgans of Fairford also, as well as those emblazoned p. 444; for both families sprung from one common stock; which is mentioned here, because it was not taken notice of under Fairford.

Sir Robert Atkyns observed, that in his time there was only the manor-house within the parish; and there is only that house at present.

S T R A T T O N

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Crowthorne and Minety, one mile north-westward from Cirencester, seven eastward from Bisley, and sixteen south-eastward from Gloucester.

The village is seated in a little bottom, thro' which the Dunteshourn water runs, and falls into the river Churn at Cirencester. The lands in the upper part of the parish are employ'd in tillage, and like most in the Coteshold country, are light and stony; but since the common fields were inclosed, about the year 1771, few places have received greater improvement.

The Irminstreet, one of the great Roman ways, passes through and undoubtedly gives name to this place, for Bede and other antient writers call the Roman ways Stratae; and it is observable, that there are other villages of the same name, situated upon Roman ways; particularly Stratton St. Margaret, in the north part of Wiltshire, which lies upon the same road.

Mr. Camden was of opinion, that the Irminstreet was so called in honour of Mercury, who is represented, in heathen mythology, as presiding over highways, and was worshiped by the Germans under the name of Irmunful. But I cannot help thinking that the explanation of the name is to be sought nearer home, in the language of our ancestors; and since Hepe is an army, and *Hepe*man a soldier, it seems pretty clear that Irminstreet signifies the soldier's road, and is nothing more than the term Via Militaris, translated into the Saxon language.

Sir Robert Atkyns observes, that a bush called Crowthorn, in Stratton field, gives name to Crowthorn hundred. But from what has been said of this matter under Minety, it may seem wonderful that the learned author should adopt a notion so vulgar and improbable.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Roger de Laci holds Stratone in Cirecestre hundred. There are five hides taxed besides the demean. Edmund held it in the time of king Edward. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and sixteen villeins, and seven bordars, with a priest, having nine plow-tillages. There are five servi, and two mills of 20s. It was worth 8l. now 6l.' Domesday-book, p. 75.

The parishes of Stratton and Daglingworth seem to have been but one vill, when the above-mentioned record was compiled, and very probably were known by both names indifferently for many generations; for tho' we find Stratton in Domesday, there is no mention of Daglingworth. On the contrary, Daglingworth stands in the list of villis, 9 E. 1. but Stratton is unnoticed.

Walter de Laci, son of Roger, succeeded his father in this manor, and gave one villein, one villeinage, and two thirds of the tithes of his demean in Stratton to the priory of St. Peter in Hereford, which he had founded, and the grant was confirmed by king William the First. Hugh de Laci, son of Walter, confirmed the before-mentioned donation, and in the year 1101, gave the said priory with all its appurtenances, to the abbey of Gloucester, to which it thence-forward became a cell.

Richard Martin levied a fine of the manor of Stratton, and of other lands belonging to the dutchy of Lancaster, to king Edward the Fourth, to the use of himself for one month, remainder to Elizabeth the queen, to the archbishop of Canterbury, and to others, 15 E. 4.

William Cassey, son of John Cassey, esq; died seized of this manor, and of Cassey Compton in Withington, 1 H. 8. leaving three infant sons, Leonard, William, and Robert, who succeeded each other, and the latter died seized of Stratton, Cassey Compton, and Wightfield in Derhurst, 1 E. 6. leaving Henry Cassey his son and heir.

Thomas Watson died 12 Eliz. seized of the manor of Stratton, and left Thomas his son and heir eleven years old. Thomas Nicholas, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, and died in 1638. It came afterwards to the Sheldons, from one of which family it was purchased by Jasper Chapman, esq; who died in the year 1713. Thomas Master, esq; married Joanna, sole daughter and heiress of Jasper Chapman, and with her had the manor of Stratton, which is now the property of his grandson, Thomas Master, of the Abbey at Cirencester, esq.

Adam de Rolby levied a fine of lands called Mead's Croft in Stratton, to Adam de Stratton, 6 E. 1. Eight acres of land in Stratton belonged to the hospital of St. John the Baptist in Cirencester 33 E. 1. and a considerable estate in the same place now belongs to that hospital. Walter Wrilock, and others, granted one plow-tillage in Stratton to the abbey of Cirencester, 13 E. 2. William Boys, and others, held lands in Stratton, 32 E. 3. William Nottingham and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in this place to John Kendall, and the heirs of Elizabeth, who regranted them to William Nottingham and Elizabeth his wife in special taille, 20 H. 6. Humphry Brydges of Cirencester, died 40 Eliz. seized, among other things, of a capital messuage in Castle-street in Cirencester, and of two closes of pasture thereto adjoining and appertaining, called Ayshcroftes; of two messuages, two cottages, two tofts, a dove house, three orchards, 200 acres of land, ten of meadow, sixteen of pasture, the Myll Hames, formerly parcel of the manor, and of a meadow called Mayms Meade, alias Our Lady's Meade, in Stratton, then in the occupation of Edward Chapman; all which particulars he gave by will to Anthony Brydges, his second son. Esch.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Cirencester, worth about 180*l.* a year. Thomas Master, esq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. Daubeny is the present incumbent.

Fifteen acres of pasture, and forty-eight acres of arable in each common field, belonged to the glebe, before the parish was inclosed by act of parliament, about the year 1771, when lands were allotted to the rector in lieu of his former glebe and tithes.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is very small, and has a low slated tower in the middle, with two bells in it.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a marble monument against the south wall of the chancel, with the busts of a man and his two wives; and under them is the following inscription, in gold letters:

Here resteth the Body of Thomas Nicholas Esquire late Lord of this Manovr, and Patron of this Chvrch, sometime high Sheriffe of this County, and a lover of Hospitalitie, who had to his first wife, Iane Audley, worthily descended of the ancient family of the Audleys, and to his second wife Bridget Strange, daughter to Michael Strange of Somerford, Esq; who changed this Lyse the 14 day of Avgvst 1638.

At the beginning of this century, there were 30 houses, and about 150 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 7 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 3. Atkyns. But the register shews that in ten years, beginning with 1720, the baptisms were 42, the burials 45. And in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 43, and the burials 58. The excess in the burials is owing to several families at Cirencester having sepulture here. The present number of families is 35, of inhabitants exactly 173.

S T R O U D.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Bisley, betwixt three and four miles north-west from Minchin Hampton, about the same distance west from Bisley, and nearly ten south from Gloucester.

The first mention I have found of the name is in a composition between the rectors of the church of Bisley and the inhabitants of La Stroud, dated 1304. Sir Robert Atkyns was of opinion that it was so called from στροζο, which in the Saxon language signifies scattered, from their houses being dispersed at a distance. But some persons have taken Stroud and Strand for synonymous expressions; and it seems not improbable that this place obtained its name from those houses which were first built here, standing on the strand or banks of the river From, which runs through and separates it from the parishes of Hampton and Rodborough on the south.

From, or Froome, (perhaps from the British ffrom, rapid) is an appellation given to many rivers vers in this kingdom. This river has been erroneously called the Stroud. It rises at Brimpsfield, and is known there by its proper name, which it communicates to several places lying in its course, as Frampton, Froomill, Froombridge, another Frampton, and lastly Framilode, where it falls into the Severn, about nine miles below Stroud.

Beside the Froom, Stroud is extremely well watered by several rivulets, some of which constitute the boundaries between it and neighbouring places. One rises near Lypiatt, and running thro' Todefmore-bottom, divides part of this parish from Bisley eastward; another runs through the Slade-bottom, and divides a part from Painswick northward; a third comes from, and separates Painswick from Pakenhill on the east; and a fourth divides part of Stroud from Randwick.

The parish is in some places five miles long, and two broad, and consists of high grounds, and declivities thence on all sides to the waters, where the meadow and pasture-lands are. Above them, the soil being mostly light and stony, is employ'd in tillage; but the upper part of the declivities consists of beech woods, which are continually suffering a diminution by the incroachment of the husbandman, and a desire of turning the land to a more immediate account.

The intermixture of gently rising hills and dales, with woods and lawns, produces in this country a great variety of pleasing landscapes and prospects, still heightened and improved by the beautiful tints of fine woollen clothes stretched upon the tenters, and villages of good stone-buildings, all whitened, every where interspersed, and almost contiguous; so that strangers are greatly struck with the prospects, and think them superior to most they have seen.

Within the parish there is a market-town of the same name, situated on the ridge of a declivity, near the confluence of the river Froom and the Slade-water, in the midst of the principal clothing country of Gloucestershire, with which it maintains a good trade; but there is not much travelling through it, because of the steep hills that encompass it almost on every side except to the westward. It is not large, in proportion to the populousness of the country; for the clothiers don't reside in the town, but generally near the rivulets where their respective mills stand; whence the Bottoms, as they are called, are an almost continued range of houses and villages, and from the hills exhibit a most pleasing view of a populous country.

This town has a weekly market on Friday, and two fairs, one on the 12th of May, the other on St. Lawrence's day, but now held on the 21st of August, for cattle, &c. the profits of which belong to Mr. Hoard and Mr. Chamberlayne.

One turnpike-road leads from it through Painswick to Gloucester; another by Cain's-cross, Stonhouse, and Whitminster to Frampton on the Severn, which is ten miles distant; and a third to Rodborough and Hampton-common, where it divides, the right hand branch leading to Tetbury; the left to Cirencester, and so onwards to London.

The latitude of the town was accurately taken some years since by the ingenious Mr. Canton, who was a native of this place, and F.R.S. and it was found to be $51^{\circ} : 44' : 21''$ north.

The trade of this part of the country, tho' frequently fluctuating, is in general considerable. They make here a great variety of broad clothes, both for home consumption and foreign trade, from those of low value to the best Spanish. These are sent away either white, or dyed in the cloth; and in particular great quantities are dyed scarlet, for which branch of trade the place is noted. The beauty of their colours is very great, to the perfection of which the Froom water has been erroneously supposed to contribute, for it is most assuredly owing to the skill of the artist. Many hands are employ'd in the various branches of the manufacture, as in cleansing the wool by picking and washing it; in scribbling and spinning it; spooling and warping the yarn; weaving the cloth; burling, milling, and rowing it; then in shearing and dressing it; and, if to be sent off coloured, in dyeing it; and lastly, in pressing and packing it; and most of these processes are carried on by distinct workmen. As spinning requires most hands, some of the clothiers send their wool to the distance of twenty miles or more, and the poor women and children, for that extent of country, work at this branch, which makes it difficult to ascertain the numbers employ'd in the manufacture. Most of the other branches are carried on at the mills, or at the clothiers houses; but the weavers work at home. There are in this parish eighteen clothing mills, and about thirty master clothiers. The editor of the Magna Britannia estimates the returns of the clothiers of these parts at 50,000 l. per ann. "some making" says he, "1000 clothes a year for their own share." What he means by these parts is not very certain; but his calculation is much too low, and especially for the present time; for the cloth made annually within this parish only, is supposed to amount to near 200,000 l. and there is one person that makes above 3000 clothes a year. Very large fortunes have been acquired in this business, and it is an observation of Mr. Camden's, that several of the most eminent families among the nobility in this nation have had their rise from it.

This large trade has brought together a very numerous poor, who are not, however, so burthensome in proportion to their number as in many other places. In common years, when trade has been good, and provisions reasonable, four levies of 8*l.* each, have been sufficient for the support of the poor of the whole parish; but ever since the year 1766, six or seven such levies have been expended upon them annually.

Lands let here at a high rate; pasture and meadow ground from 30s. to 3*l.* the acre, and arable from 10s. to 20s. And consequently the produce sells almost as dear as in any part of the kingdom, which makes some amends to the landed interest for the burthen of the poor.

The great trade and populousness of the country occasioned an application to parliament for a power to make the Froom navigable from this town to the Severn, and an act passed for that purpose in 1730, but from an apprehension afterwards of injuring the clothing mills upon the river, it was never carried into execution. In 1759, a scheme offered to obviate all objections respecting the mills, by which it was proposed that all loading should be laid in square chests to be placed in boats, two of which to ply on the river between every two mills, and that at each mill a crane should be erected to shift the chests of loading from one boat to another, through the whole navigation. This scheme was tried for a small part of the way, but it did not succeed. In 1775, an act passed for making a navigable canal from Walbridge, near Stroud, to the Severn, near Framilode; in consequence whereof a handsome canal, forty-two feet wide, is already cut part of the way, and when compleated, will be of great advantage to this country and the neighbouring parts, by the importation of all heavy goods, and especially of coal, of which there is a great consumption amongst the clothiers and dyers. There is a remarkable circumstance attending this navigation: From Walbridge to Framilode along the turnpike-road is ten miles and two furlongs, whereas it is only eight miles down the canal, which makes it two miles and a quarter farther by land than water.

The natural history of the parish of Stroud may be comprized in a small compass. Above the town of Stroud, the hill gradually ascends to the higher grounds. On the sides of this acclivity, to the north and south, are two plentiful springs, called Gainey's and Hemlock's Wells, that pour out a great quantity of water in a short time. They both issue immediately from a great depth under ground; and by observations made with a thermometer, the water has been found of an equal temperature, within one degree, in winter and summer. The water of Gainey's Well has been lately conveyed to the town in leaden pipes, to the great convenience of the inhabitants.

In Mansel's mead, south of the town, is a chalybeate, mineral spring, that tinges lightly with galls, and is used for sore eyes; and above this spring, and in other parts of the neighbourhood, in the blue clay, and the earth near it, are found pyrites, in very ponderous, yellow, irregular balls, or nodules, some of which, I am informed, have been tried at Redbrook works, and yielded a small proportion of copper.

The higher grounds are every where lined with stone, which lies near the surface, and consists chiefly of free-stone, and what is called here weather-stone. The former appears like a congeries of the ovula of fish, and the minuter shells. The latter is full of shells of the larger sort, mostly of the bivalvular kind, as cockles, anomia, and oyster-shells, tho' many other different species may be observed. In many places the substance of the shell may be seen sufficiently distinct, but in general they are incrusted and filled with a hard stony concretion, so strongly adhering that they are not separable from it. Nautuli and Cornua Ammonis are found in plenty in the beds of blue clay and marle; lac lunæ, stalactitæ, and incrustations are found in the cavities and quarries, and a variety of spars in the stones every where. But I am informed that there are no plants worth the curious botanist's notice growing in the parish.

The following anecdote, which sir Robert Atkyns has told imperfectly, is found in Dr. Parsons's MS. Collections. It is said that sometime in the reign of queen Elizabeth, the earl of Tyrone's daughter, Florence, fled with her jewels and valuables from her father's house, with a servant, to London, and there lived privately married to him; but burying her husband, she came into this country, and married a cloth-worker, concealing her birth and parentage for many years. At last, falling desperately sick, she discovers the whole, and left in money and jewels 1000*l.* a piece to her sons, and 500*l.* each to her daughters, and was interred in Stroud church-yard.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday takes no notice of this place, for when that record was compiled, this was part of the parish and manor of Bisley. Sir Robert Atkyns says, the Whitingtons were formerly lords of this manor. The Whitingtons were indeed lords of the manor of Rodborough, in the reigns of king Henry the Sixth, and king Henry the Eighth. They contributed to the building of the south aisle of the church of Stroud, as may be presumed from their arms being carved in the stone-work of the porch, where they are still to be seen; but what estate, if any, they had in Stroud, I have not been able to discover. The same learned author observes, that the manor was in his time divided amongst many considerable freeholders; but I am informed that it belongs at present to John Stephens, esq; who is also lord of the manor of Bisley.

William Nottingham, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of lands in Stroud to John Kendal and the heirs of Elizabeth, who regranted the same to William Nottingham and to Elizabeth, in taille, 20 H. 6. Robert Hill and his wife levied a fine of lands in Stroud to the use of John Mason 1 H. 7.

THINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Upper Lypiāt, or Over Lypiāt. This manor was held of the honour of Hereford, and was antiently in the family of the Mansells. William Mansell died seized of Over Lupeyate, which he had by the grant of Alexander de Domesbourne, as appears by an inquisition after his death, 18 E. 2. and Philip Mansell died seized of the same 19 R. 2. It was for several succeeding generations in the family of the Wyes, who are mentioned by Leland (Itin. V. 6.) as residing at Lypiāt. Thomas Wye died seized of this manor, and of ten messuages, two hundred acres of land, sixty of meadow, one hundred of pasture, forty of wood, and other particulars in Overlypiāt, Stroud, Bisley, and Winton, as appears by the escheator's inquisition taken at Cirencester 18 Sept. 26 Eliz. The manor, according to sir Robert Atkyns, belonged afterwards to Throckmorton, who was concerned in the popish powder-plot. However that might be, they now shew a room in the manor-house where it is said that plot was concerted; but I don't remember that history takes notice of any one of the name of Throckmorton concerned in it. There was a sir Nicholas Throckmorton tried for high treason, and acquitted, in the first year of the reign of queen Mary, who may possibly be the person sir Robert alludes to. This manor was afterwards purchased in the reign of king James the First, by Thomas Stephens, esq; who was attorney-general to prince Henry and prince Charles, and a younger brother of the Stephens's of Easington. He died in 1613, and left three sons; the eldest was ancestor to the Stephens's of Sodbury; the second progenitor to the Stephens's at Lypiāt; and the youngest ancestor to the Stephens's of Cherington. John Stephens, esq; second son of Thomas, succeeded him in the manor of Lypiāt. Thomas Stephens, son of John, married Anne, daughter of — Child, of Northwick in Worcestershire, and served the office of high sheriff of this county in the year 1693, and was afterwards chosen one of the knights of the shire. Thomas Stephens, was son and heir of Thomas, whole son, John Stephens, is the present lord of the manor of Upper Lypiāt, and has a very antient seat, with a chapel, and a great estate in this place, where he resides.

In the time of the great civil wars, colonel Matly placed a garrison of the parliament's forces in this house, which was afterwards taken by sir Jacob Ashly, in the absence of the captain who commanded there.

Richard Arundell died seized of a capital messuage called Hucklevale's Place, with lands thereto belonging, together with Prowle-grove in Lyppiate Superior, as appears by the escheator's inquisition 42 Eliz.

2. Lower Lypiāt. This manor was also held of the honour of Hereford. The Freames were an antient family, and had a seat here, called Lypiāt Hall. Robert Freamer died seized in fee-taille of Nether Lyppiate 41 Eliz. Esch. Charles Coxe, esq; married one of the heiresses of that family, and with her had this manor. He was deservedly appointed one of the judges of Wales, and served in several parliaments for the borough of Cirencester. He was succeeded in this estate by his son, John Coxe, esq; who was also elected a representative in parliament for the borough of Cirencester, in the year 1748, and is the present proprietor of Lower Lypiāt, where he has a handsome house, and a large estate. His arms are blazoned under Rodmarton.

There was also another Lypiāt, which belonged to the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. It was granted to John Pope 36 H. 8. and is now the estate of Mr. Peter Leverledge.

Brimscumb is a little hamlet in the Lower Lypiāt division, situated in a pleasant valley, on the banks of the From, surrounded with woods, and lies in the common road between Minchin Hampton and Stroud. There is in this place an antient house, formerly called Bigge's Place, with clothing-mills adjoining, which was the property of the late William Dallaway, esq; who served the office of high sheriff of this county in the year 1776, and carried on a large trade in the clothing business till the time of his death, in the year 1775. The lands belonging to it are said to have been part of the possessions of the priory of Stanley St. Leonard's, and some pieces retain the name of the Friars meadows to this time. The arms of this family are, Or, on a bend gules between six martlets a javelin.

New House, in this hamlet, is a very handsome building, the residence of Joseph Wathen, esq; who is in the commission of the peace, and one of the greatest clothiers in the county.

3. Pakenhill, or Pagan Hull. This division lies in the west part of the parish, intirely separated from the rest, by the intervening of part of Painswick parish, which runs down to the From, or Stroud river. This manor, and Upper and Lower Lypiāt, were held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3. Henry de Dean died seized of the manor of Pagenhul 20 E. 1. John Bassett was seized thereof, and had a confirmation of free warren, 28 E. 3. and William Lasborough had another such confirmation in Paganhull 4 R. 2. Thomas Warner died seized of Pakenhill 17 C. 1. and was succeeded by his son William, who was twelve years old at his father's death. To him succeeded Thomas Warner, whose son, Thomas Warner, esq; died in 1736, and his sister's son, Henry Wyatt, esq; is the present possessor of the Warners estate at Pakenhill.

The Fields were an antient family long resident in this division. Thomas Field, esq; of Pakenhill, died in the year 1510, and was buried on the fouth side in Stroud church, where his effigy was placed. His estate descended from father to son, down to Thomas Field, esq; who enjoyed it in the present century, and it is now the property of the descendants of his nephew, the late John de la Field Phelps, of Dursley, esq.

4. Steanbridge. In this division Mr. Thomas Baylis has a handsome and spacious new-built house, called the New Mills, of which he has obliged the editor with the engraving annexed.

There are several other good houses and estates in this parish; as at Griffin's Mill, which is the estate and residence of Thomas Griffin, esq; one of his majesty's acting justices of the peace for this county; at the Thrup, the property of James Clutterbuck, esq; at Gannicock's, belonging to William Knight, esq; at The Field, near the town, the property of Fream Arundell, esq; and at Stretford, where Mrs. Gardiner has a good estate.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouse. It is an impropriation, belonging to the earl of Coventry, out of which the curate receives 10*l.* a year. In 1722, and 1728, the curacy received a double augmentation from monies raised by Mr. Bond, the minister, and some of the principal inhabitants, and from queen Anne's bounty, which were laid out on the purchase of an estate called the Radways, worth 32*l.* a year; so that, with other revenues herein after mentioned, and the contributions of the inhabitants, the minister's income is pretty considerable. The inhabitants have nominated to the curacy, but the bishop of Gloucester presented to it on the two last vacancies, and the reverend Mr. James Webster is the present incumbent.

This was antiently a chapel of ease to Bisley, and in the year 1304, a certain composition was made between the rectors of the first and second portion of the church of Bisley, and the inhabitants of Stroud, in which, after representing, 'That whereas between the said chapel of Stroud, and the mother church of Bisley, there is so great and dangerous a distance, that men can't well pass betwixt, by means of which great danger of souls may very likely happen, in baptizing of infants and administering other ecclesiastical sacraments: It is agreed, that at the charge of the inhabitants, baptisms shall be used in the same chapel of Stroud, and a chaplain chosen by the said persons shall continually remain. And that the said inhabitants shall take on themselves the repairs of the chancel of the said chapel, and that in consideration of these things, the said rectors give up a certain vacant plot of ground called Area seu Tenementum in La Stroud quam vel quod Jobes de Pridie pro Certa Reditu habentis tenuit de Rectoribus antedictis, which plot of ground the said inhabitants are competently to build upon, and to keep the buildings in repair at their proper costs and charges, paying 'therefore yearly to the said rectors eighteen pence as before accustomed, and to the aforesaid chaplain fifteen shillings yearly.' This composition was since confirmed in the ecclesiastical court, in the years 1493 and 1598. On the aforesaid plot of ground, it is supposed the market-house and several adjacent houses were since built. These, with three other houses in the town, of antient donation, and two acres of ground, called Church Furlong, yielding now in the whole about 129*l. per ann.* subject to taxes, are vested in feoffees, and by an order of chancery in 1741, 20*l. per ann.* are to be paid to the curate of Stroud out of the rents and profits, in full satisfaction for all his right in the same, and the rest is left for the reparation of the church, and the support of the poor.

The present church is handsomely pewed with Dutch oak. It consists of the nave, with two aisles, and two chancels, with a spire steeple and eight bells at the west end, where are two galleries, and there is one also in each aisle. The original chapel is now the inner chancel, with a small kind of spire, in whose base hung two little bells, just above the roof of the chapel. That which is now the nave, with the steeple, seems to be the first addition to the chapel; but the people still increasing, the south aisle and chancel were next built, very probably by the assistance of the Whittingtons, as their arms are placed on the left hand of the entrance, in the wall of the porch adjoining to that aisle. So on the right were the arms (tho' now defaced) of another family, who, it is supposed, were large contributors to the building of the same aisle. The north aisle was built in 1759, by the joint contributions of those persons whose names appear in the list of Benefactions, and who have the property of the seats vested in them; but the congregation is so numerous that the church is still insufficient for the inhabitants.

There are, beside the parish church, two meeting houses in the town, one for independents, the other for the followers of Mr. Westley.

Benefactions.

I have given the particulars of some antient donations in my account of the church, to which the reader is referred.

In 1636, Samuel Watts of London, merchant, gave 200^l. afterwards laid out on lands in Colthrop, worth 10^l. a year, one moiety of which by a decree in chancery in 1741, is directed to be applied to the maintenance of a Friday's lecture; the other to the use of the poor.

In 1642, Mr. Thomas Webb of the Hill, by his will, gave his house opposite the church for charitable uses; and 10^l. a year out of his lands at Hucclecot, for the maintenance of a free-school in Stroud, in which four poor children are to be taught to read, write, and cast account; 20*l.* a year for their maintenance whilst at school; 6*l.* a year for their clothing, and keeping the house in repair; and 4*l.* a year out of the same lands, for two poor widows, to live in the said house, and take care of the children. And in 1734, Henry Windowe, esq; by his will, gave an estate in this parish, for ever, now worth 20*l.* a year, for the further advancement of Mr. Webb's school; 5*l.* part of the rent, to the master for teaching two other boys; 4*l.* to the widows, and the remainder to be applied towards the maintenance, clothing, and placing out as apprentices the same two boys.

Huc-

In 1676, William Hawker gave a rent-charge on his house and mills at Badbrook, of 2*l.* 10*s.* a year to the minister, and 3*l.* 10*s.* to the use of the poor, for ever.

Nathaniel Gardiner, by will, gave 20*s.* a year for ever, to be laid out in bread for the poor; and James Winchcombe, in the year 1731, gave 3*l.* a year out of lands in this parish to the same use.

In 1720, William Johns, clerk, by his will, gave the rents and profits of his house and orchard called the Knap, for ever, to the following uses, viz. 20*s.* a year to the charity school at Stroud; 10*s.* a year to keep the pump at the cross in repair; 10*s.* a year for ringing the bell at eight o'clock at night, and four in the morning; 20*s.* to keep the church-clock and chimes in repair; and the residue to put out poor children apprentices.

There are four charity schools in this parish, for teaching the children of the poor to read, supported by a subscription of the principal inhabitants, and a yearly collection at the church, on which occasion there is a suitable sermon, and the contributions of late have been liberal.

It appears by a table in the church, that the north aisle, with the desk and pulpit, were erected in the year 1759, at the sole expence of the following persons, viz. William Dallaway, Joseph Wathen, Thomas Pegler, Fream Arundel, Samuel Arundel, Thomas Baylis, Samuel Baylis, Robert Ellis, Richard Aldridge, Peter Playne, William Knight, and Richard Capel.

At the beginning of this century, there were 750 houses, and about 3000 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 100 were freeholders; yearly births 86, burials 84. Atkyns. By an exact account taken in the year 1756, there were 415 families, and 2024 inhabitants in the town of Stroud, and it is apprehended they have not varied much since. The proportion of adults, to those under sixteen, was observed to be as 21 to 11, or nearly as 2 to 1; and that of males to females, as 7 to 8. The number of inhabitants in the whole parish, including the town, is about 4000, of whom 120 are freeholders. The medium of births for twenty years, from 1747, has been 67 males, and 60 females, in the year; in all 127;—of burials for the same time, 38 males, and 41 females, in all 79; the births being to the burials as 16 to 10. And the medium of weddings from 1754 to 1766, inclusively, 36 in the year.

From this survey, as well as from the state of the buildings for many years, it appears that there has been no great increase or decrease of inhabitants; and that 48 may be spared yearly to supply the demands of the army, the navy, and our capital towns, without any diminution in the number of people in this parish.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of the hundred of Kiftgate, near a mile distant south from the town of Winchcombe, nine eastward from Tewkesbury, and sixteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

It consists of rich meadow and pasture ground, and is situated on the north side of that great chain of hills which runs through the county, and divides the deep vale from the high Cotswolds of Gloucestershire. There was a large deer-park here, but it is now thrown open.

The name was antiently written Sudlege, which signifies the South Place, from the Saxon Sud, and lega, and has an obvious reference to Winchcombe, which lies a little northward of it. It is pronounced Sewdley, and sometimes written Sudely, but without sufficient authority.

Sudley was successively the place of residence of great persons from very early ages. It appears by Domesday to have been the property of Ralph Medantine, or de Maunt, earl of Hereford, before the conquest, whose son Harold, was lord of Sudley, and his successors took the name of De Sudley, after the manner of those times.

There was an antient castle here, built, as supposed, about the time of king Stephen. Ralph Botiller, or Boteler, lord treasurer of England, was created baron of Sudley by king Henry the Sixth, and had an annuity of two hundred marks given him out of the profits of Lincolnshire, for the better and more honourable support of his dignity, which Mr. Sheldon takes notice of in his Titles of Honour. This Ralph lord Sudley had served as admiral of the British fleet, and with the spoils he had got in the wars with France, rebuilt the old castle, and made some additions to it; or rather, built a new one upon the old scite, for Leland expressly mentions that he made the castle a fundamentis. One part of it was called Port-mare's Tower, after the name of the French admiral, who, if tradition may be credited, was taken prisoner prisoner by lord Sudley, to whom the king gave his ransom, which was supposed nearly sufficient to build the castle.

But so fluctuating was the state of public affairs in his time, that the subject was safe neither in person nor property; and the favourite of one reign was generally obnoxious to the succeeding. Ralph lord Sudley was suspected of a strong attachment to the Lancastrian family, and king Edward the Fourth attaining the crown, caused him to be apprehended at his castle, whence he was carried prisoner to London. Coming to the top of Sudley hill, he looked back, and said, Sudley-castle, thou art the traitor, not I; apprehending the king's design of seizing his castle, tho' he had committed no act that would legally subject his estate to confiscation. Accordingly, he found himself obliged to sell it to king Edward the Fourth; and constables were afterwards appointed by the crown.

Sir John Bruges, eldest son of sir Giles, was constituted constable of Sudley-castle 29 H. 8. and had a new grant of the constableness in the 34th year of the same reign, wherein Edmund, his son and heir, then one of the esquires of the king's body, was joined in that trust with him.

He afterwards obtained a grant in fee of the castle and manor, 1 Mar. and in 1554, her majesty was pleased to create him a peer of Great Britain, by the title of baron Chandos of Sudley; and the castle and manor belonging to it continued in his family for many generations.

At the breaking out of the civil war, in the reign of king Charles the First, this castle was garrisoned by about sixty men of the king's party, under the command of captain Bridges. In the evening of the first of January, 1642, colonel Massie, at the head of about 300 musketeers, with two sakers, from Gloucester, assisted by 80 horse, and four companies of dragoons, from Cirencester, drew up before it, and discharged several shot, with some execution. The next morning preparations were made for an assault, when a party of horse and dragoons possessing themselves of a garden close to the castle, set fire to some hay and straw, under the smock of which the ordnance was brought up undiscovered. The garrison then beat a parley, and surrendered, on condition to return to their own houses, and never to serve against the parliament.

Soon afterwards, Cirencester was taken by prince Rupert, and the castle fell again into the king's hands, and for a long time greatly interrupted the intercourse between the parliament's garrisons at Gloucester and London, through Warwick, which was the only way of communication; so that even a scout could not pass without extreme hazard. But in the year 1644, when the king's army retreated from Oxford, before sir William Waller, the latter ordered Massie, governor of Gloucester, to meet him before Sudley-castle. Massie came up first, and fell in with a party of the garrison, who retreated within the walls, after a little skirmishing; and sir William Waller arriving within a few hours afterwards, summoned sir William Morton, the governor of the castle, who refused to surrender. But an accidental shot taking off the head of their cannoner, is thought to have daunted the common soldiery, and tho' the governor was an active man in the king's service, and had great reputation for his valour and general understanding, he gave up the castle and himself to the parliament, without providing for the indemnity of his person." Nine captains, and twenty-two inferior officers were made prisoners of war, and a quantity of cloth was found in it, to the value of 4000*l*.

At that time it is supposed the castle was intire, but a great part has been since demolished. The remains shew it to have been a very beautiful building, and according to Leland, the windows of the hall had round beryls in them for glass. The beryl is a kind of precious stone, of a deeper and brighter red, and more transparent than the common cornelian, tho' something of the same kind. The fine ruins of this castle, in its present state, are well delineated in the annexed engraving, for which the editor and the public are indebted to the generosity of lord Rivers, the present owner.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The records furnish the following particulars of this manor:

' Herald the son of earl Radulf holds Sudlege of the king, and Radulf his father held it. There are ten hides taxed, and four plow-tillages in demean, and eighteen villeins, and eight bordars, with thirteen plow-tillages. There are fourteen between the servi and ancillæ, and six mills of 52*s*. [rent] a wood three miles long, and two broad.' Domesday, p. 77.

This was a valuable manor, not so much from its great extent, as improved state; for as the richer soils were likely to turn to the best account, so were they earliest and best cultivated. The same Herald was lord of the manor of Todintun, and it appears by Domesday, that those two manors were worth 40*l*. in the time of king Edward the Confessor, as well as at the compiling that record.

The same family which held Sudley before the conquest, was continued in the possession of it afterwards; which is a rare instance for laymen; and Harold, who found such singular favour with the Conqueror, may thence be suspected of having been false to his country. He was descended from Goda, daughter of king Ethelred, and wife to Walter de Medantine. Radulf, or Ralph, son of the said Walter and Goda, and father of Harold, was official earl of Hereford, and so infamous for cowardice, that William the Conqueror removed him from his office.

John de Sudley was son and heir of Harold. Ralph de Sudley, son of John, married Emme, daughter of William de Beauchamp, and was succeeded ceeded by Otnell his son; who dying without issue, his brother, Ralph de Sudley had livery of the manor granted to him 10 R. 1. Ralph de Sudley, son of Ralph, had also livery thereof 6 H. 3. and marrying Joan, sister of William de Beauchamp, the first earl of Warwick, had issue Bartholomew de Sudley, his successor, who purchased a charter of free warren in this manor 51 H. 3. and died 8 E. 1. John de Sudley, son and heir of Bartholomew, pleaded his charter of free warren in a writ of Quo warranto brought against him, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1. He was afterwards lord chamberlain to king Edward the Second, and died without issue 10 E. 3.

John de Sudley, son of another Bartholomew, and next heir to the last John, married Eleanor, daughter of the lord Scales, who surviving her husband, died seized of this manor, of which she was endowed, 35 E. 3. whereupon their son John de Sudley had livery thereof; but he died without issue, 41 E. 3. and left Joan and Margery, his two sisters, coheireffes.

Joan, the elder sister of John de Sudley, was second wife to William le Boteler, of Wem in Shropshire, descended from Ralph le Boteler, who bore the office of butler to Robert earl of Mellent and Leicester, in the reign of king Henry the First. The said William and Joan had issue Thomas le Boteler, who upon partition of his father's estate, made 42 E. 3. had the manor of Sudley assigned to him, and died seized thereof 22 R. 2. leaving issue two sons, John, and Ralph. John dying without issue, Ralph le Boteler was his heir. He was created baron of Sudley 20 H. 6. and built the castle, as already observed, and having sold both that and the manor to king Edward the Fourth, died without issue 13 E. 4. leaving his sisters sons, sir John Norbury and William Belknap, his heirs.

The manor was granted many times afterwards by the crown to court favourites, and almost as often forfeited by the treason of its owners, 'till it came into the Chandos family. But to be more particular. King Henry the Seventh granted it to his uncle Jasper duke of Bedford, and to his heirs male, 1 H. 7. It was again granted to Thomas lord Seymour 1 E. 6. who was created baron of Sudley; and the last abbat of Winchcombe being made the first dean of Westminster, granted to the same lord Sudley, nineteen manors in Gloucestershire, for ninety-nine years. Upon the attainder of Thomas lord Seymour, the manor of Sudley was granted to William marquis of Northampton, 5 E. 6.

Upon the attainder of the marquis of Northampton, queen Mary, in the first year of her reign, granted both the castle and manor of Sudley to sir John Bruges, who was created lord Chandos of Sudley, 4 Mar. and was ancestor to the present duke of Chandos. His lordship married Elizabeth, daughter to Edmund lord Grey of Wilton, and died in the year 1557, seized of the castle and manor of Sudley, and was buried in the church there. Edmund lord Chandos, son and heir of John, married Dorothy, daughter and coheir of Edmund lord Bray, and dying 14 Eliz. was succeeded by his son, Giles lord Chandos, who had livery of Sudley the same year. He married Frances, the daughter of Edward earl of Lincoln, and dying without issue male, was buried at Sudley 36 Eliz. whereby his lordship's brother William succeeded to the honour, and by deed of entail, was intituled to the manor of Sudley. He married Mary, daughter of sir Owen Hopton, and died 44 Eliz.

Grey lord Chandos was son of William. This lord was a noble housekeeper, and by an engaging behaviour, gained so great an interest in Gloucestershire, and had so many attendants with him at court, that he was commonly called The King of Cotefwold. He married Anne, eldest daughter and coheir to Ferdinand earl of Derby, and dying 19 Jac. was succeeded by his eldest son, George sixth lord Chandos, who was lord of the manor of Sudley. He distinguished himself by his loyalty to king Charles the First, and had three horses killed under him, at the head of his regiment, in the battle of Newbury. In consideration of his exemplary valour, the king would have made him earl of Newbury, which he modestly declined, 'till his majesty should be restored to the peaceable enjoyment of his crown. He died in 1654, and left the inheritance of the manor and castle of Sudley to Jane his second wife, daughter of John earl of Rivers.

Jane, relict of George sixth lord Chandos, was afterwards married to George Pitt, of Stratfield-Say in Hampshire, esq; whose descendant, George lord Rivers^o, is the present lord of the manor of Sudley. Of ^o His lordship's ancestor, Nicholas Pitt, was living in the first year of king Henry the Sixth. He had a son, William Pitt, who lived in the time of king Henry the Eighth, and married Eleanor, daughter of ——— Naviland, by whom he had issue one son, John Pitt, who was a clerk of the exchequer in the reign of queen Elizabeth. He married Joane, daughter of John Swayne, and by her had issue three sons and two daughters, Agnes, married to Anthony Bennet; and Elizabeth, married to Jonadab Shirley. The sons were 1. sir William Pitt, knight, of whom hereafter; John Pitt, who settled in Ireland; and Thomas Pitt, of Blandford in the county of Dorset, who took to wife Priscilla, daughter of ——— Scarle, of Kayle in the county of Devon. This Thomas Pitt purchased the advowson of St. Mary, at Blandford, and was ancestor to the Pitts of Boconnock, the earls of Londonderry, &c.

Which said sir William Pitt, eldest son of John Pitt, was seated at Stepleton in the county of Dorset, and at Stratfield-Say in Hants. He was employed as a commissioner in several weighty affairs transacted 1 Jac. 1. and is said to have been comptroller of the household, and a principal officer in the exchequer, in the reigns of Elizabeth, James the First, and Charles the First; or he was, as it is expressed upon his monument at Stratfield-Say, Ararii Ministrum Classis curandæ ac Aule Sumptibus corrigendis delectum. He bore for his arms, Sable, a fess chequy argent and azure, between three bezants, which were granted to him by the name of William Pitt, of Ewern Stepleton, esq; by William Camden, Clarencieux, in 1604, and it is supposed that the fess chequy was given in allusion to his office in the exchequer. He was knighted at Newmarket in 1618, and died on the 29th of May, 1636, in the 77th year of his age, and possessed of the manors of Ewern Stepleton, and Stratfield-Say, which he had purchased, and of the priory of Wareham, the manor and tithes of Little Preston, the borough of Stowborough, and Redcliff-tenements there, with other very considerable estates.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 60*l.* a year in tithes, besides a small manor, lying within the manor of Sudley; and the lord of the manor of Sudley pays 20*l.* a year composition for tithes. Lord Rivers is patron. The rector holds a court baron.

There is nothing remaining of the church but the shell, or outer walls, (by which it appears to have been a neat building, adorned with battlements and pinnacles all round) except a small aisle, called the chapel, where divine service is performed once a fortnight.

those parts, as appears by the escheator's inquisition without date, and other evidences. He married Edith, daughter and coheir of Nicholas Cadbury, of Arne, by whom he had issue three sons, and four daughters, 1. Frances, married to Clement Walker, 2. Elizabeth, who had to her first husband Richard Wheeler, after whose decease, she was wedded to sir Francis Brandling, knight; 3. Mary, married first to sir Alexander Chocke, knight, and secondly, to John Rudhale; 4. Catherine, married to — Venables. The sons were 1. Edward, of whom hereafter; 2. John; 3. William, who married Abigail, daughter of sir William Wake, baronet, and by her had issue three sons, Edward, Baldwin, and William, who all died sine prole; and one daughter Abigail, married to Ralph lord Stowell. I now return to Edward the eldest son of sir William Pitt.

The said Edward Pitt was seated at Stratfield-Say, and married Rachel, daughter of sir George Morton, of Milborn St. Andrew, in the county of Dorset, baronet, and by her had a very numerous issue, viz. ten sons, and four daughters. 1. Edith, the eldest daughter, was married to Charles Sydenham, son of sir Edward Sydenham, knight-marshal; 2. Rachel, wedded to John Kingsmill, of Sandelford in the county of Berks; 3. Catherine, wife of Francis Whitaker, of St. Martin's in the county of Middlesex; 4. Elizabeth, who died in her infancy. The sons were 1. William, 2. Edward, who both died without issue; 3. George, the continuator of the elder branch of this family; 4. John Pitt, who by his wife Catherine, daughter of Nicholas Venables of Andover, had a son George-Morton Pitt, seated at Twickenham, com. Middlesex, whose only daughter and heir Harriet, was married to Brownlow Bertie, brother to Peregrine duke of Ancaster; 5. Thomas Pitt, who took to wife Frances, daughter of Giles Casley, of Compton in the county of Gloucester; 6. Nicholas; 7. Samuel; 8. Francis, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Jeffery Jeffereys, of Abercunick in com. Brecon; 9. Edward; 10. Christopher.

George Pitt, third son, by the death of his said two elder brothers, succeeded his father. He was an officer in the royal army during the civil wars in the reign of king Charles I. and compounded for his estate at 244*l.* 6*s.* He married Jane, relict of George lord Chandos, and the eldest of the four daughters of John earl Rivers, who were coheiresses of their nephew lord Morley and Montegle; and died 27 July, 1694. He had issue by her ladyship, 1. George, his son and heir; 2. William; 3. Edward; which two last died sine prole; 4. John, whose first wife was Mary, daughter of — Scrope. By his second wife Isabella, daughter of — Condon, he had two daughters, Lora, who died unmarried; and Isabella. The daughters of George Pitt, by lady Jane, were, 1. Mary, married to sir Charles Brown, baronet; 2. Elizabeth, wedded to Thomas viscount Fitz-Williams; 3. Jane, married to Christopher Hildyard; and 4. Anne, the wife of Frederick Tylney.

George Pitt, eldest son of George by the lady Jane Chandos, made great additions to the family estate, and was possessed of a noble fortune. He represented the borough of Wareham in parliament, and was afterwards one of the knights of the shire for the county of Hants. He married first, Lucy, daughter of Thomas Pile, of Boverstock in the county of Wilts, and relict of Lawrence Low of Shaftesbury, and by her had issue, 1. George Pitt, his eldest son and heir; 2. Thomas, who died without issue; and one daughter Lucy, who died unmarried. He had also a second wife, Lora, daughter and heiress of Auckley Grey, of Kingston in the county of Dorset, and had issue by this marriage, 1. Grey Pitt, who died an infant in 1700; 2. William Pitt, who married Elizabeth, daughter of — Wyndham, but died sine prole; 3. John Pitt, of Encombe, who took to wife Marcia, daughter of Marcus Morgan, and by her had William-Morton Pitt; and George, Charles, and John, which three last died very young; and one daughter Marcia. 4. Thomas Pitt, who died without issue. The daughters of the second marriage were, 1. Elizabeth, married to William Burton; 2. Lora, wedded to Francis Gwyn of Ford Abbey; 3. Anne, unmarried; 4. & 5. both of the name of Mary, and died unmarried. The said George Pitt died February 28, 1734, and has a monument erected for him in the church of Stinsford, whereon his character is inscribed by his second wife Lora, who also died June 12, 1750.

George Pitt, eldest son of the said George, by his first wife Lucy, succeeded his father, and took to wife Louisa, daughter of — Bernier, by whom he had issue four sons, viz. George Pitt, now lord Rivers; 2. James, 3. Thomas, both dead sine prole; 4. William-Augustus Pitt, of Heckfield in the county of Hants, a major general, who married Mary, daughter of Scrope viscount Howe. He had also two daughters, viz. Lucy, married to James Kerr, of Scotland, esq; and Mary, buried Aug. 17, 1744. He died, and was buried Oct. 26, 1745.

George Pitt, eldest son of the last George, was appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the court of Turin, in November 1761; also in the year 1770, he was sent ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the court of Spain. And in consideration of his great abilities, and eminent services in those employments, his majesty was pleased to advance him to the dignity of a baron of Great Britain, by the title of baron Rivers, by letters patent, dated May 20, 1776. His lordship married Penelope, daughter of sir Henry Atkyns, and sister and heir of sir Richard Atkyns, and by her has issue one son, the honourable George Pitt; and three daughters, 1. Penelope, married to the present earl Ligonier; 2. Louisa, married to Peter Beckford, of Stepleton in the county of Dorset; and 3. Marcia.

Englised thus :

The Epitaph of the incomparable lady Catharine, late queen of England, France, and Ireland, my most indulgent mistress, 1548.

In this new tomb the royal Cath'rine lies,
Flow'r of her sex, renowned, great, and wise!
A wife by ev'ry nuptial virtue known,
And faithful partner once of HENRY'S throne.
To Seymour next her plighted hands she yields,
(Seymour, who Neptune's trident justly wields)
From him a beauteous daughter bleis'd her arms,
An infant copy of her parent's charms:
When now seven days this tender flow'r had bloom'd
Heaven in its wrath the mother's soul resum'd.
Great Cath'rine's merit in our grief appears;
While fair Britannia dews her cheek with tears.
Our loyal breasts with rising sighs are torn,
With saints she triumphs,—we with mortals mourn.

There are only five families in this parish.

SUTTON under BRAYLES.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of Westminster hundred, seven miles distant east from Campden, ten north-east from Stow, and about thirty-five north-east from Gloucester.

It lies in a fine, rich country, on the bank of the Stour, and (tho' a part of Gloucestershire) is intirely surrounded by Warwickshire, and many miles distant from any part of the county of which it is a member.

The ancient name, Sudtune, i. e. the south town, has a reference to Brayles, an adjoining parish in Warwickshire.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor belonged to the church of Westminster before the Norman conquest, and is mentioned in Domesday-book among the possessions of that house in Gloucestershire. The record, after enumerating the particulars of the large manor of Derhest, recites that 'Sudtune was a berewic, or member, belonging to it'. See the whole account in the original language, p. 72.

The manor was held of the honour of Gloucester by the fifth part of a knight's fee, 10 R. 2. It continued to be part of the possessions of the abbey of Westminster 'till the general dissolution of monasteries, when it was given to the chapter of Westminster, 34 H. 8. But the manor of Sutton, a water-mill, and a tenement called Smith's Place, together with the manor of Todenham, were granted by the crown to sir William Petre and Anne his wife, in exchange for lands in Warwickshire, 36 H. 8. and Robert-Edward lord Petre^p is the present proprietor of the manors of Sutton and Todenham. His lordship's arms are,

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 140*l.* a year. The bishop of London is patron, and the reverend Mr. George Upton is the present incumbent.

The advowson antiently belonged to the abbey of Westminster, after the dissolution of which

^p By an inquisition taken 12 E. 4. after the death of Alice Storke (wife of John Storke, and formerly the wife of John Petre) it was found that William Petre was her grandson and heir, viz. son of John Petre, son of the said Alice, and at that time twenty-four years old.

This William Petre had a son John Petre, settled at Torre-Brian in Devonshire, who, by his wife Alice, daughter of John Collins, of Woodland in the same county, had issue five sons, and three daughters. The sons were, sir William, his heir; John, seated at Torre-Newton in Torre-Brian; ———, head customer of Exeter; Richard, chancellor of Exeter, and archdeacon of Buckingham; and Robert, an officer in the Exchequer.

Sir William Petre, eldest son and heir of John, was born at Exeter about the beginning of the reign of king Henry the Eighth, and having his education at Exeter college Oxford, made so great a proficiency in his studies there, that he was elected fellow of All Souls college, became principal of Peckwater's Inn, and in 24 H. 8. took the degree of doctor of laws. In 1535, 27 H. 8. he was commissioned, with some others, by Thomas Cromwell, the visitor general, to inquire into the behaviour of the monks and nuns throughout England, in order to collect sufficient matter for accusation against them, and to pave the way to the suppression of the monastic state; which great work being soon after fully accomplished, the king, in the 30th year of his reign, in consideration of the good service of this sir William therein, granted to him, and Gertrude his wife, in fee, the priory of Clattercote in Oxfordshire; and the next year he had a grant of the manor of Gyng-Abbats in Essex, (part of the possessions of the then dissolved monastery of Berkyng) with the advowson of the rectory of Ingarston, alias Gyng ad Petram. In 35 H. 8. he was sworn of the privy council, and appointed one of the principal secretaries of state; and in 36 H. 8. the king designing to invade France, for the prosecuting his claim to that crown, appoints this sir William one of the council to assist queen Catherine, his consort, in the administration of affairs during his absence. And in the last year of that reign, the king lying upon his death bed, nominated him one of the assistants to the council to king Edward the Sixth, his son and successor. He was very high in the esteem of Edward the Sixth, and queen Mary, in whose reign, foreseeing that the restoration of the Romish religion might endanger the enjoyment of those abbey lands he had acquired, he obtained a special dispensation from pope Paul IV. for the retaining them, by a bull, bearing date 4 cal. Dec. 1555. He was for some time principal secretary of state to queen Elizabeth, and one of her privy council 'till his death, Jan. 13, 1572, at which time he was possessed of seven manors in Devonshire, one in Dorsetshire, nine in Essex, three in Somersetshire, one in Kent, one in Suffolk, and of the manors of Sutton and Todenham in Gloucestershire. By Gertrude, his first wife, daughter of sir John Tirrell of Warley in Essex, knight, he had one child Dorothy, married to Nicholas Wadham, of Merrifield in Somersetshire, esq; the founder of Wadham college in Oxford. By Anne, his second wife, daughter of sir William Browne, knight, (lord mayor of London in 1514) and widow of sir Thomas Tirrell, of Heron Place in Essex, knight, he had issue John, his only son; and three daughters; Elizabeth, married to John Goswick, of Willington in Bedfordshire, esq; Catherine, to John Talbot, of Grafton in Worcestershire, ancestor to the earls of Shrewsbury; and Thomasine, to Lodowick Grevil, of Milcot in Warwickshire.

John Petre, only son of sir William, was advanced to the dignity of a baron of England, by the title of lord Petre of Writtle in the county of Essex, (by letters patent, dated July 21, 1603, 1 Jac. 1.) and died Oct. 11, 11 Jac. 1. He married Mary, daughter of sir Edward Walgrave, of Berclay in Essex, knight, and by her had issue four sons, William, John, Thomas, and Robert; and four daughters, Mary, Elizabeth, Margaret, and Anne; but the daughters all died infants.

William, second lord Petre, (eldest son of John first lord Petre) taking to wife Catherine, second daughter of Edward Somerset, earl of Worcester, had issue seven sons, Robert, William, Edward, John, Thomas, Henry, and George; and also three daughters, Elizabeth, Mary, and Catherine. His lordship departing this life May 5, 1637, was succeeded by his eldest son, Robert, third lord Petre, who in 1620, married Mary, daughter of Anthony viscount Montague, and by her had issue three sons, William, John, and Thomas, successively lords Petre; and two daughters, Mary, married to Edward, eldest son of William lord Stourton; and Dorothy, the wife of John Thimelby, of Irnham in Lincolnshire, esq. His lordship died Oct. 23, 1638, and by inquisition taken Dec. 14 following, it was found that he was seized of the following manors, besides lands &c. in other places; viz. The manor, rectory, and advowson of the vicarage of Great Bursteed, alias Bursteed-grange; the manors of Gurney's, alias Gurner's, White's, Challiveden, Writtle, East Horndon, West Horndon, Crondon, Blount's-walls, Waterman's, and Bacon's; the rectory of Buttersbury, and the manors of Cowbridge, Margaretting, Ingarston, Ging-Petre, Hanley, Mountneyfing, Ingrave, alias Ging-Raffe, Tristinghall, Fieldhouse, and East, West, and South Hanningfield, all in the county of Essex; the manor and rectory of Osmington in Dorsetshire; the manors of Tatworth in Chatworth, and Chard in Somersetshire; the manors of South Brent, Churchstowe, Kingsbridge, Shute, South Leigh, Axminster, North Leigh, Wermington, Laytwey, Uphay, Humfravile, Dowlshards, Haccomb-fee, Chal-longer, Comb-payne, and Downe-Humfravile, in the county of Devon; the manors of Tuddenham and Sutton in Gloucestershire; and the manor of Kennet in Kentford, in the county of Cambridge.

William, fourth lord Petre, was eleven years old at his father's death. He married first, Elizabeth, daughter of John earl Rivers, by whom having no issue, he married secondly, Bridget, daughter of John Pincheon, of Writtle in Essex, esq; and by her had an only child, Mary, born in 1679, and married to George Heneage, of Hainton in Lincolnshire, esq. In 1678, William lord Petre, William Herbert, earl of Powis, William Howard, viscount Stafford, Henry lord Arundel of Wardour, and John lord Bellasis were committed prisoners to the tower, and impeached, by the commons, of treason and other high crimes and misdemeanours. Lord Petre dying under his confinement, Jan. 5, 1683, the title devolved on his brother, John, fifth lord Petre, who likewise became possessed of this estate by virtue of deeds of settlement. His lordship died unmarried in the year 1684, and was succeeded by his next brother, Thomas, sixth lord Petre, who died June 4, 1707, leaving issue by Mary, daughter of sir Thomas Clifton, of Letham in Lancashire, bart. Robert, his only son, and a daughter Mary.

Robert, seventh lord Petre, married (Mar. 1, 1711-12) Catharine, daughter of Bartholomew, and sister and heir of Francis Walmesley, of Dunkehalgh in Lancashire, esq; and dying of the small-pox, Mar. 22, 1712-13, in the 23d year of his age, left her with child of Robert, eighth lord Petre, born June 3, 1713. His lordship, on May 2, 1732, married Anne, daughter of James earl of Derwentwater, by whom he had issue one son, and three daughters, Catharine, Barbara, and Juliana; and dying in July 1742, was succeeded by his only son, Robert-Edward, ninth lord Petre, who on April 19, 1762, married the honourable Miss Howard, niece to the duke of Norfolk, and is the present lord of the manors of Sutton under Brayles and Todenham, in this county.

house, it was granted to Thomas bishop of Westminster, 32 H. 8. It was afterwards given to the bishop of London, 4 E. 6. and the grant was confirmed by the crown, 1 Mariæ.

One yard-land belongs to the glebe.

The church consists of the nave only, with a tower on the south side, and is dedicated to Thomas Becket, who was canonized by the Roman pontiff for the great forwardness he shewed to extend the papal authority.

At the beginning of the present century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 33 houses in the parish, and about 130 inhabitants, 4 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 3. But I am informed that the people are since increased to at least 150.

LIES in the hundred of Slaughter, in the Cotswold country, one mile south-westward from Stow, and about twenty-four north-eastward from Gloucester.

The village is pleasantly situated in a little valley, that like a moat surrounds the base of that hill on which the town of Stow is built; and a little rivulet called the Dickler, rises at Donnington, and runs through this place in its course to Bourton on the Water, where it falls into the river Winrush.

Thomas Hoard, esq; has a good house here, situated on the bourn, with a pleasant look-out over the meadows towards the south.

The sheriff returned that the abbat of Hayles was lord of the manor of Netherwell in Salmonesburye hundred 9 E. 1. and the abbat pleaded his right to a court leet, waifs, strays, and felons goods, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto brought against him in the 15th year of that reign, and his claim was allowed.

The abbey of Fischamp in Normandy sued the abbey of Hayles for hindering the tenants of Lower Swell from attending the court leet in the hundred of Salemanesberie, which had been granted to them by king Henry the Third, and obtained judgment 16 E. 1.

A wood and pasture in Nether Swell were held of the honour of Wallingford 20 E. 1.

The abbey of Hayles was seized of the manor, with lands, woods, and a pasture ground called the Park, containing 250 acres, 14 E. 2.

The manor was held of the honour of Gloucester, by the service of five knights fees, 16 R. 2. in which year the last-mentioned abbey had a grant of the hundred of Slaughter.

The manor came to the crown at the dissolution of religious foundations, and was not long afterwards vested in the Bartlets; of the heirs of which family it was purchased by Mr. Carter, and by him sold to sir William Courteen, after whose death it was purchased by sir Robert Atkyns, about the year 1659. He died in the year 1709, and was succeeded by his son sir Robert Atkyns of Saperton, who likewise died in the year 1711. Robert Atkyns, of Swell, esq; leaving two daughters coheiresses, the elder was married to Edmund Chamberlayne, of Mangersbury, esq; whose son, the reverend John Chamberlayne, and Thomas Hoard, esq; who married the other coheirefs, are joint lords of this manor.

Edmond earl of Cornwall, (son of Richard earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans) held 140 acres of pasture in Lower Swell for the abbey of Hayles, and was buried in that monastery in the year 1300. The abbey of Hayles purchased two yardlands, and nineteen acres of arable, and one acre and a half of meadow in Lower Swell of John Sage, 6 E. 2. By inquisition taken 8 E. 2. after the death of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, it was found that Hugo le Poins held of him six knights fees in Tockinton and Swell, valued at 170l. per ann. Thomas Cole, and others, were seized of one messuage, one toft, and four yardlands in Nether Swell, for the abbey of Hayles, 15 R. 2.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 50l. a year. Christ-church college, Oxford, has the patronage, and the reverend Mr. Henry Brown is the present incumbent.

The rectory, vicarage, and church of Nether Swell belonged to the priory of Osney in Oxfordshire, and were granted to the chapter of Oxford 34 H. 8. The impropriation belongs to Christ-church college, and is now in lease to Mrs. Mercey Ayscombe, of the family of that name at Lyford, near Wantage, Berks, whose arms are, Or, a lion rampant double queue gules, on a chief azure a crescent for difference.

But there is a record which mentions that the manor of Lower Swell, with the procurations and tithes.

tithes, was granted to the bishop of London and his successors, in exchange for lands in Essex, 37 H. 8.

The abbey of Tewkesbury had tithes in Swell, as appears by two deeds without date, which I have here inserted from Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon, Vol. 2, Appendix, N^o. CLXI. 25, and 26.

De decima Domini de Suella.

CARTA Simonis filii Poinz concedentis Ecclesie de Theok. tempore Simonis Wigorniensis Episcopi, in perpetuam Elemosynam Decimam totius Domini sui de Suella, tam de Aldebiz quam de alio Dominico. Et ne aliqua in perpetuum oriretur controversia inter predictam Ecclesiam de Theok. & Capellam de Suelle, dedit eidem Capellae in perpetuum unam virgatam terrae, praeter illas duas virgatas quas prius habebat.

Controversia inter Ecclesiam de Theok. & Capellam de Suelle sic quievit super Decimas Domini.

COMPOSITIO facta inter Ecclesiam de Theok. & Mattheum Capellanum de Suelle super Decimis de Dominico auctoritate literarum Domini Papae demandata Abbati de Buttleiden & R. de Northampton & de Bukinham Archidiacono; scil. quod Monachi de Theok. percipient omnes Decimas de Dominico de Suelles, ita tamen quod si parochiani de Capella posuerint oves suas in ovili Domini de Suella & in pastura de Dominico hiemaverint, rector Capellae percipiet medietatem Decimarum illarum & Monaci reliquam medietatem. Monachi etiam percipient omnes decimas omnium servientium Domini quae erunt in ovili Capellae de Suelle, 6d. pro loco Berthanæ quamdiu stabit in vilenagio. Erunt tamen quieti a praestatione eorum eo anno quo parochiani habuerint oves suas in Berthana Domini & in Dominico; & si remota fuerit Berthana; poena etiam 100s. sub fidei praestatione interposita est, si aliter utraque partium a compositione resilient, parti eam observanti praestanda. Hanc compositionem praedicti Judices confirmaverunt.

One yard-land belongs to the glebe. The manor land, the church-piece, Tracy's ground, and four yard-lands of the impropriation are tithe free. The vicar has the third part of the corn tithes in all the tithable lands.

The church is a very small, mean building, without either aisle or steeple.

There were 37 houses, and about 160 inhabitants in this parish, 5 of whom were freeholders, when sir Robert Atkyns wrote his History of this county; yearly births 4, burials 4. The present number of houses is 44, and the people, by a late survey, were found to be exactly 213.

IS a parish in the upper division of Kiftsgate hundred, one mile north-westward from Stow on the Wold, and about twenty-four north-eastward from Gloucester.

The village is called Upper Swell, because it lies higher upon the stream than the preceding parish. There is nothing in it worthy the traveller's notice.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In the abstract from Domesday which sir Robert Atkyns has given concerning this manor, it is represented as belonging to the church of Winchcombe in the reign of king William the Conqueror; whereas it was then the property of the abbey of Evesham, as appears by the record, of which the following is an exact translation. This mistake arose from his using an incorrect copy of Domesday, as I have before had occasion to observe under Broadwell.

'The same church [St. Mary of Evesham] holds 'Svelle in Widelei hundred. There are three 'hides, and nine villeins, and two bordars, and 'a priest, with four plow-tillages amongst them 'all. There are six servi. It was worth 4*l.* now '5*l.* There are three plow-tillages in demean, 'and three mills of 20 sol.' Domesday-book, p. 72.

The abbey of Evesham pleaded their right of court leet in a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. and continued possessed of the manor 'till the general dissolution of religious foundations,

The manor of Over Swell, and the tithes of corn, wool, and lamb, lately belonging to the abbey of Evesham, and then in the tenure of William Fox, were granted to Richard Andrews, in trust, 33 H. 8.

The manor came afterwards to the Stratfords, and William Stratford died seized of it 9 Eliz. whereupon Anthony Stratford, his son, had livery the same year, and was lord of it in 1608. It was vested in sir James Rushout, of Northwick in Worcestershire, at the beginning of this century, and passed afterwards to sir Hildebrand Jacob, who sold it, about five years ago, to Mr. Fitz-Herbert, and others.

A messuage, and one acre of land in Over Swell, belonged to the chantry of All Saints in the church of Stow, and were granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor 6 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth 90*l.* a year. The advowson is vested, by purchase, in the reverend Mr. Henry Brown, and Mr. Lindsey is the present incumbent.

The advowson belonged to the abbey of Hayles, and after the dissolution of that monastery, was granted to Richard Andrews and Leonard Chamberlain 34 H. 8.

Formerly, four yard-lands, 240 sheep pastures, and thirteen beast pastures belonged to the glebe; but upon the inclosure of the parish, it was settled that the rector should receive 80*l.* a year, clear of all deductions, and he has besides a glebe worth 10*l.* per ann.

The church consists of the nave only, and is a small, mean building.

About seventy years ago, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 19 houses in the parish, and about 82 inhabitants, 3 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 1. There are now only 14 families, and the people are decreased to 69.

S W I N D O N

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Cheltenham, one mile north-west from the town of that name, eight south-eastward from Tewkesbury, and nine north-eastward from Gloucester.

It lies in the Vale, upon the banks of the little river Swilyate, which runs from hence to Tewkesbury, where it empties itself into the Avon. The soil in some parts inclines to sand, but in general is a strong clay, and the lands are chiefly employed in pasture.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The manor of Suindone belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester before the compilation of Domesday-book, but at that time it was held by Thomas archbishop of York, (as it had been by Stigand archbishop of Canterbury) to whose jurisdiction the priory of St. Oswald was subject. The following is a translation of the record :

‘ Stigand the archbishop held Suindone in ‘ Cilteham hundred. There were three hides,
‘ and two plow-tillages in demean, and seven ‘ villeins, and two bordars, having seven plow‘ tillages [among them]. There are four servi.
‘ It was then worth 3*l.* now 4*l.* 10*s.* Thomas
‘ [of Baieux] archbishop [of York] holds this ‘ manor, part of the estate of St. Osuald, and it ‘ pays tax.’ Domesday, p. 69.

The manor of Swindon was part of the possessions of St. Oswald's priory, 'till that house was dissolved, and then it passed into lay hands. James Clifford, esq; of the antient family of that name, settled at Frampton upon Severn, was lord of this manor in the year 1608. It was afterwards purchased by Mr. Trotman, who sold it to Mr. Ashmead, from whom it passed in the same manner to Mr. Sturmy. Mr. John Sturmy was lord of the manor about the beginning of this century, and John Stratford, esq; is the present proprietor.

John Hanborough, and Thomas Bruges and Maud his wife, levied a fine of lands in Swindone to William Whittington, and others, to the use of John Hanborough, and the heirs of John and Maud, 36 H. 6. John Garing and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Swindon to the use of Thomas Bruges, and others, 2 E. 4. Lands in Swindon and Clopley belonged to the bishoprick of Hereford, and were granted to Christopher Hatton, 18 Eliz.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 60*l.* a year.

The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. It has a low tower at the west end, without battlements, of an hexagonal form, but its sides and angles are not equal.

Sir Robert Atkyns sets down the number of houses in the parish at 24, and the inhabitants at about 90, of whom 6 were freeholders; the yearly births 2, and the burials 2. Examining the register, I find that in ten years collectively, from 1760, there are entered 19 baptisms, and 25 burials, which agrees pretty well with sir Robert's estimate. But the people are now increased to exactly 105.

T A I N T O N .

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Botloe, in the Vale country, about four miles distant south-eastward from Newent, six north-eastward from Mitchel Dean, and seven westward from Gloucester.

The roads at Rudford, Tibberton, and Tainton, are almost impassable in the winter. The soil is deep, and the lands are pretty equally divided between pasture and arable, but the occupiers seem not not to be the most skilful nor the most industrious. Bushes, brambles, and branches of trees lie in the course of the little brooks, whose waters so impeded, deluge the low lands on every considerable fall of rain, and overflow the public road, particularly at Tainton. Those lands, from a wet state, produce a coarse herbage, intermixt with rushes, much inferior in quality and quantity to what they would bear if kept healthy, as might easily be done. Their corn-fields are no better managed, but from the natural strength of soil, produce crops sufficient to satisfy the farmer. Here, too, that execrable practice prevails with the tenant, of heading the young oaks, undoubtedly because when once polled, they are intituled to the lop.

Some of our topographical books mention, that about the year 1700, there was an ore found at Tainton, from which the refiners extracted gold; and that they took a lease of the mine where the ore was found, but did not go on with the work, because the quantity of metal was so small as not always to answer the expence of separation. I have made some inquiry into this matter, but without obtaining any satisfactory account. This however is certain, that an inexhaustible treasure will be found by a proper cultivation of the soil, which is deep and exceedingly fertile. This parish is famous for producing a very rich and pleasant cyder, like that of Herefordshire, in whose neighbourhood it lies, and for an excellent kind of perry, made of a fruit called the Tainton Squash-Pear.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

William Goizenboded holds Tetinton, in Botelau hundred. Aluvin held it. There are six hides. In demean is one plow-tillage, and nine villeins, and seven bordars, with nine plow-tillages. It was worth 6*l.* now 3*l.* Domesday-book, p. 74.

This manor was granted to Peter Burdunc 2 Joh. John de Abernoon purchased a charter of free warren in Teynton 37 H. 3. It came soon after to the Musgrofes. Robert de Musgrofe died seized of the manor, and left Cecilia his widow, who held the bailiwick of Bicknor, in the forest of Dean, 10 E. 1. and pleaded, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, that she and her ancestors had held this manor, with court leet and waifs, time out of mind, and her claim was allowed 15 E. 1. She died in the 29th year of the same reign, at which time she was seized of Tainton, and of a wood, 28 acres of assart land at Greenway, and of nine yard-lands and a half at Bratforton, all in the forest of Dean.

Robert de Musgrofe, son of Robert, died 9 E. 1. leaving Hawise, an only daughter and heiress, then the wife of sir William Mortimer, younger son of Roger earl of March. She was likewise heiress to Cecilia de Musgrofe, her grandmother, who was seized of divers lands of inheritance, and being afterwards married to John de Ferrers, baron of Chartley, carried this manor into that name and family; for lord Ferrers had livery of it 30 E. 1. and died seized of it 18 E. 2. Robert lord Ferrers, son of John, was fifteen years old at his father's death, and distinguished himself in the wars with France, in the reign of king Edward the Third, being with the king and prince of Wales at the memorable battle of Cressy, fought Aug. 26, 1346, but died soon after. John lord Ferrers, son of Robert, married Elizabeth, daughter of Ralph de Stafford, and widow of Fulk le Strange, and with her had the manor of English Bicknor. He died 41 E. 3. Elizabeth, his widow, was afterwards married to Reginald Cobham, whom she likewise survived, and died seized of Tainton and Bicknor 49 E. 3. Robert lord Ferrers, son of John, married Margaret, daughter of Edward lord Spencer, and was possessed of the above manors, and of Bodington in this county, at the time of his death, 1 H. 5. whereupon they passed to his son Edmond lord Ferrers, who accompanied the gallant and victorious king Henry the Fifth in his wars in France, and died in the 14th year of the following reign, seized of all the before-mentioned estates, and of a woodwardship in the forest of Dean. William lord Ferrers, son of Edmond, being of full age, had livery of the manors of Teynton and Bicknor soon after his father's death; and deceasing himself 28 H. 6. left Anne, his only child, eleven years and eight months old, who being married to Walter Devereux, esq; carried the title of baron Ferrers to her husband and his family; but the manor of Tainton was entailed on the male heirs, and so did not pass to the Devereuxes, for Edmond Ferrers, brother to William, succeeded to this estate. And Elizabeth, the widow of William lord Ferrers, levied a fine of the manors of Tainton and Bicknor to the archbishop of Canterbury, and other great persons, 32 H. 6. in which year Martin Ferrers was seized of a third part of this manor, and a person of the same name was seized of Great Teinton 1 R. 3.

This estate came soon afterwards to the Whittingtons. Thomas Whittington, of Pauntley, esq; died possessed of it 38 H. 8. and left his estates to be divided among his six daughters and coheireses. Sir Christopher Blount was seized of it, but he being attainted, it was granted to sir Simon Weston and John Wakeman, 1 Jac. 1.

Mr. Thomas Pury, jun. lord of the manors of Tainton and Minsterworth, died in 1693, in the 74th year of his age. He was one of those principal citizens of Gloucester who subscribed the answer returned to the king's summons of surrender, Aug. 10, 1643, and took an active part in the management of public affairs during the siege of that city, of which he was afterwards mayor, in 1653. Piety, learning, great abilities, and extensive charity, gained him the love and respect of his cotemporaries, and preserved his memory from that obloquy which few eminent persons of his time had the good fortune to escape. Mr. Grove is owner of the Grove estate; and Mr. William Holder has another good estate in this parish.

HAMLET. Little Tainton is a hamlet and manor, to which, I apprehend, the following record should be applied:

' William the son of Norman holds Tatinton, in Botelau hundred. Ulgar held it of king Edward. This land is free [from tax]. There are six bordars, with one plow-tillage. It is worth and was worth 20s. There is one yard-land in the same place which lies in the forest [of Dean], and pays 12d.' Domesday, p. 74.

Hugh de Kilpec held the manor of Little Tainton of the king, by the service of guarding a hay, or wood, near Hereford, at his own charge. He died 32 H. 3. leaving two daughters coheiresses. Joan, the eldest, was married to Philip Marmion; and Isabel, the other daughter, was granted in ward to William de Cantelupe, the same year, and afterwards married to William Waleran. Maud Waleran died seized of Little Tainton 1 E. 1. Maud de Evors was likewise possessed of it, and of the manor of Kilcot in Hawkesbury, and pleaded her right to privileges in those manors 15 E. 1.

Bogo, or Bevis de Knoville, sheriff of Shropshire and Staffordshire, purchased this manor of William Waleran, and died seized of it, and of Kilcot in Newent, Knot Cleeve, and Yenington, 9 E. 1. Bogo de Knoville, son of Bogo, purchased a charter of free warren in Tainton 13 E. 1. and had a grant of the like privilege in Kilcot in Newent, the same year. A third Bogo de Knoville, son of the last Bogo, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of Tainton and Kilcot, to the use of themselves in special taille, 12 E. 2. and he died 12 E. 3. at which time he was likewise possessed of assart lands at Gravenhull and Zerkeley, near Lidney, in the forest of Dean.

Tainton passed to the Verdunes in the same reign. Sir John de Verdune levied a fine of it, and of Kilcot; and sir Thomas Moyne, knight, held this manor of the heirs of sir John de Verdune, at the time of his death, 1362, as appears by an inquisition taken 37 E. 3. and he left it to Edmund Moyne, his son and heir.

Little Tainton came afterwards to the Casseys of Cassey-Compton. William Cassey died seized of it 1 H. 8. leaving three infant sons, Leonard, William, and Robert, who succeeded each other, and the last died 1 E. 6. Henry Cassey, son of Robert, had livery 2 Mariæ, and died 38 Eliz. John Viney, esq; was lord of the manor at the beginning of this century, and Mr. Viney, of Gloucester, a descendant from him, is the present proprietor. His arms are, Argent, a cluster of grapes, with its stalk truncated proper.

Little Oakley in this parish, was parcel of the manor of Monmouth, and was granted to Edward Sallus and William Blake, scrivener, 3 Jac. 1.

William Nottingham, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of lands in Teinton Great, to John Kendal, and the heirs of Elizabeth; and Kendal reconveys to William Nottingham and Elizabeth in taille, 20 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the forest deanery, worth about 100*l.* a year. The dean and chapter of Gloucester are patrons, and the reverend Mr. Parker is the present incumbent.

Maud de Teynton gave the church of Teynton to St. Peter's abbey at Gloucester, to find lights; and Radulf Avenel confirmed it, and likewise gave a hermitage in this place, with a villein and his family, to the same house; which donations were confirmed by Gilbert Foliot, bishop of Hereford, when Hameline was abbat.

The old church, which stood at the north end of the parish, was burnt down, together with the parsonage, in the civil wars, probably about the time of the siege of Gloucester. The present church stands at a considerable distance from the site of the old one, and was built during the protectorship of Oliver Cromwell, principally by the procurement and assistance of Thomas Pury, jun. who likewise founded, and was a great benefactor to the college library at Gloucester. It is dedicated to St. Lawrence, and has this remarkable circumstance attending it, that it is placed north and south, contrary to the prevailing custom, from which the truly pious builder chose perhaps to deviate, from a contempt of religious superstition in things of no moment.

now about 250 inhabitants.

T E T B U R Y .

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Long-tree, five miles north from Malmesbury in Wiltshire, ten westward from Cirencester, twenty-six eastward from Bristol, and nineteen south from Gloucester.

It is about five miles long from east to west, and in some places more than two miles broad.
The soil is mostly light and stony, but it has been greatly improved of late, and the lands now let at a high rate. It is situated upon high ground, on the south side of the county, bordering upon Wiltshire, from which it is separated by a rivulet, whose waters, in the winter, are here augmented by another little stream, and take their course to Malmesbury, Chippenham, Lacock, Bradford, and Bath, and are unquestionably the head, or highest source of the Bristol Avon; but in the summer those rivulets are frequently dry. Almost the whole parish is the property of its own inhabitants, but it is divided between so many owners, that no person has any great estate in it.

Within the parish, there is a market-town of the same name, with a bailiff for its chief officer, chosen annually for the better management of the public revenues. It is not large, but well frequented, and deservedly claims the third place in precedence among the towns in Gloucestershire.
It is pleasantly situated upon the top of a knoll, which it almost covers, and surrounded with a deep and narrow dell, or bottom, greatly resembling the moat of a castle. The town is about a mile and a half in circumference, with four streets crossing in the center of it, consisting of about four hundred houses, chiefly built of stone, and which make a handsome appearance.

On the south-east side of the town, there was a very antient, strong camp, and there is a tradition, that before the camp was made, a castle stood upon the same spot of ground, called Swinnerdown-Castle, 'but it is now so intirely demolished,' says the Magna Britannia, 'that the ruins of it are scarce visible,' whence it might be inferred, that some faint traces of it were then to be seen. But I am clearly of opinion that the author never saw them, and in short, that no such thing as a castle ever existed there. Camden, who surveyed this country above a century before that book was compiled, and who was no cursory observer of antiquities, mentions the castles at Berkeley, Dursley, Beverstone, and that which had been long demolished at Cirencester; and if there had been any vestige of such a thing at Tetbury, or any account of it in the antient records, he would certainly have taken notice of it. But we will suppose for a moment that Camden overlooked it, yet it could hardly escape the many researches of the great antiquary Leland, and others both before and since his time, yet nobody pretends to have found any such account in them.

Speed relates, indeed, but I know not upon what authority, that one Donwallo Mulmutius, a king of the Britons, built this castle, about two thousand years ago, and that it was called Caer Bladon. But the very existence of that king is uncertain, and the whole story incredible; for who can believe that the Britons had any buildings like castles at that time, since Giraldus Cambrensis informs us what kind of fortifications were called castles in the reign of king Henry the First, and speaking

speaking of the town of Pembroke, tells us, that Arnulf of Montgomery, brother to Robert earl of Shrewsbury, fortified that place with a castle of stakes and turves. Besides, Cæsar, Tacitus, and all the writers on the Roman affairs in Britain, are totally silent on this head, and yet they describe the method of fighting, and the warlike instruments of the Britons, and would not have omitted to mention their castles, if they had found any among them.

The Britons, we are told, called the place Caer Bladon, which was afterwards the Saxon Tette-beoꝛg, or Tetteberg, and by gradual and successive changes, came to be written Teteberie, or Tetbury, as it stands at the head of this account. As for Tette, I know not what it can mean, unless it be some great person's name who occupied the camp, or was proprietor of the manor. Caer originally signified a wall, and inclosure, and became at length to be used for a camp, castle, or any kind of fortress. The Saxon Beoꝛg is nearly synonymous and equivalent to the British Caer, and doubtless the town took its name from this camp; and the extensive signification of those British and Saxon words, gave rise to the notion of a castle, grounded, I think, chiefly on Speed's authority, who most probably took his account of Mulmutius from Geofry of Monmouth, and translated the word Caer by castle; whereas the British writer meant nothing more by that word than some camp, or intrenchments. Thus I account for the mistake concerning it, which is not peculiar to this place, for the same has happened respecting the camps, called Castles, on the heights at Saintbury, Titherington, Horton, and several other places in this county, where the inhabitants fancy that castles once stood, notwithstanding it is very certain that there never was any such thing at either of those places.

There is, however, a gentleman of learning, and of laudable veneration for the antiquities of this town, who finding it difficult to remove the idea which tradition has early fixt in his mind, can hardly give up the point of a British castle. And if I have the least doubt about the matter, it arises solely from that deference which I owe, in general, to his better judgment.

The camp here was levelled a few years ago by the owner of the field, when the workmen found several heads of arrows and javelins, with horse-shoes of the antient form, and spurs without rowels, such as were used by our first kings after the conquest, as they are represented on their seals in Speed's History: And under the agger were found several antient English coins, particularly one of Edward the Confessor, one of king Stephen, and two of king Henry the Third. Roman coins have also been frequently found in and near the town, of the emperors Hadrian, Antoninus Pius, Constantine and his sons, some of Posthumus, Magnentius, and a very fine one of Carausius in brass, which are in the cabinet of the reverend Mr. Wight, the minister of the parish, who is well versed in medallic history and antiquities. There were also several hewn stones found, which those who had adopted the notion of the castle supposed to have belonged to that building; but it seems probable, from many circumstances, that there was an antient house on this spot, belonging to the Braoses, or Mowbrays, who were lords of the manor, and that these were some of its remains; and it is not unlikely, that some of the stones from that building were used in the walls of the tower, upon which the Mowbrays arms are now to be seen.

The field where the camp was is now improved into a kind of pleasure-ground, with plantations of firs, and agreeable slopes and walks on the side next the rivulet; and there is a very pleasant prospect of the London, Bath, and Wiltshire roads from the top of it.

There was formerly in this town a religious house, to which the monks removed, when they left the Grange at Hasleton, (as related under Rodmarton) for want of water. It stood at the east end of the town, and was afterwards called Hacket's Court, belonging to the Denny's half a century back, upon part of the scite of which Mr. Matthew Sloper built a very handsome house, about the year 1765. But the monks being obliged to fetch wood for their use from Kingwood, found Tetbury a very inconvenient situation for them, and so they removed a second time to that place, whence they originally came. Beside this, there were two other houses, which some judicious persons have supposed, from what is still to be seen of them, to have been originally the habitations of persons leading a monastic life; but tradition says little, and history still less, or nothing at all about them. The one is in the Chipping, lately in the possession of Mr. Thomas Pyke, and Mr. Gabriel Hadnot; and the other is the old vicarage house.

The Chipping is a spacious area in the north-east quarter of the town, encompassed with houses, where two fairs are held annually, on AshWednesday, and the 22d of July, for horses and other cattle; and it took its name from the Saxon Leapan, to buy, because it was the place where, at those fairs, things were bought and sold.

The market is held on Wednesday, about the center of the town, where are two market-houses, appropriated to distinct uses; one for cheese and bacon, of which vast quantities were formerly brought from the great dairy countries in the Vale of Gloucestershire, and the north part of Wiltshire; but very little of those great necessaries of life come now to market, owing to the dealers buying them up in the countries that produce them. This practice manifestly tends to enhance the price of them, to the advantage of the land holder, but, as I conceive, to the injury of the community in general. The other market house is for wool and yarn, the tolls of which are reduced reduced to about a fourth of what they were forty or fifty years ago; which, however, is not to be attributed to the decline of trade in those commodities, but to the prevailing practice of selling them out of the market.

There was formerly some woollen cloth made here, but manufactures always decline under natural disadvantages, and the clothing business could not long subsist at Tetbury, for want of constant water to drive the fulling-mills, so necessary in that business. The chief manufactures now carried on here, are woolstapling and wool-combing, in which latter about one hundred and fifty persons find constant employment; and the combed wool is sold at Coventry, Kidderminster, Leicester, and other markets.

The inhabitants enjoy a fine, healthy air, and live to a great age, as appears from the following short history of a family of five women lately dwelling in one house. Honour Powell, relict of the famous Mr. Powell mentioned in the Tatler, was one of those persons, who died at the age of ninety; a second died in 1767, aged eighty-nine, and the other three were living when this account was taken, aged eighty-six, eighty-one, and fifty, the last being the daughter of one of the others; and all these, when living together, were able to wait on themselves and each other, without assistance from abroad. But the most extraordinary instance of longevity to be produced in this county, is of one Henry West, who resided at Upton, a hamlet in this parish, in the time of king James the First. He lived to be one hundred and fifty-two years of age, and it is written in a Bible, now in the possession of one of his descendants, that he had five wives, but no child by the first four; that he had ten by the fifth, and lived to see a hundred grandchildren; and there is a traditional account that he gave to each of them a brass pot, or kettle.

Tho' the elevated situation of the town gives it a pure air, yet it has been attended with a considerable inconvenience, the want of water, which the inhabitants used to purchase at 6*d.* and sometimes at 10*d.* the hoghead, 'till, in the year 1749, an antient well in the wool-market was sunk lower, by subscription, to the depth of 104 feet, and the present minister of the parish fixed a lead pump in it at his own expence; since that time many other wells have been sunk for the use of private families, and the town is now pretty well supplied with water. But an accident that lately happened, in sinking a quarry for the use of the turnpike-road, shews how it might be much better supplied, at no great expence; for the labourers struck upon, and discovered an old aqueduct, which is supposed to have led from a spring called Whorwell, to some religious house in the town; and it seems unaccountable how a thing so necessary, where water was very scarce, could be neglected, and at length totally forgotten.

There is a petrifying spring, on the north side of the town, which incrusts pieces of wood, and other things, with a strong stony substance, at a considerable distance from its rise; and Mr. Wight, the minister, is possessed of a perfect stone, taken out of the course of that water, which seems formerly to have been a stick, with several rings, or concentrick circles at the end, indicating the years of its growth.

Two turnpike-roads run through the town, and cross each other there. One leads eastward to Cirencester, and so to Oxford, or London; but westward from Tetbury, it leads to Bath and Bristol. The other runs northward from this town to Minchin Hampton, Stroud, and Gloucester; but southward to Chippenham, Devizes, Salisbury, and Southampton. At the west end of the town is a very deep hollow, part of the natural moat already taken notice of, over which the commissioners of the roads built a high bridge, of four large arches, in the year 1775, which makes the entrance into the town on that side exceedingly commodious, that before was up a steep acclivity, very difficult for carriages to ascend.

The annual races are run upon a large common, about a mile eastward of the town, and are much frequented by the neighbouring gentry.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

In Domesday it is recorded after this manner:

' Roger de Lurei holds Teteberie in Lange-trewes hundred. There are twenty-three hides which pay tax. Siuuard held it in the time of king Edward. There are eight plow-tillages in demean, and thirty-two villeins, and two bordars, and two redchenisters, with a priest, having amongst them all fourteen plow-tillages. There are nineteen servi, and a mill of 15*d.* [rent] and pasture of 10*s.* and ten acres of meadow. The same Roger holds Uptone. There are two hides, and one yard-land taxed. Aluricus held it of king Edward. There are two plow-tillages in demean, and five villeins, and three bordars, with three plow-tillages. There are eight servi. These two manors were worth 33*l.* in the time of king Edward, and they are now at farm for 50*l.* Domesday, p. 75.

Tetbury, soon after the Norman conquest, belonged to the family of St. Waleric, who took their name from the port of Saint Valeric in Normandy. Reginald de Saint Waleric founded a monastery of Cistercians at Hasleden, who, for want of water, removed from thence to Tetbury; and afterwards, for want of wood, removed from Tetbury to Kingwood, where they continued 'till the dissolution of that abbey.

Maud de St. Waleric, the heiress of that family, was married to the great William de Braose, eldest son and heir of William de Braose, lord of Brecknock, and descended from William de Braose, who was one of those who came into England to try their fortunes with the Conqueror; and by this marriage the manor of Tetbury passed into the family of de Braose. Maud was a lady of high spirit, and encouraged her husband to oppose king John. Her husband was greatly in debt for the province of Munster in Ireland, which he farmed of the king, and his lands being seized for default of payment, he broke out in open rebellion, and was forced to fly into France, where he died in exile, whilst Maud his wife, and their son William, were made prisoners, and both died in Corfe castle. But the history of the founders of Lanthony priory gives a different account of the king's displeasure, and relates, that William fought with one Guenhunewyn, at Elwel, on the morrow after the festival of St. Lawrence, in the year 1198, and vanquished him, with a slaughter of three thousand of his followers, who were Welchmen; wherefore the king turned him out of all his estates, and banished him the kingdom, without any legal proceedings, and so he died in exile.

William de Braose, descended from the last William, held the borough of Tetbury, with markets, fairs, courts-leet, waifs, and free warren, and his right was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. This William left four daughters, coheireffes, but the manor of Tetbury, notwithstanding, continued in the same name; for Peter de Braose was seized of Rodmarton, Tetbury, Upton, and Charlton, with free warren, as part of the barony of Brembre, 29 E. 1. and died 5 E. 2. Thomas de Braose, son of Peter, had the grant of a fair in Tetbury 29 E. 3. and sir John de Braose died seized of the manor in the 41st year of that reign. Richard de Braose was seized of the borough of Tetbury, with markets, fairs, and other liberties, 4 R. 2. which was at the time of his death; and he was succeeded, the same year, by William de Braose, whose right was allowed before the judges itinerant. Beatrix the widow of sir Thomas de Braose was seized thereof 7 R. 2. And Margaret the widow of John Berkeley, and formerly the wife of another sir Thomas de Braose, died seized of Tetbury 23 H. 6.

The manor of Tetbury descended to Maurice lord Berkeley, the fifth of that name, and brother to William marquis of Berkeley, as coheir to the last lord Braose, and it continued in that family 'till George lord Berkeley sold it, with the borough, and tolls of the town, for the use of the inhabitants, in the year 1632, and they are now vested in trustees for the same use.

The Warren is a large common, stinted and regulated as the trustees for the town think proper, and usually brings in about 30*l.* a year for the winter pasture of sheep.

The arms of the town are, Two dolphins nayant.

HAMLETS. 1. Upton, so called because it lies high. It appears, by several foundations of houses in the fields, that this village was much more populous than at present, and there have been coins found among the ruins, particularly one of king Henry the Second, and some of king Henry the Third. Perhaps it suffered in the civil wars. The Domesday account of this manor is joined to that of Tetbury. Upton was held of Richard earl of Gloucester and Hertford, 47 H. 3. Peter de Braosa had free warren in Upton, Dufton, Elmundestree, and Charleton, 29 E. 1. and George Braosa, esq; was seized of Upton 6 H. 5. Sir Edmund Tame was lord of this manor, and leaving three sisters, coheireffes, Alice was married to sir Thomas Verney, who, in her right, was seized of the third part of sir Edmund Tame's estates. Richard Verney, son and heir of Thomas, died July 26, 9 Eliz. seized in Gloucestershire, (as appears by the inquisition taken at Gloucester after his decease) of the intire manor of Upton, and of two messuages and lands in Eastleech, twelve messuages with their appurtenances in Upton-Tedbury, Charleton, Doughton, and Tedbury; fifty-one messuages in Eastleech-Turville, Willingstrup, and Colne Alwyns; and of the manor of Nymfield; for it is expressly declared by the same inquisition, that he, with his father, purchased the other two parts of these estates by indenture tripartite bearing date Feb. 26, 1 E. 6. George Verney, son of Richard, died seized of Upton 16 Eliz. leaving Richard Verney, his son, ten years of age at his father's death, who became a very eminent person, and was chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Warwick, 31, 35, 39, 43 Eliz. and 1 Jac. 1. Upton was afterwards part of the estate of sir George Huntley, who entertained queen Elizabeth at Frocester-court, in her way to Berkeley-castle. Thomas Cripps, esq; is the present principal inhabitant, who has a good estate, and an elegant new-built house in this hamlet, where his family has resided for many generations, and once enjoy'd a larger estate than it does at present.

The Grove estate at Upton, is the property of Samuel Saunders, of Tetbury, esq; who is a branch of the Saunders's of Berkshire. His arms are, Per chevron, sable and argent, three elephants beads erazed counterchanged.

2. Dufton, or Doughton. This manor formerly belonged to the Stonors. Edward de Stonor was seized of Doughton 5 R. 2. as was Gilbert de Stonor, son of Robert, 3 H. 5. There is a large barrow in a field here, which was probably thrown up immediately after the battle fought at Sheriton, between the English and the Danes, about the year 1016, wherein the latter were routed, and have left their name to another field just by it, called Danes End. This hamlet belongs to several persons, but Mr. Talboys, and Mr. Clark, have the principal estates. The former has a large old house here, built by Richard Talboys, esq; who was high sheriff of this county, and had an estate

The former has a large old house here, built by Richard Talboys, esq; who was high sheriff of this county, and had an estate estate of about 1500*l.* a year. This family is descended from one of the same name at Whiston in Wiltshire, whose arms are, Argent, a saltire gules, on a chief of the second three escallops of the first.

3. Elmtree, or Elmudestre, that is, Elmude's place. Reginald de St. Waleric gave the manor of Elmudestre to the monks of the Benedictine abbey of St. Ebrulph in Normandy. Alien monasteries being deprived of their estates in England, by act of parliament, king Edward the Fourth, in the 4th year of his reign, granted to Henry Sampson, dean of Westbury college, and to the chapter of the same, and to their successors, the manor of Alminstree, or Elminstree, to hold in free and perpetual alms, with courts leet, frankpledge, &c. to pray for the souls of his father, mother, and brother, and for his own welfare. This estate continued in the college 'till the dissolution, and was afterwards vested in — Tooke, who lies buried in Tetbury church; since whose time it passed to Thomas Deacon, esq; formerly a silk-mercator in London, who married Mary, daughter of Thomas Haynes, a merchant in the city of Bristol, and it continued in his family 'till the death of Mrs. Deacon, in the year 1769, who, by her will, devised this estate to Thomas Jenner, esq; a member of the university of Oxford, and a fellow of Merton college there, who is the present proprietor.

4. Charlton. William de Ballecot held six yard lands in Cherlington and Tetbury 33 E. 1. and another William Ballecot died seized thereof 20 E. 3. Edward de Mortimer, earl of March and Ulster, was seized of a yearly rent of 4*l.* issuing out of Cherleton, a member of the manor of Tetbury, 5 R. 2. and died seized of the manor 3 H. 6. It was granted to Cicely dutchess of York, for her life, 38 H. 6. and confirmed to her 1 E. 4. It was afterwards made part of the dowry of Catherine, queen dowager of king Henry the Eighth, and was granted to Drew Drurey, and Edward Downing, 16 Eliz. An ancestor to lord Ducie purchased it afterwards, and his lordship is the present lord of this manor.

5. The Grange. This is not properly a hamlet, but claims to be considered distinctly, as it formerly belonged to the abbey of Kingswood, at the dissolution of which it was granted to Richard Andrews, and Thomas Hysley, 36 H. 8. It was afterwards the seat and estate of the Gastrells, who continued there several generations; but the house, with part of the estate, is now the property of Mr. William Fisher. This estate is tithe free. Here was formerly a chapel, but it is now converted to common uses. Mr. Fisher's arms are, a chevron vair between three lioncels rampant.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Stonehouse. It is a vicarage, endowed with all the tithes of Dufton, and with all but grain in every other part of the parish, except Upton, where the incumbent has only the small tithes, and receives 5*s.* in lieu of tithe of hay; and except the Grange estate, which is exempt from tithes.

The rectory and advowson were granted to the abbey of Eynsham, by Thomas de Waleric, and confirmed by the bishop of Worcester. See the grant and confirmation in the Appendix to Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon, pp. 99, 101. At the dissolution of that abbey, they were granted to Christ Church college, Oxford, to which the impropriation still belongs. The college, about the year 1563, granted the advowson to Henry lord Berkeley, and his heirs, and George lord Berkeley sold it to the inhabitants of Tetbury, who are patrons, and Mr. John Wight is the present incumbent. The glebe is very considerable, and the vicarage is worth upwards of 200*l.* a year.

The church was dedicated to the virgin Mary, and is said to have been built originally by Reginald de Waleric, not long after the conquest. It appeared by the workmanship to have been since rebuilt at several times, and being very ruinous, is now taking down. The inhabitants have raised a large sum of money themselves, and received a few benefactions from others, particularly from the late doctor Johnson, bishop of Worcester, the late lord Botetourt, Thomas Estcourt, esq; captain Warren of Bristol, Mr. Spencer of London, (a native of the town) Mr. William Earl of Malmesbury, and Mr. Jackson of Sneed Park; with which they are preparing to erect an elegant church, upon the site of the old one, preserving the present steeple, which is handsome, and in good condition; and the minister himself has given about 1500*l.* towards this necessary work. There is an exceeding fine ring of eight bells, with a clock, and a good set of chimes in the tower, on the west side of which, without, is a scutcheon, with A lion rampant, part of the arms of the Mowbrays.

A chantry was erected in this church 37 E. 3. by Walter de Tetbury, John de Weston, Ralph Hale, and John de Colburn, dedicated to the virgin Mary, of which William Potte was the last incumbent, and had a pension of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* in 1553. Willis. The lands belonging to it were granted to Edward Newport and John Crompton 5 Jac. There was another chantry erected by John de Grevil 19 E. 4. dedicated to the holy Trinity, and William Wotton, the last incumbent, had a pension of 6*l.* in 1553. The lands belonging to this chantry were granted to Simon Wiseman, and Richard Moor, 4 Jac. 1. There was also another, called Herne's chantry, of which Thomas Harman, the last incumbent, received a pension of 4*l.* in the same year.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On the south side of the church was Braose's aile, where was a chapel belonging to that family, now destroy'd, and a vault beneath it full of bones. Near it stood an antient tomb, with the figure of a lord de Braose, lying in armour, with his legs across, but it is wretchedly defaced, and broken to pieces.

There was a tomb in the north aile, with two very large figures of a man and woman lying along; the man in armour, with his feet resting on a lion, to denote the courage and magnanimity that should distinguish the soldier. At the woman's feet lies a dog, the proper emblem of fidelity and affection. There was no inscription besides the date, Anno Domi 1586; but it was designed for one of the Gastrells, as appears by the arms, Quarterly 1st and 4th, Chequy, argent and sable, on a chief Or, three bucks heads coup'd of the second, for Gastrell. 2d and 3d, Ten billets, 4, 3, 2, 1, a crescent in chief. On the femme side, 1st and 4th, either plain or obliterated. 2d and 3d, An eagle displayed. Doctor Gastrell, late bishop of Chester, and one of the canons of Christ Church, was descended from a branch of this family, of whom many have been buried here without memorials.

On the tablet of a monument in the chancel was this inscription:

Esto fidelis vsque ad mortem, et dabo tibi Coronam Vitæ.

In Remembrance

of that Graue Gentleman,

RICHARD TALBOYS, Esq.

Who after a Pilgrimage of 87 years

Departed this Life 3^o Aug. A. D. 1663.

Senibus mors est in Januis, Juvenibus vero in insidiis. Attende tibiipsum viator.

At the top, are the arms of Talboys, impaling, Sable, a chevron between three crosses crozlets fitchy gules.

There was a monument on the north side of the church for John Savage, who was represented kneeling before an altar, and this quaint inscription upon the table in capital letters:

Our Bodyes all receiv'd of Earth, Earth must againe them keepe, Untill the Lord shall raise them up, to Life from deadly Sleepe;
Our Soules aloft to Heaven shall mount, where Death them cannot presse Death only is a Dore to us, the true Life to possesse;
Our Glory here still vanishing, prone to decaye to fall;
Shall after Death be stablished, be made Angelicall. (Slayne
What then! what then! though Savage Death, our Savage thus hath Regard it not, tis nothing, for, it was with Christ to raigne.

John Savage, Gent. deceas'd the 28 of Maye Anno Do 1608.

Many other persons of the name of Savage, but of a different family, have been buried under flat stones in the south aile, particularly Francis Savage, gent. who died in 1740, aged 63; Sarah, wife of William Savage, who died in 1767, aged 73; and some with only initial letters upon the stones; for the long expectation of a new church has prevented the erecting monuments in the old one. Upon two of those stones were the Savages arms⁹, viz. Argent, six lioncels rampant sable.

Upon a flat stone in the south aile,

Here resteth y^e body of MARY the Wife of NATHANIEL CRIPPS Gent. Daughter of SAMUEL BURCOME of Sodbury, Gent. who departed this Life the 13th day of July, 1710, Ætatis suæ 35.

Her body Earthly was, and to the Earth
Descended is, from whence it took its Birth.

Her Soul from a more High Original

Mounted aloft, became Angelical.

Clog not her Wings, then, with your dewy teais

On which She's rais'd above the Starry Spheres.

Cease Husband, Children, cease, give God the Praise

Which She now warbles in immortal Layes.

Also Margaret the Daughter of y^e said Nathaniel and Margaret Departed y^e Life y^e 13th of July 1710.

Here also lyeth the Body of the abovesaid NATHANIEL CRIPPS, who departed this Life the 23^d Day of March Anno Dom. 1739-40 Ætatis suæ 65.

On a small marble tablet against the wall,

M. S.

Deboræ Uxoris Jacobi Roche de Merriott in Comitatu Somersetensi Generosi, Quæ obiit quinto Die mensis Julij A. D. MDCCXX anno suæ ætat. XXIX. Nec non Patricij eorum filij infantuli, qui obiit ultimo die ejusdem mensis et Anni.

At the top are these arms, Gules, three roaches in pale proper.

On flat stones in various parts of the church, were the following memorials, amongst many others, with only dates and names.

Here lieth the Body of M^{rs} Mary Deacon Widow, eldest Daughter of M^r. Thomas Haynes of the City of Bristol, Merch who departed this life February the 22^d Anno Dom. 1731-2 in the 73^d year of her Age.

Here lyeth the Body of M^{rs}. ESTHER DEACON, Daughter of THOMAS DEACON Gent. (late of ELMESTREE in this Parish) and of MARY his Wife, who lies buried near this Place. She died September y^e 2nd in the Year of our Lord 1747, aged 56.

Upon both stones are these arms, Argent, a cross between four lions rampant sable, on a chief azure three roses proper.

Benefactions.

There has been a free grammar-school in the town for many years. It was founded in the reign of king James, by sir William Rumney, alderman and sheriff of London, who was a native of this town, to which he gave a lease for years, of the profits of the fairs and markets, and the produce was applied towards purchasing the advowson of the church, the tolls of the borough, the manor and commons, which were bought of George lord Berkeley. The trustees continued the school 'till the death of Mr. Henry Wightwick, a few years ago, since whose time no master has been appointed, as the tolls of the markets have not been sufficient to raise a salary for one. Mr. Oldham, the poet, received part of his education at this school, as did doctor Bisse, bishop of Hereford. Doctor Joseph Trapp, born at Cherington in this neighbourhood, minister of Christ Church in London, and author of several valuable books, was here qualified for the uni-

⁹ This family is descended from the Le Savages of Clifton and Rock-Savage, in Cheshire, and they from John le Savage of Sarcliffe in Derbyshire, who was living 3 E. 2. John Savage married Margaret, the daughter and heir of sir Thomas Daniel, of Bradley in Appleton, Cheshire, knight; and Margaret surviving her husband, granted to her son John Savage, and to his heirs, the right of bearing her coat of arms, Argent, a pale fustilly sable, by deed dated 3 H. 5. and the posterity of Savage bore the arms of Daniel accordingly, with the crest, An unicorn's head coup'd argent, 'till sir John Savage of Clifton took the fix black lions, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, as I find it in Mr. Peter Leicesters's Historical Collections, pp. 230, 231. There was a sir John Savage, who married a daughter of sir Henry Pool, of Saperton in this county, by which alliance this family came to be settled at Tetbury, where the reverend Mr. John Savage has now a good house, and a good estate.

verfity ; and fo was Mr. Gore, formerly of Sopworth in Wiltshire, a gentleman remarkable for his learning.

Out of the annual profits of the borough, &c. the trustees apply 10*l.* to buy garments for the poor ; 5*l.* to bind out apprentices ; and 10*l.* for a weekly lecture on Thursdays, by five neighbouring minifters. Doctor George Bull, afterwards bifhop of St. David's, was one of the lecturers. The trustees alfo pay 5*l.* out of the tolls, to the poor, in lieu of money given to them by the wills of Mr. William Langftone, and Mr. John Malby.

Another fchool has been fince founded here, by Mrs. Anne Hodges, of Shipton Moyne in this county, who, by her will, left 30*l.* a year to teach fifteen boys of this parifh to read, write, and account ; and 10*l.* a year to the fecond poor, charged on the Shipton eftate.

Sir Thomas Eftcourt, in the year 1624, gave 10*l.* yearly, arifing from chief-rents in Tetbury, for the benefit of the poor, and 40*s.* yearly for fermons, which fums are charged on houfes in Tetbury. John Veizey, in 1677, gave 30*s.* yearly, charged on lands, to the ufe of the poor, and for a fermon. Mr. John Savage gave 20*l.* to be let for four years, without intereft, to four tradefmen. Mr. John Sheppard and his wife gave 30*l.* to the like ufe, which being loft by the infolvency of the borrowers, Charles Savage, efq; gave the like fum to the fame ufe.

N. B. The benefactions from Mrs. Hodges and fir Thomas Eftcourt were fo long in arrear, that about the year 1765, they amounted to the fum of 420*l.* which was laid out on consolidated three per cent. annuities, vefted in Mr. William Fisher, Mr. Robert Clark, Mr. Thomas Wight, and Mr. Edward Tugwell, trustees for the ufe of the poor.

Mr. Matthew Sloper, by his will, about the year 1770, gave 10*l.* to be laid out on the fame fecurity, and vefted in the above-named trustees for the fame ufe.

Mr. John Avery, late of the city of Brijftol, has given eight fixpenny loaves, to be diftributed every Sunday to the fecond poor for ever ; and 10*s.* to the vicar, for a fermon on the anniversary of his death, with 3*s.* to the clerk, and 2*s.* to the sexton, for their attendance on that day. And a houfe in Brijftol is charged with thefe benefactions.

Mr. Elton gave 20*s.* to the poor, and 10*s.* for an annual fermon, to the vicar.

Mrs. Mary Hone, (daughter of Mr. John Hone,) who was buried April 11, 1776, left 150*l.* (which legacy is enrolled in the court of chancery) the intereft of which is to be equally divided between poor widows that are members of the eftablifhed church, every year, on Christmas-day, by the vicar of the parifh for the time being.

Mr. Giles Stedman gave 30*s.* to be difpofed of in bread to the poor.

Mr. William Talboys gave 20*s.* yearly to buy books for the poor boys at the grammar-fchool ; and both the two laft charities are charged on a piece of ground in Tetbury, called Barley Croft.

Mr. Jonathan Shippen, clothier, gave 20*s.* in bread to the poor, and 10*s.* for a fermon. Mr. Hopeful Vokins and Mr. Joseph Lockey gave 50*s.* in bread to the poor. And Mr. Gilbert Gaftrell gave 20*s.* to be difpofed of in like manner, and 10*s.* for a fermon.

Thomas Talboys, of Hoxton in Middlefex, efq; who died in the year 1731, and was buried in Tetbury church, left 20*l.* a year for ever to the following ufes, 4*l.* in bread, and 15*l.* in money, to the poor ; and 20*s.* to the minifter for a fermon on St. Thomas day. He alfo left 50*l.* to erect a monument for him in Tetbury church, which has not hitherto been done. There are feveral other fums of money left for monuments, which, it is prefumed, will be erected in the new church.

When fir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this place, about feventy years ago, there were, according to him, 300 houfes, and about 1200 inhabitants in the parifh, whereof 80 were freeholders ; yearly births 57, burials 55. About the year 1729, the people were numbered, and there were then 3115 fouls, fince which time they are increafed to the number of about 3500.

T E W K E S B U R Y .

THIS parifh lies in the hundred of Tewkesbury, about ten miles north-weft from Cheltenham, nine weftward from Winchcombe, and ten north-eaftward from Gloucefter.

It is fituated in a fine rich vale, near the confines of Worcefterfhire, and watered by four rivers, like the garden of Eden. It has a corporation and borough-town within it, which gives name to the hundred ; and is peninfulated by three of thofe rivers, the Avon, the Swilyate, and the Carrant. The firft, after receiving the Swilyate, falls into the Severn at the Lower Lode, a little weftward, or below the town ; and the Carrant empties itfelf into the Avon a little above it. This is called the Upper Avon, to diftinguifh it from the river of the fame name that runs from Bath to Brijftol. It is navigable as high as Stratford in Warwickfhire, and visits Evesham and Perfhore in its courfe to Tewkesbury ; whence, by means of the Severn, (in which it is said the tide sometimes flows to this place) the navigation is continued to Gloucester, Bristol, Worcester, and to all places lying upon that river, or that have a communication with it.

It is the prevailing opinion that this place derives its name from one Theocus, who, as some say, was an eminent hermit, that dwelt here about the year 700, and had a chapel on the banks of the Severn. Leland, by a kind of unwarrantable licence, or at least by mistake, calls the town Theoci Curia, for Theoci Buria. But William of Malmesbury, as if he had never heard of such hermit, derives the name from the Greek word Theotocos, the mother of God, because the first monastery that was built here was dedicated to the virgin mother. As to the first explanation, I am not without suspicion that the story of the hermit is fabulous; nor is the monk of Malmesbury's derivation satisfactory, for who can suppose that Britons or Saxons would give names to places from a language they were almost totally ignorant of? Having first given the opinions of others, I shall take the liberty of subjoining my own. The earliest account we have of this place, is in the reign of Cenred, king of Mercia, when, we are told, two brothers, Odo and Dodo, great noblemen of that kingdom, were lords of this manor. And from this Dodo, or Thodo, (for in Saxon names the D and Th are often substituted for each other) comes Thodocus, the same name, only written after the Latin manner; and hence, probably Teodechesberie, as it is in Domesday. The Saxon writers, by contraction, call the town Deocrburý, and we their successors, Teuxbury, or Tewkesbury, as at the head of this account. The termination indicates that here was a camp or place of defence, now perhaps levelled and destroy'd, but there is no doubt of its once existing; and it was most probably in Oldbury field, for Oldbury signifies the old camp; and upon this supposition, Teodechesberie signifies the camp of Theocus.

In the year 715, one of the above noblemen, or both, (for it is variously related) built a monastery here, as will be shewn more at large in the account of church affairs; and from the resort to that monastery, the town very probably took its rise, and seems to have increased gradually as the abbey flourished. Upwards of three hundred years after that period, Domesday was compiled, which takes notice of the particulars belonging to the manor, and that there were thirteen burgesses in the town, who paid twenty shillings a year; and that the queen established a market, which paid eleven shillings and eight pence. A few ages afterwards, the town and the abbey were both improved and enlarged, by the patronage and munificence of the great earls of Gloucester, who resided here part of their time, and were lords of the large manor of Tewkesbury.

King John, before he came to the crown, held this manor, and the honour of Gloucester. He built the long bridge at Tewkesbury, leading towards Worcester, and gave the profits of the fairs and markets to keep it in repair. This bridge was very beneficial to the town, the approaches to which were subject to floods, from the frequent overflowing of the rivers that almost encompass it; and from that time Tewkesbury was more frequented, because more accessible.

After John acceded to the crown, the Clares were earls of Gloucester, and lords of the borough and great manor of Tewkesbury. They resided part of their time at Holmes Castle, built upon an eminence near the town, and were great benefactors both to that and to the abbey. By the inquisition taken after the death of Gilbert de Clare, which happened 7 E. 2. it appears, that there were then belonging to him, One hundred and fourteen burgages and a half, and a quarter part of a burgage, which paid 6*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.* and the toll of the borough was worth 100*s.* which was at that time a very considerable sum, perhaps more than equal in value to the tolls of the borough at present. There were two views of frank pledge, one at Michaelmas, the other at Easter; the certain fines amounted to 7*l.* 12*s.* and the pleas and perquisites of the court of the borough were worth 100*s.* beside what arose from the other parts of the manor. These particulars, compared with the foregoing, shew that the town was then greatly improved, and it became still more and more populous 'till the time of the reformation.

In the reign of queen Elizabeth, when the nation was arming against the expected Spanish invasion, the city of Gloucester was appointed to provide one hundred men, and the borough of Tewkesbury forty-six men for its quota. And in the year 1647, the county of Gloucester was rated at 1212*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* per month for the maintenance of forces within the kingdom, and for carrying on the war in Ireland; at which time this borough was assessed 10*l.* 10*s.*

But to come nearer to our own times: When the new militia law was carried into execution in this county, in the years 1758, 1759, and 1760, one man out of every twenty-nine upon the lists was taken by ballot, throughout the county, and there were fourteen men raised in Tewkesbury, eighteen in Cirencester, and twenty-six in the city of Gloucester; which shews the comparative state of population in those places, as far as the lists can be relied on.

The town is an ancient borough, but the sheriff of Gloucestershire did not return it as such 9 E. 1. and therefore it could not then be so reputed. It was first incorporated by charter 14 Eliz. by the name of the bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Tewkesbury; and king James the First granted them another charter much like the former, in the 3d year of his reign. The

This last was surrendered, by writing under the common seal of the corporation, to king James the Second; and that king reincorporated them in the second year of his reign, by the name of the mayor, aldermen, and common council, &c. However there was no mayor chosen by virtue of that new charter, and the government of the town, as a corporation, totally ceased 'till the thirteenth year of king William the Third, when that king granted the town their present charter, a translation of which will be found in the Appendix, N^o. xxvi.

The corporation consists of twenty-four burgessees, out of whom two bailiffs are annually elected, who, with two aldermen, are the magistrates for the borough and corporation; and the justices of the peace for the county, by express exemption in the charter, have no authority to act within the borough.

This town first elected two burgessees to parliament in the year 1609, as I find it in the black book belonging to the corporation; but Willis's list, in his Notitia Parliamentaria, commences in the year 1614.

The right of election is in the freeholders and freemen of the corporation, who together amount to above 500.

The town has had the honour of giving title to several noble persons. There was a William earl of Tewkesbury in the reign of king Henry the First. Sir Henry Capel, brother to the earl of Essex, was created baron of Tewkesbury, by king William the Third. And the electoral prince of Hanover, afterwards king George the First, in the year 1706, was created baron of Tewkesbury in the county of Gloucester, viscount Northallerton in the county of York, earl of Milford-Haven in the county of Pembroke, marquis and duke of Cambridge, &c.

But the place is most distinguished in history for its celebrated abbey, and for the battle fought near it, between the houses of York and Lancaster, wherein the latter were so totally defeated, that they were never afterwards able to make head against king Edward the Fourth. The chief of those that were killed in the field, and of those who were made prisoners, and afterwards beheaded, or otherwise slain, were buried in the abbey church, wherefore Leland writes thus of the town:

Ampla foro, et partis spoliis præclara Theoci
Curia, Sabrina qua se committit Avona
Fulget; nobilium sacrisq; recondit in antris
Multorum cineres, quondam inclyta corpora bello.

Which is thus translated by the editor of Camden:

Where Avon's friendly streams with Severn join,
Great Tewkesbury's walls, renown'd for trophies, shine;
And keep the sad remains with pious care,
Of noble souls, the honour of the war.

Of that decisive battle our historians give the following particulars: Margaret, queen to king Henry the Sixth, landed on Easter-day, 1471, at Neymouth in Dorsetshire, accompanied by her son, Edward prince of Wales, and Edmund Beaufort, duke of Somerset, with a small body of French forces; and soon taking the field, marched through Devonshire, and Somersetshire, to the city of Bristol. Her followers being increased to a very considerable army, she advanced to Gloucester, whence she proposed marching towards Wales to join the earl of Pembroke, but having been refused admittance into that city, she proceeded to Tewkesbury with the same design; but her scheme was defeated by the vigilance of king Edward, who proscribed her and all her adherents by proclamation, and followed with his army so close at her heels, that she could not pass the Severn without exposing her rear to certain destruction. It was therefore resolved, in a council of war, that the army should be intrenched in the park adjoining to the town, and remain in that situation 'till the arrival of the earl of Pembroke, who had already sent her some supplies, and was himself on his march to join her with a considerable body of forces raised in Wales. This plan was immediately put in execution, and Edward coming up, resolved to attack them in their intrenchments, before they should be more strongly fortified or reinforced. He drew up his army in two lines, and gave the command of the first to his younger brother Richard duke of Gloucester, and commanded the second line himself, assisted by his brother George duke of Clarence.

The duke of Somerset disposed the queen's army in three lines within the intrenchments, and he himself commanded the van, that he might sustain the first shock of the enemy. The second line was commanded by the lord Wenlock, under the prince of Wales, who was considered as general in chief; and the rear was conducted by John Courtney, earl of Devonshire.

King Edward observing that the duke of Somerset had left some openings in the front, thro' which he might sally; and being well acquainted with the impetuous disposition of that nobleman, directed his brother Gloucester, who began the attack, to decoy Somerset from his intrenchments, by giving ground, and retreating with precipitation, until he should see Somerset and his line in the open plain, and then to turn and renew the charge, in which case he should be properly sustained.

Gloucester having received his instructions, attacked the intrenchments with great vigour, and meeting with a very warm reception, retired with such hurry and seeming confusion, that Somerset believing they fled, sallied out of his intrenchments to pursue them, and at the same time sent orders to lord Wenlock to follow and support him in case of emergency. Gloucester having by this stratagem drawn his antagonist into the open plain, immediately halted his troops, who instantly formed, and he led them back to the charge, which was made with so much fury, that the Lancastrians, who had begun the pursuit in in disorder, gave way, and retreated with the greatest precipitation into their intrenchments; upon which the duke of Somerset, perceiving that lord Wenlock had not made any advance from his station to support the first line, was so incensed, that he rode up to him, and cleft his skull with a battle ax; and the duke of Gloucester entering the intrenchments with the fugitives, made a terrible carnage. The young prince of Wales, being then but eighteen years of age, seeing all his army in confusion, did not know on which side to turn; and the duke of Somerset was so choaked with indignation, that he could hardly speak, much less take the necessary steps for reducing his troops to order. King Edward following his brother with the second line, completed the overthrow of the queen's army, which was routed with great slaughter, the second and third lines having run away without striking a blow.

The earl of Devonshire, sir John Beaufort, brother to the duke of Somerset, sir John Delves, and other great men, were found among the dead, which amounted to 3000 men. The duke of Somerset, John Langstrother, great prior of St. John, sir Humphry Handley, sir Edmund Havarde, sir William Wickingham, sir John Leukenor, sir William Vaule, sir Gervase Clifton, sir William Carr, sir Henry Rofs, sir Thomas Tresham, sir William Lirmouthe, sir John Urman, sir Thomas Seinar, sir William Rowys, sir William Newborow, knights; John, son of sir John Delves, Henry Wateley, esq; Henry Barow, esq; and — Fielding, esq; retired to the abbey church, thinking they should be safe in that sanctuary, from which, however, they were forcibly dragged and executed. The prince of Wales falling into the hands of his enemies, was brought into the presence of king Edward, who with an air of insolence demanded how he durst presume to enter his kingdom in arms? To this question the prince replied with great fortitude and dignity, That he came to recover his father's crown and his own inheritance, which Edward had unjustly usurped. He had no sooner pronounced these words, than king Edward struck him on the face with his gauntlet and retired, and immediately the dukes of Clarence and Gloucester, the lord Hastings and sir Thomas Grey fell upon him like so many wild beasts, and stabbed him in several places with their daggers. His mother, queen Margaret, being found on the field of battle in a waggon, where she lay almost lifeless, was sent prisoner to the tower of London, and kept there about four years, 'till the king of France redeemed her for 50,000 crowns.

The prince of Wales is supposed to have been murdered in the house belonging to, and in the possession of Mr. Webb, an ironmonger; and the open plain where the battle was fought, is now called Glaston meadow.

This town had some share also in the military transactions in the reign of king Charles the First, of which Corbet gives the following account: ' Sir William Vavasour, sir Walter Pyc, and ' colonel Wroughton possessed themselves of the ' town of Tewkesbury on behalf of the king, and ' fortified it after the siege of Gloucester. But ' before that siege, the king's forces under sir ' Matthew Carew were possessed of Tewkesbury, ' which they quitted on the first news of the ' Welch army being made prisoners near Glou- ' cester, and in less than twelve hours the town ' of Tewkesbury was repossessed by the parlia- ' ment's forces, who immediately received an ' alarm, that the former forces were returned with ' a greater power: 'Twas a gallant brigade of ' horse, commanded by lord Grandison, which ' came from Cheltenham. Captain Fiennes, with ' his party, had certainly been surprized by them, ' but for a ridiculous accident. Lord Grandison ' meeting with a man going from the town about ' a mile off, questioned him whether any forces ' were there, of what strength, and by whom ' commanded. The man supposing them part ' of the parliament's forces, and willing to curry ' favour, talked of vast numbers, great strength, ' and defied the cavaliers with much affected ' indignation. Upon this, they held a council of ' war, and were once about to turn back. This ' delay gave an hour's respite to those within to ' prepare for flight, who had no sooner recovered ' the end of the town, than the horse entered it ' at the other, amazed to see themselves so miser- ' ably deluded.

' This town was afterwards fortified by the ' king's party, and became a bad neighbour to ' Gloucester, the parliament's head garrison; ' wherefore governor Massie, on the 5th of June, ' in the year 1644, with one hundred and twenty ' horse, about thirty dragoons, and three hun- ' dred foot, resolved to attempt the taking of it. ' The horse and dragoons, commanded by major ' Hammond, advanced some few hours before ' the foot and atillery, and were to alarm the ' enemy 'till the foot came up. They made ' a halt about a mile from the town, and drew ' out a pretty strong forlorn hope, conceiving ' they might possibly surprize them, if they had ' not as yet taken the alarm. And first, three ' men were sent before to espy if the draw-bridge ' were down, and six more behind went undif- ' covered; next unto these marched the forlorn ' hope, and the main body in the rear. In this ' posture they advanced up to the town, where ' they found the bridge down, the guards slender, ' the enemy without intelligence, and supinely ' negligent. On went the first party, killed the ' centinels, a pikeman, and a musketer without ' match, and made good the bridge. The forlorn ' hope rushed in, and after them a full body of ' horse and dragoons fell upon the guards, came ' up to the main guard before the alarm was ' taken, overturned their ordnance, and charged ' through the streets as far as the bridge, Wor- ' cester.

‘cester-way, where they took major Myn, governor of the town. The enemy threw down their arms, many escaped by flight, and many were taken prisoners. Of the king’s party, colonel Godfrey, the quarter-master-general, and a lieutenant, with a few private soldiers, were slain in the first charge. But the parliament’s forces dismounting, and neglecting to make good the bridge at which they entered, and to disarm the main guard, the latter at length took courage, charged some of them, and beat them out of the town. However, colonel Massie coming up with a few horse in the van of the foot, ordered the dragoons to fire on those that defended the works at the bridge next Gloucester, whilst he drew the foot round the town, it being now dark night; but before he could reach the further end, where he entered about midnight, the garrison were fled towards Worcester. There were found in the town two brass drakes, eighteen barrels of powder, and a few other military stores. The town itself was of great consequence to the parliament, as a frontier town, securing that side of the county, and commanding a great part of Worcestershire.’

In these actions several very extraordinary defects in generalship are observable in both parties, for which the time it relates to was remarkable. Both officers and men were mostly unexperienced countrymen, whom the confusion of action had bereft of memory and understanding; and whilst they were busied in every thing, could hardly effect any thing.

Having done with military affairs, it will not be improper to take notice of some other remarkable incidents that have happened here, as I find them recorded in the Black Book belonging to the corporation.

In 1586, there was a dearth in this country that bordered upon famine, and the justices of the peace joined with the bailiffs of the town to abridge the liberty of buying grain; and malting was intirely prohibited. And again in 1595, grain was so high before the harvest, that proclamations were published to restrain the prices to the rates they were at two months before. In 1597, wheat was at 12s. 6d. the bushel; barley at 8s. malt at 8s. and beans at 8s. which were excessive prices, considering the scarcity of money. During those times, the citizens of Gloucester stretched a chain across the Severn, that no vessel with provisions might pass beyond them; but the town of Tewkesbury petitioning the lords of the privy council, they caused the chain to be taken down. Pestilence commonly succeeds to famine, and accordingly the plague made its appearance the following year, tho’ it carried off about forty persons only at that time; but four years afterwards it raged very furiously, when no less than 560 persons died of it within the year. And breaking out again in 1603, all those that died of it, says the book, ‘to avoid the perill, were buried in coffins of bourde’; which shews that wood coffins were not then commonly in use.

It stands upon the credit of the same manuscript, that in 1604, there was so great a drought, that the river Avon was dry from Whitsuntide to Bartholomew-tide following; and in Wantner’s papers in the Bodleyan library, is this very extraordinary story: On July 24, 1571, being fair-day, such a quantity of bats came floating down the Avon at this town, that they covered the surface of the water for above a land’s length, in heaps above a foot thick; which so dammed up the mills for three days, that they could not go till the bats were dug out with shovels.

The county assizes were held in this town on the 4th of July, 1580, the plague, I suppose, being then at Gloucester. And the bailiffs, in their account with the chamberlain, charged 11s. for wine, and 13s. 4d. for tent, with which they had treated the court and their friends, and these sums were allowed them; which I mention as an example of the frugality of those times. What would two of his majesty’s justices think of such a treat now-a-days?

The assizes were held here again, 14 C. 1. before sir Humphry Davenport, chief baron of the exchequer, and sir William Jones, knight; when the court made the following order:

Glouc. ff. WHEREAS a certain bridge called the Long Bridge, lying at the north end of the towne of Tewkesbury, and leading towards the cittie of Worcester, conteining above seven hundred yards in length is growne into great decay, and so hath beene for many yeeres last past, by reason whereof divers of his Majesties subjects travelling that way have beene unfortunately drowned: And for that it doth not appeare who in the memory of man have repayred the said bridge, nor who by law ought to do itt: Therefore to the end so necessary a worke should bee effected, IT IS ORDERED by assent, that the county of Gloucester shall forthwith rayse by way of contribution a competent some of money towards the repayre of the said bridge, which being once effected, the corporation of Tewkesbury doth offer to keepe and mainteyne the same: PROVIDED that the contribution of the whole county with the parish of Tewkesbury be no prejudice to the county, nor drawne into example for the future.

Per Curiam.

The town was divided into five wards in the year 1596, over which two high constables presided. They were 1. Bridge-ward. 2. Church-ward. 3. Barton-ward. These three had each a petty constable. 4. St. Mary’s-ward, with two petty constables. 5. The Middle-ward, which the high constables themselves took charge of. There are now only four constables for the borough.

It consists of three principal streets, beside lanes. The High-street is of great length, sufficiently spacious and handsome, and well paved on each side for the convenience of walking. It leads from the town hall northwards towards Worcester. The modern houses are built of brick, and the more antient ones of timber, as there is very little stone for building in this part of the country. Not long since, the roads about the town were so foundrous, that a carriage could not possibly pass; but for the last twenty years, the representatives of the borough have given large sums towards putting them in repair, and the turnpikes now support them.

This town had formerly some share in the clothing business, but that has been long since lost. Its chief trade, at present, is malting, stocking-frame knitting, especially of cotton, and a little nailing. But the making of mustard-balls, as taken notice of in every book that treats of this place, has been so long discontinued, as not to be within the remembrance of any person living.

Here are five yearly fairs, viz. on St. Matthew's day, on the 3d of May, the 11th of June, the 24th of August, and the 29th of September; and two weekly markets, on Wednesday and Saturday, which are plentifully supply'd from the rich country round about; so that provisions are generally cheaper here than in any other part of the county.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday gives the following ample account of this large manor:

' In Teodechesberie were fourscore and fifteen hides in the time of king Edward. Of these forty-five were in demean, and free from all royal service and tax, except the service due to the lord of the manor. The manor was in capite. There were in demean twelve plow-tillages, and fifty between the servi and ancilla, and sixteen bordars in waiting about the hall, and two mills of 20 sol. and one fishery, and a salt-pit at Wich belonging to the manor.

' There were three hides at Sudwich, six in Trotintune, six in Fitentone, eight in Pamintonie, three and a half in Natone, three in Waltone, and six in Estone. There were twenty-one villeins, and nine radchenisters, having twenty-six plow-tillages, and five coliberti, and one bordar, with five plow-tillages. These radchenisters plowed and harrowed for the sustenance of the lord's court.

' There were eight burgeses in Glouuecestre, paying 5 sol. and 4 den. and doing service at the court.

' In all Teodechesberie there are 120 acres of meadow, and a wood one mile and a half long, and as much broad.

' There are now thirteen burgeses at Teodekesberie, paying 20 sol. a year; a market established ' by the queen, pays 11 sol. and 8 den. And there is one plow-tillage more, and twenty-two between the servi and ancilla; a fishery, and a salt-pit at Wich.

' Three radchenisters belonged [to the estate] there in the time of king Edward. One of them held six hides in Estone, which Girard now holds. Another held three hides in Waltone, which Radulf now holds. The third held two hides in Fitentone, which Bernard holds. In these eleven hides, ten plow-tillages are in demean, and there are four villeins, and one bordar, and nine servi, with one plow-tillage. There are eighteen acres of meadow. The whole was worth 10 lib. in the time of king Edward, and it is worth as much now.

' There was a country-seat, and five hides at Oxendone, belonging to Teodekesberie, in the time of king Edward. There are five plow-tillages in demean, and five villeins, and two radchenisters, having seven plow-tillages, and twelve between the servi and ancilla. There are twenty-four acres of meadow. At Wincombe are three burgeses paying 40 den. All this manor is worth and was worth 8 lib.

' There are four hides in Hanlege, belonging to the same manor of Teodekesberie, without demean, but there were two plow-tillages in demean in the time of king Edward, and forty among the villeins and bordars, and eight among the servi and ancilla, and a mill of 16 d. a wood in which there is an inclosure. This was earl William's estate, but it now belongs to the king's farm in Hereford. It was worth 15 lib. in the time of king Edward, now only 10 lib.

' Nine hides in Fortemeltone belonged to this manor. There are two plow-tillages in demean, and twenty among the villeins and bordars, and six among the servi and ancilla; and a wood. It was worth 10 lib. in the time of king Edward, and is now worth 8 lib. Earl William held these two estates, and paid tax on account of Teodekesberie.

' Ten hides in Senendone belong to the same manor. There are four plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and four bordars, and five radchenisters, with eight plow-tillages. There are twelve servi, and a mill of 3 sol. This estate pays tax for seven hides. It was worth 20 lib. in the time of king Edward, now only 8 lib. It is now in the king's hands, and Robert de Olgi farms it.

' Seven hides in Clifort belong to the same manor. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and fourteen villeins, with five plow-tillages, and a mill of 12 sol. and two acres of meadow. There were thirteen among the servi and ancilla; and a church, and a priest with one plow-tillage. It was worth 8 lib. now only 6 lib. The queen gave this estate to Roger de Busli, and it paid tax for four hides in Teodekesberie.

' The fifty hides above-mentioned, made up the fourscore and fifteen hides which belonged to Tedechesberie, quit and free from all tax and royal service.

' This manor of Tedekesberie, when intire in the time of king Edward, was worth 100 lib. whereas Radulf received 12 lib. because it was spoiled and disordered. Radulf is now rated 40 l. nevertheless he pays 50 lib.

' Brictric the son of Algar held this manor in the time of king Edward, and at that time had the underwritten estates of other thanes under his jurisdiction.

' One thane held a manor of four hides in Effetone. Girard holds it now, and has there one plow-tillage, and two villeins, with one plow-tillage. It is worth and was worth 40 sol.

' Let held a manor of eight hides in Chenemertone. Girard holds it now, and has there three plow-tillages, and fourteen villeins, with four plow-tillages. There are eight servi, and three mills of 15 sol. It was worth 8 lib. now only 6 lib.

' Three hides in Botintone belong to this manor. The same Girard holds them, and has there two plow-tillages, and four villeins, with three plow-tillages. And there are three servi, and a mill of 8 sol. and eight acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 40 sol.

' A thane held three hides in Wenecote. The queen gave this estate to Rainald the chaplain. There are three villeins, with half a plow-tillage. It was worth 40 sol.

' Dunning held six hides and a half in Aldritone, and four hides and a half in Driededone. And a thane held one hide in Hundeuuic.

' Hunfrid holds these estates of the king, and has there four plow-tillages in demean, and five villeins, and eight bordars, with three plow-tillages, and one radchenister, with one plow-tillage, and one burges in Wicecombe, and it is computed that there are twelve acres of meadow. The whole was worth 11 lib. in the time of king Edward, now only 6 lib.

' Four villeins held two hides, and a thane held half a hide in Tuninge. There are four plow-tillages, and three acres of meadow. The queen gave this estate to John the chamberlain. It is worth and was worth 35 sol.

' Hermer and Aluain held three hides, less one yard-land, in Stoches. Bernard holds them now of the king, and has there one plow-tillage in demean, and four acres of meadow. It was worth 60 sol. now only 40 sol.

' They who held these estates in the time of king Edward, were, together with their lands, under the jurisdiction of Brictric.' Dom. p. 68.

This Brictric was a principal man in his country, and had the honour of Gloucester, which was a noble seignury, and many other great estates, by inheritance from his grandfather, Hailward Snow. Having incurred the displeasure of Maud, queen to William the Conqueror, and daughter to Baldwin earl of Flanders, by refusing to marry her, when he was ambaffador at her father's court, she revenged the insult by procuring his imprisonment, and the confiscation of all his possessions.

The large manors of Tewkesbury and Thornbury, and the honour of Gloucester, were granted to queen Maud, and after her death, continued to be the demans of the crown, till king William the Second granted them to Robert Fitz-Haiman, or Hayman, lord of Corboil and Thorigny in Normandy, kinsman and assistant to the Conqueror. He married Sybelle, daughter of Roger Montgomery, and sifter of Robert de Belaime, earl of Shrewsbury, and by her had four daughters, Mabelle, Cicily, Hawise, and Amice.

Mabel was married to Robert Melhent, or Fitz-Roy, sometimes called Robert Rufus, consul and earl of Gloucester. He was natural son of king Henry the First, and had with her not only the manor of Tewkesbury, and all her other paternal estates, but also all the land of Hamo Dapifer her uncle. He died in the year 1147, and left issue by his said wife, four sons, William, his successor; Roger, bishop of Worcester; Haman, and Philip; and one daughter, named Maud.

William earl of Gloucester, son of Robert, succeeded to the manor of Tewkesbury. He married Hawise, daughter of Robert earl of Leicester, by whom he had a son Robert, who died before him; and three daughters, Mabel, Amice, and Isabel, or rather Avifa.

Isabel, or Avifa, the youngest daughter of William earl of Gloucester, was married to John, commonly called Sans-Terre, or Lack-land, fourth son to king Henry the Second, who had with her this manor, and the whole honour of Gloucester. He was afterwards king of England, and having no child by his wife, was divorced from her in the first year of his reign. It is said the king sold her afterwards, with all her lands and fees, except the castle of Bristol, and the chaces belonging to it, to Geofry de Mandeville, earl of Essex, for 20,000 marks; after whose death, she was married to Hugh de Burgh, justice of England; but she had no issue by either of her husbands, whereby Almeric, son to the earl of Eureux in Normandy, by Maud, another daughter of William earl of Gloucester, succeeded to this manor, and the earldom of Gloucester. He married the daughter of Hugh de Gournai, but dying without issue, the manor of Tewkesbury devolved on Amice, the second and only surviving daughter of William earl of Gloucester.

Richard de Clare, earl of Hertford, had married the said Amice, in whose right he became earl of Gloucester, and lord of the manor of Tewkesbury. He was descended from Gislebert, surnamed Crispin, earl of Brien in Normandy, son of Jeffery, who was natural son to Richard the First, duke of Normandy. Richard, the eldest son of Gislebert earl of Brien, distinguished himself in favour of the Conqueror in the great battle of Hastings, and was rewarded with great estates in England, and seized of thirty-eight manors in Surrey, thirty-five in Essex, three in Cambridgeshire, two in Kent, one in Middlesex, one in Wiltshire, one in Devonshire, and ninety-five in Suffolk, of which Clare was the principal, and therefore he was sometimes stiled Richard de Clare; but having purchased the castle of Tunbridge of the archbishop of Canterbury, he was more generally stiled Richard de Tonebrugge. He married Rohese, daughter of Walter Giffard, earl of Buckingham, and was slain by the Welch near Abergavenny, about the year 1100. Gilbert, son and heir of Richard, married Adeliza, daughter of the earl of Clermont, by whom he had four sons. Richard de Tonebrugge, or de Clare, was his son and heir, and had the title of earl of Hertford. Gilbert, his brother, surnamed Strongbow, from his strength in drawing a strong bow, obtained great victories and large territories in Wales. His son Richard Strongbow, obtained great victories in Ireland, and was earl of Pembroke and Strigule, now Chepstow.

But to return to the Clares: Gilbert de Clare was the eldest son and heir of Richard, and succeeded him in the earldom of Hertford, and was also stiled earl of Clare. He died without issue in 1151, and was succeeded by Roger his brother, who married Maud, the daughter of James de St. Hillary, and died in 1173.

Richard de Clare, earl of Hertford, was son of Roger. He it was that married Amice, the last surviving daughter of the earl of Gloucester, as before represented, and dying in 1206, was succeeded by his son and heir

Gilbert de Clare, who was earl of Gloucester and Hertford, and lord of the manor of Tewkesbury. He married Isabel, one of the daughters, and afterwards coheir to the earl of Pembroke, and dying 14 H. 3. was buried in the choir of Tewkesbury church.

Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, was son and heir of Gilbert. He married Maud, the eldest daughter of John de Lacy, earl of Lincoln, and dying in 1262, was buried in the choir at Tewkesbury.

Gilbert de Clare, surnamed the Red, from his red hair, was son and successor to the above Richard. He married the daughter of Guy earl of Angoulesme, from whom he was divorced; and then married Joan d'Acres, daughter of king Edward the First, and dying in 1295, left issue by her his son and heir,

Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, who being slain at the battle of Bannockburn in Scotland, 7 E. 2. without issue, his three sisters became his heirs. The inquisition after his death, found, among other things, that he died seized of a park here, containing eighty acres, whose underwood and herbage were worth 30s. a year; of four hundred and sixty acres of arable land, at 4d. the acre; of eighty-five acres and a half of meadow, at 2s. and of fifty acres of pasture, at 1s. the acre; of the rent of free tenants, 12l. 12s. 3d. of a mill worth 20s. of De la Home farm, in manu customaria, which paid 11s. 8d. of a messuage which the chaplain of Ayshchurch held, worth 5s. of a messuage which Walter — held, worth 4s. and of the More farm, worth 16s. a year: That there were one hundred and fourteen burgages and a half, and a quarter part of a burgage, which paid 6l. 7s. 10d. and that the burgesses rented lands within the hundred of the said town, containing seventy acres and a half, and a third part of an acre, at 35s. 5d. and paid 20s. per ann. for a custom called Fulstall, and 12s. per ann. for stallage. That there were forty-seven customary lands and a half, every one of which was a virgate, and held in villeinage. That the total value of the whole manor, with the burg, was 131l. 5s. 6d. that there were two views of frankpledge, at Michaelmas and Easter, and the certain fines were 7l. 12s. The pleas and perquisites of the court were worth 100s. the toll of the burg 100s. and the pleas and perquisites of the said burg, by itself, 100s. per ann. Esch.

Hugh le Despencer the younger married Elianor, the eldest sister of the last mentioned Gilbert, 7 E. 2. and in right of his wife, had livery of the manor of Tewkesbury. But he dying an untimely death, as already related, left issue four sons, Hugh, Edward, Gilbert, and Philip; and one daughter, the wife of Richard Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel. Eleanor wife of the said Hugh le Despencer survived him, and was afterwards married to William la Zouch of Mortimer, and died seized of Tewkesbury, Fairford, Sodbury, and Archer Stoke, June 30, 1337.

The reader may see a larger detail of the foregoing lords of this manor p. 93, under the account of the earls of Gloucester.

Hugh le Despencer, son of the last mentioned Hugh, by Elianor his wife, married Elizabeth, widow of Giles de Badlesmere, and daughter of William de Montacute, earl of Salisbury. He was summoned as a peer to parliament, but died without issue, seized of Tewkesbury, Fairford, &c. Elizabeth his wife survived him, and was endowed with the manor of Tewkesbury, and was afterwards married to Guy de Brien, and died Feb. 8, 1349, 23 E. 3. Collins's Peerage.

Edward le Despencer was brother of the last Hugh, and second son of Hugh le Despencer the younger, by Elianor his wife. He died in 1342, leaving by Anne his wife, daughter of Henry lord Ferrers of Groby, three sons, Edward, heir to his uncle; Thomas le Despencer; and Henry, the warlike bishop of Norwich.

Sir Edward, the eldest son, was made knight of the garter, and summoned to parliament among the barons 31 E. 3. He wedded Elizabeth, daughter and heir of sir Bartholomew de Berghurst, and dying at Caerdiff Nov. 11, 1375, was buried on the south side of Tewkesbury church, before before the door of the vestry, leaving two sons, Thomas, his heir; and Hugh le Despencer; and five daughters. His lady built the chapel of the Holy Trinity, in memory of him, and died in July 1409, endowed with a very great estate in Wales, and with the manors of Tewkesbury and Fairford.

Thomas le Despencer, son of Edward, was created earl of Gloucester. He married Constance, daughter of Edmund de Langley, duke of York, fifth son of king Edward the Third, and conspiring with the earls of Kent, Salisbury, and Huntingdon, to dethrone king Henry the Fourth, was taken and beheaded at Bristol, as more particularly related in the account of Cirencester. He had by his said lady, one son Richard, who being under age at his father's death, was granted in ward to Edward duke of York, who married him to Elizabeth, daughter of Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmoreland; but he died before he was fourteen years old, without issue. Earl Thomas had also two daughters; Elizabeth, who died an infant; and Isabel, born after her father's death, who was married to Richard Beauchamp, lord Bergavenny, and earl of Worcester; who, in right of his wife, had livery of the manor of Tewkesbury 2 H. 5. but dying soon after, Isabel his widow was married, by dispensation from the pope, to Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick.

This Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, had a large paternal estate, besides great possessions which came by his mother, who was sister and coheirs of Thomas earl of Arundel; and now marrying Isabel, who was the sole heiress of the family of the Despcncers, he was seized of a vast estate. This earl was eminent not only for his wealth, but acknowledged by the emperor of Germany, and other foreign princes, to exceed all his cotemporaries in wisdom, valour, and courtesy. He was governor of Calais, and gained great honour to the English nation by his generous and splendid way of living. His first wife was Elizabeth, heiress to Thomas lord Berkeley, by whom he had three daughters, all married into noble families. He died 17 H. 6. and was buried at the collegiate church at Warwick, leaving issue by his second wife Isabel, one son Henry, and one daughter Anne.

Which Henry de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was fourteen years old at his father's death, and was crowned king of the isle of Wight by the king's own hand, and at the age of nineteen, was created duke of Warwick. He married Cecily, daughter of Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury, and had by her an only child Anne, who died an infant; and the duke himself was taken away by death, in the twenty-second year of his age, 23 H. 6. leaving Anne, his sister, sole heiress to all his great inheritance.

Which Anne was married to Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury, descended from Gilbert de Nevil, who came into England with king William, commonly called the Conqueror, and was progenitor to the earls of Westmoreland. But Richard Nevil, father of this Richard, marrying Alice, daughter and heir of Thomas de Montacute, earl of Salisbury, Richard the son was created earl of Salisbury, and was afterwards, in right of his wife, earl of Warwick. He is celebrated in the English annals for his power and martial achievements, and commonly called the Stout Earl of Warwick, and the King Maker; for king Henry the Sixth and king Edward the Fourth held the crown by turns, as this earl favoured the side; but he was at last killed at the battle of Barnet, April 14, 1471, wherein, and in the battle fought a few days after at this place, king Edward secured the crown to himself. This great earl was buried at the monastery of Bisham in Berkshire, leaving issue by his countess Anne, the great heiress, two daughters, Isabel, (by some called Alice) and Anne.

Isabel, the eldest daughter, was married to George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth, who was afterwards attainted by act of parliament, and drowned in a butt of Malmesey wine, (his brother, Richard duke of Gloucester, assisting at the execution) and was buried at Tewkesbury. His children were Edward Plantagenet, earl of Warwick, and Margaret countess of Salisbury. Edward was beheaded, unmarried, 15 H. 7. in the 24th year of his age, for a pretended conspiracy with Perkin Warbeck; for the king viewed him with a jealous eye, as being the only heir male of the house of York. Margaret his sister was wedded to sir Richard Pole, and was beheaded 33 H. 8. upon an act of attainder passed against her for corresponding with her son cardinal Reginald Pole.

Anne, the younger daughter of Richard earl of Salisbury and Warwick, was married, first, to king Henry the Sixth's only son, Edward prince of Wales, who being made prisoner at the battle of Tewkesbury, May 4, 1471, was basely assassinated by Richard duke of Gloucester. She was afterwards married to the murderer, and by him had Edward prince of Wales, who died in 1484, in the eleventh year of his age, not long before his mother; who is said to have been poisoned by Richard to facilitate his intended marriage with his niece the princess Elizabeth, afterwards queen to king Henry the Seventh. The acts of cruelty and inhumanity which are related of this duke are not to be paralleled in the English annals. He procured the murder of his two nephews, the sons of king Edward the Fourth, to make way for himself to the crown; and having thus gloriously attained it, fell himself a victim to justice in a decisive battle at Bosworth-field in Leicestershire, about two years afterwards, when king Henry the Seventh was victorious, and obtained the crown.

King Edward the Fourth had procured an act of parliament to divest Anne, the great heiress, of her large inheritance, after the death of her husband husband the earl of Warwick, and had settled it on her daughters and their issue; but king Henry the Seventh obtaining the crown, alledged the injustice of it, and procured another act, in the beginning of his reign, to reinstate the mother. The king pretended justice, but was actuated by interest, and prevailed with the countess dowager to levy a fine of her estate, and settle it on himself, which she did 3 H. 7. and died two years afterwards; whereby that large estate came to the crown, and amongst many other manors, the following were in Gloucestershire: Tewkesbury, Stoke-Archer, Whittington, Fairford, Sodbury, Tredington, Pamington, Fidington, Northway, the Mythe, King's Barton near Bristol, Barton hundred, Kemmerton, Chedworth, and Lidney.

The manor of Tewkesbury was granted from the crown to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6. and upon his attainder reverted back again; and was again granted, with the borough, and with many free tenements, Severnham, and other lands, to the corporation of Tewkesbury 7 Jac. who are the present lords of the manor.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. The Mythe, and part of Mythe-Hook, situated a little northward of the town. Mr. Richard Jackson, and Mr. William Buckle, have both very good houses in this hamlet, and are proprietors of the greatest part of the lands within it. Their houses stand on high ground, on the west side of the Avon, and command a fine prospect over the rivers, and the neighbouring vale.

Mythe-wood, now intirely affarted, formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, to which it was given by Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, in the year 1230; and the abbey obtained a licence to inclose the wood 47 E. 3. The manor of Mythe belonged successively to the lords of the manor of Tewkesbury, and sir Thomas Seymour had a grant of it, wherein it was called Warwick's lands, 1 E. 6. After lord Seymour's attainder, it reverted to the crown, and was granted, together with Mythe-Hook, and a meadow called King's Mead, a fishery in the Severn, and another in the Avon, to Daniel Pert, and Alexander Pert, in trust, 7 E. 6. And it is now divided amongst several freeholders.

2. Southwick. This hamlet is briefly mentioned in the large extract from Domesday, standing at the beginning of the account of the manor of Tewkesbury.

Robert le Pearl was seized of lands in Supishull and Southwick 37 E. 3. Sir John Tracy was also seized of the manor of Southwick 37 E. 3. It afterwards belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and together with lands called Gosebuts, was granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget, 36 H. 8. A close in Southwick, called Panter's, was granted to Walter Compton; and lands in Southwick, in the tenure of John Jones, were granted to John Pope, 36 H. 8.

Lands called Culverhouse, in Southwick, were granted to Edward Cooper and Valentine Fairweather, 7 E. 6. Lands called Dearhurst Place, in Southwick, were granted to William Read, and John Read, 7 E. 6. Other lands called Walton's Field, in Southwick, were granted to William Fitz-Williams, and Arthur Hilton, 7 E. 6.

Of the Abbey of Tewkesbury.

It is not to be expected that in the history of this abbey, which according to all accounts was founded above a thousand years ago, there should be every particular recorded to make it complete. There is indeed a large account of it in the Monasticon, chiefly collected from the Chronicle of Tewkesbury, in the Cotton Library, and from the writings of William of Malmesbury, and of Ordericus Vitalis, whence the following is chiefly extracted.

Odo and Dodo were two noble dukes of Mercia, who flourished in the reigns of Ethelred, Kenred, and Ethelbald, kings of Mercia, and were possessed of large estates in various parts. About the year 715, these noblemen founded a monastery, to the honour of the virgin Mary, upon their own estate near the Severn, where, says the Chronicle, a certain hermit, called Theocus, had made his abode, from whom the place was called Tewxbury: And they granted the manor of Stanway, with its members, and other smaller possessions, for the maintenance of the monks, who were few in number, not exceeding four or five, placed under the government of a prior, to live after the rule of St. Benedict. These noble persons dying, were buried in the church of Pershore, to which they had been great benefactors, as they also had been to several other monasteries, built by themselves or their ancestors.

From this time, for almost a century, we have no certain account who had the patronage of this little monastery, which it is said suffered, with others, by the civil wars that distracted Britain during the heptarchy, and from the incursions of the Danes. The monks were often driven away, the monastery plundered, and twice consumed by fire.

In the year 800, Hugh, a great nobleman of Mercia, was patron of this priory, and Brictric, king of the West Saxons, dying the preceding year, was buried, by his procurement, in the chapel of St. Faith there; and the same Hugh dying in the year 812, was himself buried in this priory.

Here again is a large vacancy in our account, for I find nothing material mentioned of this monastery 'till about the year 930, when there flourished a noble knight called Haylward, or Ailward, surnamed Snew, or Snow, from his fair complexion. He was royally descended from king Edward the Elder, and was patron of this priory. He founded a small monastery on his demean lands at Cranbourn in the county of Dorset, Dorset, and subjected the priory of Tewkesbury to that abbey, where at length he was buried. His wife's name was Algive, by whom he had a son Algar, father of that Brictric so often mentioned in Domesday, as proprietor of many large estates in Gloucestershire; and he was also lord of the vast seignery of Gloucester. This Brictric finished and much enlarged the church of Cranbourn, which was founded by his ancestors.

At the conquest of Britain by William duke of Normandy, Brictric's person was seized and imprisoned, and all his estates confiscated by that monarch, as already more largely related in the descent of the manor of Tewkesbury, and other parts of this work. By which means the patronage of the before-mentioned monasteries was vested in the crown, and so continued during that reign; but in the next, William Rufus gave the honour of Gloucester, and all Brictric's estates, with the patronage of these monasteries, to Robert Fitz-Haimon; and from that time the latter was vested in the great lords of the manor of Tewkesbury. And as they have been already set down in the account of the manor, the reader is referred to that account, as it would be equally tedious and unnecessary to go over them again. I shall therefore take notice, in this place, of such of them only who have been Particular Benefactors to the Abbey.

In the year 1102, the above Robert Fitz-Haimon, or Haimon, at the instance of his wife Sybil, and of Girald the abbat of Cranbourn, rebuilt and enlarged the church of Tewkesbury, with all the offices, and endowed it with many lands, rents, and large possessions. And because it was thought to exceed Cranbourn in fruitfulness of soil, and pleasantness of situation near a navigable river, he removed abbat Girald and his monks from Cranbourn to Tewkesbury, leaving only a prior and two monks at the former, to keep up the memory of the founders of that church, which was now reduced to a priory, and made subject in future to that of Tewkesbury, thus advanced to the high honour of an abbey. At the same time the following charter of ordination was made, and entered in the Register-book of the abbey. Stevens, V. 2. Appendix, 206.

Carta Ordinationis Ecclesie Theokesburiensis, tempore Giraldi Abbatis, & Roberti filii Haimonis.

IN nomine Patris & Filii & Spiritus Sancti, Amen. Ordinata est Ecclesia Sancte Marie Theokesburiensis Cœnobii. It cannot be easily conceived, says William of Malmesbury, how much Robert Fitz-Haimon adorned and beautified this monastery, where the stateliness of the buildings ravished the eyes, and the pious charity of the monks the affections of all persons that came thither.

Robert Fitz-Roy, earl of Gloucester, who married Mabile, the eldest daughter of Robert Fitz-Haimon, built a priory, dedicated to St. James, on his own demesns at Bristol, endowed it with lands, ornaments, and possessions, and made it subject to the abbey of Tewkesbury. He died in 1147, and William, his son, confirmed all the charters, confirmations, liberties and donations which his father and all his ancestors had granted to the abbey. Not long afterwards the abbey was burnt down, a common accident in those days, but it was soon rebuilt, and the abbat entertained king John, and many of his royal retinue; and Matthew Paris mentions that the same king afterwards kept his Christmas there.

In the year 1230, Gilbert de Clare gave the Mythe wood to the abbey; and about a century afterwards Hugh le Despencer, the third of that name, amongst other good gifts, appropriated the church of Lantrissa to the abbat and convent in succession, from which they received fifty marks annually.

Guido de Brien, who lived in the reign of king Edward the Third, also appropriated certain rents in Bristol, and annexed the profits to the office of Sacrist in Tewkesbury, and to the priest who should say the first mass for the said Guido every day at the altar of St. Margaret, in the church there, with these prayers, God of his mercy, &c. for his surviving kindred; and Incline, O Lord, &c. for the dead kindred; the mass of the Trinity on Sunday; the mass of the Holy Ghost on Monday; the mass of St. Thomas on Tuesday; the mass of the the Holy Rest on Wednesday; the mass of the Ascension on Thursday; the mass of the Holy Cross on Friday; the mass of St. Mary on Saturday; and whatever priest should so officiate for a week, should receive 2 d. and whosoever should celebrate mass on his anniversary day, or on the anniversary of his wife Elizabeth, if the abbat, he should receive 5 s. if the prior 3 s. 4 d. who reads the Gospel on those days should have 8 d. who reads the Epistle should have 8 d. who holds the paten 8 d. the præcentor and his two assistants 8 d. a piece; the prior 12 d. and every monk should have 4 d.

Edward le Despencer, great grandson of Hugh earl of Winchester, gave a gold cup to the monastery, and a precious jewel, says the Chronicle, neatly contrived, to hold the sacrament on solemn days. And the lady Elizabeth, his wife, gave a suit of scarlet vestments, embroidered with lions of gold; viz. one coat with three royal robes and white vestments, and fifteen mantles or copes.

Isabel countess of Warwick gave three hundred marks a year to this abbey, that six monks more might be added to pray for her soul, and for the souls of her ancestors and successors. She also gave all the ornaments which she wore when alive, valued at three hundred marks, and procured the church of Tarrande in the diocese of Salisbury, and the church of Penmarthe in the diocese of Landaffe, to be appropriated to the abbey.

Robert de Chandos, in the year 1113, founded the church of Goldclive, for a prior and twelve brethren, to follow the rule of St. Benedict, and made it subject to the abbey of Bec in Normandy; but after his death, the patronage of Goldclive priory was seized by the crown, and held by the kings of England 'till the reign of king Henry the Sixth. This king granted the patronage to Henry duke of Warwick, and the priory itself to the abbat and monks of Tewkesbury, in the year 1442; and king Henry confirmed all former donations to the church of Tewkesbury at the same time. The duke also gave the church of Sherston to this abbey, and all the ornaments which he wore, to make vestments for the monks.

Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury and Warwick, confirmed the appropriation of the church of Sherston, and all former charters which the duke of Warwick had granted, particularly that of fishing in the Severn, the Avon, and in the Taff at Caerdiff.

The royal charters and confirmations to this church are printed in the Appendix to this book, N°. 25. And various other charters of donations, confirmations, compositions, and instruments of less consequence, copied out of the Register-book of the abbey, are published in Mr. Stevens's Supplement to the Monasticon, V. 2. Appendix N°. CLXI. from 1 to 86.

Abbats, from Mr. Willis's Catalogue.

1. Giraldus, formerly a monk of Winchester. He was brought hither from Cranbourn in the year 1104, and made the first abbat by Robert Fitz-Haimon the founder. Not caring to gratify the covetous disposition of king Henry the First, he was forced to leave his abbey, and return to Winchester, as appears by the annals of that monastery, published in the Anglia Sacra; whereupon, the year following

2. Robert was made abbat. He died in 1124, and was succeeded by

3. Benedict, who dying anno 1137, was also succeeded the same year by

4. Roger, sometimes called Robert, who dying in 1161,

5. Fromond was made abbat, in whose time the church of Tewkesbury was burnt anno 1178; and he died the same year, whereupon there seems to be a vacancy, for

6. Robert, who was the next abbat after him, did not receive the benediction 'till September 29, 1182. After him

7. Alan, prior of Canterbury, was made abbat, and received the benediction 17 Cal. Julij, 1187. He was a man of great learning, and on his death, which happened in the year 1202,

8. Walter became abbat. He dying in 1213, was succeeded by

9. Hugh, who had been prior of this place. He received the benediction from Giles, bishop of Hereford, by the permission of the bishop of Worcester, the year after which he died, and was succeeded by

10. Bernard, one of the monks of this place; but his election not being approved of,

11. Peter, a monk of Worcester, was appointed abbat, and received the benediction April 3, 1216, from the bishop of Worcester. He died in 1232, and was succeeded by

12. Robert, prior of this place, whose surname, as I take it, was Fortington. He died in 1253, and had for his successor

13. Thomas de Stokes, who died in 1275, and was succeeded by

14. Richard de Norton, confirmed abbat in 1276. He died in 1282, and was succeeded the same year by

15. Thomas Kemley; after whose decease, in the year 1328,

16. John Cotes was made abbat, who dying in 1347,

17. Tho: de Legh was elected abbat Aug. 20, 1347. He died Oct. 17, 1361, and was succeeded the same year by

18. Thomas Chesterton, elected Nov. 24, 1361, who presided thirty-seven years, and dying in 1398, was succeeded by

19. Thomas Parker, alias Pakare, who was a great benefactor to this monastery; and in the year 1397, caused a very handsome chapel of carved stone work to be erected over the grave of Robert Fitz-Haimon, who had been the principal benefactor to the abbey, and was considered as its founder; for whom, and for his wife, this abbat also appointed a mass for the dead to be daily celebrated in perpetual memory of them. Abbat Parker died in 1421, and was succeeded by

20. William Bristow, of whom I know nothing further than that he was in great favour with his patrons, and dying about the year 1442, was succeeded by

21. John Abingdon, who in the year 1443, stood godfather to Anne, daughter of Henry duke of Warwick, but Mr. Willis, by mistake, says it was the daughter of Richard Nevill, earl of Salisbury. When this abbat died I cannot find, neither the institution or death of

22. John de Salis, the next abbat, who occurs in 1468, and was succeeded by

23. John Strensham, in whose time, or his successor's, as I judge, this was made a parliamentary abbey. He died in 1481, and was succeeded by

24. Richard Cheltenham, elected the same year. He re-edified and augmented Stanway manor-place in the time of king Henry the Seventh, and died 1 H. 8.

25. Henry Beoly succeeded in the year 1509. He occurs in 1519, and 1529. It does not appear when he died, but his successor was

26. John Walker, who deceasing in 1531, 23 H. 8. was buried in this abbey church under a marble stone, whereon was his coat of arms affixed. On his death

27. John Wich, alias Wakeman, (whom A. Wood calls Robert) succeeded; who continuing 'till the Dissolution, on Jan. 9, 1539, then surrendered up his monastery, with thirty-five of his monks, and obtained a pension of 266 l. 13 s. 4 d. per ann. which he gave up on being consecrated, in September 1541, to the see of Gloucester; and there is some further account of him in the catalogue of the bishops of that see, p. 155.

This abbey was the last of the religious foundations in Gloucestershire that surrendered to the king. The introduction to the surrender was the same as most of the rest, and in this form:

' To all Christian people to whom these presents shall ' come, We the abbat, &c. and brothers of the said
' monastery, send greeting. Know ye that we, upon ' full consideration, certain knowledge, and mere ' motion, and for divers causes just and reasonable,
' moving

'moving our souls and consciences, have freely and voluntarily given and granted to our lord the king, &c. &c.

About half the number of the monks were living and unpreferred in the year 1553, and received the pensions set down against their names, viz. Robert Cirecester 13*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* Phill. Cardiff 8*l.* Tho: Newport 7*l.* John Welneforde 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Richard Winbole 6*l.* Tho. In bishop Burnet's History of the Reformation, Vol. 1, p. 151, in the Appendix, is the following inventory of the goods and revenues of this monastery, together with an estimate of the lands and buildings belonging to it, which is here inserted as a specimen of the proceedings in suppressing monasteries. Dr. Burnet took it from a book in the augmentation office, which begins thus:

'The Certificate of Robert Southwell, Esq; &c. Will. Petre, Edward Kairne, and John London, Doctors of Law; John Aprice, John Kingsman, Richard Paulet, and Will. Bernars, Esqs; Commissioners assigned by the King's Majesty, to take the Surrenders of divers Monasteries, by force of his Grace's Commission to them, six, five, four, or three of them, in that behalf directed, bearing Date at his Highness's Palace of Westminster, the 7th Day of November, in the 31st Year of the Reign of our most dread Sovereign Lord Henry the VIIIth, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in Earth immediately under Christ supreme Head of the Church of England; of all and singular their Proceedings, as well in and of these Monasteries by his Majesty appointed to be altered, as of others to be dissolved, according to the Tenours, Purport and Effect of his Grace's said Commission; with Instructions to them likewise delivered, as hereafter ensueth.

It appears by an antient deed transcribed into an old council-book, that before, and at the time of the dissolution, the body of the abbey church was used as the parish church, and that the parish purchased of the king the chancel, steeple, and bells, with the clock and chimes, for 483*l.*

The cloisters, chapter-house, &c. of this monastery, are reported to have been burnt down at the dissolution by the king's visitors, on account, as 'tis said, of the monks resisting them at their first coming.

The arms of the abbey were, Gules, a cross Or.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, worth about 130*l.* a year. The patronage is in the crown, and the reverend Mr. James Tattersall is the present incumbent. The curate has no house nor glebe. The impropriation is divided, but the greater part belongs to lord Craven.

In the year 1609, king James the First, by letters patent, charged the rectory of Tewkesbury with the payment of 10*l.* yearly to the vicar. And in 1616, granted 5*l.* 15*s.* 8*d.* yearly to be paid by his auditor to the assistant, or curate of the church.

The donations for the augmentation of the curacy are particularly set down with other public benefactions.

There is a plate of this church in the Monasticon, and in Stevens's Supplement to it is another plate of the ichnography of it. It is a magnificent building, in the form of a cross, vaulted at top with stone work, and supported by two rows of large round pillars, seven in each row. It has an aisle on each side, and the whole is covered with lead, but not kept in very good repair. The chancel is divided from the choir by an organ, erected at the expence of the parishoners in the year 1736. The Lady-chapel, long since destroy'd, and the scite of it turned into a garden ground, stood at the east end, and is said to have been a 100 feet long. The present building from east to west is 300 feet; the length of the great cross aisle 120 feet; the breadth of the body and side aisles 70 feet; and of the west front 100 feet. The tower, in which are eight musical bells and a set of chimes, stands in the middle, upon four arches. It is very large, 132 feet high, and had formerly a lofty wooden spire on the top of it, which fell down in the time of divine service on Easter-day, 1559.

The choir and chancel are likewise supported by six pillars, and enlightened by seven large windows, placed at a great height, and ornamented with painted glafs. The two first windows, at the entrance, viz. one on each hand, are divided into four compartments each, in which are painted the figures in armour of eight earls of Gloucester, distinguished by their arms. In the next window on the right, is the prophet Daniel; and on the left, Jeremiah; in the middle window king Solomon; next to him on the right, the prophet Joel; on the left a scutcheon parted per pale, 1st, Argent, a lion rampant sable. 2d, Quarterly argent and gules, in the 2d and 3d a fret Or, over all on a bend sable three escallops of the first, for le Despencer.

There are besides in these windows, 1. The arms of the Clares, Or, three chevrons gules. 2. Those of the abbey, Gules, a cross Or. 3. Argent, five bars azure. 4. Barry undy Argent and Gules, a baton in bend azure, for Damory. 5. A lion sable crown'd Or. 6. Azure, a lion rampant gardant Or, for Fitz-Haimon. 7. Gules, ten bezants, for Le Zouch.

In the west front of the church are several coats, viz. 1. Gules, a lion rampant regardant Or. 2. Or, a fess vaire between six labels of three points sable. 3. Gules, a cross raguly Or. 4. Gules, a saltire argent. 5. Per bend Or and sable, a lion rampant counter-changed.

Under the west window within the church, 1. Or, between two bends ruby an escallop in the chief point sable, for Tracy of Stanway; impaling, Gules, a bend Or. 2. Azure, a lion rampant argent, for Pool of Saperton. 3. Baron and femme 1. Gules, a dexter hand coup'd argent, on a chief of the second three fighting cocks of the first; impaling, 2. Or, a fess wavy between six labels of three points sable. viz. Hancock of Twining impaling Baugh of the same place.. These families were probably benefactors to the church, amongst many others, whose arms are display'd in various parts of it, and are so numerous, that to emblazon them would fill several pages.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Robert Fitz-Haimon was buried in the chapter-house in the year 1107, but removed into the presbytery in 1241, and thence in 1397, to the north side of the choir, where his bones, wrapt in fine diaper, were laid in a tomb of grey marble, which had brasses at top, with his figure and ornaments, long since torn off. Abbat Parker inclosed the tomb in a chapel, now standing, and round the top was written, In ista capella jacet D^{nus} Robertus Filius Hammonis, hujus loci Fundator.

Near the above, is another chapel, with a very curious arched roof, originally supported by six small marble pillars, of which only two are intire. It was ornamented with the pictures of our saviour and his apostles, and with many coats of arms; and round the upper part of it is written,

Mementote d'ne Isabelle Iedespenfer Cometisse de Warrewick que hanc capellam fundavit in honorē vir' Marie Magdalene Et obiit Londiniis apud Mīnores A° dnī M° CCCC° XXXIX die scī Jh̄is eūnglie Et sepulta ē ī chora ī dextrā patris sui cui' aie ppiciet' deus Amen.

On the same side, under a canopy of very curious arched work of four stories, gradually diminishing, and finishing at top in one arch, highly ornamented in the Gothic taste, are the figures, in white marble, of George duke of Clarence and Isabel his dutchess, lying at full length. She was buried in 1479, in a vault behind the high altar, over-against the door of the chapel of St. Edmund the martyr, known by the symbols of him on the top of the chapel. He was shot with arrows, and beheaded, and a wolf is said to have defended his head from other beasts.

The ceremonial of the funeral of the dutchess of Clarence, taken from the Chronicle of Tewkesbury, may serve as an example of the custom among the great in those days. Her body was brought from Warwick to Tewkesbury on the 4th of January, 1476. John Strensham, abbat of Tewkesbury, with divers other abbats, in their priestly habits, and the whole convent, receiving it in the middle of the choir; and the funeral office was presently after performed by the suffragans of the bishop of Worcester, and the bishop of Landaff, and by the dean and chaplains of the lord duke; and the vigils were observed by the duke's own family all night to the next day, which was the vigil of the Epiphany. The suffragan of the bishop of Landaff celebrated the first mass of St. Mary, in the chapel of St. Mary; the second mass of the Trinity was celebrated by the lord abbat, at the high altar. The suffragan of the bishop of Worcester celebrated the third mass, of eternal Rest, at which Peter Weld, doctor of divinity, and of the order of the Minors at Worcester, preached a sermon in the choir, before the prelates and the rest there present. Mass being ended, the body of the dutchess was left under the herse, in the middle of the choir for thirty-five days, and on every one of those days solemn exequies were performed in the convent, for the good of her soul. Afterwards, a week before the feast of the purification of the blessed Mary, the same day after mass ended, her body was committed to be buried in a vault behind the high altar, and before the door of the chapel of the blessed virgin, in the abbey church, over against the door of the chapel of St. Edmund the martyr.

The chapel on the south side of the choir was erected by Cicely dutchess of Warwick, in memory of the duke her husband, and over it is the effigy of Richard Nevil, the earl of Warwick, in armour, kneeling, with his hands in a supplicating posture.

Opposite to the duke and dutchess of Clarence, under another arch of hollow work, lies the figure of lord O'Brien, with scutcheons of his arms round the tomb, Or, three piles meeting near the base azure; impaling his wife's family arms, viz. Argent, three furs in fess gules, for Montacute, earl of Salisbury. They were both buried in the aisle near the high altar.

At the upper end of the south aisle, near the choir, is an altar monument under an arch, for Edmund Beaufort, duke of Somerset.

Directly opposite to it in the north aisle, is such another, in a niche, with the effigy of lord Wenlock lying thereon, and upon a shield over the left arm this coat, Gules, a chevron Or between three lions argent.

In the middle space under the tower, is a large grey marble, which had brass plates affixed to it, and is said to have been for the unfortunate prince Edward, only son to king Henry the Sixth.

On the south side of the choir, under two arches, are two grey marble altar-monuments for two abbats; and beyond them is the effigy of another abbat lying in full proportion, with these arms, A chevron between three escallops, over all a palmer's staff in pale, supposed to be for Robert Fortington, or Forthampton, abbat of this place, who died in 1253.

On the south side of the choir is another antient altar-monument, with a cross on the top, and round the verge IOHANNES ABBAS PVIVS LOCI. and above this is a monument for another abbat.

There were also buried in this church, for whom there are now no monuments:

1. Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, buried in 1290, near the communion-table, under a plain stone, with an inscription round the edge, now defaced.

2. John, son of the third Gilbert de Clare, buried in the virgin Mary chapel.

3. Edward le Despencer, who died in 1375, and was buried before the door of the vestry near the presbytery, or chancel, where his wife, daughter of Bartholomew de Burghurst, built a chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity; and in 1401 she died, and was buried under a marble stone in the choir, on the left hand of her husband.

In the body of the church, round a flat stone, it is thus written: + LELER: DE: PARR: EYT: YCY: DYEVX: DE: SA: ALOE: EN: EYT: MERCI.

There are very few modern inscriptions in the church worth transcribing. I shall however insert two or three of them, and take notice of the family arms on the monuments. In the north cross aisle is the following:

Edwardus Wakeman Armiger qui obiit 3^o die Decembris An^o Dni 1634. Resurget et Vivet per illum qui dixit Ego sum Resurrectio et Vita.—Arms, Vert, a saltire wavy ermine.

On a flat stone,

Here lies the Hon^{ble} Elianor Stanford, Daughter of Edward Stanford, Esq; of Sawford in the County of Warwick, by his Wife Katherine Cocks of Northey in the County of Gloucester. She was Wife of the Hon^{ble} Francis Stafford, Son of William Lord Viscount Stafford, and Lady Mary Countesse of Stafford, his Wife, descended from the antient Princes, the Staffords Dukes of Buckingham, and Earls of Stafford, &c. She had Issue by him one Son named Henry, who puts this Stone upon her, in Memory of a pious Wife and tender Mother. She departed this Life the 26th Day of October, Anno Dni 1707.—The arms on this stone are, within a lozenge, Party per pale, 1. Stafford, viz. Or, a chevron gules, a mullet for difference. 2. Quarterly, 1st and 4th, three bars, for Stanford; 2d and 3d, Cocks, as at Dumbleton.

On a monument against the wall,

This Monument is erected by Thomas Hale, Gent. in Memory of his Pious and Virtuous Consort Letitia the Daughter of the Honourable Sr Thomas Penniston, late of Cornwell in the County of Oxon Baronet, deceased, & Dame Elizabeth his Wife, sole Daughter and Heiress of Sr Cornelius Fairmeadow deceased. She died the 3d of November, 1700, aged 32 Years.

The monument is ornamented with these arms, viz. Baron and femme, 1. Argent, a fess sable, and in chief three cinquefoils vert. 2. Argent, three Cornish choughs proper, for Penniston.

There are various other inscriptions in several parts of the church, viz. for John Roberts of Fiddington, gent. who died in 1631; with his arms, Per pale, argent and gules, over all a lion rampant sable. For Mary Oldisworth, (daughter of Thomas Chamberlayne) who died in 1684; with a scutcheon, Oldisworth impaling Chamberlayne. For several of the Bridges's of Wilton castle, with the arms of Bridges. For Richard, Samuel, and Marmaduke Rose, who died respectively in the years 1726, 1757, and 1770; with three roses on a bend. For Edward Popham of Tewkesbury Lodge, who died in 1753; and Dorothy his wife, and Letitia their daughter; with the arms of Popham, impaling, Vert, a chevron between three greyhounds courant argent. For Thomas Kemble, gent. who died in 1707, with his arms, Azure, on a bend Or three bulls heads couped sable, gutty du sang.

Benefactions to the Poor.

The abbey, by its foundation, was obliged to maintain thirteen almsmen with 10d. a week each for diet, 6s. 8d. a year for gowns; and 3l. 6s. 8d. for the rent of all their houses. This charity was continued by king Henry the Eighth after the reformation, and queen Mary, on the 3d of April, 1553, granted those sums to be paid by the auditors for this county for ever.

Mr.

Mr. Gyles Geest by his will, in 1558, gave the rent of twenty-two houses, and as many gardens, near the Church-street. Mrs. Margaret Hicks, by will in 1562, gave the rent of a messuage in Barton-street. Also the rent of half an acre in Avonham was given by a person unknown, and has been received ever since 1564. Mrs. Juliana Best, gave a rent charge of 3s. 4d. out of a house in High-street. The rent of two acres in Severnham is received and annually distributed by Mr. Geest's trustees. Mrs. Anne Slaughter, by her deed in 1618, gave the great Saffron garden near Swilyate. William Ferrers, of London, esq; in 1625, gave 5*l.* a year out of Shellingthorp manor in Lincolnshire. Mr. William Aye, of London, gent. by his will in 1625, gave 100*l.* which purchased the Seek-rents. The Right Hon. Baptist viscount Camden, by will in 1629, settled the rectory and church of St. Ismaels, in Rose in Pembrokehire, half to the poor, and half to the minister. Mr. John Roberts of Fiddington, by will in 1631, gave the interest of 20*l.* for ever, to buy coals. John Wright, by deed in 1636, gave a rent charge of 20*s.* a year on a messuage in Kemmerton, and lands in Breedon meadow. Lord Coventry, in 1652, gave a rent charge of lands in Breedon of 15*l.* a year, and 200*l.* for a stock to set the poor to work. And Mr. Edward Richardson, by his will in 1651, gave 60*l.* for a stock, with which were purchased seven houses and six gardens in Gander-lane. Sir Francis Ruffel, baronet, by his deed in 1674, confirmed his mother's gift of ten houses and a garden near the church-yard, with some land in Smith's lane. Mr. William Curtis, by deed in 1681, gave the Moors in Twining. William Wakeman, gent. by will in 1681, charged lands called Red Pools and Middle grounds with 20*s.* a year to the poor, and 10*s.* for a sermon. Mr. John Read, by his will in 1683, gave 50*l.* since laid out on lands called the Abbat's-lays in Gretton. Mr. John Porter, by will in 1698, gave two thirds of two acres in Severnham. The reverend Mr. Robert Wriggan, by will in 1701, gave 5*l.* William Wilton, gent. by will in 1720, gave 100*l.* capital stock in the South Sea company. Mr. William Hayward, by will in 1727, gave the interest of 50*l.* to the poor, and of 20*l.* to the minister for two sermons. Mrs. Elizabeth Hopton of Bristol, by will in 1732, gave 100*l.* since laid out in land in the parish of Upton. Daniel Kemble, esq; by will in 1732, gave his lands in Severnham, adjoining to those given by Mr. Porter, also the profits of 100*l.* now laid out in land in Upton parish. Sir William Strachan, baronet, by deed, vested an estate at Castle Morton in Worcestershire, worth 8*l.* a year, in trustees for the use of the poor.

To repair the Church, and augment the Living.

Mr. Cook, by will, about 1558, gave a messuage in High-street for repairing the church; and Mrs. Ellyne Eckynsale, in 1568, by her will, gave 12*d.* a year for the same purpose.

Mr. Thomas Poulton, in 1607, gave 20*s.* yearly towards maintaining a preaching minister. Also 40*l.* to be lent without interest, which are now lost.

In 1629, lord viscount Camden settled half the rectory and church of St. Ismaels in Rose, in Pembrokehire, on the minister for ever.

In 1681, William Wakeman, gent, gave 10*s.* a year for a sermon on Good Friday.

In 1683, Edwin Skrinshire of Aquilat in Staffordshire, by his deed, gave the tithes of Tredington and Fiddington, out of which to pay the minister of Tredington and Ashchurch 12*l.* yearly each, the rest to the minister of this place.

In 1685, Thomas Geers, by his deed, settled the privy or small tithes of this town and borough on the reader, or assistant to the minister of this church for ever.

In 1685, Mrs. Elizabeth Townsend, by will, gave 200*l.* since laid out on land in Gretton, for the minister.

In 1716, Charles Wynde, esq; by his will, charged his estate in Stoke Prior, com. Wigorn. with 20*s.* a year for a sermon, and 5*s.* for prayers on the anniversary of his death, and 40*s.* for reading prayers on Sunday evenings, between Lady-day and Michaelmas.

In 1722, Mrs. Elizabeth Dowdeswell, by will, gave 100*l.* for the better maintenance of the minister, and 50*l.* to repair the church, both which sums are laid out in the purchase of the Abbat's Lays in Gretton. Also 20*l.* to buy a silver flaggon for the church.

Mrs. Catherine Hancock gave a large silver cup and cover to the church, since exchanged for two silver plates. Also 50*l.* laid out on land towards repairing the church windows.

In 1727, Mr. William Hayward gave the interest of 20*l.* for two annual sermons.

In 1732, Mrs. Elizabeth Hopton gave Williams's Meadow, and one butt and two lands in Oldbury field to the minister, to preach six sermons preparatory to the sacrament on the last Friday in every month, between Lady-day and Michaelmas for ever.

To the Schools.

In 1609, sir Dudley Diggs gave 160*l.* with which land called the Holms, one acre in the Oldbury, and lands in Downbell's meadow were purchased and settled to the use of the free school.

In 1625, William Ferrers gave 20*l.* a year out of Shillingthorp in Lincolnshire.

In 1625, William Aye gave 70*l.* with which chief-rents were purchased, for the education of six poor children in the grammar school.

In 1722, Mrs. Elizabeth Dowdeswell gave 40*l.*

In 1724, Mr. Thomas Merret charged his lands with the payment of 50*s.* yearly to the charity school.

In 1721, lady Capel gave her estate called Perry Court, in the county of Kent, to support twelve charity schools, one twelfth part of which to the charity school here.

To the Roads and Bridge.

In 1562, Mrs. Margaret Hicks gave the rent of an acre of land in Oldbury to repair the roads.

In 1567, Mrs. Best gave 3*s.* 4*d.* yearly to repair the long bridge.

In 1665, Mr. Richard Mince gave 40*s.* a year out of the latter-math of Avon-ham to repair the long bridge.

When fir Robert Atkyns compiled the account of this place, he estimated the houses in the parish to be 470, and the inhabitants 2500; but the latter are now said to be upwards of 3000; however, no calculation can be made from the parish register, as the dissenters (including the quakers) have sepulture in their respective burying yards.

T H O R N B U R Y .

THIS large parish lies in the lower part of the Vale of Gloucestershire, within the hundred of its own name. It is bounded for several miles on the north-west by the river Severn, from whence to the opposite extremity, it is upwards of six miles in length, and crossing that direction, it is above five miles in breadth.

Thro' all this extent of rich country, there is at present but very little tillage-land, and it is observable, that for the last forty or fifty years past, the corn fields here, as well as in general throughout the vale, have been gradually converted to pasture, whilst the very contrary practice takes place on the hills.

Large quantities of Wormwood and Marshmallows grow in the meadows, also Asparagus and seed Purslain, which the inhabitants gather for their tables. And there are many other plants growing spontaneously, that the curious botanist would not pass over unnoticed; among which are the Acanthus, or Bear's Breech, the black Maidenhair, Agrimony, the wholesome Wolfelbane, common Maidenhair, yellow Centaury, Wild Germander, great Celadine, Pilewort, Hounds Tongue, Eyebright, Fumitory, Wild Clary, St. John's Wort, Betony, Wild Mar-joram, Polypody of the wall, Comfry, common Vervain, Heartsease, Misseltoe, and some others.

A great part of the parish next the Severn is very subject to inundations from that river. Near two thousand acres of land are rated to the repair of the sea walls in the upper level, but a much greater tract is liable to floods, whose waters stagnate on the marshes and low lands. Hence the inhabitants of that part of the parish are very unhealthy from the putrid air they breathe; and if any go from the hill-country to reside there, such persons are usually attacked with a violent ague on their first settling, which emaciates them, and proves fatal in a little time. Doctor Franklin's sentiments on moist situations, in a letter to his friend Dr. Percival, are new and singular, and merit consideration. 'The gentry of England,' says he, 'are remarkably afraid of moisture and of air. But seamen, who live perpetually in moist air, are always healthy if they have good provisions. The inhabitants of Bermudas, St. Helen, and other islands far from continents, surrounded with rocks, against which the waves continually dashing, fill the air with spray and vapour, and where no wind can arise that does not pass over much sea, and of course bring much moisture, are remarkably healthy. And I have long thought mere moist air has no ill effect on the constitution; though air impregnated with vapours from putrid marshes is found pernicious, not from the moisture, but from the putridity. It seems strange that a man, whose body is composed in great part of moist fluids, whose blood and juices are so watery, who can swallow quantities of water and small beer daily without inconvenience, should fancy that a little more or less moisture in the air should be of such importance. But we abound in absurdity and inconsistency. Thus, though it is generally agreed that taking the air is a good thing, yet what caution against air! what stopping of crevices! what wrapping up in warm cloaths! what shutting of doors and windows! even in the midst of summer. Many London families go out once a day to take the air, three or four persons in a coach, one perhaps sick; these go three or four miles, or as many turns in Hyde Park, with both the glasses up, all breathing over and over again the same air they brought out of town with them in the coach, with the least change possible, and rendered worse and worse every moment; and this they call taking the air. From many years observations on myself and others, I am persuaded we are on a wrong scent in supposing moist or cold air, the cause of that disorder we call a cold: some unknown quality in the air may sometimes produce colds, as in the influenza; but generally I apprehend they are the effects of too full living, in proportion to our exercise.

The town of Thornbury stands in the midst of the parish, a little above the marshes, but the air

there is in some degree contaminated by the stagnated waters on the low lands. It is seven miles distant south from Berkeley, six westward from Wickwar, eleven north from Bristol, and twenty-four south-westward from Gloucester. It is a borough by prescription, and is governed by a mayor and twelve aldermen, but sends no representatives to parliament. The mayor is annually chosen out of the aldermen, and the latter, upon a vacancy, out of the freeholders residing in the borough. The mayor attends the borough court, collects the lord's chief-rents, and examines weights and measures; but it is difficult to ascertain the duties of his office with any degree of precision, as I find them no where described. And it may be presumed that much of that power which was antiently delegated to him, is lost for want of using it, so that his office is now become little more than nominal.

We know very little of the antient state of this borough. About the Norman conquest it had a market, whose profits were then worth twenty shillings, according to Domesday. Leland made a visit to it in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, and describes it in his Itinerary as 'set almoste upon an equalle grounde, [i.e. nearly level] beinge large to the proportion of the letter Y, havinge first one longe strete, and two hornes goyne owt of it. There hathe bene, (says he) good clothing in Thornebyry, but now Idelnes muche reynithe there.' To which I shall subjoin, that the clothing business is now intirely lost, and no manufacture supplies its room, except that the women and children are furnished with spinning work by master clothiers from other places.

The town stretches from north-east to south-west, parallel to the course of the Severn, at the distance of about two miles and a half from that river. It consists, as in Leland's time, of one street of a good breadth, and about three quarters of a mile long, with two other streets, or rather lanes, of very little account.

The great turnpike-road from the north of England, through Gloucester to Bristol, runs upon a considerable eminence by the town, but there are only the church and a few houses to be seen from the road, because many lofty trees intercept the view on that side. The best prospect of the town is from the heights at Lidney and Woollaston, in the forest of Dean, about five or six miles distant on the opposite side of the Severn, whence it seems to be larger than it really is. Some of the houses are built of brick, a few of stone, but the greater part seem to be wood buildings; and from the present condition of them, the town appears to be declining. It has lost its market from its vicinity to Bristol, and carrying the road by the side of it, has deprived it of the benefit of travelling business, whereas, before the turnpike was erected, the great road led through it. These losses, and the defect of its manufacture, must necessarily impoverish and depopulate the place.

The market, of which there is very little appearance, is held on Saturday, and there are three yearly fairs for the sale of horned cattle and hogs, viz. on Easter-munday, on the 15th of August, and on the Monday before St. Thomas-day.

The public buildings are the Boothall, the corn market-house, and the Shambles. There are four distinct courts held in the Boothall, viz.

1. The court of the Honour of Gloucester. Of this Honour I have already given some account, p. 91. It remains only to observe, that in it pleas are held for the recovery of debts from 40s. to any amount, within its jurisdiction, which extends over the following places in the county of Gloucester, viz. Thornbury, Kington, Oldbury upon Severn, Cowhill, Morton, Mars, alias Mares and Falfield, Philpots, Saltmarsh, [i.e. the Marshes in Olveston and Almondsbury] Rowles, Buckover, Hope, Rangeworthy, Titherington, Iron Acton, Charfield, Dodington, Marshfield, Mangotsfield, Bitton, Upton Cheney, Beech, Barr's Court, Oldland, Hanham, Doynton, Gaunt's Erdicot, Over, Tockington, Coate, Tewkesbury, Oxendon, Alderton, Boddington, Walton Cardiff, Kemmerton, Frampton Cotel, Hampton Meley, and Holyrood Amney. The action commences by affidavit of the debt before the steward or his deputy, who issues an attachment against the defendant's goods, to be condemned and forfeited at the next court, unless two sufficient persons residing within the jurisdiction become pledges, in the nature of bail, for the debt and costs, if the defendant should be condemned in the action. Pledges being given, the goods are released, and the plaintiff proceeds by declaration, as in the course of common law. Matthew Hale, esq; is the present steward of this court.

2. The hundred court, held on Thursday every three weeks, before the steward, and two free suitors, for the recovery of debts under 40s. arising within the hundred.

3. The borough court, held also on Thursday every three weeks, before the steward of the manor, in the presence of the mayor, attended by the serjeant at mace, where are tried actions of debt under 40s. arising within the borough.

4. The manor court, or court baron, held occasionally before the steward of the manor and tenants, where, besides ordinary business, tenants are admitted to their copyholds. And the custom of the manor is, that such estates descend to the next heir like freeholds, with this exception, that the tenants children being all daughters, the eldest inherits, and so of nieces.

Of Thornbury Castle.

There was very antiently a castle at this place, but by whom it was originally built is at this time altogether uncertain. Hugh de Audley, earl of Glou-

Gloucester, refusing to obey the summons of king Edward the Second, to come to the king at Gloucester on the 3d of April, in the 14th year of that reign, the earl's castle at Thornbury, and his other estates, were seized into the king's hands; but they were restored in the first year of the next reign. Doctor Holland observes that Ralph lord Stafford built a house at Thornbury, in the reign of king Edward the Third. Perhaps this was done upon the site of the old castle. And in the second year of the reign of king Henry the Eighth, Edward duke of Buckingham took down part of the house built by Ralph lord Stafford, and began a castle near the church, at the north end of the town; but he was prevented from finishing it by his attainder and death in the thirteenth year of the same reign. John Leland saw it soon after the duke was beheaded, and gives the following account of it in the seventh volume of his Itinerary:

' There was of auncient Tyme a Maner Place, but of no great estimation, hard by the Northe Syde of the Paroche Church. Edward late Duke of Bukkyngem likynge the Soyle aboute, and the Site of the Howse, and sette up magnificently in good squared Stone, the Southe Syde of it, and accomplishyd the West Parte also with a right comely Gatchowse to the first Soyle; and so it standithe yet with a Rose forced for a tyme. This Inscription on the fronte of the Gatchowse: This Gate was begun in the yere of Our Lorde Gode M CCCC XI The ii yere Of The Reyne Of Kynge Henri the viii By me EDW duc of Bukkinghā Erlle of Harforde Stafforde ande Northamtō. The Dukes Worde: DORANTE SAVANT, [upon a label]. The Foundation of a very spacious Base Courte was there begon, and certeyne Gates and Towres in it Castelle lyke. It is of a iiii or v Yardes highe, and so remaynithe a Token of a noble Peace of Worke purposid. There was a Gallery of Tymbre in the Bake Syde of the House joyning to the Northe Syde of the Paroche Church.— Edward Duke of Bukkyngem made a fayre Parke hard by the Castle, and tooke muche faire Ground in it very frutefull of Corne, now fayr Launds for Coursynge. The Inhabytaunts curlyd the Duke for the Lands so inclosyd.

' There cummithe an Armler of Severne ebyng and flowyng into this Parke. Duke Edward had Thowght to have trenchyd there and to have browght it up to the Castle.— There was a Parke by the Maner of Thornebyry afore, and yet is caulld Morlewodde.— There was also afore Duke Edward's Tyme a Parke at Estewood, a Myle or more of: But Duke Edward at 2 Tymes enlarged it to the Compasse of 6 Myles, not without many Curfes of the Poore Tenaunts. The Severne se lyethe a Myle and more from Thornebyrie, the Marches lyenge betwene.'

Thus far Leland. But I have been favoured with a more particular description of this castle, written, as I conjecture, about the time of king James the First, which, as it may be acceptable to many readers, is here inserted in the language of the writer.

' The house or castle of Thornbury standeth within two miles of the river Seaverne, which runneth on the north side thereof. It is adjoining unto the church-yard of the parish church of Thornbury on the south part; the parke there, called New Parke, on the north and east parts, and a piece of ground called the Pitties on the west part. At the first entry is a faire back court containing two acres and a halfe, compassed about with buildings of stone for servants lodgings, to the height of 14 or 15 foote, left unfinished without timber or covering, set forth with windows of freestone, some having bars of iron in them, some none.

' At the entry into the castle on the west side are two gates, a greater and a lesser, with a wicket in the same. At the left hand thereof is a porter's lodge, conteyning three roomes, with a dungeon or place of imprisonment underneath. Next adjoining is a faire roome called the Duke's Wardrobe, and within the same a faire roome or lodging chamber with a cellar or vaught underneath; over all which are fower lodging chambers with chimneys. On the right hand of the gates are two faire roomes called the Duches Wardrobe, and over the same are two faire chambers called the Steward's Chambers.

' Within all which is a court paved with stone, conteyning halfe an acre, encompassed with the castle buildings and leading from the gates aforesaid to the great hall, at the entry whereof is a porch, and on the right hand a small room called the Ewery.

' On the left or north side of the court is a faire wett larder, a dry larder, a privy bakehouse, and a boyling house, with an entry leading from all the said houses of offices to the great kitchen, over all which are five chambers for privet lodgings, & over all the same againe is one long roome called the Cockloft. The great kitchen having two great large flewes or chimneys, & one lesser chimney, & within the same kitchen is a privy kitchen with two flewes or chimneys in it, over the which last recited kitchen is a lodging chamber for cookes.

' On the backside of all which recited buildings are certaine decayed buildings sometimes used for a bakehouse, & an armory wth certaine decayed lodgings over the same. From the great kitchen leading to the great hall is an entry, on the one side is a decayed roome called the skultery, with a large flew or chimney therein, & a pantry adjoining. On the other side of the entry are two old decayed roomes heretofore used for cellars, on the backside whereof is a little court adjoining to the great kitchen, & in

' the

‘ the same is a faire well or pump for water, ‘ partley decayed; betweene the decayed cellars
 ‘ and the lower end of the great hall is a buttery;
 ‘ over all which last recited roomes are fower
 ‘ chambers called the Earle of Stafford’s Lodgings, ‘ partly decayed, with one roome thereunto ad-
 ‘ joyning called the Clerkes Treasury.

‘ From the lower end of the great hall is an ‘ entry leading unto the chappell, at the corner of ‘ which entry is a fellar. The utter part of the ‘ chappell is a faire roome for people to stand in
 ‘ at service time, & over the same are two roomes
 ‘ or partitions with each of them a chimney, ‘ where the duke & the duches used to sitt &
 ‘ heare service. The body of the chappell it selfe ‘ fairely built, having twenty & two settles of ‘ wainescott about the same, for priests, clerkes, ‘ & quieristers.

‘ The great hall, faire and large, with a hearth
 ‘ to make fire on in the midst thereof. Adjoyning
 ‘ to the upp end of the same is one faire roome
 ‘ called the Old Hall, with a chimney in the same.
 ‘ Next adjoyning to the same is a faire cloyster ‘ walke paved with bricke, leading from the ‘ Duke’s Lodging to the privy garden, which ‘ garden is fower square, conteyning about one ‘ third part of an acre, three squares whereof are ‘ compassed about with a faire Cloyster or walke ‘ paved with bricke, & the fowerth square is ‘ bounded with the principal parts of the Castle ‘ called the New Buildings; over all which last ‘ recited Cloyster is a faire large gallery, & out of ‘ the same gallery goeth another gallery leading ‘ to the parish church of Thornbury, at the end
 ‘ whereof is a faire roome with a Chimney, and a ‘ Window into the said Church, where the Duke
 ‘ used sometime to heare service. Neere adjoyn-
 ‘ ing unto the said large gallery are certain roomes
 ‘ or lodgings called the Earle of Bedford’s ‘ lodgings, conteyning 13 roomes, whereof six ‘ are below, three of them having chimneys in ‘ them, & seaven above, whereof fower have ‘ chimneys likewise. All which houses, buildings ‘ & roomes aforementioned are for the most part ‘ built with freestone, & covered with flatt or tyle.

‘ The lower part of the principall buildings of ‘ the castle is called the New Buildings, at the west ‘ end whereof is a faire tower, in which lower ‘ buildings is conteyned one great chamber, with ‘ a chimney in the same, the sealing & timber ‘ worke whereof is decayed. Within the same is ‘ another faire chamber with a chimney therein.
 ‘ And within the same againe is another faire ‘ lodging chamber, with a chimney therein, called ‘ the Duke’s Lodging, with one little Roome or ‘ Closett betweene the two last recited chambers.
 ‘ Within all which is one roome, being the foun‘ dation or lowermost part of the tower called the ‘ Duke’s Closett, with a Chimney therein. From ‘ the which said Duke’s lodging leadeth a faire
 ‘ gallery paved with bricke, & a stayer at the end

‘ thereof ascending to the Duke’s Lodging, being ‘ over the same, used for a privy way.

‘ From the upp end of the great hall a stayer ‘ ascendeth up towards the great chamber, at the ‘ top whereof are two lodging roomes. Leading ‘ from the stayers head to the great chamber is a ‘ faire roome paved with bricke, & a chimney
 ‘ therein, at the end whereof doth meete a faire ‘ gallery leading from the great Chamber to the ‘ Earle of Bedford’s Lodging on the one side, &
 ‘ the Chappell on the other side.

‘ The great Chamber very faire with a chimney
 ‘ therein. Within the same is one other faire ‘ Chamber, called the Dineing Chamber, with a ‘ chimney therein likewise. And within that ‘ againe, is one other faire chamber alsoe, called ‘ the Privy Chamber, with a chimney in that ‘ likewise. And within the same againe is one
 ‘ other chamber or closett called the Duke’s
 ‘ Jewell Chamber. Next unto the Privy Cham‘ ber on the inner part thereof, is a faire round
 ‘ chamber, being the second story of the Tower, ‘ called the Duke’s Bedchamber, with a chimney
 ‘ in the same. From the Privy Chamber a Stayer ‘ leadeth up into another faire round chamber ‘ over the Duke’s Bedchamber, like unto the ‘ former, being the third story over the Tower, ‘ & soe upwards into another like chamber over
 ‘ the same, called the Treasury, where the Evi‘ dences do lye. All which last recited buildings, ‘ called the New Buildings, are built faire with ‘ freestone, covered with lead, & embattelled.

‘ On the east side of the Castle is one other ‘ garden, conteyning three quarters of an acre, ‘ adjoining upon the Earle of Bedford’s Lodgings,
 ‘ at the west corner whereof is a little void court
 ‘ of wast ground. On the north side of the Castle, ‘ adjoining upon the Chappell, is a little Orchard ‘ conteyning half an acre, well sett with trees of ‘ diverse kinds of fruites. All which Castle ‘ buildings, with Orchards & Gardens aforesaid, ‘ are walled about with a Wall of Stone, part ‘ embattelled, ruined and decayed in diverse places ‘ thereof, conteyning in circuit and quantity, by ‘ estimation, twelve Acres of Ground, or there‘ abouts. On the east Side of the said Castle, ‘ adjoining unto the outer Side of the Walls
 ‘ thereof, is one faire Orchard quadrente, con-‘ teyning by Estimation fower Acres, palled about ‘ well, & thick sett with trees of diverse Kinds of ‘ fruites.’

I shall close this account of the castle by observing, that the gatehouse, and much of the castle walls, and the outer wall that inclosed the whole, with loop holes at convenient distances to shoot thro’ with bows and cross bows, are now standing; and some of the rooms of the castle are occupied as a farm house. The foregoing inscription on the gatehouse is as I found it myself, and not exactly as in the Itinerary, for Leland had not copied it accurately. Besides the inscription, there

there are several ornamental devices upon it, with the Staffords Knot; and the present remains of the castle shew the design to have been noble and magnificent, tho' imperfectly executed.

In the year 1539, king Henry the Eighth and Anne of Bulloigne were entertained at this place for ten days.

The town of Thornbury was fortified for the king in the great rebellion, by sir William St. Leger, to restrain the garrison at Gloucester.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following abstract from Domesday stands under the title Terra Regis:

'Brietric the son of Algar held Turneberie in Langelei hundred. In the time of king Edward there were eleven hides, and four plow-tillages in demean, and forty-two villeins, and eighteen radchenisters, with twenty-one plow-tillages; and twenty-four bordars, and fifteen servi, and four coliberti. There were two mills of 6 s. 4 d. a wood a mile long, and a mile broad. There was a market of 20 s. The steward hath now added a mill there of 8 d.

'This manor was queen Maud's. Hunfrid paid 50 l. for it by tale. In this manor is a meadow of 40 s. and at Wiche, forty sextaries of salt, or 20 d. and the fishery of Gloucester of 58 d.' Domesday, p. 68.

The manor of Thornbury descended like that of Tewkesbury, and the honour of Gloucester, till it came into the possession of Ralph lord Stafford, in right of his wife Margaret, sole daughter and heiress to Hugh de Audley, earl of Gloucester.

The above Ralph lord Stafford was descended from Roger de Toeni, who was standard-bearer of Normandy, and descended from Malahulstus, uncle to Rollo duke of Normandy. Robert, a younger son of Roger, was founder of the abbey of Conches. Nicholas Toeni was son of Robert, and another Robert, son of Nicholas, came into England with king William the First, who rewarded him with one hundred and thirty-one manors, whereof eighty-one were in Staffordshire. He was also made governor of a castle in Stafford, and thence he assumed the name of Stafford. He married Avice de Clare, and lies buried at Stone in Staffordshire, where he had founded a priory for canons regular, of the order of St. Augustin.

Nicholas de Stafford, son and heir of Robert, was high sheriff of Staffordshire in the reign of king Henry the First, and was buried with Maud his wife in the monastery of Stone. Robert de Stafford, son and heir of Nicholas, was also high sheriff of Staffordshire from the 2d to the 6th year of king Henry the Second. He likewise was buried at Stone, and left a son named Robert, who died without issue, whereby Milisent, sister to this last Robert, became his heir.

Which Milisent was married to Hervey Bagot, of an ancient family in the same county, who, in her right, succeeded to the barony of Stafford.

Hervey Bagot, son and heir of Hervey and of Milisent, assumed the name of his mother, which was the custom of those times, when the mother was a considerable heiress. He married Petronilla, sister to William de Ferrers, earl of Derby, and died 21 H. 3. A third Hervey de Stafford, son of the last, succeeded to the barony and estate, but dying without issue, his brother, Robert lord Stafford, became his heir, and had livery granted to him of all his brother's lands 25 H. 3. He married Alice, one of the coheirs of Thomas Corbet, of Caus in Shropshire, and dying 10 E. 1. was buried with his ancestors at Stone.

Edmond lord Stafford, son of Robert, married Margaret, daughter of Ralph lord Basslet, of Draiton, whereby the estate of the Basslet family, for want of heirs male, descended afterwards to the Staffords. He died 2 E. 2. and was buried in the monastery of the Friars Minors in Stafford.

Ralph lord Stafford, son of Edmond, was nine years old at his father's death. He had livery of his paternal estate 17 E. 2. and became eminent in military employments. He married Margaret, the daughter and heir of Hugh de Audley, earl of Gloucester, and was created earl of Stafford. He died seized of the manors of Thornbury and Rendcombe, in right of his wife, 46 E. 3. and was buried at Tunbridge in Kent. Ralph his eldest son had married Maud, daughter of Henry de Lancaster, earl of Derby, but died without issue before his father.

Hugh earl of Stafford, surviving son and heir of Ralph, and of Margaret de Audley, was twenty-eight years old at the death of his father, whom he succeeded in title and estate. He followed the wars in France and Scotland, and married Philippa, daughter of Thomas Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. Dying at Rhodes, in his return from a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, 9 R. 2. his body was brought into England, and buried at Stone. He died seized of Thornbury, with its members, Oldbury, Kington, Morton, Falfield and Mares, and of the manors of Rendcombe and Estington; and was succeeded by his son

Thomas earl of Stafford, who married Anne, the daughter of Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester, by his wife Eleanor, eldest daughter and coheirs of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford. But this Thomas died before he could consummate the marriage, and was buried at Stone 16 R. 2. whereby his brother William, who was his next heir, succeeded to the title and estates; but he died unmarried 18 R. 2.

Edmond earl of Stafford was brother and heir to William, and by special licence from the king, he married Anne, his brother Thomas's widow, with whom he had the manor of Wheatenhurst. He was slain at the battle of Shrewsbury, fighting for king Henry the Fourth against Hotspur, son of Henry earl of Northumberland, 4 H. 4. and was buried in the Augustine friery at Stafford. He died seized of Thornbury, with its members aforesaid, and of the manors of Rendcombe and Wheatenhurst, and of the castle of Caldecot in Gloucestershire. The countess Anne, his relict, died 17 H. 6. and was then buried at the priory of Lanthony, near Gloucester.

Humphry earl of Stafford, son and heir of Edmond, was very young at his father's death, and married Anne, daughter of Ralph Nevil earl of Westmoreland. He was governor of Calais, and was created duke of Buckingham 23 H. 6. A dispute arising concerning precedency between him and Henry Beauchamp, duke of Warwick, it was decided by act of parliament, and ordered, that these two dukes should take precedency by turns, one one year, the other the next; and that precedency should be given to such of the posterity of each as should first have livery of their lands. He was slain at the battle of Northampton 38 H. 6. wherein king Henry the Sixth was taken prisoner.

Humphry earl of Stafford was the eldest son of Humphry duke of Buckingham. He married Margaret, daughter and coheir of Edmond duke of Somerset, and was slain at the battle of St. Albans, in his father's life-time.

Henry duke of Buckingham, son of Humphry earl of Stafford, and grandson of Humphry duke of Buckingham, succeeded his grandfather in honour, and in the manor of Thornbury. Being under age at his grandfather's death, he was in ward to the king, and the care of his education was assigned to Anne, dutchess of Exeter, the king's sister. He married Catherine, daughter of Richard Wodeville, earl of Rivers. He was highly instrumental in king Richard the Third's unjustly obtaining the crown, and afterwards, thro' remorse of conscience, took up arms against him, and being taken, he was beheaded at Salisbury 1 R. 3. without any judicial proceedings. A proclamation had been issued, offering a thousand pounds reward to whomever should apprehend the duke, which tempted Humphry Bannister, his servant, to betray him; but he went without the reward, for king Richard said, That he who would betray so good a master would be false to all others. This, however, was no justification for the king's breaking his faith. Richard's morals and politics were equally bad, and as by this instance of his conduct he appeared to be one that could not be relied on, so very few would have entered into his service on future occasions.

Edward duke of Buckingham was son of the last Humphry. He had livery of his lands 14 H. 7. and obtained a licence to impark a thousand acres of land in Thornbury 2 H. 8. He married Alianora, daughter of Henry Percy, earl of Northumberland. The king conceived a jealousy of him for some very hot and indiscreet expressions, for which he was tried by his peers upon an accusation of high treason, and found guilty; and disdain- ing to ask his life, was beheaded 13 H. 8. The principal witness against him was Charles Knevet, whom he had discharged of his service at the clamour of his tenants. His haughty spirit, and contemptuous carriage towards cardinal Wolsey, contributed to his ruin. The duke was presenting the bason on his knees for the king to wash his hands after dinner, and when the king had done, and was turned away, the cardinal sportingly dipt his hand in the bason whilst the duke was on his knees. The duke repented it as an affront, and rising up, poured the water into the cardinal's shoes. The ecclesiastic was nettled in his turn, and threatened the duke to sit upon his skirts. The duke, therefore, came the next day to court, without skirts to his doublet, and being asked the reason of it, told the king that it was to avoid the cardinal's anger, for he had threatened to sit upon his skirts. The duke had his jest, but the cardinal had his head afterwards. All the monuments of this great family, upon the dissolution of the priory of Stone, were removed, 30 H. 8. to the friers Augustins at Stafford, in hopes that the Mendicant friers might be spared; but those costly tombs were destroy'd, and buried in the ruins of that monastery.

Henry Stafford, eldest son of Edward duke of Buckingham, was by act of parliament restored in blood, but not to his father's honours and estate, 14 H. 8. However, the king soon afterwards granted several of the lands of the late duke of Buckingham to this Henry Stafford, and to Ursula his wife, and their heirs. She was the daughter of sir Richard Pole, by Margaret his wife, who was the daughter of George duke of Clarence, brother to king Edward the Fourth. The manor, castle, town, and park, &c. of Thornbury, and the manor of Bedellanam in Thornbury, were granted to Henry lord Stafford, and to Ursula his wife, 2 Mar. He was a person of great learning and virtue, and having translated several pieces of divinity, died in the year 1558.

Edward lord Stafford, son and heir of Henry, married Mary, daughter of Edward earl of Derby, and left Edward lord Stafford his son and heir, who had livery of the manor of Thornbury, and of the rest of his father's lands, in 1592. He married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Foster, of Tonge in Shropshire, and died in 1625.

Edward lord Stafford, son of the last Edward, married Anne, daughter of James Wilfords, of Newnham-hall in Essex, and died before his father, leaving a son Henry, and a daughter Mary. Henry died young in 1637.

Mary Stafford, daughter of the last-mentioned Edward, and heiress of the family, was married to William Howard, a younger son of Thomas earl of Arundel and Surry, who, in her right, was seized of the manor of Thornbury. He was created viscount Stafford by king Charles the First, and was beheaded in the reign of king Charles the Second, upon the testimony of the famous doctor Oates, as being guilty of the popish plot. In the reign of king James the Second, an attempt was made to reverse the attainder of this lord by a bill in parliament, against which some of the lords protested, and the commons threw it out.

Henry-Stafford Howard, son of William viscount Stafford, was created earl of Stafford by king James the Second, and was lord of the manor of Thornbury at the beginning of the present century. The duke of Norfolk is the present lord of the manor.

William Heron, of London, haberdasher, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Thornbury to the use of themselves 33 H. 6. John Stanshaw, and Humphry his brother, levied a fine of lands in Thornbury 12 H. 7. Richard Forster levied a fine of the moiety of lands in Thornbury, Oldbury, and Falfield, 12 H. 7.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

By an act passed in the reign of king Charles the Second, the tithings of Oldbury, Kington, Morton, and Falfield, all in the parish of Thornbury, were consolidated into one manor, called the manor of Thornbury. Of which tithings in their order.

1. Oldbury, sometimes written Aldbury, and Eald-bury, from the Saxon Eald-bez. We now call it Oldbury upon Severn, to distinguish it from Oldbury upon the Hill, in the hundred of Grumbald's Ash. It stretches along the shore of the Severn, and is supposed to be the Roman station called the Trajectus, or ferry, mentioned in Antoninus's fourteenth Iter, from Isca, now Caerleon in Monmouthshire, to Calleva, now Wallingford in Berkshire. It received its present name from the Saxons, on account of the antient camps which they found there, and of which some traces still remain. The smaller one, or Campus Minor, was on the east side of the hill near the church, where every thing passing upon the Severn hereabout might be seen, and many Roman coins have been found upon the spot. A little eastward of that, about a quarter of a mile on the plain, was the Campus Major; and part of the intrenchments, with high banks, forming two sides of a square, still remain pretty perfect, tho' the other parts are levelled. Just by these, in a piece of ground which still shews many tumps and unevennesses, a great many old foundations have been dug up in the memory of persons living in the place. These circumstances very much corroborate the opinion that here was the Roman Trajectus, and not at Aust, as some have fancied. The distance between the Abone, another Roman station, and the Trajectus, is set down to be nine miles by Antoninus, which not agreeing with the real distance between the places where those stations are supposed to have been, has occasioned much difficulty in fixing the situation of the Abone; but as this subject has been fully discussed under Lidney, the reader is referred to that head for further satisfaction.

This part of the parish is very unhealthy, from stagnated water lying on some of the lands; and it is made more so from the great number of Elm trees standing so thick about the houses, that the air has not a free current.

Sir Robert Atkyns has misapplied the account of Edward the Elder passing over the Severn at this place, to meet Leoline prince of Wales; for according to Mapes, and others, it happened at Aust, and not here.

The Despencers are said to have been sometime seized of this manor, in the reign of king Edward the Second. Eubulo le Strange, and Aleria his wife, levied a fine of Oldbury to the use of Hugh le Despencer 18 E. 2.

The knights templars were seized of Oldbury 2 E. 3. and upon the dissolution of that order, the manor was granted to the Veals. John Veal died seized of the manor of Oldbury 36 H. 6. as did Robert Veal, son of John, 13 E. 4.

The Kemyfes succeeded the Veals. Roger Kemys, who was found by inquisition to be a lunatick, died seized of Oldbury 21 E. 4. Hugh Kemys and John Kemys levied a fine of the manor of Oldbury to William George, and William Overton, 4 E. 6. Sir James Harrington was lord of this manor in the year 1608, but it is now consolidated with Thornbury.

John Newton and Joan his wife levied a fine of lands in Oldbury to the use of themselves in taille, 8 H. 5. Lands in Oldbury and Holeham belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and were granted to Daniel Pert and Alexander Pert, in trust, 7 E. 6. A portion of tithes in Oldbury, and a meadow called Holeham, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to the lord Fenton 5 Jac.

There is a chapel in Oldbury, and the chapelry is annexed to Thornbury. It is called the Rectory of Oldbury in the presentation, and is worth 50*l.* a year. The chapel stands on the top of a hill. The inhabitants say, that their ancestors attempted to build it on Shaw's Green, near the middle of the village; but what they effected in the day was destroy'd by night, which made them desist. They were then advised to yoke two heifers that never had been milked, and wheresoever they should first stop, there to build the chapel. The poor beasts straggling along, at last halted on the top of the hill, and so the chapel was built there.

Cowhill, or Cowell, is a hamlet in this tithing. Henry Campneys was seized of Cowhill 15 E. 4. Anthony Campneys died seized thereof 27 H. 8. and livery was granted to Henry Campneys, brother and heir to Anthony, the next year. Livery of Cowell was also granted to John Campneys 13 Eliz. Cowell was lately purchased out of the family of sir Thomas Campneys, by Peter Holford, of Weston Birt in this county, esq.

Mr. Thomas Adams has a good estate at Cowhill.

2. Kington. The church of Thornbury stands in this tithing. The lands antiently belonged to the the family of the Staffords, and were granted to Dorothy Stafford, and to her sons, in tail, 26 Eliz. Aryld, a virgin, is said to have been murdered here by one Muncius, a tyrant, who cut off her head. She was afterwards canonized, and buried in St. Peter's abbey at Gloucester.

Marlewood is within this tithing, where was an antient feat and a park belonging to the Staffords, which Edward Stafford sold, about the beginning of this century, and Mr. Knight, whose ancestor purchased it, is the present owner of it.

This family came antiently from Tyndale in the north of England, so called from the north Tyne, which rises in the mountains on the borders of England, and waters that dale. Robert de Tyndale had three sons, Adam, Robert, and John. Adam de Tyndale was living in 1199, and had issue by Helewisa his wife, one daughter Philippa, married to Nicholas, baron of Bolteby, in the time of king Henry the Third. Robert, the second son, seated himself at Transover in Northamptonshire, temp. E. 1. and had issue two sons, sir William Tyndale, knight, who died without issue; and Robert Tyndale, living in 1293. Which Robert had issue two sons, Richard, and William. Richard died sine prole; but sir William Tyndale of Transover, the second son, married Elizabeth, the niece and heir of sir Henry Deane, of Deane in Northamptonshire.

John Tyndale, son of sir William, was living in the year 1391, and by his wife Catharine Zouch, had issue two sons, Richard, who died 3 H. 5. sine prole; and sir William Tyndale, who by his wife Alana, (daughter and heir of sir Simon Bigod, alias Felbrigg, of Felbrigg in Norfolk, knight of the garter, by his wife Margaret, daughter to the duke of Theise, and niece to the king of Bohemia) had issue sir Thomas Tyndale, of Deane, knight. Which sir Thomas Tyndale married Margaret, daughter of sir William Yelverton, and by her had sir William Tyndale, of Hockwold in Norfolk, made knight of the Bath in 1496; and three daughters, Anne, married to Henry St. Germain; Jane, wedded to John Blarerhasset; and Elizabeth.

The said sir William Tyndale of Hockwold, by Mary his wife, daughter and heir of Osbert Montford, of Norfolk, had issue four sons, viz. 1. sir John; 2. William, the ancestor of the Tyndales of Bathford, of whom hereafter; 3. Robert; and 4. Edward, settled at Pull-court in Worcestershire. Sir John Tyndale, eldest son of sir William Tyndale of Hockwold, married Amphillis, daughter of — Coningsby, and by her was father of two sons, sir Thomas, and Humphry; and four daughters, Anne, Mary, Beatrix, and Dorothy. Sir Thomas Tyndale, the eldest son, married first, Anne, daughter of sir William Paston, by whom he had issue a son William, who died in 1591, having married a daughter of sir Ambrose Germain, by whom he was father of one son, Felix Tyndale, who died without issue. Sir Thomas Tyndale's second wife was Anne, daughter of sir Henry Fermer, by whom he had issue six sons, sir John; —; Francis, who died a bachelor, and his will was proved in 1631; Henry; Humphry, D.D. dean of Ely, president of Queen's college, Cambridge, and chancellor of Litchfield, who died and was buried at Ely in 1614; and Arthur: The daughters were Susan, Ursula, Elizabeth, Anne, and Amye.

Sir John, eldest son of sir Thomas Tyndale, by Anne his second wife, settled at Great Maplestead in Essex, where he built a house called New Chelmeshoo House. He was a master in chancery, and was murdered by John Bertram, as he was going to his chambers in Lincoln's Inn, Nov. 12, 1616. He married Anne, daughter of Thomas Egerton, esq; and widow of sir William Deane, of Great Maplestead, and by her had issue three sons and three daughters, viz. Deane, Arthur, Roger; Sarah, Margaret, and Hester. Deane Tyndale, eldest son of sir John, married Amye, daughter and heir of Robert Weston, of Prested Hall in Essex, and died in 1678, aged 92. He had issue by his said wife four sons, viz. Deane, buried March 23, 1633; Francis, who died young; John, of whom presently; Drue, a Hamborough merchant; and two daughters, Anne, and Elizabeth. John, the third but only surviving son of Deane Tyndale of Maplestead, married Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony Deane, of Dynes Hall, esq; by whom he had issue an only daughter Elizabeth, wedded to Jasper Blitheman. At the death of the said John Tyndale, the male heirs of this branch became extinct: I return therefore to the other sons of sir William Tyndale, of Hockwold in Norfolk, who, as before recited, were William, of whom hereafter; Robert; and Edward.

Edward Tyndale, fourth son of sir William, settled at the Pull, otherwise called Pull court, in Worcestershire, and married two wives. By the first he had issue two sons, Thomas, and William; and five daughters: By Joan his second wife,

3. Morton. Eastwood is a very large estate in this tithing, where was formerly a park. It is situated on a fine eminence, on the east side of the town, and has a large mansion house belonging to it, now converted to a farm house. This estate came to the crown by the attainder of Edward duke of Buckingham, and was granted to Thomas Tyndale 7 Eliz. Sir Richard Rogers, son of Robert Rogers of Bristol, died seized of Eastwood in 1635. It afterwards passed to sir Richard daughter of William Lawrence, he had three sons, John, Edward, and Henry; and three daughters. He died in the year 1546, as appears by the probat. of his will.

Thomas Tyndale, eldest son of Edward, settled at Eastwood in the parish of Thornbury, in the county of Gloucester, of which he had a grant 7 Eliz. 1565, and by Avice his wife, daughter of John Bodie, had an only son Edward, and one only daughter Elizabeth, who both died before their father. Thomas survived till the year 1571, and by his will gave the estate at Eastwood to his cousin Thomas Tyndale, a minor, whose descent I shall now proceed to trace from sir William Tyndale, of Hockwold in Norfolk.

William Tyndale, second son of sir William Tyndale of Hockwold, and brother of Edward of Pull-court, died about the year 1558, leaving issue one son Thomas; and two daughters, Joan, and Faith.

Thomas Tyndale, son of William, married a daughter of — Lloyd, of Grismond-castle in Monmouthshire, and of Whitminster in Gloucestershire, and had issue

Thomas, to whom Thomas Tyndale of Eastwood left that estate, in the year 1571. Thomas, the son, died in 1619, having married Oriana le Bon, daughter of John le Bon, counsellor in the parliament of Roan in Normandy, and one of the sisters and heirs of Claudius le Bon, of Farnaux in that province. By her he had issue four sons, Thomas, Francis, Edmund, and George, of whom the three last had no children; and three daughters, who all died unmarried.

Thomas Tyndale, the eldest son, sold the estate at Eastwood in this parish, to sir Richard Rogers, a grocer in Bristol, about the year 1628, and went to reside at the priory at Kingston St. Michael, near Calne in Wiltshire, where he died Feb. 22, 1671. The following curious letter from this gentleman to his cousin, Mr. — Tyndale, of Stinchcombe in this county, may be acceptable to some of my readers:

Cousin,

I have received your late letter, and am very glad to hear so well of you; and shall much rejoice to understand of any good which may arrive to the familie of Stinchcombe, so as I can not but hope that the thing you write of to me looks that way, tho' you mention it not. The name of Tyndale is well known in the Harold's office to be of great antiquity and reputation, but branched out into many and divers families, as all ancient names have been from age to age, without observing or keeping any knowledge of the times, or any certain genealogie of their descents, albeit they are of the same extraction and originall with the rest. The first familie of Tyndale in credit and reputation was of Dale castle in South Tyndale in Northumberland, and called, by writ, to the upper house of parliament in the time of Edward the 1st, and were barons of Langley in South Tyndale. That house extinguished by an heir general married to Bouldrey, whose heir general was after married unto Percie. The second brother of that Tyndale seated himself in Northamptonshire, at a place called Transover, and after they married the heir of sir Henry Deane, of Deane by Transover, and then the heir of sir Symond Bygoll, of Felbrigg, one of the knights of the garter, and it was a great match, and with one of the heirs of the lord Scales of Nacelles, dividing that inheritance with the earl of Oxford; afterwards they married the heir of Montfort in Norfolk, whether Tyndale removed his seat to Hockwold. This familie was in great reputation till the beginning of queen Elizabeth, at what time sir Thomas Tyndale made an end of all which his father sir John Tyndale had not spent before. Sir John Tyndale, second son to sir Thomas Tyndale, did leave his son Deane Tyndale, who (if living) is just my age, and dwelleth in Essex, near Henningham-castle, and hath some eight hundred Pound per annum left, and is the best Tyndale now remaining. From that familie my great grandfather came. There is also another familie of Tyndale of Brotherton in Yorkshire, of good estate and reputation, but giving some what a different coat, as you may perceive by what I have set down here underneath; but I cannot at this time see certain to blazon Brotherton's coat aright. I have heretofore heard that the first of your familie came out of the North in the times of the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, at what time many of great fort (their side going down) did fly for refuge and succor when they

Richard Ashfield, in right of Mary his wife, eldest daughter, and one of the coheiresses of sir Richard Rogers; and is at present the estate of sir Banks Jenkinson, of Oxfordshire, baronet, whose arms are given under Hawkesbury.

Hope is the name of a place in the parish of Thornbury. Sir William Compton died seized of ten messuages, five hundred acres of arable, and two hundred acres of pasture, and of other lands in Hope, near Thornbury, 20 H. 8. Mr. Thomas Morris has a good estate at Hope.

Buckover is the name of another place. Lands in Buckover in Thornbury, lately belonging to Edward duke of Buckingham, were granted to Elizabeth Harwell 15 H. 8. Lands called the Barrys, late the duke of Buckingham's, were granted to Thomas Henege, and Catherine his wife, for their lives, 23 H. 8.

4. Falfield, so called from the Saxon Fald, an inclosure. It was reputed a manor, and belonged to sir John Berkeley, of Beverstone, 6 H. 6. and to sir Maurice Berkeley 14 E. 4. William Berkeley was seized of it, and being outlawed for treason, it was granted to Thomas Brug, and his heirs male, 1 H. 7. But William Berkeley was afterwards restored to his estates. Sir William Berkeley died seized of Falfield 5 E. 6. and John Berkeley, son of sir William, had livery of it granted to him 6 E. 6. Livery of the manor of Falfield was also granted to Edward lord Stafford 9 Eliz. This manor, as before observed, is consolidated with that of Thornbury. Mr. Thomas Skey has a good estate here, which has been in his family for many generations.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Dursley, worth about 200*l.* a year. Christ Church college, Oxford, are patrons, and the reverend Mr. Holwell is the present incumbent. It was formerly given to the abbey of Tewkesbury, by Gilbert de Clare earl of Gloucester; and the abbey recovered it from the bishop of Worcester 26 E. 1. It was appropriated to the use of the monastery could find it. That it was your predecessor his fortune to come into Gloucestershire, changing his name to that of Huchins, and that afterwards he married there, and so having children, he did before his death declare his right name, and from whence and upon what subject he came thither; and so taking his own name, did leave it unto his children, who have since continued it, as it was fit they should. This I have heard from your good father himself. Two of my sons do know them of Brotherton and my son Thomas (now married in London) hath been there. I have made you now (as you see) an ample relation of all that I can at present call to mind that may be proper to acquaint you withal, and shall think well thereof if it may any way satisfy your desires. My son William is now with me, and desires to be very kindly remembered unto you, as having (by his saying) been known and received courtesies from you in the Low Countreys. If you please to write any more unto me, you shall not need to put my name Thomas, nor the priory to the superscription; I am much known without those additions. My wife is also yet living, though in a sad condition this long time, but she hath not forgotten you, praying me to remember her love unto you. It is now time to give over and make an end, so concluding with my affectionate respects and good wishes to yourself and to your nephew, tho' unknown, I rest

Your loving kinsman, and assured friend,
Thomas Tyndale.
Kington St. Michael,
Febr. 3d 1663.

This Thomas Tyndale took to wife Dorothy, daughter of William Stafford, of Northamptonshire, by whom he had five sons and four daughters, viz. Stafford, who died childless; William, Thomas, George, and John; and four daughters, Frances, married to John Poree, of Roan in Normandy; Anne, wedded to captain Doughty; Dorothy, and Orian.

William Tyndale, of Kington St. Michael, second son of Thomas, died Nov. 3, 1675. He took to wife Margaret, daughter of Anderson Atcherley, of Shropshire, and by her had five sons, Thomas, George, John, Athelstan, and Henry.

Thomas Tyndale, the eldest son, born June 2, 1667, removed to Bathford near Bath, where he died in the year 1747. He married first, a daughter of ——— Winchcombe, of Witney in Oxfordshire, and by her had a son Thomas, who died young, and one daughter, Dorothy. By Elizabeth his second wife, daughter of George Booth, of Woodford in Cheshire, esq; he had issue two sons, John, who died unmarried in 1728; and George; and four daughters, Martha-Maria, Elizabeth, Mary, and Arabella.

George Tyndale, second son of Thomas, married to his first wife, Vere, daughter of the honourable and reverend Robert Booth, D.D. and dean of Bristol, fifth son of George lord Delamere, by whom he hath issue one son, George-Booth Tyndale, born Sep. 8, 1743; who being bred to the law in the Inner Temple, was called to the bar in 1768; and one daughter, Elizabeth-Vere, who died young. His second wife was Margaretta, daughter of John Bamfylde, of Hestercombe in Somersetshire, esq; by whom he has issue two sons, John, and Thomas-Bamfylde; and three daughters, Margaretta, Elizabeth, and Charlotta-Maria. Which George Tyndale, esq; resides at Bathford in Somersetshire, where he has a good house and estate. His arms are, Argent, a fess gules between three garbs sable.

* In the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the laity began to think they had done enough for monasteries; therefore the monks sought out other means to increase their revenues, by despoiling the secular clergy, who were the true labourers in the church, and thereupon appropriation of tithes to regular monks became more frequent. The following is a translation of the appropriation, as given by sir Robert Atkyns:

TO all sons of holy mother the church, to whom these presents shall come, Walter, by God's permission, bishop of Worcester, sendeth grace, health, and eternal benediction. Tho' we are obliged out of the duty of common charity, to extend some favour to all persons in misery, towards the relief of their necessities; we are however bound more principally to exert ourselves in the assistance of the religious under our care, who whilst they are busied in the fruits of good works, we see reduced and fallen into great want, and not by any fault of their own. Therefore we having a due regard to the monastery of Tewkesbury, and to the religious men the abbat and monks of the said monastery, within our diocese, which was heretofore founded by the progenitors of famous memory of the lord Gilbert de Clare, late earl of Gloucester and Hertford, and endowed with spiritualities and temporalities situated in remote parts, and particularly in Wales, which was subject to the frequent incursions of enemies, by which means it is but meanly endowed, and not able to subsist the convent, and maintain the poor, and other necessary charges and burthens of the same monastery, as ought to be; and it also lies oppressed under divers calamities of fire, and inundation of waters on their lands and possessions, and by other adversities and malice of this present world, will be daily brought into great and notorious decay, which unless timely relieved, can scarce in probability be ever recovered. And we taking notice that the parish church of Thornbury within our diocese, is under the patronage of the said monastery, and that it was heretofore duly and canonically appropriated to the said abbat and monks for the time being, and to their successors, for the better support of the burthens and charges aforesaid; and that they for a long time had actually and peaceably enjoyed the possession thereof, and that a great part of the revenue of the said monastery, at the time of the appropriation did consist herein, and that since they have been deprived of the same by some secular men, upheld with the power of some great nobles, who have divers times wrongfully presented to the said church, by their own damnable injustice, and not thro' any fault of the said monastery, who, notwithstanding, have continued to maintain the functions of their monastery, in like manner as if they had enjoyed the profits of that impropriation, in as full manner as at their first foundation and appropriation, and their expences by these means have exceeded their yearly revenue, whereby they have unavoidably incurred on themselves and their monastery, a heavy and insupportable debt. And further, they are at this monastery by Walter bishop of Worcester, in the year 1314. The impropriation is now vested in Christ Church college, by grant from the crown 38 H. 8. But the rectory of Thornbury was granted to William Fitz-Williams, and Arthur Hilton, 7 E. 6.

The tithes of lady Symonds's lands, and all the small tithes, belong to the vicarage. There are three chapels annexed to this church, Oldbury, Rangeworthy, and Falfield.

day subject to a great and unusual charge, by reason of the great travelling which is thro' that place both by land and water, it being situated between two great rivers, the Severn and the Avon, which bring a great concourse of people, who expect to be entertained by the said monastery, and has brought a charge upon the monastery, beyond what it is able to bear, and has necessarily reduced the monastery, and abbat, and monks, to great poverty, which can no way be relieved and redressed without the augmentation of their possessions and revenues. And we being fully advised of the truth of all and singular of these circumstances, we therefore beholding with grief and an eye of compassion, the oppression and misery of these said religious men and the monastery, and desirous to assist them to the best of our power, as becomes our holy office, and that these religious men should not be incumbered with the anxious necessities of this life, who have devoted themselves to the service of God alone, during their whole lives, under the observance of pious rules; and we further considering how we may deliver them out of this impendent ruin into which they have fallen, and restore them to a more easy and plentiful augmentation of their profit, whereby they may keep better hospitality for the future, and may perform greater acts of charity, and may uphold the chapel founded by the aforesaid earl, to the honour of the blessed Mary mother of God, and glorious virgin, which chapel hath lately been built anew, at the burthen and charge of the said abbat and monks of the said monastery, and that the mass of the blessed virgin may be daily said therein, to the praise of God and of his mother, and of All Saints, to the increase of divine worship, for the prosperity of the living, and the rest of the souls of the dead; and that the officers and ministers who assist in the celebration of the same, and the other charges thereunto belonging, may be sustained, we, by the influence of divine piety and pontifical authority, do give, grant, assign and appropriate the parish church of Thornbury within our diocese aforesaid, in which the said religious men have a just right of patronage, to the said monastery of Tewkesbury, and to the abbat and monks of that place, and to their own proper use for ever, having a due regard to the right and interest of the said master Roger Marshall the present rector of Thornbury, and all others who can have any interest or claim, being first summoned, and their consent on this behalf being first obtained.

We further will and grant, that after the cession or death of the said master Roger, the present rector of the church, the actual possessions of the same church, with all its chapels thereon depending, and all its rights, members, and appurtenances whatsoever, without any interposition of us or any of our successors, shall be converted to the proper use of the said monastery, for the better support of their charges, reserving nevertheless a moderate portion to the vicarage of the said church of Thornbury, which we do fix to be the sum of 25 marks sterling, yearly to be received out of the profits of the said church, by the vicar, to be presented by the said religious men, for the performing the duty of the said church and chapels thereunto belonging, saving all rights which belong to our cathedral church at Worcester.

In witness whereof we have hereunto fixt our seal, dated at London in the year of our Lord 1314, and in the second year of our consecration.

The same bishop Walter established an endowment for the vicar, which is thus translated by sir Robert Atkins:

TO all sons of holy mother the church, to whom these presents shall come, Walter, by divine permission, bishop of Worcester, sendeth eternal health in our Lord. Know ye, that whereas for certain good causes we have lately appropriated the church of Thornbury in the deanery of Dursley, within our diocese, to the religious men the abbat and convent of Tewkesbury, and to their successors, and to the monastery of that place, reserving to ourselves the power of ordering and taxing unto the value of 25 marks, for the use of the vicar of the church, all which does in our said appropriation more fully appear. Therefore, by a legal inquisition of divers worthy rectors and vicars of the said deanery, and others, laymen, in form of law being summoned, who being rightly informed of the true value of all the oblations, obventions, and other the lesser tithes, rights, and

The church is dedicated to the virgin Mary. It is large and handsome, with a spacious aisle on each side the nave, and two cross aisles, and a beautiful high tower at the west end. The great chancel belongs to Christ Church college. It is said that the body of the church and the tower were built by Fitz-Harding, who dwelt at Roll's Place; and that the south aisle was built by Hugh lord Stafford.

There were four chantries in this church, one appurtenances of the said parochial church of Thornbury, and therein certified by them, that the oblations, obventions, and the other lesser tithes due to the altar, to wit, of milk, wool, lambs, cows, calves, swine, poultry, pidgeon-houses, eggs, bees, herbs, flax, fishings, and gardens, and likewise the tithes of the hay in the whole parish, whether a sum of money be paid for it, or else gathered in kind: Besides and except the tithes of hay of the demean lands of the manor of Thornbury, lying within the bounds, limits, and tithing places of the said church, belonging to the lady Symonds, are estimated at 18 marks and 10s. and being willing to tax and make up the rest of the intended revenue of the vicarage to the full, (as in justice ought to be) out of money arising by the wax, which thro' devotion and reverence to the holy virgin Mary, whose image is placed in the chancel of the said church, or the ready money, or gold or silver, which may be there offered, and also with a sufficient house in the town of Thornbury, standing on the ground belonging to the church, lately held by one Relibron for his life, together with a garden adjoining to the said house, and belonging to the rectory before the appropriation was made.

Wherefore we the bishop, having summoned the above mentioned persons, and all things being observed in form as ought to be, and considering that the aforesaid taxation and assignation to be just and equal in all respects, and that the said oblations, obventions, and lesser tithes, together with the house and garden, and other contingent profits, will one with another arise to make five marks, and will be sufficient to maintain the vicarage and vicar, with his and all the charges of the vicarage, do appoint, decree, and confirm, that the further supply to the vicarage ought to consist in those said portions, and that the said vicar at present, and all the vicars his successors, ought to be contented with the said offerings, obventions, small tithes, and other portions, as is above enumerated, without any further profit to be demanded from the said religious men.

We do moreover order, appoint, and decree, that the said vicar in the church of Thornbury, now canonically instituted, and all the vicars his successors in the same, shall be firmly obliged and bound to discharge all procurations to the archbishop, and shall furnish lights in the cathedral synods, and shall find and keep in repair all books and vestments, and other ornaments necessary to the said church, as heretofore has been accustomed by the rectors of the said church, and by right they ought to have done; and to sustain all these afore-mentioned things, and all other usual and ordinary burthens whatsoever and howsoever, at their own proper costs and charges, excepting the reparation, amendment, and building of the chancel of the church of Thornbury aforesaid; for which end all other extraordinary charges which are imposed on the church of Thornbury, or shall any way hereafter be imposed, the said vicar and his successors, shall be rated for their share at the proportion of 15 marks, except in the payment of four marks, which by the consent and assent of the said abbat and convent, we have ordered and reserved, and by them truly submitted unto on their part (which submission has been made appear unto us) to be yearly paid unto us and our successors, when the see of Worcester shall be full, and unto the chapter of the place when the see shall be vacant, which burthen we have laid upon the church of Thornbury for our proper use, by authority of an ordinary, with their consent as aforesaid, and do impose the same on the said church, under the name of an annuity. In witness therefore of this our free and perpetual decree, we have caused it to be drawn in three parts, whereof we will one, signed with our seal, and with the seal of the vicar of Thornbury, shall remain with the said abbat and convent; another part signed with our seal, and the seal of the abbat and convent, shall remain with the said vicar and his successors; and a third part signed with the seal of the abbat and convent, in token of their submission and consent to all the premises, shall remain to us and our successors.

We the abbat and convent aforesaid, in sign and confirmation of our submission, and consent to all the premises, have hereunto affixed our seal.

Dated at our chapter in Tewkesbury, the eleventh day of August, in the year of our Lord 1315.

dedicated to the virgin Mary, and erected in the year 1499; another called Barne's chantry, of which Thomas Smyth was the last incumbent, and received a pension of 5*l.* in 1553; the others were Bruis chantry, and Slimbridge chantry, whereof the abbat of St. Augustin's in Bristol was patron. The lands belonging to the two latter were granted to sir Arthur Darcie 7 E. 6.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

At the foot of the altar, there formerly stood a large raised tomb of black marble, inlaid with brass. But when the chancel was afterwards repaired, the tomb was taken down, and the upper slab fixed in the floor, with the following inscription on a plate of brass:

Thomas Tyndale dyed the 28 of April, buried 31st May, 1571.

Ye se how death doth Spare no age no Kynd
How I am lapt in Claye and dead you fynde
My Wife and Childeren lye here with me
No Gould, no friend, no Strength could randome bee
The End of Vayne delighte and Ill Intente,
The end of Care and Matter to repent,
The End of faere for frynd and Worldly Wo,

Benefactions.

Mr. William Edwards of Alveston built a free-school in the town, which Mr. White afterwards endowed with 14*l.* a year.

Sir John Stafford built an almshouse for six poor people, and endowed it with 10*l.* a year, charged on his estate at Buckover.

Thomas Slimbridge built an almshouse for four poor people, and endowed it with lands worth 11*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* a year. And by his will dated Sept. 27, 1605, gave all his houses, gardens, and lands within the borough and lordship of Thornbury, to the use of the poor of the said borough, at the disposal of the mayor and eldest burgessees for ever.

John Hilp of Thornbury, gent. by deed dated the 1st of June, 2 Jac. 1. gave 52*s.* a year charged on his houses and lands there, to be distributed weekly to the poor. Also a messuage, with a garden in the said borough, called the lower almshouse, for four poor people for ever.

John White of Thornbury, by his will in 1590, gave 17*s.* 4*d.* charged on a tavern in that borough, to the use of the poor.

Katherine Rippe of Thornbury, by her will, proved in 1594, gave a house there for an almshouse, and charged her tan-house there with 3*s.* 4*d.* a year for the reparation of the same almshouse.

Cecily Harwood, of the city of Gloucester, widow, by her will in 1668, gave the interest of 20*l.* for placing out poor children of this parish apprentices.

Christian Morse gave the interest of 20*l.* to the same use.

Mr. Thomas Haynes of Wick, gave 20*l.* to the poor, which was distributed accordingly.

John Atwells of Thornbury, gent. by his will, proved in 1730, gave 500*l.* for establishing a free school in Thornbury, for teaching to read, write, knit, and sew. Also a further sum of 200*l.* to be laid out on lands, the rents to be applied to apprentice out poor boys of Thornbury to trades.

William Stephens, of Littleton upon Severn, gave 20*l.* a year to such poor of Thornbury as have not relief of the parish.

Here is also a free grammar school, but I could not obtain the exact particulars of its establishment.

According to sir Robert Atkyns, when he compiled his account of this parish, there were 270 houses, and about 1100 inhabitants, whereof 100 were freeholders; yearly births 33, burials 31. The inhabitants are now about 1971.

T I B E R T O N

IS a small parish in the Forest division, and in the hundred of the Duchy of Lancaster, about four miles distant south-eastward from Newent, seven north-eastward from Mitchel-Dean, and six north-westward from Gloucester.

The name is sometimes written Tibberton, but the antient orthography is Tebriſton, as in Domesday; and it seems to indicate that the place belonged to one Tebri, or in other words, that it was Tebri's Town, perhaps early in the Saxon times.

The parish was comprized in the hundred of Botloe, 'till, by act of parliament, in the fiftieth year of the reign of king Edward the Third, Lancashire was erected into a county palatine, and John of Gaunt, son of that king, was honoured with the title of duke of Lancaster. Then all those estates in Gloucestershire which came to him in right of Blanch his wife, daughter of the preceding duke of Lancaster, of which Tiberton was one, were severed from the hundreds to which they antiently belonged, and erected into a new one, then first, and ever since, called the hundred of the duchy of Lancaster.

Tiberton enjoys an unlimited right of common in the forest of Dean, and in Huntley common. It lies in the vale, and the soil is naturally rich and fertile; but, like the adjoining parishes of Tainton and Rudford, is not in the highest state of cultivation. Here, and in most other parts of the forest division, is plenty of iron ore, and some orcharding, from which they make an excellent sort of cyder, much esteemed for its rich and pleasant flavour. They also make good cheese, and the corn fields produce fine wheat and other grain. But the place affords no other curious productions of art or nature.

A brook divides this parish from Tainton and Newent, and taking its course to Rudford, runs through two arches under the river Leden. This under passage was enlarged when those arches were made, about six years ago, and by that means the meadows, which before were almost continually in a wet and rotten state, have been drained and very much improved.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' William the son of Baderon holds Tebriſton, ' in Botelau hundred. There are five hides. ' Ulfelin held it of king Edward, and could go ' where he pleased. There are three plow-tillages ' in demean, and ten villeins, and eight bordars, ' with eight plow-tillages. There are four servi, ' and a wood three miles long, and one broad. ' It was worth 6*l.* 10*s.* now 100*s.*' Domesday, p. 73. Henry parish of Chepstow, and leads to the town of that name. The other end is in Tidenham, and by a statute, 28 Eliz. it was enacted, that one half of the bridge should be repaired by Monmouthshire, the other by Gloucestershire. It is built of timber, at a prodigious height above low water, for the tide here flows sixty feet high at particular times, and it is thought that it does not rise higher in any part of the world.

The famous intrenchment, called by the Britons Claudb Offa, i.e. Offa's Dyke, which was thrown up by the Mercian king of that name, about the year 760, to divide and protect his dominions from the Welch, began in this parish; and there are at this time large remains of it, extending almost from the Severn to the Wye, in length near half a mile, crossing the turnpike-road that leads from Chepstow to Beachley, at a place called Buttington's Tump. It was a prodigious work, and was carried from this place northward, to the mouth of the river Dee, in Flintshire, crossing Radnorshire near Knighton, to which town the Welch, upon that account, gave the name of Tref-y-claudb, that is, the place of the ditch. And John of Salisbury writes, that king Harold made a law, that if any Welchman should be found with a weapon on this side the dyke, he should lose his right hand.

The dyke now separates Beachley from Sudbury, two hamlets in this parish, the latter of which was so called in reference to the bulwarks, or camp, about two miles northward of it. Besides these, there are traces of other old fortifications upon Beachley-green, which at this time also go by the name of the Bulwarks.

When or by whom these works were made is altogether uncertain, but most likely at different times; for as Beachley is a strip of land running out between the before-mentioned great rivers, it was easily fortified, and the possession of it was thought of importance in the many civil wars which this kingdom has so frequently and fatally experienced.

In the reign of king Charles the First, as Corbet relates it, prince Rupert sent five hundred horse and foot into the forest, who began to fortify Beachley for a lasting guard, and which was then the only commodious ferry, or passage, from Wales to Bristol, and the western parts. 'The governor,' (says my author) meaning colonel Massie, 'advanced upon them four days after they began the fortifications, and had drawn the trench half way from the banks of one river to the other, when the other part was well guarded with an high quick-set hedge, which they lined with musqueteers, and a ditch within, with a meadow beyond, wherein they had made a re-intrenchment. At high water the place was inaccessible, by reason of their ships which guarded each river with ordnance, lying level with the banks, and clearing the face of the approach from Wye to Severn. Wherefore the governor taking the advantage of low water, ten musqueteers were selected out of the forlorn hope, to creep along the hedges. These gave the first alarm, and caused the enemy to spend their first shot in vain. Upon the governor's signal, the forlorn hope rushed on, being followed by the reserve, and fell upon the hack, when the whole and each part of the action was carried on without interruption. Of the king's troops some were killed, the rest taken prisoners, besides some few that recovered the boats, and many of them that took the water were drowned.

The king's friends attempted a second time to fortify this place, but before the works were compleat, colonel Massie attacked and defeated them, but had like to have failed in the attempt, for the foremost of his party forcing two or three pallisadoes, found themselves between the line of pallisadoes and a quick-set hedge lined with musqueteers. The governor, in this critical situation, who was now the leader of the forlorn hope, with not a little difficulty forced his horse over the hedge, fell in among the king's men, by whom he was furiously recharged, his head-piece knocked off with the but-end of a musket, and was in the utmost danger, when some of his men came to his assistance, and bore down the enemy before them, slew thirty, and took prisoners a lieutenant-colonel, a major, two captains, three lieutenants, three ensigns, with other officers and soldiers to the amount of two hundred and twenty. They forced sir John Winter down the cliff into the river, where a little boat lay to receive him. Many took the water and were drowned, others by recovering the boats saved themselves.'

These particulars are extracted from Corbet's Military Government of the City of Gloucester, and have a connexion with the history of the village. The place where sir John Winter escaped is called Winter's Leap, and there is a tradition that he leaped his horse, at once, from the high rock on the side of the Wye, into the water. But that could not be the fact, for both horse and rider must have been dashed to pieces against the declivity of the rock in the attempt.

It is said that antiently, near the confluence of the Severn and the Wye, there stood a chapel, dedicated, according to Leland, to St. Terendake, but others say to St. Tecla, who was martyred in the year 47. What they call the ruins of it may be seen among the rocks, at low water, but at high water they are overflowed, and at least a hundred yards distant from the shore. Hence it may be inferred, with some degree of probability, that if it really was a chapel, either the tides did not flow so high as they now do, when it was first built; or else, that it must ever have been an useless building.

At Beachley in this parish is a ferry or passage over the Severn, between Bristol and Wales. It is is called Beachley, or the Old Passage, and 'till lately was the lowest upon the river. The opposite passage-house is at Aust, in the parish of Henbury. The times for passing are already set down in the 47th page of this book, to which the reader is referred. I come now to treat

Of the Manors and other Estates.

When Domesday was compiled, there were several great proprietors of estates in this parish, as appears by the following translation of the passages in the record concerning it.

'The abbey of Bath had one manor, Tedeneham by name, in Tedeneham hundred. They had thirty hides there, of which ten were in demean. There were thirty-eight villeins, having thirty-eight plow-tillages, and ten bordars, eleven fisheries in the Severn in demean, and forty-two fisheries of the villeins; one fishery in the Wye, and two fisheries and a half of the villeins.

'Earl Roger added two fisheries in the Wye. There is a wood two miles long, and half a mile broad, and twelve other bordars.

'Earl William gave one yard-land of this estate, with one villein, to O. the bishop, his brother. And he gave two fisheries in the Severn, and half a fishery in the Wye, with one villein, to Walter de Laci. And he gave two fisheries in the Wye, with one villein, to Ralph de Limesi. And he gave half a hide of land, and the church, with the tithes of the manor, to the abbey of Lyra.

'This manor paid no tax in the time of king Edward, except provisions for the monks. Archbishop Stigand held it when earl William took to it. Now it pays 25 lib. twenty of it in Ora and white money. There is now a mill of 40 den. Domesday, p. 69.

'William de Ow holds one yard-land and a half in Tideham, and they were taxed. Stigand the archbishop held them. There is one villein, with one plow-tillage, and two fisheries. It is worth and was worth 10 sol. Ib. p. 73.

'Roger de Laci holds half a hide in Tedeham. Archbishop Stigand held it. There is one villein, with one plow-tillage, and four fisheries and a half. It is worth and was worth 20 s. Ib. p. 75.

Some time after the compilation of Domesday, the Welch possessed themselves of Tidenham and Woolaston, from whom they were taken by Walter and Roger, younger brothers of Gilbert earl of Clare, which happened in the year 1160, in the reign of king Henry the Second. Gilbert de Clare, surnamed Strongbow, left Richard Strongbow his son and heir, who became earl of Pembroke and Strigule, now called Chepstow. His only daughter Isabel was married to William Mareschal, who, in right of his wife, was earl of Pembroke, whereby this manor came into that family. They were descended from Gilbert Mare-schal, who bore the office of Mareschal to king Henry the First; which office descended hereditarily in that family to the famous William earl of Pembroke, who died 3 H. 3. and left five sons and four daughters.

William earl of Pembroke, son of William, gave a considerable estate in the manor of Tudeham to the abbey of St. Mary of Tintern in Monmouthshire, founded by Walter de Clare in 1131, with common of pasture, and of wood, and other benefits in his chase of Tudeham, 8 H. 3. All the five brothers were successively earls of Pembroke, and all died without issue, whereby the sisters became coheireffes. Maud, the eldest, was married to Hugh Bigot, earl of Norfolk, who, in her right, and for her share, was seized of the manor of Tidenham.

This Hugh Bigot was descended from Roger Bigot, who came into England with king William the Conqueror, and died 7 H. 1. William Bigot, son of Roger, was steward of the household to king Henry the First, and was drowned coming from Normandy with the king's childred 20 H. 1. Hugh Bigot was brother and heir to William, and also steward to the king. He is eminent in history for making oath that king Henry the First, on his death bed, gave the crown of England to king Stephen, in disinherison of his own daughter Maud, the empress. He died in pilgrimage to the Holy Land 23 H. 2.

Roger Bigot succeeded Hugh his father in the earldom of Norfolk, and stewardship of the king's household, and died 5 H. 3. Hugh earl of Norfolk, son of Roger, married Maud, coheireffes of William Mareschal earl of Pembroke, as above-said, by whom he had a son Roger, earl of Norfolk, who died seized of Tidenham, and of 10 s. rent in the village of Beteslegh, and of the hamlet of Lancout, 25 E. 1. This earl Roger had levied a fine of his honour, and of his lands, to the king, taking back an estate taille to himself and Alice his wife, and dying without issue, the manor of Tidenham came to the crown.

King Edward the Second granted the title of earl of Norfolk, and all the estate of the former earl of Norfolk, 6 E. 2. to his brother Thomas, the fifth son of king Edward the First, generally called Thomas of Brotherton, a place in Yorkshire, where he was born. He died seized of the manor of Tidenham 12 E. 3. leaving two daughters coheireffes, Margaret, and Alice.

Margaret was first married to John de Segrave, and afterwards to sir Walter de Manny, who, in her right, was seized of the manor of Tidenham 46 E. 3. She was afterwards created dutchess of Norfolk for life, 21 R. 2. Elizabeth, sole daughter and heireffes of Margaret, by her first husband John de Segrave, was married to John de Mowbray, who was therefore created earl of Norfolk, and earl Mareschal.

The family of the Mowbrays descended from Nigel de Albini, who was of noble extraction, and and together with his brother William de Albini, came into England with king William the Conqueror. Nigel, by his mother's side, was a Mowbray, and had done eminent service in the wars for king William, and also for king William the Second, and king Henry the First, and was therefore rewarded with all the estates of Robert Mowbray, earl of Northumberland, who had been guilty of treasonable conspiracies. He married Maud, the wife of that earl, whilst her husband was living, by a special dispensation from the pope; but having no children by her, was the cause of their divorce. He then married Gundred, daughter of Girald de Gournay.

Roger de Mowbray was son and heir of Nigel de Albini, and of Gundred; and by command of king Henry the First, took the name of Mowbray. He married Alice de Gaunt, and was buried near Gundred his mother, in the abbey of Biland in Yorkshire, which he had founded for Cistercian monks, in 1138. Nigel de Mowbray, son and heir of Roger, married Mabel, daughter of the earl of Clare, and died in pilgrimage to the Holy Land.

William de Mowbray, son of Nigel, married Agnes, daughter of the earl of Arundel, and fiercely espoused the cause of the barons against king John. Nigel Mowbray was son of William, and married the daughter and heir of Roger de Camvil, but died without issue 13 H. 3. Roger de Mowbray, brother and heir of Nigel, married Maud, the daughter of William Beauchamp, of Bedford, and came of age 25 H. 3. He had a son Roger, who had livery of his lands 6 E. 1. and was summoned as a baron to parliament. He married Rose, sister to Gilbert earl of Clare, and died 26 E. 1. John de Mowbray, son of the last Roger, married Aliva, daughter, and afterwards coheir, of William de Brewes of Gowher. He was governor of York, and sheriff of Yorkshire, and being taken in rebellion against king Edward the Second, was hanged at York. John de Mowbray, son of John, was in favour of king Edward the Third. He married Joan, one of the daughters of Henry earl of Lancaster, and died of the plague at York 35 E. 3. John de Mowbray, son and heir of the last John, married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of John lord Segrave, by Margaret, daughter and heir of Thomas of Brotherton, as before related, and was, in her right, created earl of Norfolk, and earl Marshal, and was lord of the manor of Tidenham. He was slain by the Turks, near Constantinople, 42 E. 3.

John de Mowbray, son of the last John, was four years old at his father's death. He was created earl of Nottingham 1 R. 2. and died 6 R. 2. whereupon his brother Thomas de Mowbray was created earl of Nottingham. He married, first, Elizabeth, daughter and heir of John le Strange, of Blackmore, and was created earl Marshal for life. His second wife was Elizabeth, the daughter of Richard earl of Arundel, and had the grant to him and his heirs to be earls Marshal, and to bear a golden truncheon. He joined with the debauched favourites of king Richard the Second, and to gratify them promoted the death of his father-in-law the earl of Arundel, and guarded him to execution. He was a principal contriver of the death of Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester, uncle to the king, who was murdered at Calais, which obtained him such favour from the king, that he was created duke of Norfolk; but that day twelve-month, on which the duke of Gloucester was murdered, this duke of Norfolk was banished the realm, and died of the plague at Venice, in his return from Jerusalem, 1 H. 4. and that year the manor of Tidenham was seized by the crown. He left two sons, Thomas, and John; and two daughters, Isabel, married to James lord Berkeley, and Margaret, married to sir Robert Howard.

Thomas Mowbray, eldest son of Thomas duke of Norfolk, had no other title than Earl Marshal. He married Constance, daughter of John Holland, earl of Huntingdon, which drew him into rebellion against king Henry the Fourth, and he was beheaded at York 6 H. 4. John, his brother, and next heir, married Catherine, daughter to Ralph Nevil earl of Westmoreland, and was restored to the dukedom of Norfolk. He died 11 H. 6. and Catherine his widow was endowed with many great estates, and with the manor of Tidenham. He was succeeded by his son John, duke of Norfolk, who married Elizabeth, daughter of John the first earl of Shrewsbury, and died 15 E. 4. leaving an only daughter, Anne, who was married to Richard duke of York, second son of king Edward the Fourth, but died without issue, whereby a vast estate came to the families of Berkeley and Howard, whose ancestors had married Isabel and Margaret, daughters of Thomas Mowbray, the first duke of Norfolk; and a partition of that great estate was made between their heirs 14 H. 7.

The manor of Tidenham came soon afterwards to the earls of Worcester. Henry earl of Worcester died seized of it 3 E. 6. from whom it has regularly descended down to Henry duke of Beaufort, the present lord of the manor of Tidenham.

John ap Adam held one mill in Tudenham, and one hundred and sixty acres of land lying within the liberties of Chepstow, 6 E. 2. And by the escheator's inquisition taken 9 E. 4. n. 21. it appears, that William Herbert earl of Pembroke, who was taken prisoner in the battle near Banbury, between the Yorkists and Lancastrians, and beheaded the next day, died seized of the castle, manor and lordship of Chepstow, of the manor of Tudenham, and of other very great estates. But this must not be understood of the principal manor of Tidenham. Thomas Atkyns was seized of fifty acres of arable land, twenty of meadow.

meadow, thirty of pasture, and twenty of wood in Tudenham, by the grant of Henry earl of Worcester, 4 H. 8.

HAMLETS, and places of distinct names.

1. Church-End, in which are twenty families. Mr. Charles Williams has a good house near the church, late the property of Mr. William Jones.

2. Bishton, formerly written Bisten, containing nineteen families.

3. Sudbury, in which are nineteen families. William Webley, of Chancery Lane, London, esq; has a handsome house called the Mead, and a good estate in this hamlet.

4. Beachley, antiently Bettesley, containing eleven families. There is a house of good accommodation, and a passage over the Severn, at this place, very much frequented in the route between Wales and the city of Bristol. The river is upwards of two miles over, and the opposite passage-house is at Aust, in the parish of Henbury. It is called the Old Passage, in reference to another lately set up a few miles below, at St. Pierre in Monmouthshire. It is high water at new and full moon, a little after seven o'clock, in general, but the wind may occasion a small variation. Proper directions for passing are given at p. 47. Henry Lewis, esq; was seized of the manor of Bettesley, from whom it descended to George Lewis, his son, who died seized thereof 10 Car. 1. and left William his son and heir seven years old. Morgan Lewis, esq; is the present lord of this manor; but the ferry belongs to four proprietaries, viz. the same Morgan Lewis, esq; William-Bromley Chester, esq; Mr. Samuel Hill, and Mr. Charles Williams. There was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. Ewin, near the passage-house, now totally demolished.

5. Wibden, or Widden, formerly belonging to John Madocke, esq; who had a good estate and a handsome seat here, now fallen into ruins, and the estate is gone out of the name. The same John Madocke was descended from Owen Gwineth, a prince of South Wales. Some of his ancestors resided for several generations at Alvington, and removed thence to Wibden. John Madocke died seized of Wibden in 1587, and the estate continued in the same name and family 'till within our memory; but it now belongs to William Sheldon, of Weston in Warwickshire, esq. Morgan Lewis, esq; has the manor of Walden in this hamlet. There are twenty-six families in Wibden.

6. Stroat, or Strote, where the James's have for many ages enjoy'd a good estate, which is now the property of Mr. Selwyn James. There are fourteen families here.

7. Lancant, containing three families. There is a chapel in this hamlet dedicated to St. James, where divine service is performed once a month. It was formerly a distinct rectory, to which Henry earl of Worcester presented in 1548; but it has lately been annexed to Wollaston.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, worth about 100*l.* a year. James Davis, esq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. William Seys the present incumbent.

The impropriation formerly belonged to the priory of Sheen in Surrey, who gave thirteen bushels of wheat, and 13*d.* in money yearly to the poor, on the Thursday before Easter; and it was granted to Thomas James, 5 Jac. reserving that yearly payment, which has been continued to the poor ever since. Mr. William Webley, and Mr. Charles Williams are the present impropriators.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is a double building, supported by pillars in the middle, and has a low tower, with six bells, at the west end. It stands on high ground, and is seen from many parts at a considerable distance on the other side of the Severn.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a raised tomb in the church-yard, inclosed with iron pallisadoes, with short inscriptions for the following persons, who died in the years set after their names, viz. John Madocke of Wibden, gent. in 1587; Edmund his son, 1626; Anselm son of Edmund, 1615; John son of Anselm, 1643; Edmund son of John, 1693; John son of Edmund, 1732-3. At one end of the tomb are the family arms, viz. Argent, a chevron between three foxes heads erased sable.

On another raised tomb are inscriptions for the following persons, with the dates of their decease, viz. William Webley, 1712; Walter Webley, his son, 1763, &c. &c. And their family arms, viz. Or, a bend between three mullets pierced sable.

Benefactions.

Thirteen bushels of wheat, and 13*d.* in money are given annually out of the impropriation to the poor.

Mrs. Bridget Madocke of Wibden, by her will, proved in chancery in 1736, gave 5*l.* a year in land, 50*s.* part thereof, for teaching poor children to read; 40*s.* to the minister for catechism in the church, from the first Sunday in April to the first Sunday in June; and 10*s.* a year for keeping the tomb of her ancestors in the church-yard in repair.

William Stevens gave 5*s.* a year to the poor; and John Stevens of Bristol gave 10*s.* a year to the same use.

There were 140 houses in this parish at the beginning of this century, and about 600 inhabitants, whereof 32 were freeholders; yearly births 16, burials 15. Atkyns. In ten years, from 1708, to 1717, both inclusive, there were entered in the parish register 165 baptisms, and 138 burials; and in the same period of time, from 1767 to 1776, the baptisms were 163, and the burials 150. The present number of families is 112, and of inhabitants about 500.

TITHERINGTON.

THIS parish lies in two hundreds. The hamlet of Itchington is in the hundred of Henbury. The part called Titherington is in that of Thornbury, distant three miles south-eastward from the town of that name, three and a half westward from Wickwar, and twenty-four southward from Gloucester. It is bounded on the east by Cromhal, on the west by Alveston, on the north by Thornbury, and on the south and south-east by Iron Acton and Wickwar.

The village is seated on the south side and at the foot of a high rock, called Tower Hill, whose top is pretty level, and adjoins to Milbury Heath, which lies part in Thornbury, and part in this parish. To the south of the village the lands form a flat vale of very rich pasture ground.

About a quarter of a mile westward from the church, there is a strong intrenchment on an eminence called Castle Hill. It is an oblong square, inclosing about four or five acres of ground, and overlooks the vale to the east and south-east. It is generally supposed, from its construction and other circumstances, to be the work of the Romans, who had certainly a lodgment here, as may be concluded from a tessellated pavement dug up at Stidcot in this parish, towards the close of the last century. This was one of those forts supposed to have been thrown up by that people to protect their road between the Trajectus and Aqua Solis. There is a prevailing notion in the neighbourhood, that a castle formerly stood upon this ground, but that is a mistake arising from the name of the place, which was called Castle Hill from the camp there, in like manner as several other intrenchments in this county have obtained the name of castles.

About the year 1772, some persons employed to dig materials in this parish for repairing the roads, found a large stone like a step, not far below the surface of the ground, and then another such stone, and searching further, discovered two perfect skeletons, inclosed in stone coffins, lying in a direction to the north and south; whence some persons have concluded, but I think upon very slender foundation, that the corps were placed there before the general establishment of Christianity in this country. One of the skeletons was six feet and a half long, as a gentleman who measured it assured me, but they both fell to pieces on being slightly touched; and no coin, armour, nor other thing that I can hear of, was found in the sepulchre to give any light as to the time of interment, or the people to whom these reliques belonged.

A small brook, called the Laden, runs from hence, and empties itself into the Lower Froom, which falls into the Bristol Avon.

This manor was held of the honour of Gloucester, and is now within the jurisdiction of the honour court.

Walter de Stukeley, sheriff of Gloucestershire, being commanded by the king's writ, to return into the exchequer the names of all the vills in his county, with their respective proprietors, certified that William Corbet was lord of Tederinton 9 E. 1. and Roger Corbet was seized of it in the 15th and 18th years of the same reign. William Corbet, son of Roger, purchased a charter of free warren in Titherington 33 E. 1. By an inquisition taken 8 E. 2. after the death of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, it was found that Roger de Corbet held Tetherington of the said Gilbert, by the service of one knight's fee, value 34*l*. William Corbet of Chadsey held the same 17 E. 2.

Thomas de Bradeston, a very eminent person, was summoned to parliament among the barons 16 E. 3. and died seized of Titherington, Ichenton, Stinchcombe, Horton, Winterbourne, and Bradestone in Berkeley, 34 E. 3. Agnes the widow of Thomas lord Bradeston held the four first of these manors, together with Arlingham, in dower, and died 43 E. 3. Thomas lord Bradeston, son of Robert, succeeded his grandfather Thomas in all the before-mentioned estates, of which he died seized 48 E. 3. leaving Elizabeth his only daughter and heiress, afterwards married to Walter de la Pool, who had livery of her lands 13 R. 2. the same year in which she came of age.

Robert, second lord Willoughby of Broke, was seized of this manor at the time of his death, 1521, 13 H. 8. He was son of Robert lord Willoughby of Broke, and grandson of John, and great grandson of Thomas Willoughby, the third son of Robert lord Willoughby (and of Alice his wife, the daughter of sir William Skipwith, of Ormelby in Lincolnshire, knight, who died chief baron of the exchequer, 1366, 40 E. 3.) lineally descended from sir John de Willoughby, a Norman knight, who had the lordship of Willoughby in Lincolnshire, by the gift of king William the First, with whom he came into England.

England. The before-mentioned Robert, second lord Willoughby of Broke, married, to his first wife, Elizabeth, eldest of the three daughters and coheiresses of Richard lord Beauchamp, by whom he had an only son Edward, who died before his father, but left issue, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Richard Nevil lord Latimer, three daughters, coheiresses, Elizabeth, Anne, and Blanch.

Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edward Willoughby, was granted in ward to sir Edward Greville, of Milcot in Warwickshire, and after the death of her two sisters, without issue, became one of the richest heiresses in England. Her guardian designed to have matched her with John his eldest son, but she chose, and took for her husband, sir Fulke Grevil, the second son, who died seized of this manor 1 Eliz. leaving by his said wife three sons, and four daughters.

Sir Fulke Grevil, the eldest son, was knighted 7 Eliz. and having married Anne, daughter of Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmoreland, died in 1606, 4 Jac. 1. leaving an only son Fulke, and a daughter Margaret, married to sir Richard Verney.

Fulke Grevil, son of sir Fulke, was also knighted, and made a conspicuous figure both as statesman and soldier, in the reigns of queen Elizabeth, king James, and king Charles the First. He obtained a grant of the ruined castle of Warwick, 2 Jac. 1. and converted it into a magnificent seat, at the expence of 20,000*l.* In the 18th year of the same reign, he was advanced to the dignity of baron Brooke, by letters patent, Jan. 9, 1620-21, with remainder (in default of male heirs of his own body) to Robert son of Fulke, and grandson of Robert the second son of Fulke Grevil and Elizabeth Willoughby before-mentioned. Neglecting to reward one Hayward, or Haywood, an old servant, he was stoned by him at Brookehouse in London, and dying unmarried Sep. 30, 1628, in the 75th year of his age, was buried at Warwick, under a monument he had erected for himself, with this remarkable inscription:

Fulke Grevile, Servant to Queen Elizabeth,
Councillor to King James, and Friend to Sir Philip Sidney.
Trophæum Peccati.

Upon the death of Fulke lord Brooke without issue, the title devolved on his kinsman Robert, but the manor of Titherington descended to sir Richard Verney, knight, who had married Margaret Grevile, as before recited, and by her had issue four sons, Grevile, John, Richard, and George; and four daughters.

Sir Grevile Verney, knight, succeeded his father in this estate, and died May 12, 1642, having married Catherine, daughter of sir Robert Southwell, of Woodrising in Norfolk, by whom he had four sons, and one daughter; Grevile, John, Richard, George, and Elizabeth.

Sir Richard Verney, of Belton in Rutlandshire, third son, on the death of William, great grandson of Grevile his elder brother, without issue, in the year 1683, succeeded to this estate; and laying claim to the antient barony of Willoughby, it was allowed him in parliament, and he had summons accordingly, as baron Willoughby of Brooke by descent, Mar. 25, 1695, and died July 18, 1711, in the 91st year of his age. By Mary his first wife, daughter of sir John Prettiman, of Lodington in Leicestershire, bart. he had three sons, John, George, and Thomas.

George lord Willoughby, D.D. the second son, succeeded his father in honour, and was proprietor of Titherington when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it. He died Dec. 26, 1728.

The manor of Titherington passed afterwards to James Hardwicke, esq. Joseph Hardwicke, esq; was afterwards proprietor of it, and dying in the year 1771, was succeeded by his son John Hardwicke, esq; who is the present lord of the manor of Titherington. His arms are, Argent, a saltire ingrailed azure; on a chief of the second three roses of the first.

Sir Walter de la Pool and Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Thomas lord Bradeston, were seized of eighteen acres of meadow in Titherington 12 H. 6.

HAMLETS. 1. Itcbington, which lies in the hundred of Henbury. 2. Stidcot, where the remains of a Roman tessellated pavement were discovered, about the close of the last century.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth 95*l.* a year. John Hardwick, esq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. Sheldard is the present incumbent, and holds the impropriation for life; after which it devolves to the lord of the manor. It was formerly appropriated to the priory of Lanthony.

The parsonage house was built in the year 1662, by William Eldridge, vicar, who died Nov. 20, 1677, and lies buried in the chancel.

The church consists of the nave, with an aisle on each side, and a tower at the west end, in which are three bells. It is seventy-one feet long, and fifty broad, including the chancel and side aisles, and is kept in good repair.

From the top of the scar, or hill, above the church, there is an extensive prospect over the Severn; and I am told that seventeen or eighteen parish churches may be seen from it in a fair day.

Richard Grevill levied a fine of the manor of Lemington Over to Thomas Grevill, and others, 8 H. 7. William Palmer, and Anne his wife, levied a fine of the manor of Lemington Over, and of lands in Todenham, to John Newdegate, 2 Mariæ. It belonged to sir William Juxton at the beginning of this century, and is now the property of lady Fane.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 150*l.* a year. The bishop of London is patron, and the reverend Mr. George Upton is the present incumbent.

One yard-land belongs to the glebe.

The advowson formerly belonged to the abbey of Westminster, and was granted to Thomas bishop of Westminster, by king Henry the Eighth; but the see of Westminster being soon suppressed, the advowson was granted to Nicholas bishop of London, 4 E. 6. and confirmed 1 Mariæ.

Tithes in Todenham, which had belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to Daniel Perte and Alexander Perte, in trust, 7 E. 6.

Sir Robert Atkyns says, 'the abbat of Westminster reserved the tithes of his own farm, which now belong to lord Petre, and are in lease to Mr. Kite.' But I am informed by the rector, that no tithes appear to have been reserved. The lease granted to Mr. Keyte was of lands worth 200*l.* a year, which, by the death of Mrs. Agnes Keyte, are now fallen into lord Petre's hands, and that estate pays tithes.

Dr. Parsons, in his MS. Collections, which he made about the close of the last century, observes, that the parish clerk's name was John Green, and that the names of all the parish clerks for near two hundred years past had been the same, which is remarkable.

Robert Wickens, rector of this church, and master of the free-school at Campden, published a Concordance to the English Bible, and wrote several grammatical treatises. He died in 1682.

The church has an aisle on the north side, called Upper Lemington chapel, another on the south side, and a handsome spire at the west end, in which are six bells. It is dedicated to Thomas Becket, archbishop of Canterbury.

About the beginning of this century, according to sir Robert Atkyns, there were 38 houses in the parish, and about 160 inhabitants, 7 of whom were reputed to be freeholders; yearly births 5, burials 5. But the people have increased very much since sir Robert's time, and are now estimated at upwards of 450.

THIS parish lies in the lower division of Kiftsgate hundred, nine miles eastward from Tewkesbury, eleven north-westward from Stow on the Wold, and sixteen north-east from Gloucester.

The river Isbourne runs through it from Winchcombe, in its course to the upper Avon, which it joins a little below the town of Evesham in Worcestershire.

This village lies in the vale, and is distinguished for the richness of its soil, but more particularly for its being the residence of the lord viscount Tracy. His lordship's house is large and handsome, and was built about the close of the last century, since which it has undergone but little alteration. There is a large oak chimney-piece in the great hall, brought from Hayles Abbey, where it was set up by the Hobbys, as appears by a large scutcheon in the centre of it, divided into six quarterings, the first being the Hobbys arms, viz. A fess between three hobbies or hawks, but the colours are not expressed in the carving. The hall windows are ornamented with painted glass, brought from the same place, and among other things, have in them the arms of France and England quarterly, and those of Richard duke of Cornwall in a large scutcheon, viz. Or, an eagle display'd with two heads sable, and round, Ricard. Plantagenet Semper augustus fundator Noster.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Todington exhibits a very extraordinary instance of an estate descending for upwards of seven hundred years in the male line of the same family, in uninterrupted succession. The present noble proprietor is descended from the blood of the ancient Saxon kings of England.

Ethelred the second, son of Edgar, was crowned at Kingston upon Thames, April 14, 979. During his reign, the Danes frequently invaded the kingdom, but were sometimes prevented from committing depredations, by the payment of a large sum of money; which however, being only a present relief, the king planned a general massacre of them, which was accordingly executed, Nov. 13, 1002. He died at London in 1016, after an unhappy reign of thirty-seven years.

Goda, the youngest of king Ethelred's daughters, was the wife of Walter de Medantine, or de Maigne, a noble Norman, and by him was mother of Radulf earl of Hereford, lord of the manors of Sudley and Todington, in the reign of king Edward the Confessor. He was succeeded in both estates by his son

Herald, who was possessed of them in the reign of king William the First, as appears by the record, of which the following is a translation :

' The same Herald holds Todintun. His father [earl Radulph] held it. There are ten hides taxed. In demean are three plow-tillages, and seventeen villeins, and seven bordars, and two free men, having among them all eight plow-tillages. There are ten [plow-tillages] among the servi and ancillæ, and two mills of 20s. A salt pit pays fifty measures [mittas] of salt. These two manors [Sudlege and Todinton] are worth and were worth 40l.' Domesday, p. 77.

John de Sudley, son and heir of Herald, succeeded his father, and married Grace, the daughter of Henry de Traci, lord of the honour of Barnstaple in Devonshire, which he had by the gift of king Stephen, as a reward for his valour and faithful services in the West. This family of the Tracies took their name from the town of Traci in Normandy, and accompanied king William in his invasion of England, in 1066. By this lady, John had two sons, Radulph, or Ralph, who succeeded to the barony of Sudley, and William, who assumed his mother's family name, and lived in the time of king Henry the Second. He held lands (probably the Todington estate) of his brother Ralph de Sudley, by the service of one knight's fee, in the last-mentioned reign, and is supposed to be one of those four knights who killed Thomas Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, Dec. 29, 1171.

Oliver de Tracy, son of William, occurs among the knights in Gloucestershire who paid scutage 2 Joh. and was father of William de Tracy, who presented to the church of Todington 53 H. 3. In 1289, 17 E. 1. he is recorded among the knights of the county of Gloucester, and, with Ralph de Sudley, his kinsman, commanded under that king in his victorious expedition into Scotland. He left a minor son, Sir William Tracy of Todington, who in a return of the gentry in Gloucestershire, made 25 E. 1. 1298, being then in ward to Lawrence Tresham, is certified among those who had 40l. a year in lands, and were qualified to receive the honour of knighthood. He was sheriff of Gloucestershire 12 & 17 E. 2. and left issue a son Henry, and a daughter Margery, wedded to John, son of John Archer, of Umberlade in Warwickshire, and ancestor to the present lord Archer.

Henry Tracy, son of sir William, had likewise a son

Henry, whose son and heir,

Thomas Tracy, was high sheriff of this county in 1359, and so continued for four years successively.

John Tracy, son of Thomas, was knighted by king Edward the Third, and, together with Thomas Moygne, John Clifford, and John Sloghter, commissioned to view and take order for the repair of the banks and drains for the preservation of the low lands upon the Severn between Bristol and Gloucester, 36 & 38 E. 3. He gave the advowson of the church, and an acre of land in Todington, to the abbey of Hayles, 37 E. 3. and was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1366, and served as knight of the shire in the parliaments convened in the 32d, 37th, 40th, and 43d years of that reign.

Henry Tracy, son of John, was father of John Tracy, high sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1379, 2 R. 2. whose son William Tracy likewise served that office in the 18th year of the same reign, 1395.

William Tracy, son of William, was high sheriff in 1416, and married Alice, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Guido de la Spine, lord of Coughton, (whose great grandfather, William de la Spine, had to wife Joan, daughter and heiress of sir Simon de Cocton) and by her had issue William, his heir; John, living 27 H. 6. and Alice, wife of Hugh Culme, or Cullum, ancestor to the present baronet, sir John Cullum, of Hastide in Suffolk.

' The other three were sir Richard Brito, sir Hugh de Morville, and sir Reginald Fitz-Urfe.—The fickleness of the human mind is perhaps in no case more observable, than in this event; for those who detested the pride and arrogance of this ecclesiastic when alive, began to worship him after his death, and thus they sang of him :

Tu per Thomæ sanguinem, quem pro te impendit, Fac nos, Christe, scandere quo Thomas ascendit.

Imitated thus :

By Thomas's blood, which for thee was expended,
O Christ, may we rise whither Thomas ascended.

Such a prodigious number of miracles were reported to have been performed at his tomb, as neither Christ nor his apostles wrought in support of the Christian dispensation. Indeed the great variety of them exhibited on every trivial occasion, would, in an age less superstitious, and more enlightened, have utterly destroyed their credibility; for the monks paid no attention to Horace's maxim,

Nec Deus interfit, nisi dignus vindice nodus Inciderit.

Becket's biographers pretend, that all those persons who had been concerned in his death, died miserably in three or four years afterwards, as it should seem, by some particular interposition of providence in his behalf. But little or no credit is to be given to monkish writers, in matters that affect the reputation of their favourite saints, and the champions of papal authority; for it appears upon record, that this sir William de Tracy was in arms, with other barons, against king John, 17 regni, for which offence his lands were seized by the crown, but were restored to him again 2 H. 3. and that in the 6th year of the last mentioned reign, 1222, he served in an expedition against the Welch; so that he survived the commission of that murder upwards of fifty years: It is equally certain, that Hugh de Morville was living in the reign of king John, and held the manors of Kirk Oswald and Lefingby in Cumberland, which he enjoyed in right of his wife Heloise de Estouteville.

William

William Tracy, eldest son of the last William, was high sheriff in the years 1442, and 1443, and left a son.

William Tracy, who was high sheriff of this county in 1449. By Margery his wife, daughter of sir John Pauncefoot, he had two sons, Henry, and Richard.

Henry Tracy, eldest son of William, married Alice, daughter and heiress of Thomas Baldington, of Adderbury in Oxfordshire, esq; and by her was father of three sons, William his heir; Richard; and Ralph, a monk; and two daughters.

Sir William Tracy, eldest son of Henry, was knighted, and served the office of high sheriff of Gloucestershire in 1512. He was one of the first that embraced the reformed religion in England, and, by Margaret his wife, second daughter of sir Thomas Throckmorton, of Corfe-court in this county, had issue three sons, William, his heir; Richard, who, as well as his father, was a zealous reformer, and wrote several treatises on religious subjects, (some of which king Henry the Eighth by proclamation forbade to be read) and was living in 1556; and Robert, who left no issue.

William Tracy of Todington, son of sir William, married a daughter of sir Simon Digby, of Colehill in Warwickshire, and by her was father of Henry, his heir; and of Richard, who had the manor of Stanway settled upon him, and became the ancestor of the baronets of that place, the male line of which family ended in the person of sir John Tracy, in the year 1677.

Henry Tracy, eldest son of William, took to wife Elizabeth, second daughter of John first lord Chandos of Sudley, ancestor to the duke of Chandos, and dying in 1551, left issue John, Giles, Edward, Francis, and Nicholas; and a daughter Eleanor, wife to William Kingston, of Quenington in this county, esq.

Sir John Tracy, the eldest son, was knighted by queen Elizabeth, in her progress to Bristol, 1574, and in the 20th year of that reign, 1578, was high sheriff of the county of Gloucester, and died in 1591. By Anne his wife, daughter of sir Thomas Throckmorton, of Corfe-court, knight, he left issue five sons, viz. John, his heir; Thomas, William, Anthony, and Henry; and two daughters, Dorothy, married first, to Edmond Bray, of Barrington in this county, and secondly, to sir Edward Conway, of Arrow in Warwickshire, created lord Conway; and Mary, wedded first to Mr. William Hobby, and secondly, to that renowned general, sir Horatio Vere, baron of Tilbury.

Sir John Tracy, eldest son of sir John, was knighted by king James the First, and served the office of high sheriff in 1609. He was advanced to the dignity of viscount Tracy of Rathcoole, in the county of Dublin, in the kingdom of Ireland, by king Charles the First, Jan. 12, 1642; and having married Anne, daughter of sir Thomas Shirley, of Isfield in Suffex, knight, left issue by that lady,

Robert, second viscount Tracy, who took to wife Bridget, third daughter of John Lyttelton, of Frankley-court in Worcestershire, esq; by whom he had one son John, and a daughter Anne, wedded to William Somerville, of Edston in Warwickshire, esq. His lordship married secondly, Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Cocks, of Castle-ditch in Herefordshire, and by that lady was father of Robert Tracy, one of the justices of the king's bench to king William, and one of the judges of the court of common pleas to queen Anne, and commissioner of the great seal in 1710: He was again in the commission of the great seal, with sir John Pratt and sir James Montague, in 1718, but retired from his employments, on

“ Before the Reformation in religion was fully established, numbers of those who favoured it were cruelly persecuted and burnt at the stake. Sir William Tracy escaped the flames in his life-time, yet some passages in his last will, deviating from the standard of church orthodoxy, as then established, excited so violent a resentment in the popish party, that he was condemned as an heretick after his death, and an order was sent to Parker, chancellor of Worcester, to raise his corps. The officious chancellor, however, desirous to ingratiate himself with his superiors, exceeded the bounds of his commission, and burnt the body, in which proceeding he could not be justified, even by the laws of the church of Rome, as sir William was not a relapse. So two years after, the chancellor being sued by Tracy's heirs, was turned out of his office, and fined 400*l*.

The obnoxious passages in the will are subjoined for the satisfaction of the reader, who will easily perceive, that sir William's contempt of purgatory, and of prayers for the dead, gave occasion of offence.

The W I L L.

“ I N the name of God, Amen. I William Tracy, of Todington in the county of Gloucester, esq; make my Testament and last Will as hereafter followeth:

“ First, and before all other things, I commit myself to God, and to his mercy, believing, without any doubt or mistrust, that by his grace and the merits of Jesus Christ, and by virtue of his passion and resurrection, I have, and shall have remission of all my sins, and resurrection of body and soul, according as it is written, I believe that my Redeemer liveth, and that at the last day I shall rise out of the earth, and in my flesh shall see my Saviour: This my hope is laid up in my bosom.

“ And touching the wealth of my soul, the faith that I have taken and rehearsed is sufficient (as I suppose) without any other man's works or merits. My ground and belief is, that there is but one God, and one mediator between God and man, which is Jesus Christ; so that I accept none in heaven or in earth to be mediator between me and God, but only Jesus Christ; and all other to be but as petitioners in receiving of grace, but none able to give influence of grace; and therefore will I bestow no part of my goods for that intent, that any man should say or do to help my soul, for therein I trust only to the promises of Christ. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned.

“ As touching the burying of my body, it availeth me not whatsoever be done thereto; for St. Augustine saith, De cura agenda pro mortuis, that the funeral pomps are rather the solace of them that live, than the wealth and comfort of them that are dead, and therefore I remit it only to the discretion of my executors.

“ And touching the distribution of my temporal goods, my purpose is, by the grace of God, to bestow them to be accepted as the fruits of faith. So that I do not suppose that my merit shall be by the good bestowing of them, but my merit is the faith of Jesus Christ only, by whom such works are good, according to the words of our Lord, I was hungry, and thou gavest me meat, &c. and it followeth, That ye have done to the least of my brethren, ye have done it to me, &c. And ever we should consider that true saying, That a good work maketh not a good man, but a good man maketh a good work: For faith maketh a man both good and righteous, for a righteous man liveth by faith, and whatsoever springeth not of faith is sin.

“ For my temporal goods, &c. Dated 22 H. 8.

account of his ill health, in 1726, and died Sep. 11, 1735, having filled his several posts, equally to the honour and advantage of himself and his country.

John, third viscount Tracy, eldest son of Robert, married Elizabeth, eldest surviving daughter of Thomas lord Leigh, of Stoneleigh in Warwickshire, and by her ladyship had issue William, his heir; Charles; and Ferdinando, to whom sir John Tracy, the last baronet of Stanway, bequeathed that manor, which continued in the Tracys, his descendants, 'till it passed, very lately, to the present viscount Hereford, by the marriage of an heiress. He had also one daughter Mary.

William, fourth viscount Tracy, married first, Frances, daughter of Leicester Devereux, viscount Hereford, by whom he was father of Elizabeth, wife to Robert, son and heir apparent to sir Robert Burdet, of Bramesh in Warwickshire, and mother of sir Robert Burdet, of Foremark in Derbyshire, bart. His lordship married, secondly, Jane, third daughter of sir Thomas Leigh, and sister of lord Leigh, of Stoneleigh, and by her ladyship had one son Thomas-Charles, and one daughter Anne, married to sir William Keyte, of Ebberton in this county, bart.

Thomas-Charles, fifth viscount Tracy, on Dec. 27, 1712, espoused Elizabeth, eldest daughter of William Keyte, esq; son of sir William Keyte, of Ebberton, bart. and had issue William, who died in 1752; Thomas-Charles, his successor; and one daughter Jane, wedded to Capel Hanbury, of Pont-y-pool in Monmouthshire, esq. His lordship took to wife, secondly, Frances, daughter of sir John Packington, of Westwood in Worcestershire, baronet, by whom he had three sons, John, D.D. warden of All Souls college, Oxford; Packington, who died young; and Henry; likewise three daughters, Frances, woman of the bed-chamber to the queen; Anne, the wife of John Smith, of Comb-hay in Somersetshire, esq; and Elizabeth, who died unmarried in 1764. His lordship survived his second lady, and departing this life, June 4, 1756, was succeeded in title and estate by his second but eldest surviving son, Thomas-Charles, the present viscount Tracy, and lord of the manor of Todington. His lordship, on February 6, 1755, married Harriot, one of the daughters of Peter Bathurst, of Clarendon-Park, in the county of Wilts, esq; by Selina his second lady, daughter of Robert Shirly, earl Rivers; but his lordship has no child now living.

His lordship's paternal arms are, Or, an escallop in the dexter chief sable, between two bends gules.

CREST. On a cap of maintenance gules, turned up ermine, an escallop sable between two wings erected Or.

SUPPORTERS. Two falcons proper, beak'd and bell'd Or.

HAMLET. Stanley Pontlarch is a hamlet in this parish, which has its own officers, and a chapel within it, where divine service is performed once a month, but the people bury at Todington.

' Four hides and a half in Stanlege belong to the church of Teodekesberie. There is one plow-tillage, and four villeins, with two plow-tillages, and three bordars, and five servi. This estate was free from tax. It was worth 4*l.* now 40*s.*' Domesday, p. 68.

Robert de Pontlarch, or Pont de L'arch, held this estate under the church of Tewkesbury; and it is probable that it received the addition of Pontlarch, from him, by way of distinguishing it from two parishes in this county of the name of Stanley.

John de Sudley was seized of Stanley Pontlarch 41 E. 3. and Hugh Croft, and Agnes and Leon Croft, levied a fine of the same manor to sir William St. Maur 18 H. 7.

Walter Havanage recovered lands in Stanley, and in Thorp, Greet, and Greeton in Winchcombe, against Adam Havanage and Alice his wife, 28 E. 1. Lands in Stanley Pontlarch belonged to the viscount Lisle, and were granted to Thomas earl of Essex, upon whose attainder they were again granted to sir William Kingston 32 H. 8.

This hamlet contains seven houses.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Campden, value 32*l.* in the king's books. There are twenty-eight acres of arable land, and eleven of meadow and pasture, belonging to the glebe, which have been let at 23*l.* a year; and there is a composition of 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* The chapel of Stanley Pontlarch is annexed to it, on which account the impropiator pays the vicar a further sum of 4*l.* a year, as I find it in bishop Benson's visitation book.

The advowson formerly belonged to the Tracys, and was given by sir John Tracy to the abbey of Hayles, 37 E. 3. And in the year 1403, the bishop of Worcester settled a composition with the abbat of Hayles for the maintenance of the curate of Todington. After the dissolution of Hayles abbey, the advowson returned into the same family, and Thomas lord viscount Tracy is patron and impropiator.

The church is small, but neat, and was rebuilt in the year 1723, by Thomas-Charles lord viscount Tracy.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There are four monuments in the chancel, with the following inscriptions: Against the south wall, Hic jacet Dominus Iohannes Tracy Miles, quondam Dominus de Todington, &c. (Filius et Hæres Henrici Tracy Armigeri, et Elizabethæ Filizæ Iohannis Domini Chandos Baronis de Sudely) qui obiit Septembris 25^o Anno Dni 1591.

On the same side,

The Body of this Church was rebuilt in the Year of our Lord One Thousand seven Hundred and twenty-three, by the Right Honourable Honourable Thomas-Charles Lord Viscount Tracy, who died on the 4th of June, 1756, in the 66th Year of his Age.

His lordship's bust stands over the tablet, and beneath it a scutcheon, Quarterly 1st and 4th, Tracy; 2d and 3d, Argent, a chevron between three mullets sable.

Against the north wall,

Here lyeth the Body of Margaret one of the Daughters and Coheires of Thomas Whittington of Pavntley, Esquior, and Wife of Sir Thomas Throckmorton of Torthworth, Knight, who deceased Feb. 1^o Anno Dni 1577.

As also the Bodies of Anthony Throckmorton and Margaret, her Sonne and Daughter.

On this monument are the arms of Whittington and Throckmorton.

At the beginning of this century, there were 48 houses, and about 200 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 6 were freeholders; yearly births 6, and burials 6. Atkyns. But examining the register, I found, that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there had been 58 baptisms, and 53 burials; and in a like period, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 53, the burials 49; and the inhabitants are now about 186.

T O R M A R T O N

IS a parish in the hundred of Grumbald's Ash, about four miles northward from Marshfield, four south-eastward from Chipping Sodbury, and thirty-two south from Gloucester.

The village is seated upon high ground, in a fine, healthy, champaign country, through which three turnpike-roads are carried; one from Gloucester and Cirencester to Bath, a second from Chippenham to Sodbury and Bristol, and the third from Christian Malford in Wiltshire, to Pucklechurch, Mangotsfield, and Bristol. The parish is bounded on the east by West Kyneton in Wiltshire, on the west by Dodington, on the north by Old Sodbury, and has West Littleton on the south, which latter was formerly taken out of it.

The name is of doubtful original, yet sir Robert Atkyns supposed it to be taken from the tower of the church, and from Mark, which in the Saxon language signifies a boundary; and this town, says he, stands in the borders between the Mercian and West Saxon kingdoms. But he formed his judgment from the modern name, for Tormentone, as it is written in Domesday, does not favour his conjecture.

The same learned author takes notice of a fort of stones found in the north fields in this parish, about the bigness of pistol bullets, which being broke, look rusty like iron ore. Upon inquiry, I find that those stones, as he calls them, are not uncommon at this time, and are really no other than iron bullets, discharged, I apprehend, in the battle and skirmishing that happened in these parts in the reign of king Charles the First, between the king's troops, and those under the command of sir William Waller.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

'Richard the legate holds Tormentone, in Hedredestan hundred, of the king. There are eight hides. Alric held it of king Edward. There are six plow-tillages in demean, and twenty villeins, and four bordars, and a priest, and one radchenister, having among them all twelve plow-tillages. There are twelve servi. It was worth 12*l.* and is now worth 15*l.* Domesday-book, p. 76.

The records shew, that Henry de Willington, son of Ralph de Willington, held Tormarton 23 E. 3. in which year he had livery of the manors of Poulton, Ablington, Yate, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurst, all in the county of Gloucester. John de Willington, of Willington-court in Sandhurst, great grandson of Henry, was seized of Tormarton, Littleton, and all the before mentioned manors, at the time of his death, 20 R. 2. and left Joan his sister and heir, who was married to John Wrath.

This manor was held of the Willingtons, as chief lords, by some of the persons following:

Richard de la Rivere, or de Ripariis, had a grant of fairs in Tormarton, and of free warren in all his lands in England, 38 H. 3.

The sheriff, in his list of all the vills in the county, and their respective proprietors, 9 E. 1. omits Tormarton and Littleton, but says, John, the son of John de la Rivere, is lord of Acton Turville, in Grymbaldealhe hundred, and in ward to the earl of Arundel; and I conclude that he was then likewise proprietor of this manor, for it appears by the escheator's inquisition 8 E. 2. that he died seized of Tormarton, and of the hamlet of Littleton, both together worth 30*l.* a year, which he held of John de Wylintone by the service of two knights fees; and also of half a knight's fee in Actone Turvyle, worth 6*l.* per ann. which he held of the earl of Arundel, and left John, his son and heir, two years old.

Richard de la Rivere forfeited all his lands for rebellion against king Edward the Second, and Edward earl of Arundel had a grant of them, and was seized of Tormarton in the 20th year of that reign; but Richard de la Rivere recovered possession 1 E. 3. The manor was held of Edward earl of Kent, by knight's service, 4 E. 3.

John de la Rivere held Tormarton and the hamlet of Littleton, with markets and fairs, 6 E. 3. and John de la Rivere, his son, was seized thereof in the 13th year of the same reign. Henry de la Rivere had a confirmation of markets and fairs in Tormarton 22 R. 2.

Sir John Drayton held this manor, and Acton Turville, 5 H. 5.

Isabel, the widow of sir Thomas de la Rivere, and daughter of sir Maurice Russel, died seized of Tormarton, Littleton, and Skirewell, 15 H. 6. Maurice de la Rivere, son of sir Thomas and Isabel, had a son Robert, whose daughter and heiress, Isabel, was married to sir John St. Loe, and carried the inheritance of the manors of Tormarton, Littleton, and Acton Turville, into that name and family. She was afterwards wedded successively to sir John Drayton, sir Geoffry Scrope, and Stephen Hatfield, esq; but had no child by the three last. Sir John St. Loe, son of sir John, and of Isabel the heiress of the de la Riveres, married a daughter of sir John Guyse, by whom he had sir William, his heir; Nicholas, Edward, and Clement. Sir William St. Loe, eldest son of sir John, married Elizabeth,* daughter, and at length heiress of John Hardwicke, of Hardwicke in Derbyshire, and widow of sir William Cavendish, of Chatsworth in the same county, and settled upon her the inheritance of this estate, which passed, on her fourth marriage, to George earl of Shrewsbury, whose son, Gilbert earl of Shrewsbury, was possessed of it in 1608. The manor afterwards became the property of William marquis of Newcastle, who conveyed it to sir Francis Top, from whom it descended to sir John Top, baronet, who resided here. He left two daughters, one of whom was married to — Hungerford, whose only son John Hungerford, of Dingley-hall in Northamptonshire, esq; is the present lord of the manors of Tormarton and Acton Turville. His arms are, Sable, two bars argent, in chief three plates.

John Cotherington and Alice his wife levied a fine of lands in Tormarton, to the use of themselves for life, remainder to their sons, Humphry, Thomas, and John, successively in tail, remainder to Margaret Basiles, late wife to sir Peter Basiles, 49 H. 6. 1470, in which year Henry, that pageant king, recovered and enjoyed his crown for a few months, 'till he was again dethroned in 1471.

Lands in Tormarton belonged to the priory of Black Canons at Bradenstoke in Wiltshire, and were granted to John Pope 37 H. 8.

The similarity in names of places frequently produces confusion, and to this cause it must be attributed that sir Robert Atkyns has applied some records to Tormarton which evidently belong to Farmington, as already observed under the account of that parish.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth upwards of 400*l.* a year. Nathaniel Castleton is patron, and the reverend Mr. Newdigate Pointz is the present incumbent. He is descended from the antient family of that name, formerly lords of the manor of Iron Acton.

The bishop of Winchester appropriated this church to the abbey of Malmesbury, 35 E. 3.

Ninety-five statute acres belong to the glebe.

The whole parish was inclosed about the year 1760, when the glebe was laid together, but the other lands were not exonerated from tithe.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has an aisle on the south side, and a low embattled tower at the west end. It was built by sir John de la Rivere, who is also said to have founded a chantry in this church, dedicated to St. Mary.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Leland says, There lyeth buried in the Body of the Paroche Church of Thormerton one Petrine de la Ryvers, with a Frenche Epitaphie. He was owner of the Lordshype of Tormerton. And sir Robert Atkyns observes, that in his time, the effigies of sir John de la Rivere, with the model of the church in his hand, remained in the chancel; but the brasses of both these monuments are now torn off and lost.

Upon a brass plate, fixed to a black marble stone, in the body of the church, is the effigy of a man, with a purse hanging before him, and

* This beautiful and accomplished lady had been married, at fourteen years of age, to Robert Barley, of Barley in Derbyshire, who was likewise very young, and died soon after, Feb. 2, 1532-3; but she enjoyed the whole of his large fortune, by settlement on her and her heirs. After living a widow some years, she was married, secondly, to sir William Cavendish, by whom she was so intirely beloved, that at her request, he sold his possessions in the southern counties, to purchase estates in Derbyshire, where her relations chiefly resided; and by her persuasion, he began building a noble seat at Chatsworth, which, however, he did not live to finish, dying 4 & 5 Phil. & Mar. She accepted for her third husband, sir William St. Loe, captain of the guard to the queen Elizabeth, and proprietor of Tormarton, and other considerable estates in Gloucestershire, all which, in failure of issue by him, were settled on her and her own heirs. She survived him, but not her charms of wit and beauty, by which she captivated George Talbot, sixth earl of Shrewsbury, then the greatest subject in the realm, whom she took for her fourth husband; and had the honour of being keeper to Mary queen of Scots, during seventeen years of her imprisonment in England. She was a fourth time left a widow, in 1590, and so continued 'till her death, Feb. 13, 1607, in the 87th year of her age. Happy in her several marriages, she rose by each husband to greater wealth and higher honours; but had issue only by the second, viz. 1. Henry, who died childless in 1616; 2. William, created baron Cavendish of Hardwicke, May 4, 1605, and earl of Devonshire, Aug. 8, 1618; 3. Charles, father of William, earl, marquis, and duke of Newcastle; and three daughters. It is not unworthy observation, that she built three of the most elegant seats that were ever raised by one person in any county in England, viz. Chatsworth, Hardwicke, and Oldcotes, all transmitted intire to the first duke of Devonshire.

' Robert de Olgi holds Turchedene. There are five hides, and two yard lands and a half which pay tax. Siuuard held them. There are four plow-tillages in demean, and twelve villeins, with six plow-tillages, and there are eight among the servi and ancillæ. It was worth 6*l.* now only 100*s.*' Ib. p. 76.

It is difficult to distinguish these manors in their descent to their several proprietors. Two religious houses were seized of the greater part of the parish, and the remainder was vested in lay proprietors, viz.

Upper-Turkdean belonged to Westbury college, near Bristol, and after the dissolution of that house, was granted to sir Rafe Sadleir 35 H. 8. William Bannister died seized of Turkedean 2 Jac. 1. leaving Thomas his son and heir, as appears by the escheator's inquisition, taken the same year. Thomas Bannister was seized of it in 1608, from whom it descended to Mr. serjeant Bannister, who enjoy'd it when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish: Since which time it passed out of that name, and Edmund Waller, esq; is the present proprietor of it.

Lower Turkdean belonged to the priory of Lanthony, near Gloucester. Richard Poncy gave certain lands in Turchdene to the canons regular of Lanthony, which were afterwards confirmed to them by the king's charter 1 Joh. and a writ of Quo warranto was brought against the prior to set forth his right to a court leet and waifs in Turkdean, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1. After the dissolution of that priory, this estate was granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8. John Walter, upon the death of his father, had livery of this manor granted to him 1 Eliz. It came afterwards to Oliver lord St. John, who died seized thereof 24 Eliz. and John lord St. John, his son, had livery of it the same year. It passed afterwards to Mr. Coxwell, who enjoyed it about half a century since; but it is now the property of sir John Nelthrop, baronet. His arms are, Argent, on a pile sable, a broad sword of the field, with a martlet in chief sinister for difference.

Beside the above-mentioned manors, or reputed manors, there was another which continued in lay hands. Robert de Tormin held Turkdean by one knight's fee 3 Joh. John Langley died seized of the manor of Turkdean 2 E. 1. as did another John Langley, esq; 39 H. 6. Walter Langley was survived by Isabel his wife, who died seized of this manor, and of Upper and Lower Siddington, in dower, 14 E. 4. Sir Ralph Dutton was seized of it at the beginning of this century, and was succeeded by his son sir John Dutton, baronet; from him it passed thro' two descents, like Sherbourne, to James Dutton, esq; who is the present lord of the manor.

Of the other estates the records shew, that Philip Burnell died seized of lands in Turkdean 22 E. 1. Thomas Raleigh held one messuage and two plow-tillages in Turkdean, of the honour of Wallingford, 21 R. 2. and Thomas his son died seized of the same 6 H. 4. Walter Raleigh, son and heir of the last Thomas, died seized of the manor of Turkdean 8 H. 5.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 60*l.* a year. It has been augmented by the queen's bounty. Christ Church college in Oxford, are patrons, and the reverend Mr. Thomas Bowen is the present incumbent. It formerly belonged to the priory of Black Canons of Osney. The rectory and advowson of the vicarage were granted to Christ Church college 34 H. 8. and confirmed 38 H. 8. and the impropriation is now in lease to Mr. Miller.

The vicar has all privy tithes, half the hay tithes, and the corn tithes of three yard lands.

The church is small, with an aisle on the south side, and an embattled tower at the west end.

There were 32 houses in this parish at the beginning of this century, and about 120 inhabitants, whereof 7 were freeholders; yearly births 3, and burials 3. Atkyns. There are now 25 families, and exactly 113 inhabitants.

TURLEY and HAW.

TURLEY is only a part of the parish, lying in the lower division of Westminster hundred. The Haw, another part, lies in the lower division of the hundred of Derhurst. The parish is four miles distant south-west from Tewkesbury, eight east from Newent, and eight north from Gloucester. It is situated upon the west bank of the Severn, and very subject to floods from that river.

The etymology of Turley, or Tirley, as it is sometimes written, is uncertain; but Haw signifies a green plot in a valley, and is descriptive of the situation of the place.

It is a rich, loamy soil, with some clay, and produces excellent herbage. The houses in general are mean cottages, built of brick and wattling, notwithstanding there is a quarry near, if not in the parish, of fine blue stone, with a very strait smoth surface, proper for building.

It is a common practice at this place, particularly after floods, to fish, as they call it, in the Severn for coals, and the business is performed in the following manner : They sink a net, with its mouth extended by an iron hoop of a semi-circular form, and a person stirs the bottom of the river with a long pole just before the net, by which means, and by the assistance of the current, the coals roll into it. Five or six boats are sometimes employ'd in this business at a time.

They still retain the antient custom at this place, which formerly prevailed at many others, of strewing the floor of the church over with grafs on Whitsunday and Trinity Sunday, and there is an acre of ground given to maintain it.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This was part of the manor of Derhurst at the time of the general survey.

'Etric held two yard-lands and a half at Trinleie, in the time of king Edward, but 'William the son of Baderon holds them now.' Domesday, p. 72.

Turley belonged to the abbey of Westminster till that house was dissolved. It was then granted to the chapter of Westminster 34 H. 8. But queen Mary coming to the crown, the monastery was restored, and this manor was regranted to the abbey and convent of Westminster in the fourth year of her reign. After the death of that princess, the monastery was again dissolved, and the manor of Turley regranted to the chapter of Westminster 2 Eliz.

Thomas Throckmorton had livery of the manor of Turley 9 Eliz. and sir William Throckmorton, or Throgmorton, was lord of it in 1608. Thomas earl of Coventry was lord of the manor when sir Robert Atkyns drew up his account of it, and the present earl of Coventry is now lord of the manor. For his lordship's arms, see Derhurst.

Lands in this parish, given to maintain lamps in the church of Turley, were granted to sir William Rider 7 Jac. A meadow in Turley, which belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, was granted to Lawrence Baskerville, and William Blake, scrivener, 3 Jac. Christopher Rastall died seized of Woodend and Baul's Meadow in Turley, and left Thomas his son thirty years old. Mr. Griffin has a good estate in this place, which formerly belonged to Mr. George Hurdman.

The Haw is the other division of the parish, where there is a passage over the Severn. The prior of Derhurst was seized of Haws 56 H. 3. After the suppression of alien priories, the manor of Haws was granted to the abbey of Tewkesbury 7 E. 4. And after the suppression of that abbey, it was granted to Giles Throckmorton 35 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, within the peculiar of Derhurst, worth 40*l.* a year. The lord chancellor is patron, and the reverend Mr. Charles Parker is the present incumbent. There is no glebe, and the impropriation belongs to the earl of Coventry.

The church is dedicated to St. Michael. It is small, with a low embattled tower at the west end.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

The following inscription is upon the table of a monument in the chancel :

Beneath lyes William the son of George Hurdman, of Sandpitts Gent. Grandson of Edward Hurdman y^e first Maior of the City of Worcester. He dy'd August y^e 5th 1684, aged about 55 Y^{rs}.

The monument is decorated with the family arms, viz. Argent, upon a fess between three crescents gules, as many fleurs de lis Or. — There are also inscriptions for several others of the same name.

Upon a monument, against the fourth wall of the chancel, it is thus written :

To the Pious Memory of M^{rs} Mary Browne, third Daughter of John Browne Sen^r of Cumberwood in y^e Parish Gent, who exchanged this Life for a better Jan^y 18th 1717. She was a Person eminent for her Piety, Liberality and Charity, and like Tabitha, was allways employ'd in doing Good and in Dispensing her Bounty to all about her : But in a more particular Manner to her Relations.

Upon the monument are these arms in a lozenge, Or, on a fess gules three chefs rooks of the first ; in chief as many martlets sable.

There are inscriptions for John Brown of Tirley, gent. who died in 1656; for John Brown of Cumberwood, gent. buried in 1681; and for Jane his wife, daughter of Giles Driver, of Rendcombe, gent. who died in 1683; for Henry Browne, son of John and Jane, buried in 1688; and for Charles and Anne Browne, son and daughter of John and Jane, who were buried in the year 1722.

Benefactions.

A house and land called Turley's Elm are charged with 10*l.* a year for the use of the poor. Mr. Joseph Millard, who was buried in 1727, by his will, gave 5*l.* a year for ever out of his estate at the Rye, to buy five coats, shoes, and stockings, for as many poor men. The reverend Mr. Bateman, vicar of this parish, gave 20*l.* with which an acre of land in Kingsend was purchased, for the use of the poor. And Mrs. Susanna Gwyn gave three acres of land in Harley, and one in Churchfield to the same use. Mrs. Jane Atwood, and Mrs. Mary Atwood of Tewkesbury, gave about an acre of pasture ground and orcharding, called Netherstone Leafow, in Turley, to the use of the minister, for a sermon in the church on Holy Thursday, and on Ascension-day, for ever. In default, the profits to go to the poor.

At the beginning of this century, there were 76 houses in this parish, and about 300 inhabitants, whereof 20 were freeholders; yearly births 8, and was lord of this manor in the year 1608. It passed afterwards to Richard Baugh, esq; who died seized of Twining in 1682, and left three daughters coheireffes, of whom the eldest was married to Charles Hancock, esq; who died seized of the manor of Twining in the year 1717. It passed afterwards to Peter Hancock, esq; who dying on the 5th of May, 1776, his widow, Mrs. Anne Hancock, became possessed of it as part of her jointure. By her he left issue two daughters, Anne, married to George Maxwell, of Twining, esq; and Charlotte, wedded to John Embury, of the same place, esq; to whom, as coheireffes, the manor will descend on the death of their mother. Mr. Maxwell's arms are, Argent, within a bordure gules a saltire between two crescents, one in chief the other in base, sable.

John Conquest died seized of the manor of Gobe's Hull, within the manor of Tewkesbury 26 E. 1. The place is now called Gubber Hill. It is an antient seat, moated round, formerly belonging to the Reads, but is now the property of HAMLETS. 1. Part of Mythe-Hook, which lies in the hundred of Tewkesbury.

2. Wood-end, where Thomas Kemble, esq; has a good estate. His arms are given under Tewkesbury.

3. Church-end, in which is the seat of the late Peter Hancock, esq.

4. Sbuthanger, which lies upon the great turnpike-road. Mr. George Turberville died seized of a good house and estate in this hamlet about the year 1775, which are now his widow's. The Turbervilles are an antient family, and bear Checky vert and gules, a fess ermine.

The Neasts were a respectable family, formerly residing here, who enjoyed a good estate, now gone out of that name by the marriage of the heir general with the late Mr. Havard, whose son, Mr. Neast Havard of Tewkesbury is the present owner of it. Mr. Havard gives for his arms, Argent, a bull's head caboshed between three mullets.

The Miss Woolleys have also a good house and estate here, formerly belonging to the Aycriggs.

5. Hill-end, where John Martyn, of Overbury, esq; has a good estate. Mr. Martyn of Pebworth, who served the office of high sheriff of Gloucestershire in the year 1732, gave for his arms, Sable, on a fess Or three mascles azure, between as many swans heads erased argent gorged of the second. But I am not absolutely certain that the Martyns of Overbury bear the same arms.

6. Green-end, where Mr. Baldwin's house and estate lay, now the property of the reverend Mr. Vernon.

Puckrup is not properly a hamlet, but an estate formerly Mr. Baldwin's, but now Mr. Phelps's. And Phelps is another good estate, belonging to Mr. Warren.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 43*l.* a year to the curate. The dean and chapter of Christ Church college in Oxford are patrons, and the reverend Mr. Francis Mines is the present incumbent. The impropriation and advowson of the vicarage formerly belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to the chapter of Oxford 38 H. 8. The impropriation pays 30*l.* a year to the curate. The vicarage has no glebe belonging to it.

There was a dispute in the time of Malger bishop of Worcester, and of William abbat of Tewkesbury, between the church of Tewkesbury, and that of Twining, concerning certain tithes in this parish; which dispute was amicably adjusted in the manner expressed in the register-book of Tewkesbury abbey, whence the writing is copied and printed in Mr. Stephens's Supplement to the Monasticon, p. 201.

Lying near the deanery of Pershore in Worcester-shire, this church, by agreement, is visited by the archdeacon of Worcester-shire, in exchange for Broadway in the diocese of Worcester, which is visited by the archdeacon of the diocese of Gloucester.

The church is dedicated to Mary Magdalen, and has a low embattled tower, with six musical bells, at the west end.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a marble monument on the south side of the chancel, with the following inscription:

Qui multa solus meruit, unius jacet Monumenti particeps, Nempe Edwinus Baldwyn,
Patre suo Thoma ante annos circiter viginti sepulto, Hic una reconditur.

The monument is adorned with these arms, Argent, a saltire sable.

Upon another monument, with an exceedingly well finished alabaster figure of a lady, in the dress of her time, and an infant in her arms, it is thus written:

Heare lyeth buried the bodyes of Sybill Clare wyffe to Fraunces Clare Esquier and Anne their daughter, w^{ch} Sybill was only daughter & heire apparant unto Gabriel Blycke Esquier & Margaret his wyffe whoe in y^e 18 yeare of her age gave her in marriage to y^e sayed Fraunces, a Gentilman bothe worshipfull in parentage & commendable in good qualites between whom such was the affection & good lykinge as was seldom seen in their age, soe as if they had not ben prevented by deathe they had continewed a rare example, but when they moste joyced their matche they weare sonefte devided: for the sayed Sybill being conceiveid with child and after a dewe tyme delivered of a daughter, within one fortnight fell sycke, & after she had languished certen dayes, she willingly yealded her innocente soule into y^e handes of God the xiii daye of Februarie in the

To whos Soule God graunte a joyfull Reſurrection. Amen.

At the top of the monument are the following arms, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Argent, three chevrons ermine. 2d and 3d quarters are, Quarterly 1st and 4th, Sable, on a chevron argent three pellets, on a chief of the ſecond three black birds. 2d and 3d, Two lions paſſant.

There is a very large monument againſt the eaſt wall of the chancel, with inſcriptions,

For William Hancock, of Norton in the pariſh of Bredon, in the county of Worceſter, eſq; who died in 1676, aged 82.

For William Hancock, his eldeſt ſon, by his firſt wife, who died in 1674, aged 49.

For Charles Hancock, of this pariſh, eſq; who died in 1717, aged 73.

Under the figure of the firſt William Hancock are his arms, viz. Gules, a dexter hand couped argent, on a chief of the ſecond three fighting cocks of the firſt.

The laſt-mentioned monument is ornamented with paintings of ſhips, as if the family had been much concerned in naval affairs.

On the table of another monument in the chancel, it is thus written :

Juxta ſepultæ ſunt mortales Reliquiæ Thomæ Neaſt, Generoſi, Et quod corruptabile eſt, Spe reſurgendi Anima evolavit ſuperiores ad auras, ſanctaq; ſedes Aprilis duodecimo, Annoq; ſalutis Milieſimo ſexcentieſimo octageſimo octavo, Redamatus ab omnibus, multiſq; deſideratus. Over the monument are theſe arms, Per pale, baron and femme, 1. Argent, two lions paws erazed in ſaltire gules, for Neaſt. 2. Argent, on a croſs ſable a leopards face caboſhed Or, for Bridges.

There are ſeveral inſcriptions for the Baughs, particularly for Edward Baugh, gent. late one of the coroners for this county, who died in 1773. Their arms are, Gules, a feſs vaire between three mullets Or.

Benefactions.

Richard Edgock gave a farm in Twining, worth about 25*l.* a year, half to the miniſter, and half to the poor for ever. And Richard Portman, clerk, gave 40*s.* a year for ever, one half to the miniſter, and the other to the poor. As did John Reeks 6*s.* 8*d.* to the miniſter, and 13*s.* 4*d.* to the poor for a term.

John Beſt gave 50*s.* a year to the poor, and John Turberville gave twelve pecks of wheat to be diſtributed to the poor on St. Thomas day, yearly, for ever.

Charles Hancock, eſq; gave two ſilver flaggons for the communion, and 3*s.* 4*d.* a year is charged on a houſe at Tewkeſbury towards the repair of the church.

There were 140 houſes, and about 600 inhabitants in the pariſh, at the beginning of this century, whereof 37 were freeholders; yearly births 15, burials 13. Atkyns. The number of ſouls is now about 567.

U L E Y.

THIS pariſh lies in the hundred of Berkeley, above four miles north-eaſtward from Wotton-underedge, two eaſt from Durlſley, and fourteen ſouth from Glouceſter.

The name of it has been variously written, as Euuelege, Iweley, and Uley, and was given it on account of the many ſprings that riſe here, for, like that of Durlſley, it ſignifies the Watry Place.

The middle, and perhaps the greater part of the pariſh is paſture ground, interſperſed with orcharding, but there is ſome arable, and a great deal of woodland. The herbs Centaury, Lady's Mantle, Maidenhair, Agrimony, Vervain, and ſeveral other medicinal plants, are found in various parts of it.

It is bounded on the eaſt by part of the little village of Olepen, and, together with it, forms a deep comb, or valley, about a mile over, beautifully adorned with borderings of beech-wood, and plantations of fir, on the ſides of the lofty hills that everywhere encompaſs it, except to the weſt. Defended by thoſe hills from the chilling blaſts to which open ſituations are expoſed, vegetation is forward in the ſpring, and the winter not ſo ſevere as in moſt of the neighbouring places. It has an opening weſtward to the Vale, and a ſmall bourn, formed of the ſprings which riſe here, takes its courſe that way, and together with the Durlſley water, runs into the Severn at Slimbridge.

Part of the hill on the north ſide of the village ſhoots out in a rocky head, and is united by a narrow neck of land to the open plain adjoining to the pariſh of Nimpſfield. This ſpot of ground is called the Berry, from the oblong camp on the top of it, for Berry, or Bury, is but another name for a camp. Thus we have Berrybank in Staffordſhire, Berryhill in Hampſhire, Egbury, Dunbury, Okebury, and many other Berries in various parts of the kingdom beſides Glouceſterſhire. That which I am now deſcribing is very ſtrong by ſituation, with double intrenchments round the edge of the hill, incloſing the whole ſpace of ground on the top, conſiſting of thirty or forty acres; and the declivity without is ſo great as to ſecure it from any powerful attack, except at the entrance. This was certainly a Roman camp, as I prove by the coins which have been found about about it, (the greater part being of the emperors Antoninus and Constantine) of which Mr. Small, late owner of the estate, has made a collection.

Our ancestors delighted in sheltered situations, and Uley, from early ages, seems to have been the residence of many good families; but leaving the antient state of the village, to be resumed under the account of the manor, the following places engage our present attention.

Stout's-Hill is a handsome new house, with octagonal projections, turreted, and ornamented in the Gothic taste. It stands in a lawn of excellent verdure, upon an eminence that commands a view of the village in front, with a curtain of fine beech wood, hanging, as it were, from the slope of the hill, at a very agreeable distance to the south. It is the property and residence of Timothy Gyde, esq; who has a good estate in the parish, and gives for his arms, Azure, on a chevron between three fleurs de lis Or, as many mullets of the field. This is also the place of the writer's nativity, where he collected his first ideas, and for which he still indulges a natural partiality.

*Ille terrarum mihi præter omnes
Angulus ridet.
Ver ubi longum, tepidasque præbet
Jupiter brumas.* Hor. O. vii.

There are two other good houses at the Green, near the church. One of them is the property of John Holbrow, esq; where he resides, and has also a very good estate in the parish. He is the son of the late William Holbrow, esq; who was high sheriff of Gloucestershire in the year 1741. The present Mr. Holbrow is in the commission of the peace for the county, and gives for his arms, Azure, a bend between six mullets argent.

The other was built in the time of king James the First, by one of the Dorneys, (a family of antient standing in this parish) as appears by their name in the front, and who then possessed the estate belonging to it. It was afterwards sold to the Smalls, and is now the property of Mrs. Small, relict of the late Mr. John Small, who died in January, 1778.

Bencombe is a good house, where the Dorneys have long resided, and now belongs to Mr. Edward Dorney, who has a good estate there. His arms are, Gules, a chevron vaire between three crescents Or.

This village, tho' not large, is very populous, from a manufacture of fine broad cloth long established here. It is still carried on by several persons in a very extensive manner, and furnishes employment for the lower class of people. But idleness and debauchery are so deeply rooted in them, by means of those seminaries of vice called Alehouses, that the poor are very burthensome. These houses are scattered all over the country, and are daily increasing, which we owe either to the magistrates inattention, or indulgence; or, perhaps, to a mistaken notion of serving the community by increasing the public revenue from licences; but they may be assured that nothing can compensate for depravity of morals, and the loss of industry.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This place was a member of the great lordship of Berkeley at the time of the general survey, as appears by a passage in Domesday, p. 68, and by the translation of it under Berkeley, p. 271, where there is nothing further recorded than that 'In 'Euuelege are two hides.'

It has been fully related under the account of the last-mentioned town, that the lordship of Berkeley, with its members, was given by king Henry the Second to Robert Fitz-Harding, ancestor to the present earl of Berkeley; and this estate continued in the elder branch of his lordship's family, 'till it was settled on Maurice Berkeley, second son of Maurice lord Berkeley, some time in the reign of king Edward the Third. That Maurice Berkeley was ancestor to the Berkeleys of Stoke Giffard, whose descendants held Uley in an uninterrupted succession to the end of the reign of king Richard the Third, when sir William Berkeley took part with that king, and was in the battle of Bosworth. Victory declaring for the earl of Richmond, afterwards king Henry the Seventh, sir William fled into Brittain, and was attainted 1 H. 7. and his estates were seized by the crown.

Jasper duke of Bedford, the king's uncle, had a grant of Uley to himself, and the heirs male of his body, 1 H. 7. But afterwards sir William Berkeley made his peace with the king, and took a grant of the reversion after the duke's estate taille, 4 H. 7. whereby this estate returned to his family. The earl of Berkeley is the present lord of the manor of Uley.

There were two dependant manors in the parish. Basslet's court was a reputed manor, wherein the Basslets had an antient seat. Sir Anselm Basslet married Margaret, daughter of Thomas lord Berkeley, and of Joan, the daughter of Ralph Somery, lord of Campden, and with her had this estate. William Basslet was lord of Basslet's court in the year 1608. Richard Basslet was sequestered in the great rebellion, and paid a composition of 653*l.* William Basslet, a descendant from the last William, left two daughters, Elizabeth and Margaret, coheiresses, of whom Elizabeth, the survivor, was married to William Wescombe, who sold this estate to several persons upwards of twenty years since, and there is now only a small part of the antient mansion house remaining. The Basslets gave for their arms, Ermine, on a canton gules a mullet Or.

The White Court was another reputed manor, which is said to have had two parks formerly belonging to it. The manor house has been totally totally demolished time immemorially, but there is a kind of hamlet that still retains the name of the White Court.

Bencombe lies on the south side of the parish, upon an eminence at the head of the combe, or valley, which gave occasion to its name, and is mentioned in records.

It belonged to the Berkeley family when they first had Uley. Peter de Iweley died seized of it 1 R. 1. John de Benecomb died also seized of it, and left Agnes, his only daughter and heiress, married to John de Couel (de Coaley) in the reign of king Edward the Third.

It has been observed that Mr. Edward Dorney has a good house and estate there.

The records mention, that Elianor the widow of John de Veel, son of sir Peter le Veel, held lands in Uley for her life. Sir William Rumsey levied a fine of the reversion of those lands to sir John Popham and Elizabeth his wife 3 H. 4.

Besides the above, there are places in Uley of the following names, viz. Toney, Crawley's Shard, Shoreditch, Shadwell, Ellcombe, Rowdon, Bawcot, which in the British signifies a little wood; Angerston, perhaps more truly Hengærston, the town at the antient camp; Resdon, the Hurn, and some others; which names are supposed to be all significant, and expressive of some striking circumstances peculiar to the respective places.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Dursley, worth about 140*l.* a year. Roger lord Berkeley gave the advowson of it to the priory of Stanley St. Leonard's; and thirty acres in the parish now pay tithes to Stanley. The lord chancellor is patron, and the reverend Mr. John Gregory is the present incumbent. There are sixteen acres for the glebe. The rectory pays 13*s.* 4*d.* a year to the crown.

Sir Herbert Croftes, baronet, afterwards bishop of Hereford, was rector of this church in 1667.

The church is dedicated to St. Giles. It has no aisle, but there are two handsome galleries at the west end, and a low embattled tower on the north side.

Benefactions.

Mr. William Pegler, who died in 1695, gave a parcel of land, and 10*l.* in money, to the use of the poor; and an estate belonging to Mr. John Holbrow is charged with 10*s.* a year in lieu of the latter.

The reverend Mr. Henry Stubs gave 50*l.* to the parish, to establish a school for teaching poor children to write. And he also gave 10*s.* a year in books for the poor.

Mr. Tether gave 30*s.* a year to be distributed to the poor on St. Thomas day, and 10*s.* for a sermon. And Thomas Parflow gave 10*s.* a year to the poor.

It is said there were 200 houses in this parish, and about 900 inhabitants, of whom 80 were freeholders, at the beginning of this century; yearly births 21, and burials 19. Atkyns. In the year 1748, the number of souls was 1162, and since that time they are increased to about 1310.

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Botloe, three miles eastward from Newent, and about six north-westward from Gloucester.

It lies in the Vale, on the west bank of the river Leden, by which it is bounded, and from which it takes its name. The lands, like the circumjacent fine country, are abundantly rich in corn and pasture, but the parish has nothing particular to recommend it to the notice of the antiquary or naturalist.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor belonged very antiently to the abbey of Gloucester, as appears by a passage in Domesday-book, of which the following is a translation:

' The same church [St. Peter at Gloucester] holds Ledene in Botelawes hundred. There are four hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and one bordar, with eight plow-tillages. There are four servi, and a mill of 4*s.* and ten acres of meadow. A wood two miles long, and two furlongs broad. It is worth scarcely 30*sol.*' Domesday, p. 71.

The abbat of Gloucester had a writ of Quo warranto brought against him, to oblige him to set forth his right to free warren here, and his claim to that privilege was allowed 15 E. 1.

The manor continued in the abbey till the general dissolution, when it passed to the crown, by which it was afterwards granted to John Arnold, who died seized of it 37 H. 8. and livery was granted to sir Nicholas Arnold, his son and heir, the same year. Rowland Arnold, son of sir Nicholas, left an only daughter Dorothy, married to sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecot in Warwickshire, who was lord of the manor in the year 1608. It passed afterwards to Thomas Brown, esq; alderman of Gloucester, who was owner of it at the beginning of this century, and Mrs. Broxoline is the present proprietor.

The church is a curacy, in the Forest deanery, worth 20*l.* a year, to which the dean and chapter of Gloucester present.

The impropriation, formerly belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, was granted to the chapter of that see, 33 H. 8. It is now in lease to Mrs. Broxoline, and pays 14*l.* 10*s.* a year to the curate.

Sir Robert Atkyns reckoned 25 houses in this parish, and estimated the people at about 100, 7 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 2, burials 2. The present number of houses is only 19, and the inhabitants are supposed to be proportionably decreased.

UPTON St. LEONARD'S.

THIS parish lies in the united hundreds of Dudston and King's-barton, about three miles north from Painswick, and three south-eastward from Gloucester.

With respect to Upton, or Optune, as it was antiently written, it will be sufficient just to observe, that the village is seated on a gentle elevation, in the vale, which certainly suggested the first idea of the name.

Creed's Place is a very handsome new brick house, the property and residence of Robert Campbell, esq; who built it upon an estate which he purchased of John Guise, esq; about the year 1770.

Whitley Court is also a handsome seat, belonging to Peter Snell, esq; who resides there.

I don't find that there are any antiquities or curious natural productions here, but the hills adjoining to the southward yield iron ore, or ochre, as appears from a spring of water that runs down the road, tinging the stones in its course of a redish yellow colour.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Upton was a member of the great manor of Bertune, before, and at the time of the general survey, and is entered in the record among the demans of the crown, under the title Terra Regis.

'Aluui, the sheriff, claims Optune, another member [of the manor of Bertune]. There is one hide of land, and there are four [free] men. 'Hunfridus holds it.' Domesday, p. 67.

But sir Robert Atkyns has placed another abstract from Domesday to the account of this parish, which has nothing to do with it, but belongs to Utone, or Wotton, near Gloucester.

There were formerly two manors in this parish of the common name of Upton. Want of distinction occasions great difficulty in applying the records with precision, but I shall endeavour to point out the descent of each manor in regular succession.

Walkelyn de Fabrica held Uptone of king Edward the First, by the service of paying two hundred arrow heads. He pleaded his right in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto brought against him 15 E. 1. and his claim was then allowed.

Edmond Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel, was seized of the manor of Upton; but being beheaded at Hereford, in the unsettled reign of king Edward the Second, all his lands here came to the crown, and were granted to Richard de Muncmuth 4 E. 3. Richard earl of Arundel, son of Edmond, was seized of one tenement, and one mill in Upton St. Leonard, and of the hundred of King's Barton, 21 R. 2. Elizabeth, widow of Thomas duke of Norfolk, and daughter of Richard earl of Arundel, was seized of Upton 3 H. 6. John duke of Norfolk was seized of the manor of Upton St. Leonard's 11 H. 6. John duke of Norfolk, and Elizabeth his wife, levied a fine of it 8 E. 4. Joan, the widow of William de Beauchamp, lord de Bergavenny, one of the sisters and heirs of Thomas earl of Arundel, died seized of the manor of Upton St. Leonard's 14 H. 6. as did Beatrix, the widow of Thomas earl of Arundel, 18 H. 6. Eleanor, the widow of sir Walter Hungerford, late wife of sir Richard Poinings, and formerly the wife of John earl of Arundel, died seized of Upton 33 H. 6.

Another manor of the name of Upton belonged to the Berkeley family for several ages successively.

Thomas lord Berkeley died seized of Upton St. Leonard's 35 E. 3. as did Maurice lord Berkeley, his son, in the 42d year of the same reign. Thomas lord Berkeley, son of Maurice, had livery the next year, and dying 5 H. 5. left Elizabeth, his only daughter and heir, married to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. Edward Nevil, lord Bergavenny, married Elizabeth, the daughter of Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, in whose right he was seized of the manor of Upton, and died 16 E. 4. Thomas lord Berkeley died possessed of this manor 24 H. 8. whereupon Thomas lord Berkeley, his son, had livery granted him the same year, and died in the 26th year of that reign. Henry lord Berkeley, son of the last Thomas, had livery 3 Mariae.

The manor of Upton was granted to Walter Pye and William Beal 2 Jac. It is now divided among several freeholders, but the late Mr. Singleton, lord of Dudston and King's Barton hundred, was lord paramount.

Bullins is a reputed manor in this parish, belonging to Mr. Selwyn.

Grove Court is another reputed manor, formerly the property of a family who seem to have taken their name from this estate. Jeoffery de la Grave held one yard-land in Upton by the service of attending attending the king, in his wars against Wales, with bow and arrows forty days at his own charge, and afterwards at the king's cost, 5 H. 3. and Sibilla de la Grave held lands in Upton St. Leonard's of the king in capite, by the same service, 10 E. 2. Esch. This estate passed afterwards to the Berkeleys, and was the property of Richard Walter, esq; at the beginning of the present century. It now belongs to Mrs. Blisset, of Chancery Lane, London.

John the son of Nicholas le Broke granted divers lands in Upton St. Leonard, Gloucester, Barton Abbats, Kynemerbury, and Sneedham, to the abbey of Gloucester 3 E. 2. and that abbey held two plow-tillages in Upton, each worth 30*s.* per ann. 17 E. 3. William Nottingham, esq; the king's attorney-general, gave the manor of Sneedham, &c. to the abbey of Gloucester, for the purpose of erecting a chantry in the abbey, 10 E. 4.

Part of Snedeham in the parish of Upton St. Leonard, late belonging to the abbey of Gloucester, and containing twenty-six acres and a half, was sold by the crown, Sep. 11, 34 H. 8. to the mayor and burgesses of Gloucester, who conveyed it to Thomas Lane, esq; the following year. These lands, with some others, were to be held by the 20th part of a knight's fee, and by the payment of 3*s.* 6*d.* ob. to the court of augmentation.

Lands and tithes in Upton belonged to the abbey of Pershore, and were granted to John Butler 37 H. 8.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth 20*l.* a year from the impropriation. The rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Upton St. Leonard belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and were granted to the bishoprick 33 H. 8. and confirmed 6 E. 6. The bishop of Gloucester is patron and impropriator, and the reverend Mr. Charles Bishop is the present incumbent.

The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, has an aisle on the north side, and an embattled tower at the west end, in which are five bells.

An estate worth about 15*l.* a year is given for the repair of the church.

WALTON CARDIFFE

IS an inconsiderable parish, in the lower division of Tewkesbury hundred, about one mile south-eastward from the town of that name, and nine northward from Gloucester.

The parish consists chiefly of rich meadow and pasture, and is watered by the little river Tirlle, or Turle, which comes from Ashchurch, and after joining the Swilyate at this place, runs down to Tewkesbury.

What is the signification of Walton, I shall leave to the determination of others, but the cognomen of Cardiffe was certainly taken from the family of de Kaerdyff, to whom the manor belonged, and distinguishes this place from Walton in the neighbouring parish of Derhurst.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Walton was dependant on the great manor of Tewkesbury in the reign of king Edward the Confessor, as appears by the translation from Domesday-book, inserted under Tewkesbury.

It continued to be a member of the same lordship, and was held of Richard de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, 47 H. 3.

In the sheriff's list of all the villis of the county, with their respective lords, returned into the exchequer 9 E. 1. it is said, that William de Kerdiff was lord of Walton Kerdiff in Tewkesbury hundred, but that it was then in the hands of Margaret countess of Gloucester and Hertford.

It appears by the escheator's inquisition, taken 8 E. 2. after the death of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, that Paulinus de Kerdyff then held Walton of the said earl; and by another inquisition, it likewise appears, that the same Paul de Kaerdyff died 9 E. 2. seized of the hamlet of Walton, which he held of the countess of Gloucester, as of the honour of Tewkesbury, by the fourth part of a knight's fee, and left William de Kaerdyff his son and heir, sixteen years old. Joan the widow of ——— Kaerdiff, and afterwards the widow of John de Wynecote, was endowed of Walton Kaerdiff, and died 23 E. 3. Robert Underhill and Evet his wife levied a fine of Walton Kaerdiff, to Edward de Kaerdiff and Joan his wife, to ——— Impringham of Tewkesbury, to Thomas Gestock, and to John Bandrip and Elizabeth his wife, 37 E. 3. And Edward de Kaerdiff and Joan his wife were seized thereof in the 43d year of the same reign.

William de Chesterton, and others, were seized of the manor of Walton Kaerdiff 7 R. 2. as was Edward earl of Stafford 4 H. 4.

John Basset, of Bentbury in Glamorganshire, in right of Elizabeth his wife, was seized of Walton at the time of his death, 4 H. 8. William Basset, son of John, dying before his father, William Basset, son of William, became heir to his grandfather, and had livery of the manor granted to him 22 H. 8.

William

William lord Willoughby, and Thomas Hurdage and Catherine his wife, levied a fine of the moiety of the manor of Walton Caerdif to the king, 3 E. 6. James Gunter and Anne his wife, levied a fine of Walton Cardiff, and Walton Bassett, to Thomas Barew and Margaret his wife, 1 Mar.

The manor came afterwards to the Reads, who enjoyed it for many years. Giles Read, esq; was lord of it in 1608, and Foulk Read, esq; was proprietor of it in 1658. The manor is now vested in the corporation of Tewkesbury.

Three closes in Walton, which had belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, were granted to Thomas Sheldon and Lawrence Poyner, 36 H. 8. The tithes of Walton Caerdiff, and divers lands, reputed to be a manor, part of the possessions of Tewkesbury abbey, were granted, together with a moiety of lands in Derhurst Place, to William Read and John Read, 7 E. 6. Another portion of tithes, formerly the property of that house, was granted to Daniel Perte and Alexander Perte, the same year. Another portion of tithes in Nether Gaston in Walton Cardiff, and tithes of hay in Walton Cardiff, which had belonged to the same monastery, were granted to Francis Maurice and Francis Phillips, in trust for sir William Ryder, 7 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth 17*l.* 10*s.* to the curate, who is nominated by All Souls college, Oxford. Foulk Read, esq; in 1658, gave the small tithes to the curate, and the same year built the chapel, which is dedicated to St. James. The parishioners bury at Tewkesbury and Ashchurch.

WAPLEY and CODRINGTON.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Grumbald's Ash, about six miles distant north-west from Marshfield, three south-westward from Chipping Sodbury, and about thirty-two southward from Gloucester.

The soil is fruitful, and the greater part of the parish is in pasturage. The river Boyd rises in the hamlet of Codrington, and runs thro' Bitton, where it empties itself into the Avon. The face of the country is exceedingly diversified with slopes, swells, and agreeable declivities, but the parish yields nothing curious for the entertainment of the naturalist or antiquary.

The large manor house, called Codrington Court, is now occupied as a farm house.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

A part of Wapley was considered as a member of the great manor of Betunc, in Suinheve, now Langley and Swineshead hundred, and is entered under the title Terra Regis in Domesday-book. There were likewise two other estates here, which are thus described in the record :

' The bishop of St. Laud at Constance holds ' Wapelic in Polcrecerce hundred, and Aldred ' holds it of him. The same person held it in ' the time of king Edward. There is one hide, ' and one plow-tillage in demean, and two servi. ' It is worth and was worth 20*sol.*' Domesday, p. 71.

' Radulf the brother of Roger [de Berchelai] ' holds Wapelic, in Pulchecerce hundred, of the ' king. There is one hide. Godric held it. ' There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four ' servi. It is worth and was worth 20*sol.*' Ibid. p. 75.

The manors of Wapley and Codrington were granted by king Henry the Second to Radulph son of Stephen, who immediately gave them to the abbey of Stanley, in the diocese of Salisbury, to pray for the soul of the king, and for the souls of himself and his family.

The sheriff returned that the abbat of Stanley was lord of the manor of Codrington, in Grymbaldashe hundred, 9 E. 1. and a writ of Quo warranto was brought against the abbat, in the 15th year of the same reign, to oblige him to set forth his right to court leet and felons goods within the manor of Codrington, and his claim to those privileges was then allowed.

The abbat of Stanley obtained a licence for alienating the manor of Wapley, reserving a rent of 11*l.* a year, for the repair of his abbey. Accordingly it was sold to John de Codrington, and to the heirs of his body, 33 H. 6. and John de Codrington obtained from pope Martin the Fifth, in the 12th year of his pontificate, a licence for having a portable consecrated altar for the celebration of mass in what places he pleased.

Simon Codrington, esq; was lord of the manor in the year 1608, as was his descendant, Robert Codrington, of Didmarton, esq; at the beginning of the present century. The manor continued in the Codrington family, 'till it passed out of that name to sir Richard Bamfylde, by his marriage with Jane, daughter and sole heir of colonel John Codrington, of Wraxall in Somersetshire. Sir Richard Bamfylde, baronet, died in the year 1776, and his reliēt, lady Bamfylde, is the present owner of the manors of Wapley and Codrington. The arms of Bamfylde are, Or, upon a bend gules three mullets argent.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Campden, worth 5*l.* 10*s.* a year. Mr. Dark is patron and impropriator, and Mr. Roberts is the present incumbent.

The rectory formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and was granted to Drew Drurey and Edward Downing 16 Eliz. The curate has no house nor glebe.

The church is a small building, with a wooden turret in the middle. It is dedicated to St. Mary, and has divine service performed in it only once a fortnight.

There were 14 houses in the parish, and about 60 inhabitants, 3 of whom were reputed to be freeholders, at the beginning of the present century. And the people are about the same number at this time.

WELFORD.

THIS parish lies in the upper division of Derhurst hundred, nine miles distant north from Campden, four south from Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire, and thirty-six north-eastward from Gloucester.

It is bounded by Weston upon Avon on the east, by Dorington on the south, and on the north and north-west by the river Avon, which separates it from Warwickshire.

It is a rich soil, abundantly fertile in corn and pasture; but the public roads in all this part of the county are very incommodious, and almost impassible in the winter season. They are either carried through miry lanes, or along head lands in the common fields, so that the traveller is obliged to shape his course in a zig-zag direction, as the ground will permit.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Domesday takes notice of Welford among the vills in Derhurst hundred, which were held by the church of St. Dennis at Paris, and observes, that there were fifteen hides. But as the record will not bear abridgment, the reader is referred to p. 72. where he will find the whole account in the original language.

The priory of Derhurst, which was a cell to the abbey of St. Dennis, held the manor of the earls of Gloucester, and the same house continued possessed of it 'till the dissolution of alien priories, when this manor was granted to the abbey of Tewkesbury.

After the general dissolution of religious houses, this manor was granted by the crown to William Willington, of Barcheston in Warwickshire, in taille, the remainder to Edward Grevil of Milcote, and Margaret his wife, daughter of William Willington, and to her heirs, 7 E. 6.

Lodowick, or Lewis Grevil, only son of Edward and Margaret, had livery of this manor granted to him 1 Eliz. Sir Edward Grevil of Milcot, only son of Lodowick, was lord of this manor in the year 1608; but being much involved in debt, he sold his whole estate to Lionel Cranfield earl of Middlesex, whose daughter Frances carried this manor, by her marriage, to Richard Sackville, fifth earl of Dorset. Charles Sackville, sixth earl of Dorset, died Jan. 29, 1705-6, and was succeeded by his only son Lionel-Cranfield, seventh earl and first duke of Dorset, who was lord of the manor of Welford at the beginning of this century, and the duke of Dorset is the present lord of the manor. His grace's arms are, Quarterly Or and gules, over all a bend vaire. CREST. Out of a ducal coronet Or, an estoile of eight points argent. SUPPORTERS. Two leopards argent, spotted sable. MOTTO. AUT NUNQUAM TENTES AUT PERFICE.

The records mention other persons as proprietors of the manor. Thus it is said, sir Thomas West and Alice his wife were seized of the manor of Welford 10 R. 2. and John Grevil, esq; died seized of it 23 H. 6. But they could only be tenants under the priory of Derhurst.

William Hoese and Margaret his wife purchased lands in Welford of Ralph de Welford, which lands had been formerly purchased by the said Margaret, and by William Comyn her former husband, 5 H. 3. A tenement in Welford belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Bordesley in Worcestershire, and was granted to Robert earl of Leicester 16 Eliz.

HAMLETS. 1. Bickmarsh, containing one family. In the antient survey, made in the reign of king William the First, Bichemerse is said to be in Ceolfede hundred, which is now comprized in that of Kiftsgate. But how derogatory soever it may seem to that record, the hamlets belonging to this parish now lie in Warwickshire, and pay land-tax in aid of that county, but contribute to the parochial levies of Welford. Hence it may be inferred, that some alterations have taken place in the division of counties, as well as of hundreds, within the last seven hundred years. The record runs thus:

‘ Eddiet holds Bichemerse in Ceolfede hundred, of the king. She held it in the time of king Edward. There is one hide, and in demearn two plow-tillages, and one villein, and one bordar, and four servi. It is worth and was worth 20 sol.’ Domesday, p. 79.

2. Little Dorington, where are three families.

3. Bedlam, which does not seem at present intituled to the distinction of a hamlet, as the only house within it was originally a barn.

the furnace. Much of its substance evaporates in smoak, but it contains no metal of any kind.

I believe this to be the only place in Gloucestershire where the Carduus Fullonum, or Teasle, is cultivated for the use of the clothing manufacture. Several common medicinal plants grow in different parts of the parish, and I observe the herb Celery flourishes vigorously on the banks by the sides of the high roads, which indicates a great strength of soil.

There is a ferry over the Severn at this place, to Framilode on the other side, where is an inn for the accommodation of travellers; but no such conveniency on the Westbury side.

My inquiries for antiquities in this place have not been very successful. I visited the parish church in 1776, and saw a piece of a bone lying in the chancel window, which was said to be a part of the thigh bone of some prodigious giant. It was about two feet long, appearing very porous at the broken end. I could make no estimate of the length of it when intire, but it was twenty-two inches in circumference. The inhabitants knew not how it came there, nor indeed any thing about it.

Doctor Hakewill, in his learned Apology of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World, relates, that about the year 1634, there were several bones of a prodigious size found not far distant from Gloucester, but does not say where; and that king Charles the First appointed lord Herbert of Cherbury to examine them, who collected a huckle bone, a piece of a shoulder blade, some part of a tooth, and the bone of the nose, all of astonishing size. Doctor Hervey, a great anatomist of that age, and Doctor Clayton, the king's professor of physic in Oxford, with several other judicious persons, examined them, and concurred in opinion that they were not human, but the bones of an elephant, brought hither, as may be supposed, by the Romans; for according to Dion, Claudius brought elephants into Britain. The bone of the nose in particular was not like a man's, which confirmed them the rather in opinion that none of the others were human. They were all found together, mixt with the bones and horns of sheep and oxen, and the tusk of a boar, and a great square stone, like the top stone of an altar, lay by them, whence it is imagined that they were the relicks of some great sacrifice made near the place where they lay. And it is not improbable that the piece of the bone which I saw in Westbury church was found at the same time with the above.

I am next to shew what share this parish has had in military affairs. In the time of the great civil wars, the governor of Gloucester placed a garrison at Westbury, to keep the market of that city open, but Corbet relates that the garrison was lost 'by the treachery of captain Thomas Davis, who sold them at a rate to sir John Winter. This Davis,' says he, 'commanded the guard at Huntley, where himself by night, some distance from the house, attended the enemy's coming, went in before them, as friends from Gloucester, gave them possession, and having accomplished that piece of treason, immediately marched to Westbury, where he was received for a friend, and led in his train of cavaleers, so that both places were surprized in two hours, and about eighty men and arms lost in that great exigency.' The same author relates that afterwards, '150 muskettiers, and the whole strength of horse were drawn out [from Gloucester] towards the forest side, and came upon Westbury. Here the enemy held the church, and a strong house adjoining. The governor [Maffie] observing a place not flanked, fell up that way with the forlorn-hope, and secured them from the danger of shot. The men got stools and ladders to the windows, where they stood safe, cast in granadoes, and fired them out of the church. Having gained the church, he quickly beat them out of their works, and possessed himself of the house, where he took about thirty prisoners without the loss of a man.'

Before the reformation, there lived at this place one Mr. James Baynham,* who was burnt at the stake for religion in the reign of king Henry the Eighth.

Of

* The following detail of his sufferings will excite an abhorrence of the persecuting principles of the times he lived in, and tend to make the present age happy in the religious liberty they enjoy.— Mr. James Baynham was son of sir Alexander Baynham, the elder, who had considerable possessions in this parish, in St. Briavel's, and other parts of the forest of Dean. The son was bred up at the inns of court, and was of a virtuous and religious turn. He married the widow of Simon Fish, the author of a famous book intituled the Supplication of the Beggars, which contributed greatly to the reformation of religion. King Henry the Eighth had read and approved the book, and gave his protection to the author to screen him from persecution. Mr. Baynham was suspected to be of reforming principles, and not long after his marriage, was accused to sir Thomas Moor, then chancellor of England, and taken by a serjeant at arms out of the Temple to sir Thomas's house at Chelsea, where he remained a kind of prisoner at large for some time. But sir Thomas not being able to prevail with him to renounce his principles, used him with greater severity, cast him into a prison in the same house, whipped him at a tree in his garden, called afterwards the Tree of Truth, and at length sent him to the tower of London to force him by the rack to accuse such gentlemen of the Temple as were of his judgment, and to confess where his books were, attending in person to see this cruelty executed on him. And because his wife could not be prevailed with to discover his books, she was sent to the Fleet, and their goods were confiscated.

When sir Thomas found all his attempts to reduce him to the church were vain, he sent him to the bishop of London, who put him in Lollard's Tower, examined him several times upon articles and interrogatories, and at last, by fair words and threats, brought him to recant; and so doing penance at St. Paul's cross, he was soon dismissed and sent home. But he was so troubled in conscience, that within a month afterwards he asked forgiveness of God, and the protestant congregation in Bow-lane; and openly declared in St. Austin's church, that he had denied God, and prayed all the people to forgive him. Upon this, he was soon apprehended, condemned, and delivered to the sheriff to be executed. When he came to the stake in Smithfield, where he suffered April 30, 1531, he spoke thus to the people: 'Good people, I am come hither to die as an heretic, and these be the articles I suffer for: I say that it is lawful for every man and woman to have God's book in the mother tongue: That the pope is antichrist: That there are no other keys of heaven gate but preaching of the word: That there is no other purgatory

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This and Hueberie, which we now call Westbury upon Trim, were two large manors, and as the accounts stand in Domesday, there appears to be some difficulty, at first sight, especially, to discriminate between them.

For as Chire, that is Shirehampton, and Clifstone immediately follow the account of Westbury in the record, it is natural enough to imagine that the account relates to Westbury upon Trim, in whose neighbourhood those places lie. But that could not be the case, because the record declares Westberie to be the demesns of the crown, and it appears by the same authority, that Hueberie, now Westbury upon Trim, belonged at that time to the church of Worcester.

This difficulty seems to have been the reason why sir Robert Atkyns gave no abstract from Domesday concerning this manor. The record runs thus :

' There are thirty hides in Westberie. King Edward had five plow-tillages there in demean, and thirty-two villeins, and fifteen bordars, with twenty-eight plow-tillages. There is one servus. This manor paid a farm of one night in the time of king Edward, and so it did likewise for four years in the time of king William. But six hides were afterwards taken from the manor. There are ten hides in Chire and Clifstone, eight in Noent and Chingestune, and one in Ladenent.

' The abbey of Corneile, and Osbern, and William the son of Richard, hold these lands now, but nevertheless the sheriff pays the whole farm for the remainder.

' The men of the county say, that Sapina belonged to the farm of king Edward in Westberie.' p. 67.

Besides the principal manor, there were two small estates in Westberie hundred, held of the king's farm, and a third that was independent of it, as appears by Domesday-book.

' William son of Baderon holds two yard lands and a half, and has there one villein, and one bordar. Wihanoc his ancestor held it, but the county affirms that this estate is held of the king's demean farm in Westberie, and is worth 3 sol.' p. 74.

' William Goizenboded holds half a hide of land, and half a fishery in Westberie hundred. Aluvin the sheriff held it, and gave it to his wife. This estate belonged to the king's farm in Westberie.' p. 74.

' Durand the sheriff holds one manor of three hides in Westberie hundred. Aluold held it and paid tax. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and four villeins, and three bordars, ' with four plow-tillages. There are two servi, and it was worth 60 sol. now only 40 sol.' p. 76.

It is observable that the book does not mention what parish these estates lay in, but only the hundred; yet there is reason to suppose they were a part of Westbury, and that the records of the following dates relate chiefly to these, and not to the principal manor.

Henry de Myners resided in this parish, and purchased a licence to inclose a park near his house 2 Joh.

The manor of Westbury was granted to Ralph de Beauchamp 18 Joh. and passed afterwards to the Burghulls, or Bornhulls, for Basilia de Burghull died endowed thereof 55 H. 3. Roger de Burghull, son of Roger, died seized of the same manor, and of the hundred of Westbury, 31 E. 1. Roger Burghull, son of the last Roger, died seized of Westbury 1 E. 3. and Robert de Sapy held it 10 E. 3.

Jeffery de Marechal was seized of Westbury 32 E. 3. It was held of Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford and Essex, and of Joan his wife, 46 E. 3.

Sir John de Aylesford, alias Eynesford, died seized of the manors of Westbury and Bolley 19 R. 2. Isabel the wife of sir John de Aylesford survived him, and was endowed with the manor of Westbury, and afterwards married Richard de la More, whom she likewise survived, and died seized of Westbury 9 H. 5.

John Milborn and Elizabeth his wife were seized of the manor of Westbury 1 & 15 H. 6. John earl of Shrewsbury was seized thereof in the 32d year of the same reign; as was Alice the widow of William Codder 34 H. 6.

This manor passed afterwards to the Baynams, for John Baynam died seized thereof, and of twenty messuages, and three hundred acres of pasture, &c. in Westbury, 20 H. 8. William Baynam, son of John, had livery of it 26 H. 8. Robert Baynam had also livery granted to him 9 Eliz. as had Joseph Baynam in the 14th year of the same reign.

The hundred of Westbury is now in the crown, and the court leet is kept by the sheriff. But Maynard Colchester, esq; is lord of the manor. His arms are, Or, a chevron between three estoiles gules.

Of the other estates the records shew, that Nicholas de Bath was seized of one messuage, 260 acres of arable, &c. in the parish of Westbury next Newnham, 20 E. 2. John Knight and others were seized of six acres in Westbury, and of the advowson of the church, and of twenty libratas of land in Whittington and Westbury,

' purgatory but Christ's blood; and that the souls of the faithful go immediately to heaven: That Thomas Becket was no saint, but a traitor: That there is no transubstantiation in the sacrament, but that 'tis idolatry to worship the bread, &c.' — One Pavy gave him the lie in thus speaking, and hastened to burn him.

While he was in the midst of the flames, and his arms and legs were half consumed, he cried out, 'O ye papists, ye look for miracles, behold here ye may see one, for in this fire I feel no more pain than if I were in a bed of down, but it is to me as a bed of roses.' And then expired soon after.

for the use of the church of St. Athelbert in Hereford, 4 R. 2. which church was founded by Milefrid king of the Mercians in the year 825. William Aston was seized of a tenement called Aston's Court in the parish of Westbury 3 H. 4. Richard Beke levied a fine of lands in Westbury to Edward Veel 1 Mar. The manor of Cellers in Westbury belonged to the priory of Lanthony, and was granted to Thomas Reeve, William Ryvet, and William Hechins, 6 Eliz.

HAMLETS. There are several large hamlets in this parish, of which in their order.

1. Rodley, which lies in the hundred of the dutchy of Lancaster, and is situated about two miles eastward from the church. Domesday gives the following particulars of the manor. 'Walter Balistarius holds Rodele. There is one hide taxed. Tovi held it. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and two villeins, and four bordars, with two plow-tillages. It was worth 40 sol. but now only 10 sol.' p. 77.

Sir Robert Atkyns, in his account of this manor, has confounded it with Ruddle in the parish of Newnham, which was given to the abbey of Gloucester; but the manor of Rodele in Westbury was never any part of the possessions of that monastery, as sir Robert asserts.

The records shew, that Henry de Bohun released all his right in Rodley to king John, in the first year of that king's reign; and Simon Montfort, the great earl of Leicester, died seized of Rodleigh 43 H. 3.

Gilbert Talbot, son of Richard and of Aliva, daughter of Alan Basset, justiciar of England, married Guenthlian, or Guendoline, daughter of Rhese ap Griffith, prince of Wales, and died seized of Rodleigh and Longhope 2 E. 1. In an inquisition taken 4 E. 1. it is said, Rodeley was of the antient demans of kings, and was then in the hands of Richard Talebott, but the jury did not know by what means; and that it used to yield to the king a revenue of 42 l. a year.

Edmond earl of Lancaster, second son of king Henry the Third, was seized of Rodleghe, and had his right of court leet allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. Henry earl of Lancaster, second son of earl Edmond, and brother and heir to Thomas earl of Lancaster, was seized of Rodeley, and of twelve acres of pasture in the forest of Dean belonging to the manor of Rodeley, 10 E. 2. Henry earl of Lancaster, son of earl Henry, and afterwards duke of Lancaster, was seized of Rodley, and of estovers in the forest of Dean, 10 E. 3. He died of the plague at Leicester-castle 35 E. 3. and left two daughters coheiresses. Maud, the elder, was married to the duke of Bavaria, and had the manors of Rodeleghe, Tiberton, and Minsterworth assigned to her, but dying without issue, her sister Blanch, married in 1359, to John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, became her heir, from whom are descended the kings of England of the line of Lancaster. John duke of Lancaster and Blanch his wife levied a fine of the manors of Rodley, Tiberton, and Minsterworth, to the use of themselves in taille 39 E. 3. Joan the widow of Robert Grinder died endowed with Rodley 24 H. 6. This manor is part of the dutchy of Lancaster, and king Edward the Fourth levied a fine of it to Richard Martin to hold for one month, the remainder to Elizabeth the queen, and to the archbishop and other great persons, 15 E. 4. Sir William Guise, baronet, is the present lord of this manor.

The records also shew, that William de Dean died seized of Rodeley, which he held of Thomas le Blount by the service of 12 s. he was also seized of one yard-land worth 6 s. a year, and of six borachs in the Severn worth 6 s. a year, and of two acres of meadow worth 5 s. a year. Esch. Richard de Blensdon was seized of two messuages, sixty acres of arable land, and of a fishery in the Severn at Rodeley 20 E. 2. Philip Hook of Little Dean died seized of the manor of Stantways in Rodeley, 16 H. 6. and it was granted the same year to Richard Barton and Morgan Merideth, to hold for their lives.

The tenants of this manor antiently paid, and still continue to pay, to the lord, a rent called Pridgavel, for liberty of fishing in the Severn, of which see more under Minsterworth.

2. Walmer is a distinct manor within this parish, consisting of very large commons by the side of the Severn. Ralph de Abbenhall was seized of ten acres of meadow in Walmer 29 E. 1. Richard de Poulton held Walmore and Northwoode in capite, paying to the king three bearded arrows as often as he should hunt in propria persona in the forest of Dean; and he died seized of the same, and of one messuage, fifty acres of arable, and three acres of meadow, 12 E. 2. Esch. John Ate-Yate was seized of Walmore and Littlemore within the manor of Rodley, as parcel of the manor of Stanteway 41 E. 3. Sir Brian Tuke died seized of Walmer 37 H. 8. and Charles Tuke, son of sir Brian, had livery the same year. Richard Andrews and Urfula his wife levied a fine of the manor of Walmer to Edward Wilmot and others 2 Mar. of which manor, and of a large house called the Grange, Anthony Kemp, esq; of Slyndon in Essex, was seized at the beginning of the present century. The manor of Walmer, and the Grange, are now, by marriage, vested in the earl of Newburgh.

3. Chaxhill, which lies eastward from the church.

4. Bolloe, which also lies eastward from the church. The two hamlets of Bolloe and Chaxhill have one tithingman.

5. Upperleigh, which lies about two miles north-east from the church. This place belonged to the chantry of St. Mary in Westbury, and was granted to sir Anthony Cope 10 Jac.

6. Northwood, which lies north from the church. Northwood and Upperleigh have one tithingman.

7. Netherleigh, which lies about two miles north-east from the church. Nicholas Gamage died seized of this manor 24 E. 3. It belonged afterwards to sir John Scudamore, who being attainted, it was granted to sir Richard Herbert, and his heirs males, 4 E. 4. George Rawleigh, esq; died seized of the manor of Netherlaugh 37 H. 8. and left Simon his son twenty-two years old, and Leonard a brother, who had a son Thomas. The manor then passed to the Baynhams. Sir George Baynham died seized thereof 38 H. 8. and livery was granted to his son sir Christopher Baynham 3 E. 6. and Richard Baynham, brother of Christopher, had livery of it 5 Mar. This place has its own tithingman.

8. Bosely, which lies north-westward from the church. John Sabyn and others held one messuage, one toft, and one plow-tillage in Bosely, Leye, and Rodlegh, 10 R. 2. This place hath a tithingman.

9. Cleeve, which lies south-eastward from the church. 10. Adset, lying north-eastward from the church. 11. Stanteway. These three have one tithingman.

12. Elton, which lies westward from the church, is a large hamlet, and has its proper tithingman.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the Forest deanery, worth about 140*l.* a year. The Vicars Choral of the cathedral of Hereford are patrons, and the reverend Mr. Kidley is the present incumbent. The impropriation, which belongs to the same Vicars of the church of Hereford, is worth 300*l.* a year, and is in lease to Doctor John Cam, a physician at Hereford, whose arms are, Paly of six argent and azure.

There are two churches in the church-yard. The old church has a handsome wooden spire at the west end. The new one, in which divine service is performed, was built in the year 1530, and stands at a considerable distance from the other. It consists of the nave, with an aisle on each side, supported by pillars, and is dedicated to the virgin Mary.

There were two chantries in Westbury church, whereof one was dedicated to St. Nicholas, and the lands belonging to it were granted to sir Nicholas Arnold 5 Eliz. The other chantry was dedicated to the virgin Mary, and John Shawe was the last incumbent, who enjoyed a pension of 3*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* in 1553. The lands, and a messuage in Adset, which belonged to this chantry, were granted to Anthony Cope and others 10 Jac.

A licence was granted to the vicar of Westbury to purchase land to enlarge his house 26 E. 3. Doctor John Hooper, bishop of Gloucester, at the desire of the inhabitants, made a special visitation in this parish, for which was paid 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for procuration.

Near the last,

In Hopes of an happy Resurrection,

Near this Place lies the Body of MAYNARD COLCHESTER, Esq^r. Nephew and Heir of COL^d. MAYNARD COLCHESTER, to whose Memory a Monument is here erected.

He was Grandson of S^r. DUNCOMB COLCHESTER, and great Grandson of that eminent Lawyer and Friend to the Constitution and Liberties of England,

SERJEANT MAYNARD.

He retained thro' Life with his own Choice and Judgment an hereditary Affection for the Laws, the Religion, and civil Rights of Englishmen, as established by the Revolution. From this Principle he ever manifested a firm Attachment to the illustrious House of Hanover, and the protestant Succession, particularly during the Rebellion in 1746: and approved himself by his Conduct at all Times a vigilant, active, and prudent Magistrate, and a Friend to Society.

In private Life he was a good Christian, a kind Father, and indulgent Master, was cautious and discerning in his Choice of Friends, and steady and unchangeable towards them when chosen.

His whole Character did himself and Family Honour, and needs not Praises, but deserves Imitation.

Died May 25th 1756. Aged 53 Years.

Benefactions, from a Table in the Church.

John Young of Ley, gave by will 7*l.* a year, one moiety for a parish school-master, the other for sermons, for ever.

The church lands, let for 4*l.* 16*s.* yearly, are given by a person unknown, and are applied towards the repairs of the church.

Several tenements adjoining to the church-yard, and the church house, are given by persons unknown, for the use of the poor of this parish.

The house, garden, and orchard, adjoining to the king's common pound, usually let at 40*s.* a year, were given by a person unknown for the use of the parish for ever.

A tenement near the above, granted on lease formerly to Thomas Cook, and now occupied by Tobias Cowles, was left by a person unknown to this parish.

Cornelius Draper gave one piece of inclosed land in Huntley, now let to James Drinkwater at 40*s.* a year, to be given in bread to the poor.

Joseph Bayse gave the interest of 10*l.* (the principal now lying in the parish stock) to be given in bread to the poor of Elton tithing.

Joseph Holstead of Ley, gent. gave the interest of 20*l.* for the education of two boys at the school.

John Mayn, of Staintway, gent. by will, gave several parcels of free-land in Walmore's hill, and one rudge and forehead of lease-land during the residue of his term, of the yearly value of 1*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* to buy coal for the poor, in November yearly.

A chief-rent of 3*s.* 8*d.* on a tenement now belonging to John Sier, was given to the poor of this parish by a person unknown.

Mrs. Elizabeth Evans gave 20*l.* the interest to be given yearly for ever to the poor of this parish.

There were 290 houses in this parish, and about 1200 inhabitants, at the beginning of the present century, whereof 100 were reputed freeholders; yearly births 34, and burials 32. Atkyns. But examining the parish register, I find that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 451 baptisms, and 308 burials; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 424, and the burials 340; and the inhabitants being numbered in the year 1765, were found to be 1275, and are since increased to above 1300.

WESTBURY upon TRIM.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Henbury, two miles and a half distant northward from the city of Bristol, thirteen south-westward from Chipping Sodbury, and thirty-five south-westward from Gloucester.

The river Avon bounds it on the south-west, and the great road from Wales, by the New and Old Passages, leads through it to the city of Bristol.

It

It has its name, says sir Robert Atkyns, from lying on the river Trim, and westward from the city of Bristol. But with due deference to that gentleman, the situation of the village, which is directly north from that city, will not justify his etymology. Indeed Huesberie, seems to be the true name of the village, as it is found in Domesday: And if it should be contended that this was the way which the writer of that record expressed the sound of W, the contrary will appear in an instance directly in point, where Westberie (thus written) stands for the name of a village in the forest of Dean. The former is compounded of berie, a camp, and Hues, (as I conjecture) from Hue, the name of some person who either occupied the fortifications, or possessed the lands about them. And that there was such a camp I have not the least doubt, tho' at present no traces of it should remain.

In Mr. Wantner's papers, written about the year 1714, and now deposited in the Bodleian library, it is said, that at Pollbury in this parish, where the brook Trim falls into the Avon, 'much Roman coin hath been found'; and I am informed that great numbers of them, with pieces of Roman pottery, have been taken up at the same place since those papers were written: And there are certain vestiges of a Roman road leading from thence, across Durdham down. These circumstances shew that the Romans had an encampment, or small station, there; but I don't pretend to say that it was from that camp, in particular, that the parish took its name.

Durdham down lies one part in this parish, the other in Clifton. It is a large tract of high and healthy ground, with a good turf for riding, and affords the finest opportunity for air and exercise to the citizens of Bristol, and the inhabitants of this part of the country. Westbury lying in the vicinity of that opulent city, is ornamented with many gentlemen's houses, of which the following are the principal:

Stoke House is an exceeding good one, and inferior to few in the county for real comfort and utility. It was built by sir Robert Cann, about the year 1669, as appears by an inscription over the porch. It underwent a thorough repair by the late Mr. Jefferis; and Mr. Lippincott, the present owner, has since added considerably to the offices and gardens. It stands on a delightful eminence, with a charming view of the Severn and Avon, and of the ships as they turn Porthead Point, and pass up and down the river. The high road which ran very near the house, was turned to an easy distance, and a much pleasanter and more open one made, Jan. 6, 1778, under the direction of the commissioners of turnpike, but at Mr. Lippincott's expence, by which he has the advantage of a fine lawn before his house, and the public are also greatly benefited by the alteration.

Sneed Park is another handsome seat in the tithing of Stoke Bishop, under which head some description is given of it, with a short account of the family to which it belongs.

Redland Court is one of the most elegant houses in this part of the country. The front is ornamented with Ionic pilasters, and there is a flight of steps to the entrance. The gardens are kept in excellent order, and the green-house is stored with a well chosen variety of curious exotics. This seat stands on an easy elevation near the great road leading from the village of Westbury to Bristol. It was built by the late Mr. Coffins, and is now the residence of John Innys, esq. Not far from the house is a beautiful chapel, of which a further account will be given in the sequel.

Westbury College claims the precedence of all in point of antiquity. Indeed there is but a small part of the antient College remaining at present, which stood intire in the former part of the reign of king Charles the First. It was turreted round, and had a large embattled tower on the south side, but prince Rupert caused it to be set on fire in the time of the civil wars, and it was then in a great measure destroy'd, to prevent its being garrisoned by the parliament's forces, to annoy the city of Bristol. That part which remains is incorporated with buildings erected since that time, and together constitute the seat of John Hobhouse, esq; who has, near adjoining to it, a new farm house and farm, remarkable for its neatness and elegance of culture. He gives for his arms, Azure, three estoiles issuing out of as many crescents Or.

Pen Park is a delightful little villa, about a mile north of the church, with extensive gardens and pleasure-grounds, laid out in elegant taste, from whence there is a prospect of the country on the south-east side of the Severn, and of King-road, the mouth of that river. This little seat belongs to John Harmer, esq; who gives for his arms, Argent, on a chevron between three annulets gules, another of the field.

Cote is a good house and estate on the north side of the road from the village of Westbury to Bristol. It is turreted and embattled, and within the course of the last twenty years has been successively the property of William Phelps, John Thomas, and John Webb, esquires. By Mr. Phelps's demise it went to his widow, and passed afterwards by will to Mr. Thomas, who sold it lately to captain Webb, the present owner, whose family arms are emblazoned p. 470.

John Fowler, esq; a considerable merchant of Bristol, has likewise a good house and estate at Cote, which he purchased of the creditors of the late Mr. Daniel Saunders, and has fitted up and ornamented the house in a genteel and modern taste.

Mrs. Hort has also a good house, with a suitable estate, pleasantly situated near Cote-house, upon the edge of Durdham-downs.

Cotham-house stands about a quarter of a mile from Redland Court. It is a genteel building, with with very handsome stables, &c. and there is a good estate belonging to it, of which Mr. Charles Partridge is owner. The Partridges family arms occur in the account of Miserden.

Mr. Samuel Lloyd has a good house, very agreeably situated in the hamlet of Stoke Bishop, with a garden laid out with great taste and elegance, and a considerable estate belonging to it, which has been for many years in the family.

The Lodge on Durdham down is a very pleasant house, belonging to Thomas Jones, esq; of the Park, Bristol, who always makes it his summer residence.

Of the natural productions of this place the Cotham Stone (so called from the place where it is found) is the most curious and remarkable. It lies in a detached manner, within the surface of the ground. The upper side of it is full of nodules and bunches, and the prominences on some of these stones resemble the interlacings of ivy, growing over each other, as it is sometimes seen against old walls. The largest of them are about two feet and a half long, and seven or eight inches thick. They are used rough in the rustic work of gateways and other buildings, in which they have a good effect. Cut longitudinally through the thickness, and polished, they exhibit a beautiful landscape, like a drawing in Indian ink, and are often used in chimney-pieces. That part which in its native bed lies undermost, has the exact appearance of a river; beyond that there is a margin of trees and shrubs; next, another river; and a fertile fancy may very well imagine a high bank on the further side, covered with shrubs and hanging woods. The Cotham stones that I have seen have in them all the appearance of one or more rivers; but the other objects admit of variety in form and order in different stones. To give the reader a more perfect idea of this curious stone, there is a good engraving of it, by way of decoration to the map of the county, at the beginning of this work.

Lead ore and the Calamine stone are found in many parts of the parish, particularly in Pen-Park estate, but there is no mine of either worked at present.

There is a prodigious cavern in that estate, called Pen-Park Hole, about a mile and a half north-east from the village of Westbury, and six miles eastward from the mouth of the Severn, with a vast depth of water in it at particular seasons. Some account of this cavern has been published in the Philosophical Transactions, but the most accurate survey of it was taken in 1775, by Mr. White, an eminent land-surveyor of Bristol, who descended into it several times, took the measure of its particular parts, and made drawings of two sections of it, from which the annexed plate is engraven.

Fig. I. is the east and west section.

g, a massy rock, which appears to have fallen from the roof.

This survey had probably never been taken, but for the following melancholy accident: On Friday the 17th of March, 1775, the reverend Thomas Newman, one of the minor canons of Bristol cathedral, in company with another gentleman, and two ladies (one his sister, the other his intended wife) went to this place to examine the depth with a line; and approaching the mouth of the pit, laid hold, for the greater safety, of a twig that sprung from the root of an ash-tree, growing over the mouth of the cavern. But most unfortunately his foot slipped, the twig broke, and he fell to the bottom in sight of his friends. Many persons went down daily for a considerable time in search of the body, and it was found thirty-nine days after the accident, floating in the water, with a large contusion in the back part of the head, the eyes wide open, the face red as scarlet, and the body swelled nearly to double its natural size.

Mr. George Catcott, a gentleman of Bristol, was one of the many whom curiosity prompted to view this remarkable cavern, and has written a very circumstantial account of it, which was sent me in manuscript, by a gentleman, with his approbation. 'The roof,' says he, 'appears to be nearly of equal height in every part, and very much resembles the ceiling of a Gothic cathedral. The sides are almost straight, at least as much as was then above water; and, considering the whole to be intirely the work of nature, are remarkably regular. The place is rendered still more awful by the great reverberation that attends the voice when you speak loud, and if thoroughly illuminated must have a very beautiful appearance. When you view the place from hence, [i.e. the bottom] objects of the most dismal kind present themselves from every quarter. The deep water almost directly under your feet, rendered still more dreadful by the faint glimmering rays of light passing through the openings of the chasms above, and reflected from its surface; together with the black rugged rocks, horrid precipices, and deep caverns over head, brought to my remembrance the following lines of Milton:

'The dismal situation, waste and wild,
'A dungeon horrible on all sides,
'No light, but rather darkness visible,
'Serv'd only to discover fights of woe,
'Regions of horror, doleful shades.'

The same ingenious gentleman gives the dimensions of the several parts of the cavern; but the annexed plate, with the explanation, precludes the use of those particulars, as a more perfect idea may be obtained from a drawing, than verbal description is capable of giving. However, I acknowledge my obligations to Mr. Catcott for his papers, tho' I differ in opinion from him as to the origin of Pen-Park Hole.

By the passage distinguished in Italicks, he declares it to be the work of nature; and speaking of the eastern branch of the cavern, (Fig. I.) gives the following and only reason in support of his opinion, viz. 'In the roofs of these caverns, and upper part of the sides, are a great number of cavities in the solid rock, in form of inverted funnels, (see f, f, f, f, in the plate, Fig. I.) which as they widen in proportion to their depth, prove they could not have been made by art, as some have absurdly asserted; but by the retreat of the waters which flowed through them into the great abyss beneath, at the time of the universal deluge, of which great and awful event they still remain as so many undeniable proofs.'

I would by no means attempt to invalidate an argument in support of Sacred History; but it would be unfortunate if the truth of it respecting the deluge were to rest on deductions to be made from Pen-Park Hole. If Mr. Catcott had observed that many places round about, in the same and the adjoining fields, appear to have been opened from the surface; and that along the field to the northward, the ground is much higher than in other parts, running into tumps like heaps of rubbish brought up out of a mine: If he had been informed of a tradition handed down in the family, that the great grandfather of the present owner received fifteen or sixteen hundred pounds for his share of ore raised there; and had known, from the information of the late Mrs. Anne Jefferis, that many places thereabout were worked by the company of Royal miners, he then would most likely have been of the general opinion of all competent judges of this matter, that it is no other than a large lead mine. Of that number is captain Hamilton, who has visited all the principal mines in Europe, and descended into this no less than six times, where he generally continued for four or five hours together. As to the cavities which Mr. Catcott thinks could not have been made by art,—Are they not of the very shape commonly made by miners working overhead? But that gentleman will have them formed by the retreat of the waters through them into the great abyss; he should, however, have shewn, that they now have, or at least formerly had, a communication upwards through the rock to the surface; whereas no such thing appears upon examination.

Upon the supposition of this being a Swallet hole, how can it be accounted for, that broken pipes of an old make, with very small bowls, pieces of glass bottles, and fragments of old leather shoes, were found intermixt with some gravel and spar, brought up out of the eastern branch of it, about the year 1770, as I have been informed by Mr. Harmer, a gentleman of the strictest veracity? The workmen then offered to get out a thousand tons of such gravelly stuff, which had most probably been beat off from the ore, and was uniformly formly thrown up on the sides of the passages, so as to leave a clear carriage way. I would now ask, Does not this look like mining? and can there remain a doubt that Pen-Park Hole is any thing but an old mine? Indeed Mr. Catcott himself seems to have been of the general opinion; when he wrote the beginning of his account, where describing the part a, (Fig. II.) he says, It is a prop or pillar of stone, which appears to be left with a design to keep the north part from falling down. And it was undoubtedly left by the miners with that very design. I conjecture, however, from the antient make of the tobacco pipes found in the rubbish, that the hole was worked out in the early times of smoking tobacco, and long before the Pen-Park lands were divided amongst different proprietors, as they now are, which was done in the year 1650.

The only manufacture carried on in this parish is a pottery of coarse, red ware; and it seems to be chiefly employ'd in making pans for the sugar bakers in Bristol.

Of the College of Westbury.

There was an antient monastery in this place, but of whose foundation is uncertain; and long before the conquest, the estates with which it had been endowed were appropriated to the church of Worcester; for in those days the bishops had the custody of all monasteries in their dioceses, and could appropriate their revenues to the colleges of their own cathedrals.

Oswald was advanced to the see of Worcester about the year 960. He reformed the monasteries within his diocese, expelling the secular clergy, and placing monks in their stead, and the little monastery here partook of the general reform. The bishop, with the assistance of king Edgar, was a good benefactor to the college, of which the monks were a new order of inhabitants, and therefore Oswald was looked upon by some to be the founder. But as all human institutions are subject to change, so this college experienced another alteration in the following century.

Sampson, a Norman, was made bishop of Worcester in 1096. He annulled Oswald's constitution, expelled the monks out of this college, and filled their places with secular canons; which gave no small offence to the whole monastic order. He died at Westbury on the 5th of May, 1112; and the seculars kept possession of the college during the time of Theulf his successor.

In the year 1125, Simon succeeded to the see of Worcester, in whose time the secular clerks saw a reverse of fortune, for he displaced them from Westbury, and put monks in the possession of the college, who maintained their ground there till the general dissolution of monasteries. Many of these particulars are related in the Survey of Worcester Cathedral.

King Edward the Third gave the hospital of St. Lawrence, near Bristol, towards the maintenance of the monks of this college. And Richard duke of York, and his third son Edmond earl of Rutland; were so great benefactors, that sir Robert Atkyns affirms the college was founded by them, at which time it consisted of a dean and five canons; but in the particular of its foundation sir Robert was certainly mistaken.

King Edward the Fourth gave the manor of Aylminster, (now Elmstree) in the parish of Tetbury, to the monks of this college, when Henry Sampson was dean, and a translation of the royal grant is printed in the Appendix to this work, N^o. 25.

William Canning, a rich merchant of Bristol, after he had been five times mayor of that city, retired from business, and went into priest's orders, and seven years afterwards was made dean of this college, which, with the assistance of Dr. Carpenter, he new built, and was a great benefactor to it. He was a man of great generosity and public spirit, and built an almshouse in Westbury, for poor men and poor women, and directed that the mayor of Bristol should have the placing in of one of the poor men, and the mayorefs the appointment of one of the poor women. He also settled lands for the payment of 44*l.* a year to the sheriffs, in lieu of toll demanded by them at the gates of the city, for provision brought thither. He built the large and beautiful church of Redcliff in Somersetshire, adjoining to the city, where he lies buried in the south aisle, in his priest's robes, cut in white marble. He died in 1474.

Two thirds of the tithes of Bisley and Stroud were appropriated towards the maintenance of two prebendaries in this college; and a licence was obtained to erect the prebend of Aust 49*E.* 3. The college also obtained a licence to purchase lands of the yearly value of 10*l.* for the maintenance of Richard Fulcher's chantry in their church, 35*H.* 6.

At the general dissolution of monasteries, the yearly revenues of this house were valued at 232*l.* 14*s.*

The dimensions of the college, in the reign of king Henry the Sixth, are given by William of Worcester, as follows: Collegium de Westberye continet in longitudine 47 virgas, latitudo ejus continet 5 [25] virgas. Ecclesia Collegij Diaconatus de Westbety continet in longitudine 42 virgas, vel 60 grassus. Latitudo ejus continet 24 virgas, vel 25. In English: The college of Westbury is 47 yards long, and 5 [supposed 25] broad. The college church 42 yards or 60 steps long, and 24 or 25 yards broad.

I have already given the state of the building in the reign of king Charles the First, from sir Robert Atkyns, and its present state from my own knowledge.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It has been already observed, that in early ages the bishops could appropriate the revenues of religious religious houses to the colleges of their own cathedrals, and, with respect to Westbury college, that was actually done by the bishop of Worcester. Before the Norman conquest, the bishop's reeve, or bailiff, received the profits of all such estates, allowing to the monastery for sustenance and clothing what the bishop thought necessary. So that in fact there was little or no distinction between the proper lands of the bishoprick, and those antiently given to the use of such appropriated monasteries. This accounts for the manor of Huesberie standing in Domesday under the title Terra Eccle' de Wirecestre, as in the following extract from that record :

' The land of the church of Wirecestre in Bernintreu hundred.

' Saint Mary of Wirecestre held and still holds Huesberie. There were and are fifty hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and eight villeins, and six bordars, with eight plow-tillages. There are four servi, and one ancilla. These members, Henberie, Redeuuiche, Stocche, Giete, belong to this manor. In these are nine plow-tillages in demean, and twenty-seven villeins, and twenty-two bordars, with twenty-six plow-tillages. There are twenty servi, and two ancilla, and twenty coliberti, with ten plow-tillages, and a mill of 20 den.

' Six radchenisters belong to this manor, having eight hides, and eight plow-tillages, and they could not be separated from the manor. And there are two houses in Bristou paying 16 den.

' Of the lands of this manor Turstin the son of Rolph holds five hides in Austreclive, and Gislebert the son of Tuold three hides and a half in Contone, and Constantine five hides in Icetune. In these lands are five plow-tillages in demean, and sixteen villeins, and twelve bordars, with twelve plow-tillages, and there are eleven servi.

' Osbern Giffard holds five hides of the same land of this manor, and does no service.

' All the manor, with its members, was worth 24 lib. in the time of king Edward, and now the demean of St. Mary are worth 29 lib. 14 sol. 6 den. That which the men hold is worth 9 lib. Domesday, p. 70.

This large manor continued a part of the possessions of the college of Westbury, under the church of Worcester, 'till the general dissolution of monasteries. Westbury college was surrendered to king Henry the Eighth by John Barlow, dean thereof, on the 18th of February, in the 35th year of that king's reign. The king, by his letters patent, granted the same, with all manors, &c. thereunto belonging, to sir Rafe Sadleir and his heirs for ever, 35 H. 8.

Sir Thomas Sadleir, or Sadler, knight, was son of sir Rafe, and proprietor of the hundred of Henbury, and manors of Henbury, Westbury, and Stoke Bishop, 32 Eliz. Sir Thomas left a son, Rafe Sadler, esq; and a daughter Gertrude. Rafe Sadler leaving no issue, Gertrude, his sister, who was wife to sir Walter Aston, of Tixal in Staffordshire, became his heir. Walter lord Aston, (son and heir of the same sir Walter and Gertrude his wife) with lady Mary, wife to Walter lord Aston, and Walter Aston, esq; their son and heir apparent, sold the manor of Westbury Bryan, alias Westbury upon Trym, lately belonging to the college of Westbury, in the county of Gloucester, to Thomas Yate and Gregory Gearing, esquires, May 20, 1675.

Sir Samuel Astry, of Henbury, knight, purchased the same, July 2, 1680, of Thomas Yate, of Gray's Inn in the county of Middlesex, and Gregory Gearing, of Denchurch in the county of Berks, esquires. Sir Samuel Astry left three daughters coheireffes; Elizabeth, married to sir John Smyth, baronet; Diana, the wife of Richard Orlebar, esq; and Arabella, the lady of Charles-William earl of Suffolk, whom she survived; and dying without issue, she left her third part to sir John Smyth, baronet; whose son, sir John Smyth, sold a moiety of that third to the heirs of Edward Colston, esq; who had purchased the third part late Mr. Orlebar's. A moiety of the manor was then in sir John Smyth, whose three sisters and coheireffes sold it to sir Jarrit Smith, baronet, who married Florence, one of the said coheireffes. The other moiety descended to the two daughters and coheirs of Thomas Edwards, esq; one of whom was married to Francis lord Middleton; the other wedded to Alexander Ready, esq; who afterwards took the name of Colston, and died in the year 1775. So that sir Jarrit Smith, baronet, is the present owner of one moiety of this manor, and the honourable Thomas Willoughby, second son of the late lord Middleton, and Alexander Colston, esq; at the time of his death, were proprietors of the other moiety.

This account is abstracted from the original deeds, in the possession of sir Jarrit Smith.

The scite of the college belonged to Mr. Vigaur when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it, but it is now the property of John Hobhouse, esq; as already taken notice of in the account of the gentlemen's seats in this parish.

John Newton, son and heir of John, late merchant in Bristol, levied a fine of lands in Westbury to the use of William More, 28 H. 6.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Stoke Bishop is a very considerable tithing. It was called Stoke Bishop, or Bishop's Stoke, because it belonged to the bishop of Constance in Normandy; and to distinguish it from Stoke Giffard in this neighbourhood. The particulars of the manor are thus recorded in Domesday :

' The bishop of St. Laud holds Estoch in Bacheftanes hundred, and Tetbald holds it of him. Eldred held it of earl Herald, and could go where he pleased. There are two hides, one taxed, taxed, the other not. In demean is one plow-tillage, and two villeins, and one bordar, with one plow-tillage. There are six servi, and five acres of meadow. It was worth 40 sol. now 20 sol. Domesday, p. 70.

The manor of Stoke Bishop was afterwards vested in the bishops of Worcester, and held by them in succession, till it was alienated to the crown, by doctor Heath, 1 E. 6. and that king granted it the same year, among other particulars, late parcel of the possessions of the bishop of Worcester, to sir Rafe Sadler, and his heirs. Sir Thomas Sadler, knight, was lord of the manor of Stoke Bishop 32 Eliz. from whom it descended, like Henbury and Westbury, down to the present time, and with them is now vested in the same proprietors.

There is a handsome seat, and a large estate in this tithing, formerly belonging to the Canns. William Cann, of Compton, alderman of Bristol, married Margaret, sister to sir Robert Yeomans. Robert Cann, son and heir of William and Margaret, married to his first wife, Cicely, daughter of Humphry Hooke, alderman of Bristol. By her he had William, his son and heir, who married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Thomas Langton, of Bristol, knight. Their son and heir, William, married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Chester, of Knole, and by her had one daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, wedded to Thomas Master, of the Abbey at Cirencester, esq; which Elizabeth is mother to the present Thomas Master, of the same place, who married Mary, daughter of James-Lenox-Napier Dutton, esq; and by her has issue several children.

The before-mentioned Robert Cann was knighted by king Charles the Second, Apr. 22, 1662, and created a baronet on the thirteenth of September following. He married, to his second wife, Anne, daughter of sir Derrick Popley, by whom he had a son, Thomas, knighted by king James the Second, Apr. 18, 1686; in favour of whom he made a will, to the disinherison of his son William, which caused very long and expensive law-suits between the two branches of the family; when, after several hearings in chancery, and a bill of Revivor brought by the last sir William Cann, bar. the will was fully established. Sir Robert Cann served the office of high sheriff in the year 1676.

Sir Thomas Cann, knight, son of sir Robert, left issue two sons, Robert and William, of whom the latter was town-clerk of Bristol; and three daughters, Anne, married to Nicholas Jackson, of Sneed Park; Catherine, married to John Fog, alderman of Bristol; and Mary, who died unmarried. He served the office of high sheriff in the year 1686, and dying, was succeeded in estate by his eldest son Robert Cann, who also, on the death of his cousin sir William Cann, Apr. 27, 1726, succeeded to the title of baronet. He served the office of high sheriff in 1726, and died a bachelor in 1748.

William Cann, town-clerk of Bristol, was brother to the last sir Robert Cann, whom he succeeded in honour and estate, and died in the year 1753.

Sir Robert Cann, son and heir of the last sir William, succeeded his father, and died without issue, July 20, 1765. His only sister, Catherine, had been married to Mr. Charles Jeffries, of Bristol, by whom she had issue one son, Robert-Cann Jeffries; and one daughter, Catherine.

Robert-Cann Jeffries was heir to his uncle sir Robert Cann, but dying a bachelor, May 16, 1773, the whole of his fortune descended on his sister Catherine, who, Feb. 10, 1774, was married to Henry Lippincott, esq; the present owner, in right of his wife, of the Canns seat and estate at Stoke Bishop, and lord of the manors of Compton, Olveston, and Elberton; and, by a late purchase, of Littleton upon Severn. He has likewise several good estates in other counties, and in the city of Bristol. They have issue one son, Henry-Cann Lippincott, born June 5, 1776. Mr. Lippincott is of an antient family in the county of Devon, and has twice served the office of sheriff for the city of Bristol, viz. in 1768, and 1771; and once for the county of Gloucester, in 1776, when there was an election of a knight of the shire, which was strenuously contested between the honourable George-Cranfield Berkeley, brother to the earl of Berkeley, and William-Bromley Chester, esq. The poll lasted thirteen days; but the business was afterwards carried, by petition, into the House of Commons, when Mr. Lippincott's conduct appeared so unexceptionable to the committee, that they unanimously came to the following resolution, viz. 'The committee, in justice to the high sheriff of the county of Gloucester, declare, that they have seen no reason, by any evidence adduced to them, to impeach his conduct with partiality, in the discharge of his duty in taking the poll.' Mr. Lippincott gives for his arms, Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Per fess crenelle gules and sable, three mountain cats argent, for Lippincott; 2d and 3d, Sable, a chevron argent between three mermaids proper, for Wyvely. Marrying an heiress, he bears a scutcheon of pretence, Quarterly 1st and 4th, Azure, a fret Or, on a chief argent a lion passant gules, for Jeffries; 2d and 3d, Azure, fretty argent, on a fess gules three leopards faces Or, for Cann.

Sneed Park lies in the tithing of Stoke Bishop, and was formerly a park belonging to the church of Worcester, but has been long since turned into farms, and is remarkable as well for the natural inequality and beautiful variety of the ground, as for the striking views it affords; particularly of the pendent rocks and woods on each side the Avon, which bounds it on the south and south-east. After the dissolution of monasteries, it became part of the very large estate of sir Rafe Sadler, of whose son it was purchased by Joseph

Jackson,

Jackfon, an ancestor to the present owner. He was fifth son of Nicholas Jackfon, by — daughter of fir Edward Stradling, knight. He married Mary, daughter of — Hele, of Devonshire, esq; and built Sneed Park house, as appears by his arms on the masonry over the entrance, impaling those of Hele, viz. A bend lozengy ermine.

Joseph Jackfon, only son and heir of the last Joseph, married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Skinner, of Dewlish in the county of Dorset, esq.

Nicholas Jackfon, eldest son and heir of the said Joseph and Catherine, married Anne, eldest daughter of fir Thomas Cann, of Stoke Bishop, by whom he had issue two sons, Robert, and Nicholas; and two daughters, Catherine-Anne, and Mary; all living, except Catherine-Anne, who died in 1752.

Robert Jackfon, esq; son and heir of Nicholas, is the present owner of Sneed Park, where he has a good estate, besides others in the neighbourhood, and in the city of Bristol. He bears Or, on a chevron sable, between three eagles heads erased azure, as many cinquefoils of the first. This family is originally from the county of York, and has been seated at Sneed Park about one hundred and thirty years. There is another branch of it, long since settled at Pentroilas in Herefordshire, and is now in two heireffes, the one married to Henry Shiffner, of the same place, esq; and the other to Jonathan-Morton Pleydell, of the county of Dorset, esq.

Sneed Park house, tho' seated on an agreeable eminence, is sheltered by hills on every side. It had suffered much by age, but was fashed, and thoroughly repaired a few years ago, and is now a chearful and comfortable habitation. The terrace commands the river Avon, and the whole navigation of the city of Bristol, at less than a quarter of a mile below it; and in full view, at the distance of two or three miles, on the opposite side of the river, stands the fine old house of Mrs. Gordon, one of those places where king Charles the Second lay concealed, after the battle of Worcester, as fully related by lord Clarendon; but it was then the property of Mr. Norton, and formerly a country house belonging to St. Augustin's priory in Bristol. The ground, on every other side of Sneed Park house, falls, with an easy descent, to a little rill which feeds some fish-ponds, beyond which it rises gradually again, and terminates the view not far from the edge of Durdham down; where, upon a delicious situation within the park walls, and near the point of Saint Vincent's rocks, stands an octagon tower, which forms a pretty object to the house, and to all the country thereabout. It commands a birds-eye view of the rocks, and of both sides of the river Avon, as well as of the Severn, shut in by the mountains of Wales; and consists of three good rooms, with an observatory at top. It was built two or three hundred years ago, as supposed, by one Cook, from whom it vulgarly obtained the name of Cook's Folly. The rooms are fitted up, and the tower is made use of as a Belvidere to Sneed Park house.

Say-Mills is an estate in this tithing, where, at the confluence of the Trim with the Avon, large docks for the preservation of shipping were made seventy or eighty years ago. Rowles Scudamore, esq; steward of the sheriff's court in the city of Bristol, is lessee, under lord Clifford, of a good estate at Say-Mills, where he has a pretty villa. He is likewise the largest proprietor of the docks there. These premisses are held by lease of a thousand years, unimpeachable of waste, from Edward Southwell, esq; great grandfather to the present lord Clifford, at the rent of 81*l. per ann.* The docks were planned and executed by Mr. Joshua Franklyn, a wealthy citizen of Bristol, who divided the same into thirty-two shares, most of which were purchased by his friends, and stood them in upwards of 300*l.* a piece. Mr. Franklyn sunk the greatest part of his fortune in this undertaking, and the shares at present bear only an ideal value, some of them having been sold at 10*l.* a piece, and the docks have been utterly abandoned for several years.

Redland is a hamlet in the tithing of Stoke Bishop. Redland formerly belonged to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and the privilege of a court leet, waifs, and felons goods therein, was allowed to that abbey in a writ of Quo warranto brought against them 15 E. 1. Thomas Janitor, by his deed, restored to the church of Tewkesbury, and to St. James of Bristol, the land which Maud his wife gave to God and the church of St. James. He likewise gave to the same church of St. James, beside other particulars, land worth 12*s.* in Redland [rubra terra] to be held as freely as Robert earl of Gloucester, his lord, gave it to him, and earl William, son of Robert, confirmed it. After the dissolution of that abbey, it came to the Wilsons. Egion Wilson and Dorothy his wife, and Miles Wilson, joined in levying a fine of the manor of Rydland, alias Th' Ridland, to John Foxton 6 E. 6. John Innys, esq; has an elegant house in this hamlet, built by the late Mr. Coffins.

Thomas-Edwards Freeman, of Batsford in this county, esq; has a good estate here.

This hamlet lying at a considerable distance from the church, the before-mentioned Mr. Coffins, in the year 1740, built a chapel for the convenience of the inhabitants, upon an eminence not far distant from his house; and endowed it with lands, &c. which communibus annis, are worth about 130*l.* a year. He also soon afterwards built a house for the minister, at the expence of 1000*l.*

The chapel is of freestone. The entrance is at the west end, over which there is a pediment of the whole extent, supported by four Ionic pillars. It has one bell, which hangs under a handsome rotundo.

The floor and the steps to the altar are of black and white marble. The altar-piece is half an octagon, wainscotted in compartments, and highly finished with carvings of trophies and festoons, and ornamented with an excellent painting of the Embalming of Christ. The marble communion table is supported by a gilt eagle, and a little before it, upon pedestals, stand two other eagles, highly gilt, for placing books upon. The cieling is finished in the best taste, and it may be truly said, that this chapel is one of the most elegant buildings of its kind.

In a small vestry room on the right of the entrance, there is a handsome monument, with the following memorials and family arms :

In the Vault under the Communion Table are deposited the Remains of

Mrs. ANNE INNYS,
Sister to Mrs. COSSINS, who died 5th Decemb. 1747,
Aged 69.

On one side the entrance, within, is the bust of Mr. Coffins, the founder, well executed in marble by Ryfbrack ; and on the other side, that of Mrs. Coffins, his wife.

2. Shirehampton, is another large tithing, south-westward of the church, in the precincts of which are Kingroad, and Hungroad, two eminent stations for ships. This tithing is intirely detached from the rest of the parish. It occurs by the name of Chire in Domesday, and was a member of the large manor of Westbury, in the forest of Dean, as appears by the extract from that record.

Thomas Mallet, esq; had livery of the manor of Shirehampton granted to him 9 Eliz. He died in the 22d year of the same reign, and left John his son and heir twelve years old. Henry Lewis, esq; was seized of it, from whom it descended to George Lewis, son of Henry, who died possessed of it 10 Car. and left William his son seven years old.

There is a chapel in this tithing, where divine service is celebrated once a fortnight.

South Mead is a manor within the parish of Westbury, formerly belonging to the nunnery of St. Mary Magdalen in Bristol. The prioress granted a long lease of this manor to Thomas Haines, esq; who obtained a reversion in fee from king Henry the Eighth. The manor of Southmead in Westbury, lately belonging to the Magdalen nunnery in Bristol, was granted to Richard Andrews and Thomas Hysley, in trust, 36 H. 8. Richard Haines died seized of Southmead 20 Eliz. and livery was granted to Thomas Haines, son of Richard. The heir of this family sold it to Mr. Barker, ancestor to the late Mr. Barker of Fairford, of whom it was purchased by Mr. Knight, and having since passed thro' several hands, has been lately sold to Mr. Joshua James, a distiller of Bristol, who is the present lord of the manor of Southmead, and has made very considerable improvements on the mansion house and estate.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Bristol. It is an impropriation worth 10*l.* a year to the curate, before it was augmented, in the year 1719, by the queen's bounty, and the joint donations of Edward Colston and Thomas Edwards, esquires. The honourable Mr. Henry Fane is the impropriator and patron ; and the reverend Mr. Ray is the present incumbent.

The church is large and handsome, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It consists of the nave, and two ailes, with a large chancel, and has a very handsome pinnacled tower at the west end. In the north window of the chancel are painted in the glass the figures of St. Augustine, St. Gregory, and St. Ambrose, with their names ; and in the windows of the north aile are the arms of some of those persons who contributed to the building of it.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

At the south-west corner of the chancel, upon an altar tomb, lies the figure of a naked man, ill executed in stone, without arms or inscription ; but it is said to be intended for doctor Carpenter, bishop of Worcester.

Under an arch in the north aile is the figure of a man in armour, and this memorial :

HERE VNDER LIETH INTERRED THE BODIE OF S^r RICHARD HILL, OF REDLAND COVRTE IN THIS PARISH, KNIGHT, WHO DECEASED THE 29th DAY OF MAY IN Y^e YEARE OF OVR LORD GOD 1627, AGED 70 YEARES.

Over the monument are these arms : Quarterly, 1st, Gules, a saltire vair between four mullets argent. 2d, Gules, a lion rampant Or debruised of a bend ermine. 3d, Sable, a bend Or between six roundlets azure. 4th as the 1st.

In the chancel, upon a handsome marble monument, it is thus written :

Near this Place lyeth the Body of Giles Hungerford, Son and Heir of Giles Hungerford, late of Willow in the County of Somerset, Esq; descended from the Hon^{ble} House of the Hungerfords of Fatley Castle in the said County. He married Martha, eldest Daughter of Iohn Iacob of Norton in the County of Wilts, Esq; by whom he had Issue only this Son, who died the twenty-third Day of August, in the One and twentieth Year of his Age, Anno Domini 1689.

Under the inscription are these arms, Sable, two bars argent, in chief three plates.

On

On the table of another handsome monument:

Juxta tumulatur Corpus Jacob Knight de Southmead Armigeri, filij Johannis Knight Militis, Vico de Temple Civitate Bristol, olim habitantis.

Uxorem duxit Annam Dowdeswell filiam Caroli Dowdeswell, Armigeri, de Forthampton Court Gouc. Filios reliquit quatuor Johannem, Thomam, Jacob, & Carolum.

Jacob tertius filius supradict. Jacob Knight obiit 28 Nov. 1726, Ætat. 9.

Upon the monument are these arms: Baron and femme, 1st, Argent, three roundlets gules, on a chief of the second a buckle Or. 2d, Dowdeswell, as under Forthampton.

There is also a memorial for Anne Knight, wife of the above Jacob, who died in 1736, aged 47.

On the table of a pyramidal monument:

Near this Place lies the Body of JOHN HENLEY, late of the Red Lodge in the City of Bristol, Esq; descended from an antient Family in the County of Somerset. He married Mary the eldest Daughter of HENRY FANE, Son of Sir FRANCIS FANE, Knight of the Bath. He was an affectionate Friend, a charitable Benefactor to the Poor, and was greatly esteemed and regarded by all his Acquaintance. He departed this Life the 31st Day of December, 1702, in the 59th Year of his Age.

The arms on this monument are, Baron and femme, 1st, Azure, a lion rampant argent, within a bordure of the second semees of roundlets gules, for Henley. 2d, Azure, three gauntlets Or, for Fane.

Upon a flat stone,

Here lie the Remains of Samuel Creswick D. D. late Dean of the Cathedral Church of Wells, who departed this Life Jan. 14th 1766, aged 72 Years.

Upon another flat stone,

On the table of a handsome pyramidal monument in the south aile, Near this Place lyes interred (Esq^r.

The Body of WILLIAM JEFFERIS, of Pen-Park in this Parish, whose Industry and Integrity in Mercantile Affairs procured him an ample Reward.

Having gone through the Offices of Magistracy in the City of BRISTOL with great Reputation, he died the 17th Day of April, 1752, in the 61st Year of his Age.

Allo (FERIS,
ANN, sole Daughter and Heirefs of the above WILLIAM JEF-born the 21st of August, 1723, married the 30th of March 1752, to JOHN HARMER then of the City of Bristol, Merchant, and died the 9th of July, 1765.

The Sincerity of her Heart in all the Actions of her Life, illuminated by the Practice of every commendable Virtue, deservedly procured her the Affection and Esteem of Relations, Friends, and Acquaintance; and the solid Hope of a more glorious Reward in a Life of Immortality.

Over the table are these arms: Sable, a lion rampant between three scaling ladders argent, for Jefferis. Beneath, Argent, on a chevron between three annulets gules another of the field. On a scutcheon of pretence, Jefferis, as before.

Upon a neat marble monument in the same aile, it is thus written:

Near this Monument lies interred the Body of James Pipon of London, Merchant, who departed this Life at the Hot Wells, Bristol, the 12th of June, 1759, aged 48 Years. He was the 5th Son of Joshua Pipon, Esq; Lieutenant Bailly, chief Magistrate of the Island of Jersey.

In a scutcheon upon the pyramid are these arms, viz. Party per chevron, azure and Or, in chief between two estoiles of six points a crescent argent.

There is also an elegant monument in the same aile, with the following memorial on the vase:

Near this Place are interred the Bodies of WILLIAM PHELPS, Esq; and MARY his Widow and Relict, both late of Cote, in this Parish: He died the tenth Day of August 1763, aged 43 Years. She died the first Day of January, 1764, aged 53 Years.

This Monument is erected to their Memories in Pursuance of the Directions of the said MARY, in a Codicil to her Will.

The monument is ornamented with a scutcheon of two coats, Baron and femme, 1st, Argent, a lion rampant sable between six cross crozlets fitchy gules, for Phelps. 2d, Or, a fess between three griffons heads erased sable.

Beside these mentioned in the inscriptions, there are several other eminent persons buried in the chancel, for whom there is no memorial, viz. Thomas earl of Westmoreland, who died about seven years ago; and Henry Fane, of Wormesley in Oxfordshire, esq; his brother: John earl of Westmoreland, (son to the above Thomas) and lady Burghurst, his wife: Mrs. Mary Creswick, relict of doctor Samuel Creswick, dean of Wells, and sister to Thomas earl of Westmoreland: And lady Anne Fane, eldest daughter to the said earl.

Benefactions.

Ralph Sadler, esq; formerly lord of the manor, gave two large houses by the church-yard to the use of the poor. Mr. Robert Arden gave two houses without Laford's gate, worth 12*l.* a year, to the use of the poor. Mrs. Katherine Rutland gave 50*l.* the interest whereof to be paid to the minister for six annual sermons. Atkyns.

The following particulars are hung up in a written table in the vestry room, viz. Robert Arden gave the ground on which Robotham's house now stands. William Ashley, the interest of 10*l.* and Honor Bodman, the interest of 50*l.* both to Shirehampton. Humphry Brown, 10*s.* for a sermon, and 40*s.* for bread, to Westbury and Stoke only. William Burgis, six score sacks of coal to six housekeepers of Westbury tithing only. Lady Cann, the interest of 20*l.* Doctor William Cooke, sixty twopenny loaves on New-years day. Edward Colston, esq; 100*l.* towards augmenting the living. Thomas Elbridge, the interest of 100*l.* viz. 20*s.* for a sermon on the 30th of January, the rest in bread. Edward Haines, the interest of 20*l.* Elizabeth Hellen, the interest of 5*l.* Sir Richard Hill, of Redland Court, the interest of 20*l.* Anthony Hill, the interest of 20*l.* Mrs. Betty Hallister, the interest of 100*l.* Thomas Hart, esq; the interest of 50*l.* John Jelf, the interest of 30*l.* Robert Kitchin, 6*s.* 8*d.* for a sermon, and 6*s.* 8*d.* for bread, to the tithings of Westbury and Stoke only. John Knight, the interest of 10*l.* Thomas Moor, the interest of 50*l.*

Benjamin Baron, esq; enjoyed a good estate here, at the time of his death, in 1693. His daughter and heiress carried it, by her marriage, to sir Thomas Littleton, treasurer of the navy, and speaker of the house of commons, who was owner of it at the beginning of this century. It passed afterwards, by purchase, to Mr. Snell, and Powell Snell, of Guiting Grange, esq; is the present proprietor of it. This estate was made tithe free, by appropriating a ground, called the Breach, to the rectory, as it was proved and settled, by an issue at law concerning the same, about the beginning of the present century.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 140*l.* a year, of which the reverend Thomas Brookes, D. D. is patron and incumbent. Two yard-lands belong to the glebe.

About the beginning of this century, there were 45 houses in the parish, and about 160 inhabitants, of whom 6 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 3. Atkyns. The people are now computed at 120.

WESTERLEIGH.

THIS parish lies in the west part of the hundred of Pucklechurch, whence its name; three miles distant south-west from Chipping Sodbury, seven north-west from Marshfield, and nine north-eastward from the city of Bristol.

It consists chiefly of pasturage, with large tracts of waste land, or common, and abounds in coal; so that a great part of the laborious inhabitants are employ'd in mining. There is also a manufacture of felt hats carried on in the village, which seems to be improving.

Doctor Edward Fowler, bishop of Gloucester, was a native of this place, and died at Chelsea, Aug. 26, 1714.

The Osmunda Regalis, a very curious plant, grows spontaneously in Westerleigh common.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

Westerleigh was antiently a member of the extensive manor of Pucklechurch, which was given to the monks of Glastonbury, to pray for the soul of king Edmund the First, who was stabbed in his palace at Pucklechurch, in the year 946. And being part of that manor at the time of the general survey, it is not particularly mentioned in Domesday.

The monks of Glastonbury quitted claim to the manors of Pucklechurch, Abston, and Westerleigh, to Joceline bishop of Bath and Wells, 7 Joh. on condition that he would restore to them the election of their own abbat; and Westerleigh continued as part of the possessions of that see 'till after the reformation. King Edward the Sixth took it from the bishoprick of Bath and Wells in the second year of his reign, and it was granted to sir Nicholas Pointz 6 E. 6. Sir Nicholas Pointz, heir of sir Anthony Pointz, died seized of it 4 Mar. leaving Nicholas, his son and heir, twenty-one years old.

John Roberts, alderman of Bristol, purchased the manor of Nicholas Pointz, and was lord of it in the year 1608, as was Thomas Roberts, esq; at the time of his death, in the year 1673. Sir Samuel Astry, knight, died possessed of it Sep. 22, 1704, and left it to Elizabeth his widow, afterwards the wife of Simon Harcourt, esq; whom she outlived, and dying Dec. 27, 1708, the manor passed to her three surviving daughters and coheirs by sir Samuel Astry, viz. Elizabeth, wife of sir John Smyth, of Long Aston, com. Somersset, baronet; Diana, wife to Richard Orlebar, esq; and Arabella, afterwards lady of Charles-William, earl of Suffolk. From them the manor descended like Henbury, to its present owners, who are sir Jarrit Smith, baronet, the honourable Thomas Willoughby, and Mrs. Colston, relict of the late Alexander Colston, esq.

Livery of the chapel of Westerleigh, and of a messuage called Sherwick, was granted to John Dennis 14 Eliz.

HAMLETS, and places of distinct names in this parish, are as follow: 1. Nibley; 2. May's Hill; 3. Henvild; 4. Wotton's End; 5. Coal-pit Heath; and 6. Kendalsbire; but none of them afford any thing worthy particular notice.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Hawkesbury, and is annexed to Pucklechurch. A mortuary of 10*s.* is due to the vicar of the last-mentioned church from the executors of all such householders of this parish as die worth 40*l.*

The church is a neat building, supported by eight octagonal pillars, and two pilasters; and has a handsome gallery at the west end, erected at the expence of the parish, in the year 1771. In the tower are six musical bells.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

On a flat stone in the chancel, is this inscription:

P. M.
Richardi Hollister eximii Ecclesie Alumni et columinis, qui obiit Maij 20^o 1659, Æt. 47.

Epitaphium.
Vir virtute virens, Christi pugil, alter Elias,
Prudens, fidus homo, jam requiescit humo.
Mater humus domus est, tenebrosa nocte sed orto
Sole, datur sanctis luce tenenda Domus.

On a monument against the south wall of the chancel :

In Memoriam Thomæ Roberts, Armigeri, hujus Manerij dudum Domini, Qui obiit

Julij 26^o Anno Domini 1673
Ætatis suæ 49.

The arms upon this monument are, Baron and femme, 1. Party per pale argent and gules, over all a lion rampant sable, for Roberts. 2. Sable, a bend argent, on a canton a leopard's head cubosbed.

On a brass plate,

To the Memory of his dear Mother M^{rs}. Mary Jones, Wife of William Jones, Esq; Lord of this Manor. She deceased Oct. 22, A. D. 1661, Ætat. 38, Tho. Jones filius posuit.

Arms. Baron and femme, 1. Ermine, a saltire gules, for Jones. 2. Roberts, as before.

On an oval table, against the east wall of the chancel,

Exuvias Mortalitatiss suæ infra deposuit Richardus Prigg, Gen. nuper de Ciuitate Bristol Pharmacopœus. Vir apto peditus Ingenio, Fortuna eminens, Arte sua præstans, Amicorum Solatium dum vixit Mortuus suspirium. Natus fuit in hac Parochia, Denatus vero in Civitate prædicta

Anno Ætatis suæ 65,
Salutis nostræ 1723.

Over the monument, in a scutcheon, are these arms : Argent, a lion rampant regardant azure, between three trefoils proper.

Benefactions.

John Roberts, lord of this manor, gave the church house, and a cottage called But Hays, to feoffees, for the benefit of the poor, 29 Eliz.

Mr. Edward Hill, who died in 1619, gave 100*l.* which sum has since been laid out on lands that now produce about 14*l.* a year. The income is thus applied : 3*l.* for ten sermons ; 3*l.* 10*s.* to be distributed to the poor on Candlemas-day ; and the remainder for apprenticing out poor children of this parish.

The reverend Thomas Prigg, in 1986, gave a large silver flaggon, and other plate, for the communion service.

Mr. Robert Nailor, by will, in 1702, charged a tenement and lands at Acton with the payment of 5*l.* a year, for apprenticing a boy of this parish.

Sir John Smyth, in the year 1715, by desire of his lady, settled 20*l.* a year for ever, for teaching poor children of this parish to read and write.

Taxes.	{	The Royal Aid in 1692, £. 225 4 0
		Poll-tax — — 1694, — 58 17 0
		Land-tax — — 1694, — 274 14 8
		The same, at 3 s. 1770, — 217 8 3

Sir Robert Atkyns reckoned the houses in the parish at 120, and the people at about 400, 14 of whom were reputed to be freeholders ; yearly births 15, burials 13. Examining the parish register, I find, that from 1700 to 1709, both inclusive, the baptisms were 218, and the burials 125 ; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 353, and the burials 247. The present number of inhabitants is about 930, and therefore they are in proportion to the annual burials nearly as 1 to 38.

WESTON upon AVON

IS a parish in the upper part of Kiftsgate hundred, at the northern extremity of the county, four miles west from Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire, nine north from Campden, and thirty-six north-east from Gloucester.

It lies in that vast tract of rich country, sometimes called the Vale of Evesham, on the south bank of the Avon, over which there is a bridge at this place ; and the lands consist almost wholly of meadow and pasture. It has nothing to recommend it to the traveller's notice, but the common productions of nature, which indeed are very abundant.

At the time of the general survey, there were many places in Gloucestershire of the common name of Westune, or Westone, which the experience of after ages found necessary to distinguish by additions, and this parish was then called Weston upon Avon. The addition was given it for a reason too obvious to need explanation ; and indeed the word Weston is almost as obvious, being nothing more than the West Town, and commonly denotes the situation of the place from some other of greater consequence, near which it lies, or from the rest of the places in the same hundred. So Estone, or Aston, Norton, Sutton, are all names of like relative signification.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' The church of St. Mary of Evesham holds Westune in Widelei hundred. There are three hides, and one free [from tax]. In demean are two plow-tillages, and five villeins, and a priest, with two plow-tillages. It was worth 20*s.* now 40*s.*' Domesday, p. 72.

How the manor passed from the abbey of Evesham does not appear, but it belonged antiently to the Manduits, or Mauduits, earls of Warwick, which great family was descended from William Maudit, chamberlain to king William the Conqueror. He married Maud, the daughter and heiress of Michael de Hanslape, with whom he had a great estate ; and this parish was frequently called Weston Maudit from his posterity, to whom it belonged.

William Maudit, baron of Hanslape in Buckinghamshire, and hereditary chamberlain to the king in his exchequer, married Alice, daughter and at length heiress of Waleran earl of Warwick, and dying 41 H. 3. left issue William Maudit, earl of Warwick, and baron of Hanslape, who died childless 52 H. 3. and Isabel Maudit, the wife of William de Beauchamp, baron of Elmley in Worcestershire. William de Beauchamp, eldest son of William and Isabel, was baron of Elmley, hereditary sheriff of Worcestershire, and hereditary constable of the castle of Worcester, in right of his father ; and earl of Warwick, baron of Hanslape, and hereditary chamberlain

King's Weston frequently occur in the records by the name of Weston, without any distinction, so there is good reason to suspect that some of the records which relate to the latter, have been misapplied by the before-mentioned learned historian to Westonbirt. Thus he says,

' This manor, and the manor of Beverstone did belong to Maurice de Gaunt earl of Lincoln 17 Joh. Margaret the widow of John Giffard held the same 6 E. 3. Thomas lord Berkeley held Westonbirt 35 E. 3. Sir John Berkeley held the same 6 H. 6. Sir William Berkeley died seized of this manor 5 E. 6. and livery thereof was granted to John Berkeley, son of sir William 6 E. 6.—All these particulars are supposed to relate to King's Weston.

When there are two or more places in a county of the same name, it frequently creates confusion. The following records are supposed to concern Westonbirt:

Hugh le Dispencer the younger was seized of the manor of Westonbirt 5 E. 2.

Sir Ralph de Willington, son of John de Willington, died 22 E. 3. seized of the manors of Westonbirt, Ablington in Bibury, Poulton in Awre, Frampton Cotterel, Yate, and Sandhurst, of all which his son Henry had livery the following year, and was living 26 E. 3. Sir John Paulet and Margaret his wife were seized of Westonbirt and Poulton 15 R. 2. but it seems to have been only in trust, for John de Willington died without issue 20 R. 2. seized of the manors of Poulton, Ablington, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, Sandhurst, Culverden, and Morelade, all in the county of Gloucester, and left Joan his sister and heir, who was married to John Wrath.

John Wrath, son of John and Joan de Willington, died without issue 13 H. 4. leaving his two sisters coheiresses to his great estate, of whom Elizabeth was married to sir William Poulton, and Isabel was the widow of William Beaumont.

Sir William Poulton and Elizabeth his wife dying without issue, Isabel Beaumont became possessor of her father's estate, which after the death of her son John Beaumont, without issue, descended to her daughter Isabel, who died unmarried 2 H. 6. seized of the manors of Ablington, Poulton, Yate, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurst, all which were the patrimony of her ancestors the Willingtons.

Sir Thomas Beaumont succeeded her, and died 29 H. 6. leaving a son William Beaumont, esq; afterwards knighted, who died in the 32d year of the same reign. Philip Beaumont, brother and heir of William, died 13 E. 4. seized of the manors of Poulton, Ablington, Yate, Westonbirt, Frampton Cotterel, and Sandhurst, of all which Hugh Beaumont and Elizabeth his wife, John Bassett and Elizabeth his wife, John Beaumont, clerk, John Chichester and Margaret his wife, and John Croker and Anne his wife, levied several fines 16, 18, & 20 H. 7. to Richard bishop of Durham, and other bishops, to sir Giles D'Aubeny, or Giles lord d'Aubeny, and many other great persons. Giles lord d'Aubeny died seized of the said manors 6 H. 8. and livery was granted to his son Henry lord d'Aubeny, the same year. They afterwards were in the crown, and were granted to Edward duke of Somerset, upon whose attainder they came again to the crown, and this and several of the before-mentioned manors were granted to James Bassett 4 Mar. and the grant was confirmed to Arthur Bassett 7 Eliz.

Nicholas Dymery was lord of this manor in the year 1608. The Crews were afterwards proprietors of it, and it passed out of that name and family, by the marriage of an heiress, to sir Richard Holford, knight, who was appointed one of the masters in ordinary in the high court of chancery, in June, 1693. From him the manor descended to Robert Holford, esq; who was appointed a master in ordinary of the same court, in October, 1712; and from him it descended to Peter Holford, esq; who now possesses it, and was also appointed a master in chancery, in the room of his father, by the earl of Hardwicke, in August, 1750. He is possessed of other good estates in this county, and elsewhere, and gives for his arms, Argent, a greyhound passant sable.

Of

The family of Holford is of great antiquity in Cheshire, being descended from Hugh de Runchamp, who was lord of Lofstock about the reign of king Stephen. He had a son Richard de Runchamp, whose son Gralam, or Gralam de Runchamp, sold Houlme juxta Nether Pever, in Cheshire, to Richard son of Randle Grosvenor, in the year 1234; and the town of Lofstock was called Lofstock Gralam, after his name. The Lofstocks bore for their arms, Argent, a greyhound passant sable.

Gralam de Lofstock, son of the last Gralam, had issue by Letitia his wife, three sons, Richard, Robert, and Galfrid. Richard, the eldest, married Emme de Merton, by whom he had issue two sons, Richard and Thomas, who both died sine prole; and one daughter Joan, married, in 1277, to William Toft, younger son of Roger de Toft, lord of Toft; whom she survived, and was married, secondly, to Thomas Vernon, about the year 1316, from whom the Vernons of Haslington in Cheshire descended. She was married, after the death of her second husband, to William de Hallum, in the year 1337. Which said William Toft gave for his arms, Argent, a chevron between three text tees sable, and by Joan his wife, had issue three sons, Roger, Henry, and Walter.

Roger de Holford, the eldest son, was living in the year 1316, and after the manner of those ages, assumed the name of Holford from the place of his residence. He married Margery, daughter of Richard le Dispencer, but died without issue 5 E. 3. whereby Henry, his next brother, became his heir, and assumed the name of Holford. Which Henry de Holford, by Margery his wife, had issue two sons, William and Roger, to which latter he gave lands in Plumley, 1344.

William de Holford, the eldest son, died in his father's life-time, having married Isabel, daughter of _____ by whom he had one son John.

John de Holford, son and heir of William, recovered the manor of Holford against Richard Vernon, of Lofstock Gralam, 42 E. 3. and sealed usually with a chevron between three text tees; the chevron making the distinction between these and the arms of Toft of Toft, who bears the Tees without a chevron. He had issue by Joan his wife, daughter of Roger Bruyn, of Stapleford, one son Thomas, and died 9 H. 4.

Thomas Holford, son and heir of John, died before his father, 12 R. 2. having married Alice, daughter of William Buckley, of Oateworth.

William Holford, of Holford, was son and heir of Thomas. He married Margaret, daughter of sir Richard Venables, of Kinderton, and by her had issue three sons, Thomas, his heir; John, and Hugh; and two daughters, Jonet, wife of Randle

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 80*l.* a year. Peter Holford, esq; is patron. The living was augmented about the year 1725, by the donations of Robert Holford, esq; and Doctor Godolphin, who gave 100*l.* each, and by queen Anne's bounty.

About forty acres belong to the glebe.

The church is small, with a low tower at the west end.

Benefactions.

A house and garden, and an acre in the common field, are given for the benefit of the poor.

Mrs. Hodges left 3*l.* a year for teaching the poor children to read.

Land-tax at 3*s.* 1770, £ 47 5 0

The state of population in this parish, about the beginning of the present century, as given by sir Robert Atkyns, was 18 houses, and about 80 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders. There are now 22 families, and 106 inhabitants.

WESTON SUBEDGE

LIES in the upper division of Kiftgate hundred, about one mile west from Campden, six south-east from Evesham in Worcestershire, and about twenty-eight north-eastward from Gloucester.

The village is seated under the side of a hill, whence it received the addition of Subedge, but in all probability it was called Weston from its situation from the town of Campden, or else from its western aspect on the side of the hill.

It is said that the hundred court was formerly kept on the top of the hill, above the village; and sir Robert Atkyns was of opinion, that the hundred received the name of Kiftgate, from a gate near the place where the court was held.

Here is no great manufacture, but the women and girls are commonly employ'd in spinning flax.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The lands in this parish were divided between two great proprietaries, when Domesday was compiled, as appears by the record, of which the following is a translation:

'Hugo de Grentemaisnil holds Westone in
'Ceolstede hundred, and Roger holds it of him.
'There are four hides. Balduin held it. In de'mean are two plow-tillages, and six villeins, with 'three plow-tillages. There are four servi, and 'five ancille, and a mill of 10*s.* It was worth 7*l.*
'now 6*l.*' Domesday, p. 77.

'Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds Westone in Celfe-'storn hundred. Two thanes (one a free man 'of earl Herald's, the other Leuric's) held ten 'hides there, for two manors, and could go where
'they pleased. In demean are four plow-tillages,

Randle Brereton of Malpas; and Margery. He died 38 H. 6. and was succeeded by Thomas Holford, of Holford, esq; his son and heir. Which Thomas, by his wife Joan, daughter of Richard Legh de West-Hall, in High Leigh, had an only son Thomas Holford, and died in 1464.

Thomas Holford, of Holford, the younger, esq; son of the last mentioned Thomas, married Maud, daughter of William Buckley, deputy judge of Chester, 1444, and by her had issue George, his son and heir; Randle, who had issue Humphry and Richard; Robert Holford, who had issue John, Philip, Bartholomew, Owen, Matthew, and Bryan. This Thomas died about 13 E. 4.

Sir George Holford, of Holford, knight, son and heir of Thomas, married Isabel, daughter of Robert Legh, of Adlington, esq; and widow of Lawrence Warren, and by her had two sons, John, and George; and one daughter Constance, married to William, son of Edward Bradshaw. Sir George was sheriff of Cheshire 16 H. 8. and bore Loftock's arms on his seal, viz. Argent, a greyhound passant sable. He had also four bastard sons, 1. Thomas, 2. Arthur, from whom the Holfords of Davenham; 3. Raufe, 4. Robert. Also Ellen, a base daughter, all living 22 H. 7.

Sir John Holford, of Holford, knight, son of sir George, was sheriff of Cheshire 33 H. 8. He married Margery, sole daughter and heir of Raufe Brereton, of Icoit in Flintshire, 22 H. 7. and had issue two sons, Thomas, his heir; and Christopher, who married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Danyell, of Over-Tabley, esq; 1555; from whom the Holfords of London and Essex are descended. Also one daughter Alice, married to Piers Leycester, of Nether-Tabley, esq. Sir John died in 1545.

Thomas Holford, of Holford, esq; son and heir of sir John, married, first, Margaret, daughter of sir Thomas Butler, of Bewsy in Lancashire, by whom he had one son Christopher. After the death of his said wife, he married, secondly, Jane, the widow of Hugh Dutton, and daughter of sir William Booth, of Dunham-Malvey, by whom he had issue George Holford, of Newborough in Dutton, gentleman, the continuator of this family, of whom hereafter; Thomas, the second son; and John. Also Ellen, married to John Carrington, of Carrington in Cheshire, esq; Dorothy, married to John Bruyn, of Stapleford in Cheshire, esq; and Elizabeth, married to Charles Manwaring, of Croxton in Cheshire, esq; 1560. This Thomas Holford died in 1569.

Christopher Holford, of Holford, esq; son of Thomas by the first venter, had also two wives; first, Anne, daughter of Hugh Dutton and Jane aforesaid, by whom he had issue Thomas Holford; and another son John, and a daughter Anne, who both died infants. His second wife was Elizabeth, the widow of Peter Shakerley, and daughter and coheir of sir Randle Manwaring, of Over-Pever, by whom he had issue one daughter Mary.

Thomas Holford, son and heir of Christopher, having married Dorothy, daughter of Peter Shakerley, of Hulme, esq; and Elizabeth, aforesaid, died without issue, and was buried at Nether Pever, in 1561; whereby the said Mary Holford became sole heir to Christopher her father, and was married to sir Hugh Cholmondley, of Cholmondley in Cheshire, and had a numerous issue.

I return now to George Holford, brother to Christopher, and next heir male of the Holfords. Between whom and the said Mary Cholmondley were law suits concerning the Holford estates for upwards of forty years, which at last were settled by mediation of friends, and the estates were parted between them. The said George Holford married Jane, daughter and heir of Charles Awbrey, of Camriff in Brecknockshire, and widow of Henry Masterion, and by her had issue seven sons, Thomas and John, twins; Edward, Peter, (continuator of the male line) George, Charles, and William; and one daughter Mary, married to William Harcourt, of Wintham, gentleman. He died in 1635; and Thomas Holford of Icoit, his son and heir, died without issue male, wherefore the inheritance descended to James Holford, of Newborough, son and heir of Peter, fourth son of George; for all the brothers of Peter died without issue male. Which James Holford married Margaret, daughter of Matthew Carleton, of Lincoln's-inn, London, and dying in 1666, left issue one son Thomas, and one daughter Mary.

Sir Richard Holford, knight, lord of the manor of Westonbirt, by family tradition, was a branch of this house; but no care having been taken to continue the Holfords pedigree, neither in the heralds office, nor in family papers, it is uncertain where he ought to be joined to the antient stock.

Robert Holford, esq; was son of sir Richard, and dying in the year 1750, was succeeded by his son Peter Holford, esq; the present lord of the manor of Westonbirt.———This pedigree is chiefly extracted from sir Peter Leicester's Historical Antiquities, and the particulars are authenticated by antient deeds from which he extracted them.

‘ and eighteen villeins, and one bordar, with nine ‘ plow-tillages, and twelve servi. It was worth
‘ 100*s.* now 7*l.*’ Ibid. p. 78.

These manors are described in the records by the same common name; which making it difficult to apply the accounts of them with certainty, they are therefore set down in chronological order.

Jeffry Giffard, archbishop of York, was seized of the manor of Weston Subedge 7 E. 1. and Henry de Penbrugge held it the same year. The sheriff returned that John Giffard was lord of Weston 9 E. 1.

Godfrey Giffard, was lord chancellor of England, and bishop of Worcester. A court leet and free warren in Weston and Norton were allowed him in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. and he died seized of those manors in the 30th year of that reign. The Giffards of Weston, afterwards, the better to announce their descent from this prelate, gave for their arms, Argent, ten torteauxes, which are those of the bishoprick of Worcester.

John de Feckenham was seized of the manors of Weston and Norton 34 E. 1. John Giffard of Weston, or of Doyton, died 13 E. 2. possessed of the manors of Weston Underedge, and Norton Underedge, and of the advowson of the church of Weston; and the escheator’s inquisition found, that John Giffard, his son, held the same of the king for life. A John Giffard, probably the same person noticed in the inquisition, held the before-mentioned estates 1 & 38 E. 3.

Thomas de Evesham held Weston Underedge 17 E. 3. as did William de Acton 47 E. 3. John Solers was seized of two yard-lands, and of seven acres of meadow, in Weston Underedge, 20 R. 2. and William Solers was possessed of an estate dignified in the records by the name of Weston Underedge 5 H. 4. Thomas Weston, the chaplain, was likewise seized of an estate of the same name, 6 H. 4.

Roger Giffard, esq; was seized of the manors of Weston Underedge, and Norton Underedge, 25 H. 6. Margaret, the widow of Thomas Herward, was seized of the manor of Weston Subedge 12 E. 4. Joan the widow of sir John Merney, late wife of Robert Giffard, and formerly the wife of — Barendine, was possessed of the manors of Weston Underedge, and Norton, 18 E. 4. Livery of the manor, park, and advowson of Weston Underedge, and of Norton, was granted to George Giffard 15 Eliz.

Sir Edward Grevil was lord of this manor in the year 1608. Francis Throgmorton was also seized of it, but being attainted of treason, it was granted by the crown to Henry Spiller, esq; and others, in trust for George Giffard, 7 Jac. 1. It was again granted to the same persons, 9 Jac. and they sold it to Henry Fleetwood, esq; and others.

Richard Graves, esq; purchased the manors of Weston Subedge, Aston Subedge, and Mickleton, with the royalty of the hundred of Kiftgate, about the middle of the last century. He sold Weston Subedge to William Morgan, esq; who had married one of his daughters. Richard Morgan, grandson of William, by his will, dated May 29, 1740, gave this manor to Morgan Graves, esq; great grandson of Richard Graves, before-mentioned; and his son, Walwyn Graves, esq; is the present lord of the manors of Weston Subedge, Aston Subedge, and Mickleton, all in this county.

Nicholas le Chamberlain held two yard-lands in Weston Subedge 29 E. 1. Agnes de la Chambre held lands here 2 E. 3. and Alice at Chambre was likewise seized of lands in this place 37 E. 3. Thomas Bishop was seized of one messuage, and of one yard-land in Weston, 18 E. 2.

A large wood, called Weston Park, on the side of the hill, together with some other lands, were sold from the manor, by Henry Fleetwood and the other owners, to sir Baptist Hicks, in the year 1610. This estate, by descent, is now vested in the earl of Gainsborough.

HAMLETS. There are three hamlets in this parish of the name of Norton.

‘ Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds five hides in ‘ Nortune, in Celflestorn hundred. Two thanes ‘ held them for two manors, and could go where
‘ they pleased. In demean are four plow-tillages,
‘ and nine villeins, and two bordars, with four ‘ plow-tillages, and ten servi. They were worth
‘ 4*l.* now 6*l.*’ Domesday, p. 78.

It has already been shewn, that the Giffards enjoyed this estate (called Norton Giffard from them, but generally Norton Underedge) for many successive generations; but it afterwards became divided into three distinct hamlets, and so it continues.

1. Upper Norton. Richard Fiennes, lord Say and Seal, son of Richard lord Say, died 11 Jac. seized of the manors of Weston and Norton, and left William lord Say, his son and heir, twenty-eight years old. This estate passed afterwards to sir William Keyt, baronet, who being burnt in his own house, in the year 1741, his son sold it to sir Dudley Ryder, lord chief justice of England, whose son, Nathaniel Ryder, esq; is the present proprietor of Upper Norton.

2. Middle Norton, which belonged to Mr. Sprig at the beginning of this century, is now, by purchase, the property of Mr. Ryder.

3. Lower Norton, where was formerly a chapel of ease. Lady Langley, of New-House in Herefordshire, and Laurence Fiennes, esq; were proprietors of Lower Norton at the beginning of this century. The Fiennes family sold it to Mr. Maunder, of whom it was purchased by Thomas Eden, esq; the present owner.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth 500*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Peeley is patron and incumbent.

Tithes

Tithes in Weston Subedge belonged to Winchcombe abbey, and were granted to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6.

The church land, worth 40*s.* a year, is assigned to the use of the parish clerk. Three yard lands belong to the glebe.

The parsonage house is of good hewn stone, and, together with the gardens, is surrounded with a strong wall of considerable antiquity. In one of the rooms the letters W. L. are many times expressed on the painted glass, and are supposed to be the initials of the person's name who built it.

The church is a strong building, dedicated to St. John Baptist, with a tower at the west end. The walls have been decorated with paintings, as of the Ascension, the four Evangelists, &c. but time has much impaired the colours.

John Bell, rector of this church, was archdeacon of Gloucester, prebendary of Lincoln and Litchfield, warden of the collegiate church of Stratford upon Avon, vicar-general of the diocese of Worcester, and afterwards bishop of that see in 1539. But he resigned his bishoprick in 1543, and retired to a private life at Clerkenwell, where he died in 1556.

There were 58 houses in the parish when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it, and he estimated the inhabitants to be about 300, of whom 26 were reputed to be freeholders. He also sets down the annual births at 8, and burials at 6. But sir Robert's estimate was too high, for according to the register, in ten years, from 1700 to 1709 inclusive, there were only 60 baptisms, and 42 burials; and in the same number of years, from 1760 to 1769, there were 105 baptisms, and 47 burials. Thus it appears that population has advanced since sir Robert's time, and the present number of inhabitants being 197, exceed that of the annual burials in the proportion of 42 to 1.

WHADDON

IS a small parish, in the united hundreds of Dudston and King's Barton, about six miles north from Stroud, and four south from Gloucester.

It lies in the Vale, and consists chiefly of rich pasture land, but has nothing very curious, in the works of art or nature, to distinguish it.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Durand the sheriff holds Wadune, in Dunestane hundred. There are five hides. Five brothers held them for five manors, and could go where they pleased, and were equals [i.e. had equal shares]. In demean are five plow-tillages, and one villein, and seven bordars, with five plow-tillages. In the time of king Edward it was worth 8*l.* and is now worth 100*sol.*' Domesday, p. 76.

The manor belonged to Robert de Pont de Larch, or Pont de l'Arch, 30 H. 3. Robert Waleran, sheriff of Gloucestershire, was seized of it 31 H. 3. in which year he obtained a grant of an annual fair in Whaddon, to be held on the eve, the day, and the morrow after the feast of St. Margaret the virgin.

William de Valence, earl of Pembroke, uterine brother to king Henry the Third, was seized of Whaddon and Moreton Valence, by the gift of Robert de Pont de Larch. He had a confirmation of the grant of those manors from the king, 36 H. 3. and the privileges of court leet and free warren were allowed him 15 E. 1. He was slain by the French at Bayonne, 23 E. 1. and died seized of Moreton and Whaddon, the latter of which was held in dower by Joan his wife, daughter daughter and at length heiress of Gwarine de Montchenfy.

Audomar de Valence, earl of Pembroke, surviving son of William, was killed in France, on account of the part he had taken in the death of the earl of Lancaster, 17 E. 2. He left no issue, and the escheator's inquisition found that he died seized of Payneswyke, Morton, and Whaddon; that there were in Whaddon quidem gurgis in Sabrina, worth 20*s.* per ann. 125 acres of arable land, worth 4*d.* per acre; and 100 acres worth 2*d.* per acre; 30 acres of sterill land, worth only 1*d.* an acre; 40 acres of meadow, at 1*s.* 6*d.* an acre; 15 acres of pasture at 1*s.* and a park without deer; and that John de Hastings, Johanna the wife of David de Strabolgi earl of Arthelos, and Elizabeth Comyn were his heirs.

From this Audomar the manor of Whaddon passed, like those of Moreton Valence and Painwick, 'till it came into the possession of sir William Kingston, who levied a fine of Painwick and Whaddon to sir Nicholas Pointz, 5 E. 6.

The manor passed from the Kingstons to the Jerninghams of Coffey in Norfolk; and Henry Jerningham had livery of it 15 Eliz. Sir William Dorrington was lord of the manor in the year 1608, and sir Samuel Eckley died possessed of it in the reign of queen Anne. It passed afterwards to Mr. John Small, and is now vested in Samuel Peach, esq; a silk-merchant in London. His arms are, Gules, three martlets between two chevrons argent.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a curacy, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth 25*l.* a year. The lessee of the prebendary of Hereford is patron and improprator, and Mr. John Jones is the present incumbent.

The impropriation is now worth 52*l.* a year, and pays 15*l.* a year to the curate.

The church is a strong building, dedicated to St. Margaret, and has an embattled tower at the west end.

Wheatenhurst, or Whitminster,

IS a parish in the hundred of Whitston, in the Vale part of the county, about five miles distant west from Painwick, seven north from Dursley, and eight southward from Gloucester.

It consists chiefly of rich pasture and meadow ground, proper for dairy and grazing, and produces very good cheese and cider.

Witenberst, as the name is written in Domesday, signifies the strong wood, and denotes the antient condition of the place when the name was given it. The parish was afterwards vulgarly called Whitminster, (contracted from Whitenberst, and Minster, a Monastery) in honour of the abbey of Gloucester, because the monks had acquired a manor here; and the latter is the name most commonly used at present, but Wheatenburst occurs in all deeds, and formal writings.

The river From, or the Stroud river, which is a boundary between Saul and this parish, falls into the Severn at the distance of something more than a mile from the church, and a navigable canal from the Severn at Framilode, crosses this parish, and will shortly be extended to the town of Stroud, under which head the reader will find an historical account of the proceedings on that business.

Two turnpike-roads pass through Whitminster, one leading from the east part of the county, by Minchin Hampton and Stroud, and so westward towards the passages over the Severn at Framilode and Newnham; the other, is the great road from Gloucester to Bath and Bristol. And surely there cannot be a more infamous turnpike-road, for several miles of it, than the latter; for, incredible as it may seem, the writer of this account, in the winter of 1776, saw a chaise mired in it, about half a mile from the Swan inn in this parish, and was there told, that a horse had like to have been smothered in the same place two days before, but was luckily saved by some persons coming accidentally to the poor animal's assistance. Several causes operate to this evil; the scarcity of stone, the remissness of the commissioners; and the total ignorance of the surveyor. There may be, however, one lucky circumstance attending this road. If it could once be put in repair, the canal will ease it of a great part of the coal, and other heavy carriage, and it may then, with no great exertion, be prevented from relapsing into its present foundrous condition.

Richard-Owen Cambridge, esq; has a good old house and gardens near the church, where Frederick prince of Wales, the father of his present majesty, did him the great honour of a visit, when he made an excursion into Gloucestershire, a little before his death. But this feat has been for some years intirely unoccupied.

Of the Manors and other Estates.

Domesday gives the following account of this manor:

‘Hardinc holds Witenherst in mortgage of Brictric. The same Brictric held it in the time of king Edward. There are five hides taxed. In demean is one plow-tillage, and a priest, and two villeins, and six bordars, with five plow-tillages. There are three servi, and a mill of 10 sol. and ten acres of meadow. It was worth 100 sol. now 30 sol.’ Domesday, p. 80.

This was not the great, unfortunate Brictric, who was possessed of the lordship of Gloucester, but one of the king’s thanes of the same name. Who was the next possessor to Hardinc does not appear; but Jeffery Fitz-Peirce, earl of Essex, was afterwards seized of this manor. He had one daughter Maud, married to Henry Bohun, earl of Hereford, to whom he gave the manor of Wheatenhurst in frank marriage, and died 14 Joh. He had also three sons, who died without issue, whereby the Bohuns, descendants of the aforesaid Maud, became earls of Essex. Henry de Bohun died seized of Wheatenhurst 4 H. 3. and was succeeded by his son Humphry de Bohun, who was taken in rebellion in the battle of Evesham, and his lands were seized by the king; but the manors of Wheatenhurst and Southam were restored to him 50 H. 3. and he died 3 E. 1. Henry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, obtained a licence to fortify his manor house of Wheatenhurst, 21 E. 3. and died in the 34th year of the same reign. Another Humphry de Bohun, the last earl of Hereford, died 46 E. 3. having married Joan, daughter of Richard earl of Arundel, by whom he left two daughters coheiresses, Eleanor, the wife of Thomas of Woodstock, youngest son of king Edward the Third; and Mary, married to Henry earl of Derby, who was afterwards king Henry the Fourth.

Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester, held the manor of Wheatenhurst in right of his wife. He was smothered under a feather bed at Calais, 21 R. 2. and left Humphry, his son, who dying without issue, Anne Plantagenet, his only sister, was his heir. She was married first to Thomas earl of Stafford, who dying before consummation, she was afterwards married, by special licence from the king, to Edmond earl of Stafford, younger brother of Thomas, who died seized of Wheatenhurst 4 H. 4. In which name and family this manor continued for a long time, and of whom there is a further account under Thornbury.

King James the First granted the manor of Wheatenhurst to Peter Vanlore, merchant, and William Blake, scrivener, in the third year of his reign, and recites in the grant, that it came to the crown by the attainder of sir Walter Raleigh, and that it formerly belonged to the abbey of Gloucester.

William Bayly, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, in whose family it continued till another William Bayly, esq; conveyed it to sir Samuel Eckley, whose brother and heir Mr. Eckley was lord of it at the beginning of this century. It passed afterwards to lord Middleton and Alexander Colston, esq; in right of their wives, and has lately been purchased by Nathaniel Peach, esq; who is the present lord of the manor. His arms are, Gules, three martlets between two chevrons argent.

There is another manor in the parish, which formerly belonged to Richard Bird, who died in 1612. Thomas Lloyd, esq; descended from the family of that name in Monmouthshire, married Sybil, daughter and heiress of Richard Bird of Whitminster, and with her had this estate. Thomas Lloyd, son of Thomas, succeeded his father, and married Rebecca, daughter of Thomas Hinson, of Tavistock in Devonshire. Thomas Lloyd, son and heir of the last Thomas, married Elizabeth, daughter of sir Theobald Gorges, of Ashley in Wiltshire; but dying without issue, in 1658, George Lloyd, his brother and heir, became seized of this estate, and marrying Anne, daughter of Giles Pain, of Rodborough, died in the year 1703. George Lloyd, esq; son of George, married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of William Bayly of Frethorn, and was proprietor of this manor, and of a good house near the church, at the beginning of the present century. The house and estate now belong to Richard-Owen Cambridge, esq; whose arms are, Argent, on a pile gules a cross croset of the field, between six crosses crosetts fitchy sable.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is an impropriation, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth in the whole about 50*l.* a year to the curate. Mr. Jasper Selwyn is patron and impropriator, and Mr. Jasper Selwyn, his son, is the present incumbent. The impropriation, now worth 80*l.* a year, antiently belonged to the priory of Bruton in Somersetshire. The abbey of Troars in Normandy had the advowson of the church of Wheatenhurst 56 H. 3.

The living was formerly valued at only 8*l.* a year, but it has been augmented by the queen’s bounty, and by the donation of Mrs. Dorothy Bayly, a special dispensation from the pope, she was married to Richard Beauchamp earl of Warwick, who, in her right, died seized of the manor of Whittington 15 H. 6. Isabel died 18 H. 6. and some short time before her death, levied a fine of this manor to the use of her last will. She left issue Henry and Anne; Henry was afterwards created duke of Warwick, and his issue dying without issue, Anne his sister was heir to his vast estate. She was married to Richard Nevill, the great earl of Warwick, and surviving him, was prevailed with by king Henry the Seventh, to convey this manor, amongst many others, to himself, 3 H. 7. A more particular account of this family may be seen under Tewkesbury.

King Henry the Seventh granted this manor to the Cottons, and Richard Cotton, esq; died seized of it, and of the advowson of Whittington, 3 Mar. John Cotton had livery of the same, and died 42 Eliz. William Cotton, the last male heir of that family, was lord of the manor in the year 1608. The heir female was married to sir John Denham, author of that excellent poem, called Cooper's Hill. He was surveyor general of the works and buildings to king Charles the Second, and left two daughters coheiresses; one married to sir Thomas Price, who died without issue, whereby her inheritance devolved to her sister, who was married to sir William Morley, of Halnaker in the county of Suffex, nephew to the reverend prelate of that name, bishop of Winchester.

Sir William Morley likewise left two daughters coheiresses, of whom one died unmarried, whereby Mary, the surviving sister, was intitled to the whole estate. She was married to James earl of Derby, who, in her right, was lord of the manor of Whittington.

The manor passed afterwards to lord Conway, of whom it was purchased by the late Thomas Tracy, esq; whose widow, Mrs. Tracy, is the present lady of the manor, and proprietor of several other good estates in this county.

William Bradehurst and Alice his wife held lands in Whittington 2 R. 2. John Tayler was also seized of lands in Whittington 9 R. 2. Lands in Whittington, a water mill, and the advowson of the rectory, which formerly belonged to the Despencers, and to the earls of Warwick, were granted to Thomas Stroud, Walter Earl, and James Paget, 36 H. 8. Other lands called Hill, Colemore, Plots, and Colewell, and a wood, called Hall-wood, belonged formerly to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to William Berners 36 H. 8.

HAMLET. Syreford is a hamlet in this parish, containing about six or seven houses. Lands called Wally in this hamlet, formerly belonged to a religious foundation, and pay only 4s. a year in lieu of tithes.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 100*l.* a year, to which Mrs. Tracy has the presentation.

Twenty-two acres inclosed, and about seventy in the common fields, belong to the glebe.

The church is small, with an aisle on the south side, built by the Cottons, and a low wooden turret in the middle.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

Under an arch, between the chancels, are the figures in stone, larger than life, of two knights in armour, lying with their legs across. One is distinguished with a large shield upon the left arm, bearing six lozenges Or, 3, 2, 1. And there is another figure of a female, lying along in the south aisle, distinguished by the same arms.

Upon a plate of brass, fixed to a flat stone, under the figures of a man and woman, with two children between them, it is thus engraven :

HERE LYETH THE BODDYES OF RICHARD COTON ESQUIER AND MARGARET COTON HIS WIFE. HE DECEASED THE NINE AND TWENTYTH DAYE OF MAYE IN THE THYRD AND FOWRTH YEARE OF THE REYGN OF KINGE PHILLYPP AND QUEENE MARYE ANNO DOMINI 1556 AND THE SAYD MARGARET DECEASED THE DAYE OF MAY IN THE FYRST YEARE OF THE REYGN OF OVR SOVERAINE LADYE QUEENE ELIZABETH ANNO DOMINI 1560.

Note, The arms are torn off this stone.

There

There is an elegant marble monument, consisting of a vase supporting an urn, with proper decorations, in the south chancel, and upon the front is the following memorial :

To the beloved Memory
Of Thomas Tracy, Esq^r of Sandywell in Gloucestershire, Youngest Son of John Tracy, Esq^r of Stanway
in the said County, who deceas'd June 24th, 1770, Aged 53.
This excellent Man was distinguished in Private Life

By an uncommon Sweetness of Temper and Benevolence of Heart, and possessed in an eminent degree those social and amiable Virtues
Which not only procured him the Love of his Relations and intimate Friends,
But the universal Esteem of all
His Acquaintance.

He was unanimously Chosen by his Country, in two succeeding Parliaments, to represent the County of Gloucester;

Which important trust he discharged with the strictest Integrity
and

Disinterested Zeal.

He married Mary only Daughter and Heiress of Sir William Dodwell, Kn^t.

And had by her one only Son, Dodwell Tracy,
A Youth (from his amiable Disposition and distinguished Parts) of the most promising Hopes.

But these, alas! were blasted when in the flower of his Age he was snatched

From the Arms of his Afflicted Parents and Friends, Jan: 11, 1768, at Paris, on his return from his Travels, in the 21st Year of his Age.

Mary their lamenting Wife and Mother placed this Mournful Testimony of Her tenderest Affection to her Dear Husband and her beloved Son.

Their Remains are deposited in the Tracy Vault at Stanway.

Upon a shield placed at top of the monument, are these arms, Quarterly, 1st and 4th Or, on a bend voided gules an escallop sable.
2. Azure, a cross crosslet fitchy Or. 3. Sable, a bend ermine cotized flory Or.—Over all a scutcheon of pretence, Quarterly, 1st and 4th Vert, a fess between three roses argent, for Dodwell. 2d and 3d Argent, three bars gules, a canton of the second.

Wickham, or Child's Wickham.

THIS is a small parish, in the hundred of Kiftsgate, four miles distant south-eastward from Evesham in Worcestershire, near six westward from Campden, and twenty-two north-eastward from Gloucester.

It is situated on the great road leading from Worcester to London, and was antiently called Wicuene, and afterwards Child's Wickham, from the Childs of Northwick, who, it seems, were once lords of this manor.

It lies in the Vale, yet the greater part is arable;
and the common fields were inclosed by authority of parliament, about the year 1765. A small brook, rising in two heads, one in Broadway, the other in Buckland, runs from hence into the Avon above Evesham; but the parish is chiefly distinguished in natural history by a salt spring, which not being work'd, is of no immediate advantage.

Here is a custom from time immemorial, for the lord of the manor to give a certain quantity of malt to brew ale to be given away at Whitsuntide, and a certain quantity of flour to make cakes;
every one who keeps a cow sends curd, others plumbs, sugar, and flour; and the payers to church and poor contribute 6*d.* each towards furnishing out an entertainment, to which every poor person of the parish who comes, has, with a quart of ale, a cake, a piece of cheese, and a cheesecake.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Robert Dispensator holds Wicuene, in Grete-
' stane hundred. There are ten hides taxed.
' Balduin held it. There are three plow-tillages
' in demean, and thirty-two villeins, and ten bor-
' dars, with twelve plow-tillages. There is one ' servus, and two mills of 10*s.* and ten acres of ' meadow. In Wincelcumbe is one burges's pay' ing 16*d.* It was worth 12*l.* and is now worth
' 16*l.*' Domesday, p. 76.

' The church of Wincelcumbe holds one hide
' in Wicquenn.' Ibid. p. 71.

The above Robert Dispensator, or Despencer, came into England with William the conqueror, to whom he was steward, and had by his gift the manor of Wicuene in Gloucestershire, besides four in Warwickshire, fifteen in Lincolnshire, and seventeen in Leicestershire, of all which he was possessed at the time of the general survey, as appears by the record just quoted.

Sir Robert Atkyns says, ' It is very probable ' that the Peches were afterwards owners of this
' manor; for king Edward the Second confirmed
' a grant of sir Gilbert Peche, of lands in Wick-
' ham, to the abbey of Leystone in Suffolk, 6 E. 2.
' The confirmation doth not indeed mention in ' what county Wickham lay, but since other lands
' in Glostershire are named with it, and that the ' Peches were owners of very considerable pos' sessions in this county, it is the more probable.'

Upon this passage I observe, that there is good reason to believe that the Peches were not owners of the Wickham of which I am now treating, for the sheriff returned that the earl of Warwick [William de Beauchamp] was lord of Wickwane in Holford and Greston hundred 9 E. 1. The escheator's inquisition found, that his son Guido de Bello Campo, earl of Warwick, died 9 E. 2. seized of the manor of Wikewayne, which he held of the king in capite, but by what service the jurors were ignorant; of 360 acres of arable land there, at 4*d.* an acre; of sixteen also granted to Thomas West, lord La Warr, the like privileges of a weekly market, and of two annual fairs, in the twenty-fourth year of his reign; and I have seen an Inspeximus and confirmation of the last-mentioned grant, dated July 4, in the fourth year of the reign of king Charles the First. It was shewn me by the mayor, as a charter of incorporation, for the town is a borough by prescription, like Wotton and Berkeley, with a mayor and twelve aldermen, who have the mace carried before them on particular days. The profits of the market and fairs belong to the mayor, and such as have served that office are deemed aldermen.

The market day is on Monday, and there are two fairs, one on Lady-day, the other on the second of July. But the market is unfrequented, and the town declining. There are two courts, one held for the borough, the other for the tithing, or foreign, which have separate constables.

The clothing business was probably settled here very early, for Leland, in the time of king Henry the Eighth, calls it a praty clothinge tounlet, and the manufacture has continued here ever since, with various success; but is at present in a very languishing condition, there being only one master, who does but little in it. However, the women and children have usually full employment in spinning for the clothiers about Stroud and Chalford.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

‘Humphry the chamberlain holds Wichem, in Bacheftanes hundred. There are four hides. Three free men of Brietric the son of Algar held it for three manors in the time of king Edward, and they could go where they would. There were three plow-tillages in demean, and nine villeins, and fourteen bordars, with nine plow-tillages. There are five servi, and twenty acres of meadow, and six furlongs of wood. It is worth and was worth 12 lib. These two vills, Actune and Wichem, the queen gave to Humphry.’ Domesday p. 79.

John earl of Gloucester, brother to king Richard the First, gave this manor to John la Warre, and afterwards confirmed it to him when he was king, 8 Joh. to hold of that king by the service of half a knight. Jordan la Warre was son and heir to John. He often joined in rebellion against king John and king Henry the Third; but prudently took care to make his peace. John la Warre succeeded Jordan in this manor, and was himself succeeded by Roger la Warre, who held it 9 E. 1. and purchased a weekly market in Warre-Wike, on Tuesday; a yearly fair on Whit-monday, and the two following days; and free warren within the manor, in the 13th year of the same reign; and all these privileges were allowed him in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, 15 E. 1. He married Clarice, eldest daughter and coheirs of John lord de Tregoz, of Herefordshire, an eminent baron, after whose death, this Roger la Warre had summons as a baron to parliament, 22 E. 1. He died 14 E. 2. seized of the manors of Wyke-warre and Bristlington, and the escheator's inquisition found, that Wyke-warre was then held of Thomas ap Adam, son of John ap Adam, as of the manor of Castleharpetre, by the service of half a knight's fee. John lord la Warre, son of Roger, died 21 E. 3. and (John his eldest son dying before him) was succeeded by his grandson Roger lord la Warre, who was eminent in the reign of king Edward the Third, whom he attended in his wars in France; and being present at the battle of Poictiers, Sept. 19, 1356, when the French king and his son, the earl of Tankerville, sir Jaques of Bourbon, the earls of Ponthieu and Eue, with many other noblemen, were taken, he was one of those knights who challenged the French king as their prisoner, and this sir Roger had the crampet, or chape, of that monarch's sword assigned him for his share in that exploit, and he and his family afterwards bore it, as an honourable augmentation, in their armorial bearings. He and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of the manor and advowson of Wickwar to the use of themselves in taille, the remainder to John his son, 28 E. 3. and he died in the 44th year of the same reign. John lord De la Warre, son of Roger, died without issue 22 R. 2. and was succeeded by his brother Thomas lord de la Warre, rector of Manchester, who levied a fine of this manor to the use of himself in taille, the remainder to Thomas West in taille, the remainder to Reginald West, son of Thomas West, 12 H. 4. and died without issue, 4 H. 6.

Reginald West, son of sir Thomas West by Joan the daughter and heiress of the last Roger lord de la Warre, succeeded to this manor in virtue of the before-mentioned entail, (notwithstanding John Griffin was next heir male at law) and had livery of the lands of his mother's inheritance. Petitioning the same year to have place and precedency among the barons as lord de la Warre, he had summons to parliament accordingly from 5 to 28 H. 6. and died in the 29th year of that reign, seized of Wyke-Warr, leaving Richard lord de la Warr, his eldest son and heir, who died 16 E. 4. Thomas lord de la Warr, eldest son of Richard, bore several important trusts under king Henry the Seventh, with whom he was in great favour. He made his will Oct. 8, 1524, and died soon after, as appears by the probat, which bears date Feb. 12, 1525. Thomas lord de la Warr, eldest son of Thomas by his first wife, had a grant of the abbey of Whorwell in Hampshire, which afterwards became the seat of his family. He died without issue, seized of the manor of Wickwarre, and of the advowson of the church, Sep. 25, 1554.

William West, son of sir George West, who was brother by the father to the last-mentioned

Thomas

Thomas lord de la Warr, was bred up in his uncle's house as his presumptive heir, and impatient of delay, attempted to dispatch him by poison; which being complained of in parliament, 2 E. 6. he was disabled to succeed him in honour and estate, and had only an allowance of 350*l.* a year. But behaving with distinguished valour in the English army at the siege of St. Quintin, in 1557, and carrying himself well for several years afterwards, he received the honour of knighthood at Hampton-court, Feb. 5, 1568; and obtained a new creation to the title of lord de la Warr, and by act of parliament, which passed on the 12th of March following, had full restitution in blood, and became possessed of this manor. He died 38 Eliz. and was succeeded by his son Thomas lord de la Warr, who, by petition to the queen in parliament, was restored to the precedency of his ancestors, 39 Eliz. and dying in the 44th year of that reign, left Thomas lord de la Warr, his son and heir. This lord was constituted captain-general of the colonies planting in Virginia, whither he went with three ships, in 1609, and was very active in forming settlements and making discoveries; whereby his health was greatly impaired, and he died at sea, in his return home, June 7, 1618.

Wickwar was afterwards purchased by sir Robert Ducie, from whom it descended, like Tortworth, and lord Ducie is the present lord of the manor.

HAMLET. Bagstone is a hamlet in this parish, which is supposed to have given name to the hundred called Bacheftane hundred in Domesday-book, and now comprized in the hundreds of Thornbury and Grumbald's-ash. The abbey of Kingswood was seized of the manor of Bageston 12 H. 4. and Matthew Hale, esq; was lord of it at the beginning of this century.

Andrew Sudenham granted an estate in Wike-warre to John and Thomas Howes, at the annual rent of two pounds of wax, to be paid at the altar of St. Mary, in the north part of the church of Wickwar, on the feast of the blessed virgin; and one pound of wax, to be paid at the altar of St. Lawrence, in the same church, on the feast of that saint, 12 E. 3. and the original grant is now in the hands of Mr. Rudge of this place.

John Newton, citizen of Bristol, and Joan his wife, levied a fine of lands in Wickwar to the use of themselves in taille, 8 H. 5. and John Newton, son of John, levied a fine of lands in the same place, to the use of William More, 28 H. 6.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth 300*l.* a year. The reverend Mr. Chester is patron and incumbent.

The church is a handsome structure, dedicated to St. Mary, with an aisle on the north side, and a well built tower at the west end. It stands on an eminence, at some distance from the town, and is said to have been erected by one Woolsworth, an eminent clothier of this place, who likewise built a house at the pool in the bottom near the church. Against the east end of this house, which now belongs to Mr. Jobbins, is the figure of St. John the Baptist, in an erect posture, pointing with his left hand towards the church, and over him this inscription in antient characters:

Benefactions.

In 1655, John Wolford gave 4*l.* a year to the use of the poor, charged on a ground called the Moors, in the parish of Charfield. Mrs. Elizabeth Spurt gave 40*s.* yearly, one part for a sermon, the other for the poor. Mr. Henry Cann gave 3*l.* a year to the poor; and John Cox gave a house in the borough, and 10*l.* to the same use. — Prout gave a field called Cook's Leaze, worth 4*l.* a year; and Mr. William Hobbs, clothier, gave a rent charge of 30*s.* a year out of the Bell at Wickwar, both to buy clothing for the poor. — Yeates gave 60*l.* that the interest of it may be applied to the apprenticing out poor boys to London. And Mrs. Elizabeth Hicks gave 12*l.* to buy a branch for the church, and the interest of 20*l.* to be given to the poor.

But the principal benefactor was Mr. Alexander Hofea, who, by his will, in 1684, established a free grammar-school in this borough, and endowed it with a very good house in Gray's inn lane, in Holbourn, London. He also gave 600*l.* to build a school house for the master to live in. The master receives 28*l.* a year. There is another free-school in this place, for teaching poor children to read and write, endowed with 10*l.* a year, and a house for the master. The corporation are trustees to both schools, and appoint the masters. — Mr. Hofea had been a poor boy apprenticed to a weaver in the town, and upon a particular day in the year, when it was the custom with the inhabitants to make a dish, called Whitepot, his mistress sent him with a panfull to the bakehouse. Poor Hofea had the misfortune to break the pan, which so terrified him that he durst not return to his master, but set out immediately for London, where he was prosperous, and acquired a large fortune.

At the beginning of this century, there were 220 houses, and about 1000 inhabitants, whereof 36 were freeholders; yearly births 27, and burials 24. Atkyns. Since that time the town has lost its trade, and the present inhabitants are computed to be about 850.

W I D F O R D.

THIS is a small parish, in the hundred of Slaughter, two miles distant east from Burford in Oxfordshire, ten south-east from Stow, and thirty east from Gloucester.

It is one of those instances of the inconvenient and unnatural allotment of parishes to hundreds and counties, which I have had frequent occasion to mention, and serves to mark the capricious humour even of the greatest and wisest of men. For what can be more absurd than to appropriate this parish to Gloucestershire, when it lies some miles distant from any part of it, and is totally surrounded by Oxfordshire?

The river Winruth is of considerable breadth here, and is famous for fine trout and cray fish. It has a ford through it, which gave name to the place, for what is Widford, but the Wide ford?

The parish consists chiefly of arable lands and wood lands. A house, called Cap's Lodge, tho' lying within the boundaries of the forest of Whichwood, belongs to Widford, where, by antient custom, the inhabitants of the town of Burford assemble, on Whitsunday yearly, and chuse a lord and lady. They likewise claim the privilege of cutting wood, and of hunting with dogs, and killing deer in the forest; but the latter is compounded for, by delivering to them two bucks annually, on a certain day, with which the principal inhabitants of that town make an entertainment.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

' Saint Oswald of Glouuecester held Widiforde, in Berniton hundred. In the time of king Edward there were two hides, and two plow-tillages in demean, and four villeins, and three bordars, with two plow-tillages. There are four servi, and eight acres of meadow, and a mill of 10*s.* In the time of king Edward it was worth 40*s.* and is now worth 60*s.* Rannulf holds it of Saint Oswald. It has the same owner now as it had in king Edward's time.' Domesday, p. 70.

How, or at what time, the manor passed from the priory of St. Oswald, does not appear; but it was in lay hands 9 E. 1. when the sheriff returned into the exchequer the names of all the vills in his county, with their respective proprietors, certifying that Wideforde was a vill in the hundred of Salmoneburye, and that Robert de was lord of it.

It was some time afterwards vested in the Lovels, who resided at a place, called Minster-Lovel, under Whichwood, where considerable remains of their mansion house are still to be seen. John lord Lovel died seized of Widford and Little Risington, 4 E. 4. and Joan his wife, the sister of William viscount Beaumont, was endowed with this manor, and died in the 6th year of the same reign. Francis lord Lovel, son of John, was in great favour with king Richard the Third, and a partaker with him in his wicked practices, and was therefore advanced to be lord chamberlain. His ill behaviour and undeserved preferment drew on him the odium of the people, so that he was attainted 1 H. 7. for divers misdemeanors; and entering the kingdom in arms, was slain near Newark, 3 H. 7. leaving no issue.

Widford was granted to Jasper duke of Bedford, uncle to the king, 1 H. 7. but he died without issue, in the 11th year of the same reign. It was afterwards mortgaged by the crown, together with other considerable estates, to Paul Withepool, and other citizens of London, 36 H. 8.

The manor came afterwards to the Johnsons, for Herman Johnson, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608. Out of that name and family it passed to the Fettiplaces, about the close of the last century. Sir Charles Fettyplace, baronet, was owner of Widford when sir Robert Atkyns wrote his History; and Robert Fettyplace, esq; is the present lord of the manor, and has a seat, with a large large deer-park, and a good estate in the parish. His arms are, Argent, two chevrons gules.

Henry de Berkeley and Annabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Widford, to the use of Walter de Eschale and Alice his wife, 51 H. 3. but this must be understood of Widford in Berkeley, and not of this place. John Martyn and Margaret his wife levied a fine of lands in Widford, to the use of William Conbrook, 22 R. 2. and William Conbrook levied a fine of the same lands, to the use of John Faellore de Filking, 6 H. 4.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 30*l.* a year, and in the gift of Mr. Fettyplace. The earl of Warwick formerly presented to this church.

There is no house nor glebe for the minister.

The advowson of the rectory of Widford, and a toft of land which lately belonged to the priory of St. John the Evangelist in Burford, were granted to Edmond Herman, 37 H. 8.

The church is small, without any steeple.

There were 7 houses in the parish, and about 36 inhabitants, 2 of whom were freeholders; yearly births 1, burials 1. Atkyns. I think there are now only 3 houses, and about 20 inhabitants.

THIS is a small parish, in the upper division of Kiftsgate hundred, about three miles west from Chipping Campden, five south-eastward from Evesham, and twenty-six north-eastward from Gloucester.

The village is seated in the Vale, and lies under the west side of those hills which every where mark the limits of the Cotswold country with a bold and well defined outline. On the summit of the hill above the village, but within the parish, there is a large camp, inclosing about sixty acres of ground, supposed to have been formed in the time of the Danish ravages, and it still continues pretty perfect.

From this camp there is a fine bird's-eye view of the vale below, intersected with beautiful hedge-rows, and scattered with villages and farm houses. The river Avon meanders through the middle of the vale, and the town of Evesham at an agreeable distance, presents itself as the principal object, with the Breedon and Malvern hills in the back ground to close the view. This camp and prospect principally distinguish Willerfey; but in prosecuting my inquiry after curiosities, I was informed by the rector, as a matter worthy notice, that there is an estate here, subject to a rent-charge, proportioned by the rate of the land-tax, payable to a certain family as a recompence (tho' an inadequate one) for preserving the life of king Charles the Second, by hiding him in the oak. When the land-tax is at three shillings in the pound, the annuity, or payment, is four guineas.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

At the time of the Norman conquest, Willerfey belonged to the abbey of Evesham, according to Domesday; but sir Robert Atkyns has represented it as being then the property of the church of Winchcombe, which error I apprehend he was led into by using an imperfect copy of Domesday, as already observed under Broadwell. The following is a literal translation of the record:

'The same church [St. Mary of Evesham] holds Willerfei, in Widelei hundred. There are eight hides, and one at Wiquenna [Child's Wickham]. There are three plow-tillages in demean, and sixteen villeins, and four bordars, and a priest, with six plow-tillages. There are two servi, and a little meadow. It was worth 4*l.* and is now worth 100*s.*' Domesday, p. 72.

The abbey of Evesham purchased a charter of free warren in this and many other manors, 35 H. 3. The same house was seized of the manor 9 E. 1. and their right to court leet and free warren was allowed, in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto, in the 15th year of that reign. Sir Thomas West and Alice his wife held Willerfey 10 R. 2. as tenants to the abbey of Evesham, in which year sir Thomas died; and the same monastery continued seized of this manor 'till the general dissolution of religious houses.

The manor of Willerfey, and the demean lands thereof, lately belonging to the abbey of Evesham, were granted to John Cock and John Wrath, 36 H. 8. and the manor and the advowson of the rectory were granted to sir John Bourn, secretary of state to king Philip and queen Mary, and to Dorothy his wife, 5 Mar. and the grant to them recites that the lands formerly belonged to the abbey of Evesham.

The manor was vested in Charles Kettleby, esq; in the year 1608. Edward Winnington, esq; son of sir Francis Winnington, of Worcestershire, attorney-general to king Charles the Second, was owner of it at the beginning of this century; and sir Edward Winnington is the present lord of the manor of Willerfey.

John Dereham died seized of a messuage and a yard land called Parson's, and of an estate called Spragges's, and of several other lands, closes, and common of pasture in Willerfey, 43 Eliz. leaving William Dereham, his son and heir, twenty-eight years old. Escheat. Inquis. 2 Jac.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 150*l.* a year. The reverend reverend Mr. William Scott is patron and incumbent. The patronage formerly belonged to the abbey of Evesham.

The whole lordship contained about thirty-six yard lands. The impropiator had the great tithes of twenty-eight of them, paying the rector eight bushels of wheat, eight of barley, and eight of beans; and the rector had the tithes of the remaining eight yard lands. But in the year 1767, the common fields and waste lands were inclosed by act of parliament, when Anne George, the impropiatrix, had 145 acres allotted her in lieu of her tithes, and the rector 83 acres in lieu of his glebe and tithes.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is built in the form of a cross, with a tower in the middle; and the founder of it is supposed to lie buried in a niche in the chancel.

About the beginning of this century, there were 56 houses in the parish, and about 250 inhabitants, 35 of whom were freeholders; the yearly births were 5, and the burials 5. Atkyns. I am not particularly informed of the state of population at present.

WINCHCOMBE.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Kiftgate, ten miles distant south-west from Campden, nine eastward from Tewkesbury, and sixteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

The river Iborne, which rises in Charlton Abbats, receives the Postlip stream, and several springs out of Sudley manor, and taking its course northward through this parish, empties itself into the Avon a little below Evesham in Worcestershire. It produces some trout and small fish, particularly eels and gudgeons.

It is remarkable that tobacco was first planted in England in this parish, and yielded a considerable profit to the inhabitants, until they were restrained by act of parliament.

The parish consists chiefly of rich meadow and pasture, and is pretty extensive. It has a market town seated on the west side of it, which was antiently called Winchelcumbe, from the Saxon wincel, a corner, and comb, a valley, because it lay in a nook, or corner of the vale, encompassed with hills, except to the north-eastward.

The town was formerly of much greater account than at present. It derived its consequence from an abbey founded in the eighth century, by Kenulfe king of Mercia, who had a palace here; for the founding of religious houses, in the early times of Christianity, occasioned a great resort of people, and had pretty much the same effect on population in some places as the increase of trade had afterwards in others.

There was a small territory adjoining to the town, and dependent upon it, which is said to have been a sheriffdom, or county, in the Anglo-Saxon time, and so to have continued 'till the reign of king Canute, whose vice-roy Edric, surnamed Streona, divested it of its independence, and adjoined it to Gloucestershire. But after the conquest the town was a distinct hundred, as it is expressly mentioned in Domesday; and it is remarkable, that the account of it stands in that record between the particulars of some manors and estates in Wales, and those in Gloucestershire, as though the borough was not, even at that time, laid to the county at large. It is also observable, that it is called a borough in Domesday, when no other towns in the county, except Gloucester and Bristol, were so dignified. The following is a translation from that record:

' In the time of king Edward, the borough of Winchelcumbe paid a farm of 6 lib. of which earl Herald had the third penny, that is, 40 sol. It paid 20 lib. afterwards with the whole hundred of its vill. Durand the sheriff added 100 sol. and Roger de Ivrei 60 sol. Now the three hundreds being joined pay 28 lib. of which 20 are in Ora. Domesday, p. 67.

I suppose the 100s. and the 60s. so added as above, were paid on account of the two additional hundreds, but the record does not mention what they were, nor can I form any probable conjecture about them.

There were three burgages in the town, of 40 den. appendant to the manor of Oxendone; one appendant to Aldritone; one, paying 3 sol. held by the church of Wirecestre; one paying 18 den. held by the church of Hereford; two paying 10 den. belonging to the church of St. Dennis at Paris; William Goizenboded held one burgage; Roger de Laci held three of 32 den. Roger de Lueri held ten, paying 65 den. Robert Dispensator held one of 16 den. and Henry de Ferrers held two paying 16 den. These make together twenty-five burgages, set down in Domesday among the possessions of the several before-mentioned proprietors.

In its most flourishing state, the town was large, and had a wall built round it, as appears by the Legend, or Life of St. Kenelm, and as Leland testifies,* who saw the appearance of the town wall when he visited this place in the time of king Henry the Eighth. He collected some particulars of it from one Avery, the parson of Dene, who informed him, that Winchcombe was oppidum muro cinctum, and that a great part of the town stood on the side of the river next to Sudley-castle, where there were no houses in Leland's time; and that it extended on the other side above the church, 'where the Farme of Corwedene is.' From this account it is evident that the river Isborne, which waters the foot of the present town, ran through the middle of the old one, so that of old tyme, says my author, b it was a mighty large Towne. It was defended by a fortress, or castle, which stood near the south side of the present parish church, where are now some cottages and gardens; and was called the Ivy Castle, as appeared from writings in Winchcombe abbey, perhaps because the walls of it were covered with ivy, which grows very commonly in the decay'd walls of old buildings. But the castle was not standing in Leland's time, nor had the last prior of Winchcombe ever seen it, having only heard^c that there was such a fort which stood about the east-north-east part of the borough.

* His words are these: 'The towne of certaine, as it appeareth in divers places, and especially by south, towards

Sudeley-Castle, was walled; and the Legend, or Life of St. Kenelm doth testifie the same.' Itin. 2d Edit. Hearne, V. 4. of

This is all we know of the antient state of the town, and perhaps all that can now be collected about it. Richard Kidderminster, the last abbat except one, wrote a history of the foundation of his abbey, &c. but his book was unfortunately burnt by the fire of London, in the year 1666, which accident has most likely prevented many historical matters concerning it from coming to our knowledge; so that we can neither fix the æra of its greatest prosperity, nor the time of its first decline. We find that in Leland's time it had fallen much to decay; and as it rose to its eminence by means of the monastery, so after the suppression of that house, it ran still more rapidly to ruin, as I conclude from the preamble to queen Elizabeth's grant of a fair and market, which recites, that by the relation of Dorothy the lady Chandos, and the humble petition of the inhabitants of the borough or town of Winchcombe, the said borough appeared to be fallen into so great ruin and decay, that its inhabitants were not able to support and repair it for the great poverty that reigned amongst them.

It now consists of two streets, crossing each other. One leads northwards towards Tewkesbury and Evesham; the other, which is by much the most considerable, leads on the east side to Campden; on the west towards Cheltenham and Gloucester. There is no great road through it, and consequently it is but little frequented, except by those who have immediate concerns with the inhabitants. It is a borough by prescription, governed by two bailiffs, and their assistants, not exceeding ten in number, and out of those twelve the bailiffs are taken by rotation, and annually at the court-leet are sworn into their office.

Queen Elizabeth, by letters patent, granted a fair to be holden within the borough, upon the eve, upon the feast, and upon the morrow after the feast of St. Mark; and a market upon Tuesday in every week. But there are now two annual fairs, held on the 6th of May, and the 28th of July, and the market is on Saturday. As the town is seated in a rich vale, the fairs are usually well supply'd with cattle and draught horses; but the market is very inconsiderable. The corporation have the tolls, which usually let at about 10*l.* a year.

Of the ABBEY.

In the year 787, king Offa built a nunnery here, and in 798, Kenulph king of Mercia laid the foundation of a stately abbey in the place of the nunnery, wherein three hundred monks of the order of St. Benedict were maintained on its first foundation. But it is supposed that not more than forty or fifty of them were in holy orders, the rest working to supply the priests and themselves in all necessaries that might be wanting.

This monastery was dedicated with great pomp to St. Mary, and consecrated by Wulfrid archbishop of Canterbury, and by twelve other bishops, in the presence of king Kenulph, and of Cuthred king of Kent, and of Sired king of the West Saxons, and of ten dukes, and other noblemen; king Kenulph, in honour of the solemnity, releasing at the high altar Eadbert king of Kent, whom he had then lately taken prisoner. At that time, besides the rich presents which he gave to the noblemen, the king gave a pound weight of silver to all such who had no lands, and a mark in gold to all priests, and a shilling to every monk, and distributed many other valuables to the people.

King Kenulph died about the year 820, in the 24th of his reign, and was buried in the eastern part of this abbey church, leaving two daughters, Quendrid and Burgmill, and an infant son Kenelme, but seven years old, whom he committed to the care of his daughter Quendrid. But she conspired with Askebert, the young king's tutor and governor, to murder him, that she might succeed to the kingdom. The wicked Askebert accordingly taking him into a wood called Clenth, cut off his head in an obscure place between two hills, where a white cow frequented, and was therefore called the White Cow's Valley.

What follows in our antient historians^d concerning the discovery of this murder and treason, favours too much of the marvellous to gain credit with many of the present age. I shall, however, give the substance of it for the reader's entertainment. They relate, that the murder was for a short time unknown, 'till it was miraculously discovered at Rome, where a dove flying over the altar of St. Peter, let a parchment drop, on which it was thus written:

In Clent in Cowberche bed bewevyd lyth Kenelme.

Which being in the English language, was not understood by any except an Englishman that was very luckily present, and interpreted the writing to the pope, who by his apostolical letters discovered the murder to the English princes. Multitudes of people are said to have been present at the taking up of the body of the infant king, and a contention arising between the inhabitants of Gloucestershire and Worcestershire which should have his relicks, it was at last determined that he should be buried at Winchcombe: And whilst the corps was bringing into the town, accompanied by the clergy and laity, singing holy hymns, the wicked Quendred stood looking out at her window, and with a loud voice sung the 109th psalm, to disturb the celebration of her brother's funeral: But when she came to the 19th verse, where are these words, Let it thus happen from the Lord unto my enemies, and unto those who speak evil against my soul, her eye balls instantly dropped out of her head, and besmeared the place with blood, which, it is said, was to be seen many ages afterwards.

^c Ibid. V. 4. p. 71.

This is the story of king Kenelm, who was canonized for a faint upon the account of these miracles, and his relicks brought infinite riches to the monastery. What reader will not abhor the cruel murder, and at the same time detest the lying tale of the miraculous discovery, invented by the monks, to raise a superstitious veneration for Kenelm, and so to excite many to visit their abbey, and make offerings at his tomb!

In process of time, this monastery became a college of Seculars. It suffered severely by the Danish ravages, and was in a very ruinous condition in the reign of king Edgar, when archbishop Oswald rebuilt it, and restored it to great splendor. It was then consecrated anew to the virgin Mary and St. Kenelm, whose story the bishop cultivated to the great enriching of the monastery.

In the fourth year of king William the Second, a vehement lightning shook the abbey, and the roof and steeple of the church, and threw down the crucifix and image of the virgin Mary.

This was a mitred and perral abbey, and the first summons of the abbat of Winchcombe to parliament, which is now to be found on record, was in the year 1265, 49 H. 3. Dugd. Summons.

Catalogue of Abbats, taken from Mr. Willis's History of Mitred Parliamentary Abbays.

1. Germanus, prior of Ramsey, was made abbat by king Edgar upon the rebuilding of this abbey, anno 985. After he had governed several years, he retired to Ramsey, and was there buried. The next that I meet with is

2. Godwinus, whom I take to be the same that is called Eadwinus in the Decem Scriptores. He lived in the time of king Canutus, anno 1026, and dying anno 1054, as Florence of Worcester has it, was succeeded by

3. Godricus, called Eadricus, for I take them to be the same in the Decem Scriptores, who anno 1066, opposing the Norman invasion, the conqueror deprived him of his abbatship, and made him close prisoner in Gloucester castle, committing the charge of the monastery to the abbat of Evesham, till such time as he constituted

4. Galandus abbat in his stead. Whose successor

5. Radulphus, dying anno 1095, this abbey was, after two years vacancy, conferred upon

6. Girmundus. He died anno 1122, 4 Id. Junii, and was succeeded by

7. Godefridus, prior of this church. He died anno 1137, and was succeeded by

8. Robert, in whose time this church was burnt. He governed 20 years, and dying anno 1157, was succeeded by

9. Gervase, who died anno 1172, and was succeeded by

10. Henry, prior of Gloucester. He died anno 1184, (or as others anno 1181) and was succeeded by

11. Crispin, prior of this place, who died the same year, and was succeeded anno 1185, by

12. Ralph; to whom succeeded anno 1193,

13. Robert. He ordained that on the morrow after All Souls, viz. on Nov. 3, an hundred people should be relieved here with bread, meat, and drink. He redeemed the manors of Yanworth, Hasleton, Halling, &c. which were mortgaged for above 558*l.* to William, advocate of Bitton. He also laid out 570 marks and 12*s.* sterling in disafforesting the manor of Twining. He also, at a great charge, made an aqueduct to bring spring water in lead pipes from Hanwell to his monastery. He died anno 1220, and was succeeded by

14. Thomas, prior of this place. He died 5 Non. Octob. 1232, and was succeeded the same year by

15. Henry de Tudinton, installed abbat the 29th of the same month. He died anno 1248, and was succeeded the same year by

16. John de Yarmouth, or Ganeworth, as Wharton calls him; or as in the Monasticon Yanworth. He obtained the manor of Dry Marston, worth about 1130 marks, and many other good estates in tithes and farms were added to the church in his time. He died anno 1284, having resigned two years before his death, on account of his age, to

17. Walter de Wickwane; who thereupon commenced abbat anno 1282, and held this dignity till the time of his death, which happened anno 1314. After his decease

18. Tho. de Scirburn became abbat 4 Id. Junii, 1314; who dying the same year

19. Richard de Ydehuri, sacrist, succeeded. He bought the fee of the manor of Rowel for 550*l.* and purchased the farm of Cotes for ever, and the assart lands in Enneston for 100 marks. He resigned anno 1339, and had for his successor, anno 1340,

20. Will. de Shirborn; whole successor

21. Robert de Ippewell, confirmed abbat 24 Sept. 1352; resigning anno 1359,

22. Walter de Winfortune, burser or cellarer of Worcester, was substituted in his stead. This abbat obtained the hundreds of Kiftgate, Holford, and Greteftan, for the abbey. He died June 22, anno 1395, and was succeeded the same year, viz. July 6 following, by

23. Will. Bradely. He died Dec. 28, anno 1422, and was succeeded January 15 following by

24. John Cheltenham; who dying anno 1452, was succeeded by

25. Will. Winchcombe, elected abbat Dec. 21, 1452. He was a considerable benefactor by removing the parish church out of the abbey. He died anno 1474, and was succeeded by

26. John Twinning; who received the benediction Aug. 22, the same year. He was a great promoter of learning, and dying anno 1488,

27. Richard Kederminster was confirmed abbat July 10, 1488. He had been educated in Gloucester college, afterwards called Gloucester hall, and now Worcester college in Oxford, where there was an apartment belonging to this abbey, called Winchcombe Lodging. He was a learned man, and by his wife government, and his encouragement of virtue and good letters, made the monastery flourish so much, that 'twas equal to a little university. Anno 1500, he travelled to Rome, and became afterwards a celebrated preacher. In the year 1515, the privileges of the clergy being attack'd, he preached a remarkable sermon on that account, shewing that 'twas against the law of God, who, by his prophet David says, Touch not my anointed, and do my prophets no harm. He wrote a very valuable history of the foundation of this monastery, and another of the lives of the abbats, beginning with Germanus, anno 7 of King Edgar, anno 988, and reaching down to his own time; which desirable book was unhappily lost in the fire of London, anno 1666. He died anno 1531, and was buried in the abbey church, in beautifying which, &c. he had expended a great deal, and in inclosing it with a stone wall ex quadrato Saxo towards the town. He was on his death succeeded by

were the same with our abbat I cannot be certain; and all I have else to add is, that anno 1553, there was 14*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* remaining in charge in fees, and 46*l.* in annuities, out of the revenues of this late monastery, besides the following pensions:

Richarde Mounslowe, late abbott, 140*l.* and 40 lodes of firewood of Depewode yerelic, by th' assignement of the receiver for the tyme being, John Hancock, prior, sexten and master of the chappell, 8*l.* Will. Craker, sen. and chaunter, Will. Blossom, sen. almener and pitensier, Will. Bradley, hosteler, Richard Freeman, B.D. John Whalley, supprior and fermorer, Walter Cowper, sub-chaunter, Hugh Cowper, A.B. Richard Bidon, kechinner and subcellerer, George Foo, sub sexten, 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* each: Richard Parker, Will. Trentham, Will. Howard, trece prior, Richard Williams, Walter Turbot, chaplen, Richard Banister, keeper of the libery, Christopher Chawnfut, 6*l.* each.

Kenulph, king of Mercia, and his son and successor, Kenelm, were buried in the abbey church; as were Henry Boteler, who covered the body of that church with lead, and several other persons of the family of the Botelers of Sudley. Leland.

There is no description of this abbey church extant, and it is thought that the whole was demolished, very soon after the surrender, by lord Seymour, the first proprietor. Since which time the very scite of the buildings being levelled, and turned into plowed fields, it is only conjectured that they stood on the east side of the present parish church.

See the charters relating to this abbey in the Appendix, N^{os}. 34, 35, 36.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The manor of Winchcombe was vested in the abbey 'till the latter was dissolved, and it was then granted, with the scite of the monastery, to sir Thomas Seymour, 1 E. 6. upon whose attainder, it was granted to William Parr, marquis of Northampton, June 24, 5 E. 6. to be held in free soccage, as of the manor of East Greenwich, without quit-rent. The marquis was attainted 1 Mar. for taking up arms on behalf of the lady Jane Grey, whereby the manor reverted to the crown, which was in the possession of it in the year 1608. It came afterwards into the possession of the Chandos family, who sold it to the Whitmores; and doctor Lloyd, chancellor of the diocese of Worcester, was lord of it at the beginning of this century. He had two daughters coheir-esses, one married to John Soley, of Bewdley in the county of Worcester; the other to John Cox, of Clent in the county of Stafford; who were seized of it in right of their wives. From them it passed, by purchase, to George Pitt, esq; and lord Rivers is the present lord of the manor.

Gilbert de Laci, nephew to Hugh de Laci, temp. Steph. reg. granted to the knights templers three burgages in Winchelcumbe. Dugd. Bar. Roger de Wateville was seized of houses in Winchcombe, and granted them to the master of the knights templers 15 E. 1. who were seized of them 2 E. 3. John Alderwine was seized of one messuage, and 2*s.* rent in Winchcombe 9 R. 2. Richard Bushel was seized of five messuages, three yard-lands, two acres of arable, six acres and a half of meadow, and four acres of pasture, lying in Winchcombe, Coat, and Dry Marston, for the use of the abbey, 15 R. 2. Richard Bushel, for the abbey of Winchcombe, was seized of one messuage, two tofts, three acres of meadow, and of a pasture for eight cows in Winchcombe and Sherbourn, 18 & 20 R. 2. and of lands in Winchcombe 2 H. 4. Richard Chamberlain was also seized of divers tenements, and of a mill in Winchcombe, 3 H. 4. Thomas Bruges and Maud his wife levied a fine of lands in Winchcombe, Gret, and Greton, to the use of John Hanborough, and to the heirs of John and Maud, 36 H. 6. John Garine and Elizabeth his wife levied a fine of lands in Winchcombe, Gret, and Greton, to Thomas Bruges, and others, 2 E. 4.

A toft and lands in Winchcombe, lately belonging to the abbey, were granted to Richard Andrews and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8. Other lands in Winchcombe, which belonged to the abbey, were granted to Richard Andrews and Thomas Hysley, 36 H. 8.

The scite of the monastery of Winchcombe was granted to John lord Chandos 1 Mar. and he dying the same year, Edmond lord Chandos had livery, and died seized thereof Sept. 11, 14 Eliz. Esch.

Dancer's meadow in this parish, formerly belonging to Hayles abbey, was granted to Henry Ruffel and Charles Brockton, 2 Mar.

Two woods, called Depwood and Hemlychoo, in this parish, which belonged to the abbey, were granted to Edmond lord Chandos 1 Eliz. and other lands in the parish, which likewise belonged to the same house, were granted to Robert earl of Leicester, and to John Morley, 24 Eliz.

Tithes in Winchcombe, late the abbey's, were granted to sir Christopher Hatton, 24 Eliz. and other tithes there, which belonged to the abbey, were granted to sir John Fortescue, and Richard Tomlins, 4 Jac. 1.

Two mills in this parish, which had been granted to William marquis of Northampton, were, upon his attainder, granted to Edward Ferrers and Francis Philips, 7 Jac. 1.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

1. Sudley Tenements. This estate belongs to George lord Rivers. It has, for many centuries, had the same proprietors with the manor of Sudley, under which there is a particular account of them.

2. Cotes. This hamlet joins to the borough. The abbey of Winchcombe purchased a charter of free warren in Cotes 35 H. 3. John Cole, and others, granted one messuage, and one yard-land in Cotes near Winchcombe, to the abbey there, 34 E. 1. Richard de Ydebury, who succeeded to the abbacy about the 7 E. 2. purchased for the abbey the farm of Cotes for ever, and the assart lands in Enneston, for one hundred marks. Walwyn Graves, esq; is the present lord of the manor, and holds a court leet, called Gretestan-court, to which several adjoining parishes owe suit.

3. Postlip.

3. Postlip. This hamlet is taken notice of in Domesday, where it is thus recorded :

‘ Ansfrid de Cormeliis holds Poteslepe in Grete-‘ stan hundred. Godric held it. There are three ‘ hides taxed. There are two plow-tillages in ‘ demean, and three villeins, and five bordars,
‘ with two plow-tillages. There are eleven servi,
‘ and two mills of 15 sol. A wood one mile long,
‘ and one broad. It was worth 100 sol. now 4 lib.
Domesday, p. 78.

William de Postelip was seized of one yard land in Postlip, and was convicted of felony 27 E. 1. William de Chesterton, and others, were seized of the manor of Postelip, in trust for the abbey of Tewkesbury 7 R. 2. Tithes in Postelip, which belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6. and by his attainder reverted to the crown, and were granted to sir Christopher Hatton 24 Eliz. Postlip is now the estate of the earl of Coventry, and has been in his family for many years. His lordship has a large house here, situated on the side of an eminence, with a chapel, now converted to prophane uses. The house is occupied by Mr. William Durham, who is one of the most considerable paper-makers in the kingdom.

4. Cockbury. The name of this place is probably from Coch, which signifies red in the British language. John earl of Shrewsbury was seized of a tenement called Cockburns near Winchcombe 38 & 39 H. 6. One part of this hamlet belongs to the earl of Coventry, the other to William Rogers, of Dowdeswell, esq.

5. Langley. This hamlet lies upwards of two miles from the church, and is only one farm house. Maurice Sheppard died seized of this manor 20 Eliz. and left an only daughter married to Richard Houghton, who, in right of his wife, had livery granted to him the same year. It belonged to Richard Freeman, esq; at the beginning of this century, and Thomas-Edwards Freeman, of Batsford in this county, esq; is the present lord of the manor.

6. Greet. This hamlet lies about a mile from the church. It contains about sixty houses, and had formerly a chapel, now converted into a dwelling-house. The master of the knights templers had a grant of a court leet, with waifs and felons goods, in Greet and Greeton from king Henry the Third, which grant was allowed in the proceedings on a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. John de Sudley held two messuages, two yard lands and a half, and two acres of meadow, in Greet and Greeton, in trust for William de Wotton, 17 E. 2. John de Sudley was seized of Greet 27 & 41 E. 3. William de Wotton was seized of Greet and Greeton 48 E. 3. Lands in these places were granted to Thomas lord Scimour, and upon his attainder they were again granted to William marquis of Northampton 5 E. 6. Other lands in Greet, which belonged to the chantry of St. Mary in Winchcombe, were granted to Anthony Cope 10 Jac. Mrs. Freeman, and Mr. William Carnal, are proprietors of good estates here.

7. Gretton. There is a chapel of ease in this hamlet, with divine service once a month. John de Besmamicelle and Alice his wife granted three messuages, and seventy-six acres of land in Greeton and Aldrington to the abbey of Tewkesbury 35 E. 1. The knights templers held lands in Greeton 2 E. 3. and the hamlets of Greet and Greeton were held of William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon, 28 E. 3. John Wotton was seized of eighteen acres of land, called Swinsbrook land, lying in Greeton, 2 R. 2. It appears by the register book of the abbey of Tewkesbury, that in the time of Simon bishop of Worcester, there arose a dispute between the abbies of Tewkesbury and Winchcombe concerning the tithes of a hide of land which Roger de Diclefdon held in Gretton of the fee of the earl of Gloucester, which was thus settled; that the chapel of the vill of Gretton, and half the tithes of the aforesaid hide, should remain to the church of Winchcombe, and that the other half of the tithes should be enjoy'd by the abbey of Tewkesbury. Tithes in Gretton, which belonged to the last-mentioned abbey, were granted to Edward earl of Lincoln, and to Christopher Goufe, 22 Eliz. Other tithes in Gretton, which belonged to Winchcombe abbey, were granted to sir Christopher Hatton 22 Eliz. Lord viscount Tracy is lord of this manor.

8. Frantone.

9. Naunton. Sir Robert Atkyns, by mistake, has misapplied the particulars of this manor to the parish of Naunton upon the hills. The following is translated from Domesday :

‘ The church of Winchelcumb holds Niwetone
‘ in Greteftanes hundred, and two knights hold
‘ it of the abbat. There are three hides and a ‘ half. In demean are three plow-tillages, and ‘ three servi, and two villeins, with one plow‘ tillage, and there may yet be six more. It is ‘ worth and was worth 40 sol.’ Domesday, p. 71.

This manor continued in the abbey of Winchcombe till that house was dissolved. It was then granted to Thomas Culpeper 33 H. 8. and Alexander Culpeper had livery of it 1 Eliz. A lease of lands in Naunton, lately belonging to Winchcombe abbey, was granted to Henry Tracy 36 H. 8. Henry Tracy and Elizabeth his wife had a grant of lands here 7 E. 6. The tithes in Naunton, formerly belonging to the abbey of Winchcombe, were granted to sir Thomas Seymour 1 E. 6. This manor is in the Tracy family.

10. Corndean. This is the estate of Mr. Blizard.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe, to which it gives name. It is worth from the impro-impropriation about 16*l.* a year. Lord viscount Tracy is patron, and the reverend Mr. Roberts is the present incumbent of this curacy, and of the chapel of Gretton. Daniel Tanturier, esq; barrister at law, gave 200*l.* towards augmenting the living, and Dr. Benson, late bishop of Gloucester, procured the further augmentation from the governors of queen Anne's bounty, with a moiety of 500*l.* left by Mr. Becker, and vested in south sea annuities.

The impropriation is divided amongst many proprietors, and is worth about 400*l.* a year, and pays 12*l.* 9*s.* 7½*d.* to the crown. The impropriation and advowson formerly belonged to the abbey. Lord Tracy has the vicarage and small tithes. The chantry lands which belonged to the same monastery are tithe free.

There was a church very antiently in the east part of the town, dedicated to St. Nicholas, which falling to decay, the parishioners assembled to hear divine service in the body of the abbey church, 'till the reign of king Henry the Sixth; when the then abbat, William Winchcombe, by the consent of the town, began a parish church at the west end of the abbey, where a little chapel of St. Pancras stood. The abbat finished the east part, and the parishioners began the body, towards which they had collected 200*l.* but that not being sufficient, Ralph Boteler, lord Sudley, finished the work, after which it was dedicated to St. Peter; and that is the present parish church. It is a large handsome building, with an aisle on each side, and a tower at the west end; and both church and tower are embattled and adorned with pinnacles. There were figures in the south aisle of the choir, designed for Thomas Boteler, lord Sudley, and his four sons, John, William, Thomas, and Ralph; and for Elizabeth, wife of Ralph lord Sudley; but they have been long since destroyed.

By a decree in chancery to C. 1. the impropriators are obliged to pay towards the repair of the chancel.

There were several chantries and chapels in this church. The chapel of St. Nicholas belonged to the Botelers of Sudley, and was their burying place. There was another dedicated to the virgin Mary, and was curiously ornamented. The bailiff and parishioners presented to a rich chantry in this church, in the year 1503.

There are three free schools in Winchcombe ; the first is a grammar school, founded by queen Elizabeth, and endowed with 10*l.* a year, for teaching eight or ten boys. The second is another grammar school, founded 13 Jac. by lady Frances Chandos, with a school-house in St. Nicholas street for the master ; and she endowed her school with certain lands formerly belonging to the sexton's office in the monastery, for the maintenance of a master, and the education of fourteen boys, born in Winchcombe. The master receives 20*l.* a year out of the profits, and the remainder is applied towards repairing the house. The other school was founded by George Townsend, of Lincoln's-inn in the county of Middlesex, esq; who, by his will, in 1683, gave lands in Wornington in the county of Gloucester, in trust for securing the payment of 4*l.* yearly to each of the towns of Winchcombe, Northleach, Campden, and Cheltenham, for teaching poor children to read. Also 3*s.* to be disposed of weekly in the church of Winchcombe to such poor as shall be usual frequenters of the church ; and 12*d.* weekly in bread to the poor of each of the towns of Northleach, Campden, and Nether Guiting ; and 5*l.* yearly to each of the towns of Winchcombe, Northleach, Campden, Cheltenham, and Nether Guiting, for apprenticing one boy yearly out of each of the said places.

In 1685, George Harvey gave two acres of land, the profits to be given to the poor of this parish for ever.

In 1692, lady Juliana Tracy gave sixteen ridges of land, the profits of which, amounting to upwards of 4*l.* a year, to be laid out in garments for the poor at Christmas.

In 1715, Mr. Thomas Compere, of London, gave the interest of 150*l.* to be distributed to the poor.

In 1743, John Harvey gave the interest of 10*l.* to the use of poor widows.

In 1752, Anne Blaby gave 50*l.* to be laid out in land, and the rent to be given annually to poor families not receiving alms.

The lady Dorothy Chandos, wife of Edmund lord Chandos, and daughter and coheir of Edmund lord Bray, built an almshouse in this place for twelve poor women, but it has no endowment.

At the beginning of this century, there were 564 houses, and 2715 inhabitants in this parish, of whom 56 were freeholders ; yearly births 53, burials 48. Atkyns. But examining the register, it appears that in ten years, beginning with 1700, there were 526 baptisms, and 435 burials ; and in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the baptisms were 562, and the burials 401. And there are now about 1960 souls in the whole parish, by which it should seem that there is a considerable mistake in the number of inhabitants given by sir Robert Atkyns.

W I N R U S H

LIES in the hundred of Slaughter, about nine miles distant southward from Stow-on-the-Wold; four westward from Burford in Oxfordshire, and twenty-four east from Gloucester.

It enjoys a healthy air, and consists chiefly of corn fields. The lands decline on the north side to the banks of a pretty river of the same name, which bounds the parish, and produces trout and cray fish ; and after visiting Burford and Witney in Oxfordshire, empties itself into the Thames at a place called the New-bridge.

The name is written Wenric in Domesday, of which the etymology is uncertain. Perhaps the place was so called from Wen, some ancient proprietor of it, and ric, which in the Anglo-Saxon language denotes a dominion, province, or district, in which sense it is understood in the word bishoprick at this time. Sir Robert Atkyns's notion of its being derived from a battle heretofore won amongst the rushes of this place, was formed from the modern orthography, and is too forced to be adopted. There are, however, ancient intrenchments, and several tumuli, or barrows here, which shew it to have been a scene of military actions.

There is a curious species of fossil, called the Siliquastra, or fossil pods, found in the quarries here, and in the neighbouring parish of Sherbourn. They are supposed to be the bony palates of different different fishes, and resemble half the pod of the Lupine, or other leguminous plant, filled with stony matter. Some of them are extremely minute, others near two inches long, and variously coloured, as brown, black, and bluish. There are also petrifications of the bivalvular kind, in these parishes, as of the Cardium, or cockle; and other shell fish; and the indefatigable doctor Woodward found the Asteria Columnaris, particularly at Sherbourn. It is of a cylindrical but pentangular form, generally about an inch long, and of the thickness of a goose-quill. These are all the particulars in natural history which I have been able to collect worthy the reader's notice. I come now to shew the descent

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There were several proprietors of estates in this place at the time of the general survey, for it is thus recorded in Domesday:

' Roger de Laci holds Wenric in Bernintone hundred, and Radulf holds it of him. There are two hides. Wluric held it in the time of king Edward. In demean is one plow-tillage, and three villeins, and two bordars, with one plow-tillage. There are five servi, and a mill of 5 sol. and ten acres of meadow. It was worth 100s. now 4 lib.

' The same Roger holds one hide and one yard-land there, and Hugo holds it of him. Godric held it, and was one of king Edward's thanes. There is one plow-tillage in demean, and two bordars, and one servus, and a mill of 3 sol. and eight acres of meadow. It is worth and was worth 24 sol. Domesday, p. 75.

' Elfi de Ferendone holds three hides and a half in Wenric of the abbey of Wincelcombe. Bolle held it and gave it to the abbey. He could dispose of himself and his land as he pleased. There are five plow-tillages in demean, and nine villeins, and seven bordars, with one plow-tillage, and ten servi, and a mill and a half of 12 solid. and 6 den. It is worth 8 lib. in the whole. Uluric held two hides of this land for a manor, and Tovi five yard-lands for a manor, and Lewin one yard-land for a manor.

' This manor, which Elfi holds unjustly of the abbey, lay in Salemonesberie hundred after Bolle was dead. Now it lies in that of Bernintone, according to the verdict of the men of the same hundred.' Ibid. p. 71.

' Elfi de Ferendone holds three hides and a half in Wenric in Bernintone hundred, of the king. Wluric and Tovi and Lewin held them for three manors, and could go where they would. There are five plow-tillages in demean, and one villein, and seven bordars, with one plow-tillage. There are ten servi, and a mill and a half of 12 solid. and 6 den. This estate was worth 3 lib. now 8 lib. Ibid. p. 79.

' Chetel holds one hide and one yard-land in Wenric, in Gerfstones hundred, and he held it ' in the time of king Edward. There is one plow-tillage, and four servi. It is worth and was worth 20 solid. Ibid.

Pope Alexander the Third confirmed to the abbey of Winchcombe all their land in Wenric, 21 H. 2.

John Delamere was seized of Wenrech 8 E. 1. The sheriff returned into the king's exchequer that Wenrich was held by the abbey of Wynchelcombe, William Pynchpole, and Robert de Marys, 9 E. 1. the two latter having taken their names from the hamlets of Pinchpole and Maris in this parish. Benjamin Bereford held Wyke and Wenrich, by one knight's fee, of Robert de Mortimer, earl of March, 22 E. 2. and the manors continued for a long time in the same family, for another Benjamin de Bereford and Philippa his wife were seized of the manor of Winrush and Wike 3 H. 6.

This manor was in the crown in the year 1608. It was afterwards the property of sir Ralph Dutton towards the end of that century, and continuing in the same family, it descended like Sherbourn, to James Dutton, esq; who is the present lord of the manor of Winrush.

Of the other estates the records shew, that Henry de Norton levied a fine of lands in Wenric to Richard Wale 54 H. 3. And Christopher Allen and Ethelreda his wife levied a fine of lands in the same place to Thomas Dutton 6 E. 6.

HAMLETS. 1. Maris. 2. Pinchpool. 3. Lan Maris.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Stow, worth about 40 l. a year. James Dutton, esq; is patron, and Mr. Twining is the present incumbent.

The vicarages of Sherbourn and Winrush were consolidated into one presentment in the year 1776.

Seventy-four acres of land belonged to the glebe; but as the parish is inclosing, the vicarage will be improved, and it is proposed to lay other lands to the glebe in lieu of those which belonged to the vicarage of Sherbourn, and to build a new house for the vicar in this parish.

The prior of Lanthony was seized of the impropriation 13 H. 4. The rectory, church, and tithes of Winrush, formerly belonging to the priory of Lanthony, were granted to Francis Philips and Richard Moor, 6 Jac. 1. The impropriation belongs to the lord of the manor, and pays 4 l. 13 s. 4 d. yearly to the crown.

The church is dedicated to St. Peter. It has a small aisle and a chapel on the south side, and a tower at the west end. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary. It is called Hungerford's chapel, because it was repaired by the family of that name, several of whom lie buried in it.

It is mentioned in Stow's Chronicle, that sir John, the vicar of this place, was ordered penance for keeping was married to Humphry Stafford, and they had livery of Winston 37 H. 8.

King Edward the Sixth, by letters patents, dated Feb. 12, in the Seventh year of his reign, granted the manor of Winston to Anthony Kingston; but it did not continue long in his family, for Anthony Hungerford, gent. was lord of it 41 Eliz. as was fir Thomas Hungerford in the year 1608, whose arms, (as emblazoned under Down Amney) remain very perfect over the door of the old manor house. It was afterwards purchased by the Sandys family, and Samuel Sandys, esq; is the present lord of the manor. His pedigree and arms are given under Miserden.

But there was another manor, dependant on the greater; for the escheator's inquisition found that Thomas Estcourt, gent. died 41 Eliz. seized of a manor called Le Estcourt, in Shipton Moigne, which he held of Thomas Hedges, gent. and of the manor of Wynston, and of three messuages, three cottages, four gardens, 200 acres of land, seven of meadow, forty of pasture, of 12*d.* rent, and of 100 sheep pastures, and eleven beast pastures in Wynston, worth 5*l.* per ann. all which particulars he held of Anthony Hungerford, gent. as of his manor of Wynston, by fealty, and by the rent of 7*s.* 7*d.* per ann. He left Thomas Estcourt, his son and heir, thirty years old.

Nicholas, son of Nicholas le Arch, was seized of sixty acres of land, and of a rent of 40*s.* in Wineston, 31 E. 1. Thomas Neole held fourteen messuages, and sixteen yard-lands in Winestone, 2 E. 2. John de Acton and Sybill his wife were seized of sixty acres of land, and 40*s.* rent in Winestone, 6 E. 2. and George Acton held one messuage, one hundred acres of land, and ten marks rent in the same place, in the 8th year of that reign. Sir John de Acton was seized of the same lands 17 E. 3. Richard Forster levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Winston to John Walsh, and others, 12 H. 7. Andrew Kettleby died 1 Jac. 1. without issue, seized of the manors of Over and Nether Siddington; of one messuage and two yard-lands in Daglingworth, worth 40*s.* per ann. which he held of Henry Pool, knight, in free soccage, as of his manor of Daglingworth; and of one messuage, and half a yard-land in Wynston, worth 6*s.* 8*d.* per ann. which he held in free soccage, of Anthony Hungerford, esq; as of his manor of Wynston; and left all his lands in Gloucestershire and Wiltshire to his wife Jane. Escheat.

Sir Robert Atkyns takes notice that lands in Winston belonged to the Augustine priory of Osney in Oxfordshire, and were granted to the chapter of Oxford 34 H. 8. And that other lands which had been granted to the bishoprick of Oxford, were likewise granted to the chapter of that see, in the 38th year of the same reign; but this must be understood of Winson in the parish of Bibury, and not of this parish, where the priory of Osney had never any possessions.

H A M L E T. Washbrook is a small hamlet in this parish, of one house only.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 90*l.* a year. Samuel Sandys, esq; is patron, and the reverend Mr. Longdon is the present incumbent.

About forty-seven acres in the Park-field, and forty-four acres in the Foss-field, beside some small inclosures, belong to the glebe.

The church is a small building, dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

Thomas Muggleton, of Miserden, gave 15*s.* a year to the poor of this parish, which donation is now paid by the overseers of the poor of Duntifbourn Abbats.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 26 houses, and about 100 inhabitants, whereof 5 were freeholders; yearly births 3, burials 2. The present number of families is 30, and of inhabitants exactly 160.

WINTERBOURN.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Langley and Swineshead, six miles westward from Chipping Sodbury, thirty southward from Gloucester, and six northward from the city of Bristol.

It is bounded on the south by the river From, which divides it from Westerleigh and Mangotfield; and is said to have received its name from a burn, or small river, running through it in the winter season, as if there were no current of water in the summer. However specious this may seem, it is inconsistent with the fact at present, for there is a constant stream in summer as well as winter, and the little bourn, which rises at Stoke, produces good jack and eel.

The soil is a reddish loam, intermixt with sand, and the parish is mostly divided into pleasant pasture grounds. A great road leads through it to Bristol, which has occasioned many of the houses to be built on the sides of it like a market town, for the convenience of business, and for the amusement which the mind receives from the sight of different objects passing to and fro; but the church stands half a mile distant from the street.

Edmund Probyn, of Newland in this county, esq; has a good house here.

Nearer towards Bristol, lies the hamlet of Frenchay, in this parish; a very pretty village, where many families of good fashion have genteel houses, with elegant gardens and plantations. The most distinguished of them belong to Mr. Joseph Beck, Mr. Perry, Mr. Mark Harford, Mr. Barnet, Mr. Read, Mr. Dean, Mr. Gordon, Mr. Ames, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Gwin, and perhaps other gentlemen, whose names I have not been favoured with.

Winterbourn furnishes no antiquities, nor any thing curious in natural history. I must not, however, omit to mention a manufacture of felt hats carried on here, and in some of the neighbouring places, which furnishes employment for many of the labouring people. And there are two annual fairs for pedlery goods, one held on the 29th of June, the other on the 18th of October.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

We learn from Domesday, that Wapelite and Wintreborne, for so they are written in that record, were members of the manor of Betune, in Suinheve hundred, and together with the whole manor, were the antient demans of the crown, and held by king William at the time of the general survey.

Philip de Albeniaco died seized of this manor 17 Joh. as did Richard de Wales 9 H. 3. Ralph de Wallis also died seized of Winterbourn 30 H. 3. and left two daughters coheiresses, who were married to Jeffery de Wroksall, and Ralph de Hadele, against whom a writ of Quo warranto was brought to shew by what right they held court leet, free warren, and other privileges in the manor of Winterbourn, and their claim was allowed 15 E. 1. Robert de Hadele, son of Ralph, died seized of one messuage, and one plow's-tillage in Winterbourn 17 E. 2.

Thomas lord Bradeston, of Bradeston in the parish of Berkeley, died seized of the manor of Winterbourn 34 E. 3. He had been summoned to parliament among the barons, having been active in deposing of king Edward the Second. He founded a chantry at the altar of St. Michael in the church of Winterbourn, and gave six messuages, four acres of arable, twelve acres of meadow, twelve acres of wood, and a rent of 100s. out of Winterbourn, for the maintenance of the same. Robert Bradeston, son of Thomas lord Bradeston, died before his father, whereby Thomas lord Bradeston, son of Robert, became heir to his grandfather, and died seized of this manor 48 E. 3. He left Elizabeth his only daughter and heir, married to Walter de la Pool, and she had livery of Winterbourn, when she came of age, 13 R. 2. Blanch Bradeston, widow of Robert Bradeston, died seized of Winterbourn, with fairs, markets, and free warren, 15 R. 2.

Notwithstanding the descent to an heir female, the manor continued for a long time afterwards in the name of the Bradestons. Ela, the widow of the last Thomas lord Bradeston, was endowed with this manor, and died seized thereof 11 H. 4. Thomas Bradeston and Edith his wife were seized of this manor 16 H. 6. She surviving her husband, had it in dower, and died seized of it in the 23d year of the same reign.

The Bradestones of Winterbourn bore for their arms, Argent, on a canton gules a rose Or, barbed proper. This antient family went to decay about the time of queen Elizabeth, when James Buck, esq; purchased this manor, and John Buck, esq; was lord of it in the year 1608. It continued only four descents in that family, and then passed to the Browns. Hugh Brown, esq; died seized of Winterbourn in the year 1691. John Jones, esq; was lord of it when sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of it; and Mr. Whalley is the present lord of the manor of Winterbourn.

Thomas de Marlborough and Joan de Haddon levied a fine of lands in Winterbourn, and of the advowson of the church, to the use of Henry de Haddon

Haddon for his life; the remainder to William Fitzwarren and Amice his wife, in taille, 11 E. 3. Richard Forster levied a fine of a moiety of lands in Winterborn and Hambrook, to John Walsh, and others, 12 H. 7.

HAMLETS. 1. Hambrook is a large hamlet in this parish, in which there is a chapel of ease. The following is extracted from Domesday:

'The bishop of St. Laud of Constance holds Hanbroc in Sineshovedes hundred, and Oulf holds it of him. Algar held it of king Edward, and could go where he pleased. The land is five plow-tillages. There are two hides. In demean are two plow-tillages, and two villeins, with two plow-tillages, and two servi, and six acres of meadow. It was worth 100 sol. now 60 solid.' Domesday, p. 70.

John Folliot of Bristol and Lucy his wife levied a fine of lands in Hambrook, and acknowledged the right of Richard le Cook of Winterbourn and Juliana his wife, 43 E. 3. Sir Robert Ashton was seized of one messuage, one plow-tillage, and of a yearly rent of 40 s. in Hambrook, within the manor of Winterbourn, 7 R. 2. Thomas Moreton, esq; died seized of the manor of Hambrook, and was succeeded by his son and heir sir Robert Moreton, who also died seized thereof 6 H. 8. and left William his son, five years old, who died 14 H. 8.

2. Frenchay, but more rightly Froomshaw, is a genteel hamlet, of which mention has been already made in the introductory part of this account. Richard Cook and Juliana his wife levied a fine of lands in Froomshaw in this parish 20 R. 2.

3. Stourden was an antient manor in Winterbourn. William Hoese and Margaret his wife purchased lands in Stourdon of Ralph de Wellford, which had before been sold to the said Margaret, and to William Comyn, her former husband, 5 H. 3. William Towkeram, or Tuke-ram, was seized of Stourdon 41 H. 3. and of lands in Hendon, and left two daughters coheiresses. Cicely, (one of them) and Robert Mermion, her husband, levied a fine of these estates to the use of Adam de Machine, and Amabell his wife, who was the other daughter, 51 H. 3. John de la Rivere died seized of the hamlet of Stourdon near Bristol, 35 E. 3. and Richard de la Rivere held it in the 36th year of the same reign. Emme, the widow of John Merston, and formerly the wife of Richard de la Rivere, was endowed of this manor, and died 41 E. 3. as did Thomas de la Rivere 48 E. 3. The abbey of Westminster held lands in Stourdon 49 E. 3. Nicholas Stanshaw died seized of Stourdon, and left it in dower to Margaret his wife, who died 14 H. 6. Sir Jarrit Smith, baronet, purchased this manor of the coheirs of the late sir John Smyth, of Long Ashton in the county of Somersset, and is the present proprietor of it.

The family of de Stern, or Hicinfern, one of whom, according to tradition, was a great robber in this country, were long possessors of a manor in this parish, and had a large house called Stern-court, which is ruined, but still preserves its name, and belongs to sir Jarrit Smith.

The mayor and corporation of Bristol were seized of another manor in this parish, for the use of Gaunt's hospital in Bristol.

There is a distinct constable for Winterbourn, and one tithingman for Hambrook, Frenchay, and Stourdon.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Bristol, worth about 400 l. a year, of which St. John's college in Oxford are patrons.

Robert Gernoun gave the advowson of the church of Winterbourn to the abbey of Gloucester, in the year 1112, and Helias Boy Giffard confirmed the same in 1160. But that was probably another Winterbourn, for in the grant it is called the chapel of St. Andrew in Winterbourn, whereas this church is dedicated to St. Michael. John Giffard of Brimpsfield was seized of the advowson of Winterbourn 1 E. 3. and John Calew, heir of the Giffards, levied a fine of it, and acknowledged the right of John lord Maltravers 4 E. 3. The advowson was granted to Thomas de Bradeston 11 E. 3. who founded a chantry in the church, of which John Rastale was the last incumbent, and in the year 1553, received a pension of 3 l. 13 s. 4 d. Willis. The lands which belonged to the chantry were granted to John Baynham by king Edward the Sixth.

The church consists of the body, and an aisle on the north side, handsomely and uniformly pewed, with a gallery at the west end. It has a tower, with a steeple, and a handsome vestry room on the south side, and there is an oratory against the north wall of the church. In the west window are the Berkeleys arms, impaling, Azure, three couple closes braced Or, a chief of the second. There is another scutcheon, with these arms, viz. Azure, two bars within a bordure argent.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is the figure of a man in compleat armour, lying along, upon a tomb in the chancel, with his hands in a supplicating posture. His head rests upon a bear's head, coupéd and ducally gorged, and his feet upon a lion couchant. And close by, upon another tomb, is the effigy of a lady lying along in a loose robe, and her feet resting on a dog, the emblem of fidelity. These are supposed to represent some of the Bradstone family; but the arms upon the man's shield are not discernable.

There is another figure lying along in armour, under an arch in the north wall of the church, the the head resting upon a ram, the feet on a lion; supposed to be for Tukeram, the proprietor of Stourdon. And a figure of a woman lies in the belfry.

On the tablet of a monument against the wall, in gold letters :

WITCOMBE

IS a small parish, in the hundred of Dudston and King's Barton. It lies about eight miles distant north from Stroud, seven south from Cheltenham, and six south-eastward from Gloucester.

The greater part of the parish consists of a wide combe, or valley, with an opening northwards to the great vale country, but environed on the east, south, and south-west quarters by that chain of hills which runs length-ways through the county. Hence arises a variety of soils and of produce. The lower parts and acclivities are chiefly pasture, and the higher hills mostly woodlands.

It is sometimes called Great Witcombe, to distinguish it from the tithing of Witcombe, in the parish of Badgworth. The reason and propriety of the name is obvious. Witcombe is a small deviation from Widcombe, or Wide Combe, made so very naturally, and almost inevitably, by quick pronunciation, that it is wonderful it should escape fir Robert Atkyns's discernment: But it is still more unaccountable that a gentleman of his experience and learning should fall into the following inconsistence and absurdity: Speaking of Rendcombe, It is so called, says he, from being encompassed with valleys, for Ring is Saxon for a Circle, and Comb for a Valley. Unmindful of this explanation, in the account of Winchcombe, he very gravely informs the reader, that Comb signifies a bill; and a little further on, gives the following etymology of Witcombe: It is called Witcomb Magna. The name, continues he, signifies a White Hill,

Hill, and it lies under Birdlip Hill, where the roads make it look white. This serves to confirm the truth of that observation, that men of genius sometimes commit the greatest mistakes.

Part of this parish stretches over the hill to the southward, and joins to Brimpsfield.

Howe Hicks, esq; has a good house, which stands in the center of the valley, with a park, and a large estate here. The park lies upon a considerable acclivity on the south side of the house, and at the foot of a steep hill covered with beech wood. From a vista upon the hill, not a mile from the house, is a fine bird's eye view of the subjacent vale, and the river Severn. Part of the forest of Dean, and the conic mountain near Abergavenny in Monmouthshire, are seen to the left: The blue hills of Malvern in Worcestershire, (with the Welch mountains at a great distance behind) present themselves in front: And to the right is a view of the town of Tewkesbury, and of the city of Worcester, near thirty miles distant.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

It does not appear whose property this manor was, about the time of the Norman conquest, as there is no mention of it in Domesday; but Edmond earl of Cornwall was seized of it 4 E. 1. probably for the use of the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester. And the archbishop of York was seized of this manor for the use of the same priory, in consequence of an agreement between the archbishop and that house, as more particularly related in the account of St. Oswald's priory, p. 189.

Upon the dissolution of monasteries, this manor was granted to sir Thomas Chamberlain 6 E. 6. and sir John Chamberlain was lord of it in the year 1608.

From the Chamberlains it was purchased by the widow of sir Michael Hicks, in which name and family it has continued ever since, and Howe Hicks, esq; is the present lord of the manor. His arms are, Gules, a fess undy between three fleurs de lis Or.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Gloucester, worth about 50*l.* a year. Howe Hicks, esq; is patron, and Mr. Nash is the present incumbent. The advowson of the rectory belonged formerly to St. Austin's abbey in Bristol, and it now pays 13*s.* 4*d.* a year to the dean and chapter of Bristol cathedral.

Tithes in Witcombe, which formerly belonged to the priory of St. Oswald in Gloucester, were granted to John Hercey and John Edwards 20 Eliz.

The church is a small building, dedicated to St. Mary, and has an aisle on the north side.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is the following inscription on a marble monument in the chancel:

This family has been very antiently seated in Gloucestershire. Sir Ellis Hicks was made a knight banneret in the reign of king Edward the Third, and had the three fleurs de lis given him for his arms on account of his bravery, and taking a pair of colours, when in the service of the Black Prince.

John Hicks, of Tortworth in Gloucestershire, was descended from sir Ellis Hicks, and died 2 H. 7.

Robert Hicks, son and heir of the said John, was a citizen of London, and raised a very considerable estate by his business. He married Julian, daughter to Arthur Chapham, of the county of Somerset, esq; and had issue three sons, Michael, Francis, and Baptist. Francis, the second son, died young. Baptist taking to business, and by the interest of his elder brother, having great dealings with the court, for rich silks and other commodities imported from abroad, acquired a large fortune, and came afterwards to great honours. He was knighted by king James the First, and was created a peer 4 Car. by the title of baron Hicks, of Ilmington in the county of Warwick, and viscount Campden, of Campden in the county of Gloucester; which honours are now enjoy'd by the present earl of Gainsborough, his lordship's ancestor Edward lord Noel, who married Julian, eldest daughter and coheir of the said Baptist lord Campden, having obtained a grant of them to himself and his heirs male, on failure of issue male of the said Baptist lord viscount Campden.

Michael Hicks, eldest son and heir of the said Robert Hicks, was bred to learning at Trinity college in Cambridge, whence he removed to Lincoln's inn to study the law, and was afterwards secretary to lord treasurer Burleigh. He was a wife and religious person, and his excellent parts endeared him exceedingly to sir Robert Cecil, son to the lord treasurer. He was knighted, and in the year 1604, purchased the castle and manor of Beverstone, in the county of Gloucester. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Colston, of Lowlayton in Essex, merchant, with whom he had Ruckholts; and dying in 1612, his widow purchased the manor and estate of Witcombe, in this county. He left by her two sons, William and Michael, of whom the latter died unmarried.

William, the eldest son, was created a baronet in 1619, and distinguished himself for his loyalty in the great civil wars. He married Margaret, daughter of William lord Paget, and died Oct. 22, 1680, in the 84th year of his age, leaving issue two sons, William and Michael, both knighted in their infancy by king Charles the Second, at Ruckholt.

Sir William Hicks, the eldest son, was created a baronet, and served the office of high sheriff of the county of Essex. He married Marthagnes, daughter of sir Henry Coningsby, knight, and dying in 1703, left issue by her two sons, Henry and Charles, of whom the latter married the daughter of ——— Coningsby, esq; and died in 1760, leaving one son, John-Baptist, who, upon the failure of the elder branch, is the present baronet.

Sir Henry Hicks, elder son and heir of sir William Hicks, succeeded his father, and married, to his first wife, Margaret, daughter to sir John Holmes, knight, by whom he had one son Henry, who died unmarried. He married to his second wife Barbara, daughter of Mr. Johnson, of the county of Essex, and dying in 1754, left issue by her two sons, Robert and Michael. The latter died unmarried in 1764.

Sir Robert Hicks succeeded his father in title and estate, but died without issue in 1768, whereby the title of baronet devolved on sir John-Baptist Hicks, beforementioned.

I now return to sir Michael Hicks, second son of sir William Hicks, baronet. He was lord of the manor of Witcombe, and married Susanna, daughter of sir Richard Howe, and dying in 1710, left one son, Howe Hicks, esq; who married Mary, daughter of Jeffrey Watts, esq; of the county of Essex, and died in 1728. He had issue one son, Howe Hicks, esq; the present lord of the manor of Great Witcombe. He married Martha, daughter of the reverend Mr. Browne, and by her has two sons, William and Michael, and one daughter, married to the reverend Mr. Pettat, rector of Stonehouse in this county.

WITHINGTON.

THIS parish lies in the hundred of Bradley, six miles distant south-eastward from Cheltenham, six west from Northleach, and fourteen east from Gloucester.

The river Coln runs through, and waters the lower part of it, where are some meadow and pasture lands; but generally the soil is stony, and best adapted to tillage. The sides of the hills and acclivities on the southward are covered with one continued wood for a considerable extent, and since the antient name of the place was Wudiandun, as it is written in the old charters belonging to the see of Worcester; and that the names of several of the hamlets, as Hilcot, Foscot, Upcot, are compounded of Coed, the British word for wood; it is very probable that the parish was formerly almost over-run with it; but in the progres of population, agriculture was improved, and many of these lands were gradually cleared, and appropriated, as we now see them, to the produce of corn and pasture.

There was a nunnery at this place in the Saxon times, and it was most probably endowed with the manor. In those ages the bishops had the custody of all monasteries in their respective dioceses, and Wilfrith^s bishop of Worcester, in the eighth century, obtained a synodal decree that this monastery should be annexed to his see, after the death of the abbess who then presided over it. However, Mildred, the succeeding bishop of Worcester, in whose time it lapsed, made a fresh grant of it in the year 774, to the lady Æthelburga, who was abbess of a religious house at Worcester, on condition that both this and her own monastery at Worcester should devolve to that see upon her death. This accounts for the bishop of Worcester's property here, and brings me next to treat

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following is translated from Domesday:

' The church of Wirecestre holds Widindune in ' Wacrescumb hundred. There are thirty hides,
' of which three never paid tax. There are two
' plow-tillages in demean, and sixteen villeins,
' and eight bordars, with seven plow-tillages.
' There are six servi, and ten acres of meadow; a ' wood one mile long, and half a mile broad. And ' in Contone is one plow-tillage, and two villeins,
' and two bordars, with one plow-tillage, and
' two servi, and a mill of 5 solid. Domesday, p. 70.

' There are in the same manor four radchenif-
' ters having two hides, and three yard lands, and ' they have two plow-tillages; and a priest having
' half a hide, and one plow-tillage. In Glouuec.
' four burgeses pay seven-pence half-penny.

' Morinus holds of the bishop three hides in ' Fuscote, of the land of this manor; Anschitil
' two hides in Colesburne and Willecote; Robert
' four hides and a half in Dodesuuelle and Pecte-
' furde; Scheline five hides in Nategrave; Drogo
' ten hides in Estone. In these lands there are ' sixteen plow-tillages in demean, and fifty-one
' villeins, and seven bordars, with twenty-eight ' plow-tillages. There are forty-one servi, and ' three mills of 13s. 4d. In Wicelcumbe one
' burges

'burgess pays 3 sol. There is some meadow and wood in certain places, but not much. The whole manor was worth 38 lib. in the time of king Edward, now 33 lib. in all. Bishop Ulstan 'holds this manor.' Domesday, p. 70.

John Musgrove was tenant under the bishop of Worcester 3 E. 1. A writ of Quo warranto was brought against the bishop to set forth his right to court leet and free warren in Withington, and his claim was allowed 15 E. 1.

This manor continued in the bishoprick of Worcester till doctor Hooper surrendered that fee to the king, in order that he might be collated to the two bishopricks of Worcester and Gloucester, as they were intended to be united. But according to doctor Heylin, bishop Hooper was never afterwards suffered to enjoy the temporalities, but only received some small allowance for them; and Mr. Willis observes, that in the patent and grant of king Edward the Sixth, to John Hooper bishop of Gloucester and Worcester, dated Dec. 10, 1552, the manors of Hartlebury, Fladbury, Ripple, Bredon, and Withington, are omitted, and thence infers, that they were reserved by the crown, but afterwards restored by queen Mary.

The bishop of Worcester is the present lord of the manor, and holds a court leet, and has a good house near the church, now in lease to John Guise, of Highnam in this county, esq.

HAMLETS. 1. Compton, or Conton, as it is written in Domesday. It lies on the little river Coln, and is now generally called Cassiey Compton, from the family of the Cassieys, who were owners of it for many generations, and have been of antient standing here, and in other parts of the county. John Cassiey, esq; died seized of Compton in the reign of king Henry the Seventh, and was succeeded by William Cassiey his son, who died seized thereof 1 H. 8. Leonard Cassiey, son of William, was five years old at his father's death, but dying without issue, William Cassiey, his brother, obtained livery of this manor 21 H. 8. and Robert Cassiey, esq; another brother of Leonard, died seized of Compton 1 E. 6. Henry Cassiey, son of Robert, had livery 2 Mar. and died 38 Eliz. leaving Thomas his son then thirty-seven years old, who had livery of the manor the same year. This manor now belongs to lord Chedworth. The tithes of Cassiey Compton belonged to the priory of Bonhommes at Eddington in Wiltshire, and were granted to the bishop of Bristol 34 H. 8.

2. Fuscote, which is also mentioned in the preceding abstract from Domesday, and is now called Fosote, and commonly written Foxcot. Hugh le Despencer was seized of Foxcote 4 & 5 E. 3. It was afterwards granted to Westbury college, near Bristol, and upon the dissolution of religious foundations, was again granted to Ralph Sadleir 35 H. 8. William Jonets and Isabel his wife levied a fine of lands in Foxcot and Withington to William Vauce 7 E. 4. William Dalby and his wife also levied a fine of lands in Foxcote to William Derfet and Edmond Burshell 11 H. 7. Mr. Edward Anfell has a good estate in this hamlet, which he enjoys in right of his wife, whose family name was Jordan.

3. Broadwell End.

4. Little Colebourn. It is not easy to distinguish the particulars in Domesday concerning this hamlet from those relating to the parish of Colebourn, adjoining. It appears from the foregoing extract from Domesday, that Anschitil held two hides in Colebourn and Willecote; and it is said in another place, that 'Eluvin held one hide and a half in Colebourne, for a manor.' p. 78. Lands in this place formerly belonged to the Cistercian abbey of Bruern in Oxfordshire, and at the dissolution were granted to Edward Hermon 35 H. 8. Mr. Roberts has a good estate in this hamlet.

5. Owdeswell. There was formerly a chapel here, but it is now disused. This manor belonged to the priory of Black canons at Studley in Warwickshire, and was granted to Richard Andrews, and Nicholas Temple, in trust, 35 H. 8. and livery of it was granted to Francis Heydon 1 Eliz. It now belongs to Robert Lawrence, of Shurdington, esq.

6. Hilcot is a reputed manor, and formerly belonged to the Cassieys. It is now the property of lord Chedworth.

7. Rosley, or Rosely. This place is separated from the parish to which it belongs by that of Dowdeswell. The extract from Domesday which sir Robert Atkyns applied to it belongs to Cowley, in Rapsgate hundred. Lands called Roseley in Withington belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe, and were granted to John Dudley earl of Warwick, afterwards duke of Northumberland, 1 E. 6. This manor was held of Temple Guiting, and William Rogers died seized thereof 17 C. 1. leaving Daniel his son seven years old. William Rogers, of Dowdeswell, esq; one of the masters in chancery, was proprietor of it at the beginning of this century; from whom it descended like Dowdeswell, to William Rogers, esq; who is the present lord of the manor.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is in the deanery of Winchcombe. It is a rectory and peculiar, worth about 500 l. a year, having a great quantity of glebe land belonging to it. The bishop of Worcester is patron, and the reverend Mr. John Hayward is the present incumbent. This parish and that of Dowdeswell are included in the peculiar. The churches are subject to the visitation of the bishop of Gloucester, but exempted from that of the archdeacon, the rector of Withington exercising archidiaconal power, proving wills, and granting administration in both parishes.

The

The church is dedicated to St. Michael. It has a handsome tower in the middle, adorned with pinnacles and battlements, and furnished with six musical bells. There is a small cross aile on the south side, belonging to Compton estate, and is the burying place of lord Chedworth's family.

Benefactions, taken from a Table in the Church.

William Osbern, D.D. rector of this parish, and John Rich, esq; gave 100*l.* each for apprenticing out poor children; and both sums have been secured by the purchase of land in the parish of Charlton King's.

John Gilman, formerly rector here, and Robert Fielding, M.D. and Charles Fielding, gent. of the Inner Temple, (who died Dec. 15, 1737) gave 20*l.* a piece to this parish for charitable uses. And lady Howe, relict of sir Richard Howe, gave a service of gilt plate for the communion.

When sir Robert Atkyns compiled his account of this parish, there were 73 houses, and about 320 inhabitants, whereof 18 were freeholders; yearly births 10, burials 9. Since that time population hath greatly increased, and there are now upwards of 500 inhabitants.

WOLSTONE

W O L S T O N E.

THIS is a small parish, in the lower part of the hundred of Derhurst, about four miles east from Tewkesbury, five west from Winchcombe, six north from Cheltenham, and eleven north-east from Gloucester.

The church and village are seated on the side of a hill, with a north-west prospect over the vale. The situation is pleasant and healthy, and the parish consists of good pasture and arable land.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor was part of the possessions of the church of St. Dyonisius at Paris, at the time of the general survey, and afterwards belonged to the priory of Derhurst. Upon the dissolution of that priory, it was granted to the abbey of Tewkesbury 7 E. 4. and after the final dissolution of monasteries, it was granted to the Throckmortons.

Thomas Throckmorton had livery of the manor and advowson of Wolston 9 Eliz. and sir William Throckmorton was lord of the manor in the year 1608. He sold it to the lord keeper Coventry in the year 1630, and the earl of Coventry is the present lord of the manor of Wolstone, for which he pays 36s. yearly to the crown.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Winchcombe, worth about 90l. a year, of which the earl of Coventry is patron. There is no glebe belonging to it. The priory of Derhurst was seized of the advowson of this church 56 H. 3. and the provost of Eaton college near Windsor has presented to it.

The church is dedicated to St. Martin. It was new built in 1499, with an aisle on the north side, and an embattled tower at the west end.

W O O D C H E S T E R.

THIS is a small parish, in the hundred of Longtree, three miles distant west from Minchin-Hampton, three south from Stroud, and thirteen south from Gloucester.

The principal part of the village lies on the side of a bold rising ground, facing eastward, and seen from the great road on Rodborough-hill forms a pretty landscape, with a little river in the fore-ground, gently gliding along through the valley. Higher in the view, are many good houses and gardens, thickly scattered and distributed for about a mile in length; and above them, the prospect closes with natural woods and plantations, nodding from the acclivities behind.

Lord Ducie has a seat in this parish, with an extensive park, and very fine fishponds. It is his lordship's usual country residence; but it cannot be seen at the same time with the village, as it stands two miles distant westward from it, in a very narrow valley, amongst large and lofty beech-woods, and may be justly admired as a place of rural retirement.

Woodchester most probably obtained its name from those woods, and from its having been a small post or station of the Romans, for wherever the Saxons found a Roman camp, it was usual with them to terminate the name of such place with castræ; and as it is written Udecestre, in Domesday, the place is supposed to have been one of the Roman Castra, or at least an antient camp of one fort or other. But there is good reason to attribute it to the Romans in particular, from a curious tessellated pavement having been discovered here in the last century, about four or five feet below the surface of the ground, on the south-west side within the church-yard. This could be no other than a Roman work. Part of it remains in pretty good preservation, and lying at a proper depth, many coffins are placed upon it; but it has been frequently broken through at the request of some families, who desired to have their friends interred at a greater depth. It is of very large extent, decorated with birds and other figures, but not having been wholly uncovered, its dimensions cannot be exactly ascertained.

There was also another very interesting discovery made in this parish in the year 1687. It was of a considerable quantity of the gold coin of king Edward the Fourth, which had been hid, as it is supposed, in the time of some public convulsion, or civil war.

Woodchester is famous for its fine broad cloth manufacture, carried on in a very extensive manner by several master clothiers. And it is remarkable that the first Napping-mill in these parts was erected here by the late sir Onesiphorus Paul. It is a machine for raising the nap upon cloth in little knots, at regular but very small distances, that give it a singularly pleasing appearance. Near the same time, another was set up by one Mr. Fream, and some years afterwards a third, by Mr. Richard Hawker, both of this neighbourhood, which latter is still employ'd, and yields great profit to the proprietors. I thought proper to make public mention of these machines, in honour of the inventors and improvers of an art, tending to extend the great and leading manufacture of the kingdom.

The wealth acquired in the clothing business has occasioned improvements in agriculture, and almost every spot of ground in this part of the country has the appearance of high cultivation.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

There were two manors in this parish. The antient record relating to the principal of them, exhibits a striking instance of a mind abhorrent of the cruelty and injustice of earl Godwin, who by a wicked contrivance, stripped the nuns of Berkeley of their possessions, as already related under that head. The passage may be thus translated :

'Gueda the mother of earl Herald held Udecestre in Langetreu hundred. Goduin bought it of Azor, and gave it to his wife for her maintenance whilst she should reside at Berchelai; for she would not eat any thing of the produce of that manor, on account of the destruction of the abbey. Eduard holds this estate in his farm of Wiltescire, but unjustly, as the county says, because it does not belong to any farm. Of which manor none gave any account to the king's commissioners, nor was there any of them [i. e. of the county] present at the taking of this writing. This estate pays 7 lib.' D. B. p. 69.

The other manor lay in the hundred of Blacheleu, which is now comprized in that of Whitston, according to the following extract :

'Brietric holds of the king Widecestre in Blacheleu hundred. He held it in the time of king Edward. There is one hide taxed. There are sixteen villeins, and twelve bordars, with sixteen plow-tillages, but nothing in demean. In Glouuecestre one burges pays twenty bars of iron. There is a mill of 10 solid. It is worth and was worth 100 solid.' Ibid. p. 80.

John Maltravers held Wodechestre of William earl Marechal, and died seized thereof 24 E. 1. and John Maltravers, his son, had livery of it in the 25th year of that reign. King's Stanley and Stonehouse came afterwards into the possession of the family of Maltravers, and this manor continued in that name and family, by descent, till the reign of king Richard the Second, when Elianor, sister and heiress of Henry Maltravers, being married to John Arundel, second son of Richard earl of Arundel, carried this manor and other estates into the name and family of the earls of Arundel, as related under King's Stanley, in which family they continued for many generations. Sir Robert Atkyns is not quite consistent in his accounts of the descent of these manors to the Arundels, as may be seen by comparing them together.

The manor of Woodchester was granted to George Huntley and John Huntley 6 Eliz. and it is mentioned in the grant to have been lately the earl of Arundel's. It was afterwards purchased of the Huntleys by sir Robert Ducie. Sir Robert had several sons, who all died without issue, whereby Elizabeth, his daughter, became his heir, from whom this manor descended, like Tortworth, down to Thomas lord Ducie,^h who is the present lord of it.

There

^h This noble lord is paternally descended from the Mortons of Morton in Staffordshire, denominated of that place in the reign of king Edward the First, the said lordship and other manors having been granted by that king to his ancestor for his good services in Scotland; and are devolved on the present lord Ducie.

The Ducies were descended from a family in Normandy, one of which having raised a regiment there, brought it over to England to the assistance of queen Isabel, (consort to king Edward the Second) against the Spencers; and for his services had a grant of lands in Staffordshire, which his descendants enjoyed for many ages, till about the latter end of the reign of king Henry the Eighth, when the greatest part was sold by James Ducie, esq; who had to wife, first, Eleanor, sister to Edmund lord Sheffield; and secondly, Alice, sister to sir Richard Pipe, of Belston in Derbyshire, knight. By the last he had issue Richard, his son and heir; and Henry, second son, who married Mary, daughter and at length heir of Robert Hardy, by whom he had, amongst other children, sir Robert Ducie, knight and baronet, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Pyot, alderman of London.

Which sir Robert Ducie was free of the company of merchants in London (commonly called merchant-tailors) and in 1620, 18 Jac. 1. was one of the sheriffs of that city, whereupon he was knighted; and, being one of the aldermen of the city of London, was, in the fifth year of king Charles the First, advanced to the dignity of a baronet, by letters patent, bearing date Nov. 28, 1629. He was lord mayor of the city of London in 1631, 7 Car. 1. and, being immensely rich, was made banker to king Charles; and on the breaking out of the civil war, lost 80,000*l.* owing to him by his majesty. Nevertheless, he is said to leave at the time of his death, to the value of 400,000*l.* in land, money, &c. to his four sons, who were sir Richard Ducie, baronet, sir William Ducie, Henry, and Robert Ducie, esqrs, to which last he gave Little Aston in Staffordshire.

Sir Richard Ducie, the eldest son, was a great sufferer in the wars between king Charles the First, and his parliament, and being taken prisoner by sir William Waller, remained for some time under confinement. He died unmarried, and was succeeded in his dignity and estate by his brother, sir William Ducie, bart.

Which sir William Ducie, bart. was made one of the knights of the Bath, at the coronation of king Charles the Second. He had his principal residence at Tortworth in the county of Gloucester, where he lies buried; but died at Charlton in Kent, in the 65th year of his age, on September 9, 1697; having been created viscount Down of the kingdom of Ireland by king Charles the Second. He married Frances, daughter of Francis lord Seymour of Troubridge, grandfather of Charles the sixth duke of Somerset; but leaving no issue, his estate descended to Elizabeth, daughter and sole heir of Robert Ducie, esq; his brother.

Which Elizabeth was married to Edward Morton, of Morton and Engleton in the county of Stafford, esq; and left issue Matthew-Ducie Morton, her son and heir, created lord Ducie.

He served under king William during the war in Flanders, till the conclusion of the peace of Ryfwick, A. D. 1697. In the reign of queen Anne, he was twice chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Gloucester; and was also returned for the same to the first parliament called by George the First, who, in 1717, constituted him vice-treasurer and pay-master of Ireland, whereupon he was rechosen for the said county. Also, on June 13, 1720, he was advanced to the dignity of a peer of this realm, by the stile and title of lord Ducie, baron of Morton in Staffordshire.

His lordship married Arabella, daughter and coheir of sir Thomas Prestwich, of Holm, in the county palatine of Lancaster, bart. by whom he had issue three sons and four daughters; 1. Matthew-Ducie Morton, his successor; 2. Rowland-Lewis-Ducie Morton, who was colonel of a company in the foot-guards, and, in November 1739, was appointed colonel of a regiment of marines; 3. Charles-Ducie Morton, esq; who married Anne, daughter to ——— Wyatt, of Windsor in Berkshire, esq; and had issue by her a son named Benjamin, deceased. Elizabeth, eldest daughter, was married first to Richard Symm,

There is a very good house near the church, which formerly belonged to Mr. Robert Bridges. This house, and the estate belonging to it, passed by the marriage of Mr. Bridges's sister, to Mr. Browning, whose daughter and heir was married to Mr. Dowell, of Over in this county, whose estates came by will to the late Mr. Degge; and this part was purchased by the late Mr. Samuel Paul, and given by him to Nathaniel Peach, esq; the present owner.

Pudhill is a good house and estate in this parish, formerly belonging to the Smalls, but now the property of Thomas Wade, esq; where he resides.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Stonehouse, worth about 100*l.* a year. Lord Ducie is patron, and the reverend Mr. Peter Hawker is the present incumbent.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It has an aisle on the south side, and a low embattled tower, with six bells, at the west end.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a handsome raised tomb in the chancel for sir George Huntley and his lady, who are represented lying along under a canopy supported by pillars, with their ten children round the tomb. There are the Huntleys arms with quarterings upon the canopy, but no inscription.

On a marble monument on the south side of the chancel, it is thus written:

Near to this place is Deposited all that is Mortal of ROBERT BRIDGES Esq.

Who departed this life the 6th Day of March 1722 Aged 72.

In Memory of whom this Monument was Erected and of His BROTHER in law Mr. RICHARD HICKS and IANE his wife sister of Blackheath, in the county of Kent, esq; and secondly, on February 5, 1729-30, to Francis Reynolds, only son and heir of Thomas Reynolds, esq; formerly a South-sea director, by whom she had two sons, Thomas Reynolds, and Francis Reynolds, esqrs. The other daughters, Mary, Arabella, and Penelope, died unmarried.

At the top of the monument are the arms of Bridges.

The said Matthew lord Ducie departing this life at his house in Jermyn-street, on May 22, 1735, was succeeded by Matthew, his eldest son and heir.

Which Matthew lord Ducie, in the life-time of his father, was elected for the borough of Calne and Cricklade in Wiltshire, in the last parliament of George the First, and was a member for Tregony in Cornwall, in the first parliament of George the Second. On February 14, 1754, he was appointed lord lieutenant of and in the counties of Gloucester and of Bristol; and of the city of Gloucester, and county of the same; and custos rotulorum of Gloucestershire. He had also a grant of the offices of constable of St. Briavel's, and keeper of the deer and woods in Dean forest; and was likewise appointed vice-admiral of Gloucestershire. His lordship enjoyed all the said places and offices until Nov. 1758, when, upon his resignation, they were conferred on John Thynne How, second lord Chedworth.

WORMINGTON

IS a small parish, in the lower division of Kiftsgate hundred, five miles distant south from Evesham in Worcestershire, five north from Winchcombe, and nineteen north-eastward from Gloucester.

It is situate in the Vale, and a brook runs through it into the Avon at Hampton, near Evesham. The greater part of the land is arable, but the village has nothing particular to distinguish it in natural history, or antiquities.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

The following is translated from Domesday :

' Roger de Laci holds Wermetun in Gretestan hundred. Walter the son of Ercold holds it under him. There are five hides taxed. Eduui held it. In demean are two plow-tillages, and six villeins, with two plow-tillages. There are two servi, and a mill of 8 solid. and ten acres of meadow. It was worth 100*sol.* now only 4*lib.* Domesday, p. 75.

King Henry the Third granted court leet, waifs, and felons goods in Wormington to the masters of the knights templers, and his grant was allowed in a writ of Quo warranto 15 E. 1. The manor was afterwards given to Westbury college, near Bristol, and upon the dissolution of religious foundations, this estate, and others belonging to that college, were granted to sir Rafe Sadleir, 35 H. 8.

Sir Robert Atkyns makes mention that Henry Acton died seized of Wormington 20 Eliz. and that livery thereof was granted to his son Valentine Acton, the same year; but that must be understood of Wormington Grange in Didbrook, and not of this place.

John Newton, esq; was lord of this manor in the year 1608, out of which name it passed by the marriage of a daughter of the Newtons to Mr. Gwineth, who sold it to Mr. Dobbins, and it was by him conveyed to Mr. Townsend. Mr. Kenrick laid claim to the manor of Wormington at the beginning of the present century, and that claim was continued by Mr. John Partridge, who died about the year 1776; but a great part of the demans of the manor was given to charitable uses by George Townsend, esq; about eighty years ago.

The Dastons were antiently seized of a manor, or reputed manor, in this parish, which from them was called Wormington Daston. John Daston was seized thereof 15 E. 4. Anthony Daston also died seized of lands in Wormington 12 C. 1. and left Richard his son and heir, twelve years old.

Lord Aylmer has a good estate in this parish, but his lordship's usual residence is at Greenwich in the county of Kent. His lordship's arms are, Pearl, a cross diamond between four Cornish choughs proper. CREST, In a ducal coronet a chough with wings display'd proper. SUPPORTERS, Two mariners habited, the dexter holding in his hand a fore-staff, and the sinister a lead-line, all proper. MOTTO, STEADY.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Campden, worth about 70*l.* a year, of which is patron, and is the present incumbent.

Two yard-lands belong to the glebe, but eleven yard-lands, being the demans of the manor, are tithe free.

The church is small, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, or, as some say, to St. Catherine, whose figure, with her wheel, appears in one of the painted windows.

borough, and there are some remains of his lordship's house, consisting of the arches of doorways, &c. still distinguishable in the buildings belonging to Mr. Veal, situate in the lower part of the town.

Wotton was burnt down in the reign of king John. It then stood a little northward of the present site, as may be gathered from the name of a place called the Brands, from the fire which then happened there.

It has not been distinguished by any very interesting transactions, only in the great civil war, the king had a temporary garrison here, consisting of a regiment of horse, which, according to Corbet, were driven out of the town by the parliament's party, under the command of colonel Massie, and having suffered the loss of six killed, and twelve made prisoners, the rest escaped to Bristol. It was again garrisoned for the king by eight hundred men, and attacked by captain Backhouse with two hundred horse and dragoons, who fell suddenly on, says the before-mentioned historian, marched up to the main guard, and for some time were masters of four pieces of ordnance; but being over-matched, were forced to retreat, which they did without the loss of a man.

There was a conduit erected in the town, in the year 1630, at the expence of sir Richard Venn, and his son-in-law, Hugh Perry, both aldermen of London, and natives of this place, by which water was brought from a spring in Edbrook field to the market cross; but the conduit is now intirely destroy'd.

Leland, in his Itinerary, written in the reign of king Henry the Eighth, calls it A praty Market Towne, welle occupied withe Clotbiars, havyinge one faire longe Strete, and welle buyldyd in it, and it stondithe clyvinge toward the rotes of an hill. But tho' Leland takes notice of but one street, it is probable that there were others in his time, and that he speaks of the high street only, because the rest comparatively were of little account. The following names appear in the writings of the next century, viz. High-street, Sow-lane, the Chipping, or Market-place, Chipping-lane, Bradley-street, Hawe-street, Church-lane, and Sym-lane; the whole borough then comprizing an extent of about sixty acres of ground.

It is pretty well built, and the clothing business, chiefly in the fine way, is of very antient standing. There are now seven or eight master clothiers, and the trade is still in a flourishing state, tho' not equal to what it has sometimes been.

The market is held on Friday, and there is a fair on the 25th of September, formerly noted for cheese and cattle; but now of much less account for either.

The hills on one side of the town rendering it difficult for carriages to pass and repass, is a circumstance unfavourable to its market, which like that of most other little towns, is dwindled to nothing. There is, however, a turnpike-road branching from it northward to Gloucester, and eastward to Tetbury, and another extending south-westward towards Wickwar, Sodbury, and Bristol; but these are not the great roads leading from Gloucester to Bath and Bristol; so that there is but little travelling through the town, except by people of the neighbourhood, and by such as are connected in trade with the inhabitants.

The parish of Wotton is very extensive. Upon the brow of a hill called Westridge, looking towards Tortworth, there is a square camp, with double intrenchments, inclosing an area of about four acres of ground. It is now over-grown with beech wood, and is called Becket's Bury, but for what reason I cannot conjecture.

Of the Manor and other Estates.

This manor was a member of the great lordship of Berkeley at the time of the general survey; but there are no further particulars of it recorded in Domesday, than that there are 'In Uturne fifteen hides and half a yard-land.' Roger de Berkeley was seized of it in the reign of king William the Conqueror, and it descended in that family, with the manor of Berkeley, 'till the death of Thomas lord Berkeley, the fourth of that name. This Thomas lord Berkeley married Margaret, daughter of Gerard Warren, lord Lisle, by his wife Alice, the daughter and heir of Henry lord Tyes, with whom he had a very great estate. He died 5 H. 5. and left an only daughter, Elizabeth, married to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick.

This Elizabeth countess of Warwick was heir general to the whole estate of the Berkeley family; but James lord Berkeley, son of James, younger brother to Thomas lord Berkeley, father of the said Elizabeth, was heir male, and derived his title by an estate tail limited to the heirs males; for Thomas lord Berkeley, grandfather to the before-mentioned Thomas, levied a fine of Berkeley, Wotton, and divers other manors, 23 E. 3. whereby he settled those manors on his heirs males, and James lord Berkeley being heir male, had right to the estate by virtue of that settlement. However, the same Richard Beauchamp being in Berkeley castle at the death of Thomas lord Berkeley, his wife's father, seized upon all the deeds and writings that concerned the estate, which made it difficult for James lord Berkeley to prove his title.

Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, died leaving three daughters coheiresses. Margaret, the eldest, was second wife to John the great earl of Shrewsbury, who had issue by her John, afterwards created viscount Lisle. He with his descendants prosecuted their pretensions against the lords Berkeley with great violence and illegality; and Thomas viscount Lisle, son of John, lost his life at Nibley-green in this quarrel, as related under that parish. But after many years contest, the quiet possession was yielded to the Berkeley family, family, and the earl of Berkeley is the present lord of the manor of Wotton.

Joan Skey, widow, levied a fine of lands in Wotton-underedge to John Walworth and Eleanor his wife, 8 H. 7. John Stanshaw and Humphry his brother levied a fine of lands in Wotton borough, and Wotton forreigne, to William Freame, and others, 12 H. 7. A meadow called the Vineyard in Wotton, formerly belonging to the abbey of Kingswood, was granted to George Huntley, and others, 2 Jac. 1. Two tenements in Wotton, called Spencer's Heye, and Nayler's Heye, with the tithes of the same, belonged to the priory of St. Oswald, in Gloucester, and were granted to Peter Grey and Edward his son 19 Eliz.

TITHINGS and HAMLETS.

There are four tithings in this large parish.

1. Sinwell and Bradley make one tithing. Sinwell adjoins to the borough, and the parish church stands within it. Mr. Web had a good house and estate at Sinwell, at the beginning of this century, which are now the property of Mr. Veel, of Simondshall.

Bradley gave name to an eminent family to whom it belonged, and Hugh de Bradley was living in the reign of king Richard the First. One Serlo died seized of Bradley, and left Agatha and Juliana his two sisters coheiresses; the former married to Henry —, the latter to William de Straton. Anne the widow of Serlo was married to Hugh de Straton, and had the manor of Bradley assigned to her for dower 4 H. 3. Robert de Plesly was seized thereof 29 E. 1. as were Thomas de Luda and Elizabeth his wife in the 33d year of the same reign. Sir Maurice Berkely held this manor 2 H. 4. and sir Maurice Berkeley of Uley died seized of Bradleigh 4 E. 4. John Berkeley died seized of the manor of Bradley 5 Mar. and left Brice Berkeley his brother and heir. Arnold Oldsworth died seized of this place, and left Edward Oldsworth his son, who also died seized of it 4 C. 1. when Robert his son was fourteen years old. This was an antient family descended from the Oldsworths of Yorkshire, and sir Lancelot Halifax, of Halifax, was their ancestor, who died 15 E. 1. Many lands in this place were given by Thomas lord Berkeley to the abbey of St. Austin's in Bristol, for which reason the chief messuage is called Canons Court, and after the dissolution of religious foundations, they were granted to the dean and chapter of Bristol. Bradley came afterwards to Thomas Daws, esq; whose great niece, Mrs. Smart, is the proprietor of Bradley-house, and of a good estate there, and holds Canons Court under the dean and chapter of Bristol.

2. Simondshall and Combe constitute another tithing. Simondshall is the highest ground in all this country. It is for the most part a large plain, with an antient mansion house, which has been the residence of the Veels for many generations. And it is said, that in a clear day, eighteen counties may be seen from some parts of the down near the house. Between this and Bagpath, stands a large barrow, which never having been opened, nothing can be said of the contents of it with certainty, only it is supposed to have been the burying place of some persons who fell in battle hereabout. In the evidences belonging to Bartholomew hospital in Gloucester, of the year 1280, there is an account of a fardel of land lying between the land of Adam de Tedepen on the north, and the land belonging to the church of Symondeshale on the south; which I quote only to shew that there was at that time a church or chapel belonging to this place, but it has been long since disused. In Domesday it is recorded, that 'Half a hide in Symondeshale belonged to the lordship of Berchelai.' The inheritance of this manor has ever since been vested in the proprietors of that lordship, and is now the property of the earl of Berkeley; but the estate is in lease to William Veel, esq; who is descended from a very antient family, which came into England with William the Conqueror.

Combe

¹ Jeffrey le Veel married Maud, daughter and heir of Harding, son of Elias Harding of Hunterford, alias Huntingford, which Elias was younger brother of Robert Fitz-Harding, ancestor of the Berkeley family. He was in great esteem with king John.

Henry le Veel, son of Jeffrey, was living 37 H. 3.

Robert le Veel of Charfield lived in the time of E. 1. and E. 2. and married Hawise, daughter of — le Gore, with whom he had the manor of St. Faggon 25 E. 1.

Sir Peter le Veel, son of Robert, married Hawise, daughter and heir of — Kingston of Tortworth 5 E. 3. and with her had the manor of Tortworth.

Sir Peter le Veel, son of sir Peter, married Cecilia, daughter and heir of — Masley of Charfield, with whom it is said he had the manor of Charfield. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 49 E. 3. and died 20 R. 2.

Sir Peter le Veel, knight, son of sir Peter, married Catherine, daughter and heir of sir John Clevedon. Her second husband was Thomas lord Berkeley.

Thomas Veel, son of sir Peter, (or Pierce) married Hawise —. Her surname seems to have been Torrington, as the arms ascribed to her belong to the Torringtons, viz. Gules, an annulet between two bars Or, in chief a lion passant of the second.

John Veel, son of Thomas, married Margaret —, and died 9 H. 6.

Sir John Veel, son of John, married Alice, daughter of — Brookby. Her arms were Barry undy argent and sable, on a canton gules a mullet Or. He was high sheriff of Gloucestershire 31 H. 6. and died in the 36th year of that reign, leaving two sons, Robert and William.

Robert Veel, the eldest son, married Alice, daughter of John Pointz, esq; and by her had an only daughter and heir Alice, married to sir David Matthews, of Rayder in Glamorganshire, by whom she had four daughters, of whom Margaret, the third daughter, was married to sir William Throckmorton, and carried the manor of Tortworth into that family. I now return to William Veel, second son of sir John Veel, and brother to Robert. He married Susanna, daughter and coheiress of — Vyell, whose arms were Argent, a fess raguly gules between three annulets sable.

William Veel of Over in Almondshury, son of William, married Margaret, daughter of William Fettiplace, of Maiden-Cott in the county of Oxford, whose arms were Gules two chevrons argent.

Edward Veel, eldest son of the last William, married Catherine, daughter of John Holloway.

Edward Veel, son of Edward, married Jane, daughter of George Burley, of White in Wiltshire. But we leave this branch and return to William Veel of Over, who had a third son, of the name of William.

Which

Combe lies eastward of the church. This estate was given by the empress Maud to Nigel de Kingscote, ancestor to the Kingscotes of Kingscote, for his services to her in the wars; but that family was probably dispossessed of it on the change of affairs. Thomas Davis, of Minchin Hampton, esq; died seized of Wotton-Combe 37 H. 8. and left Giles his son eighteen years old; whose son, Francis Davis, died seized of the manor of Wotton-Combe 5 Mar. leaving two daughters coheiresses, of whom Mary, the eldest, was married to William Westden, and Elizabeth, the youngest, was married to John Poll; and they had livery of this manor granted to them the same year. Mr. Hicks had a good estate at Combe, which is descended to the reverend Mr. Somerville, of Bibury, whose mother was daughter of that Mr. Hicks. What sir Robert Atkyns observes of Combe belonging formerly to the abbey of Bordesley in Worcestershire, and of its being granted to Thomas Smith 7 E. 6. is all mistake, and should have been applied to Combe in the parish of Camden.

The Rudge is an estate sometimes in antient writings dignified with the title of a manor. It belonged formerly to the abbey of Kingswood, and was granted to sir Nicholas Pointz 36 H. 8. But Rudge farm belonged to the Pointz's before the above grant, for sir Robert Pointz died seized thereof 12 H. 8. and was succeeded by sir Anthony Pointz, whose son and heir, sir Nicholas Pointz, died seized thereof 4 Mar. and left Nicholas his son twenty-one years old. The manor of Rudge, with a good estate here, is now the property of the reverend Mr. Brereton of Gloucester, in right of his wife.

Nynd is a place in this parish.

3. Wortley is a distinct and populous tithing, where was formerly a chapel of ease, founded by Thomas lord Berkeley, and dedicated to St. John; and William lord Berkeley, earl mareschal and of Nottingham, levied a fine of the advowson of the chapel 3 H. 7. There was also a chantry in this chapel, of which John Collins was the last incumbent, and received a pension of 2*l.* 16*s.* in the year 1553. Willis. John Engayne was seized of Wortley 30 E. 1. It was part of the manor of Wotton, and sold by George lord Berkeley and his mother, by their deed inrolled in chancery, dated 28 Nov. 7 Car. for 1500*l.* to Richard Pool, gent. and his heirs, by the name of a manor. It is now the estate of Matthew Hale, esq; in whose family it has been for several generations.

4. Huntingford is another tithing in this parish. Elias Harding, younger brother of Robert Harding, ancestor to the Berkeley family, died seized of this manor in the reign of king John. John Veale was seized of Huntingford 36 H. 6. Catherine —, an heiress to this manor, was married to Henry Wogan, who died seized of Huntingford 9 H. 8. and left Joan his daughter and heir eleven years old. The manor was then held of the king, as of the hundred of Grumbald's Ash. Mr. Adey has a good estate here, with manerial rights; but lord Berkeley is lord paramount.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a vicarage, in the deanery of Dursley, worth 43*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* from the impropriation; but it has no sort of tithes belonging to it. It has been augmented by a donation from the late Edward Colston, esq; by another from the feoffees of the market, and by queen Anne's bounty; so that the income is now upwards of 100*l.* a year. Christ Church college in Oxford are patrons, and the reverend William Tatterfall, M.A. is the present incumbent. The impropriation belongs to the same college.

The advowson belonged to the nunnery of Berkeley before the Norman conquest, and was

Which William the third son, and brother of the first mentioned Edward Veel, lived at Acton, and married Elianor, daughter of John Gover of Wotton-underedge. Her arms were Argent, on a bend azure a fret Or.

Nicholas Veel of Alveston, son and heir of William, married the daughter of Richard Brydges of Combe, and had issue seven sons, Peter (of whom there was issue remaining about Axbridge in Somersetshire anno 1685) William, Richard, Thomas, Edward, Nicholas, and Philip; and two daughters, Margaret and Maria.

Thomas Veel of Alveston, son of Nicholas, married to his first wife Dorothy, daughter of John Wynneate, of Hampton, com. Middlesex, whose arms were, Sable, a bend argent cotized Or, between six martlets of the second. By his first wife he had one son William, and three daughters, Susanna, Eleanor, and Dorothy, which Dorothy was married to William Holland of Bristol; and Eleanor, the second daughter, was married to Edward Hill of Cam, in this county. He had issue by his second wife, two sons, Nicholas and Thomas; Nicholas Veel was of Olveston in this county, in the commission of the peace, who married Alice, daughter of — Blanchard, of Wroxall in the county of Wilts, and by her had issue an only child Nicholas, who died unmarried. Thomas Veel, second son by the second marriage, married Mary, daughter of Henry Butler, esq. She was buried at Wotton-underedge, and there is now an inscription for her in Wotton church. Thomas Veel, the father, was sequestered in the civil wars, and paid 704*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* and died about the year 1663.

William Veel of Simondshall, son and heir of Thomas, married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Culliford, of the island of Purbeck in Dorsetshire. Her arms were, Argent, a fess between three bulls sable. They had issue two sons, Robert, who died unmarried; and Thomas Veel of Simondshall; also one daughter Margaret, married to Robert Culliford of Southampton.

Thomas Veel, son of William, married Elizabeth, daughter of John Smyth, of Nibley in the county of Gloucester, esq; and by her had issue two sons, Thomas, who died unmarried, and William; also two daughters, Elizabeth, married to the reverend Mr. Thomas Snell, of Bampton in the Bush, com. Oxon; and Anne, married to the reverend Timothy Millechamp, of Newton in Wilts.

William Veel, son of Thomas, was seven years old in 1682. He married Hester, daughter and heir of Robert Web, of Sinwell in Wotton-under-edge, whose arms were, Sable, three escallops in bend argent. They had issue three sons, Thomas, who died unmarried in 1752; Robert, who died unmarried in 1742; and William; also one daughter Elizabeth, married to William Davis, of Slimbridge in this county.

William Veel, third son of the last William, married Anne, eldest daughter and one of the coheiresses of Stephen Compeer of Wotton-underedge, whose arms are Or, on a fess azure between three martlets sable as many cross crozlets fitchy of the field. By her he has issue three sons, William, Robert, and Thomas, now living; and three daughters, Anne, Elizabeth, and Mary. He resides at Simondshall, and is possessed of several good estates in this county. He gives for his arms, Argent, on a bend sable three calves Or. The Crest, A garb Or, ensigned with a ducal coronet gules. Motto, FACE AUT TACE.

treacherously obtained from them by earl Godwin, from whom it came to the crown, and was granted by king Henry the Second to Robert the son of Harding, progenitor to the Berkeley family, and by him given to the monastery of St. Augustine in Bristol. It was appropriated 35 E. 1. and the abbey of St. Augustine was seized of the advowson 3 E. 2. It was again restored to the Berkeley family, and Maurice lord Berkeley granted it to the abbey of Tewkesbury in the reign of king Henry the Seventh. The tithes were again appropriated, and after the dissolution of monasteries, were at different times granted to Christ Church college in Oxford; viz. a portion of tithes in Wotton which belonged to the abbey of Gloucester, and another portion which belonged to the priory of St. Oswald there, were granted to the chapter of Christ Church 33 H. 8. And the rectory of Wotton Subedge, and the advowson of the vicarage, were granted to that college 38 H. 8. which before were in the possession of the abbey of Tewkesbury. Henry lord Berkeley laid claim to this advowson, and by a decree in chancery 3 Eliz. the advowson of Tetbury was given to his lordship, and this of Wotton to Christ Church college.

The tithes of Spencer's Heye and Nayler's Heye in Wotton, which belonged to the before-mentioned priory of St. Oswald, were granted, as already observed, to Peter Grey and Edward his son 19 Eliz. Other tithes and lands in Wotton, which belonged to the same priory, were granted to John Hercey and John Edwards 20 Eliz. And other tithes in Wotton, which belonged to the abbey of Kingwood, were granted to George Huntley and others 2 Jac. 1.

The church is dedicated to the virgin Mary. It stands in the tithing of Sinwell and Bradley. It is large and handsome, consisting of the nave, and two side ailes, with a lofty pinnacled tower at the west end. The earl of Berkeley's arms are in several windows of the church.

There were several chantries in this church; one dedicated to St. Mary, and after the dissolution, the lands belonging to it were granted to Edward Seimour, duke of Somerset, 1 E. 6. and afterwards to William Heirick and Arthur Ingram, 5 Jac. 1. Other chantries were dedicated to the Holy Cross, to St. Nicholas, to St. Catherine, and to All Saints. And there was a house founded in Wotton for friers of the Holy Cross, who obtained licence to purchase a scite and lands to the amount of 10*l.* a year, 23 E. 3.

Monuments and Inscriptions.

There is a large handsome tomb of grey marble in the north aile, with two figures engraven on brass plates, in memory of Thomas lord Berkeley, the fourth of that name, and of the lady Margaret his wife, sole heirefs of Gerrard Warren, lord Lisle. There is no inscription upon the tomb, but he died in 1417, and his lady in 1392.

Upon a large monument of white marble, are the following inscriptions:

Likewise was interred near this place, the body of Thomas Dawes of Bradley, Esq^r. who died the 4th day of July A. D. 1713 in the 62^d year of his age, Lamented by All that knew him, because when living he was doing good to all. He was devout and constant in religious exercises, hospitable and generous in his house, kind and charitable to the poor, meek in his temper, affable and pleafant in conversation, courteous and benevolent to all men. He was a loving Husband, a good Master, and a faithful Friend. But why should we praise him by our Words whose Works both praise and follow him and are an example for our Imitation.

Lastly, Here lie reposed the only mortal Remains of Lydia Dawes

Relict of y^e Said Th. Dawes, Esq^r who Died 15 Feb. 1739
 Ag. 88. Who most amiably conjugal in every Virtue of His, as well as in her Love towards Him, not only bore a part in those excellent Graces that adorn'd Him living, but after his Death, ingrafting, as it were, upon Her Self the whole, Shone forth a most illustrious Pattern of every humane and Christian Virtue. Sincerely pious, unaffectedly Devout, Munificent, Hospitable, Charitable, Affable, & Courteous.

Stranger (if such Thou Sh^d be to her Vertues) drop a Tear. Lament the Degeneracy of thy Times, and teach thy Self from this faint & too Faithless Record of her Merit, to imitate whom Thou must so Shortly Follow.

The monument is ornamented with the arms of Dawes, viz. Azure, three mullets argent, 2 and 1.

On a large marble pyramidal monument are the two following inscriptions, written by the side of each other:

To the Memory of DANIEL ADEY, Esq^r. of Combe, who having thro' Life approv'd Himself a Character of Piety, Virtue, and general Usefulness to Mankind, left this World for the Rewards of a better on y^e 4th of Feb. 1752, aged 86.

To the Memory also of ELIZABETH his Wife, who died March 5th 1717, aged 52.

DANIEL, & FREDERICK, two Sons of THO^s CURTIS of the City of BRISTOL, Esq; His Grandsons, were buried here.

To the Memory also of DANIEL ADEY, Esq^r. of Sinwell, who died on the 11th of Nov. 1763, aged 67 Years.

Mrs. BRIDGED ADEY, the Wife of DANIEL ADEY, Esq; of SINWELL, was Here buried on the 11th of October 1740, in y^e 41st year of her age.

Interred Here also lye six of their Sons and two Daughters, with two Children unbaptised. One other Son lies buried at WICKWAR.

Over the first inscription are these arms, Baron and femme, 1. Argent, on a bend azure three leopards faces caboshed Or, for Adey. impaling 2. Azure, three cinquefoils argent, on a chief indented Or, three annulets gules.

Over the second inscription, Adey, as before, impaling Azure, a lion rampant argent, for Crew.

Also John Nelmes, Esq;

A very estimable Pattern of Temperance, Prudence, Integrity, and Justice, Utetul in Council, careful in Trust, and steady in Principle. He discharged with a becoming Credit the various Duties of Life in w^{ch} he was concerned. He was an uncommon Example of Patience, & even Cheerfulness (that Temper so peculiarly Christian) in as uncommon a series of Pain & Torture, from which God was graciously pleased to release him on 15 Nov. 1742, Aged 61.

Inscribed on an elegant marble monument, ornamented with the arms of Adey:

This Monument

Arms, Or, two bars azure, in chief a lion passant of the second.

Benefactions.

Lady Catherine Berkeley, widow of Thomas lord Berkeley, founded a free grammar school in this place 8 R. 2. and endowed it with forty marks a year. A licence to purchase land in Nubbely, Stancombe, and Woodmancot, for its maintenance, was obtained at the same time; and Walter Burnel, and others, were made feoffees of two acres, seven messuages, and a garden in Wot-ton-underedge, for the use of the same school.
The master is appointed by the Smyths of Nibley, and the bishop of the diocese is visitor. The master has 40*l.* a year, and a house. Ten boys have 4*l.* a year each from ten to eighteen years of age, who wear caps and gowns. There is besides an overplus of income of about 20*l.* a year, applied to the maintaining one or more of the boys at the university, or putting them out apprentices.

Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, descended from the Berkeley family, founded an hospital at Warwick 13 Eliz. for twelve poor men, wounded in the wars; but if there should be none such, then two poor men out of Wotton-underedge are to be placed in the hospital.

Lady Anne, countess of Warwick, gave the new Tolsy to the use of the town, and the rest of the tenements belonging to it to the poor.
She likewise built an almshouse at Cheney in Buckinghamshire, 38 Eliz. and appointed that two of the almsfolks should be from this place, with an allowance of 5*l.* a year each. Henry lord Berkeley, upon agreement with her for the manor of Wotton, confirmed this donation 7 Jac. 1.

Sir Richard Venn, knight, alderman of London, and a native of this parish, gave 10*l.* a year to the poor.

poor, charged on his lands in Wotton and Nibley. He also gave two large silver flaggons for the service of the communion table, besides other gifts to the town and poor.

Hugh Venn, of this parish, clothier, gave 20*s.* a year out of lands in North Nibley, and a tenement in Dursley, worth 30*s.* a year, to the poor.

Margaret Mallows, of London, widow, gave money, with which Causeway-mead and Mill-mead were purchased, for the use of the poor, by deed dated Dec. 1, 1619, 17 Jac.

Hugh Perry, esq; alderman of London, and a native of this place, built an almshouse for six men and six women, with a chapel, and appointed a weekly lecture to be preached in the parish church, and prayers to be read twice a week to the almspeople, for which the minister receives 5*l.* a year. The lectureship, afterwards increased with 6*l.* a year by Richard Meads, is now 18*l.* a year, and is given to six clergymen. He gave lands worth 50*l.* a year, and upwards, for the maintenance of his charity; and in 1630, joined with his father-in-law, sir Richard Venn, in erecting an aqueduct to convey water from a spring in Edbrook-field to the market-crofs.

Sir Jonathan Dawes, sheriff of London, and son of Robert Dawes of this parish, clothier, left 1000*l.* with which his widow purchased lands in Hill, for the use of the poor, and the application of the rents has since been settled by decree in chancery.

William and Robert Hyett, nephews of sir Jonathan Dawes, gave 600*l.* to the poor of this their native place; which sum was laid out in the purchase of lands at Wotton and Berkeley, in or about 1693.

Thomas Dawes, of Bradley, esq; gave an estate at Bournstream, worth near 30*l.* a year, to the poor; and likewise gave a fire-engine to the town.

Joan Gower, or Cooper, widow, gave a tenement and close in Bradley-street in Wotton, worth 4*l.* a year, to the poor.

Robert Webb, of Sinwell, clothier, gave 4*s.* weekly to be distributed every Sunday to the poor, and 40*s.* yearly to forty poor householders, at 1*s.* each, on St. Thomas day, for ever; the money to be paid out of an estate called the Grange in Kingswood.

Robert Hale, of Alderley, esq; father of lord chief justice Hale, gave the reversion of an estate in Rangeworthy, worth 26*l.* a year, to the poor. And Margaret Hale, widow, gave the reversion of lands in Rockhampton, worth 7*l.* a year, to the same use.

The old almshouse, and eighteen tenements beside, are given for the benefit of the poor, but the donor is not known.

The church house, with the tenements in Simlane, a tenement near the Horse-pool, and William Wallington's house, are given for the repair of the church.

Richard Meades, alderman of this town, gave 6*l.* a year to six ministers for preaching a lecture, as already mentioned, and a like sum to be distributed annually on the 2d of February, to the poor; no person to have more than 5*s.* nor less than 2*s.* 6*d.* each.

The feoffees of the market, with the approbation of the mayor and aldermen, gave 50*l.* towards recovering the grammar school, and settling it in trustees; 100*l.* towards improving the vicarage; and 80*l.* towards the maintenance of the curate.

John Okes, M.A. a native of this place, by his will, gave 600*l.* and upwards for the use of the church of Wotton, and 20*l.* to the poor; and bequeathed his library to the parish.

George lord Berkeley built the old gallery in the year 1626.

Mrs. Sarah Winston, in 1686, gave a large silver paten for the communion table.

The honourable colonel Morton gave the timber for the charity working school, in the year 1714.

Mr. William Bailey, of this parish, clothier, in 1721, gave 20*l.* to the poor, and 20*l.* in trust for the use of the charity school, for ever.

Richard Osborne, of Wortley, esq; in 1722, gave 3*l.* per ann. viz. 10*s.* for a charity sermon, and 50*s.* to the charity school.

Mrs. Mary Blagden, of Nind, in the year 1723, gave 20*l.* in trust, to be distributed every Good Friday in bread to the poor of the hospital; and 10*l.* for the benefit of the charity school.

In 1734, Mr. Thomas Blagden gave a crimson velvet pulpit cloth.

In 1748, Richard Osborne, esq; gave a crimson velvet cloth for the communion table, and two silver plates for the offertory.

William Moore, esq; gave the rich chandelier, in 1763.

The same year, Mr. Robert Purnell bequeathed 550*l.* for bread for such poor inhabitants as have not received alms; and 100*l.* to the charity school.

And in 1769, Mr. Edward Bearpacker gave 100*l.* to the charity school.

and Yate 12 E. 4. Mr. Stokes is the present owner of Stanshaw, where he has a good house and estate. His arms are, Sable, a lion rampant, his tail double, ermine; and the family arms upon the monument at Wickwar should have been the same.

Brimskam is another manor in this parish, which continued for many generations in the name and family of the Burnells, from the reign of king Edward the Third. Thomas Burnell, the last heir male of that family, married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Chester, of Knole, esq; and dying without issue, gave this manor to Thomas Chester, brother to his wife.

One part of the parish is distinguished by the name of Church End, the other by Hall End. In the latter division the late Richard Hill, esq; had a good estate, which is now the property of Mr. Veel, of Simondshall.

Of the Church, &c.

The church is a rectory, in the deanery of Hawkesbury, worth about 190*l.* a year, to which the reverend Mr. Thomas Tournay, (now D.D.) was presented in 1765, by William Tournay, esq; patron for that turn only. The glebe is worth about 80*l.* a year.

The church is dedicated to St. Mary. It is built with a cross aisle on each side. The chancel has also an aisle on each side; and there is a large handsome tower at the west end. The south aisle belongs to the manor of Stanshaw, and the north aisle to that of Yate.

The lands which belonged to a chapel in this church were granted to Francis Maurice and Richard Moor 6 Jac.

Vivit post funera Virtus.

The arms are obliterated.

There is a monument for William Mason, rector of this parish, who died in 1740, and for his wife, and several of their family, with their arms, viz. Baron and femme, 1. Party per pale Or and azure, a chevron counterchanged between three billets sable, for Mason. 2. Argent, on a chevron gules three roses of the field.—There are also memorials for Richard Hill, of this parish, esq; who died in 1755.—For Mary Rouse, daughter of Thomas Rouse of Wotton-underedge, esq; who died in 1759.—For Richard Wallington, rector of this parish, who died in 1764.—And for Thomas Blagden; but there is nothing in them that can be the least instructive or entertaining.

At the beginning of this century, there were 80 houses, and about 320 inhabitants in this parish, whereof 26 were freeholders; yearly births 8, and burials 7. Atkyns. But it appears by the register, that the average of baptisms in ten years, beginning with 1700, was 10.4, and of burials 7.7. And in the same number of years, beginning with 1760, the average of baptisms was 13.6, and of burials 12.1; by which it appears that the parish increases in population, and there are now about 412 inhabitants.

NUMBER IV.

The Order of the Court of Exchequer concerning the Miners digging Mine, Ore, and Cinders, in the Forest of Dean.

Glouc' Hillary, 10 Jac.

WHEREAS the 25th day of May, in Easter Term last, the court was informed by his majesty's attorney general, that the king's majesty by his letters patent under the great seal of England, had granted to the Right Hon. the Earl of Pembroke (inter alia) the mine, ore, and cinders, to be found out and gotten within the forest of Dean in the county of Gloucester for 21 years, for the yearly rent of 243*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* and that to the prejudice of his majesty's farmer, one Thomas Monjoye the elder, Thomas Monjoye, the younger, John Hill, and others, mine diggers, and carriers of mine and cinders within the said forest, do daily dig and carry away out of the said forest the mine and ore there gotten; whereupon it was then ordered, that his majesty's writ of injunction under the seal of this court should be awarded to the said parties, commanding them and every of them, upon pain of 500*l.* not to carry nor transport any of the mine and cinders to be digged or gotten in the said forest, except they should shew good cause to this court by or before the first Saturday of Trinity term then ensuing, and thereupon the court would then take other order, as by the said recited order it plainly appears; whereupon the said Monjoye and other the said parties before mentioned came and by Mr. Escoute of their counsel named, informing this court that they were poor labouring men, and were wholly sustained, with their wives and families, by digging and carrying of such mine, ore, and cinder; acknowledging, as well by their answer to the said information as by the counsel at the bar, the foil to be his majesty's, and that they had no interest therein, humbly praying they might be permitted to continue their digging and carrying the said mine, ore, and cinders, as they had been accustomed, having no other means to relieve their poor estates; whereof the court taking due consideration, and upon the humble submission of the said parties for their offences formerly past, and considering also that his majesty's farmer the said iron works, paying a great rent should not be furnished of matter to keep his forges in work if the said ore and cinder should be carried away; it pleased the court to move that the said parties before named, and such others as have been accustomed to dig and get mine, ore, and cinder, in the said forest, of charity and grace, and not of right, might be permitted, for the maintenance of their wives and children, who must by means of their labour live, to continue to dig for the said mine, ore, and cinders, to be carried to his majesty's forge and iron works within the said forest, and not to any other place; and being paid for the same according to such rates as they have been accustomed to sell to other men before his majesty leased the same; to which motion his said majesty's said attorney general, in consideration of the said poor men's estates, did assent, it being as good for his majesty's farmer to employ those that are always exercised in the said works as others; and thereupon it was then ordered by such consent as aforesaid, that the said parties above named, and such others as have been accustomed to dig and get mine, ore, and cinders, in the said forest, should, of charity and grace, and not of right, be permitted to continue the digging and getting of the said ore and cinders, so as they carry, or cause the same to be carried to his majesty's iron works and forges, receiving for the same such rateable price as they had been usually accustomed to sell to other men before his majesty leased the same, until such time as by the cause now depending by English bill, brought in the names of divers of the inhabitants by way of petition, their claims in the said forest shall be heard and decreed, and thereupon this court will take other order: And for the better performance of the said order, it was then also further ordered by the court, that his majesty's writ of injunction should be awarded to the said parties aforesaid, to Thomas Maddock, John Gwilym, John Fryer, and to all other the inhabitants, diggers, miners, and workmen in the said forest, for the due observing and performing of the said order, upon pain of 100 l. to be levied upon him that should break the same. Now, upon the motion of Mr attorney general this day in court, shewing, that notwithstanding the said former order and injunction, divers persons inhabiting within the said forest, have, since the said order, carried out of the said forest great quantities of cinder and mine ore unto other places, and not unto the king's works within the said forest, as by the affidavit of William Whiteloot, of the parish of Chapel Hill, in the county of Monmouth, wire-drawer, made the 28th day of October, in Michaelmas term last past, and this day read in court, appeareth; and that thereupon process of attachment being awarded against some of the said persons for the said contempts, some of them have appeared this day in person, the court again entered into consideration of some course to be taken for the moderate carrying away of the said mine, ore, and cinder, from the king's works in the said forest, to other places out of the said forest, and yet having regard to the poverty of the said inhabitants, who receive most part of their maintenance and relief thereby, for the better establishing the said matter hereafter have thought fit, and it is this day so ordered, that the inhabitants of the said forest who have heretofore used to dig and carry mine ore, and cinder, shall be permitted, of favour and grace, and not of right, to continue the same until the hearing of the said cause now depending by English bill as aforesaid, so as they carry the same, or offer it, to the king's works; and if the same shall be refused by the farmers, or other officers of his majesty's works, then the said diggers and carriers of mine and cinders may sell the same to any other works within and near about the said forest, for the service of such works; and further, that no new diggers or carriers of mine and cinder, whereof the court is informed there are very many, shall hereafter be allowed, but only such poor men as are inhabitants of the said forest: And it is further ordered, that a commission shall be drawn, with articles thereunto annexed, by such as follow for the king, and the same to be shewed to the defendant's council; upon which, if they cannot agree, then the barons will consider thereof, as also of the commissioners to be therein nominated, which commissioners shall have power to appoint what number of new diggers and carriers shall be allowed, and to consider of their estate, quality, and condition, and at what rate they and all other the diggers and carriers of mine, ore, and cinder, shall sell the same to the king's works, consideration being had of the distance of places where the cinder and ore are digged, and the king's works to which they shall be carried, and to set down such prices for the said mine, ore and cinders, as shall be thought fitting in respect of their labour therein; and also when and in what manner they shall be paid for the same. And, as touching the two defendants, Randal Marks and William Sbborns, now appearing upon the aforesaid attachments, it is ordered that they may, in the mean time till the commission be executed, carry their ore and cinder to the king's works, at such rates and prices as have been heretofore most usually paid to them for the like, to be paid to them every two months, when the same shall be measured, and the rest of the said inhabitants, who have used to dig and carry mine, ore, and cinders, as aforesaid, are in the like manner permitted to do; and if the farmer of the king's works refuse to give the said rates as is above mentioned, and such other further rates as shall be appointed by the aforesaid commissioners, then they are left at liberty to carry the same elsewhere, at their pleasures to other works within and near about the said forest, for the service of such other works: And touching the contempts of them, and all the other said persons, the court is pleased to suspend them till the hearing of the said cause.

NUMBER V.

A Paper delivered by the Inhabitants of the Forest, &c. to the Right Hon. Henry Lord Herbert, Lord Lieutenant of the County of Gloucester, and Constable of the Castle of St. Briavell's, and the rest of his Majesty's Commissioners for the Forest of Dean.

WE who have hereunto subscribed, being freeholders and inhabitants of the several parishes, towns, villages, and places, within the hundred of St. Briavell's and the perambulation of the forest of Dean, within the county of Gloucester, and adjacent parishes thereunto, that is to say, St. Briavell's, Newland, Huddsfield, Staunton, Bicknor, Ruandean, the Lea, Mitchell Dean, Little Dean, Flaxley, Bleedon, Abenhall, Newham, Awre, Lidney, Alvington, Manor of Rodley, and Long Hope, taking into consideration the exceeding great trouble your honours must of necessity be at, if every lawful commoner should bring in his claim, or severally make out his just right to common of pastures, pannage, and estovers, that is to say, of house boot, fire boot, hay-boot, and other privileges, which he hath within the waste soil of the said forest of Dean, and the 18,000 acres formerly part thereof, but lately disafforested by his majesty's letters patent to Sir John Wintour, knight, have thought fit, as well on behalf of all the freeholders and inhabitants within the parishes, towns, villages, and places as aforesaid, as of ourselves alone, to present unto your honours, as in our claim (which we acknowledge to be unlawful, were it to be so done at a justice seat) the ancient, lawful, and just rights and privileges, which we, they, and those whose estate we and they do hold, have had, taken, and enjoyed for divers hundreds of years last past, until the usurped power of the late Oliver Cromwell, as by the claim hereafter following more fully doth and may appear.

The aforesaid freeholders and inhabitants within the several parishes, towns, villages, and places, of the hundred of St. Briavell's, do say, and each of them jointly, and severally, and respectively, for themselves, and every of them, saith: That by reason of their attendance and suit of court at the castle and manor of St. Briavell's aforesaid, and by reason that the said parishes, villages, and hundred, are within the perambulation of the forest of Dean; they have used and enjoyed in the said forest, and in the woods and wastes of the same, as belonging to their ancient messuages, lands, and tenements, common of pasture, herbage, and pannage, for all their commonable cattle, all times of the yearly freely, without attachment; and also common of estovers to be taken in the woods of the said forest; that is to say, house boot, for the reparation and amendment of their ancient messuages, houses and edifices of husbandry thereunto belonging, and hay-boot for making inclosures about the same, and also convenient and necessary fire-boot to be spent in their said ancient messuages, and also liberty to dig and get lime-stone, tile-stone, and other stones necessary to be employed in and upon the said ancient messuages, lands, and tenements, and also to get and to make mill-stones and grindstones, under and according to the government of the court of swanimote, and attachments, within the said forest; paying therefore into his majesty's exchequer the yearly rent of one penny, called swine silver or herbage money, and one penny called smoke penny, or mark money, for every house in the said hundred, as by ancient records it doth and may appear. And the miners and colliers within the said hundred do say, that they and every of them have had, and do claim liberty to dig and get mine and coal in all places within the said forest at their pleasure and liberty; also to have and take sufficient timber within the said woods for their necessary support, and building of the said mines and coal works, according to their ancient usage and customs rents and duties to his majesty for the same. And the freeholders and inhabitants of the hundred of Bledloe do claim the same, and the like common pasture, herbage, pannage, estovers, house boot, and other the profits and commodities as unto their said ancient messuages, lands, and tenements belonging or appertaining, and under the same, or the like rents the hundred of St. Briavell's do pay. The tenants and owners of lands and tenements ments in the lordships of the dutchy, and Longhope, claim common of pasture and pannage, and dead and dry wood only, to be had and taken within the waste and woods of the said forest. The town and parish of St. Briavell's say, that they usually have had and taken within the waste of his majesty called Huddennalls, liberty to take and cut wood there, at all times, at their pleasure, without view or attachment of any officer whatsoever of the said forest; and for their and every of their several and respective titles to this their claim, they say, and all those whose estates they have in the said several messuages, lands, tenements, and buildings aforesaid, have usually had, and used and enjoyed the said liberties, privileges, and franchises, from the time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, according to the form, force, and effect, of their said claim. And we whose names are underwritten, apprehending the gracious inclination of his sacred majesty and his parliament towards the preservation of wood and timber in the said forest of

Dean, and in the sense of public advantage to his majesty and the kingdom, do humbly offer and propose, on behalf of ourselves, and all other the freeholders in the said forest, to bind ourselves by any lawful act, to forbear our claims and rights to wood and timber in the said forest, for so long time as his majesty shall be graciously pleased to suspend the employing of his iron works, and cutting the woods of the said forest, provided that our rights and claims before mentioned be secured unto us after the said time of forbearance as aforesaid; and that we, and all the inhabitants of the said forest, may be freed from the power and exercise of the forest laws, upon any of our and their particular lands and inheritance; and that we humbly desire, that the 18,000 acres may be reafforested, and that the letters patent for the sale thereof to Sir John Wintour, knt. may be made void, and that the forest law may be put in execution on the waste ~~of~~ of the said forest, whereby the woods and timber may be the better preserved.

NUMBER VI.

The present CHARTER of the City of GLOUCESTER.

CHARLES the Second, by the grace of God king of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Whereas our city of Gloucester, and county or vill of the city of Gloucester, hath of long time been a burrough and vill very antient and populous, and by its situation borders upon the bank of the famous navigable river of Severn; where also into the spacious haven of the same city, called the Key, ships and boats laden with goods, as well to be exported as imported, by the daily ebbing and flowing of the sea, continually do arrive: And whereas the citizens and burgeses of the said burrough, vill, or city, as well by land as by water, have, use, and enjoy, divers franchises and privileges, by virtue of several charters and letters patents, by our late most dear father, king Charles, of blessed memory, and divers other of our progenitors and predecessors, late kings and queens of England; and also by us to them and their predecessors heretofore granted; and also by prescription and customs in the aforesaid city or haven observed and kept: And whereas our beloved subjects the mayor and burgeses of our city of Gloucester aforesaid, have under their common seal surrendered up our charter, bearing date on the 16th day of November in the 16th year of our reign to them before granted; which surrender we have accepted, and by these presents do accept: And whereas the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester have humbly besought us to grant anew to them the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester aforesaid, and their successors, all and all manner of liberties, franchises, privileges, freedoms, inheritances, and rights whatsoever, in the said former charters and grants of our ancestors contained; and that we would be pleased to confirm them for the future for ever: And that we, for the better government of the city aforesaid, would join the citizens and burgeses of the city of Gloucester, by whatsoever name or names of incorporation they were heretofore incorporated, or whether they were before incorporated or not, in one body politic, by the name of the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester in the county of the same city; and that we would by our letters patents ratify and confirm it, or by what other means shall seem to us expedient:

We therefore willing that in the city of Gloucester aforesaid, there may be one certain and undoubted manner of form and rule for the keeping of the peace and government of the people there; and that the said city may henceforward be and remain a city of peace and quietness, and as we hope, for the terror of evil doers, and the reward of those that do well; and that our peace and other acts of justice may be well and truly there kept; and hoping, that if the said burgeses and inhabitants of the city aforesaid, do by this our grant enjoy their liberties and privileges, that then they will hold themselves especially bound to exhibit and employ their utmost powers and endeavours in the service of us, our heirs and successors: Know ye, That we, in consideration of your faithful service to us heretofore done, and hereafter to be done, of our special grace and favour, of our own accord and mere motion, have willed, ordained, constituted, declared, and granted, and by this present charter do will, ordain, constitute, declare, and grant, that our city and vill of Gloucester for the future for ever, be named and called by the name of the city of Gloucester, in the county of the city of Gloucester; and that the said city of Gloucester, in the county or vill of the city of Gloucester, henceforth for ever may and shall be one free city and county of itself; and that the citizens, burgeses, and inhabitants of the city aforesaid, who at the time of the aforesaid surrender, were burgeses or freemen of the city aforesaid, and their successors, may, and shall hereafter be by virtue of these presents, one body corporate and political, by the name of the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester in the county of the city of Gloucester.

And we do for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents grant, erect, make, appoint, confirm, and declare them, a body corporate and political, really and fully, by the name of the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester, and of the county of the city of Gloucester, and by the same name may have a perpetual succession; and that they, by the name of the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester, and of the county of the same city, may, and shall hereafter for ever be fit persons, and in law capable of having, getting, receiving, and possessing manors, lands and tenements, liberties, privileges, jurisdictions, franchises, and inheritances, of what nature and kind soever they be, to them and their successors in fee, or for ever, or for term of a year or years, or any otherwise howsoever: As also goods or chattels, or any other things, of what kind, name, nature, or quality soever. As likewise, to have and retain all manors, lands, and tenements, liberties, privileges, jurisdictions, franchises, and inheritances whatsoever: As also, all goods and chattels of which they were any way seized or possessed before the aforesaid surrender: And also, to give, grant, let, set, assign, or dispose of manors, lands, tenements, and inheritances, and to do and execute all things by that name; and by the same name, the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester in the county of the city of Gloucester, may plead and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended, in all courts and places, and before all judges, justices, and other persons and officers of us, our heirs and successors whatsoever; and all others in all and singular actions, suits, plaints, causes, matters, and demands, of what kind or nature soever, in the same manner and form as all other our liege subjects of this kingdom of England, being any other body politic or incorporate within our kingdom of England, and fit men and capable in law, may have, get, receive, possess, enjoy, retain, give, grant, let, set, assign, or dispose of, plead and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended, do, promise, and execute.

And that the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester aforesaid, and their successors, have for ever a common seal, to be used in whatsoever business may happen to them, or their successors: And be it lawful for the same the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, from time to time at their pleasure, to break, change, alter, and make anew the said seal, as to them shall seem good.

And whereas, ever since the memory of man, there was a custom within the said village, burrough, or city of Gloucester aforesaid, that certain capital burgeses of the same burrough, city, or village, in number sometimes more, sometimes less, who by the rest of the burgeses were thought most discreet, were chosen into the common council of the said burrough, vill, or city; and that upon the death of any one or more of them, that some one or more of the said burrough, village, or city, was chosen freely, and without any constraint or compulsion, into the common council of the said burrough, vill, or city, aforesaid: We therefore, at the humble petition of the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester, intending and designing to reduce the number of the said capital burgeses to a greater certainty, do will, and for us our heirs, and successors, by these presents grant to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that for the future for ever there are, and shall be within the city aforesaid, thirty capital burgeses at the least, and not more than forty, to be chosen out of all the burgeses, who shall be named the common council of the city of Gloucester: And that there be, and shall be, twelve of the burgeses aforesaid, being of the common council of the city aforesaid, (in the form in these presents following, chosen and appointed) who shall be named aldermen of the city city aforesaid, and that there be, and shall be, one of the aldermen aforesaid (as in the form in these presents following chosen and appointed) who shall be named mayor of the city of Gloucester aforesaid; and that the other eleven aldermen of the city, for the time being, be from time to time respectively assistant in council to the mayor of the said city for the time being, in all matters, causes, and businesses, any ways touching or concerning the government of the city aforesaid; and that the rest of the common council of the same city shall all and every of them attend and assist the mayor and aldermen of the city aforesaid for the time being, in all matters, causes, and businesses, concerning the said city, whensoever they, or either of them, shall be summoned or called by the command of the mayor and aldermen, or the major part of them.

Also our will and pleasure is, and we by these presents do grant for us, our heirs and successors, to the said mayor and burgesses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that their successors for ever have one honourable man, and learned in the laws of this our kingdom of England (as in the form in these presents following) who shall be named Recorder of the city of Gloucester aforesaid, from time to time to execute all things belonging to his office, for the public good of the same city.

And our farther will and pleasure is, and we, for us our heirs and successors, by these presents grant to the mayor and burgesses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the mayor, aldermen, and the rest of the common council of the city of Gloucester, for the time being, or major part of them, who upon public summons have gathered together, and if upon any such occasion their votes happen to be equal, that then that part of whom the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being is one, may, and shall have from time to time, full power and authority of making, ordaining, and constituting such laws, statutes, and decrees, in writing, as shall seem safe, honest, and necessary, according to the discretion of them, or the major part of them, or in equal votes to that part of them whereof the mayor for the time being is one, for the good rule and government of the city aforesaid, and of all and singular officers, ministers, artificers, inhabitants, or residents, within the city aforesaid, or the liberties or suburbs of the same; and for a model in what method or order they the said mayor and burgesses of the city aforesaid, and all and singular officers, ministers, burgesses, tradesmen, or residents, within the said city or liberties, or suburbs of the same, may behave themselves, and use, exercise, and perform their several and respective offices, functions, and trades, for the public good and profit of the said city, and for the well managing of all things whatsoever, touching and concerning the government and good provision for the said city.

And that they the said mayor, burgesses, and common council of the city aforesaid, or the major part of them, or in case of equal votes, that party whereof the mayor of the city for the time being is one, having ordained, made, and established, any institutions and decrees of this kind, may punish the offenders against the laws and institutions of this nature, by imprisonment of body, by fines, and amerciaments, or by either of them, as for the better observation of the said laws and institutions shall seem necessary, fit, and requisite, to the said mayor, aldermen, or common council men, or the major part of them, or in equal vote to that part whereof the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being is one, to appoint, limit, and provide; and that the sheriffs, and other ministers and officers of the city aforesaid, may have power to levy the said fines or amerciaments by distress or otherwise, at their pleasure, for the use of the said mayor and burgesses of the city and their successors, without any hindrance from us, our heirs or successors, or from any officer or officers, or minister of us, our heirs or successors, or without any account thereof to be given to us, our heirs or successors. All which respective laws or institutions made or to be made, we will to be observed under the penalties in them contained; provided that such laws, institutions, imprisonments, fines, and amerciaments be reasonable, and not repugnant, nor contrary to the laws, statutes, customs, or rights, of our kingdom of England.

And for the better execution of our will and grant in this part mentioned, we have assigned, named, appointed, and made, and by these presents do, for us, our heirs and successors, assign, name, appoint, and make our well beloved Henry Fowler, esq; the present mayor of the city aforesaid; farther willing, that the said Henry Fowler continue in the office of mayor of the city aforesaid, from the date of these presents, until the Monday next ensuing the feast of St. Michael the archangel next; and that then one other of the aldermen of the city aforesaid be duly chosen and sworn to the office of mayor, according to the ordinances and provisions in these presents following expressed and declared, if the said Henry Fowler shall so long live, unless in the mean while he be duly removed from his office, according to the ordinances and provisions hereafter in these presents expressed.

And we have also assigned, named, created, appointed, and made, and do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, assign, name, create, appoint, and make our well beloved Sir William Morton, knt. one of our justices of our court of common pleas, before us, wheresoever we may be, to be holden, to be the present recorder of the city aforesaid; farther willing, that the said Sir William Morton shall continue in the office of recorder of the city aforesaid during his natural life, from the date of these presents, unless he shall be duly removed from that office by surrender, or according to the ordinances and provisions in these presents hereafter expressed.

Also we have assigned, named, created, appointed, and made, and do by these presents assign, name, create, appoint, and make, Henry Norwood, William Cooke, Duncombe Colchester, esquires, Henry Bret, William Selwyn, esquires, William Russel, Thomas Price, John Wagstaffe, the aforesaid Henry Fowler, John Guithens, Thomas Aram, and John Rogers, to be the present aldermen of the city aforesaid; and in that office respectively to be continued from the date of these presents, during the natural life of them, and either of them, unless in the mean time, for their ill government and behaviour in their office, or for any offence or offences, default or defaults, by them committed and done, they or any of them, according to the orders and provisions in that case made and provided, be duly and lawfully from that office removed.

We have likewise assigned, nominated, created, appointed and made, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents nominate, create, appoint, and make, William Lambe and Samuel Rose, to be the present bailiffs of the city of Gloucester, and sheriffs of the said city and county of the same, to be continued in that office respectively, from the date of these presents until the Monday next following the feast of St. Michael the archangel; and that then two more of the burgesses of the city aforesaid, being of the common council, shall be duly chosen and sworn, according to the orders and provisions in these presents hereafter following expressed and declared, if the said William Lamb and Samuel Rose, or either of them, shall so long live, unless in the mean time they, or either of them, be (according to the orders and provisions in these presents hereafter expressed) duly removed.

We have also assigned, nominated, created, appointed, and made, and do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors assign, nominate, create, appoint, and make, John Powell, esq; Robert Halford, John Marston, Francis Singleton, Arnold Aram, William Lambe, Samuel Rose, William Jordan, John Price, Thomas Luge, Matthias Bower, Richard Stephens, Nicholas Phelps, Giles Weblye, John Cromwell, John Campion, Joseph Ludlow, Walter Vecie, Joseph Phelps, Thomas Goffinge, Daniel Comeline, John Perkes, John Webb, William Corfeley, Cornelius Plott, Daniel Collins, Nicholas Lane, and John Bishop, to be of the common council of the said city, and to be continued in the office of common council men from the date of these presents, during the natural life or lives of them, and every of them, unless in the mean time for their ill government and behaviour in that office, or for any fault or offence by them, or any of them, committed and done, or to be committed and done, they, or either of them, shall, according to the laws, provisions and orders hereafter expressed, be from that office duly removed.

And our farther will and pleasure is, and we have ordered, that if any of the aldermen, sheriffs, or bailiffs afore named, or either of them, or any other burgess of the common council aforesaid, shall, upon notice given, refuse to take upon him the burthen of any office of this kind, as of alderman, bailiff, sheriff, or common council man, that then in that case it shall be lawful for the mayor and burgesses of the city aforesaid, to chuse another alderman, bailiff, sheriff, or common council man, instead of him so refusing; and, in such an election, to proceed as if the said alderman, bailiff, sheriff, or common council man were dead, or lawfully removed from his office.

And we farther will, and by these presents ordain, that, if any one of the aldermen or burgesses of the common council afore named were not a freeman of the city aforesaid, at the time of the surrender aforesaid, that then, and in that case, such alderman and burgess, having within one month next after the date of these presents taken the sacrament respectively required by due form of law, he shall be admitted and made a freeman of the city aforesaid; and notwithstanding his defect at admission, yet the sacrament respectively required being first taken, he shall, by vertue of these letters patents, be for ever reputed a freeman of the city aforesaid, to all intents and purposes whatsoever; and shall continue alderman, or common council man, in the same manner and form as he could, or ought, if he had been a freeman at the time of the surrender aforesaid, any defect of admission to the contrary notwithstanding.

And we farther will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgesses of the city of Gloucester aforesaid, that the mayor, aldermen, and common council men of the city aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, or in equal votes, that part or equal number of them, whereof the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being is one, may have full power and authority to chuse such, and so many of the most honest and discreet burgeses to make up the number of thirty in the common council in the whole at the least; or to increase that number, so that they exceed not the number of forty at the most, as shall seem expedient to them, the mayor, aldermen, and common council men aforesaid, or the major part of them, to be the rest of the burgeses of the common council of the city aforesaid, being thirty at the least, and not above forty at the most; and that the said burgeses so chosen into the common council, shall remain and continue in the said office, during the natural lives of them or either of them, unless they, or either of them, shall for any faults by them, or either of them, committed and done, or to be committed and done, by the mayor, aldermen, and common council, or the major part of them; or in case of equal votes, by that part whereof the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being is one, be from that office lawfully and duly removed.

And whereas Richard the III, late king of England, by his letters patents, willed and ordained, that there should be an yearly election made, as well of the mayor of the city aforesaid, as of other officers of the same city, by four and twenty electors, viz. by the twelve aldermen of the city aforesaid, and twelve other of the most legal and discreet burgeses of the said city; which words being subject to an uncertain and doubtful construction, have caused divers elections to be made at uncertain times: We therefore, of our special grace and favour, desiring to reduce the election of the mayor and other officers of the city aforesaid, to a certainty, for the honour and common-good of the said city, and avoiding of popular tumults, do will, and for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, grant to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that every year henceforward, on the Monday next following the feast of St. Michael the archangel, the mayor and aldermen, and rest of the burgeses of the common council of the city aforesaid, in great solemnity, shall meet together in the guildhall, or some other convenient place within the city aforesaid, or such and so many as shall then remain and continue; and then and there, the mayor, aldermen, and the senior sheriff, or such of them as are then and there present; and so many other of the burgeses of the common council of the city aforesaid, by order of election first in that office, and seniors to the rest of the common council, being there present, as shall make up the number of twenty in the whole, he, and shall be for that time, electors of the mayor, bailiffs, and chamberlain of the city aforesaid, and coroner and sheriffs of the county of the same city for the year ensuing; which twenty electors being called together by themselves in the council chamber of the said guildhall, or any other convenient place within the city aforesaid, may proceed to the election of the mayor, and other officers afore named, for the year ensuing; and in that election the said twenty electors, or the major part of them, shall severally nominate and elect the mayor and other officers of the city aforesaid; and if those electors votes shall in the election of either of those officers be equal, so that ten of them shall defend, and the other ten deny the election, that then, and in every such case, the election of the mayor of the city aforesaid, and other officers of the same, shall be made and concluded by those ten electors, of whom the mayor, or in his absence, the senior alderman shall be one; and that those twenty electors, from time to time henceforward for ever, may, and shall, have power and authority in manner and form aforesaid, to nominate and elect yearly for ever, on the Monday next following the feast of St. Michael the archangel, one of the aldermen of the city aforesaid, for the time being, to be mayor for the whole year then next following; as also, another of the aldermen of the city aforesaid, for the time being, to be the coroner of the county of the same city, for one whole year then next ensuing, and likewise, two of the burgeses of the common council of the said city, for the time being, to be bailiffs of the city, and sheriffs of the county of the city aforesaid, for one whole year then next following; and one other honest and discreet man to be chamberlain of the said city, to be continued in that office for one whole year, unless he be for some reasonable cause, according to the orders and provisions in these presents expressed, from that office duly removed: And that that alderman who, as before, shall be nominated and elected mayor of the city aforesaid, before he be admitted to the execution of his office, shall take a corporal oath in the presence of the last and next precedent mayor of the city aforesaid, if he shall be there present, and the rest of the aldermen aforesaid, or six or more of them; and in the presence of so many of the common council, and the rest of the burgeses of the city aforesaid, as shall be then and there present, well, truly, and faithfully to execute the office of mayor of the city aforesaid, in all things belonging thereunto: To which precedent mayor and aldermen of the city aforesaid, or six or more of them, we, for us, our heirs and successors, do, by these presents, give and grant full power and authority to administer this oath to the mayor elect; and that this alderman aforesaid being chosen and sworn mayor, after this oath taken, may, and shall execute the office of mayor of the city aforesaid, for one whole year then next following, until another be duly chosen and sworn to that office, according to the orders and provisions in these presents expressed and declared, unless for some fault or faults, offence or offences, by him the mayor of the said city, for the time being, committed and done, he shall by the aldermen and common council of the city, solemnly called together, so that there be four and twenty at the least there present, or the major part, or any other lawful way, be from his office removed: Which mayor of the city aforesaid failing, as in the form aforesaid, we, for our heirs and successors, do, by these presents, will and declare to be liable to be removed and divested of his office.

And if it should happen that the mayor of the city aforesaid be chosen, or hereafter to be chosen, should die, or be removed, after his election or swearing, and before the Monday next following the feast of St. Michael the archangel then next following, that then, as often as this case shall happen, the aldermen of the city aforesaid, the sheriffs, or such of them as shall be then and there present, and as many of the senior burgeses of the common council of the city aforesaid being there present; as shall make up the number of four and twenty, being gathered together in the guildhall, or some other convenient place within the city of Gloucester aforesaid, or the major part of them; and in case of equal votes, that part whereof the senior aldermen there present is one, immediately after the death or removal of the mayor of the city aforesaid, may, and shall have power, and shall choose one other of the aldermen of the city aforesaid for the time being to be mayor of the said city; and after the oath in that part required, in manner and form aforesaid, by him taken, be continued until another be chosen and sworn to that office.

And farther, our will and pleasure is, that one other of the aldermen of the city aforesaid, who, as before, shall be nominated and elected coroner of the city aforesaid, before he be admitted to the execution of that office, shall take a corporal oath before the mayor of the city aforesaid, newly chosen and sworn, or, in his absence, before the aldermen of the said city, or six or more of them, that he will well and truly perform the office of coroner of the county of the city aforesaid, and faithfully execute all things to that office belonging; to which mayor or newly elected and sworn, and to the aldermen of the city aforesaid, or to any six or more of them, we, for us, our heirs, and successors, do, by these presents, give and grant full power and authority, from time to time, to administer the oath of a coroner to him chosen; and that the aforesaid alderman being so chosen and sworn to the office of a coroner, after he hath taken the aforesaid oath, shall execute the office of a coroner for one whole year then next following, and then until another be, according to the orders and provisions in these presents expressed and declared, in due manner and form, to that office elected and sworn; unless, in the mean time, for any fault or default, offence, or offences, by him the said coroner of the city aforesaid committed and done, or to be committed and done, he shall, by the mayor, aldermen, and common council men of the city aforesaid, on this part solemnly called together, so that there be four and twenty at the least then and there present, or by the major part or number of them, be from that office duly and lawfully removed.

And that they, the two burgeses of the common council of the city aforesaid, who shall be chosen and nominated to be bailiffs of the city aforesaid, and sheriffs of the county of the same city, before they be admitted to the execution of that office, shall take a corporal oath, before the mayor of the city aforesaid, then duly elected and sworn, or, in his absence, in the presence of the aldermen of the said city, or any six or more of them, that they, or either of them, will well and truly, and faithfully, perform the office of bailiffs of the city aforesaid, and sheriffs of the county of the same city, and faithfully execute all things to that office belonging; to which mayor newly elected and sworn, and the aldermen of the city aforesaid, or any six or more of them, in manner aforesaid, we, for us, our heirs, and successors, do, by these presents, give and grant full power and authority to administer the said oath to the bailiffs of the city aforesaid, and the county sheriffs of the same city; and that the said burgeses being chosen bailiffs and sheriffs, shall execute the office of bailiffs and sheriffs for one whole year then next following; and thence till two more be duly elected and sworn to that office, according to the orders and provisions above declared and expressed, unless by the mean while, for any fault or faults, offence or offences, by the bailiffs and sheriffs for the time being committed and done, or to be committed and done, they, or either of them, shall, by the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid solemnly called together, so that there be four and twenty at the least then and there present, or by the major part of them, be from that office lawfully and duly removed.

And that the chamberlain of the city aforesaid, so nominated and elected as aforesaid, before he be admitted to that office, shall take a corporal oath before the mayor of the city aforesaid, then newly chosen and sworn, or, in his absence, before the aldermen of the same city, or any six or more of them, and shall find and give such good and sufficient security, for the true and faithful execution of the office of a chamberlain, and all things thereunto belonging, as the mayor for the time being, and the burgesses of the said city, being then and there present, shall approve of; to which mayor so newly chosen and sworn, and to the aldermen of the city aforesaid, or any six or more of them, we do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, give and grant full power and authority to administer the oath of chamberlain of the city aforesaid, and to take and approve of the security tendered by the chamberlain aforesaid; and that the said burgesses then chosen and sworn chamberlain, shall continue in the office of chamberlain until, for any fault or faults, offence or offences, by him committed and done, or to be committed and done, he shall be by the mayor, aldermen and common council of the city aforesaid in that case solemnly called together, so that there be four and twenty at the least then and there present, or the major part or number of them; or in case of equal votes, that part whereof the mayor of the city for the time being is one, or, in his absence, the senior of the aldermen then and there present, be from that office lawfully and duly removed; which said coroner, sheriffs, and bailiffs, or chamberlain, in manner aforesaid failing, we, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, declare liable to be removed.

And if it should happen that any of the said officers, as sheriff, coroner, or chamberlain, should die, or be removed from his office after his election, and before the said Monday next following the feast of St. Michael the archangel, that then and in such case, as often as it shall happen, the mayor, aldermen, and senior sheriff of the city aforesaid, or such of them as shall be then and there present; and as many other of the senior burgesses of the common council of the city aforesaid being there present as shall make up the number of twenty in the whole, being gathered together in the guildhall aforesaid, or any other convenient place within the city aforesaid, or the major part of them; or, in case of equal votes, the part whereof the mayor for the time, or, in his absence, the senior of the aldermen there present is one, shall immediately after the death or removal of any the said officer or officers, nominate and elect another to that office, to be continued after the oaths taken, until another be to that office duly elected and sworn.

And our farther will and pleasure is, and we do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant, that as often as the office of recorder of the city aforesaid shall, by the death, surrender, or removal of any one, happen to be void, that then it shall be lawful, and be it lawful, for the mayor, aldermen, and common council aforesaid, or the major part of them that shall be present at the election, to nominate one honourable and famous man, learned in the law of this our kingdom of England, to be recorder of the city aforesaid, to be continued in that office, and to exercise and execute all things thereunto belonging, until by death, surrender, or any other reasonable cause, or according to the orders and provisions in these presents expressed, he shall be from that office duly removed; and that he the said recorder, being nominated and elected, shall, before he be admitted to the execution of his office, before the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, or, in his absence, before the aldermen of the city aforesaid, or any six or more of them, take a corporal oath for the performance of his office in all things, for the greatest profit and advantage and public good of the said city: To which mayor and aldermen we, for us, our heirs and successors, do, by these presents, give and grant full power and authority to administer the aforesaid oath to the person chosen to be recorder aforesaid.

And our farther will and pleasure is, and we do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, give and grant to the mayor and burgesses of the city of Gloucester, and their successors, that the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid, being solemnly for that purpose called together, so that there be four and twenty there present at the least, or the major part of them, may, and shall have full power and authority to remove and expel any one or more of the aldermen of the city aforesaid, from the office, place, and authority of an alderman of the city aforesaid; and as often as it shall happen that any one or more of the aldermen of the city aforesaid shall die, or be removed from his or their office or offices in manner aforesaid, it shall be lawful, and be it lawful, for the mayor and aldermen of the city aforesaid then remaining, or the major part of them, to nominate and elect some one or more of the six senior burgesses of the common council of the said city for the time being, under the degree of an alderman, as they shall think most fit, into the place or places of the said alderman, or aldermen removed or deceased, to be an alderman, or aldermen, of the city aforesaid, to be continued in that office, and to exercise and execute all things thereunto belonging, during their natural lives, unless for some defect or defects, fault or faults, offence or offences, by him or them committed and done, they, or either of them, shall be from that office lawfully and duly removed.

We also farther will, and do, for us our heirs, and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgesses of the city of Gloucester, and to their successors, that from time to time henceforth it may be lawful for the mayor, aldermen and common council of the city aforesaid, or the major part of them, by act or order of common council, to place and dispose any member or members in any place or order in these presents mentioned, higher than the said member, or members before were, any thing herein contained notwithstanding.

And our farther will is, and we do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgesses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors for ever may, and shall have, within the liberties, limits, and precincts of the said city, one honest and discreet man to be town clerk of the city aforesaid, to execute all things belonging to and concerning that office, within the liberties and precincts of the county of the city aforesaid, from time to time to be chosen by the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid, or the major part of them, being present at the election: And we have assigned and nominated, and do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, constitute and make our well beloved John Dorney, esq; to be the present town clerk, willing that the said John Dorney shall continue in the said office during his life, unless by surrender, or for some other reasonable cause in these presents hereafter expressed, he shall be from that office duly removed.

And we have farther granted, and do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, grant to the aforesaid mayor and burgesses of the city aforesaid, that they may, and shall have one other honest and discreet man, to be sword bearer, within the city and suburbs, limits, and liberties of the same, to perform all things, touching and concerning that office within the said city, limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, to be chosen by the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the same city, or the major part of them, as many as are willing to be present at the election; and that the sword bearer of the city aforesaid shall from time to time wait and attend upon the mayor, aldermen, and sheriffs of the city aforesaid, for the time being, in all things touching and belonging to his office: And he shall bear before the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, within the said city and limits, liberties and precincts of the same, one sword, with a sheath of any colour, having the arms of us, our heirs, and successors, and the arms of the city aforesaid, in gold and silver engraven upon it: And that the aforesaid town clerk and sword bearer, before they, or either of them, be admitted to the performances of their respective offices, shall take a corporal oath, that they will well and faithfully execute their offices before the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being, or in his absence, in the presence of the aldermen of the said city, or any six or more of them: To which mayor and aldermen of the city aforesaid, we, for us, our heirs, and successors, do, by these presents, grant full power and authority to administer the oath of a town clerk or sword bearer in form aforesaid: And that the said town clerk and sword bearer being elected and sworn, shall execute and perform the respective offices of town clerk and sword bearer during their natural lives, unless for some fault or faults, offence or offences, by them, or either of them, committed and done, or to be committed and done, they, or either of them, shall, by the mayor, aldermen, and common council, in that case solemnly called together, so that there be four and twenty at the least then and there present, or the major part of them; or in case of equal votes, that part whereof the mayor, if he be present, or, in his absence, the senior of the aldermen there present, is one, be from their respective offices duly removed; which town clerk and sword bearer, or either of them, so failing, we, for us, our heirs, and successors, will and declare liable to be removed.

And our farther pleasure is, and we do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgesses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors, may and shall henceforth for ever, have within the city aforesaid, limits, liberties and precincts of the same, four serjeants at mace, to execute and perform all things belonging to that office within the city aforesaid, limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, to be chosen in the same manner and form, and the same persons as they were wont heretofore; and each of them shall carry before the mayor, aldermen, and sheriffs of the city aforesaid, for the time being, according to the custom long since there observed, a silver mace, with the arms of us, our heirs, and successors, and the arms of the city aforesaid, said wrought and engraven upon it: And also that the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, may, and shall have, within the city aforesaid, such and so many officers to execute and perform all things touching and belonging to those respective offices, in such manner and form, from time to time to be chosen, continued, and removed, within the city aforesaid, and limits and liberties of the same, as they were wont to be chosen, constituted, continued, and removed: And that the said serjeants at mace, and other officers of the city aforesaid, from time to time to be nominated and elected, shall, before they, or either of them, be admitted to the execution of their offices, take a corporal oath, well and faithfully to perform all things relating to their office, before the mayor of the city aforesaid, or such other person or persons as are wont to be present at the swearing of those officers: To which mayor and other persons aforesaid, we, for us, our heirs and successors, do, by these presents, grant full power and authority to administer the oath to the serjeants at mace, and other officers aforesaid, according to the custom in that city long since observed and kept.

And we do farther will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant, to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that if any one or more of the aldermen of the city aforesaid, or burgeses of the common council of the same city, whether he be inhabiting or resident within the city aforesaid, and limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, or without, shall be elected and nominated to the office of mayor, alderman, bailiff, chamberlain, burges of the common council of the said city, or coroner or sheriff of the county of the same city, or constable, or any other inferior officer, except the office of recorder, town clerk, sword bearer, or serjeant at mace; and having notice and cognizance given them of the election of them, or either of them, shall refuse to take the oath, or comply with the subscriptions in that case by statute especially provided, to make them capable of, and fit to execute the offices on them imposed, that then it shall be lawful for the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, to commit him or them so refusing to execute the office or offices, to which he or they were elected, to the goal of the city aforesaid, there to remain until he or they shall be willing to undertake the said office or offices; and to impose such a fine or americiament on him or them so refusing, as to the mayor, aldermen, and common council, or to the major part of them, shall reasonably seem expedient; and that they may lawfully keep him or them so refusing in the said gaol, until they shall pay or cause to be paid, those fines and americiaments as aforesaid, for the public use of the city aforesaid; and, if it shall seem fit to the mayor, aldermen, and common council men of the city aforesaid, or the major part of them, to expel, remove, or deprive him or them of the liberties and franchises of the city aforesaid.

And we have farther granted, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors for ever, that if any custom herein contained be deficient, or not compleat, or any new customs have arisen that want altering and mending, they, the mayor, aldermen; and common council of the city aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, may find a remedy, agreeable to honesty and reason, for the public good of the citizens and burgeses of the said city, and of other our faithful subjects thereto resorting, as often as to them shall seem expedient; provided that the alterations of this kind be profitable to us and our people, and agreeable to honesty and reason as aforesaid; and that they be not repugnant to the royal prerogative of us, our heirs, and successors, and contrary to the laws and statutes of this kingdom of England then in force.

And we farther will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, grant, that the mayor, bishop of the diocese of Gloucester, for the time being, the recorder of the same city, the dean of the cathedral church of the holy and indivisible trinity in Gloucester, the aldermen of the same city, and two such of the prebends of the same church, for the time being, as we, our heirs, and successors, shall from time to time appoint and name, shall for the future for ever, they, and every of them, be justices, to be kept, and keep the peace of us, our heirs and successors, within the city of Gloucester and county of the same, and limits, liberties, and precincts of the said city and county thereof; and for the putting in execution of the statutes and laws concerning tradesmen and labourers, and enquiring into weights, measures, and all other things belonging to the office of a justice of the peace; which said bishop, dean, and two prebendaries of the cathedral church aforesaid, shall from time to time for ever, by us our heirs and successors, by commission under the great seal of England, and at the pleasure of us, our heirs and successors, from time to time to be renewed, we will that they, and either of them, be authorized and appointed to the office of justice of the peace, of us, our heirs and successors; and that the said mayor, bishop, recorder, dean, two prebendaries, and aldermen of the city aforesaid, made, and to be made, constituted, and to be constituted justices of the peace, by virtue of these presents, or any three or more of them, of whom the mayor, bishop, recorder, dean, two prebendaries, or any of the six senior aldermen being two, may appoint, keep, and hold, sessions of the peace, in the same manner and form as any other justices of the peace being assigned to inquire into trespasses and crimes, and to hear and determine controversies, may or can; and that they have full power and authority to inquire into any offences, neglects, or defaults whatsoever, committed within the city aforesaid, or the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, or that may any time hereafter be committed and done; and there to do and execute all things which any other justices of the peace within any county, city, vill, or borough, incorporate within the kingdom of England, may or can inquire into, do and execute: Also, we will and do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, grant to the said mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the mayor, the bishop of Gloucester, for the time being, the dean of the cathedral church aforesaid, the recorder, the two prebendaries, and the aldermen of the city aforesaid for the time being, and every one or more of them, of whom the mayor, bishop, dean, recorder, one of the said two prebendaries, or any of the six senior aldermen of the city aforesaid, for the time being, being two, shall be of the quorum, shall from time to time be justices of the peace, of us, our heirs and successors, to make a gaol delivery in the city aforesaid, and county of the same city, of all prisoners therein kept, according to the laws, customs, and statutes of our kingdom of England: And that the sheriffs and coroner of the county of the city aforesaid, shall make return of all juries, pannels, attachments, and indentures, by them taken, or henceforward to be taken, before the mayor, bishop, dean, recorder, two prebendaries and aldermen of the city aforesaid, of whom the mayor, bishop, dean, recorder, one of the said two prebendaries, and any of the said six senior aldermen of the city aforesaid, shall be of the quorum, and shall be attendant whenever it shall please to make a gaol delivery in all things thereunto belonging; and from time to time execute and obey the precepts of the mayor, bishop, dean, recorder, two prebendaries, and aldermen of the city aforesaid, for the time being, or any of them, in the same manner and form as other sheriffs and coroners within our kingdom of England before any justices in the said kingdom, of us, our heirs and successors, have been wont and ought to do, return, and execute, as touching any gaol delivery; and that they the said mayor, bishop, dean, recorder, two prebendaries, and aldermen of the city aforesaid, for the time being, or any of them, may by them and their servants and deputies take and arrest all murderers, manslaughterers, robbers, felons, and other malefactors, within the said city, county, limits, liberties, and precincts of the same to be found; and bring, or cause to be brought, to the gaol within the city aforesaid, there to be kept, until by due proceedings at law they shall be delivered, any other order, or decree, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding: And also, that they, or any of them, may not proceed to determination of any treason, or misprison of treason, without the special command of us, our heirs, or successors, within the city aforesaid, and the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same.

Also we will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the mayor of the city, for the time being, and his successors, may, from time to time for ever, have, use, and execute the office of clerk of the market, of us, our heirs, and successors, together with all things belonging to the said office, in all and singular matters and causes concerning that office within the city aforesaid, limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, and within the county of the same city, as well in the presence of us, our heirs, and successors, as in our absence, and they shall enjoy this office successively; and, at their goings out, levy all fines and americiaments to and for the use of the mayor and his successors, without any account to be made to us, our heirs, and successors: And, for the time to come, that no clerk of the market of us, our heirs, and successors, except the mayor of the city aforesaid, shall enter upon any thing belonging to the execution of the said office, or, under colour of his office, any ways possess himself of any thing in the said city, or within the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, or within the county of the said city, or any part or parcel of it.

Also we will, and do, for us, our heirs, and successors, by these presents, grant to the said mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the mayor of the city aforesaid, and his successors, may do, exercise, and execute all and singular things belonging to the office of steward and marshal of us, our heirs, and successors, within the limits, liberties, and precincts of the city aforesaid, and county of the same city; and

and may do, execute, and exercise those things, as well in the presence of us, our heirs and successors, as in our absence, without the contradiction of us, our heirs and successors, as quietly, freely, and entirely, as if they, or either of them, had before exercised and executed the office of marshal and steward, and all things thereunto belonging, or before might have exercised and executed the same: And that the said mayor and burgeses, or any inhabitant or resident within the city aforesaid, or within the limits, liberties, and precincts of the county of the same city, being called to execute any precepts or commands of the steward or marshal of the household, of us, our heirs and successors, or any officers of the court of the steward or marshal of the said household, of us, our heirs or successors, or any deputy, or deputies, being called to appear before them, or either of them, are not holden and bound to obey: And that no steward or marshal of the house of us, our heirs and successors, or any officers of the court of the steward or marshal of the said household, besides the mayor and his successors and their officers, may enter the city aforesaid, the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, or the county of the city aforesaid, either in the presence or absence of us, our heirs or successors, to hold any sessions, make any enquiry, or execute any commands, of us, our heirs and successors, or of the steward or marshal of the household aforesaid, to make any gaol delivery, or to perform any of the respective offices of them, for any emergent occasion whatsoever.

And we also will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, of whom the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being is one, may and shall have full power and authority, from time to time, as often as to them shall seem necessary, to tax and assess all burgeses, citizens, inhabitants, and residents within the city aforesaid, and liberties and precincts of the same, some certain pence to be paid and answered by them, for the maintaining and repairing of the bridges within the city aforesaid, and towards the necessary and requisite expences of the said city and county of the same, and for other causes and matters touching and concerning the city aforesaid, and county of the same; and upon refusal of payment of such pence by them from time to time to be taxed and assessed, to levy them upon all citizens, burgeses, inhabitants, and residents within the city aforesaid, and county of the same city, to and for the use aforesaid, by distress, imprisonment of their bodies, or any other lawful way whatsoever, according to the laws and customs of our kingdom of England, and as in any other city, burrough, or vill incorporate, within this kingdom of England, it is used and accustomed: And these our letters patents, or an inrolled copy of the same, shall from time to time, be to the said mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, a sufficient warrant and security.

And we farther will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that no guild or fraternity within the city aforesaid, may have the power, authority and jurisdiction of making, appointing and constituting any statutes or constitutions whatsoever, to oblige or bind any of the burgeses of the city aforesaid, or any one or more of any fraternity within the said city, unless they may and shall have power, authority, and licence to make such statutes, orders, and constitutions, from the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid, under the common seal of the said city, witnessing such licence, power, and authority: And that all and singular laws, orders, statutes, constitutions, and degrees whatsoever, made, or to be made, by any fraternity or guild within the city aforesaid, without such power, authority, and licence, under the common seal of the city aforesaid, shall be void in law, and had and reputed of none effect; any statute, act, order or provision, or any matter or cause to the contrary notwithstanding.

And whereas, by the letters patents of our predecessor Richard the II. made in the 21st year of his reign, it was granted, that the burgeses of the vill of Gloucester, and their successors, should for ever have cognizance of all pleas of lands or tenements within the said vill, suburbs, limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, as well of assize of novel disseisin, as of mort d'ancestre, and certificates of persons arraigned, as of the debts, trespasses, and any other pleas, real or personal, within the said vill, suburbs and precincts of the same, before the said bailiffs in the said guildhall to be holden; from which time, by other several letters patents, or by some other our letters patents, and of our predecessors of this kingdom of England, the said vill of Gloucester was erected and brought into a city, enlarged also by the hundreds aforesaid annexed to it; and the bailiffs of the vill aforesaid were translated and altered into the mayor and sheriffs of the city aforesaid, and county of the same city: We therefore, willing to extend and establish the aforesaid privileges and jurisdictions of the aforesaid bailiffs within the vill aforesaid, and precincts of the same, and through the whole city aforesaid, and county of the same city; and limits, liberties and precincts of the same, into a mayor, bailiffs, and chamberlain of the city aforesaid, and sheriffs of the county of the same city, we will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that they the said mayor and burgeses, and their successors, may from time to time have a court within the city aforesaid, before the mayor or his deputy, the sheriffs and bailiffs of the said city for the time being, or any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) on every Monday to be holden: And that the said mayor or his deputy, the aforesaid sheriffs or bailiffs for the time being, or any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) may from time to time for ever hold in that county all the aforesaid pleas, suits, and plaints, as well of assize of novel disseisin, as of mort d'ancestre, and certificates of the same, as all other the said pleas, real and personal, of all lands or tenements, as well within the city aforesaid as the county of the same city, the precincts, liberties, and franchises of the same; and of all other matters and causes issuing, and to be issued, out of the city aforesaid, and county of the city, to be holden before the mayor or his deputy, and the sheriffs and bailiffs for the time being, or before any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) on every Monday from time to time within the city aforesaid; and that they have cognizance of all the said pleas of assize and certificates, and all other pleas, and of all other things issuing within the said city and county of the same city; and that the mayor or his deputy, the sheriffs and bailiffs aforesaid, and any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) may proceed in all and singular pleas, actions, suits, and plaints aforesaid in that court moved or to be moved, prosecuted or to be prosecuted, by such like brief, summon, and distresses, and other proceedings, judgments, and executions, according to the law and custom of the court in the guildhall of the city aforesaid hitherto observed, in as ample manner and form as in former times, any bailiffs of the vill of Gloucester, or any mayors, sheriffs, and stewards, of the city or vill of Gloucester, or any mayors, sheriffs, and bailiffs, and chamberlain of the city aforesaid, were wont lawfully to proceed in the said guildhall of the city aforesaid.

We will also, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant, by these presents, to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs of the said city, and sheriffs of the county of the same city for the time being, and their successors, may have and hold all and singular the pleas aforesaid, for any matters and causes issuing within the said city and county thereof, and within the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, in the tolsey court in the city aforesaid, from hour to hour, and day to day, to be holden before the said sheriffs and bailiffs in the same manner and form as it was formerly wont to be holden before the bailiffs of the said vill of Gloucester, or before the sheriffs and bailiffs of the city of Gloucester and county of the same; and that the said sheriffs and bailiffs for the time being, and their successors, in all actions and suits of debts, accounts, trespasses, detaining of chattels, actions on the case, and all other actions, plaints, pleas, and suits personal whatsoever, issuing or happening within the said city of Gloucester, the suburbs, and precincts of the same, or within the county of the same city, which have been moved or begun, or hereafter shall be moved and begin before the said sheriffs and bailiffs for the time being, or their successors, in the aforesaid tolsey court, may and shall have full power and authority by themselves, or by any of their bailiffs, in that part specially assigned by the precept and command of the said sheriffs, under the seal of their office, to the said bailiffs or sheriffs directed, or to be directed, may proceed against all and singular persons being defendants, against whom such plaints, pleas, or actions shall happen to be moved or laid in the aforesaid court, for defect of chattels or lands of the defendants within the city aforesaid, and county of the same city, and the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, where they may be summoned, attached, or distrained, or their bodies taken; so that the sheriffs aforesaid proceed to hear and determine all and singular such actions, plaints, and pleas severally; and likewise to determine and deduce proceedings of judgment, and executions of judgments, as other sheriffs, bailiff or bailiffs, have in that place been heretofore lawfully accustomed.

Moreover, we will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant, by these presents, to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the sheriffs aforesaid may and shall for ever hold a county court for the county of the said city, from month to month, to be holden on a Tuesday, and a law day twice in a year; once within a month after Easter, and again in a month after Michaelmas, as it was aforesaid lawfully used to be holden; and that all things may there be done that are used to be done in the county court of any sheriff of the same county; and in the same manner and form, and by the same proceedings as have been hitherto used in other county and may do, execute, and exercise those things, as well in the presence of us, our heirs and successors, as in our absence, without the contradiction of us, our heirs and successors, as quietly, freely, and entirely, as if they, or either of them, had before exercised and executed the office of marshal and steward, and all things thereunto belonging, or before might have exercised and executed the same: And that the said mayor and burgeses, or any inhabitant or resident within the city aforesaid, or within the limits, liberties, and precincts of the county of the same city, being called to execute any precepts or commands of the steward or marshal of the household, of us, our heirs and successors, or any officers of the court of the steward or marshal of the said household, of us, our heirs or successors, or any deputy, or deputies, being called to appear before them, or either of them, are not holden and bound to obey: And that no steward or marshal of the house of us, our heirs and successors, or any officers of the court of the steward or marshal of the said household, besides the mayor and his successors and their officers, may enter the city aforesaid, the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, or the county of the city aforesaid, either in the presence or absence of us, our heirs or successors, to hold any sessions, make any enquiry, or execute any commands, of us, our heirs and successors, or of the steward or marshal of the household aforesaid, to make any gaol delivery, or to perform any of the respective offices of them, for any emergent occasion whatsoever.

And we also will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, of whom the mayor of the city aforesaid for the time being is one, may and shall have full power and authority, from time to time, as often as to them shall seem necessary, to tax and assess all burgeses, citizens, inhabitants, and residents within the city aforesaid, and liberties and precincts of the same, some certain pence to be paid and answered by them, for the maintaining and repairing of the bridges within the city aforesaid, and towards the necessary and requisite expences of the said city and county of the same, and for other causes and matters touching and concerning the city aforesaid, and county of the same; and upon refusal of payment of such pence by them from time to time to be taxed and assessed, to levy them upon all citizens, burgeses, inhabitants, and residents within the city aforesaid, and county of the same city, to and for the use aforesaid, by distress, imprisonment of their bodies, or any other lawful way whatsoever, according to the laws and customs of our kingdom of England, and as in any other city, burrough, or vill incorporate, within this kingdom of England, it is used and accustomed: And these our letters patents, or an inrolled copy of the same, shall from time to time, be to the said mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, a sufficient warrant and security.

And we farther will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that no guild or fraternity within the city aforesaid, may have the power, authority and jurisdiction of making, appointing and constituting any statutes or constitutions whatsoever, to oblige or bind any of the burgeses of the city aforesaid, or any one or more of any fraternity within the said city, unless they may and shall have power, authority, and licence to make such statutes, orders, and constitutions, from the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the city aforesaid, under the common seal of the said city, witnessing such licence, power, and authority: And that all and singular laws, orders, statutes, constitutions, and degrees whatsoever, made, or to be made, by any fraternity or guild within the city aforesaid, without such power, authority, and licence, under the common seal of the city aforesaid, shall be void in law, and had and reputed of none effect; any statute, act, order or provision, or any matter or cause to the contrary notwithstanding.

And whereas, by the letters patents of our predecessor Richard the II. made in the 21st year of his reign, it was granted, that the burgeses of the vill of Gloucester, and their successors, should for ever have cognizance of all pleas of lands or tenements within the said vill, suburbs, limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, as well of assize of novel disseisin, as of mort d'ancestre, and certificates of persons arraigned, as of the debts, trespasses, and any other pleas, real or personal, within the said vill, suburbs and precincts of the same, before the said bailiffs in the said guildhall to be holden; from which time, by other several letters patents, or by some other our letters patents, and of our predecessors of this kingdom of England, the said vill of Gloucester was erected and brought into a city, enlarged also by the hundreds aforesaid annexed to it; and the bailiffs of the vill aforesaid were translated and altered into the mayor and sheriffs of the city aforesaid, and county of the same city: We therefore, willing to extend and establish the aforesaid privileges and jurisdictions of the aforesaid bailiffs within the vill aforesaid, and precincts of the same, and through the whole city aforesaid, and county of the same city; and limits, liberties and precincts of the same, into a mayor, bailiffs, and chamberlain of the city aforesaid, and sheriffs of the county of the same city, we will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that they the said mayor and burgeses, and their successors, may from time to time have a court within the city aforesaid, before the mayor or his deputy, the sheriffs and bailiffs of the said city for the time being, or any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) on every Monday to be holden: And that the said mayor or his deputy, the aforesaid sheriffs or bailiffs for the time being, or any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) may from time to time for ever hold in that county all the aforesaid pleas, suits, and plaints, as well of assize of novel disseisin, as of mort d'ancestre, and certificates of the same, as all other the said pleas, real and personal, of all lands or tenements, as well within the city aforesaid as the county of the same city, the precincts, liberties, and franchises of the same; and of all other matters and causes issuing, and to be issued, out of the city aforesaid, and county of the city, to be holden before the mayor or his deputy, and the sheriffs and bailiffs for the time being, or before any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) on every Monday from time to time within the city aforesaid; and that they have cognizance of all the said pleas of assize and certificates, and all other pleas, and of all other things issuing within the said city and county of the same city; and that the mayor or his deputy, the sheriffs and bailiffs aforesaid, and any two or more of them, (so that the mayor or his deputy be one) may proceed in all and singular pleas, actions, suits, and plaints aforesaid in that court moved or to be moved, prosecuted or to be prosecuted, by such like brief, summons, and distresses, and other proceedings, judgments, and executions, according to the law and custom of the court in the guildhall of the city aforesaid hitherto observed, in as ample manner and form as in former times, any bailiffs of the vill of Gloucester, or any mayors, sheriffs, and stewards, of the city or vill of Gloucester, or any mayors, sheriffs, and bailiffs, and chamberlain of the city aforesaid, were wont lawfully to proceed in the said guildhall of the city aforesaid.

We will also, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant, by these presents, to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs of the said city, and sheriffs of the county of the same city for the time being, and their successors, may have and hold all and singular the pleas aforesaid, for any matters and causes issuing within the said city and county thereof, and within the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, in the tolsey court in the city aforesaid, from hour to hour, and day to day, to be holden before the said sheriffs and bailiffs in the same manner and form as it was formerly wont to be holden before the bailiffs of the said vill of Gloucester, or before the sheriffs and bailiffs of the city of Gloucester and county of the same; and that the said sheriffs and bailiffs for the time being, and their successors, in all actions and suits of debts, accounts, trespasses, detaining of chattels, actions on the case, and all other actions, plaints, pleas, and suits personal whatsoever, issuing or happening within the said city of Gloucester, the suburbs, and precincts of the same, or within the county of the same city, which have been moved or begun, or hereafter shall be moved and begin before the said sheriffs and bailiffs for the time being, or their successors, in the aforesaid tolsey court, may and shall have full power and authority by themselves, or by any of their bailiffs, in that part specially assigned by the precept and command of the said sheriffs, under the seal of their office, to the said bailiffs or sheriffs directed, or to be directed, may proceed against all and singular persons being defendants, against whom such plaints, pleas, or actions shall happen to be moved or laid in the aforesaid court, for defect of chattels or lands of the defendants within the city aforesaid, and county of the same city, and the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, where they may be summoned, attached, or distrained, or their bodies taken; so that the sheriffs aforesaid proceed to hear and determine all and singular such actions, plaints, and pleas severally; and likewise to determine and deduce proceedings of judgment, and executions of judgments, as other sheriffs, bailiff or bailiffs, have in that place been heretofore lawfully accustomed.

Moreover, we will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant, by these presents, to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the sheriffs aforesaid may and shall for ever hold a county court for the county of the said city, from month to month, to be holden on a Tuesday, and a law day twice in a year; once within a month after Easter, and again in a month after Michaelmas, as it was aforesaid lawfully used to be holden; and that all things may there be done that are used to be done in the county court of any sheriff of the same county; and in the same manner and form, and by the same proceedings as have been hitherto used in other county county courts: And that the coroner of the city aforesaid, and others respectively attending in these courts, shall do, execute, and perform all and singular offices belonging to their respective places; and that the sheriffs of the county of the city aforesaid may have, use, and exercise all such power, jurisdiction, authority, and liberty, and all other things whatsoever belonging to the office of sheriff within the said city and county, and the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, as any other sheriffs and bailiffs, of us and our heirs, within our kingdom of England, within their respective bailiwicks, may have, or ought to use: And that we, our heirs and successors, shall for the future for ever direct, and cause to be directed, all and singular briefs, bills, precepts, and commands, of us, our heirs and successors, which shall in any matter, or for any cause, or in and for any matters and causes issuing and happening within the city of Gloucester aforesaid, or the county of the same city, the limits, liberties, and precincts of the same, to the county sheriffs of the city of Gloucester, and to no other sheriffs: And that no other sheriff in the kingdom of England, or bailiff, or serjeant of any sheriff in the said kingdom (only excepted the aforesaid sheriffs of us and our heirs) for the county of the said city, to be chosen and constituted in manner and form aforesaid, and their bailiffs shall enter the city aforesaid, in any wise to exercise and execute any thing whatsoever belonging to the office of a sheriff, (only excepted the sheriffs of the county of the city of Gloucester, who are to keep a county court for the county of the city of Gloucester, to be holden in the usual place in the charter of king Richard the III^d specified): And that all the sheriffs of the county of the city of Gloucester, and bailiffs of the same, who ought at the going out of their office to give an account into the exchequer, belonging to us, our heirs and successors, ought every year to do it before the barons and treasurer of the exchequer of us our heirs and successors, or before the barons of the said exchequer by their sufficient attorney or attorneys, to be appointed by their letters patents under the seal of their office, to be directed to the barons aforesaid: And that no sheriff of the county of the city of Gloucester shall any way be compelled to come out of the limits of the said county, to give an account of any thing belonging to their office, so that his attorney or attorneys would do it in manner and form aforesaid.

And whereas our aforesaid predecessor Richard the II^d, late king of England, by his letters patents made in the one and twentieth year of his reign, hath willed and ordained, that the bailiffs of the vill of Gloucester for the time being should have full power and authority to take all recognizances whatsoever between merchant and merchants, and execution thereon to be made according to the statute of merchants, and the statute of Acton Burnell lately set forth: Whereas also, Richard the Third, in the first year of his reign, by his letters patents hath willed and granted, that the aforesaid vill of Gloucester, together with all villages and hamlets within the hundreds of Dudstone and King's Barton near Gloucester, should be and remain one entire county by itself incorporate for ever, in deed and in name distinct; and that the bailiffs of the city aforesaid should for ever be sheriffs of the county of the said vill of Gloucester, doing and executing all things, belonging as well to the office of bailiffs as sheriffs within the said vill and county of the same; from which time the said sheriffs have received, and were wont to receive recognizances of debts according to the form of the statute aforesaid: But by those letters patents there is no certain provision in whose hands the greater or lesser seal of the recognizances should be kept; we therefore, willing to reduce all things necessary to be taken into these recognizances to a certainty, do will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses, and their successors, that the sheriffs of the county of the city aforesaid for the time being, and the clerk assigned to take recognizances of debts, according to the form of the statute of merchants, and the statute made at Acton Burnell, may for ever have full power and authority to take and receive any recognizances whatsoever, and executions on the same to be made according to the statute of merchants, and the statute at Acton Burnell, lately set forth; and also do and execute all things within the city of Gloucester and county of the same city, which by virtue of the statutes or either of them, may belong to any mayor, bailiff, officer, and to any clerk in any city or borough incorporate within this our kingdom of England, being appointed to take recognizances of debts, according to the form of the statutes aforesaid, or either of them; and that the said sheriffs and clerk for the time being may, and shall have, and by vertue of these presents shall make, assume, and apply one seal of two parts, one part of which shall be called the greater, and the other the lesser part, henceforward to seal recognizances coming before them, according to the form of the statutes of merchants, and the statute of Acton Burnell lately set forth; which seal shall for ever hereafter be the king's seal, to seal the aforesaid recognizances to be taken within the city aforesaid, the greater part of which shall always remain in the custody of the sheriffs of the county of the said city for the time being, and the other part in the hands of the clerk appointed and deputed to write and enroll the recognizances aforesaid, according to the intention of these our letters patents: And that the town clerk of the city aforesaid for the time being, as long as he shall continue in that office, may and shall be the clerk, of us, our heirs and successors, to take recognizances of debts according to the statutes aforesaid, or either of them within the city aforesaid, and county, limits, liberties, and precincts of the same; and to write and enroll them, and to keep all rolls and records, and to keep the lesser part of the seal aforesaid, and to do and execute all things which may be done and executed by any clerk appointed and deputed to take recognizances of debts according to the form of the statutes aforesaid, or either of them: And we do, for us, our heirs and successors, appoint and ordain, without any brief in that case to be obtained, or any other election, the said town clerk of the city aforesaid, clerk of us, our heirs and successors, to write and enroll recognizances of debts within the city aforesaid, according to the form of the statutes aforesaid, or either of them, and to keep the lesser part of the seal aforesaid, and to do all other things belonging to the office of any clerk appointed and deputed to take recognizances of debts, according to the form of the aforesaid statutes.

And furthermore, we, of our great and special favour, and of our certain knowledge and mere motion, have granted and confirmed, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant and confirm to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid for the time being, may from time to time for ever, have and enjoy all and singular chattles of outlaws, for whatsoever cause, being brought before any justices of the peace whatsoever, and the chattles of felons and fugitives, deodands, and all manner of fines and amerciaments of all burgeses, and their heirs and successors, of and in the said city, limits, and precincts of the same, although the said burgeses or burgeses be a servant or officer of us and our heirs, as also of all residents in the city aforesaid, and precincts of the same, and their heirs and successors, to be determined before us and our heirs, and the justices of labourers and tradesmen, the treasurer and barons of the exchequer of us and our heirs, and before the clerk of the market of us and our heirs, and the justices appointed to hear and determine, and before other justices, officers, and ministers, of us and our heirs whatsoever; all forfeits made, and to be made, for or through any cause whatsoever, to be levied and taken by the sheriffs and bailiffs aforesaid for the time being, without any lett, impediment, or scandal, from us or our heirs, or from the chancellor, treasurer and barons of the exchequer, justices, sheriffs, or any other of our officers and ministers whatsoever: And that the aforesaid mayor and burgeses, and their successors, may have all goods and chattles whatsoever, taken or to be taken, with any person whatsoever, and found with the said person, being before a justice of the peace within the said city, suburbs, limits, and precincts of the same.

And whereas the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid are day by day at great costs and charges for the maintenance and reparations of the gates and pavements of the said city, and the two wharfs called the Old and New Key, for the lading and unlading of ships and boats by the river of Severn, thither arriving; as also, of several bridges called the West Bridge and the Foreign Bridge, of one of which great part is sealed and parjetted, being sixteen foot high, or thereabouts, built with divers arches and vaults, and half a mile in length, or thereabouts: And whereas, in consideration that the burgeses of the city aforesaid have been oppressed with very many burthens and payments, and divers grants by several letters patents under the great seal of England, have been made by our predecessors and progenitors, for divers terms now ended, to the bailiffs and burgeses of the city of Gloucester aforesaid, that they should take of all things coming to be sold at the said vill divers and several customs, viz. (among others) for every horse or mare, ox or cow, coming thither to be sold, one penny, and several other customs for other things passing to be sold through the gates of the said city; as also, other customs and tolls, moorage, pontage, and tonage; which customs and tolls, as well by land as by water, and some other duties, the burgeses of the city aforesaid have received, and been wont to receive: And whereas, by a statute made in parliament of Henry the VIIth late king of England, at Westminster, on the 25th day of February, in the 19th year of the reign of the said king, it was enacted, that whatsoever person or persons, of what degree, estate, or condition soever they be, or shall be, who henceforth shall take of any of his majesty's subjects any impositions for any trowls or boats, or any other vessels, for the carriage of any goods or merchandize in or upon the river of Severn, shall incur the penalties and forfeitures limited in the said statute: In which statute it is further provided, that if any person or persons, spiritual or temporal, or body incorporate, before the most honourable the lords of the king's most honourable privy council, in the star chamber at Westminster, at any time before the feast of the ascension of our Lord, which shall then be in the year of our Lord one thousand four hundred fifty and five, shall appear, and by sufficient proof shall exhibit his or their title or claim to any due or impost to be levied and received for any goods or merchandize carried in or upon the said river of Severn, that then, after the title and claim produced before the lords of the council aforesaid for the time being, and by the decree of the said lords in the star chamber approved, it shall be lawful for any such persons whatsoever, having such lawful and approved title, to receive all such dues and impositions of any of the king's liege subjects, for any such boat or vessel passing on the river of Severn, as shall be admitted and allocated by the decree of the lords of the council aforesaid, as by the aforesaid statute fully appears: And whereas, after and before the aforesaid feast of the ascension of our Lord, according to the provision of the statute aforesaid, the mayor and burgeses of the vill of Gloucester then being, exhibited their petition to the most reverend father in God, William, then archbishop of Canterbury, and lord chancellor of England, and the rest of the lords of the council of king Henry the VIIth in the star chamber; by which petition, they the said mayor and burgeses, in consideration of the annual costs and payments with which they, for the repair of the great bridge of the aforesaid vill, built with arches and stone vaults on the aforesaid river of Severn, and of the havens of the said city on the bank of the said river, and for divers other good causes and considerations mentioned in the petition aforesaid, have laid claim and title to divers tolls, sums of pence, impositions, and customs, time out of mind, due to them and their predecessors, and by them levied and taken, of and for boats and other vessels passing in or upon the river Severn under the bridges aforesaid, and for the goods and merchandize unladen at the havens aforesaid, towards the payment of the annual expences aforesaid; upon which, at the time of Easter, being the 29th day of April, in the twentieth year of the reign of king Henry the VIIth, in the star chamber at Westminster aforesaid, before the aforesaid lord chancellor of England, and other lords of the council of the said king being then and there present, (the aforesaid petition of the said mayor and burgeses of the vill of Gloucester being often read, and very well understood) as also the depositions and examinations, and other proofs and evidences, as well of the part of the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of the vill of Gloucester, as of the mayor and citizens of the city of Coventry, and the burgeses and inhabitants of the vill of Bewdly and Tewksbury, and other villages and places, being produced and read publickly, heard and fully understood, upon mature and diligent deliberation, by the aforesaid lord chancellor, and the rest of the council of the said late king then and there present, by virtue of the said statute in that parliament set forth, and by vertue and authority of the statute given and granted to that council, it was ordained, decreed, and adjudged concerning the matters specified in the petition aforesaid, by the assent and consent, as well of the mayor and burgeses of the vill of Gloucester, as of the mayor and citizens of the city of Coventry, and of the burgeses and inhabitants of the vill of Bewdly and Tewksbury, in manner and form following, viz. that the mayor and burgeses of the said vill of Gloucester and their successors, should have and take of all citizens of the said city of Coventry, and their successors, towards the payment of the fee farm of the said vill, and other expences in the decree aforesaid, for every hoghead of wine, and ton of other merchandizes, passing in any boat, trough, or vessel, from or through the said vill of Gloucester towards the city of Worcester, three-pence; and for every hoghead of wine and ton of other merchandize unladen in the said vill of Gloucester, at or upon the wharf, key, or land, three-pence, without any thing to be paid for the carriage of the said goods, by carts, drays, or horses, for the use of the mayor and burgeses, or without any sum of pence to be asked or received, by the name of any custom whatsoever, for the said wines, or the vessels wherein they were laden, in or upon the river aforesaid, passing at, by, or under, or about the bridge aforesaid; or for any of them bound with ropes and hooks near the adjacent bridge, or by any art or ingenuity, to be drawn and conducted under the bridge, into any place within the said vill of Gloucester, and the privileges and franchises of the same: And it was farther adjudged, decreed, and ordained, by the lord chancellor and lords of the council aforesaid, that the mayor and burgeses of the said vill of Gloucester, and their successors, should for ever have and take for custom the like number of pence of all other persons, for every hoghead of wine and ton of other merchandize, to be unladen in the said vill, the vill of Tewksbury, together with the burgeses and inhabitants within the franchises of the same, and other cities, villa, burroughs, or persons, being excepted, who have made composition with the mayor and burgeses aforesaid, with some other provisions for the lessening and easing of those goods for which the custom was formerly paid, although things might be by water exported, not at all altering the property, as is specified in the decree aforesaid; and that the mayor and burgeses aforesaid should have, of every boat or vessel passing from one side or other under the said bridge, laden with timber, board, or lath, four-pence, for every time it shall pass by or under the said bridge, and for every boat or vessel laden with firewood or fewel, two-pence, without any custom or toll to be paid for the same; always provided that that decree extend not to the detriment of the vill of Tewksbury, nor the burgeses, nor any persons within the said vill privileged and excepted; provided also, that the aforesaid mayor and burgeses of Gloucester should take no custom for any household necessaries, nor any thing bought or provided for the private use of a family, being not to be merchandized: And moreover, the mayor and burgeses shall have, for every ton of wheat passing from either side under the aforesaid bridge, being to be made merchandize of, three-pence, and for all other grain, two-pence; and this to be paid, until some persons can sufficiently prove before the chancellor aforesaid in the said council, that less than three pence should be levied and taken for the same, so that this proof be made within seven years: And then there was a further ordinance made for the toll of corn in the place aforesaid by the council aforesaid, as by the aforesaid decree of the lord chancellor aforesaid, and the lords of the king's council then and there present in the star chamber aforesaid, made the day and year aforesaid, which we have looked into, as plainly and fully appears: We therefore willing to confirm, approve, and ratify, all the kinds of dues, tolls, customs, and sums of pence, by the mayor and burgeses of the city of Gloucester heretofore, by vertue of the decree aforesaid, or any other ways lawfully received and levied, to them the aforesaid mayor and burgeses, will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the aforesaid mayor and burgeses, and their successors, that it may be lawful for the said mayor and burgeses, and their successors, for the time being, from time to time for ever, to have, receive, take, and levy, for oats, bread-corn, and all sorts of grain and other merchandizes, and things to be sold, brought and carried to the city aforesaid; and for all boats passing there, or lying in the river of Severn, and for the goods wherewith they are laden or unladen at, or upon the haven aforesaid, such and so many customs, tolls, and reasonable sums of pence, as by the burgeses or bailiffs in their respective turns have by vertue of those grants, or any other lawful way, been heretofore received and levied.

And whereas, from the time of the making these letters patents, in the first year of the reign of the said Richard the IIIrd, although by these letters patents the aforesaid vill of Gloucester was made a city, two burgeses only were summoned at all parliaments elected by the major part of the burgeses to serve and sit in parliament, never any other were chosen knights for the county of the same city; and yet it was a custom in other cities that two were chosen burgeses for such a city, and two more knights for the county of the same city: We therefore for the future, to avoid and abolish all scruple and doubt in that case, do will and ordain, and for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that upon summons of any parliament of us, our heirs or successors, it may and shall be lawful for the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, and the major part of them, at a full county court next after the summons to be holden in that case, lately made and provided, to elect, nominate, and return two only discreet men of the said city to be burgeses for that city and county of the same city; and that those two burgeses so chosen, shall serve and sit in parliament as burgeses of the city aforesaid, and knights of the county of the same: And that the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid shall in no wise be forced or compelled to elect, nominate and return for burgeses of the city aforesaid, and knights of the county of the same; but they two only shall serve and sit in parliament, who shall from time to time be lawfully elected and returned by the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, or the major part of them, according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided, as before the time of the reign of king Richard the IIIrd, the like burgeses of parliament for the burrough or vill of Gloucester, were wont to be nominated, elected and returned, and no otherwise.

And whereas the bailiffs and burgeses of the vill of Gloucester of old held the said burrough, with the appurtenances, of the kings of England in fee farm, by the yearly payment of sixty and five pounds of lawful money of England, we do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant, and of our special grace and favour, give and confirm to the mayor and burgeses of the city aforesaid, and their successors, the said whole city of Gloucester, with all and singular its privileges, rights and appurtenances, having been hitherto used to have been paid to us, our predecessors, and progenitors, and remain to be paid to us our heirs and successors, in as ample manner and form as they were heretofore granted to the mayor and burgeses gesles of the city aforesaid, and their predecessors, by whatsoever name or names of incorporation, or by any former charters or letters patents of any of our ancestors and progenitors, and as the said mayor and burgesles, and their predecessors, by vertue or pretext of any charter or letters patents, have heretofore lawfully holden and possessed it.

And we do further, of our special grace and favour, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, grant, approve, ratify and confirm to the aforesaid mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid, and their successors, all and singular such like manors, messuages, lands and tenements, court leets, assize of frank pledge, sheriffs courts, and all other courts whatsoever, markets, fairs, customs, liberties, franchises, freedoms, fines, and amerciements, exemptions, jurisdictions, and inheritances whatsoever, as the said mayor and burgesles now lawfully enjoy and use, or that they, or either of them, or their predecessors, by any names of incorporation, or by vertue and pretext of any charters or letters patents by any of our predecessors and progenitors, late kings and queens of England, made and granted, were wont to have, use, and enjoy, before the said surrender was made; or by pretext of any law, prescription, or custom, or any other lawful way, right, or title, had and accustomed, although they or some of them have been ill used or abused, or any way lost and forfeited, yet to be kept and enjoyed by the aforesaid mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid, and their successors for ever, only paying to us, our heirs and successors, such fee farm and sums of pence as have been hitherto due and used to be paid: Wherefore we will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, by strict injunction, command, that the aforesaid mayor and burgesles, and their successors, may for ever have, hold, use, exercise, and enjoy, all and singular the aforesaid courts, and all other authorities, jurisdictions, franchises, and immunities, together with all manors, lands, tenements, and inheritances aforesaid, according to the tenor and effect of these our letters patents, without any lett or impediment from us, our heirs or successors, or any justices of the peace, sheriffs, or other officers or ministers of us, our heirs or successors whatsoever, any surrender of former charters to the contrary notwithstanding.

Being also unwilling that the said mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid, or any of them, or their successors, should by occasion of the premises, by us, our heirs or successors, justices, sheriffs, or any other officers or ministers of us, our heirs or successors whatsoever, be molested, vexed, aggrieved, or any way disturbed, we will, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, strictly command the treasurer, chancellor, and barons of the exchequer at Westminster, and other officers and justices of us, our heirs and successors, our attornies general, and attornies in any courts whatsoever for the time being, and all officers and ministers of us, our heirs and successors, that they and every of them do not prosecute or continue, or cause to be prosecuted and continued, any brief or summons de quo warranto, or any other brief, briefs, or proceses, against the said mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid, for any causes, things, or matters, offences, claims, or usurpations, or either of them, duly claimed, attempted, had, or usurped, before the day of the date of the making of these our letters patents.

We willing also that they the said mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid should not, by any justices, officers, or ministers aforesaid, in and for the due use, claim, or abuse of any liberties, franchises or jurisdictions, within the city aforesaid, or the precincts of the same, be molested, aggrieved, or hindered, or compelled to answer any of them before the day of the date of these our letters patents, we will, and we do, by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, grant to the mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid, and their successors, that this present charter so generally made, may and shall be of the same vertue and effect as if all the premises above specified were specially and particularly in this our charter expressed; and that it be understood and adjudged in the best and most favourable sense on the part of the mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid, and their successors, though it might be toward us, our heirs and successors, better understood, any omission, defect, repugnancy, or contradiction in the same to the contrary notwithstanding.

Nevertheless, we will that the justices of assize of nisi prius and general goal delivery in the county of Gloucester, as also the justices of the peace of the said county being assigned, or to be assigned, to keep their sessions, and also the sheriffs of the county of Gloucester, they and either of them may freely enter the said city to keep their sessions concerning any matter or business happening or issuing without the county of the city, and within the county of Gloucester, as they were wont before these times, and before the letters patents of the said late king Richard the III^d, made in the first year of his reign, this present grant in any wise notwithstanding.

Moreover we will, and by these presents declare, that all and singular justices assigned to keep the peace in the county of Gloucester for the future for ever, may take and receive within the said city, informations, recognizances, and all other acts, and things, as being justices of the peace they may any where do; and that all commissioners of sewers, and commissioners for charitable uses, may execute their respective commissions within the said city of Gloucester, for all matters and things whatsoever issuing without the county of the city, and within the county of Gloucester, this present grant of ours in any wise notwithstanding.

Always provided, and we will, and do, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, firmly enjoin, order and command, all and singular the mayor, recorder, town clerk, aldermen, capital burgesles, and all other our officers and ministers of our city aforesaid, and all others their deputies; as also, all justices of the peace of us, our heirs and successors, within that city, by vertue and according to the tenor of these our letters patents, or charters heretofore made, for the future to be nominated and elected, shall, before they or either of them be admitted to enter upon the execution of their respective offices, take as well the corporal oath, commonly called the oath of obedience, as the corporal oath, commonly called the oath of supremacy, upon the holy gospel, before such person or persons as shall be assigned and appointed to administer such oaths.

And we farther will and declare our royal pleasure and intention, that no recorder or town clerk of our city aforesaid shall be admitted to the execution of his or their respective offices, before they or either of them be or shall be approved of by us, our heirs or successors, any thing in these presents contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Always provided, that those letters patents, or any thing in them contained, shall not extend to be expounded or interpreted to grant the hundreds of Dudstone and King's Barton near the city of Gloucester aforesaid, or the villages, parishes, hamlets, or any other places within the said hundreds, to be a parcel of the county of the city aforesaid, as in former times have been, or to give, grant, and confirm to the aforesaid mayor and burgesles of that city and their successors, any liberties, privileges, franchises, immunities, jurisdictions, powers, profits, or advantages whatsoever, to be had, taken, and enjoyed within the said hundreds, or any of them, or within any parishes, villages, or hamlets within the said hundreds, or either of them; but we will and declare our royal intention, that those hundreds and all inhabitants of the same, or either of them, and all villages, places, and hamlets whatsoever, within the said hundreds and hamlets, and every part and parcel of them, or either of them, shall henceforth for ever remain parcels of our said county of Gloucester to all intents and purposes; and that all things, jurisdictions, liberties, privileges, powers, and authorities, by any of our progenitors and predecessors, kings or queens of England, heretofore granted to the vill or city of Gloucester aforesaid, or corporation of the same, by any name or names within the said hundreds, to be had, taken and enjoyed, to be void and of none effect, as for and concerning the said hundreds and either of them, and all inhabitants of the same, according to the form of the statute in that case made and provided, any thing in these presents contained to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

Always provided that those letters patents and this said charter and grant of liberties and privileges, or any thing in them contained, be not any way prejudicial to the dean and chapter of the cathedral church of the city aforesaid, or their successors; but we will, and by these presents declare our royal intention, that the said dean and chapter, and their successors, may from time to time for the future for ever hold and enjoy all such rights, privileges, franchises, jurisdictions, and immunities whatsoever, as the said dean and chapter do now lawfully enjoy, and are rightfully due and belonging to the said church, any thing in these presents contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Always provided, that if at any time or times it shall seem expedient to us, our heirs or successors, to remove the mayor or any of the aldermen or burgesles of the common council, or any officer or officers within the said city or county of the same, (except the chamberlain, sword bearer, and serjeants at mace) and ease him or them of his or their respective office or offices, and we, our heirs or successors, shall signify such will or pleasure of us, our heirs or successors, by order to be made in the privy council of us, our heirs or successors, that then immediately from and after notice of such order given to the mayor and burgesles of the city aforesaid for the time being, they the said mayor and burgesles, if it be not a mayor to be removed, and if it be, the aldermen and common council of the city aforesaid, or the major part of them that shall be there present, shall proceed to the election of a new mayor, alderman, burgesles of the common council, or other officer or officers as aforesaid, removed, or to be removed, as if he or they had died in the said office or offices, any thing in these presents contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents. Witness ourself at Westminster this 18th day of April, in the four and twentieth year of our reign.

By Writ of Privy Seal. — PIGGOTT.

NUMBER VII.

The CHARTER of Foundation of the Bishoprick of GLOUCESTER.

HENRY the VIIIth, by the grace of God king of England and France, defender of the faith, lord of Ireland, and supreme head on earth of the church of England, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting: Whereas the great convent or monastery, which, whilst in being, was called the monastery of St. Peter of Gloucester, and all and singular its manors, lordships, messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments, endowments, and possessions, for certain special and urgent causes, were, by Gabriel Moreton, prior of the said abbey or monastery, and the convent thereof, lately given and granted to us and our heirs for ever, as by the deed of the said prior and convent, under their common conventual seal inrolled in our court of chancery, fully appears; by virtue whereof we are rightfully seized in our demesne, as of fee, of and in the scite, bounds and precinct of the said convent or monastery; and of all and singular manors, lordships, messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments, endowments, and possessions of the said late prior and convent; and we being so seized, and being influenced by divine goodness, and desiring above all things, that true religion and the true worship of God may not only not be abolished, but intirely restored to the primitive and genuine rule of simplicity; and that all those enormities may be corrected into which the lives and profession of the monks for a long time had deplorably lapsed, have, as far as human frailty will permit, endeavoured to the utmost that, for the future, the pure word of God may be taught in that place, good discipline observed, youth freely instructed in learning, the infirmities of old age relieved with necessaries, alms given to poor christians, highways and bridges repaired; and that all offices of piety in every kind may there abound, and thence spread to the neighbourhood far and near, to the glory of God, and the common good and benefit of our subjects.

Wherefore, considering that the scite of the said late monastery of St. Peter of Gloucester, in which many famous monuments of our renowned ancestors, kings of England, are erected, is a very fit and proper place for erecting, instituting and establishing an episcopal see, and an episcopal church, of one bishop, one dean a presbyter, and six prebendaries presbyters, for the service of Almighty God for ever, we have decreed, and by these presents we do decree, the scite of the said monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, and the place and church thereof, to be an episcopal see, and to be created, erected and established a cathedral church; and the said cathedral church we do, by these presents, fully and indeed create, erect, found, ordain, make, appoint and establish, of one bishop, one dean a presbyter, six prebendaries presbyters, which we will and command, by these presents, from henceforth unalterably, to continue and endure, and to be established for ever.

And we also will and ordain, by these presents, that the said cathedral church shall be from henceforth for ever a cathedral church and see episcopal; and that our whole town of Gloucester be from henceforth and for ever a city; and we will and decree that the same be from henceforth for ever nominated and called the city of Gloucester: And whereas our said late town or vill of Gloucester, together with all and singular the vills and hamlets of Dudston and King's Barton near Gloucester, have for a long time past been an entire county by itself, rightfully incorporated in deed and name; and whereas one Thomas Payne, now mayor of our vill aforesaid, and the burgeses of our said late vill of Gloucester, now have, hold, and do enjoy several liberties, franchises and privileges within the said late vill of Gloucester, and within the county of the same vill; and the predecessors of them, the said now mayor and burgeses, within our said late vill of Gloucester, and within the county of the same our late vill of Gloucester, by letters patents of our progenitors, by use, prescription or otherwise, in what manner soever had, held and enjoyed, the same as by right, and by the laws of our kingdom they lawfully might use, hold and enjoy the same; we will, and by these presents, do grant, that now our city of Gloucester, together with all and singular the vills and hamlets of Dudston and King's Barton, be, and for ever hereafter shall be, the county of our city of Gloucester, by the same meets and bounds by which our said late vill of Gloucester, together with all and singular the vills and hamlets of Dudston and King's Barton aforesaid, is limited and known; and we do, by these presents, ordain, make, erect and establish our said city of Gloucester, together with the vills and hamlets of Dudston and King's Barton aforesaid, one entire county in deed and name, distinct and absolutely separated from our county of Gloucester for ever.

And out of our farther grace, we will, and by these presents do grant, that the aforesaid Thomas of the said city, and the now mayor, the burgeses of the said city, and their successors, for ever have, hold and enjoy, and have full power and authocity to have, hold and enjoy within our county aforesaid, and within the county of our city aforesaid, so many, such, as great and like liberties, courts lect, views of frank pledge, and all things belonging to view of frank pledge, return of writs, rights, jurisdictions, franchises, and privileges whatsoever, as many, as great, and in like cases, and in the same manner and form as the now mayor and burgeses of our city of Gloucester, or any one, or any of their predecessors within our said late vill of Gloucester, had, held or enjoyed, or ought for any reason, or in any manner whatsoever, to have, hold or enjoy.

And the said city of Gloucester, and all the county of the said city, and all our county of Gloucester, as the same is by meets and bounds limited and known, from all jurisdiction, authority and diocese, as well of the bishop of Worcester as of the bishop of York and bishop of Hereford for the time being, and their successors, we do separate, divide, exempt, exonerate, and, by these presents, do free and discharge; and we do adjoin and unite all episcopal jurisdiction, as well as all profits, emoluments and hereditaments whatsoever, right or jurisdiction episcopal, belonging, appertaining, or arising within our said city of Gloucester, or county of the said city, and within the whole county of Gloucester, to the bishop of Gloucester, to be by us named and elected by these our letters patents, and to his successors for ever, bishops of Gloucester, and to the bishoprick of Gloucester: And we do by these presents, make and ordain the said city and county to be the diocese of Gloucester; and we will and ordain that it be for ever hereafter nominated and called the diocese of Gloucester; and all that diocese of Gloucester, and every part thereof, we will and ordain to be of the province of Canterbury, and so for ever hereafter to be nominated, reputed and taken, to all intents and purposes, and in the same manner as the diocese of Worcester was, and was taken and reputed to be.

And because our vill of Bristol which is situate and being within the bounds and limits of our county of Gloucester, is a county of itself, and is part within the diocese of Bath and Wells, and part within the diocese of Worcester, therefore to prevent and take away all ambiguity and doubt hereafter, we will, ordain and appoint, and by these presents do grant, that all that part of our vill and county of Bristol which heretofore was in the diocese of Worcester, be from this time forward, and for ever, in the diocese of Gloucester, to all intents and purposes, in the same manner as it was wont to be within the episcopal jurisdiction of Worcester.

And to the end that this our intention may obtain due and ample effect, we very much confiding in the knowledge, good manners, probity and virtue of our well-beloved chaplain, John Wakeman, clerk, do nominate and elect, and by these presents we do elect, nominate and create him the said John bishop of Gloucester: And we will, and by these presents do grant and ordain, that the said bishop be a body corporate in deed and in name: And we do by these presents declare, accept, ordain, make and constitute him a body corporate for ever, and that he have a perpetual succession, and that he and his successors, by the name of bishop of Gloucester, shall be called and nominated; and that he and his successors, by and under that name, may prosecute, claim and plead, and be impleaded, defend and be defended, answer and be answered, in all the courts and places of law, of us our heirs and successors whatsoever, and elsewhere; and in all and singular causes, actions, suits, writs and plaints, real, personal, or mixed, as well temporal as spiritual, and in all other things, causes and matters whatsoever; and by that name to take, receive, enjoy and acquire any manors, lordships, lands, tenements, rectories, pensions, portions, and other hereditaments whatsoever; possessions, profits and emoluments, as well spiritual and ecclesiastical as temporal, and all other things whatsoever, by our letters patents to the aforesaid bishop and his successors, by us, our heirs, in due manner to be made, or which shall be given or granted by any other person or persons, according to our laws, or the laws of any of our heirs or successors; and that he and they may, and can have full power and authority to give, alien, or demise, and generally all other things to receive and do, in the like and in the same manner and form as any other bishop or bishops of our kingdom of England may, or can receive, or do, but not otherwise, nor in any other manner.

And because we will that our said bishop of Gloucester and his successors be honourably endowed, we give, and by these presents do grant to the said bishop, all that our hall covered with lead, commonly called the leaden hall, one room or pantry, one buttery, with one kitchen, two little houses for putting meat, one square pool or stew for keeping of fish, to which fresh water runs, situate at the east end of a certain hall, a large bed chamber where the servants of the late abbot did use to eat, situate at the west end of the said hall; and also, one pantry, one buttery, one office under ground, with the way leading thereto, situate on the south part of the aforesaid great bed chamber; and also a certain square or void place containing in length by estimation two perches, and in breadth one perch and three foot, adjoining to the said great bed chamber; and also, one other bed chamber commonly called the square bed chamber situate on the north part of the great bed chamber, with three other bed chambers built over the said square bed chamber, and one other great bed chamber where the abbot of the said monastery did use to eat, with one pantry, one buttery, and one office under ground, situate and being at the end of the said great bed chamber; and also, one gallery situate at the south-east end of the said bed chamber; and also, one bed chamber situate on the south part of the said bed chamber, and one bed chamber situate on the south part of the said gallery, with three bed chambers built all together, and situate on the north part of the said gallery; and also, all those three inner bed chambers with one middle room, one chapel, and another gallery joining to the said three chambers, being the said late abbot's own apartment on the north end of the said great bed chamber where the late abbot did use to eat, and on the south of the said bed chamber; as also, one other hall, one pantry, one buttery, one kitchen, and two bed chambers, situate at the east end of the said gallery; and all and singular chambers, houses, edifices, buildings, offices under ground, and other offices whatsoever, situate or built under or over the said halls, bed chambers, galleries, and all and singular other buildings under or over the premises, or any part thereof; and all that flower garden, containing in length by estimation six perch and ten foot, and in breadth seven perch thirteen foot and a half; which garden reaches and extends itself to the three inner chambers and other buildings which was the abbot's own apartment, and all and singular messuages, dwellings, houses, buildings, structures, with the ground and soil thereto belonging; gardens, orchards, void places, walls, and all and singular other hereditaments that are known by the name or names of the abbot's lodgings, or situate and being within all that precinct, circuit and enclosure known or called the abbot's lodgings; which said circuit or enclosure in the south part contains by estimation nine perches and ten foot, and in the north part nine perch and six foot, and on the west end eight perch nine foot and eight inches, and at the east end eight perch and sixteen foot, each perch containing eighteen foot and a half and three inches; which said hall, houses, buildings, galleries, walks, and all and singular other the premises; and also, all the lands and soil whereon the same stand, are situate, lying and being within the precinct of the said late abbey or monastery: And we do also give, and by these presents grant to the said bishop, all that stable, commonly called the abbot's stable, containing in length four perch eight foot and a half, and in breadth one perch and four foot; and also, one garden being at the east end of the church-yard, containing in length six perch seventeen foot and a half, and in breadth six perch and sixteen foot; and also, that house commonly called the wood barton, containing in length one hundred and eight foot, and in breadth thirty-four foot; and also, two other stables, two slaughter houses, and one dog kennel, containing in length eighty-four foot, and in breadth thirty foot; which said stables, slaughter houses, and all and singular the premises are situated and lie in the parish of St. Mary de Lode in our said city of Gloucester, without the precinct of the said monastery; and also, free ingress, egress and regress, and all manner of other liberties and benefits, of going, returning, carrying and recarrying to and from all and singular the places aforesaid, and all other the premises, and of doing all other things at all times of the year, at the will and pleasure of the said bishop and his successors; to have and to hold all and singular the aforesaid halls, chambers, galleries, walks, offices, stables, houses, edifices, and all and singular other the premises to the said bishop and his successors; to be held of us and our successors as of free alms: And we will that the said messuages, dwellings, halls, chambers, and all and singular other the premises be for ever hereafter taken to be nominated and called the palace of the bishop of Gloucester and his successors.

And moreover, and by these presents we do ordain, that the said cathedral church from henceforth forward for ever shall be the cathedral church and see episcopal of the said John bishop of Gloucester, and of his successors bishops of Gloucester; and the said cathedral church we do by these presents adorn with the honours, dignities and ensigns of an episcopal see; and the said episcopal see we do by these presents give and grant to the said John and his successors, to have and to hold to the said John and his successors for ever.

And furthermore, of our farther grace, we will and ordain, and by these presents do grant, that the bishop of Gloucester that now is, and every one of his successors, amongst other things already mentioned, may, and can from time to time nominate, depute and appoint, one vicar general or vicars general, commissary or commissaries, register or registers, in and through the whole diocese of Gloucester, as the same by meets and bounds is known and limited, in the same manner as the bishop of Worcester might, ought, and was wont to nominate and appoint them; and that such vicar general, commissary and commissaries, register and registers, so by the bishop hereafter to be nominated and deputed, and every one of them, all and singular profits and emoluments to their respective offices now belonging, may and have full power and authority to collect, receive and have, in and through the said city, in manner as the vicar, commissary and register of the bishop of Worcester for the time being heretofore might, was wont, or accustomed to collect, receive, or have, any grants or commissions by the said now bishop of Worcester, or any of his predecessors or successors already made, granted, or done, or to be made, granted or done, notwithstanding.

And moreover we will, and by these presents do ordain, that the aforesaid John, and his successors, bishops of Gloucester aforesaid, may, can and ought to exercise, perform and use all and all manner of jurisdiction, power and authority, as well ordinary as extraordinary within the cathedral church of Gloucester and diocese aforesaid, from this time forth and for ever, in as ample manner and form as the bishop of Worcester by our laws might, could, or ought to exercise, perform and use.

And we farther will that the said John bishop of Gloucester; and his successors bishops of Gloucester, from henceforth and for ever have one or more authentic seal or seals, for the doing of all matters and businesses, which is to serve and be of the same effect in law, in the same manner and form as the bishop of Westminster now has, or may have.

And we will that the cathedral church aforesaid be filled and adorned with fit persons in all places and degrees; and we by these presents do made and ordain our well beloved chaplain, William Jennyns, bachelor in divinity, to be the first original and modern dean of the said cathedral church, and that he the said dean, and every of his successors to be by us named, have and possess the first place of dignity in the said cathedral church next to the said bishop; and that our well beloved chaplain, Nicholas Wotton, archdeacon of Gloucester, and every one of his successors, by the bishop of Gloucester to that archdeaconry henceforth to be nominated and chosen, have and possess the second place of dignity in the said cathedral church; and our beloved chaplain, Richard Brown, clerk, bachelor in civil and common laws, to be the first and present presbyter prebendary, and Henry Willis, clerk, bachelor in divinity, to be second presbyter prebendary, and John Rodley, clerk, bachelor in divinity, to be the third presbyter prebendary, and James Vaughan, clerk, master of arts, to be the fourth presbyter prebendary, and Edward Bennet, clerk, to be the fifth presbyter prebendary, and John Huntley, clerk, late prior of Dandri in our county of Surrey, to be the sixth presbyter prebendary.

We will also and ordain, and we do by these presents grant to the said dean and prebendaries, that the aforesaid dean and six prebendaries from henceforth be of themselves in deed and in name a body corporate, and that they have a perpetual succession, and that they shall demean, appear and employ themselves according to certain ordinances, rules and statutes by us, in a certain indenture to them hereafter to be made, specified and declared; and that the said dean and prebendaries, and their successors, shall for ever hereafter be called the dean and chapter of the holy and individed trinity of Gloucester; and that the aforesaid dean and prebendaries of the cathedral church aforesaid, and their successors, be, and for ever after shall be, the chapter of the bishoprick of Gloucester; and that the said chapter be for ever hereafter annexed, incorporated and united to the beforementioned John and his successors, bishops of Gloucester, in the same manner and form in which the dean and chapter of the cathedral church of St. Peter in our city of Westminster, to the bishop of Westminster, or episcopal see of Westminster, is annexed, incorporated, or united; and we make them, the said dean and prebendaries, one body corporate in deed and name; and them for one body we do make, declare, ordain and accept, and that they have a perpetual succession.

And that the said dean and chapter, and their successors, by the name of the dean and chapter of the holy and individed trinity of Gloucester, may prosecute, claim, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended, answer and be answered, in all our courts and places of law and elsewhere, in and upon all and singular causes, actions, suits, demands, writs and plaints, real, spiritual, personal and mixt, and in all other things, causes and matters, in the same manner as the dean and chapter of St. Peter of Westminster may or can make or do; and by the same name, manors, lordships, lands, tenements, and other hereditaments whatsoever, possessions, profits and emoluments, as well spiritual or ecclesiastical as temporal; and all other things whatsoever, to take, by letters patents of us, our heirs or successors, or of any other person or persons whatsoever, to them or their successors, or otherwise according to the laws of us, our heirs or successors, to be given or granted, may and can take, receive and acquire, give, alien and demise; and generally all and singular other things, take, receive, acquire, give, alien and demise, and do and execute in like, and in the same manner and form in which the dean and chapter of the aforesaid cathedral church of St. Peter in our city of Westminster can take, take, receive, acquire, give, alien, demise, and do or execute, but not otherwise, nor in any other manner.

And that the dean and chapter of the cathedral church of the holy and individed trinity of Gloucester, and their successors for ever, may use one common seal to seal all charters, evidences and writings, by them made or to be made, or any ways touching or concerning the said cathedral church aforesaid.

And moreover we will, and by these presents do grant and ordain, that the aforesaid bishop of Gloucester, and every of his successors for the time being, and the aforesaid dean and chapter of the cathedral church of the holy and individed trinity of Gloucester, and every one of their successors, have full power and faculty of making, receiving, giving, aliening, demising, executing, and doing all and singular things, which the bishop of Westminster jointly and severally can make, receive, give, alien, demise, execute, or do.

And because we will that the said cathedral church of the holy and individed trinity of Gloucester be honourably endowed, we of our farther grace have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant to the aforesaid dean and chapter of the holy and individed trinity of Gloucester all the aforesaid sept, circuit, enclosure and precinct of the abovenamed late abbey or monastery of St. Peter of Gloucester, with all ancient privileges, liberties and free customs of the said late abbey or monastery, and all the church there, together with all chapels, leads, bells, and all things belonging to bells, cloysters, church-yards, messuages, houses, edifices certain curtilages, flower gardens, gardens, orchards, fish ponds, and all other places, lands, territories and places within the same scite, sept, circuit, enclosure, and precinct of the said late abbey or monastery, and all that was reputed or esteemed part or parcel thereof, and which lately were the said prior's and convent's, in right of their monastery aforesaid, together with all and all manner of vessels, ornaments, goods, chattles and implements of the said late abbey or monastery, with their appurtenances whatsoever, except and always reserved to the aforesaid bishop and his successors, all and singular halls, chambers, galleries, walks, offices, stables, houses, buildings, and other hereditaments and liberties whatsoever to the said bishop and his successors herein in these presents before granted; to have, hold and enjoy the aforesaid scite, sept, circuit, enclosure and precinct of the said late abbey or monastery beforementioned, together with all ancient privileges, liberties and free customs above mentioned; together with the church, chapels, bells, and all things belonging to bells, cloysters, church-yards, messuages, houses, curtilages, flower gardens, gardens, orchards, fish ponds, lands, territories, and places within the said scite, sept, circuit, enclosure and precinct of the said late abbey or monastery; together with the vessels, jewels, ornaments, goods, chattles and implements of the said late abbey or monastery, with all and singular their appurtenances whatsoever; and with all and singular other the premises above specified, with their appurtenances, (except before excepted) to the aforesaid dean and chapter of the said cathedral church of the holy and individed trinity of Gloucester, and their successor for ever, of us, our heirs and successors, in pure and perpetual alms.

We will also, and by these presents do grant to the dean and chapter of the said cathedral church of the holy and inseparable trinity of Gloucester, that the dean of the said church for the time being, all and singular inferior officers and ministers of the said cathedral church, and all other persons of the said cathedral church, as the case or cases do require, shall make, constitute, appoint and accept from time to time for ever; and that he may and have authority such persons, and every of them so admitted or to be admitted, for lawful cause to correct, and also to depose, remove and expel from the said cathedral church, saving to us, our heirs and successors, the right, title and authority of nominating, assigning and preferring, and by our letters patents, to ordain, prefer and present all deans, prebendaries, and all the poor living there on our liberality from time to time, howsoever and as often as the said cathedral church of a dean, prebendaries or poor people, either by the death of any of them or otherwise, shall happen to be vacant, any thing in these presents before mentioned contained in the contrary, notwithstanding.

And we will also and ordain, and by these presents do decree, that the archdeacon of Gloucester that now is and his successors, be from henceforth for ever separated, discharged, and altogether freed from the jurisdiction, power, right and authority of the bishop of Worcester; and the said archdeacon, and his successors, we do, by these presents, separate, exonerate, and for ever free from the same; and him the said archdeacon, and his successors, we do decree, enact, ordain and establish from henceforth and for ever, to be in the aforesaid church of Gloucester in the same manner, form and plight, in which he or any of his predecessors were in the cathedral church of the blessed virgin Mary of Worcester.

We also enact and ordain, and by these presents we will and grant, that the aforesaid John, bishop of Gloucester, and his successors bishops of Gloucester, have, hold and possess in all things, and through all things, authority, power, right, plight and jurisdiction of, in and on the archdeaconry of Gloucester, and the archdeacon that now is and his successors, as fully and absolutely to all and intents and purposes as the bishop of Worcester that now is, or any of his predecessors now hath, or had, or ought to have, or did use or exercise.

We will also, and by these presents do grant, as well to the aforesaid bishop as to the dean and chapter, that he and they have, and shall have, these our letters patents under our great seal of England, made and sealed in due form, without fine or fee great or small, in our hamper or elsewhere, in any manner to be rendered, paid, or made; notwithstanding there is no express mention at this time in these presents made of the true yearly value or certainty of the premises, or any of them, or of any other gifts or grants by us made to the said bishop or dean and chapter, or their successors; and notwithstanding any statute, act, ordinance, provision, or restriction to the contrary thereof made, published, ordained, or provided, or any other thing, cause, or matter whatsoever, in any wise notwithstanding.

In testimony of which, these our letters we have made patents. Witness our self at Westminster, the third day of September, in the thirty third year of our reign.—S.

We give also, and by these presents do grant, to the same reverend father in Christ, John Wakeman, bishop of Gloucester, cester, all that scite of a certain mansion house called the vineyard, and also a certain clove of pasture adjoining to the said scite of the vineyard aforesaid, called the Park, containing about fifteen acres and three rods, and now or late in the tenure or occupation of John Arnold, esq; or his assignees, situate, lying, and being in the parish of St. Mary de Lode, in our said county of the city of Gloucester, and did sometime belong and appertain to, and were part of the possessions of the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester.

And also, all that our meadow commonly called Importams, otherwise Porthame, containing by estimation 67 acres of meadow, lying and being in the said parish of St. Mary de Lode, in our said county of the city of Gloucester, and the first shoot of the same meadow, being part of the demesnes of Barton Abbots, and did some time belong and appertain to the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester.

And also, all that our part of the manor of Lassington in our said county of the city of Gloucester, with all its rights, members and appurtenances, and some time belonging and appertaining to the said late monastery of St. Peter's in Gloucester, and being parcel of the possessions of the said late monastery; and also all and singular messuages, lands, tenements, rents, reversions, meadows, feedings, pastures, woods, underwoods, commons, courts, leets, view of frank pledge, and all things which belong to view of frank pledge, chattles, waifs, estrays, services, and all other our profits, commodities, emoluments and hereditaments whatsoever, in any wise to the said part of our manor belonging or appertaining, or that have been heretofore known, taken, used, or reputed members or parcels of the same part, or any parcel thereof, situate or being in the parishes of St. Oswald and St. Mary de Lode, or elsewhere, in the county of our said city of Gloucester: And also, all that moiety or half part of a certain wood of ours called Woolridge, containing by estimation fifty acres; and also, all that moiety or half part of another wood of ours there called the Perch, containing by estimation sixteen acres, together with the land and soil of the said moiety of the same woods, lying and being in the said parish of St. Mary de Lode within the said county of our city of Gloucester, and some time belonging and appertaining to the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, and being parcel of the possessions of the said late monastery.

We also give, and by these presents do grant, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, to the aforesaid reverend father in Christ, all those our rectories and churches of Hartpury, Maifemore and Upton St. Leonard, in our said county of our city of Gloucester; and also, all those our rectories and churches of Cam, Northleach, Kempford, Whelford, South Cerney, and Standish, in our said county of Gloucester; and likewise, all those our rectories and churches of Dewchurch, Kilpeck, Glasbury, Devennock, Cowern, and Ewias Harold, in our said county of Hereford; and also, all that our rectory and church of Stewport in our said county of Wenlock in Wales; and likewise, all that our chapel of Cam in our said county of Gloucester; and all that our chapel of Piperton in our said county of Hereford; and all that our chapel of Maifemore in our said county of the city of Gloucester; which rectories, churches and chapels, did some time belong and appertain to the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, and were part of the possessions of the said late monastery; and also, all and all sorts of manors, messuages, glebes, meadows, feedings, pastures, rents, reversions, services, tithes, oblations, obventions, pensions, portions, and all and singular other our hereditaments and emoluments whatsoever to the said rectories, churches and chapels, or any of them, belonging or appertaining, or that have been heretofore had or known to be part or parcel of the same rectories, churches or chapels, or any of them, or have been let or demised with the said rectories, churches or chapels, or any of them; and also, all and singular our tithes, glebes, pensions, portions, oblations and obventions whatsoever, issuing from, or being in the villages, fields, parishes, or hamlets of Standish, Caldrupe, Hardwick, Over-Oxlinch, Little Runwike, Harsfield, Nether Oxlinch, Sall, Putley, Farley, and Holyrood Ampney, in our said county of Gloucester; and in Devennock, Wentworth and Talgarthe, in our said county of Hereford, sometime belonging and appertaining to the said late monastery of St Peter in Gloucester, or being part or parcel of the possessions and revenues of the same late monastery.

Moreover we give, and by these presents do, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, grant to the aforesaid reverend father in Christ, the bishop of Gloucester, a certain pension of fifty-three shillings and four pence, issuing out of the rectory or church of Kempford in our said county of Gloucester, and yearly paid by the vicar of the same church for the time being; and likewise, a certain pension or yearly rent of twenty-six shillings and eight-pence, issuing out of the rectory or church of Teynton in our said county of Gloucester; and also, a certain pension or yearly rent of nine shillings, issuing out of the rectory or church of Rendcomb in our said county of Gloucester; and also, a certain pension or yearly rent of twenty-six shillings and eight-pence, issuing out of the rectory or church of Nympsfield in our said county of Gloucester; and also, a certain pension or yearly rent of twenty-six shillings and eight-pence, issuing out of the rectory or church of Newport in our said county of Wenlock in Wales, and yearly paid by the vicar of the same church for the time being, which pensions were yearly paid by the several rectors and vicars of the same churches for the time being, and did sometime belong and appertain to the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, and were parcel of the possessions of the said late monastery.

We give also, and by these presents, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bishop all those portions of tithes whatsoever arising, growing or renewing in Aldesworth, Linton, and Shipton Solers, in our said county of Gloucester, and now or lately in the several tenures or occupations of George Dafton, and the farmer of the rectory of Aldesworth aforesaid; and also, all those portions of tithes whatsoever arising, growing or renewing in Ash-Leomyfter, Ferm, Barn, Bunches, Strood and Lake in our said county of Hereford, which portions did sometime belong and appertain to the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, and were parcel of the possessions of the said late monastery.

We give also, and by these presents, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, do grant to the same bishop all and singular the advowsons, donations, presentations, free dispositions, and rights of patronages, of all and singular the rectories and churches to the said manors, or any of them, belonging or appertaining; and likewise, all and singular advowsons, donations, presentations, free dispositions, and right of patronage, of all and singular the vicarages of Hartpury, Maifemore, Upton St. Leonard, in our said county of the city of Gloucester; and of Cam, Northleach, Kempford, Whelford, South Cerney and Standish, in our said county of Gloucester; and of Dewchurch, Kilpeck, Glasbury, Devennock, Cowern and Ewias Harold, in our said county of Hereford; and of Newport in our county of Wenlock in Wales, sometime belonging and appertaining to the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, and being parcel of the possessions of the same monastery; and likewise, the donations, presentations, and free dispositions, of all those chapels, chanteries, or of the stipends of all those chapels of Maifemore, Cam, Stinchcomb, Piperton, in our said county of Gloucester, and in the county of our city of Gloucester, and in our said county of Hereford, which did sometime belong and appertain to the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, as fully and wholly, and in as ample manner and form as the last abbot and late convent of the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, or any of their predecessors, in right of that late monastery any time before the dissolution of the same late monastery, or before that late monastery came into our hands, had, held and enjoyed the said manors, lands, tenements, and other the premises or any parcel thereof, or ought to have had, held and enjoyed; and as fully and wholly, and in as ample manner and form as all and singular of them came or ought to have come into our hands, and now are, or ought to be in our hands, by reason or pretence of any deed of gift, grant or confirmation made unto us by the late prior of the said late monastery, under the seal of his convent, or any other way whatsoever, to have, hold and enjoy all and singular the aforesaid manors, messuages, lands, tenements, rents, reversions, services, courts, leets, view of frank pledge, meadows, feedings, pastures, woods, underwoods, pensions, tithes, and portions of tithes, oblations, obventions, advowsons, donations, presentations, free dispositions, and rights of patronages, and all and singular other the premises abovementioned and specified, with all and singular their and every of their appurtenances, to the aforesaid reverend father, the bishop of Gloucester, and his successors for ever, to be held of us, our heirs and successors in pure and perpetual alms; and also yielding to us, our heirs and successors, at our court of augmentations of the revenues of our crown, yearly from thenceforth for ever, thirty-three pounds, sixteen shillings, and four-pence, of good and lawful money of England to be paid on the feast of St. Michael the archangel every year for ever.

Furthermore, out of our more abundant grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant to the aforesaid bishop, all and all manner of issues, rents, revenues and profits, of all and singular the aforesaid manors, messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments, and other the premises, and each parcel of them, from the feast of St. Michael the archangel last past, before the date of these presents until this time, to be had and received by the same bishop as of our gift, as well by his own proper hands, as by the hands of those that are or shall be the farmers, bailiffs or occupiers, receivers or other our officers and ministers whatsoever, of all and singular the premises, and every parcel of them, without account, or without yielding, paying, or doing any thing for the same, to us our heirs or successors.

And whereas by a certain act in our parliament begun at London, the 3d day of November, in the one and twentieth year of our reign, and from thence adjourned to Westminster, and by divers prorogations then and there continued and held until until the 3d day of November, which was in the the twenty-sixth year of our reign, amongst other things it was declared, provided, enacted and ordained, that we, our heirs and successors, kings of this realm, should have and enjoy from time to time for ever to come, of all such person and persons, who at any time after the first day of January then next following should be nominated, chosen, professed, presented, or any other way appointed to any archbishoprick, bishoprick, abbey, monastery, priory, college, hospital, archdeaconry, deanery, prebendary, rectory, vicarage, chauntry, free-chapel, or any dignity, benefice, office, or spiritual promotion, within this kingdom or elsewhere, within any of our dominions, of what name or quality soever they shall be, or to whatsoever foundation, patronage or donation they shall belong, the first fruits of the revenues and profits for one year of every such archbishoprick, bishoprick, abbey, monastery, priory, college, hospital, archdeaconry, deanery, prebendary, rectory, vicarage, chauntry, free-chapel, or any other dignity, benefice, office, or spiritual promotion, or to what such person or persons nominated, after the aforesaid first day of January, should be nominated, elected, preferred, presented, collated, or any other way appointed, as in the same act of parliament, amongst other things, it does more plainly appear: Know ye, that we, being willing to discharge and acquit the said bishop of Gloucester, and his executors, as well of the said first fruits, revenues and profits of the premises, and every of the premises, as of every sum of money to be paid to us on account of the said act of parliament for first fruits, of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, do grant to the same bishop and his executors, that we, our heirs and successors, will not have, require, claim, nor challenge any first fruit or fruits of or for the said bishoprick of Gloucester, nor of or for the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, and other the premises, nor of or for any parcel thereof, nor any issues revenues or profits, nor any sums of money in the name of the first fruits, of or for the premises, or any part of them, nor for the first fruits of the same, or any parcel of them, for this time only, but that the same bishop and his executors are and shall be discharged and acquitted, as to us, our heirs and successors, of and for the first fruits of all and singular the premises, and every parcel of them; and of and from all and all sorts of issues, profits, revenues of the premises, and every part of them; and of and for all and all manner of sums of money whatsoever, to be paid to us, our heirs and successors, for and in the name of the first fruits for the premises, and every parcel of them, for this time only; and also, we have pardoned, remitted and released, and by these presents do pardon, remit and release, to the before-mentioned bishop, the aforesaid first fruits, revenues and profits of the premises, and every parcel of them; and all and all manner of sums of money, for and in the name of first fruits of the said bishoprick, and the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, and all and singular other the premises, and every parcel of them, due or to be paid unto us by ourselves, by these our letters patents granted to the same bishop for this time only; and also, by these presents we give unto the same bishop all and every sum and sums of money whatsoever, for the first fruits, revenues and profits of the premises, or any parcel of them, or for or in the name of the first fruits of the premises, to be yielded, paid or done by the said bishop of Gloucester unto us, by reason of the aforesaid act, or any other act, law, usage, prescription, custom, or otherwise, or any other manner whatsoever, to be had by the same bishop, of our gift, without any account, and without yielding, paying or doing any other thing therefore to us, our heirs and successors, saving unto us, our heirs and successors, the first fruits for the premises, to be yielded hereafter by his successors, bishops of Gloucester, according to the form of the statute aforesaid.

And furthermore, out of our more abundant grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we give and grant unto the same bishop and his successors, that the same bishop and his successors shall have, hold and enjoy, and shall be empowered and enabled to have, hold and enjoy, within the said manors, and all and singular other the premises, and within each parcel of them, as many, as great, and such and the same sort, and the like courts leets, view of frank pledge, and also all things that belong to view of frank pledge, assize and assizes of bread, wine and ale, and other drink whatsoever, chattels waived, estrays, free warrens, and all things that belong to free warren, quarries, lands, fairs, markets, tolls, liberties, franchises, privileges and jurisdictions whatsoever, as and which the aforesaid late abbot and convent of the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, or any of his or their predecessors have had, held and enjoyed, or ought to have had, held and enjoyed in the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, and other the premises, or in any parcel of them, by virtue of any other letters patents by us, or one or other of our progenitors, to the said abbot or any of his predecessors made or granted, or by reason of any prescription, usage, custom, corodies, or any other manner whatsoever, in as ample manner and form as the said late abbot, or any of his predecessors have had, exercised and enjoyed, or ought to have had, exercised and enjoyed.

And furthermore, we out of our more ample grace, and by these presents, do grant for us, our heirs and successors, that the same bishop and his successors, from henceforth for ever, shall have, hold and enjoy, and to their own proper use shall convert, have and enjoy, and be empowered to convert to their own proper use all and singular the aforesaid rectories which were any ways appropriated; and all and every the lands, tenements, tithes, commodities, profits and emoluments whatsoever, to the same rectories, or any of them, in any wise belonging or appertaining, with all their appurtenances, to the beforementioned bishop and his successors before granted; and that the said rectories, with their appurtenances, from henceforth for ever, be appointed to the said bishop and his successors, in as ample manner and form as the said late abbot and convent of the said late monastery of St. Peter in Gloucester, or either, or any of his or their predecessors, in right of the late monastery or the said rectories, or any, or either of them, with their appurtenances, had, held or enjoyed, or ought to have had, held or enjoyed, on any account or manner whatsoever, any act, statute, ordinance, law, custom, prohibition or restriction heretofore made, had, published, used or provided, or any other matter or cause whatsoever to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding or impeding; and this without any presentation, admission, or induction of any incumbent or incumbents to the said rectories, or any of them, to the said bishop and his successors.

And we will also and do by these presents, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, grant to the beforementioned bishop and his successors, that we, our heirs and successors, for ever, and from time to time, shall acquit, discharge and save harmless, as well the same bishop, his successors and assignees, as the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, and all and singular other the premises, with their appurtenances, against every person and persons, their heirs and successors whatsoever, of and for all and every pensions, portions, rents, fees, commodities, annuities, charges, and sums of money whatsoever, any ways issuing, or to be paid out of, or for the said manors and premises, or any parcel of them, or that are or shall be charged upon the premises, or any of them, except the rent above by these presents to us reserved, and except a fee of forty shillings yearly, paid to the bailiff of the manor of Maitmore aforesaid for the time being, and of eleven shillings yearly paid to the woodward of Woolridge aforesaid, and of six shillings and eight-pence yearly paid to the woodward of the Perch aforesaid, and of twenty-six shillings and eight-pence yearly paid to the bailiff of Brokethorp and Hascomb aforesaid, and of eleven shillings and eight-pence yearly paid to the bailiff of Preston aforesaid, and of six shillings and eight-pence yearly paid to the bailiff of Longford aforesaid, and of eight shillings and four-pence yearly paid to the bailiff of Rudge and Farleigh aforesaid, and of thirteen pounds six shillings and eight-pence yearly paid to the vicar of the church of Cam aforesaid, and to the chaplain celebrating divine service in the chapel of Stinchcomb in the parish of Cam, to the same church annexed, in augmentation of their salaries and stipends; and of fifteen pounds five shillings yearly paid to the vicar of Standish aforesaid, and a fee of thirteen shillings and four-pence yearly paid to the collector of the pensions of Kempford, Teynton, Rendcomb, and Nympsfield aforesaid, and a fee of fourteen shillings and one penny yearly paid to the bailiff of Hope-Melehall aforesaid, and a fee of one pound six shillings and eight-pence yearly paid to the bailiff of Dewchurch and Kilpeck aforesaid, and of five shillings yearly paid to the chancellor of Hereford for procurations and annual issues out of the rectories of Dewchurch and Kilpeck aforesaid, and of two shillings and two-pence yearly paid to the archdeacon of Brecknock, in the diocese of St. David, for procurations and synodals, and of ten-pence yearly paid to the church of Glasbury aforesaid, and of five-pence yearly paid to the church of Devenock aforesaid, and the fee of thirteen shillings and four-pence yearly paid to the farmer of the rectory of Glasbury and Devenock aforesaid for his livery, and of two shillings yearly paid to the vicar of York for a certain portion of tithes issuing out of the rectory of Cowern aforesaid, and a fee of three shillings and four-pence yearly paid to the collector of portions in Ash-Leomyfter, Fern, Farne, Briches, Strode and Lake aforesaid, and the fee of six shillings and eight-pence yearly paid to the bailiff of Droiscort aforesaid for the time being.

Moreover, we will, and for ourselves, our heirs and successors, do strictly charge and command, as well our chancellor of the court of first fruits and tenths, and chancellor and convent of the court of augmentations of the revenues of our crown for the time being, as all other our receivers, auditors, and other officers and ministers whatsoever, that they and every of them, upon the only producing of these our letters patents, or inrolment of the same, without any other writ or warrant from us, our heirs and successors, in any wise to be obtained or prosecuted, shall make, or cause to be made, full entries and due allowance, defalcation, deduction and plain discharge to the before-

mentioned bishop, his successors and assigns, of all and every such pensions, portions, rents, fees, commodities, annuities, charges, and sums of money (except before excepted) charged or to be charged on the said manors, or on the premises, or any part of them; and these our letters patents shall yearly, and from time to time, be as well to the said chancellor of the court of tithes and first fruits, as the chancellor and counsel of our court of the augmentations of the revenues of our crown for the time being, as to every of our receivers, auditors and other our officers and ministers, a sufficient warrant and discharge on his part.

And moreover, out of our more ample grace, we will, and by these presents, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, do grant, that these our letters patents, and every word, sentence and clause in the same contained or specified, shall be interpreted, expounded, taken, understood, adjudged and determined, as well before us, our heirs and successors, in every of our courts, and the courts of our heirs and successors, both temporal and spiritual, and in all other places, and before whatsoever judges, justices, or other person or persons whatsoever, to the greatest advantage and profit of the aforesaid bishop and his successors, and most strictly against ourself, our heirs and successors, altho' the name or surname of the aforesaid bishop, or the certain true value of the aforesaid bishoprick of Gloucester be not specially and certainly in these our letters patents expressed, declared and specified; or for any omission, defect, negligence, repugnancy, contrariety in these presents, or any of them, or for express mention not being made in these presents of the true yearly value and certainty of the premises, or other gifts and grants made to the aforesaid bishop before this time, any statute, act, ordinance, or restriction to the contrary of the premises, or any of them, before this time published, made or ordained, or any other cause or matter whatsoever, in any thing notwithstanding.

We will also, and by these presents do grant, to the before-mentioned bishop, that he may and shall have these our letters patents made, sealed and to be sealed in due manner under our great seal of England, without yielding, paying or doing therefore in any manner to us, any fine or fee, great or small, in our hamper or elsewhere, to our use, although express mention be not made in these presents of the true yearly value or certainty of the premises, or any of them, or any other gifts or grants by us to the aforesaid bishop of Gloucester heretofore made, or any statute, act, ordinance, provision or restriction to the contrary thereof made, published, ordained or provided, or any other thing, cause or matter whatsoever, in any case notwithstanding.

In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents. Witness ourself at Westminster, the 4th day of September, in the three and thirtieth year of our reign.

NUMBER IX.

The ENDOWMENT of the Dean and Chapter of GLOUCESTER.

HENRY the VIIIth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, defender of the faith, lord of Ireland, and supreme head of the church of England upon earth, to all to whom these present letters shall come, greeting.

Know ye, that we of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant to the dean and chapter of the cathedral church of the holy and undivided trinity of Gloucester, by us now newly erected and founded, all those our manors of Tuffley, Ablode and Sainthurste, Barnewood and Croneham, Mattison and Wotton, in our county of the city of Gloucester, with all and singular their rights, members and appurtenances.

Know ye, moreover, that we out of our special grace, for us, our heirs and successors, do by these presents pardon, remit and release, to the aforesaid dean and chapter, and their successors for ever, and to all and singular person and persons whatsoever, and to every one of them who now are, or is, or hereafter shall be dean of the cathedral church aforesaid, or prebend in the said church, or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, all and singular sum and sums of money whatsoever, to us, our heirs or successors, by the said dean and chapter or their successors, or by any dean of the cathedral church aforesaid, or by any prebend in the said church, or by any person or persons whatsoever, that now are or is, or hereafter shall be promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the church aforesaid, as well for first fruits, revenues and profits, or in the name of first fruits, revenues and profits of the said manors, lands, tenement, and other the premisses, or of any of them, or of any parcel of them, or any of them, or of one year's value of the deanery of the church aforesaid, or of the prebendaries, or of any other benefice, office or dignity whatsoever, in the cathedral church aforesaid, to whom, to which, or to what he is promoted, assigned or appointed, or at any time hereafter, to whom, to which, or to what he or they shall be promoted, assigned, appointed or collated, for any annual rendering of the tenth part, or of any pension, or of any yearly value, or of any yearly rent, pension or annuity, or of any other sum of money whatsoever, out of the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, rectories, and other the premisses, or out of any parcel of them issuing or to be paid, or parcel of the profits of the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, and other the premisses, or of any parcel of them being and assigned, or limited, or to be assigned or limited to the said dean and prebends, or to any one of them, or to any other person or persons, and the successor and successors of them, and every of them, to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, now promoted or assigned, or hereafter to be promoted or assigned; or in the name of any annual rent, tenth part, or pension extending to the yearly value of a tenth part, or to the tenth part of all and singular the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, and other the premisses, or any of them, or of any parcel of them; or of the deanery of the cathedral church aforesaid, or of any prebendary, benefice, office, dignity, or of any other promotion whatsoever in the said church, or to the tenth part of any yearly value, rent, pension or annuity, or of any other sum whatsoever before specified, or of any value of them, or by virtue or reason of the act of parliament made in the aforesaid twenty-sixth year of our reign, to us, our heirs and successors, to be paid, rendered or made, the aforesaid sum of ninety pounds, fourteen shillings, and one halfpenny, by us (before mentioned) reserved only excepted, and to us, our heirs and successors, yearly reserved.

And besides, out of our farther grace, we, for us, our heirs and successors, do pardon, remit and release, to our well beloved chaplain, William Jenyns, clerk, batchelor in divinity, now dean of the cathedral church aforesaid; to our well beloved chaplain, Richard Brown, clerk, batchelor in the civil and canon laws, the first and present presbyter prebend; to Henry Wilks, clerk, batchelor in divinity, second presbyter prebend; to John Rodley, clerk, batchelor in divinity, the third presbyter prebend; to James Vaughan, clerk, master of arts, the fourth presbyter prebend; to Edward Bennette, clerk, the fifth presbyter prebend; and to John Huntley, clerk, late prior of the abbey of Tandriche, in our county of Surry, the sixth presbyter prebend, now prebends in the cathedral church aforesaid, and to every one of them, all and singular sums of money of the aforesaid William, Richard, Henry, John, James, Edward and John, or by any one of them to us, for first fruits, revenues and profits, or in the name of first fruits and profits, or in the name of first fruits of the deanery aforesaid, or prebendaries in the said church, or any one of them, or of any annual rent, pension or portion, or of any other sum of money whatsoever to them, for their several portions in the cathedral church aforesaid, limited or assigned, or to be limited or assigned, or for annual rendering or the tenth part, or in the name of a pension extending to the tenth part of the value of the deanery aforesaid, or prebendaries aforesaid, or of any of them, or of any rent, pension or portion, or of any of them, to them or to any one of them, for his part or portion, limited or assigned, or to be limited or assigned in the same church, to be paid, rendered or made.

And we, of our more abundant grace, do, for us, our heirs and successors, kings of this kingdom of England, by these presents, give and grant to the aforesaid dean and chapter and their successors for ever, all and singular sums and sum of money by the aforesaid dean and chapter, or their successors, or any, or any one of their successors whatsoever, which may any way whatever, either by the dean of the said cathedral church, or the prebends, or any other persons in the said church, or by any of them, or by any other person or persons whatsoever, who at any time hereafter shall be, or shall be nominated, assigned or appointed to the deanery aforesaid, or to any prebendary in the said church, or to any benefice, office, dignity or promotion in the said church, or sub-dean of the said church, or prebend in the same church, or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity, in the cathedral church aforesaid, to us, our heirs or successors, kings of this kingdom of England, by virtue or reason of any act of parliament made in the aforesaid six and twentieth year of our reign, for the uses of any of the premisses, to be paid, rendered or made, the aforesaid sum of ninety pounds, fourteen shillings, and one halfpenny, by us as aforesaid reserved only excepted; to have and enjoy all and singular the said sums, and every sum of money aforesaid, except only as before excepted, to the said dean and chapter, and their successors for ever, of our special gift, without any account, or any other thing therefore, to us, our heirs or successors, to be rendered, paid or done.

And we farther will, and by these presents do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant to the said dean and chapter, and their successors, and to every person and persons that now is, or are, or hereafter shall be, dean of the church aforesaid, or prebend in the said church, or nominated, appointed or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, that we, our heirs and successors, will not have, ask, claim, challenge any first fruits, revenues or profits, or any sum of money whatsoever for first fruits, revenues or profits, of the aforesaid manors and other the premisses, or any of them, or any parcel of them, or for first fruits of any annual rents, pensions or annuities, or of any other sum before specified, or in the name of first fruits of them, or any one of them, or of any parcel of any one of them, or any pension or annual rent extending to the tenth part of the yearly value of the said manors, and other the premisses, or any of them, or of any parcel thereof, or to the tenth part of any annual rent, pension or annuity, or of any other sum whatsoever before specified, or any sum whatsoever, or any other thing whatsoever, by virtue or reason of the aforesaid act of parliament, made in the aforesaid twenty-sixth year of our reign, by the said dean and chapter, or their successors, or any person whatsoever that now is, or at any time hereafter shall be, dean of the cathedral church aforesaid, or prebend in the same church, or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, therefore to be rendered, paid or made, besides the said sum of ninety pounds, fourteen shillings, and one halfpenny, as is above premised, by us above yearly reserved.

But that as well the said dean, prebends and chapter, and their successors, as all and every singular person and persons who now are or is, or hereafter shall be dean of the church aforesaid, or prebend in the said church, or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the same church, he and they shall be exempted and acquitted by these presents, against us, our heirs and successors, from all and singular, and every sum and sums of money, to us, our heirs or successors, by vertue or reason of the said act of parliament, made in the aforesaid twenty-sixth year of our reign, for the deanery of the said church, or for any prebendary, or any benefice, office, dignity or promotion in the said church, and every thing concerning the said deanery, prebendaries, benefices, offices, dignities and promotions, or any of them, to be rendered or paid, any clause, matter, sentence, thing, article, ordinance, proviso, gift, grant, or any cause whatsoever in the said statute contained or specified to the contrary notwithstanding.

And we will, and for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, do grant to the said dean and chapter, and their successors, to enter into all the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, rents, services, and all other the premises, and into every parcel thereof, and those to enjoy, to have and to hold, to them and their successors for ever, by the tenor, force, form and effect of these our letters patents; and that it shall be lawful for all and every person and persons whatsoever, who now is, or are, or hereafter shall be dean of the church aforesaid, or prebend in the said church, or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, and for all and every one of them, to enter, take and have actual and real possession of that to which he hath been nominated, appointed and promoted in the cathedral church aforesaid; and to have, take and receive the issues, revenues and profits thereof to his own proper use, without any other satisfaction or payment, to the use of us, our heirs or successors, for any first fruits, revenues or profits, of that to which he is, or shall be nominated, appointed or promoted, in the cathedral church aforesaid, and without any licence, concord, suit, composition, or prosecution of any livery to be made from us, our heirs or successors, or our officers, in any of our courts for that cause, besides the aforesaid annual sum of ninety pounds, fourteen shillings, and one halfpenny, to us, our heirs and successors, for tenths and first fruits of all and singular the manors, lands and tenements before granted, reserved as aforesaid.

And besides we will, and for us, our heirs and successors, kings of this kingdom of England, by these presents, do grant to the aforesaid dean and chapter, and their successors, and to all and every person and persons that now are, or is, or hereafter shall be dean of the cathedral church aforesaid, or prebend in the same church, or promoted, nominated, or assigned to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, that it shall and may be lawful that they, and every one of them, may enter, take, and have actual and real possession of such aforesaid deanery, prebendary, benefice, office or dignity, to which he hath been nominated, appointed or promoted, in the said cathedral church; and also that he and they may have, take and receive, the issues, revenues and profits, rents and emoluments of such deanery, prebendary, benefice, office, dignity or promotion, or any one of them, in the said cathedral church, without any satisfaction or payment, to the use of us, our heirs or successors, for any first fruits, revenues and profits, of the premises, or any of them, or for any first fruits of the deanery, prebendary, or other benefice, office or dignity in the said cathedral church, to which they, or any one of them, now are, or is, or at any time hereafter shall or may be nominated, appointed or promoted, and without any composition or agreement therefore to be made; so that we, our heirs or successors, or any other, for us, our heirs or successors, shall not for that cause disquiet, impeach, disturb nor molest, or vex the aforesaid dean and chapter, or their successors, or any person or persons whatsoever, to the deanery in the said cathedral church, or to any prebendary in the said church, or any benefice, office, dignity or promotion in the said church, nominated, assigned or appointed, or to be nominated, assigned or appointed, of, for, or concerning any intrusion, or other offence or forfeiture whatsoever, in any of the premises; but that as well the said dean and chapter, and their successors, and all and singular persons whatsoever, who to the deanery of the said cathedral church, or to any prebendary in the same church, or to any benefice, office, dignity or other promotion whatsoever in the said church, now nominated, assigned or appointed, or at any time hereafter shall be nominated, assigned or appointed, and every of them, shall be altogether exonerated, acquitted, pardoned and released, against us, our heirs and successors, and every one of us, from any fine, for all and singular such entries, intrusions, offences, penalties and forfeitures, and other things whatsoever, limited or specified in any statute or act of parliament made in the aforesaid twenty-sixth year of our reign, concerning the payment of first fruits, and the payment of annual rents and pensions extending to the yearly value of any benefice, office, dignity or promotion, or any of them, any statute, ordinance, proviso or act made in the said 26th year of our reign, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Moreover willing, and by these presents firmly enjoining and commanding, all and singular archbishops and bishops within this our kingdom of England, and the chancellor of our court or our tenths and first fruits, as also all and singular the officers and ministers of us, our heirs and successors, and every one of them, that they, or any one of them, in any manner whatsoever, shall not impeach, disturb, vex, disquiet or molest the dean and chapter aforesaid, and the successors, or the successor of any one of them, or any person whatsoever that now is, or at any time hereafter shall be dean of the cathedral church aforesaid, or prebend in the same church, or nominated, appointed or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, of, for or concerning the payment of any sum or thing whatsoever, for first fruits, revenues or profits, or in the name of first fruits of the premises, or of any of them, or of the deanery of the cathedral church aforesaid, or of any prebendary, benefice, office or dignity, in the said cathedral church, or of, for or concerning the payment of any sum or thing whatsoever, for or in the name of an annual rent or pension, extending to the tenth part of the value, or yearly value of the premises, or any of them, or of the deanery of the cathedral church aforesaid, or of any prebendary, benefice, office, or dignity in the said church, or by reason or pretence of any statute made in the aforesaid 26th year of our reign; but that all and singular the aforesaid archbishops, bishops, chancellors, officers and ministers of us, our heirs and successors, upon the only shewing of these our letters patents, shall permit and cause the said dean and chapter, and their successors, and every other person aforesaid, to be quiet and in peace, of, for and concerning the premises.

And farther, we, out of our more abundant grace, do give and grant to the said dean and chapter, and their successors, that they the said dean and chapter, and their successors, shall have, hold and enjoy, and that they may and have full power to have, hold and enjoy, within the manors and lordships aforesaid, and all and singular other the premises, and within every part and parcel of them, as many, such, as great, the same, and like courts leet, view of frank pledge, and all that to view of frank pledge belongs; assize and assay of bread, wine, beer, wayfes, estrays, free warrens, and all that to free warren belongs, fairs, markets, liberties, franchises and jurisdictions whatsoever, as, and which the aforesaid late abbot and the late convent of the said late monastery of St. Peter of Gloucester, or any one of them, or any of their predecessors, or the aforesaid late abbot, or late convent of the said late monastery of Tewksbury, or any one of them, or any, or any one of their predecessors had, held or enjoyed, or might, or ought to have had, held and enjoyed, in the manors, lands, tenements, rectories, and other the premises, or in any parcel thereof; and that so fully and wholly, and in as ample manner and form as all and singular those premises, by reason or pretence of the dissolution, surrender or grant of the said several monasteries, or any or either of them, or otherwise howsoever, came or ought to come to our hands, or at this time are or ought to be in our hands.

And farther, out of our more ample grace, we will, and by these presents do grant, for us our heirs and successors, that the said dean and chapter, and their successors, shall from henceforth for ever have, hold and enjoy, and to their own proper use convert, and also, that they may, and have full power and authority to have, hold and enjoy, and to their own proper uses, to convert all and singular the aforesaid rectories and chapels that lately were in any manner appropriate; and all, and all manner of lands, tenements and tithes, commodities, profits and emoluments whatsoever, to the said rectories and chapels, or to any one of them, in any manner belonging or appertaining to the said dean and chapter, and to their successors before granted, with all and singular their appurtenances; and that the said rectories and chapels, with their appurtenances, shall for ever hereafter be appropriate to the said dean and chapter, and their successors, in as ample manner and form as the said late several abbots, or either of them, or any, or any one of their predecessors, in the right of their late several monasteries, or in their own right, or in the right of either of them, had, held and enjoyed, or might or ought to have had, held or enjoyed, all or any, or any one of the said rectories or chapels, with their appurtenances, in any kind or manner whatsoever, any act, statute, ordinance, law, custom, prohibition or restriction, before this time had, made, enacted, used or provided, or any other matter, thing or cause whatsoever to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding or hindering, and this without any presentation, admission or induction of any incumbent or incumbents to the said rectories and chapels, or any of them granted as aforesaid to the said dean and chapter, and their successors, by these presents.

And also we will, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid dean and chapter, and their successors, successors, that we, our heirs and successors, shall and will, from time to time, and for ever discharge, acquit and keep indemnified, as well the said dean and chapter and their successors, as the manors, lands, tenements, and all and singular other the premises, with their appurtenances, against all and every person and persons whomsoever, and their heirs and assignees, of and from all, and all manner of pensions, portions, rents, fees, corrodies, annuities, charges and sums of money whatsoever, of or for the manors and other the premises, or of or for any parcel thereof already charged, or to be charged, besides the aforesaid sum of ninety pounds, eighteen shillings, and one half-penny, to us, our heirs and successors, above by these presents reserved; out of the rectory of Fayreford; besides also twenty shillings yearly to be paid to the farmers of the rectories of Lantwit, Lambethian, Lantrissen, Penmarke, and Cardiffe aforesaid, with the chapel of St. Donats, for the time being, for carriage of the money and rent aforesaid.

And out of our more ample grace, we farther give and grant to the aforesaid dean and chapter, all issues, revenues and profits of all and singular the aforesaid manors, lands, tenements, rectories, pensions, portions, tithes, and of all and singular the premises above expressed and specified, arising or growing from the feast of St. Michael the archangel last past, until this time.

We will moreover, and by these presents firmly enjoining, do command, as well our chancellor and council of our court of augmentations of the revenue of our crown for the time being, as all receivers, auditors, and other our ministers whatsoever, that they and every one of them, upon only shewing of these our letters patents, without any writ or warrant from us, or our successors, in any manner to be sought, obtained, or prosecuted, do accept, make, and cause to be made, a full, whole and due discharge, allowance, defalcation, and manifest deduction, to the said dean and chapter, and their successors, of all and all manner of annuities, rents and sums of money whatsoever, out of the premises as aforesaid, issuing or to be paid, or thereon charged or chargeable, besides those rents, fees and sums of money which are above nominated, and expressly excepted: And these our letters patents shall be to our said chancellor and council of our court of augmentations of the revenue of our crown for the time being, as well as to the aforesaid auditors, receivers, and other our officers and ministers whatsoever, a sufficient warrant and discharge in this thing: And besides, out of our more ample grace, we will and grant, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, that these our letters patents, and every word, sentence and clause in them contained and specified, shall be interpreted, expounded, taken, understood, adjudged and determined, as well before us, our heirs and successors, as in all and every of our courts whatsoever, and in the courts of our heirs and successors, as well spiritual as temporal; and in all other places, and before whatsoever judges, justices and other person and persons whatsoever, to the greatest commodity and profit of the said dean and chapter, and their successors and of every person that now is, or at any time hereafter shall be, dean of the said cathedral church, or prebend in the same church, or nominated, assigned, appointed or promoted, to any benefice office or dignity in the said church, and most strictly against us, our heirs and successors; and this, although the names and surnames, or name and surname of them, or any one of them, who hereafter shall be dean of the church aforesaid, or prebend or prebends in the said church, or named, assigned, appointed or promoted to any benefice, office or dignity in the said church, or certainty of the value of the deanery of the said church, or of the prebendaries in the said church, or of the other benefices, offices, dignities or promotions in the said church, or any one of them, are not in these our letters patents specially and certainly expressed, declared or specified; or any omission, defect, negligence, repugnancy or contrariety in these presents, or any of them, or for that expresse mention of the true yearly value, or of the certainty of the premises, or no mention is made in these presents of any other gifts or grants by us before this time made to the said dean and chapter, any statute or act of parliament enacted or made in the aforesaid twenty-sixth year of our reign, or any statute, act, ordinance or restriction to the contrary of the premises, or any of them before this time enacted, made or ordained, or any other thing, cause or matter whatsoever in any kind notwithstanding.

We will also, and by these presents do grant to the aforesaid dean and chapter, that they have these our letters patents, under our great seal of England, in due manner to be made and sealed, without fine or fee, great or small, to us in our hanaper, or elsewhere to our use, in any manner to be rendered, paid or made, notwithstanding in these presents there is no expresse mention made of the true yearly value, or of any value, or of the certainty of the premises, or of any of them, or of other gifts or grants by us, or by any of our progenitors or predecessors, to the said dean and chapter before this time made, or any statute, act, ordinance, proviso or restriction to the contrary thereof made, enacted, ordained or provided, or any other thing, cause or matter whatsoever to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

In testimony of which we have caused these our letters to be made patents. Witness myself at Westminster, the 4th day of September, in the 33d year of our reign.

To the supreme AUTHORITY, the PARLIAMENT of the COMMONWEALTH of ENGLAND,

The humble Petition of the MAYOR, BURGESSES, and divers Hundreds of Inhabitants of the City of GLOUCESTER,

SH EWETH,

THAT the city of Gloucester being a garrison for the parliament's service, in 1643, and of vast importance to the commonwealth, upon the approach of the late king's army, to besiege the said city, it was resolved by the governor and council of war there, that the said city and garrison could not be preserved against the enemy, unless the whole suburbs of the said city (which was a full third part thereof) were pulled down and demolished.

That in pursuance of the said resolve, two hundred forty and one houses, besides barns, stables, out-houses, gardens, orchards and goods, of the suburbs of the said city, wherein so many families lived, were burned, pulled down, and utterly destroyed, the night before the leaguer was laid to the said city by the late king's forces, whereby most of your petitioners were reduced to most miserable poverty, and the estates of most of them much impaired, and the said city in general very much impoverished.

That it was proved upon oath to the grand inquest, at an assizes held for the county of the said city, that your petitioners losses, by the burning and destroying their said houses amounted to the sum of twenty-six thousand pounds, and upwards, as by the certificate of the grand inquest to the lord chief baron, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed, may appear.

That your petitioners willingly suffered the loss of their houses and goods for their affections to the parliament service, and it was a great means, under God, to preserve the said city and garrison, and by consequence the whole country, from the power of the enemy: And your petitioners have ever since continued constantly faithful to the commonwealth, and the present government thereof, in the times of greatest danger and trial unto this day, and have always hoped, that according to the parliament's declarations, their losses and ruins for the commonwealth's service, should be repaired out of the estates of the commonwealth's enemies who occasioned the same.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray, that their losses and ruins may be repaired, and their distressed families relieved, out of the estates of such delinquents as shall be appointed to be sold, or in such other way as shall seem best to your wisdom, justice and charity.

And they shall be bound to pray, &c.

The CHARTER of STEPHEN, King of ENGLAND, reciting and confirming the several DONATIONS to the church of St. PETER of GLOUCESTER.

IN the year 1138, from the incarnation of our Lord Jesu Christ, I, Stephen, king of England, in the third year of my reign, at the request of Walter de Laci, abbot of Gloucester, and of several of my nobles, do grant and confirm unto the church of St. Peter of Gloucester, all those lands, churches and tithes, and other donations which the barons of England have heretofore given to the said church, and which my predecessors, kings of England, have confirmed by their charters; that is to say, Berton, Standish, Lech, Oddington, and the manor of Mailemore, with the wood and the adjoining lands given by king Henry the First; and Brokrop given by Atheline of Hibreio; and Colne St. Andrew, and two commons, and one church, with one hide of land, and a water-mill given by Roger of Gloucester, and the church of St. Peter of Hereford, with the prebendaries, lands, tithes, and all other things belonging to the same, which were the gift of Hugh de Laci; and the land changed for the monks orchard on which the tower was built, which was executed by the sheriff; and the church of St. Cadoc of Lancarvan, with the land called Treigos, given to them by Robert Fitzhamon; and the land in Hampshire called Littleton, given by Hugh of the port; and Linchholt, of the gift of Ernulph de Heding; and Ledene, restored to them by Walter de Laci; and Plumtreu in Devonshire, given by Odo the son of Gamiline, which abbot Serlo did change with Nicholas de Pool for land called Alnodeston and Clechange, the gift of Roger of Berkeley; and one hide at Aprepren in Herefordshire, given by William de Ebroicis; and the land in Erchenefelt called Vestewde, given by Walter of Gloucester; and a small parcel of land at Guitings, given by Luric de Loges; and a water-mill at Framalode, which Winebald of Baderon restored to the church; and Clifford, the gift of Roger de Buslei; and Rudfort, the gift of king Henry the First; and Rudle, the gift of Radolph Bloet; and the church of Hatherop, with the tithes of the vill, and the priests land, and a water-mill in the same place, with the land belonging to it; and the church of Kempford, with the tithes and the priests lands; and the church of Norton, with five yard lands and the tithes, and whatever is adjoining to it, which were given by Ernulph de Heding and Emeline his wife; and the tithes of Chesterton, given by Nigel Doily; and a part of a wood, with three cottages, given by Elias Giffart; and one yard land in Kempford, given by Patrick de Chauworth, free from all charges except those due to the king; and one house in the moor of Black Ditch, free as the former; and the houses of Edric, the king's lieutenant, in the same moor, and the land belonging to them, and the tithes of meadows in the same village, and one water-mill with the land belonging to it, and the tithes of two other water-mills in the same place; and one hide of land in Ammeny, of the fee and grant of Patrick; and one half hide in the same vill, which Tovi held in alms of king Henry the First; and Glaschery at Brecchenne, with the lands and woods, and all other things belonging to the same; and all the tithes of all his demetnes in Brecchenne, of corn, cattle, cheese, venison, honey; moreover, the church of Cover, with all the tithes of that parish, and the land belonging to that church; and one hide called Berche, given by Bernard of Newmarket; and the church of Gunlui, with the land and tithes belonging to the same, given by king William the First; and the mill given by Roger Giffart; and the church of Cerney, with the tithes of the same; and the church of St. Helene, with one yard land given by Walter the sheriff; and two new plowed grounds with the small meadows adjoining to them; and a small wood lying in the king's fee of Celefwood, and were given by king William the First; and the land in Rugge which Thomas de St. John restored to the church; and Duntseburne, the gift of Emeline, the wife of Walter de Laci; and one water-mill, with a small yard land adjoining to it, free and quit as given by William de Owe; and the land at Soteshore, which was restored by Roger de Berchelai; and the water-mill which runs by the abbey, given to them by the kings my ancestors; and the church of St. Peter which stands in the market place at Norwich, and was the gift of king William the First; and all the plowed lands of Bully at Homme, and the tithes of William of Bully, which were given by the said William; and all the tithes of all my venison which shall be taken in the county of Gloucester, and was granted to them by king Henry the First; and wheresoever they shall buy or sell any thing for the benefit of the monastery, they shall be exempted from toll and payments of passage, and may go through any place without any molestation, as it was granted to them by king Henry the First; and wheresoever they shall take any sturgeon in any of their fisheries, they may retain it entirely to their own use; this was granted to them by king William the First; and all their lands shall be free from carriage, summonage and conduct, as they were granted to them by king Henry the First; and the church of St. Martin, standing near the Thames at London, and all the land which the priest of that church did hold, free and discharged from all customs and imposts, which was the gift of Ranulph Peverell; and the church of St. Guthlac in Hereford, with all its appurtenances, given to them by our venerable brother, Robert, bishop of Hereford; and the church of Westbury; and the church of Laverstoke, of the gift of Robert Gernan, with the consent of Alexander bishop of Lincoln; and the church of St. Leonard Stanley, with whatsoever belongs to it; and the chapel of St. John the Baptist, in the wood called Basing, with all its appurtenances; the church of Norton, with all its appurtenances; the church of St. John Baptist of Gloucester, with all its appurtenances; and the church of St. Patrine, with the chapels and lands thereunto belonging, which were given by Richard, the son of Gislebert; and the church of Teynton, with the chapel of the wood, and a yard land; and the chancel of Chilpeet, and the lands and tithes, and whatsoever belongs to the same; and the church of St. Michael of Ewias, with all belonging to it; and moreover, the tithes of all the manors of Robert Ewias, and the church of St. Michael of Uggemore, and St. Bridget the virgin, with all their appurtenances; and all the lands within the manor of Estlech, which they had in exchange for the manor of Glasbury with Walter de Clifford; and also the church of Quenington, with a yard land, and the tithes of the vill, and all other things belonging to it; and the parish of the castle of Gloucester, without being a member of any other church; and all places, as well within the walls of the city as without, as they held the same in the time of Wolston bishop of Worcester, or in the time of Sampson his successor; and one hide of land in Combe, which was the gift of Hugard de Bascheville.

Simon,

Simon, the bishop of the church of Worcester, sends all obedience and duty to his father and lord Theobald, by the grace of God archbishop of Canterbury, and primate of all England. Forasmuch as all donations have their full power and efficacy, when confirmed by apostolical authority, therefore, at the request of our beloved brother the abbot of Gloucester, and his brethren, we have inspected the charters of the church of St. Peter of Gloucester, and do hereby testify the truth of them, and certify the same to your grace, that you may be pleased to confirm them by your authority, and that you may without difficulty order them to be attested in your apostolical presence: May it therefore be known to your grace, that all these things contained in the charter of king Stephen were actually granted to the church of St. Peter of Gloucester by donation from himself, or of the kings his predecessors, or of some great noblemen, and were confirmed by their several charters and seals. Farewell.

The CHARTER of King HENRY IV. for the better Endowment of St. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL in GLOUCESTER.

HENRY, by the grace of God king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Know ye, that whereas the hospital of St. Bartholomew, between the bridges in Gloucester, founded by our progenitors formerly kings of England, and now belonging to our patronage, is but meanly endowed, and the lands, tenements, rents and possessions are not sufficient for the sustentation of the said hospital, and of the prior or guardian, and of the brothers or chaplains, and of the poor men and women now residing in the same hospital, who are obliged to assist by fastings and continual intercessions, and other devout and divine services by night and by day, to pray for their benefactors, and for the souls of such others as they are thereunto required; nor for the reparation and amendment of their church, houses, buildings and edifices of the said hospital, and for the support and sustaining other burthens daily necessary for the good of the hospital, without the assistance of us and our heirs, and the charitable benevolence of good christians and well disposed persons; and their charters, writings, muniments and evidences concerning their lands, tenements, rents and possessions, by the carelessness and negligence of the former priors or guardians, and of the brothers and chaplains of the said hospital, being burnt, subtracted, purloined or lost, by which means the present prior or guardian, and the brothers or chaplains, and the alms people, have not only suffered great damages and prejudice, but the said hospital must apparently come to utter ruin, which God forbid, unless we on our part shall succour and relieve them.

We therefore, out of a charitable compassion, and taking the premises into a due consideration, and being willing of our special grace to provide in a convenient manner that the said prior or guardian, and the brothers or chaplains, or alms people, should in all quiet and safety, with a cheerful heart, pray unto the Most High, particularly for the good estate of us whilst we are living, and for our soul when we are departed out of this life, and for the souls of our most dear father John, late duke of Lancaster, and of Mary our consort, lately deceased, and also for the souls of our progenitors, and of all others dead in the true faith.

And for the preservation of the rights of the said hospital, especially being founded by our said progenitors, and the patronage thereof, now belonging to us as aforesaid; and lest by the like folly and negligence it should be utterly ruined, we for ourselves and successors, as much as in us lies, do accept, approve, ratify and confirm the state and possessions which the said present prior or guardians, and brothers or chaplains, and alms people have in the said hospital, and in the several churches thereunto annexed and appropriated, and in their lands, tenements, rents and possessions, with their appurtenances.

And we do hereby farther give and grant, (if need be) the said churches, lands, tenements, rents and possessions aforesaid, to them and their successors for ever: Moreover, we will that the said hospital be always held and reputed to be of the foundation of our progenitors, and the patronage thereof to belong to us and our heirs; and that the said prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains, and alms people shall have and hold to them and their successors, for ever, the churches, lands, tenements, rents and possessions aforesaid, as freely, quietly, and in as full manner as if the said charters, writings, muniments and evidences were now intirely in being, and remaining within the said hospital in the custody of the said prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains: And we do by these presents take, dispose and receive under our especial protection, guardianship and defence, the said present prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains, or the alms people, and all their successors, and their proctors and agents, wherever they shall go or come, who shall be employed in asking, demanding and gathering any elemosynary gifts, or other charitable subsistencies for the use and benefit of the present prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains, or alms people, and the successors of them, and we shall protect the said hospital, its lands, tenements, rents and possessions whatsoever.

Also we will not, that any clerks, purveyors or buyers of provision for the use of our household, or for the use of our heirs, or any of them, or for the use of any of our carriages, or any other officers, bailiffs or ministers of us, or of our heirs, or of any other person whatsoever, shall at any time take the corn, hay, horses, carts, carriages, oxen, cows, hogs or other cattle, victuals or other goods, or chattels, or things belonging to the said prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains, and alms people, or their successors, in any of their houses or places whatsoever, or in the custody of the said prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains, and alms people, or of their successors, or of their bailiffs, ministers, or their tenants whatsoever, against their good wills.

And that the said present prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains, and alms people may partake of our special favour, and the languishing condition of the said hospital may be relieved, we do farther will and grant, for us and our successors, as much as in us lies, to the said present prior or guardian, and brothers or chaplains, and their successors, that as often as the said hospital, by the death, cession, deposing, deprivation or resignation of any prior or guardian of the same for the time being, or by any other means whatsoever, shall happen to be void, that then the brothers or chaplains of the said hospital for the time being, and their successors, shall with free assent and consent, elect from time to time one able and sufficient person from amongst themselves; or in case none shall be thought proper, then they shall elect some other sufficient person to be the prior or guardian of the place, without our royal licence being first asked and obtained, and without the licence of any of our successors; and when such election shall so be made, that then the bishop of the place may proceed to confirm such elected person, without our royal assent, or the assent of our successors, being first asked and obtained; and the said person so elected, shall be admitted by the said bishop to be prior or guardian of the said place, and pastor thereof, and shall receive all the temporalities of the said hospital as from God himself, and shall dispose of them for the benefit of the said hospital, without any procuring any livery of the said temporalities out of our hands, or the hands of any of our successors, as the custom heretofore has been; and such elections, and the confirmations of them, and the admittances of the said prior or guardian of the said place, without the licence and assent of the king, shall in no wise be prejudicial to the said hospital, or turn to their loss or prejudice; for in all vacancies of the said hospital, the brothers or chaplains of the said hospital for the time being shall, during such vacancies, have the custody of their temporalities, without rendering any account to us, or to any of our successors, or paying any thing for the same; and no sheriff or escheator of us or our successors, in the county of Gloucester or elsewhere, for the time being, or any other officer of us or our heirs, by reason of such vacancy, shall any ways intermeddle with the said hospital, or any of their temporalities, provided notwithstanding, that the escheator of the said county for the time being shall, on every vacancy, make seisin at the gate of the said hospital in the king's name, and so having done shall forthwith depart; and that the said escheator shall not, by reason of such seisin, be obliged or compelled to give any account or estimate to us, or to our heirs.

We do also farther will and grant, out of the abundance of our grace and favour, to the said prior or guardian, and to the brothers or chaplains, and to their said successors, that they and their successors shall ever be discharged and freed from all pensions and salaries required by our command, or the request of us or our successors, notwithstanding the statute against giving lands and tenements into mortmain, or any other statute or ordinance to the contrary whatsoever; and notwithstanding the said prior or guardian, the brothers or chaplains, and their predecessors, were heretofore, by reason of their foundation, obliged to ask licence and consent, before they made any such election and admittance of their prior or guardian of the said place, and after admittance were obliged to sue forth livery of their temporalities out of the hands of the king in the court of chancery, and notwithstanding any other cause whatsoever: In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents.

Witness ourself at Gloucester, the 19th day of November, in the 9th year of our reign.

NUMBER XIII.

The CHARTER of King EDWARD the III^d, reciting the Foundation of the Priory of CIRENCESTER in the County of GLOUCESTER, and confirming the same.

THE king to archbishops, &c. We have inspected the charter of Henry the First, of famous memory, heretofore king of England, our progenitor, in these words: Henry, king of England, to archbishops, bishops, abbats, priors, earls, barons, justices, sheriffs, and all the sons of holy church established throughout England, greeting: Know all men, that I, by the consent and authority of Pope Innocent, of pious memory, and by the advice and common approbation of the archbishops and bishops, princes and barons of my kingdom, have given to God and the church of the blessed Mary of Cirencester, of which I was the unworthy founder, for the good of the souls of my parents and ancestors, and for the remission of my sins, and for the welfare and safety of my kingdom, and to Serlo the first abbat, and to all his successors, and to the regular canons serving God in that place, in pure alms, all the estate of Reimbald the priest, in lands and churches, and other things, as followeth; to wit, two hides of land in the town of Cirencester, and the third part of the tolls of the market, which is held on Sunday in the several streets; and two parts of the tithes of the demesnes of Cirencester, and the whole tithe of all the rest of the parish; in Gloucestershire, eight hides of land in Preston, and the church thereof; one hide of land in Norcott, seven hides in Duseild, four hides and one yard land in Amney, and the church thereof; two hides in Walle, which did belong to Balchi Daci, one hide in Elmundestan, one yard land and a wood in Wik, the church of Chilttenham, with the land thereof, and the mill, and the chapels, and all other appurtenances to the said church belonging; in Wiltshire, nine hides in Latton and Eisy, and the churches of both those places with their land, and the chapel of Eaton which belongs to the church of Eisy; three houses in the town of Cricklade, and the church of Pevely, with the lands, tithes and customs appertaining unto the said church; the church in Avebiry, with the lands, chapels, tithes and customs appertaining to the said church; in Somersetshire, the church of Melborn, with the lands, chapels, tithes and other things belonging to the said church; the church of Frome, with the lands, chapels, tithes and all other things, whether woods or plains, appertaining to the said church; the church of Walon, with the lands, chapels, tithes and all customs, whether woods or plains, appertaining to the said church; in Dorsetshire, ten hides of land in woods and meadow in Puley; in Berkshire, the church of Scriveham, with the lands, chapels, tithes, and all other customs appertaining to the said church; the church of Cocheham, with the lands, chapels, tithes, and all other things appertaining to the said church; the church of Bray, with the lands, chapels, tithes and all things appertaining to the said church; ten hides in Eston; eleven hides and three yard lands in Hatcheburne, and the church of the same, with the chapels and tithes of the other Hatcheburn; in Oxfordshire, one hide of land in wood and plains, and one mill in Boicot; the church of Passham in Buckinghamshire, with the lands, tithes and all things appertaining to the said church; in Northamptonshire, the church of Rowel, with the lands, chapels, tithes, and all customs belonging to the said church; the church of Bristoke, with the lands, chapels, tithes, and all customs, whether in woods or plains, appertaining to the said church; three houses in Winton: And I have farther granted to the said church of Cirencester, of my own demesnes, for ever, one hide of land in Cirencester, called Scereve-Hide, to make orchards, coples, and a place for a water-mill; and the abbat, Serlo, with my licence, has exchanged two messuages of that hide with the burgeses of Cirencester, for the conveniency of the priests: I have also granted a water-course, and the wood called Aceley, with the forest, and all its lands; and I retain to myself nothing out of the wood besides my hunting, and the abbat may not plow up any part of it.

We moreover ordain, concerning the estates belonging to Reimbald, that whatsoever part of it the bishop of Salisbury hath, shall remain to him during his life, but after his death it shall return to the proper use and demesne of the canons regular: We ordain the like concerning the lands held by William Fitz Warin the sheriff; and the like of the lands held by Nicholas, nephew of the bishop of Winton; and the like concerning the lands which the secular canons held by their prebends: We do also grant to the said church, throughout all their possessions, soc and sac, toll, theam, infang-theor, and all other liberties, immunities, customs and privileges, in as free manner as the said church held the same in the reign of king Edward the confessor, or in the reign of my father or brother, or in my time; and as free as any other eleemosynary lands in the kingdom are held; therefore I approve, and by my royal authority do corroborate this my grant and concession, and by the power given to me by God, I decree, that the said church shall for ever enjoy the same; and I declare that I reserve those lands so given in alms, in my own hand, and under my protection, as if those alms-lands had been my own proper gift.

Witnesses, William, archbishop of Canterbury; Turstan, archbishop of York; Roger, bishop of Salisbury; Henry, bishop of Winchester; Alexander, bishop of Lincoln; Jeffry, bishop of Durham; Nigell, bishop of Ely; Robert, bishop of Hereford; John, bishop of Rochester; Robert, keeper of the seal; Robert le Vere, Miles Gloec. Robert Doiley, Hugh Bigott, Robert de Curcy, and Pagan, the son of John; and Eustace and William his brothers; and William de Albia Britone.

Done at Burne, as I was crossing the seas, in the year of our Lord 1133, and in the 33^d year of our reign.

We therefore the said grants, &c. do confirm, &c.

Given under the hand of the king at Berwick upon Tweed, on the first day of July.

NUMBER XIV.

The CONFIRMATION of the Grants to the Abbey of CIRENCESTER by King JOHN.

JOHAN, by the grace of God, king of England, &c. to archbishops, &c. greeting: It is becoming our dignity, and is necessary for our salvation, that we should defend, keep and preserve those holy and religious places which were founded by our great grandfather, king Henry the First, and were confirmed by king Henry the Second, our father; therefore we give and grant, and by this present charter confirm to God, and to the holy church of St. Mary of Cirencester, and to the canons regular serving God in that place, in free and perpetual alms, for the good of the soul of the aforesaid king Henry, who was founder thereof, and for the soul of our father aforesaid, and for the souls of king Richard our brother, and queen Anne our mother, and of our brethren and all others departed this life in the true faith, all our manor of Cirencester, with all its appurtenances; with the town of Minchey, which is a member of the said manor, with the seven hundreds belonging to the said manor and farm, with all their appurtenances; to hold of us and our successors, yielding and paying 30l. yearly for all services, at our exchequer, at the feast of St. Michael: And know ye, that for the good of our soul, and all others abovementioned, we have given, released, and quit claimed, in perpetual alms, to the honour of St. Mary, and to our said canons of Cirencester serving God, forty shillings yearly rent which the said manor was accustomed to pay, so that for the future they shall pay only a rent of 30l. as aforesaid; and this we have done, that the canons of our demesnes, who are so named herein, may the more freely, quietly and safely serve God, in praying for us, for our father, and the rest abovementioned; wherefore we will, &c. We will also and command, that they enjoy that manor as fully and quietly, with all its liberties and free customs, as king Richard, our brother, enjoyed the same, when it was in his hands, except pleas of the crown, and our forest of Minchey, which we reserve to ourselves, as the charter of king Richard, our brother, can testify.

Witnesses, Robert, earl of Leicester; William, earl of Pembroke; William de Albeniaco, Garine de Glapum, Peter Estokes, and many others.

NUMBER XV.

The CHARTER of HENRY Duke of the NORMANS, reciting the Grants of the Benefactors of the Abbey of FLAXLEY in the County of GLOUCESTER, and confirming the same.

HENRY duke of Normandy, and earl of Anjou, to archbishops, &c. greeting: Know ye, that I have granted and confirmed to God and St. Mary, and to the monks of the cister-tian order, for the good of the souls of my ancestors, and of my own soul, in perpetual alms, all those donations which Roger earl of Hereford gave to those monks in alms, according to the tenor of those charters, to wit, a certain place in the valley of Castiard, called Flaxley, to build an abbey there; and all that land called Wastadene, which did belong to Walfic, and an iron work at Edland; and all the land under the old castle of Dene which remains to be asserted, and that which is already asserted;

and

and a certain fishery at Redley called Newerre, and a meadow in Pulmeade; and all easements in the forest of Dean, and all the demesnes in Dymmock, and the lands belonging to Walfric; but so, that if Uthred the clerk continues in the abbey with the lands he exchanged, to wit, two yard lands, that then he shall give no account of it to any body but the abbot; half the wood at Dymmock, and all the tithes of chesnuts in Dean every year; and all the land of Jeoffry, son of the aforesaid Walfric, which the earl of Hereford did release; and all the land of Leffric de Stanra, which the earl of Hereford did likewise release: Wherefore I will, &c.

We do not only confirm to them these aforesaid grants, but we also confirm all others which the same Roger, earl or Hereford, does intend to give unto them in alms.

Witnesses, Roger, earl of Hereford; William de Crevecour; Richard de Humett, constable; Philip de Columbaris, Robert de Virgum, William de Angervil, William Cumin, at Evesham.

NUMBER XVI.

The CHARTER of king HENRY the II. to the Abbey of FLAXLEY.

HENRY, by the grace of God, king of England, and duke of Normandy and Aquitain, and earl of Anjou, to archbishops, &c. and to all faithful, as well English as Normans, both present and to come, greeting: Know ye, that I have given and confirmed to God and the blessed Mary, and to the monks of Dean, which I have received into my protection, for the good of my soul, and of my ancestors, in perpetual alms, a certain place within the forest of Dean, to wit, all the valley of Castiard, and the place called Flaxley, where an abbey is founded of the cistercian order, in honour of the blessed virgin Mary, for the love of God, and the benefit of the soul of my grandfather king Henry, and of the soul of my father the earl of Anjou, and of Maud the Empress, my mother, and of the souls of all my parents and ancestors, and for the good of my own soul, and of my heirs, and for the prosperity and peace of the kingdom of England; I have also granted to them, and have confirmed all the donations which Roger earl of Hereford gave to them in alms, in the same manner as those charters do express; moreover I have granted and confirmed to them all easements within my forest of Dean, to wit, common of pasture for their young cattle and hogs, and for all other beasts, and wood and timber to repair their houses and buildings, and for other necessaries, without committing waste in the forest; and I have given them tithes of chesnuts out of the same forest, and the farm called Wastdean, and one iron forge free and quit, and with as free liberty to work as any of my forges in demesne; and all the land under the old castle of Dean, with liberty to plow it up, to wit, one hundred acres, and a fishery at Redley called Nowere, and a meadow of Reidley called Pulmead, containing four acres; and all the land which Leuveric de Stanra gave to them in alms, and the farm which I gave them at Wallemere, out of my new plowed grounds, containing two hundred acres, with the meadows and pastures, and all other easements; and four acres of Northwood, and all my demesnes at Dymmock; and five yard lands and an half, besides the demesnes, and half my wood at Dymmock, and half my nets which I have in my hands, for the conveniences of my men, because I would have my monks enjoy that part of the wood peaceably and quietly, without any interfering with any other persons, and I straightly command, that no person offer to disturb them upon this account; I further give to them my new plowed grounds under Castiard, called Vincent's Land: All those I give unto God and to the blessed Mary, and to my monks devoutly serving God, to have and to hold for ever, quit and discharged from all regards and other secular exactions, whereof I will, &c.

NUMBER XVII.

The CHARTER of the FOUNDATION of the Abbey of HAYLES.

TO all sons of holy mother the church, to whom this present writing shall come, Richard earl of Cornwall sendeth greeting in the Lord: Know all of ye, that we, in honour of Almighty God, and of the glorious virgin Mary, and of all saints, for the good of our soul, and the souls of our ancestors, have founded a certain abbey of the order of the cistercians, in the manor of Hayles, which was given to us by Henry king of England, our brother; and the said manor we have given and granted, with all its appurtenances, and by this present charter have confirmed unto the abbot and monks serving God, and the blessed Mary, in that place, and to their successors, in free, pure and perpetual alms, with the advowson of the church of that manor, with all its appurtenances, liberties, homages, and the services of the free men, and all escheats in villains and villainages, in rents and woods, in meadows, plains and pastures; in waters, mills, ponds and fish-ponds; in ways and paths, and in all things appertaining to the said manor, freely, quietly, peaceably, and intirely free and discharged from all secular services, from any exaction and demand; to have and to hold for ever, freely, quietly, and as fully as any other alms can possibly be granted; and we and our heirs will warrant the said manor, with all its appurtenances aforesaid, to the said abbot and monks, and their successors, against all men and women, and as free and quit, and perpetual alms, will we acquit and defend the same for evermore: And that this our grant and concession may be of utmost and lasting force, we have hereunto set our seals.

NUMBER XVIII.

The CHARTER of MILO, Constable of GLOUCESTER, to the Priory of LANTHONY.

MILO, constable of Gloucester, to Simon, by the grace of God, bishop of Worcester, and to Robert, bishop of Hereford, and to all the barons of Worcestershire and Herefordshire, and all the faithful of holy church, greeting: We will it to be known to all people present and to come, that I, for the good of my soul, and of the souls of my ancestors, have, by the hand of Robert bishop of Hereford, given to God and St. Mary, and to the canons of the church of Lanthony, in perpetual alms, the church of Burchelle, with all benefits thereunto belonging, one hide in Gloucester free from all services, a meadow called Castlemead, the tithes of hay of the meadow of Prestenham, the tithes of all fish in the water and mill of Quedresse, and in the moat round the castle, the church of St. Owen with all its appurtenances. These particulars following are appurtenant to the said church, and were given by my ancestors Roger of Gloucester, and Walter the constable, to wit, a chapel within the castle, a small piece of land upon the bank of the Severn to find a light to the said chapel; all offerings which shall be made by the keepers of the tower, and of the castle, and of the barons residing there; a moiety of all offerings given by myself or my family, if my chaplain be present, but the whole of my offerings if my chaplain shall be absent; also the chapel of St. Kyneburg, and all the parish in the hand of the constable within the south gate, and all the parish without the said gate, and all the land which Roger de Tocheam and Richard the chaplain held within the said gate or without; the tithes of all the fish taken in the fishery under the castle; the chapel of Heccamstude, with the tithes of all the villains in all things; the chapel of Quedresse, with the tithes of the demesnes in all things, and the tithes of all the villains in all things, and a small piece of land to collect the tithes; two parts of the tithes of Caldecot in all things; all the tithes of Wadon; all the tithes of the manor of Brocrup in all things; and of all the villains, with a small parcel of land to collect the tithes; all the tithes of the manor of Longford, and the tithes of the orchard of Covesley; all the tithes in the manor of Sutham in all things, and a small parcel of land to collect them; all the tithes of Hide in Gloucester in all things, two parts of the tithes of the manor of Berninton in all things, two parts of the tithes in Coleburn Sampson, two parts of the tithes of Elias Loholt of Coleburn, the chapel of Elmor, with all the tithes of the demesnes in all things, with all the tithes of the villains, with a small parcel of land to collect the tithes; two parts of the tithes of Cerney, all the tithes of Cuckerton, the church of Tocheam with its appurtenances; all the tithes of the manor of Tocheam, with its appurtenances; half the tithes of the manor of Lothridge, and of the manor of Cireton, and all the tithes of Sutgrove Resfald: And I made the grant of all the said tithes to the canons of Lanthony of the church of St. Mary at Gloucester, upon the same day day and hour as the church was dedicated, in the year of our Lord, 1137.

Witnesses, Simon, bishop of Worcester; Robert, bishop of Hereford; Robert, abbat of Tewksbury; Serlo, abbat of Cirencester; William de Mara, William de Bercale, Alan, son of Main; Roger, son of Richard; Richard Wicet, Roger Wicet, Roger de Tocheam.

Afterwards I gave unto them the church of Berton near Winchester, with half an hide of land belonging to it, both which were part of my fee, descended to me from my ancestors, and now in my possession; and in the year 1141, being at Bristol, and being made consul thereof, I gave them the manor of Hethamsted, with the meadows, and all its appurtenances, by land or by water, free and discharged from all service and custom, in as full and free manner as my father or self did at any time hold the same. This donation I and my wife Sybille, and my sons Roger, Walter and Henry, did make in the church of the canons of Gloucester: Roger, who is now married, took an oath upon the altar of St. Mary, and upon the four evangelists, that he would never hereafter give them any disturbance concerning that manor, and would never do them any damage or diminution in any thing, either by himself or any other; and my son Walter took the same oath. This was some days after my return from Bristol, in the presence, and attested by my said sons, by Drogo the steward, Robert Corbet, William de Bercale, Alan, son of Main, Hugh de Heseley, Turstin, son of Simon, William Britton, Roger the Little, Radulph Avenel, Walter de Broseley, Robert, son of Hugh.

The witnesses to the first donation at Bristol were, the empress; Robert, earl of Gloucester; Brien, son of the earl; and Robert, son of Martin.

I likewise gave them half the fishery at Haspool which belongs to the said manor, with the fishing places on one side or the other belonging to it; and not long after I gave unto them the other moiety of that fishery, by delivering a golden ring upon the altar in the same church, which I did in gratitude for the recovery of my son Roger. Two years afterwards, when my son Walter lay sick with them, I then gave them a meadow in Elmore, which Roger of Tocheam had granted out of a grove; and in this gift I particularly assigned a rent to find a light before the body of our Lord on the altar, as I had promised them before, and had made also a vow unto God.

NUMBER XIX.

The CHARTER of King JOHN, reciting the Grants of the benefactors to the Priory of LANTHONY, and confirming the same.

JOHN, by the grace of God, king of England, &c. Know all men, that we out of love to God, &c. have confirmed in perpetual alms to God, and to the church of the blessed Mary and St. John Baptist, and the canons regular of Lanthony, these underwritten donations which have been justly given unto them: The chapel within the castle of Gloucester, given by king Henry, my father, and a school house in the same town, and half the fishery of Herespole which is in our demesne, and four libratas of land in the manor of Bernington, in perpetual alms, and four other libratas of land in the same manor, in fee farm, for four pounds to be yearly paid; and also all the lands given by Hugh de Lacy, and Pagan, son of John Ominour, in Bethreshant, in Redwerren, and in Oldville and Little Freme, and half an hide at Aclam, and certain lands in Herchenfield, and a fishery in the Ham, with four acres of land, and a tenement which Ord and his ancestors held, with the fishery of Tudenham, and the wears of Hodenai, and all the fishery belonging to it, as Pagan did ever hold the same in the most free and honourable tenure; and also all the lands given by Walter de Lacy, which lie between the mountains of Irisebroke quite to Ansmere, and the land which Richard Poncy gave to them in Turchdean; and also two plow lands in the vill of St. Michael, given to them by Brien the son of the earl; and whatsoever was given by Nigelle the son of Hordfast, and granted by Henry de Albeny, and by his son Robert; whatsoever the said Nigelle held in socage at Hanelowe in Aylrichesey, with the church of Hanelanne; whatsoever was given by Roger de Chandos and Robert his son, in Bonefshul in Chenecestre, and Felilie; whatsoever Aldred held, with a yard land in Hope; the church of Brokewordin, given by Robert de Chandos, with half an hide of land, and an house on the west side of the church yard, and the land called Norbroc in Brockwordyn, unto the old way near the park of the earl; and two new plowed grounds which Richard de Brockwordyn gave unto them, and half a yard land which was Alred's, and the land which was Folley, which was Hugh de Donnoc's, with his services and common of pasture for cattle, with the cattle of the Lord, and two mills in Mardeford, with thirty acres of land, and so much of a wood as will suffice to repair the mills, and twenty-four acres more of land which were added to the former, and another thirty acres, and one acre of meadow; the church of Begerdone with its appurtenances, and whatsoever was given by Roger de Chandos the younger in Brockwordyn; one yard land consisting of twenty-four acres, and all the new plowed ground which was Goremond's, and ten acres adjoining to the new plowed ground, and five acres which John the presbyter held, and one yard land which was Richard's, and all the algarde on the east side near the monastery, and the lands called Kiteofshull, and Heglanc, Frudung and Pilemode, and one yard land which was Lonewic's, of the street, and common of pasture for the cattle of the canons to go with the cattle of the lords, and the lands in Brockwordyn which the canons had in exchange for Kynceestre; the donation of Radulph de Baskervil, of all the tithes of all lands belonging to his right of inheritance, and the church of Herdesley, with twelve acres of land and an orchard, with part of the wall under the church-yard; the church of Janesore, and the chapel of Stretton; the church of Chiveshope, the chapel of Pulule, the church of Herfope, the new plowed ground of Herdersley, with part of the wood as it is bounded out; all Hardehope, with Brechul and Foxley, with all their appurtenances, and the land called Canondinan; whatsoever was given by earl Milo; the church of Burchull, with all its appurtenances; the church of Bertone, with half an hide of land lying under the castle of Gloucester, and the meadow called Castle-Mead, and the tithes of the hay of the meadow of Prestenham and the manor of Hechamsted with its appurtenances, with a moiety of the fishery of Herespole, and the meadow at Elmore which Roger de Cokchams grubbed up; the church of St. Owen with two prebends, and all things belonging to them, and four acres in Knight's Meadow, and two acres in the meadow of William de Mara, and two acres of meadow of Robert son of Jordan, with both their consents, and the land which was Guncelin's, and the land which was Redmer Bracinton's, and the tithes of the cyder of Brocwerne; whatsoever was given by Walter the constable and confirmed by earl Milo; the moiety of Bernington, with the church and all its appurtenances; whatsoever was given by earl Roger, the other moiety of Bernington, for the provision of thirteen lepers; whatsoever was given by Hugh de Laci and confirmed by earl Roger; the church of Wyhe with its appurtenances; whatsoever was given by Walter de Hereford; the village called Alvyntone with its appurtenances; whatsoever was given by Gerard de Limesy; the land which was Roger de St. Juan's in Ramurthewyke; whatsoever was the gift of Robert bishop of Exeter; the church of St. Mary in Gloucester, with the chapel of All-Saints; whatsoever was given by Radland Malherle; four acres in Hanelane; whatsoever was given by Henry of Hereford; the church of Hersefield, the church of Caldicote and Gortune under the castle of Gloucester, and a moiety of the meadow called Prestre; and whatsoever was given by Mahel of Hereford, the other moiety of the meadow, and the orchard under the castle of Gloucester; and whatsoever was given by Margaret de Bohun, two parts of Quedgeley which remained to her after she had made a partition with her sister Lucy; and whatsoever was given by the said Margaret de Bohun, and was confirmed by Humphry de Bohun her son; the church of Cheritone, with one hide of land; also some land in Cerney, in satisfaction of fifteen quarter-acres of land which the brothers of the said Margaret had given and confirmed to the said canons; also the twenty quarter-acres in Cudesley, given by the said Margaret de Bohun in perpetual alms; what was given by Walter of Hereford, some new plowed grounds in Cheltenham; also what was given by Radulph Picard, all the land which he had in Gloucester; what was given by Richard Murdoc, one hide of land in Duntelburn; also some land in Sutham, which Margaret de Bohun gave to the canons in exchange of land in Blekemere, which Roger de Harsforth had given to them; also all the alms lands which the freemen of the said Margaret, with her consent and confirmation, had given to the said canons; also what was given by Walter de Laci, the church of St. Mary de Drogheda in Ireland. All these things aforesaid, and whatever else has been legally given to the said canons, or shall hereafter be given, either in England or Ireland, we do grant unto them: Wherefore we will, &c.

Given by the hand of Henry, archbishop of Canterbury, our chancellor, at Rupem Aurival, on the 13th day of July, in the first year of our reign.

NUMBER XX.

The CHARTER of WALTER DE LACY, reciting and confirming divers Charters and Lands in IRELAND, given by his Father HUGH to the Prior of LANTHONY.

TO all the faithful in Christ, to whom this present writing shall come, Walter de Lacy, son of Hugh de Lacy, lord of Midia, sendeth eternal health in the Lord: Know ye, that no holy intentions of doing good ought to be hindered or obstructed by the unadvised rashness of men, but we are all obliged with the best means which God has given us, to protect and uphold religious men, and all their goods which our ancestors had given them out of a pious mind for the good of their own souls, and the good of our souls; I therefore, in imitation of the devout intention of my father, the lord Hugh de Lacy, for the good of my own soul, and the souls of my mother and wife, and for the good of the souls of my ancestors and successors, have given, and by this present writing have confirmed to God and to the church of St. John Baptist at the first Lanthony, and to the canons serving God in that place, all the tithes and profits and goods which the said Hugh de Lacy, my father, of blessed memory, had assigned to the said canons for the good of his soul, with the assent of the archbishops and bishops in Ireland, and with the consent of their chapters, before he had infeoffed his freemen in Ireland, which lands he had obtained in Ireland, to wit, the church of Calp, with the tithes of Commgerie and Duvencavy; the church of the town of Marmeri, with the tithes of the fishery; the church of Anye, the church of Valle Clonelewy, the church of the town of Oggary in Midia, the church of Stannmolin, and the advowson of the vicarage of Lillen; the church of Kilmessan, the church of Kilculy, the church of Delvene, the church of Killimethe, the church of the town which did belong to Reginald de Turberville, the church of Kilcarwarn, the church of Dunboin, the church of Rathbegan, the church of Kilbray, and the church of Dumrath; and the land of Balibin, and the land which Gilbert the Cornishman held in the honour of Rashouthe: All which I have confirmed to be enjoyed by them for ever, with all the chapels of all the several churches and their appurtenances, and with all the lands and ecclesiastical benefices belonging to me in my land of Midia, or which shall hereafter belong; and I and my heirs will warrant the rights of those patronages, with their chapels and appurtenances, unto the said prior and canons, against all men and women whatsoever, &c.

Witnesses, Robert de Turberville, Walter, son of Alured; Philip de Coleville, Simon de Tyleshop, &c. and many others.

NUMBER XXI.

The CHARTER of King EDWARD the Second, reciting and confirming the GRANTS and CONCESSIONS of WALTER DE LACY and others.

EDWARD, by the grace of God, king of England, lord of Ireland, and duke of Aquitain, to all archbishops, &c. We have inspected a deed which Walter de Lacy, late lord of Midia, made to the canons of the first Lanthony in these words: To all faithful people who shall see or hear this present writing, Walter de Lacy, lord of Midia, sendeth greeting in our Lord: Know ye, that I, by the influence of divine piety, have granted to the canons of the first Lanthony, that, according to ancient custom, without my leave, or my heirs and successors, it may be lawful to the said canons, when their church shall happen to be void, to elect an orderly fit person out of their own body, or elsewhere, to prefer to be their pastor, to be presented to the bishop of the diocese to receive confirmation from him; and I, nor any of my successors, will intermeddle or disturb any of their goods, lands or possessions, during the vacation, until such time as their pastor shall be elected; and that this liberty of election may remain unto them inviolable for ever, I have therefore to this writing set my seal.

We have also inspected a deed which Walter de Lacy, son of Hugh de Lacy, made to the said canons in these words: Know all men, present and future, that I Walter de Lacy, son of Hugh de Lacy, have given, granted, and by this present charter have confirmed, in pure and perpetual alms, to God and the blessed Mary, and to the church of St. John Baptist, of the first Lanthony, and to the canons serving God in that place, for the good of my own soul, and the soul of the Lady Margery, my wife, and the souls of my ancestors and successors, all the valley, with all its appurtenances in which the said church is situated; to wit, on one side, by Kenen Tasset and Asharefway, and by Ruggewey unto Antefin, and on the side of Hateroll from the land of Seifel, the son of Gilebert, by Ruggewey to the bounds of Talgargh, free and quit from all services, customs and demands; and I grant that they may have all hunting and free warren within the bounds of their lands, and I do prohibit all persons to enter into the said bounds, to hunt, feed, or cut wood, without the leave and consent of the said canons; and if they shall chance to apprehend any one hunting, feeding, or cutting of wood, it shall be lawful to the said canons and their men, to seize them and bring them before their own court, to be adjudged what satisfaction they shall make; and I will, that no steward, constable, bailiff, keeper or forester, servant, huntsman, or any other person's bailiff, passing through their lands, shall be entertained at the charge of the said canons, or of their men, nor shall expect any provisions of meat or drink from the said canons or their men, but what shall be freely given unto them. I have granted to the said canons and their men, that they shall have full common of pasture in Wrynen, and Haybot and Housebot therein, and all other conveniences which they or theirs can receive in the said place, without the interruption, demand, or disturbance of any; and I will, that no bailiff of mine, or of my heirs, under pretence of any forfeiture, shall make an entry into their lands; and I will, that the said canons and their officers shall have common in my wood of Mafcoit for their swine, free and quiet from pannage and toll; and I will, that the said canons and their men, shall be quit from all toll and demands throughout all my lands; and I will, that the said canons and their men be quit from plowing, mowing, reaping, and all other customs and exactions in all places, and in all things; and I grant to the said canons, that they shall enjoy all privileges, power, immunities, and liberties, in the land of Ewias, in as full manner as I do enjoy, or may enjoy, or any of my heirs may enjoy the same.

I will, and straitly command, that the canons of the first Lanthony, shall hold all their tenements in the land of Ewias, whether lay-lands or church-lands, whether in their present possession, or they shall obtain them hereafter by purchase, gift, or by any other title, peaceably, freely and quietly in all places and in all things; free from all pleas and plaints; from aids, horse carriages, carts and carriages; from repairs of bridges or castles, from guarding our treasure, and from all work; from tannage and stallage, and from all summons, assizes and super assizes, and from all fines and americiaments, upon what occasion soever, and from penalties for new plowing up wood grounds; and no forester shall intermeddle in any of the woods of the prior and canons of the first Lanthony, but they shall have as full power in their own woods, as I or my heirs have, or can have; and the said prior and canons, and their men, and their goods, shall be free from all toll, exactions and demands, in all fairs, courts and markets, and in all places and things, throughout all the whole land of Ewias.

The said prior and canons shall have jurisdiction of assaults, murders and shedding of blood, and breach of peace, and treasure found, and whatever belongs to our prerogative; no salaries or rewards upon any occasion whatsoever shall be demanded of the said canons, their lands or servants; and if demanded, they shall not be obliged to pay the same, but all things to them shall be free and quiet, and accountable only to the canons themselves.

I grant that the said prior and canons shall have all pleas of theft, manslaughter, rapes and burnings, within their present possessions, or such possessions they shall hereafter have within the land of Ewias, over all their own men, and over all strangers which shall negotiate there, or shall be taken there, and the fact shall be found upon them, and all other pleas which can be tried in the court of Ewias; with trials of all thefts committed in their lands, or by persons fled thither; and all americiaments which shall arise on such pleas, held before the said canons or their bailiffs, shall be due to the said canons; and I grant that they shall have a gallows to belong to their court of justice, and to do justice in what part of their lands they shall think fit.

I grant that the said prior and canons shall enjoy all the aforesaid liberties and free customs, as freely, quietly, peaceably and fully, as ever I or my ancestors did most fully and freely enjoy the same; and I grant that they shall have as great privileges in the land of Ewias, as ever I or my successors have, or can have, by grant of any king of England, or by any other; and I and my heirs will for ever warrant this grant and concession to the said canons, against all men and women whatsoever; and that this grant and concession may for ever continue firm and inviolable, I have strengthened and corroborated the same by setting my hand, and affixing my seal thereunto.

Witnesses, the lord Simon de Clifford, the lord Walter de Baskervyll, the lord Richard de Hampton, the lord Walter, Walter Condecot.

We therefore, all the gifts, grants and confirmations aforesaid, and also the grant, &c. which John, the son of Reginald, by his deed deed made to the said canons, of their peaceable depasturing the horses of the said canons, thro' all the lands of the said John in Wales, as well in forests and free chases, as in all other places, except in his park already inclosed, without any let or hinderance; with free egress and regress, to go and lead out their horses, or to bring them back at their pleasure; and also leave to go and take fishes in the meere, and to perform any other affairs as often, and when they shall think fit; and the release and quit-claim which the said John made by his deed to the said canons, of the payment of certain money, or poultry, or any other thing which the said canons were accustomed to pay unto the said John, or to any of his predecessors, we, for us and our heirs, as much as in us lyes, do ratify and strengthen the same, and do grant and confirm every part thereof unto our beloved in Christ the prior and canons of the place aforesaid, in as full manner as their writings do reasonably testify.

And moreover, altho' it be found by inquisition, taken at our command by our beloved and faithful John de Breek, and John de Botiller of Lanlutwyt, and returned into our court of chancery, that the said prior and canons, and their predecessors, have not made use of the said liberties and quittances for some time past, we will however, in consideration of a fine paid to us by the said prior and canons, and out of our special favour to them, grant, for us and our heirs, as much as in us lyes, unto the said prior and canons, that they and their successors, shall for the time to come, use and enjoy all those several liberties and quittances in the said deeds contained, when, and as often as it shall seem expedient to them, without any let or hinderance from us or our successors, &c.

Given under our hand at Langeley, on the 26th day of January, in the 18th year of our reign.

NUMBER XXII.

The BULL of Pope ALEXANDER the III^d, confirming divers Donations in NORMANDY and ENGLAND to the Priory of NEWENT.

TO all sons of the holy mother the church: We, William, by divine permission, bishop of Lexoniensis, and we, abbats of Bece, Pratele, Grefson and Cormelle, greeting in our Saviour: Know ye, that we have diligently inspected the charter of privileges granted by Pope Alexander, of happy memory, correct and uncanceled, and no way prejudiced, in this form following:

Alexander, bishop T, servant of the servants of God, to our beloved sons, Robert, abbat of the monastery of Cormelle, and to the brethren of the same, as well present as future, who profess always a regular life, chusing a religious life. It behoves you to have the apostolical assistance, that no person by a rash attempt may endeavour to withdraw you from your good resolution, or shall pervert you in the true religion, which God forbid; therefore, my beloved sons in the Lord, we readily comply with your just requests, and we take the said monastery in which you have vowed obedience to God under the protection of St. Peter, and our own protection, and do secure the same by the privileges granted by this present writing: First, we ordain, that the monastical order in your monastery, instituted by God according to the rule of St. Benedict, be for ever strictly observed: Moreover, whatever possessions, whatever goods the said monastery do justly and canonically enjoy at present, or shall hereafter, by the grants of bishops, the bounty of kings and princes, the free-will offering of the faithful, and by any other just means obtained, through the blessing of God, shall remain firm and undiminished to you and your successors; and we think fit to express the same in more particular words, as followeth: the church of St. Peter, the church of Holy Cross, the church of St. Silvester, with all its appurtenances, the town of Cormelle, &c. In England, the manor of Noent, with all its appurtenances; to wit, five hides of land and the church, with all tithes, oblations, meadows, mills, and the woods of Iarledune and of Tedeswude, Cumpton, Linde, Eclam, and Meicwit, with the mills and woods; Ligesley, with all the new plowed grounds which belong to Nuentz; Stanling, and Boleston, with the chapel; the church of Tedinton, the chapel of Panteley, the church of Dimmock, with all its appurtenances and tithes, and the tithes of all the demesnes, and one yard land in the same town; the church of Bekeford, with the chapels and tithes, and other appurtenances; the tithes of all the demesnes in the improved and in the new plowed grounds, and half an hide of land; the church of Aston, with the chapels and all its appurtenances, and one yard land, and the tithes of the demesnes; in Toniton, all the tithes of the demesnes in all things, and one yard land in the same town; in Compton, all the tithes of the demesnes, and one yard land; seventy-five shillings rent in Gloucester, and forty shillings in Dimmock.

Dated at Benevent the 26th day of April, in the year 1168, and in the 10th year of the pontificate of pope Alexander the III^d.

We therefore, at the instance of those religious persons, the abbat and convent of Cormelle, have hereunto cauled our seals to be fixed.

Given in the year 1242, on the second day of the month November.

NUMBER XXIII.

The CHARTER of King HENRY the II^d, confirming the Grant of the Manor of NEWENT, and divers other Lands and Churches in the Counties of GLOUCESTER, HEREFORD, WORCESTER, MONMOUTH, SOUTHAMPTON, &c. within this Kingdom of ENGLAND.

HENRY, king of England, and duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, and earl of Anjou, to our justices and sheriffs, and barons, and all our officers throughout England, greeting: Know ye, that we have given and granted to God and St. Mary of Cormelle, and to the abbat and monks serving God in that place, the churches, lands, alms, tithes, and all other their tenements, to hold them as beneficially and peaceably, as justly, honourably and quietly, as they ever held them in the reign of king Henry, my grandfather; and particularly all the manor of Newent, with all its appurtenances; to wit, five hides of land, and the church, with all the tithes, oblations, meadows, mills, and the woods of Iarledune, and of Tedeswude, Compton, Lind, Eacle, and Melswiche, with the mill and meadows; and Onghele, with all the new plowed grounds belonging to Newent and Stanling; and Buledune, with its chapel; and the church of Tedington, with the chapel of Pantley; the church of Dimmock, with all its appurtenances, and the tithes, and the tithes of the Demesnes, and one yard land in the same town; the church of Beckford, with all its appurtenances, with its tithes and chapels; and all the tithes of the demesnes in the improved grounds, and in the new plowed grounds, and half an hide of land; the church of Aston, with all its tithes and chapels, and appurtenances, and one yard land, and all the tithes of the demesnes; all the tithes of the demesnes of Tockington, with all other things, and one yard land in the same town; all the tithes of the demesnes of Compton, and one yard land; and all the tithes of the demesnes of Cadybroke, and all the tithes of the demesnes of Eure; all the tithes of the demesnes of Alkston, and all the town of Kingston, with all its appurtenances; to wit, with two hides of land and a

The Confirmation of the Gifts to the Priory of STANLEY, in the County of GLOUCESTER, by THEOBALD, Archbishop of CANTERBURY.

THEOBALD, by the grace of God, archbishop of Canterbury, primate of England, and legate of the apostolical see, to his venerable brother and friend, Simon, bishop of Worcester, and to our beloved in the Lord, all the sons of holy mother the church, health and blessing: We, out of a due regard to the peace and welfare of the church, do, out of a pious good will, grant and confirm by our authority, all those things which the churches have acquired by the bounty of good princes, or by any other justifiable means; and understanding therefore that the church of Eston, and the church of Erlingeham, and the church of Comberley, and the church of Osleworde, and the church of Cam, with all their appurtenances, and one prebend which belonged to Bernard the chaplain in Berkeley, and all the eleemosynary dues which the said Bernard held of the church of St. Leonard, in Berchelai Herness, and which were some time ago rightly given to Sabriethus the prior and canons of Stanley; and having a fuller knowledge of this matter by an attestation from royal charters, and from the writing deeds of our beloved son, Roger de Berkeley, patron of the said church, we do grant the full sanction of our authority for the church of Stanley St. Leonard, to have possession of these same churches; and we do hereby, by means of this present writing, confirm the aforesaid churches to the church of Stanley for ever. Farewell.

NUMBER XXV.

An INSPEXIMUS, reciting and confirming the Charters of several Kings of England to the Abbey of TEWKSBURY.

THE king to all archbishops, &c. health: We have inspected the charter which William of famous memory, heretofore king of England, our progenitor, had granted to the church of St. Mary of Tewksbury, in these words: I William, king of the Englishmen, do grant for ever unto the monastery of St. Mary of Tewksbury, these particulars following, which Robert Fitz-Hamon and his tenants did give; to wit, his fishing, with the royalty of the river, the mills, and a meadow with the tithe, and a meadow near the pasture grounds by the fishery, and the meadow of Edmondshall, and the meadow of Selden, and the land of Roger of the Vineyard, and the churches of Walis, with the lands, tithes, rents, and all other things; and one beid, with a fishery, as the island divides the beid, and a meadow adjoining to the beid; and the tithes of colts, and of the skins of venison, and all manor courts, with full privileges throughout all the lands of St. Mary, and the common of Tewksbury, for all cattle which shall be kept in the demesnes.

Witnesses. William, the chancellor; Robert Fitz-Hamon, Roger Fitz Gerard, and Walter Giffard.

We have also inspected the charter of Henry, of pious memory, heretofore king of the Englishmen, our progenitor, granted to the blessed Mary of Tewksbury, in these words: In the name of the Holy Trinity, be it known to all good people present and to come, that I Hairic, by the grace of God, king of the Englishmen, at Marlborough, in the year of our Lord 1100, do grant, and for ever confirm, these underwritten things and lands to the church of the blessed Mary of Tewksbury, which Robert Fitz-Hamon and other my great men have given to the said church; to wit, Gingeston and Stanley, and one hide at Mildelland, and two hides at Bermeiton, one at Berchelai, a fishery at Tewksbury, and the meadow adjoining to it; and the mills, and the church of Walis, and the tithes and church of Fairford, and the church of Cetesly, and the tithes of Denely, and the tithes of Chenucey, and half an hide at Alureton, and the tithes of Ceotol, which Robert de la Haye gave to the said church, and all the churches of his demesnes, and a fishery in Walis and Amney, which Winebald de Balaon gave to that church, with the king's leave, and the land of Robert the son of Werton, which he gave to the said church.

Signed Henry, king, with a cross before his name, and with crosses for the names of all the witnesses.

We have also inspected another charter which the said king Henry granted to the said church, in these words: In the name of the holy and undivided trinity, to all the sons and lovers of the catholick church, king Henry sendeth health: Be it known unto you all, that I Henry, by the grace of God king of the Englishmen, for ever have granted and freely confirmed to the church of Mary, the holy mother of God, and always virgin, in the year 1106, at Winchester, all things hereunder written, which Robert Fitz-Hamon and many others have given, or which the abbat hath purchased; and this I do for the good of my soul, and of the souls of my father and mother, and of my ancestors; to wit, the land of Byrnete one hide, and land in Bulling-Hope, and in Rerevalls, and one hide at Amney, which did belong to Humphry the cook; two hides at Purbike, and one hide with two tithings of Alfrede de Nicholas, and one hide in Pamington, and one yard land in Aston, and the church of St. Peter of Brigston, and the tithes of the rents of Brigston, and the churches which did belong to Robert the chaplain, with the lands and tithes thereof; those churches are thus severally named, as followeth; one church in London called Semanneskirk, the church of Merlane, the church of Hamelden, the church of Asceton, the church of Marshfield, the church of Sodbury, the church of Thornbury, the church of Pentric, the church of Effemere, the church of Frome, the church of Lapaford, the church of Winchley, the church of Edusley, the church of Sut-Molton, the church of Citelmenton, the church of Bideford, the church of Liteham, the church of Chilthenton: And I, king Henry, did give unto the church one vill, which held of the honour belonging to Robert Fitz-Hamon; I gave it after his death for the good of his soul; the vill is called Ferthelmenton; one fishery in Tewksbury, with the royalty of the water of the fishery, as far as the land of the town doth go, and one water mill; a meadow, with the tithe of the meadows; one meadow out of the common, the meadow of Eadmundeslelle, the meadow of Selden, and common of pasture in all places within Tewksbury for the cattle feeding on the demesnes; the land of Roger of the Vineyard, and the new plowed ground of North Haye, soc and sac, toli and tem, in all the lands of the church; the court house, with the houses near the church, which Robert Fitz-Hamon gave to the church in the town of Tewksbury; one haye given by Godwin, two hayes given by Eglaf, and a small parcel of land given by Godwin the baker, lying near Suthmeade; and in Malverne wood whatsoever is necessary for the use of the church, and quiet pasturage for swine in the same wood; also Kingston, Stanley, Mildeland, Bermerton, Berthele, Wodechefande; half an hide in Hamme; one yard land in Alangeford; the church of Fairford; the church of Cetesley; the tithes of Heytrobery, the tithe of Chenuke, the tithe of Tarente; the church of Umerley, the church of Bikenton, Amney, Wertone, Chetel; with an hide in Aiulsi; with the land of Walter; two houses in Bureford, of the gift of Radulph the priest; one yard land in Bisley, of the gift of Sybill; one hide of land in Oxendon, bought of Godric Dydicot, in exchange made by Alexander; thirty-two solidatas of land by the year, lying in a village called Aise in Somersetshire, which Gilbert de Umphrevil gave for the good of his wife's soul; two hides and a yard land in Asceton, given by Robert the son of Nigell; in Wales, the parish church of St. Mary of the town of Cardiffe, with one plow's tillage; the chapel in the castle of Cardiffe, with one plow's tillage, and the tithes of all the rents of the demesnes of the town of Cardiffe; the tithes of all the demesnes which Robert the son of Fitz-Hamon held in Wales; the tithes of all the barons holding of Robert Fitz-Hamon throughout all Wales; all that branch of water of Taff which is near the church, from the issuing out of Taff till it goes into Taff again, to make fish-ponds therewith, or any other conveniencies for the church; and the meadow on the other side of the water near the church; the village called Landoho; the land given by Walter de Landbethien; the tithes of the land which the abbat of Gloucester hath in Landcarven; the church of Landhiltunit; the land which Wakelyn gave; the water mill at Raz, and the fisheries which Robert de Hay gave; the land which Robert the son of Nigel gave; the church of Newcastle; all these have been confirmed by me, and my barons with me; signed with a cross by the several persons following:

King Henry; Walter, the chancellor; Gerard, the archbishop; Robert, bishop of Nicholo; Sampson, bishop of Worcester; Hugh, the abbat; Humphry de Bohun; Haymon, the steward; Robert, earl of Mellent; the abbat of Glastenbury; Robert, son of Nigell; the abbat Germund; the abbat Pharis; Roger, bishop of Salisbury; Thomas, the chaplain; William, bishop of Exeter; and the abbat Nigell.

We have also inspected the charter which the same king Henry made to St. Mary, and to the monks of Tewksbury, in these words: Henry, by the grace of God king of England and duke of Normandy, to all archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, justices, sheriffs, and all our officers, health: Know ye, that I, in honour of God, and of the holy Mary, mother of God, and for the good of my soul, and the souls of king William my father, and of king king William my brother, and of queen Maud my mother, and of queen Maud my wife, and of the souls of all my ancestors, and for the good of the soul of Robert Fitz-Hamon, have granted and confirmed to St. Mary, and to the abbat and monks of Tewksbury, all their possessions in churches and tithes, in lands and waters, in mills and fisheries, in pastures and woods, and in all other things, to hold to them in perpetual almonage, as free and discharged as Robert Fitz-Hamon held the same, who founded the same church, and as they were when in the demesne of king William my father, or queen Maud my mother, from all payments to the shires or hundreds, from all taxes or dane money, and from all customs and other pretensions.

Witnesses. Roger, bishop of Salisbury; Robert, bishop of Lincoln; Robert, earl of Mellent; Robert, earl of Gloucester; Brience, son of earl Hamo, steward of the household; Walter of Gloucester, at Winchester.

We have also inspected the charter which the same king Henry granted to St. Mary of Tewksbury in these words: Henry, king of the Englishmen, to all archbishops, bishops, justices, earls, barons, sheriffs, and all other officers of the respective places wherein the abbat of Tewksbury has any lands, sends greeting: Know ye, that I have granted and confirmed to St. Mary of Tewksbury these following particulars in perpetual almonage, freely and quietly, for the good of my soul, and the souls of my father and mother, and of all my ancestors, the church of Chedesley, the church of Lethe, the tithes of Chaldewel and Fifhide, the tithes of Sutton, the tithes of Bacheberge, the tithes of Weston, given by Robert de Baskerville, the tithes of Harefelde, the tithes of Muchelesberge; the land called Lancadel, which Walchelin gave to the church; the land in Didicot, which the church had by exchange from Alexander de Cormeille; the land in Polton, which Adaliza de Lisle gave to the same church, for the good of the soul of Reginald de Dunstanville her husband; two hides in Porbec, of the fee of Robert de Claville; and I farther will and command, that all possessions of St. Mary of Tewksbury be free and discharged from all pleas and taxes, and all other charges, as when they were the demesnes of Robert Fitz-Hamon, and as they are now the demesnes of Robert my son.

Witnesses. Ranulph, the chancellor; and Hamon, the steward, at Burnam.

We have also inspected the charter which Henry of pious memory, king of England, our great grandfather, granted unto the said monks, in these words: Henry, king of England, and duke of Normandy and Aquitaine, earl of Anjou, to our justices, sheriffs, barons, and other officers, and all his good people throughout England and Wales, send greeting: Know ye, that I have granted to the monks of Tewksbury, that they may freely and quietly buy and sell all manner of things necessary for themselves throughout all England and Wales; and I forbid all persons from giving any disturbance to them under the penalty of 10l.

Witness. Humphry de Bohun, at Gloucester.

We therefore intending to strengthen and make good the several gifts, grants and confirmations aforesaid, to our well beloved in Christ, the abbat and convent of the place aforesaid, and to their successors, do, for us and our heirs, as much as in us lies, grant and confirm all things in the several charters specified.

Witnesses. The venerable fathers, A. bishop of Durham; John, bishop of Carlisle; William, bishop of Coventry and Litchfield; John de Warren, earl of Surrey; Thomas, earl of Lancaster; Henry de Lacy, earl of Lincoln; John de Hallinges; John de Segrave; Hugh le Dispencer, and others.

NUMBER XXVI.

The CHARTER of the Town and Borough of TEWKSBURY.

WILLIAM the III^d, by the grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, &c. to all to whom these letters patents shall come, greeting: Whereas our great grandfather, James the First, late king of England, &c. by his letters patents under his great seal of England, bearing date the 23^d day of March, in the year of his reign of England, France and Ireland, the seventh, reciting: That whereas our sovereign lady Elizabeth, late queen of England, by her letters patents sealed with her great seal of England, bearing date at Gorhambury, the 4th day of April, in the 17th year of her reign, amongst other things had willed, ordained, constituted, granted and declared, that the town of Tewksbury, in her county of Gloucester, and the whole fee called the abbey fee in Tewksbury aforesaid, and also the whole manor and liberty of the late abbey, or late dissolved monastery of Tewksbury, called the abbey fee, parcel of the possessions of the late monastery should be and are a free borough, incorporated in deed, fact and name, for ever, of two bailiffs, and of burgesses and commonalty of the said town or borough of Tewksbury, by the name of the bailiffs, burgesses and commonalty of the borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester; and that the bailiffs, burgesses and commonalty of the same borough for the time being, and their successors, be and should be one body corporate and politick, and one perpetual community in deed and name, and should have perpetual succession; and them the said bailiffs and burgesses, one body corporate and politick, really and to the full had created, erected, ordained, declared and incorporated by the same letters patents, as by the same letters patents, amongst other things, may more fully appear.

And also reciting, that whereas the said James the First, late king of England, &c. by his letters patents, sealed with his great seal of England, bearing date at Westminster, the 18th day of October, in the year of his reign of England, France and Ireland, the 3^d, and of Scotland the 39th (amongst other things) had willed, granted, ordained, constituted and declared, that the borough of Tewksbury aforesaid, should be, and remain for ever hereafter, a free borough of itself; and that the bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Tewksbury thereafter for ever, be, and should be one body corporate and politick, in deed, fact and name, by the name of the bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester; and them, by the name of the bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, one body corporate and politick, really and to the full, for himself, his heirs and successors, had erected, made, ordained and created, by his said letters patents; and that, by the same name, they should have perpetual succession, as by his said letters patents (amongst other things) in like manner more fully may appear.

And also reciting, that whereas his beloved and faithful subjects, the bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough of Tewksbury aforesaid, in the said county of Gloucester, had purchased of him the said king, for a great sum of money, his whole manor and borough of Tewksbury in the county of Gloucester, and his divers messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments in Tewksbury, in the said county of Gloucester, late parcel of the possessions of the late monastery of Tewksbury, and the manor of Tewksbury in the said county of Gloucester, and his hundred of Tewksbury in the said counties of Gloucester and Worcester, or in one of them; and divers messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments there, late parcel of the lands of Thomas late lord Seymour of Sudely, attainted; and also the manor and borough of Tewksbury, in the said county of Gloucester, and divers messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments there, late parcel of the lands called Warwick's and Spencer's lands; as well for and in consideration of the purchase aforesaid, as for divers other good causes and considerations, him to the same presents especially moving, for the better rule, government and improvement of the borough of Tewksbury aforesaid, of his special grace, and of his certain knowledge and mere motion, had willed, granted, constituted ordained and declared, for himself, his heirs and successors, that the said manor and borough of Tewksbury in the county of Gloucester, and the other hereditaments aforesaid, late parcel of the lands of the late monastery of Tewksbury, and the aforesaid manor of Tewksbury in the said county of Gloucester, and the aforesaid hundred and liberty of Tewksbury, in the said counties of Gloucester and Worcester, or in one of them, and the other hereditaments aforesaid, late parcel of Thomas late lord Seymour of Sudely, attaint, and also the aforesaid manor and borough of Tewksbury in the said county of Gloucester, and other the hereditaments aforesaid, late parcel of the lands called Warwick's and Spencer's lands, be and should be, and reputed to be, part and parcel of the incorporation of the town and borough of Tewksbury aforesaid; and the aforesaid town of Tewksbury in the county of Gloucester, and all that fee called the abbey fee in Tewksbury aforesaid; and also all that manor and liberty of the late abbey, or late dissolved monastery of Tewksbury, called the abbey fee, parcel of the possessions of the late monastery; and all that manor and borough of Tewksbury, parcel of the possessions of the late monastery; and all that manor of Tewksbury in the said county of Gloucester; and all that hundred and liberty of Tewksbury, in the counties of Gloucester and Worcester, or in one of them, parcel of lands of Thomas late lord Seymour of Sudely, attaint; also all that manor and borough of Tewksbury, parcel of the lands called Warwick's and Spencer's lands; and all other messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments as aforesaid, of him purchased, to be one in-tire free borough corporate, in deed, fact and name, from thence for ever had, ordained, created and incorporated by his said letters patents; and also had given and granted to them the said bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, divers liberties, powers, privileges, authorities, rities, and other things, as by the said letters patents, bearing date the twenty third day of March, in the seventh year of the reign of the said late king James the first, more fully may appear:

And whereas the bailiffs, burgesles and commonalty of our borough of Tewksbury aforesaid, have surrendered the charter or letters patents, bearing date the said twenty third day of March, in the seventh year of the reign of the said late king James the first, to them or their ancestors formerly granted; and all the liberties, privileges, emoluments and advantages, by the same charter, or by any former or other charters or letters patents to them granted, to James the second, late king of England, by their writing, sealed with their common seal, bearing date the twenty fourth day of March, in the first year of the reign of the said late king James the second, and duly inrolled in our court of chancery:

And whereas the aforesaid James the second, late king of England, by his letters patents under his great seal of England made, bearing date the twelfth day of March, in the second year of his reign, did will, constitute and declare, that the said town of Tewksbury, in the said county of Gloucester, and the other messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments in the same letters patents mentioned, be, and should be a free borough of itself; and the burgesles and inhabitants of the same borough be, and should be one body corporate and politick, in deed, fact and name, by the name of the mayor, aldermen, and common council of the borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester; and granted to them divers liberties, franchises, powers, and other things:

And whereas no election of mayor, aldermen, or persons of the common council of the borough aforesaid, or of any officer in or for the borough aforesaid, nor any government in the same borough, according to the form and effect of the same letters patents of James the second, or of any other charter of incorporation of the borough aforesaid, for divers years last past have been had or executed, or is now executed, as we are informed; by reason of which, all acts of government and administration of justice in the same borough (as a body corporate) have totally ceased, and as yet do cease, to the great prejudice of our subjects inhabiting there:

And whereas the burgesles of the same borough have humbly besought us, and our late most dear consort Mary, late queen of England, &c. to grant to them our royal charter, and to restore and confirm to them such liberties and privileges as they had and enjoyed at the time of the surrender aforesaid: We therefore, being willing that from henceforth for ever there be had in the borough aforesaid, a certain and undoubted manner of and for the keeping of the peace, and for the good rule and government of our people there, and others coming thither; and that our peace in future times may be kept inviolated there, and that other acts of justice and good rule within the borough aforesaid, may be rightly administered and executed, to the terror of the wicked, and the reward of the good.

And we being also willing that the burgesles and inhabitants of the borough aforesaid, for ever hereafter, may have and use the ancient liberties, franchises, privileges and prebeminences, from the burgesles and inhabitants of the borough aforesaid, before this used and enjoyed, together with our fuller grants for the better conservation of the peace in the borough aforesaid, and government and rule of our people there: Know ye, that we of our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, have willed, granted, constituted, ordained and declared, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do will, grant, constitute, ordain and declare, that the said manor and borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, and the other hereditaments aforesaid, late parcel of lands of the late monastery of Tewksbury; and the aforesaid manor of Tewksbury, in the said county of Gloucester; and the aforesaid hundred and liberty of Tewksbury, in the counties of Gloucester and Worcester, and in either of them; and the other hereditaments aforesaid, late parcel of lands of Thomas late lord Seymour of Sudely, attaint; and also the aforesaid manor and borough of Tewksbury, in the said county of Gloucester; and other the hereditaments aforesaid, late parcel of lands called Warwick's and Spencer's lands; be, and shall be, and reputed to be part and parcel of the incorporation of the town and borough of Tewksbury beforementioned; and the aforesaid town of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester; and the whole fee called the abbey fee, in Tewksbury aforesaid; and also the whole manor and liberty of the late abbey or monastery of Tewksbury lately dissolved, called the abbey fee; parcel of the possession of the said late monastery, and whole manor and borough of Tewksbury, part of the possessions of the said late monastery; and whole manor of Tewksbury, in the said county of Gloucester; and the whole hundred and liberty of Tewksbury, in the counties of Gloucester and Worcester, and in either of them, parcel of lands of Thomas late lord Seymour of Sudely, attaint; and also all that manor and borough of Tewksbury, parcel of lands called Warwick's and Spencer's lands; and all other messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, as aforesaid purchased; we do ordain, create and incorporate by these presents, one entire free borough corporate, in fact, deed and name, henceforth for ever.

And that the burgesles and inhabitants of the same borough of Tewksbury, for the future and for ever, are, and shall be one body corporate and politick in fact, deed and name, by the name of bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester; and them by the name of bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, one body corporate and politick, really and fully, for us, our heirs and successors, we create, make, ordain and create by these presents; and that by the same name they may have a perpetual succession. And that they and their successors, by the name of bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, may and shall be, perpetually for the future, persons fit and capable in the law, to have, demand, receive and possess lands, tenements, liberties, franchises, jurisdictions and hereditaments, to them and their successors, in fee and perpetuity, or for term of life or lives, year or years, or otherwise howsoever; and also goods and chatties, and all other things of whatsoever sort, nature, kind or quality they shall be; and to give, grant, demise and assign the same lands, tenements and hereditaments, goods and chatties, and other deeds and things whatsoever, or any parcel thereof; and all other things do and perform by the name aforesaid: and that by the same name of bailiffs, burgesles and community of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, they may and can plead and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended, in all courts and places whatsoever, and before us, our heirs and successors; and all judges and justices, and other persons and officers whatsoever, of us, our heirs and successors, in all and singular actions, pleas, suits, complaints, causes, matters and demands whatsoever, of whatsoever sort, nature or kind, in the same manner and form as any other of our subjects of our kingdom of England, persons fit and capable in the law, or any other body corporate and politick, within this our kingdom of England, may, and can have, receive, purchase, possess, give, grant, demise, assign or dispose, and plead and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend and be defended, do or perform.

And we further will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do give, grant, restore and confirm to the said bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough of Tewksbury aforesaid, and their successors, full power and authority to execute, enjoy and exercise so many, so much, such, the same, of the same kind, all, all manner, and the like customs, liberties, privileges, franchises, immunities, acquittances, fines, amercements, exemption of goals, merchandising, tolls, custom, and all other rights and jurisdictions whatsoever, within the said town of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester; and within the whole fee, called the abbey fee, in Tewksbury aforesaid; and within the whole manor and liberties of the late abbey or monastery of Tewksbury, lately dissolved, called the abbey fee, parcel of the possession of the said late monastery; and within the whole manor and borough of Tewksbury, parcel of the possession of the said late monastery; and within the whole manor of Tewksbury, in the said county of Gloucester; and the whole hundred and liberty of Tewksbury, in the said counties of Gloucester and Worcester, and in either of them, parcel of lands of Thomas late lord Seymour of Sudely, attaint; and also within the whole manor and borough of Tewksbury, parcel of lands called Warwick's and Spencer's lands; and also within all and singular messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, as aforesaid, before purchased; and within every and either of them, and part and parcel of each of them, as many, as much, such, and which the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, or their predecessors, or any of them, by whatsoever names, or by whatsoever name, or by whatsoever incorporation, or pretence of any incorporation (at or before the time of the surrender aforesaid) lawfully had, possessed or enjoyed, or ought to have, possess, use or enjoy, within the borough, town, hundred, manor, tenements, liberties and places aforesaid.

And we farther will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and to their successors, free liberty, power and authority, and that it well may and shall be lawful for the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, to perambulate and make perambulation or perambulations thereof, and to erect and put bounds and limits there, or in the outward parts thereof, or any part of it, for to have true and better knowledge thereof, as often as it shall please them, or shall seem necessary to them; and this without any writ, or other warrant therefore from us, our heirs or successors, in this part howsoever to be requested or prosecuted.

We will also, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant and ordain, that from henceforth for the future there are and shall be in the borough aforesaid, two of the burgesles of the borough aforesaid, in manner below in these presents named.

named, to be chosen and named, who shall be, and shall be nominated bailiffs of the same borough; and for the better execution of our grant in this part, we have assigned, nominated, appointed and made, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate, appoint and make our beloved Joseph Jones and Henry Dobbins, gent. to be the first and modern bailiffs of the borough aforesaid; willing that they the same Joseph Jones and Henry Dobbins shall be, and continue in the offices of bailiffs in the same borough, from the date of these presents, until and in the second Thursday in the month of October next to come, and from the same day until two other of the burgesses of the borough aforesaid shall be elected, appointed, and sworn to the office of bailiffs aforesaid, at the time, in the manner and form in these presents here under mentioned, if the same Joseph Jones and Henry Dobbins, or either of them shall so long live. And we will also, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant and ordain, that from henceforth for ever, there may and shall be in the borough aforesaid, four and twenty men, of the better, honest, and more discreet burgesses of the same borough, who shall be, and perpetually called principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid; which principal burgesses, together with the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, may, and shall be, and for ever hereafter shall be called the common council of the borough aforesaid, for all things, matters, causes and businesses of the borough aforesaid, and the good rule, state and government of the same borough, touching or concerning; and they may, and shall be from time to time assistant and helping to the said bailiffs, for that time being, in all things, matters, causes and businesses relating to the same borough.

And we farther have assigned, nominated, appointed and made, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate, appoint and make our beloved Robert Tracy, esq; Richard Dowdeswell, esq; Henry Collet, jun. esq; Charles Wynde, the aforesaid Joseph Jones, Nicholas Streight, Theophilus Holland, William Streight, Henry Peyton, Nicholas Wrenford, William Wilson, John Mann, Abraham Farren, Samuel Hawling, Robert Porter, the aforesaid Henry Dobbins, William Jones, Francis Leight, John Jaynes, Thomas Warckman, William Merrett, Thomas Hale, merchant, Thomas Bartholomew, and Daniel Kemble, gent. to be the chief and modern four and twenty principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the same offices and places as long as they shall behave themselves well; which indeed principal burgesses, and every of them before named, and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, for himself or themselves ill behaving, we will to be moveable at the good pleasure of the bailiffs and principal burgesses, being common council of the borough aforesaid, or the greater part of them, either of which bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, we will to be one.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the bailiffs, burgesses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and to their successors, that whensoever it shall happen that either or any of the four and twenty principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, do die, or be removed from their office as aforesaid, that then and so often, it may and shall be well and lawful for the aforesaid bailiffs, and principal burgesses, being a common council of the borough aforesaid, or for the greater part of them, (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for that time being, we will to be one) one other, or more of the burgesses of the borough aforesaid, into the place or places of a principal burgess, or those principal burgesses so dead, or removed from his or their office or offices, to elect, nominate and appoint, to supply the aforesaid number of four and twenty principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid; and that he or they so elected and appointed as aforesaid, may have and exercise that office or offices as long as he or they shall behave himself or themselves well in the same office or offices, a corporal oath before the bailiffs and principal burgesses, being common council of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid we will to be one) of that office, in all things touching that office, rightly well and faithfully to execute) being first performed.

And farther, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge, and meer motion, have willed, ordained and granted, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do will, ordain, and grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that from henceforth for ever there be, and shall be within the borough aforesaid, four and twenty other men, honest and discreet, of the same borough, who shall be, and be named assistants of the same borough, which indeed four and twenty assistants may, and shall be from time to time assisting and helping to the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, and to the aforesaid four and twenty principal burgesses, for the good rule, state, and government of the borough aforesaid, in all things, causes, matters and businesses touching the same borough.

And we have assigned, nominated, created, appointed and made, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate, create, appoint, and make our beloved Joseph Sheene, Stephen Millington, Isaac Merret, Robert Wilkins, John Reeks, Robert Morris, George Moore, William Heyward, Edward Leight, John Farren, Ralph Jaynes of the Barton street, Matthew Maid, Thomas Nutt, Edward Phelps, Samuel Dobbins, Ralph Jaynes of the high street, Philip Brush, George Waters, alias Hawkins, Richard Pitt, Joseph Smith, John Clifton, John Chaundler, Edward Peirce, and Samuel Penell, to be four and twenty chief and modern assistants of the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the same offices as long as they shall behave themselves well; which very assistants before named, and either or any of them, and the assistants of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, and either or any of them, not behaving himself or themselves well in their offices, we will to be moveable at the good pleasure of the bailiffs and principal burgesses, being common council of the borough aforesaid, or the greater part of them, of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid for the time being, we will to be one.

And we farther will, and for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant to the said bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and to their successors, that whensoever it shall happen, that either or any of the aforesaid four and twenty assistants of the borough aforesaid, do die, or are removed from his or their office, as aforesaid, that then and so often, it may and shall be well and lawful for the said bailiffs, and the rest of the common council of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, we will to be one) one other or more of the burgesses of the borough aforesaid, into the place or places of the same assistant or assistants, so happening to die or be removed, to elect, nominate and appoint, to supply the aforesaid number of four and twenty assistants of the borough aforesaid; and that he or they so as aforesaid elected and appointed to the office or offices of an assistant or assistants of the borough aforesaid, having performed before the bailiffs and the rest of the common council of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, we will to be one) a corporal oath, well and faithfully to execute that office, he and they shall be of the number of the aforesaid four and twenty assistants of the borough aforesaid; and this from time to time as often as it shall so happen.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the said bailiffs, burgesses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that from henceforth for the future, the bailiffs, burgesses aforesaid, shall be elected, nominated and sworn yearly, and every year, in and upon the second Thursday in the month of October, and not upon the Thursday next after the feast of St. Simon and Jude apostles, by and before such person and persons, and in the same manner and form as was wont to be in the same borough, at and before the time of the surrender aforesaid; and that they who shall be elected, nominated and sworn, as aforesaid, to the office of bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, may have and exercise that office for one whole year then next following, and thenceforth until two other burgesses of the borough aforesaid to the offices of bailiffs of the borough aforesaid shall be elected, appointed, and sworn in due manner.

And moreover we will, and for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the bailiffs, burgesses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that if it shall happen that the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, or either of them for the time being, within one year after they shall be elected, appointed, and sworn to the offices of bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, so as aforesaid, do die, or be removed from his or their office or offices that then and so often, one other fit person, or two other fit persons, shall be elected, appointed and sworn into the bailiwick or bailiwicks of the borough of Tewksbury aforesaid, by and before such person and persons, and in such manner and form as was wont in the same borough at and before the time of the surrender aforesaid; and that he or they so elected and sworn, may have and execute that office or offices during the residue of the same year, and so often as it shall so happen.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors may and shall have in the borough aforesaid, one honest and discreet man to be chose and nominated, in form beneath in these presents expressed, who shall be, and be named high steward of the borough aforesaid; and we have assigned, nominated, appointed and made, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate, appoint and make our well beloved and faithful kintman Algernoon, earl of Essex, to be the first and modern high steward of the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the same office so long as he shall behave himself well.

We also will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that from and after the death of the said Algernoon, earl of Essex, or any other determination mination of his office, the bailiffs and principal burgesles of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them, (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid we will to be one) may, and can elect, nominate and appoint one other honest and discreet man, from time to time, to the office of high steward of the borough aforesaid; and that he who shall be elected, appointed and nominated, so as aforesaid, after the death of the said Algernoon, earl of Essex, or any other determination of the said office of high steward, shall, and may execute and enjoy that office of high steward of the borough aforesaid, during the good pleasure of the aforesaid bailiffs and principal burgesles of the borough aforesaid, or the greater part of them, (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid we will to be one) and so as oft as it shall so happen.

We will also, and for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the said bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they, from henceforth forever, may have in the borough aforesaid, one honest, fit, and discreet man, skilful and learned in the laws of this kingdom of England, who shall be, and be named recorder of that borough, to be continued in that office, and to execute the same by himself or his deputy, as long as he shall behave himself well: And we have assigned, nominated, appointed and made, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate, appoint and make the aforesaid Robert Tracy to be chief and modern recorder of the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the same office, and the same office to execute by himself or his sufficient deputy, as long as he shall behave himself well.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that after the death or removal of the said Robert Tracy, from the office aforesaid, and so oft as the office of recorder of the borough aforesaid shall happen to be vacant, it may, and shall be lawful for the bailiffs and principal burgesles of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid we will to be one) to elect, name, and prefer one other honest and discreet man, learned in the laws of this kingdom of England, into the office of recorder of the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the same office so long as he shall behave himself well; which said Robert Tracy, and all other persons who for the future shall be elected, nominated and appointed, so as aforesaid, into the office of recorder of the borough aforesaid, before he shall be permitted to execute that office, shall take a corporal oath before the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or either of them, to rightly, well and faithfully execute that office, in all businesses touching or concerning it.

And we farther, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have willed and granted, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do will and grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs and recorder of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, during the time in which they shall happen to be in their offices, and four other of the honest and more discreet burgesles of the borough aforesaid, to be chosen and nominated by the bailiffs and principal burgesles of the borough aforesaid, or by the greater part of them, (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid we will to be one) may and shall be, and every of them may and shall be our justices, and our heirs and successors, to keep the peace, and to keep and cause to be kept the orders and statutes set forth for the good of the peace of us, our heirs and successors, and for the keeping of the same, and for the good and quiet rule and government of our people, our heirs and successors, and in all their articles in the borough and liberty, and precincts by these presents, to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid before granted, according to the statute, form, and effect of the same; and to chastize and punish all offending against the force, form and effect of the same orders and statutes, or either of them, as shall be to be done according to the form of the same orders and statutes; and to cause to come before them, or either of them, all those who have threatened either or any of our people, concerning their bodies, or burning of their houses, to find sufficient security of the peace, or their good behaviour towards us and our people; and if they shall refuse to find such security, then them to cause to be kept safe in our prison in the borough aforesaid, until they shall find such security; and to hear and determine all and all manner of felonies, and other misdeeds in the said borough, and liberty and precinct of the same, before mentioned, committed and to be committed, and to keep and correct, and cause to be kept and corrected, the statutes concerning artificers, labourers, weights and measures, within the borough aforesaid, and liberty and precinct of the same.

And that the said bailiffs and principal burgesles, or the greater part of them, within one month after the date of these presents, shall chuse four such burgesles as aforesaid, to be justices of the peace, which said four burgesles shall continue in the offices of justices of the peace within the borough aforesaid, until and upon the second Thursday in the month of October next to come; and that in and upon the aforesaid second day of October next to come, and upon every second Thursday in the month of October for ever, four such burgesles of the borough aforesaid, shall be yearly chosen as aforesaid, to be justices of the peace as aforesaid, within the borough aforesaid; and that the bailiffs and recorders of the same borough, for the time being, and four other burgesles to be elected and nominated so as aforesaid, in the offices of justices of the peace, or any three of them (of whom either of the bailiffs or recorders of the borough aforesaid we will to be one) may have full power and absolute authority, to enquire from time to time, by the oath of honest and lawful men of the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, concerning all and all manner of petty treasons, murders, voluntary manslaughter, manslaughters, felonies, witchcrafts, incantations, forceries, magick art, forestallings, ingrossings, regratings and extortions whatsoever; and concerning all and singular other witchcrafts, transgressions, faults and offences whatsoever, of which the justices appointed to keep the peace in any county of our kingdom of England, may, or ought lawfully to enquire. And that they may or shall hear and determine all and singular felonies, offences, transgressions, crimes and articles whatsoever, that belong to the office of a justice of the peace within the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, to be done, heard, performed and determined so fully and wholly, and in so ample manner and form as any other justices appointed to keep the peace in any county of our kingdom of England, by the laws and statutes of the same kingdom of England, or otherwise. And that they, or any three of them, may and can from time to time keep sessions in the same manner and form as any other justices appointed to keep the peace in any county of our kingdom of England, may and can: so nevertheless that at the determination of any treason, murder, manslaughter, felony, or other offence whatsoever, touching the loss of life or a member, within the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, without our special mandate of us, our heirs or successors, howsoever, for the future, they may not proceed.

We will also, and, for us our heirs and successors, do command and forbid by these presents, that no justice of the peace within the county of Gloucester, do any ways introduce, or do or execute any thing within the town or parish of Tewksbury, and precinct of the same, that belongs to the office of a justice of the peace there to be done.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors, henceforth for ever, may have and hold within the borough aforesaid, a certain court of record before the bailiffs of the same borough, for the time being, in a certain house called the Tolsay (or other convenient place in the same borough) upon Friday in every week yearly to be kept; in which court they shall keep the pleas of all and all manner of debts, trespasses, and personal actions, proceeding from within the liberty of the borough aforesaid, so that they do not exceed the sum of 50*l.* of lawful money of England, nor touching a free tenement within the liberties of the borough aforesaid, by complaints thereof before the bailiffs aforesaid, to be levied, made and entered; and that the same bailiffs, burgesles and community, and their successors, upon the like sort of complaints, pleas, quarrels and actions, may have power, authority and faculty to implead defendants against whom the like complaints, pleas or actions in the said court shall happen to be levied or removed, by an attachment of their bodies, to be directed to the sergeants at mace of the borough aforesaid, or other officer or officers, or any of them, to be appointed or assigned by the bailiffs aforesaid, or either of them, for the time being.

And that the like pleas, complaints, suits and actions, may be there heard and determined before the bailiffs of the said borough, for the time being, or either of them, together with the recorder of the borough aforesaid, or his sufficient deputy for the time being, by such and the like processes and means, according to the laws and custom of this our kingdom of England, by their peers, and as is agreeable to our laws, and in as ample manner and form as is or ought to be used and accustomed in any court of record in any city, borough or town incorporate, within our kingdom of England: provided always, and it is our good pleasure, and, for us our heirs and successors, do will and forbid, that no attachment or other process be directed to the sergeants at mace of the borough aforesaid, or shall be executed or served by the same in any place, unless within the town and parish of Tewksbury aforesaid, and precinct of the same town.

And we farther will, and for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that there may and shall be perpetually in the borough aforesaid, one honest and discreet man, to be chosen in form in these presents mentioned, who shall be, and be nominated common clerk of the borough aforesaid, and clerk of our peace within the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the same office so long as he shall behave himself well. And we have have farther appointed, nominated and constituted, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do appoint, nominate and constitute the aforesaid Henry Collet, junior, to be the first and modern common clerk of the borough aforesaid, and clerk of our peace within the borough aforesaid, so long as he shall behave himself well, and to do and execute all things which respectively belong to the office of common clerk, and clerk of the peace within the borough aforesaid.

And we also will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that from henceforth for the future, there be and shall be within the borough, liberty and precinct of the same, one honest and discreet man, to be chosen in form in these presents, who shall be and be called coroner of the borough aforesaid, who shall have full power and authority to do and execute all and singular those acts and things whatsoever within the borough aforesaid, and precinct of the same, which tend and belong to the office of a coroner within the borough aforesaid to be done and executed. And we have appointed, nominated and constituted, and by these presents do appoint, nominate and constitute the aforesaid Henry Collet to be first and modern coroner of the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the said office during the good pleasure of the bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs we will to be one.) And we farther will, that after the death or removal of the aforesaid Henry Collet, from the office of coroner aforesaid, then and thenceforth it may and shall be well and lawful for the bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them who shall be then present (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid we will to be one) at their pleasure from time to time to elect, nominate and appoint one other honest and discreet man of the burgesses of the borough aforesaid, into the office of coroner of the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the same office during the good pleasure of the aforesaid bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs we will to be one) a corporal oath being first taken before the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, or either of them, to rightly, well and faithfully perform that office in all things touching or concerning that office.

We farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, we will to be one) may and shall from time to time elect, constitute and create one of the burgesses of the borough aforesaid, to have, exercise and execute the office of chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, so long as it shall seem fit to the aforesaid bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid for the time being, we will to be one) or until the aforesaid chamberlain shall leave the said office of his own accord, or dye; and that every burgess of that borough elected, chosen and created chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, or to be elected, chosen or created, shall take a corporal oath in due manner, to do and faithfully execute all those things which belong to the office of chamberlain of the borough aforesaid. And that the chamberlain of the borough aforesaid for the time being, shall, and may receive all manner of rents, fines, amercements, revenues, profits, commodities and emoluments whatsoever, to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, by right of any corporation, or howsoever belonging, appertaining, incurred, due or payable, and keep the same in his power to and for the use of the bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and expend and disburse the same from time to time, at their command and request. And the aforesaid chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, shall keep all and singular writings, deeds, evidences and muniments whatsoever to the said bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid for the time being, belonging, or in any wise appertaining; and shall keep the seal as well of the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, as of the master of the school beneath written, in the chamber of the borough aforesaid, and shall cause to come the same writings and muniments, and seal, before the aforesaid bailiffs and principal burgesses, or either of them, as often and whensoever by them they shall be commanded, that they may look into them, and duly determine and dispose or use them, and let him perpetually give a true and just yearly account at every feast of St. James the apostle, or within fifteen days next following the same feast, to the said bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them, of all things by him so received or levied, kept or had. And let him execute and do all those things as in times past were used and accustomed by the chamberlain aforesaid; and also that every chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, who shall happen to be removed from his office, or shall leave his office aforesaid of his own accord, and the heirs, executors and administrators of such who shall dye, having the office of chamberlain aforesaid, within one month next after the death or removal, or voluntary leaving of his office aforesaid, may give a true and faithful account of all things in his office, by virtue of his said office, by him accepted, had or done, to the bailiffs and principal burgesses of that borough, or so many of them as will be there, when it shall be required of him. And for the better execution of our will and grant in this part, we have appointed, created, nominated, constituted and made, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do appoint, create, nominate, constitute and make the aforesaid William Wilson to be the first and modern chamberlain of that borough, to be continued in the office aforesaid as long as he shall behave himself well. And that from time to time, and at all times after the death, surrender, or other determination of the office aforesaid, at the good pleasure and will of the bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, we will to be one) the aforesaid bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid for the time being, or the greater part of them as aforesaid, may elect, nominate, and appoint one other discreet man of the burgesses of the borough for the time being, from time to time, to be chamberlain of the borough aforesaid; and that he who shall be elected, appointed, and nominated to be chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, so as aforesaid, after the death, surrender, or other determination of the aforesaid office, may have, enjoy, and exercise that office of chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, during the good pleasure of the bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, we will to be one) a corporal oath being first taken before the bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, or so many of them as will be there, (of whom either of the bailiffs for the time being we will to be one) to execute that office of chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, rightly, well and faithfully, in and by all things touching that office; and so often as it shall so happen.

And farther, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, we do will and grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, together with our clerk, our heirs and successors of the same borough, assigned to receive recognizance of debts, may for ever have full power and authority to receive recognizances, by virtue of the statute of Acton Burnell, between merchant and merchant, merchants and merchants, and between every and all other person and persons whatsoever, or either of them, concerning any debt, and any sum, and the execution thereof to be made, according to the form and effect of the said statute of Acton Burnell, statute of Merchants, or either of them, or other statute in that part set forth and provided; and also to do and execute all other things in the premises, or the premises any ways touching or concerning, which by the vigor of the said statute of Acton Burnell, and the statute of Merchants, and other statutes in that part set forth and provided, or either or any of them belong to be done and executed; and that for ever hereafter there be and shall be a clerk, of us our heirs and successors, of the said borough of Tewksbury, to receive such like recognizances of debts, according to the form of the statutes aforesaid; and that he may and shall perpetually have power and authority to do and perform all and singular matters, which in any wise belong to the office of clerk of the recognizances, according to the form of the statutes aforesaid, or either of them, to be taken in the vigour of those statutes, or either of them to be done and executed; and we do ordain, nominate, constitute, create, erect and appoint, by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, the aforesaid Henry Collet to be our clerk our heirs and successors, of the recognizances aforesaid, within the borough aforesaid, and the aforesaid liberty and precinct of the same, according to the form of the statute aforesaid, as long as he shall behave himself well in the same office; and that the aforesaid bailiffs, and the aforesaid clerk of the like recognizances for the time being, may for ever have a seal for sealing the recognizances aforesaid, according to the form of the statute aforesaid; and that the same bailiffs and clerk of such like recognizances, for the time being, may have for ever henceforth the keeping of the said seal; and that the said bailiffs and clerk of the like recognizances for the time being, may have from henceforth for ever so much, and so great and entire, and absolute authority, faculty and power from henceforth for the future, to take, seal and record, and certify such like recognizances, and to perform, do and execute all other, according to the exigence of the said statute, by and in all things, with the sureties, fees, and regards thereunto belonging and appertaining, as any other mayor, mayors, bailiff, bailiffs, and such clerk or clerks in any city, borough, or town whatsoever, within this our kingdom of England hath, or have, or ought to have; and we do make, create, constitute, appoint and ordain by these presents, the said bailiffs and clerk of the recognizances of the said borough for the time being, to do and perform all the premises.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that after the death or removal of the aforesaid Henry Collet from the aforesaid offices of common clerk, clerk of the peace, and clerk of the recognizances, within the borough aforesaid, or from either of them, and from and after any other determination of the offices aforesaid of common clerk, clerk of the peace, and clerk of the recognizances within the borough aforesaid, or either of them, and as often as such offices, or either or any of them shall be void, then and so often it may and shall be well and lawful for the bailiffs and principal burgesles of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or for the greater part of them, (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid for the time being we will to be one) to elect, nominate, and appoint one other fit person, or more fit persons to be common clerk, clerk of the peace, and clerk of the recognizances, within the borough aforesaid, to be continued in the like office or offices to which he or they shall be elected and appointed, so long as he or they shall behave himself or themselves well. Provided always, and we will that every person and persons, so as aforesaid, hereafter to be elected to the aforesaid offices of common clerk, clerk of the peace, and clerk of the recognizances, within the borough aforesaid, or to either or any of those offices, before he or they be admitted to the execution of those offices, or either or any of them, shall take a corporal oath for the due execution of the offices of common clerk, clerk of the peace, and clerk of the recognizances within the borough aforesaid, or for the due execution of such office or offices to which he or they shall be so elected, before the bailiffs and principal burgesles of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them.

And moreover we will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do command, that the bailiffs, recorders, common clerk, principal burgesles, justices of the peace, assistants, chamberlain, coroner, clerk of the peace and recognizances, and other officers, by these presents nominated and constituted, before that they or either of them be respectively admitted to the execution of their separate trusts and offices, in these presents mentioned, they and every of them shall take and perform their separate corporal oaths, upon the bible, for the due execution of their trusts, and respective offices, in manner and form following: viz. The bailiffs and recorder, by these presents nominated and appointed, shall take their oaths before the aforesaid Richard Dowdeswell, Stephen Baldwyn, esq; Henry Collet, senior, and James Bengough, gent. or any two or more of them, to which, or any two or more of them, we give and grant by these presents full power and authority to give and administer the like oath. And we have also granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant that the aforesaid bailiffs and recorder in these presents nominated, or two of them, (of whom either of the bailiffs we will to be one) may have full power and authority of giving and administering a corporal oath to the rest of the principal burgesles, justices of the peace, chamberlain, common clerk, clerk of the peace and recognizances, coroner, assistants, and other officers aforesaid, in these presents before mentioned, and also the aforesaid four justices of the peace, by virtue of these presents as aforesaid to be elected, within one month after the date of these presents.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that the aforesaid, bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, may and shall for ever have within the borough aforesaid, liberty, and precinct of the same, one prison or jail, for the preservation and keeping of all and singular persons attach't and to be attach't, or to be any ways adjudged to the prison or jail of the borough aforesaid, within the liberty of the borough aforesaid, or precinct of the same, for any cause which could be inquired, prosecuted, punished or determined in that borough, to abide there so long, and until they shall be freed in a lawful manner; and that the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, be and shall be keepers of the same jail.

We will also, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors may have all fines, redemptions, recognizances and amerciaments whatsoever, for transgressions and other misdemeanors whatsoever, or other causes and matters within the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, committed and to be committed, and also all and all manner of penalties and forfeitures, forfeited or to be forfeited, of all burgesles and inhabitants of the borough, and liberty of the same aforesaid, there residing, and henceforth happening to reside, and their successors, for the peace of us, our heirs and successors, and otherwise howsoever, and also of all other residing in the borough aforesaid, and liberty of the same, forfeited or to be forfeited, to us, our heirs and successors, within the same borough, liberty, and precinct of the same, and all and all manner of issues, fines, redemptions and amerciaments of the aforesaid burgesles and residents, their heirs and successors, before the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, as before the justices of us, our heirs and successors, appointed to take the assizes or jail delivery, keepers of the peace, and justices itinerant, and the institutes of us, our heirs and successors, to hear and determine, and other commissary justices of us, our heirs and successors, whatsoever forfeited, or to be forfeited, done or to be done, imposed or to be imposed, from or by any cause, by the chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, who shall be for that time, to the use of the said bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, to be asked, letted and demanded, without the occasion or hindrance of us, our heirs and successors, sheriffs, justices, and other commissary officers and ministers whatsoever, of us, our heirs and successors.

We have also granted, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors, henceforth for ever, may and shall have, to the proper use of them the bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, all and all manner of goods and chattels of all felons and fugitives, outlawed and waved, to be outlawed and to be waved, adjudged, condemned, and to be adjudged, attain, and happening to be attain, convicted and to be convicted, fled and to be sought after, for felony, murder, or petty treason, transgression, or other matter or cause whatsoever; and other forfeitures and offences before said, touching or concerning all and singular burgesles and inhabitants, residing and not residing within the borough aforesaid, and liberty and precinct of the same, and all other things whatsoever within the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, found out, and happening for the future to be found out; and that if any person that ought to lose his life or limbs for his offence, shall either fly, and will not stand to judgment, or shall commit any other crime, for which he ought to lose or forfeit his goods and chattels, wherefore justice ought to be done him, whether it be in our court, our heirs and successors, or in any other court whatsoever, his goods and chattels being, or henceforth for the future happening to be, within the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, shall be to the bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their heirs for ever; and that it may and shall be well and lawful for the same bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid and their successors, by the chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, who for that time shall be, or by any other or others in their name, without the hindrance of us, our heirs or successors, or any officers of our heirs and successors whatsoever, to put himself or themselves in seizure of the goods and chattels aforesaid, and them receive and keep for the use of the bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, although the same goods and chattels shall be first seized by us, or our heirs or successors, or by our or their servants.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles and community of the borough aforesaid and their successors, that the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, and their successors, may and shall have full authority and power to press for the service of us, our heirs and successors, at any of our wars, and musters, and trainings of our subjects within the town and parish of Tewksbury aforesaid, the limits and precincts of the same, as often and when they see fit, from time to time to be done, taken and overlooked, and to cause to be chastised and punished those that refuse the premises, or any of them, at the lawful command of the said bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, by imprisonment of their bodies, according to their discretion; and that no man possessing a place, or a commissioner of us, our heirs or successors, appointed or to be appointed to press, or train in the aforesaid county of Gloucester, may introduce himself in any pressing or training of men, abiding or inhabiting within the town and parish of Tewksbury aforesaid, limits and precinct of the same, nor enter into the town or parish aforesaid, limits or precinct of the same, to do or execute any thing that doth in any wise belong to his office of pressing or training, unless with the assent and consent of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid for the time being.

And farther, of our more ample special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, we will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesles, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that neither they the bailiffs and principal burgesles, and their assistants, the high steward, chamberlain, and their successors, and other their officers within the borough aforesaid, shall serve, nor any of them may be compelled or bound, nor either of them be compelled or bound any ways to come before us, our heirs and successors, the justices of the bench of us and our heirs the justices of us and our heirs, appointed keepers of the peace, to take the assizes and jail delivery, and the justices of us and our heirs, appointed to hear and determine divers felonies, transgressions and misdemeanors, or the justices of us and our heirs of the Nisi Prius, or the justices of us and our heirs assigned to survey the sea walls, ditches, gouts, sewers, paths, bridges and rinds, or other commissioners of us or our heirs, the high sheriff, escheator, coroner, high steward, marshal, or clerk of the market, of our household, or other officers and servants of us, our heirs and successors, nor may any or either of them in any assizes be put or impanelled on a jury, or other inquisition, without the borough aforesaid; nor may they or either of them forthwith forfeit to us, or our heirs, in any issue or amercement, on any occasion whatsoever, but thereof let them be quiet for ever unless they have, or either of them hath, lands and tenements without the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, for which he or they ought to be charged.

And we have farther given and granted, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgesses of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, may and shall have the return of all writs, precepts, bills and warrants of us, our heirs and successors, and also summons, citations and precepts of our exchequer, our heirs and successors, and the citations and precepts of our justices itinerant, as well at the forest pleas, as at the common pleas, or other offices whatsoever; and also attachments, as well of the pleas of the crown as others, coming from and happening in the said borough, liberty and precinct, or any part of them, and the execution of them, to be made by the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, so that no high-sheriff, under-sheriff, bailiff, or any servant of us, our heirs, and successors, may enter into our borough aforesaid, the suburbs or precinct of the same, for any thing or things belonging to his office to be done in this part, to be done, (sic) unless in defect of those bailiffs, or their successors, or their servants for the time being.

And we will also, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant and ordain, that henceforth for ever there be, and shall be in the said borough of Tewksbury, two burgesses of the parliament of us, our heirs and successors. And that the bailiffs, burgesses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, upon a writ of us, our heirs and successors, concerning the election of burgesses of parliament, to them directed, may and shall have power, authority and faculty of electing and nominating two discreet and honest men, to be burgesses of the parliament of us our heirs and successors, for the same borough, and to send the same burgesses so elected, at the charges and costs of the said bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors for the time being, into the parliament of us, our heirs and successors, where it shall be then held, in the same manner and form as is used and accustomed in any boroughs of our kingdom of England; which burgesses so elected and nominated, we will to be present, and to abide at the parliament of us, our heirs and successors, at the charges and costs of the said bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, during the time in which the parliament shall happen to be held, and they to have places and votes in the like manner and form as other burgesses of parliament for any other boroughs or borough whatsoever, within our kingdom of England do and have, or have been wont to do or have; and these burgesses in the parliaments of us, our heirs and successors, shall have their votes as well affirmative as negative, and shall there do and execute all and singular other matters, as any other burgesses or burgesses of our parliament, for all other boroughs or borough whatsoever, may or can have, do and execute, by reason or manner whatsoever.

And we farther will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors for ever, that they and their successors may and can have, hold, and keep in the borough aforesaid, yearly for ever, all and singular such wakes, fairs and markets in the same borough, as by the aforesaid charter made in the seventh year aforesaid of the late king James the first, or by any charters of our antecessors and predecessors to the same bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, or to their predecessors granted, before that time were granted, and which at or before the time of the surrender aforesaid, were lawfully held or used by the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, within the borough aforesaid, together with the Pye-Powder-Court, there held in the time of those wakes and fairs, and with all liberty and free custom of toll, [sic in copia] stallage, piveage, fines, amercements, and all other profits, commodities and emoluments whatsoever belonging, happening, proceeding or touching the same wake or fair, and Pye-Powder-Court, and with all other free customs and liberty whatsoever, to the same wake, fair and Pye-Powder-Court appertaining or belonging.

And we farther will and grant to the bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, henceforth for ever, be and shall be clerks of the market within the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that the bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them (of whom either of the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, we will to be one) may and shall have power and authority, from time to time, to elect, nominate, appoint and constitute so many and such, as well without the borough aforesaid as within that borough, limits or precincts of the same, inhabiting and abiding, to be burgesses of the said borough, as to the said bailiffs and principal burgesses of the borough aforesaid, or to the greater part of them, as aforesaid, for the publick profit of the said borough, shall seem more profitable, in the same manner and form, and with the same corporal oath, to be taken by every of the said burgesses so chosen and appointed, as the burgesses of that borough were heretofore wont to take within the said borough of Tewksbury; and that these burgesses of the borough aforesaid, and every of them, henceforth for ever, may and can perpetually, fully and peaceably possess and enjoy all liberties, privileges, franchises and immunities by either or any of our progenitors or predecessors, kings or queens of England, to the bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough of Tewksbury, or incorporated by any other name or names, before given and granted, at and before the time of the surrender aforesaid.

And farther, of our more plentiful and special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, we have given and granted, and for us our heirs and successors, by these presents do give and grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, full power, authority and jurisdiction, that the aforesaid bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, may and can have and exercise within the borough aforesaid, and liberty and precinct of the same, henceforth for ever, the punishing and correcting of all and singular drunkards, and all and singular harlots, whores, bawds, concubines, and all others whatsoever living lasciviously and incontinently; and also all and singular dishonestly or maliciously communicating, upon any occasion, whether they are scolds, abiding or inhabiting within the borough aforesaid, and liberty of the same, or are delinquents, as well by the verdict and presentment of twelve honest and lawful men of the borough aforesaid, for that time being, as by other lawful ways and means, to which said bailiffs for the time being, it shall seem to be most expedient.

And farther, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we have granted, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant, and give special and free liberty and faculty, power and authority, to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, to have, receive, and purchase to them and their successors for ever, the manors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, woods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions, and other hereditaments whatsoever, within our kingdom of England, or any where within our dominions, purchased of us, our heirs and successors, as of any other person or persons whatsoever, so that the same manors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions, and other hereditaments, so by them to be had, received, and purchased, above the aforesaid manor, borough and hundred of Tewksbury, and other the premises in these presents before mentioned, and other manors, lands, tenements and hereditaments purchased before the making of the aforesaid letters patents, in the seventh year of king James the first, by the same bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, or their predecessors, by any name or names incorporated or purchased, by virtue of any incorporation, do not exceed in the whole, the clear yearly value of 200 l. per ann. besides all charges. And we do give also, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, to every of our subjects, our heirs and successors, special and free liberty, power and authority, that they, or either, or any of them, may give, grant or sell messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions, services and other hereditaments whatsoever, to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors; so that all the aforesaid manors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions, services and other hereditaments, to the same bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, by virtue of these presents so to be given, granted, leased and aliened, as aforesaid, do not exceed in the whole the clear yearly value of 200 l. per ann. besides all charges and reprises.

And we farther will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do give, grant, confirm, ratify, restore and approve to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgesses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, all and all manner of liberties, franchises, immunities, exceptions, privileges, acquitances, tances, jurisdictions, lands, tenements, wafes, funds, commons and hereditaments whatsoever, which the bailiffs, burgeses and community of the borough aforesaid, or any of their successors, by any names or name, or by any incorporation, or under pretence of any incorporation, in time of making the aforesaid charter, made in the seventh year of the aforesaid king James the first, had, possess'd, used or enjoyed, or ought to have, possess, use or enjoy, from an hereditary state, by reason or under pretence of any charters or letters patent, by any of our progenitors or predecessors, kings or queens of England, however before then made, confirmed or granted, or by any other lawful means, right, title, custom, use or prescription before then lawfully used, had or accustomed, although the same, or any of them have not heretofore been used, or have been abused, or ill used, or discontinued; and although the same, or either, or any of them are, and have been forfeited, or lost, or surrendered, to be had, possessed, exercised, used and enjoyed by the aforesaid bailiffs, burgeses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors for ever, and to restore, and pay therefore to us, our heirs and successors, yearly, so much, so many, such, the same, and the like rents, services, sums of money and demands whatsoever, as for the same were heretofore wont to be paid, or they ought to pay to us or our predecessors. Wherefore we will, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, that the aforesaid bailiffs, burgeses and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, may fully and entirely have, possess, use and enjoy all liberties, free customs, privileges, authority, jurisdictions and acquittances aforesaid, according to the tenor and effect of these our letters patent, without the occasion or hindrance of us, or any of our heirs or successors, nilling that the same bailiffs, burgeses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, or any, or either of them, by reason of the premises, or either of them, by us, our heirs, our justices, sheriffs, escheators, or other bailiffs or servants of us, our heirs and successors whatsoever, be occasioned, molested, vexed, grieved, or disturbed in any thing; willing, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors commanding, as well the commissioners for our treasury, the treasurer, chancellor and barons of the exchequer, of us, our heirs and successors, as our attorney and solicitor general for the time being, and every of them, and all other officers and servants whatsoever of us, our heirs and successors, that neither they, nor either, nor any of them, may prosecute or continue, or shall cause to be prosecuted or continued, any writ or summons of any warrant, or any other our writ, writs or process whatsoever, against the bailiffs, burgeses and community of the borough aforesaid, or either or any of them, for any causes, things or matters, offences, claims or usurpations, whether of any of them, by them or any of them due, claimed, attempted, used, had or usurped before the day of the making of these presents. Willing also, that the bailiffs, burgeses and community of the borough aforesaid, or either of them, be no ways molested or hindered by either, or any justices, officers and servants aforesaid, in or for due use, claim, usurpation or abuse of any liberties, franchises or jurisdiction, before the day of the making of these our letters patent, or be compelled to answer to any, or either of these things.

And farther, for the better education and instruction of boys and youth within the same borough, liberty and precinct thereof, in good arts, learning, virtue and education, perpetually to be educated and informed, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we have willed, granted and ordained, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do will, grant and ordain, that from henceforth for ever there be, and shall be within the borough aforesaid, liberty and precinct of the same, one grammar school, which shall be called the free grammar school of William Ferrers, citizen and mercer of London, in Tewksbury in the county of Gloucester, and that school, by the name of the free grammar school of the aforesaid William Ferrers, of Tewksbury in the county of Gloucester, we do erect, ordain, create, found, and firmly establish by these presents. And that the free grammar school aforesaid be, and do consist of one master and one usher, and scholars, in the same school, to be taught and instructed according to the ordination and constitution in these presents below specified and declared. And that our foresaid intention may better take effect, and that the manors, messuages, lands, tenements, rents, reversions, hereditaments, annuities, goods and chattels, and other profits and hereditaments, to be granted, assigned and appointed, to the sustenance of the free grammar school aforesaid, may be better governed, for continuation of the same school, we will, grant and ordain, that the aforesaid bailiffs, justices of the peace, chamberlain of the borough aforesaid, and town clerk in Tewksbury aforesaid, and their successors, henceforth for ever, shall be, and be called, governors of the goods, possessions and revenues of the aforesaid free grammar school of William Ferrers, in Tewksbury in the county of Gloucester.

And farther, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we do will, ordain and establish by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, that the aforesaid bailiffs, justices, chamberlain and town-clerk of the aforesaid borough of Tewksbury for the time being, and their successors, for ever henceforth be, and shall be, one body corporate and politick of itself, in deed, fact and name, by the name of governors of the goods, possessions and revenues of the free grammar school of William Ferrers, in Tewksbury in the county of Gloucester; and them, and their successors, into one body corporate and politick, really and to the full, for us, our heirs and successors, we do incorporate, erect, create, ordain, make and establish by these presents; and that by the same name of governors of the goods, possessions, and revenues of the free grammar-school of William Ferrers, in Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, in all future times they shall be known, called and nominated, and shall have a perpetual succession.

And we farther will and ordain, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid governors, and their successors, that they and their successors, from henceforth for ever, may have a common seal to serve for their business touching the free-grammar-school aforesaid, according to the tenor and true intent of these our letters patent; and that it may and shall be well and lawful for them and their successors, to break, change, and make new that seal, from time to time, at their pleasure, as it shall seem fit to them to be done; and that they and their successors, by the name of governors of the goods, possessions, and revenues of the free grammar-school of William Ferrers, in Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, be and shall be perpetually persons fit and capable in the law, to have, purchase, receive and possess, to them and their successors, the goods and chattels, and also manors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, feedings, rents, reversions, services, rectories, tithes, and other possessions and hereditaments whatsoever, to the sustenance and maintenance of the said grammar-school, as well from us, our heirs and successors, as from any other person or persons whatsoever, in manner and form in these presents below specified; and that the aforesaid governors and their successors, by the name of governors of the goods, possessions, and revenues of the free grammar-school of William Ferrers, in Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, may and can plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended, answer and be answered, in all and singular causes, complaints, actions, suits and demands whatsoever, of whatsoever sort, nature or kind they be, in whatsoever places and courts of us, our heirs and successors, and before whatsoever judges and justices of us, our heirs and successors, or any of them, within our kingdom of England, and to do and execute all other facts and deeds, by the name aforesaid, as other our subjects of our kingdom of England, persons fit and capable in the law, within our kingdom of England, do or may do, in the places and courts aforesaid, and before the justices aforesaid.

And we farther will, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant liberty, power and authority to the aforesaid governors and their successors, to elect, nominate and appoint, and that they may and can elect and appoint one honest man, learned, and fearing God, to be master of the free grammar-school aforesaid, and one other man, discreet and fit, to be usher of the same school; which master and usher, so as aforesaid elected, nominated and appointed, shall be and continue, and either of them shall be and continue in their offices aforesaid, during the good pleasure of those the governors and their successors, for the time being; and that as often as it shall happen that any master or usher of the free grammar-school aforesaid does die, or be removed from the office and place aforesaid, that then and so often, it shall and may be well and lawful for the aforesaid governors, and their successors, to elect, nominate, and appoint one other honest man, learned and fearing God, in the place of the master, so dead or removed from his office; and also one other honest and fit man in the like place of the usher, so happening to die or be removed; and that every master, so as aforesaid nominated and appointed, shall be and continue in the office or place of master or usher of the same free-grammar-school, during the good pleasure of those governors of the goods, possessions, and revenues of the free grammar-school aforesaid, and their successors; and that the same governors of the goods, possessions, and revenues of the said free grammar-school of William Ferrers, of Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, for the time being, and their successors, shall and may make fit and wholesome statutes, ordinances and writings, touching and concerning the nomination, election, ordination, government, punishment, expulsion, removal and direction of the said free grammar-school, the master and usher of the same school, and the scholars in the same school being; and concerning and touching the ordination, government, dismissal, location, disposition, recovery, defence, and preservation of the manors, messuages, lands, tenements, possessions hereditaments, goods and chattels, to be given, granted, or assigned to the maintenance of the aforesaid grammar-school. Which Statutes and ordinances so to be made, we will and ordain, and for us, our heirs and successors, do command, from time to time, inviolably to be observed for ever. So nevertheless that the aforesaid statutes and ordinances, nances, so as aforesaid to be made, or any of them are not repugnant or contrary to the laws, statutes, rights or customs of this our kingdom of England.

And farther, of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we have given and granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant to the aforesaid governors of the goods, possessions and revenues of the aforesaid free grammar-school of the aforesaid William Ferrers, in Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, and their successors, liberty, special free-will, power, faculty and authority to have, purchase, receive and possess, to them and their successors for ever, for the perpetual sustenance and maintenance of the free grammar school aforesaid, manors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, woods, under-woods, rectories, rents, reversions and services, and other hereditaments whatsoever, within our kingdom of England, or any where within our dominions, as well from our heirs and successors, as from any other person or persons whatsoever, so that the same manors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions, services, and other hereditaments, do not exceed in the whole the clear yearly value of 30 l. per An. besides all charges and reprises.

And we do also give and grant, for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, to every of our subjects, our heirs and successors whatsoever, special and free liberty and power, faculty and authority, that they and every of them may give, grant, sell, lease, or alien manors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, feedings, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, re-versions, services, and other hereditaments whatsoever, to the aforesaid governors of the goods, possessions, and revenues of the aforesaid free grammar-school of William Ferrers, in Tewksbury, in the county of Gloucester, and their successors, so nevertheless that all the aforesaid manors messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, feedings, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions and services, and other hereditaments, so as aforesaid to be given, granted, leased or aliened to the same governors and their successors, by virtue of these presents, do not exceed in the whole the clear yearly value of 30 l. besides burthens and reprises.

We will also, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, burgeses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that these our letters patent, and all and singular things in them contained, shall stand and be good, firm, valid, sufficient and effectual in the law, and that all and singular things in these presents expressed and specified, may be expounded, declared, construed, interpreted and adjudged, as well to the sense and intention, as to the words, most kindly, favourably, graciously, and for the profit and benefit of those bailiffs, burgeses, and community of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, towards us, our heirs and successors.

In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents.

Witness our self at Westminster, the thirteenth day of July, in the thirteenth year of our reign.

NUMBER XXVII.

The CHARTER of the Borough of CHIPPING CAMPDEN.

JAMES, by the grace of God, king of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Whereas our borough of Chipping Campden, in our county of Gloucester, is a very ancient and populous borough, and the burgeses and inhabitants of that borough have from time out of mind, had, used, and enjoyed divers liberties, franchises, immunities, and preeminences, as well by virtue of divers letters patents, and charters of divers of our progenitors and ancestors, late kings of England, made and granted heretofore to them and their predecessors, by the name of bailiffs and burgeses of Chipping Campden, in the county of Gloucester, or by what other name or names of incorporation soever heretofore made and granted, which charters and letters patents, by negligence or misfortune, are lost, as also by reason and colour of divers prescriptions, usages and customs used and practised in that borough. And whereas our beloved subjects, the burgeses and inhabitants of that borough have humbly besought us, that we would, on this occasion, exhibit and extend our royal grace and magnificence to the burgeses and inhabitants of that borough: And that for the better regulation, government and improvement of that borough, as to us shall seem expedient, we would vouchsafe, by our letters patents, to make, reduce and create the said burgeses and inhabitants of that borough of Chipping Campden (by whatsoever name or names of incorporation they have been heretofore incorporated, or whether heretofore incorporated or not) into one body corporate and politick, by the name of bailiffs and burgeses of the borough of Chipping Campden, in the county of Gloucester. We therefore being willing that for ever hereafter one certain and undoubted manner of and for keeping the peace, and regulating and governing our people there, shall be constantly observed in that borough; and that the said borough may for ever hereafter be a borough of peace and quietness, to the fear and terror of evil men, and the encouragement of the good: And that our peace and the due course of justice may and shall be there the better conserved: And hoping that the said burgeses and inhabitants of the said borough and their successors will, in consideration of their enjoying, by our grant, more ample liberties and privileges, think themselves more especially and strongly obliged to pay and perform all the services, as lies in their power, to us, our heirs and successors, have, of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, willed, ordained constituted, declared and granted, and by these presents do, for us our heirs and successors, will, ordain, constitute, declare and grant, that our said borough of Chipping Campden, in the county of Gloucester, may and shall be for ever hereafter a free borough of itself, and that the burgeses and inhabitants of the said borough, and their successors, may, and shall be for ever hereafter, by virtue of these presents, one body corporate and politick, in deed, fact and name, by the name of bailiffs and burgeses of the borough of Chipping Campden, in the county of Gloucester. And do by these presents, really and fully, for ourselves, our heirs and successors, erect, create, make, ordain, constitute, confirm and declare them one body corporate and politick, in deed, fact, and name, by the name of bailiffs and burgeses of the borough of Chipping Campden, in the county of Gloucester. And that they shall, by the same name, have a perpetual succession.

And that, by the name of bailiffs and burgeses of the borough of Chipping Campden, in the county of Gloucester, they may and shall, at all times, for ever hereafter, be persons qualified and capable in law to have, purchase, receive and possess manors, messuages, lands, tenements, liberties, privileges, jurisdictions and other hereditaments, of what nature, kind, or sort soever, to themselves and their successors, in fee and for ever, or for the term of a year or years, or in any other manner; and also goods, chattels, and all other things of what kind, names, nature, quality and sort soever they shall be. And also to give, grant, demise, alienate, assign and dispose lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and to do and execute all other and singular acts and deeds, by the name aforesaid.

And that, by the same name of bailiffs and burgeses of the borough of Chipping Campden, in the county of Gloucester, they may and be empowered to plead and be impleaded, answer and be answered, defend, and be defended, in any courts, streets and places, and by the judges, justices and other persons and officers whomsoever, of us, our heirs and successors, in all and singular actions, pleas, suits, complaints, causes, matters and demands, of whatsoever kind, name, nature, quality and sort they may or shall be, in the same manner and form as our other liege people of our kingdom of England, being persons qualified and capable in law, or any other body corporate and politick within our kingdom of England, can and may have, purchase, receive, enjoy, retain, give, grant, demise, alienate, assign and impose, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended, answer and be answered, do, permit or execute.

And that the bailiffs and burgeses of the said borough, and their successors, shall for ever have a common seal for the execution of all manner of causes, and matter, of them and their successors. And that it may and shall be lawful for the said bailiffs and burgeses, and their successors, from time to time, to break, change and make anew that Seal, as to them shall seem best to be done.

And farther we will, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the said bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that there may and shall be chosen fourteen of the burgeses of the said borough, in form hereafter mentioned in these presents, who shall be and be nominated capital burgeses of the said borough, of which fourteen capital burgeses two from time to time shall be elected and nominated, in form hereafter mentioned in these presents, to be bailiffs of the borough aforesaid. And that in like manner there may and shall be chosen within the said borough, twelve of the burgeses of the said borough, in form hereafter mentioned in these presents, who shall be and be nominated inferior burgeses of the said borough, of common council of the same; which fourteen capital burgeses, and twelve inferior burgeses, for the time being, shall be of the common council of the same borough. And that the rest of the aforesaid fourteen capital burgeses of the said borough, for the time being, not being in the offices of bailiffs of the said borough, and the aforesaid twelve inferior burgeses of the faid borough, for the time being, shall from time to time be aiding and assisting to the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being, in all causes, things, affairs, and matters touching or any way concerning the aforesaid borough.

And farther, of our abundant grace, we will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgeses of the said borough, and their successors, that the bailiffs and capital burgeses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them (whereof we will that the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being be two) shall have, and by these presents have, full authority, power and faculty of compiling, constituting, ordaining, making and establishing, from time to time, such and such manner of laws, statutes, ordinances and constitutions, as in sound discretion shall seem to them, or the major part of them (whereof we will that the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being be two) to be good, profitable wholesome and necessary, for the good government and regulation of the bailiffs and burgeses of the said borough, and all other and singular the other burgeses, officers, ministers, artificers, inhabitants and residents whomsoever, within the said borough for the time being. And for declaration in what manner and order the bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, and all other and singular the officers, ministers, artificers, inhabitants and residents within the said borough, shall, for the time being, behave, demean, and use themselves in their offices, ministries, trades and businesses, within the said borough and liberties of the same, for the farther publick good, common advantage, and good government of the borough aforesaid, and victualling of the same. And also for the better preservation, ordering, disposing, letting and demising the lands, possessions, revenues and hereditaments given, granted or assigned, and for the future to be given, granted and assigned to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgeses of the said borough, or their successors, and other things and causes whatsoever, touching, or any way concerning the said borough, or the state, rights and interests of the same.

And that the bailiffs and capital burgeses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, (of whom we will that the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being be two) as oft as they shall compile, make, ordain or establish such laws, statutes, ordinances and constitutions, in form aforesaid, may and shall be impowered to make, ordain, limit and provide such pains, punishments and penalties, by corporal imprisonment, or by fines and amerciements, or both of them, against and upon all delinquents, against such statutes, laws, ordinances, constitutions, or any of them, or any other punishments, as to them, the bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them (of whom we will that the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being, be two) shall seem most necessary, reasonable and requisite to be made, for the observation of the said laws, ordinances and constitutions; and levy and receive the said fines and amerciements to the benefit and use of the said bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, without impeachment of us, our heirs or successors, or any of the officers or ministers of us, our heirs or successors, and without any account to be rendered thereof to us, our heirs and successors, which all and singular laws, ordinances, statutes and constitutions, so as aforesaid to be made, we will to be observed under the penalties therein to be contained. Nevertheless, so that such laws, ordinances, statutes and constitutions, fines and amerciements shall be reasonable, and not repugnant or contrary to the laws, statutes, customs or rights of our kingdom of England.

And for the better execution of our will and grant in this behalf, we have assigned, nominated, created, constituted and made, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate, create, constitute and make our beloved John Price gent. and William Dampart, yeoman, burgeses of the said borough, to be the two first modern bailiffs of the said borough, to be continued in the said offices of bailiffs of the said borough, from the date of these presents to Wednesday immediately before the feast of St. Michael the archangel then next ensuing, and from thenceforth until two other of the capital burgeses of the said borough shall be duly elected, deputed and sworn to the said offices, according to the ordinances and provisions in these presents hereafter expressed and declared, if the said John Price and William Dampart shall so long live. Also we have assigned, nominated and constituted, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate and constitute the above-named John Price, William Dampart, and our beloved Thomas Bassonals, butcher, Anthony Garret, John Jenk, William Jenk, Thomas Eddon, Thomas Clerkson, Henry Overbury, Roger Hantson, Thomas Read, John Freeman, Thomas Clerk and Richard Coleman, to be the first and present fourteen capital burgeses of the said borough, to be continued in the said offices of capital burgeses of the said borough during their natural lives, unless, in the mean times, they or any of them shall be removed from their offices for male-administration or misdemeanor in the same, or some other reasonable cause.

Also we have assigned, nominated, created and constituted, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do assign, constitute, name and make our beloved Robert Bompas, John Higgins, Thomas Joyce, Laurence Cross, Tristram Wane, Richard Garret, William White, John Tiffoc, John Turner, John Trevis, John Wilson and George Freeman, burgeses of the said borough, to be the first and present twelve inferior burgeses of the common council of the said borough, to be continued in the said offices during their natural lives, unless, in the mean time, they or any of them shall be removed for male-administration, or misdemeanor in their said offices, or for any reasonable cause.

And farther we will, and by these presents do, for us, our heirs and successors, give and grant to the above-named bailiffs and burgeses of the said borough, and their successors, that the said fourteen capital burgeses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the greater part of them, may and shall from time to time, for ever hereafter, have power and authority yearly, and every year, upon the Wednesday which shall first and immediately happen to be before the feast of St. Michael the archangel, to chuse and nominate, and that they may and shall chuse and nominate two of themselves, the aforesaid capital burgeses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, who shall be bailiffs of the said borough for one whole year thereafter next ensuing; and that they who in form aforesaid shall be elected and nominated into the offices of bailiffs of the said borough, before they are admitted to execute their offices, shall take their corporal oaths before the last bailiffs their predecessors, the steward, and the rest of the capital burgeses of the said borough, or as many of them as shall be then present, well, and truly and faithfully to execute the said offices in all things thereunto belonging. And that after taking such oaths, they may and shall from thenceforth execute the offices of bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for one whole year next ensuing.

And moreover we will, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs, and burgeses, of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that if it shall happen that the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, or either of them, at any time within one year after they shall be elected and sworn, so as aforesaid, to the offices of bailiffs of the said borough, shall die, or be removed from their offices, that then and as often it shall and may be lawful for the capital burgeses of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, (or the major part of them) to chuse and depute one or two others of the aforesaid capital burgeses of the borough into the offices of bailiff or bailiffs of the said borough, according to the ordinances and provisions in these presents declared. And that he or they so elected or deputed into the office or offices of bailiff or bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, shall have and exercise the said offices during the residue of the year, having first taken the corporal oaths in form aforesaid, and so as often as the case shall so happen.

And farther we will, and by these presents, for us our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgeses of the said borough, and their successors, that whensoever it shall happen that any one or more of the aforesaid capital or inferior burgeses of common council of the borough aforesaid shall die, or for some reasonable cause be removed from their offices of capital or inferior burgeses of common council of the borough aforesaid; which said burgeses or any of them, our will is, shall for misdemeanor be removed from their offices at the discretion of the bailiffs and capital burgeses of the said borough, for the time being, or the major part of them, that then, and as often, it shall and may be lawful for the surviving and remaining capital burgeses of the borough aforesaid, or the major part of them, to elect, nominate and depute one other, or more, of the burgeses of the borough aforesaid, in the room of him or them of the capital or inferior burgeses of the common council of the borough aforesaid, so happening to die or be removed, for supplying the aforesaid number of fourteen capital burgeses, or twelve inferior burgeses, of common council of the borough aforesaid, and that he or they so elected and deputed, as aforesaid, to the offices of capital or inferior burgeses of the common council of the said borough, having taken their corporal oaths before the bailiffs and steward of the said borough for the time being, well and truly and faithfully to execute the said offices, shall be of the number of the aforesaid fourteen capital burgeses, or twelve inferior burgeses of the common council of the borough aforesaid, and so from time to time as the case shall so happen.

And farther we will, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgeses of the said borough and their successors, that they and their successors, for ever hereafter, may and shall have in the borough aforesaid one person, discreet and learned in the laws of England, chosen and nominated in form following in these presents, who shall be, and be nominated steward of the borough aforesaid; and we have assigned, nominated, ordained, constituted and made,

and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do assign, nominate, constitute and make our beloved subject Nicholas Overbury, esq; to be the first and present steward of the said borough, during the pleasure of the bailiffs and capital burgesles of the borough aforesaid, or the major part of them, (of whom we will that the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being be two) or until any other shall be duly elected, deputed and sworn to the office of steward of the aforesaid borough, by the bailiffs and capital burgesles of the same for the time being, or the major part of them, (of whom we will that the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being be two) and we will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the said bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that whensoever it shall happen that the office of steward of the said borough shall be vacant, by death, surrender, removal, or any other manner whatsoever, that then, and as often, it may and shall be lawful for the aforesaid bailiffs and capital burgesles of the said borough, for the time being, or the major part of them, (of whom we will that the bailiffs of the said borough for the time being be two) to elect and depute one other person, discreet and learned in the laws of England, to be steward of the said borough; and that he being so elected and deputed, in form aforesaid, and having taken his corporal oath well and faithfully to execute the office of steward of the said borough, in all things touching or any ways concerning that office, before the bailiffs, and as many of the capital burgesles as will then be present, may and shall execute and exercise the office of steward of that borough, during the pleasure of the bailiffs and capital burgesles of the said borough, or the major part of them, (of whom we will that the bailiffs of the said borough be two) and this so often as the case so happens.

And furthermore we will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant unto the aforesaid bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors from henceforth for ever, have and hold, and may and have power to have and to hold, within the borough aforesaid, one court of record, on Friday every fourth week yearly, before the bailiffs and steward of the borough aforesaid for the time being, or a sufficient deputy of the same steward for the time being; and that in the court they be enabled, and may hold by plaint in the same court, to levy all and all manner of pleas, causes, suits and demands personal, concerning whatsoever trespasses, by force of arms, and other personal actions whatsoever, within the borough aforesaid, the liberties and precincts of the same, moved, arising or committed, or for the future may be moved, arise, had, or committed, and of all and all manner of debts, pleas on the case, frauds, compositions, covenants, detainers of writings, muniments and chattels, taking and detaining of beasts and cattle, and other contracts whatsoever, within the borough aforesaid, the liberties and precincts thereof arising, or that for the future may happen to arise, although the same trespasses, debts, compositions, covenants, frauds, detainers or other contracts, do amount to, or not amount to, or exceed the sum or value of forty shillings, so that they do not exceed the sum of six pounds, thirteen shillings and four-pence; and that such pleas, plaints, suits and actions, shall be there heard and determined before the said bailiffs and steward of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the sufficient deputy of the steward for the time being, by such and such like process, means and manners, according to the law and custom of our kingdom of England, and what have been consonant unto our law, and that in as ample manner and form, as has been used and accustomed in any other court of record, in any city, borough or town corporate, within this our kingdom of England.

And that the bailiffs and capital burgesles of the borough aforesaid for the time being, or the major part of them, (of whom we will that the bailiffs for the time being shall be two) from time to time have, and shall have power and authority in full court aforesaid to choose, nominate, appoint, admit and swear, so many discreet, experienced and fit men to be attorneys, and to attend the court of record aforesaid, as often as their presence, ministry and service shall be required, as to the aforesaid bailiffs and capital burgesles of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, or the major part of them, (of whom we will the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid for the time being shall be two) shall seem necessary to be chosen and nominated, as is used in any other courts of record within this our kingdom of England.

And moreover we will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that from henceforth for ever, there may and shall be two officers, which shall be called serjeants at mace, in the borough aforesaid, for proclamation, arrest and execution of process, mandates, and other business belonging to the office of serjeants at mace, in the borough aforesaid, its limits, bounds and precincts, and from time to time to be performed and executed; which serjeants at mace shall be appointed, nominated and chosen by the aforesaid bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, and shall be to attend from time to time upon the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid for the time being; and that the aforesaid serjeants at mace, so to be chosen and nominated, shall in due manner be sworn to exercise their offices aforesaid before the bailiffs and steward of the borough aforesaid, or the deputy of the same steward; and after such oath so taken, they may and shall have power to exercise and enjoy those offices, during the pleasure of the bailiffs of the said borough. And that the aforesaid serjeants at mace, in the borough aforesaid, to be deputed, shall bear and carry gilt or silver maces, engraved and adorned with the ensign of our arms, before the bailiffs of the borough aforesaid, for the time being, every where within the said borough, suburbs, liberties and precincts of the same.

And farthermore we will, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they and their successors from henceforth for ever, have, hold and keep, and may have power to have, hold and keep yearly for ever, in the borough aforesaid, two fairs, to be held every year in the said borough; the first of the said fairs to begin on the feast of St. Andrew the apostle, and to continue all that feast, and the other fair of the two fairs to begin in and upon Ash-Wednesday, and to continue all that day, together with a pye-powder court, to be there held in the time of the said fairs, with all liberties and free customs, tolls, stallage, picages, fines, amerancements, and all other profits, commodities and emoluments whatsoever, belonging or happening to, arising from or touching such fairs, or pye-powder courts, with all other free customs and liberties whatsoever, to such kind of fairs and pye-powder courts belonging or appertaining, but so that the said fairs be not to the damage of any near adjacent neighbouring fairs.

And farthermore, out of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, we have given and granted, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, special licence, free and lawful power, faculty and authority, of having, purchasing, receiving and possessing, to them and their successors for ever, to the use and benefit of a free grammar-school within the borough aforesaid, and the poor inhabitants of the said borough, or any other business necessary to be done in and about the borough aforesaid, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, feedings, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions, and other hereditaments whatsoever, within our kingdom of England, or elsewhere within our dominions, as well of us, our heirs and successors, as of any other person or persons, which are not immediately held in capite, nor by knights service from us, our heirs and successors, so that the same messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, feedings, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions and other hereditaments, do not in the whole exceed the yearly value of forty pounds, above all charges and repairs, the statute of mortmain, or any other statute, act, ordinance or provision heretofore had, made, ordained or provided, or any other thing, cause or matter whatsoever to the contrary hereof in any wise notwithstanding.

We give also and grant for us, our heirs and successors, by these presents, to every subject or subjects of ours, our heirs and successors, licence, free and lawful power, faculty and authority, that they or any of them may have power to give, set, devise or alienate, to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, feedings, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions and hereditaments whatsoever, which are not held of us, our heirs and successors in capite, or by knights service, so that the same messuages, lands, tenements, meadows, pastures, feedings, woods, underwoods, rectories, tithes, rents, reversions and other hereditaments, so to the same bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, by virtue of these presents to be given, granted, devised or alienated, do not exceed, in the whole, the clear yearly value of forty pounds by the year, above all charges and repairs; the statute of mortmain, or any other thing, cause or matter whatsoever heretofore had, made, set forth, ordained or provided to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.

And farthermore out of our more abundant special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, we have granted and confirmed, and by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do grant and confirm to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, all and all manner of liberties, franchises, exemptions, discharges, jurisdictions, customs, privileges, lands, tenements and hereditaments, which the bailiffs and burgesles of the borough aforesaid now have, hold, enjoy and use, or ought to have, hold, use and enjoy, or that some or any of them or their predecessors, by whatsoever name or names, or by whatsoever incorporation, or by pretence of whatsoever incorporation, have, had, used or enjoyed, or ought to have, had, held, used, enjoyed, or hath, had, used and enjoyed by reason or pretence of any charter or letters patents heretofore confirmed or granted, any manner of way, by any of our progenitors or ancestors, or by any other lawful means, right, use or presumption heretofore had and used, to have and hold and enjoy to the foresaid bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, and their successors for ever; yielding and paying to us, our heirs and successors, such manner of and such like rents, services and sums of money, which of right have been accustomed heretofore to be due and payable therefore to us, our progenitors or predecessors.

We will also and grant to the foresaid bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, and their successors, that they have, hold, use and enjoy, and may have power fully to have, hold, use and enjoy for ever, all the liberties, free customs, privileges, jurisdictions and discharges aforesaid, according to the tenor and effect of these our letters patents, without any let or hindrance of us, our heirs or successors whomsoever, not being willing that the same bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid shall, by reason of the premises or any of them, be let, molested, vexed or aggrieved, or in any wise disturbed by us, our heirs or successors, or by the justices, sheriffs, eschetors, and other bailiffs or ministers of us, our heirs and successors whatsoever. Willing, and by these presents strictly charging and commanding, as well the treasurer, chancellor, and barons of our exchequer, and of our heirs and successors, and all and singular others our justices, and of our heirs and successors, as our attorney and solicitor general, for the time being, and every of them, and all other our officers and ministers whatsoever, that neither they nor any nor either of them shall prosecute or continue, or any of them cause to be prosecuted or continued, any writ or summons of quo warranto, or any other writ or process of ours whatsoever, against the aforesaid bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, or either or any of them, for any causes, things or matters, offences, claims or usurpations, or any of them, by them or any of them due, claimed, attempted, used, had or usurped before the day of the making of these.

Willing also that the bailiffs and burgeses of that borough, or any of them, shall not by any of our justices, officers or ministers aforesaid, in or for any debt, usage, claim, or abuse, liberties, franchises or jurisdictions, within the borough aforesaid, the suburbs and precincts of the same, before the making of these our letters patents, be molested or disturbed, or be compelled to answer to them or any of them.

Saving nevertheless always to Anthony Smith, esq; his heirs and assigns, all and all manner of such, the same, and such like liberties, franchises, privileges, immunities, preeminences and jurisdictions whatsoever, which the same Anthony Smith, at the time of the making of these presents, lawfully had, used and enjoyed, or ought lawfully to have, use or enjoy, within the foresaid borough of Chipping Campden, in as ample manner and form as if these letters patents had never been made, any thing in these presents to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

We will also, and by these presents do grant to the aforesaid bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, that they have and shall have these our letters patents, made and sealed in due manner, under our great seal of England, without yielding or paying great or small fine or fee to us in the hanaper of our chancery, or elsewhere, to our use in any manner, notwithstanding express mention of the true yearly value, or any other value, or certainty of the premises or any of them, or any other gifts or grants by us, or any of our ancestors or progenitors, to the foresaid bailiffs and burgeses of the borough aforesaid, before these times, in these presents does not appear, or any other statute, act, ordinance, provision, proclamation or restriction to the contrary hereof heretofore had, made, set forth, ordained or provided, or any other thing, cause or matter whatsoever in any wise notwithstanding.

In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents. Witness ourself at Westminster the thirteenth day of June, in the third year of our reign over England, France, and Ireland, and Scotland, 38.

By Writ of the Privy Seal, &c.

NUMBER XXVIII.

STATUTES and ORDERS, for the better Rule and Government of the CATHEDRAL CHURCH of GLOUCESTER, appointed and prescribed by the Command of King HENRY the Eighth, in the Thirty-sixth Year of his Reign.

HENRY the Eighth, by the grace of God, king of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, and supreme head upon earth of the church or England and Ireland: To all Sons of Holy Mother the church, to whom this present writing shall come greeting:

Whereas it has seemed good unto us, and to our nobles, and to our whole senate, stiled the Parliament, being influenced, as we trust, by God himself, to suppress and abolish the monasteries dispersed throughout the kingdom for their many and great enormities, and for divers other good causes and reasons, to transfer them to better uses. We therefore, judging it more conformable to the divine will, and more christian-like, that the pure worship of God and the holy gospel of Christ should be diligently and sincerely preached in those places, where ignorance and superstition had before prevailed; and that the youth of our kingdoms should be instructed in good literature, for the greater increase of the christian faith and piety; and that the poor be charitably relieved, have erected and constituted in the place of those monasteries divers churches, whereof some we will to be called Cathedral Churches, and others Collegiate Churches. For the better rule and government whereof, we have caused the following laws and statutes to be prescribed, which the deans and canons of both orders, and other officers, children, and the poor who are of, and belong to the said churches, ought to submit unto and obey, and be ruled and governed by the same, as if decreed and ordained by ourselves. Which if they shall observe, will produce, as we trust in God, a great increase of true piety in this kingdom; and then we shall not be deceived or disappointed in our expectation and good wishes, who have erected those churches for the honour of Almighty God, and the increase of the christian faith, and have adorned the same with divers orders and degrees of officers.

CHAPTER I.

The whole Number of those who are to be maintained in the Cathedral Church of Gloucester.

In the first place, we decree and ordain, that there be for ever in the said church one dean, six canons, six minor-canons, whereof one shall be a sacrist, another shall be deacon, another sub-deacon; six lay-clerks, one master of the choristers, eight choristers, two masters to instruct children in the grammar, whereof one shall be the head master, the other the under master; four poor people to be maintained at the charges of the said church; two under sacrists, two door-keepers, who shall also be virgers; one butler, one cook, one under cook.

All who, according to this fixed number, shall in their several ranks and orders serve in this church, and punctually obey our statutes and orders.

CHAPTER II.

Of the Qualification of the Dean.

We decree and ordain, That the dean shall be in priests orders, of a good life and reputation, and not only learned and skilful in sciences, but have also been honoured with a degree of learning, that is, he shall be either a doctor in divinity, or bachelor in divinity, or doctor of law. But whensoever the office of dean shall hereafter become void by death, resignation, deprivation or cession, or by any other means, we will that such person shall be dean, and be so accepted, and shall enjoy the office of dean in all respects, whom we or our successors shall nominate, elect and prefer under our letters patents, to be sealed under the great seal of us or our successors, and shall think fit to present to the bishop of Gloucester. Which said dean so nominated, elected and presented, and having been instituted by the bishop, the canons for the time being shall accept and admit for dean of the cathedral church of Gloucester.

And the dean, upon such his admission, before he shall take upon him any government in the church, or concern himself in any affairs thereunto belonging, shall take an oath in this form:

THE DEAN'S OATH.

I. N. who am elected and instituted dean of this cathedral church, do call God to witness, and do swear upon the holy evangelists, that I will, to the best of my power, well and truly rule and govern this church, according to the statutes and ordinances of the same, so far as they agree with God's word, and the laws of this realm. And that I will well and justly preserve and keep, and cause to be preserved and kept by others, all the goods, lands and tenements, the rents and possessions, rights and liberties and privileges, and all other things moveable and immoveable, saving the bare use of them; and all other profits belonging to the said church. These, and all other the ordinances of king Henry the Eighth, our founder, as far as they concern myself, I will diligently procure to be observed. So help me God, and the holy evangelists.

We moreover will, That the dean and canons, and other officers of our church, before admission, do take the oath of succession and supremacy, according to the statutes of the realm in this case provided.

C H A P. III.

Of the Office of Dean.

Whereas it behoves a dean to be vigilant, (like the eye in the body, which takes care of the rest of its members) we will and ordain that the dean, for the time being, shall with all diligence govern, and at all times, and upon all occasions admonish, reprehend, reprove and persuade the canons, and all other ministers of the church, as one that watcheth for the good of his flock committed to his charge. Let him particularly take care that divine services be performed with all decency, that sermons be preached upon days appointed, that the children be profitably instructed, that alms to the poor be distributed, and that all persons do faithfully discharge those duties wherein they are intrusted.

Moreover it is requisite, That the dean, as often as he is resident, do keep a sober and competent family, and relieve the poor with alms; and herein we charge him upon his conscience, that he honestly and frugally demean himself. If the dean proves a scandalous covetous man, the bishop shall correct him, and the dean shall reprehend the canons if they shall prove so. He shall also correct and punish all others, who shall be wicked and defective in their duties, according to the statutes.

Moreover the dean shall diligently and faithfully distribute, dispose, keep and preserve the treasure, jewels, and ornaments of the church, the golden and silver vessels, the vestments, utensils, the charters, muniments, court-rolls, writings, and all other goods and substances whatsoever, belonging to the church aforesaid, without any diminution or damage done to them, and without any farther use of them than our statutes and ordinances do reasonably allow and direct.

And he shall take care that the said goods be distributed, disposed, kept and preserved by others to whose care they belong, that he may leave all things entire to his successor.

Finally, we will and ordain, That in all causes of a more than ordinary concern (as in granting of leases, and setting of lands, and such like) the dean's consent be obtained, if he be resident, but if absent, his consent shall be however first asked, if he be within the limits of our kingdom of England.

C H A P. IV.

Of the Visitation of the Lands.

Farther we will, That the dean or his receiver, or one of them, which receiver shall be elected and deputed by the dean, or the sub-dean and chapter, [By the chapter every where in these statutes, understand the one half part, at least, of the whole number of the canons.] shall once every year (beginning after Easter) visit, and thoroughly inspect all and singular the manors, lands, tenements, houses, edifices, groves, woods and under-woods belonging to our said church.

To which the dean, or his receiver, shall be joined, throughout all the visitation, a steward or clerk of the lands, who shall faithfully serve him, keep his courts, and give him good counsel. In which visitation, whatsoever is to be new built or repaired shall be accordingly built and repaired, that there may not be found in any of them any ruins, devastations, destructions, abatement of rents, or other diminution of the farms, thro' want of a due care and inspection.

We also will, That the true state of the manors and edifices be carefully registred, and what reparations are wanting. Beside, let all be registred which the dean or canon did agree unto, what he did bargain, direct, or order to be done. The dean or canon shall, within the space of eight days after his return to his cathedral, lay all these things before the other canons then present, and give up his account in writing. We have thought good to allow 4s. only for each day to the dean thus visiting, and employed about the needful affairs of the college, and only 2s. a day to the receiver who shall be so employed.

C H A P. V.

The letting of Lands and Tenements to Farm.

Farthermore, We decree, that neither the dean, nor any one of the canons shall sell to any person any groves or trees, or let to any one any lands or tenements for a set term of years, or let them to farm without the counsel and consent of the chapter. It is also our will that no land be let to farm above one and twenty years; and not from time to time, as from three years to three years, or from seven years to seven years, or upon the obligation of renewing any term of time when it shall be expired.

However we consent that houses or edifices in cities and villages may be let for the space of fifty, or at most of sixty years. We also will, That in the indentures of farms, the farmers be obliged to pay the sums of their rents in the cathedral, to our receiver, or to his deputy. But we utterly forbid the alienation or mortgaging of any manor, land, revenue, tenements, or other immovable thing: For our desire is, that our church should be enriched, not impoverished.

Let not the dean, nor any one of the canons commence, prosecute, let fall or put an end, to any cause or suit in law, for the defence, recovery or preservation of any of the rights of our said church, without the consent of the chapter.

Let the dean, or in his absence the sub-dean, dispose of the benefices, rectories, vicarages, and other ecclesiastical preferments belonging to the presentation of our church, with the consent of the chapter.

C H A P. VI.

Concerning the surrendering of Goods to the Dean.

That the goods of the church aforesaid may be the more safely and securely preserved, we do ordain and appoint, That as soon as the dean hath taken his oath, all they to whom the keeping of any things were committed, either in the time of the preceding dean, or in the vacancy, that is, all they who now have, or before had, any goods in their care and keeping, by indentures or otherwise, shall before the chapter singly give up a true and perfect account of all things by them done or committed, to their care and custody, and shall surrender, or cause to be surrendered to the dean, all goods, jewels, all ornaments and other goods whatsoever, to the aforesaid church belonging; and whatsoever things they before held by their indentures they shall, by new indentures, to be made between the dean and them, again receive them from the dean's hands. Of all which things the dean himself shall forthwith make a new and general inventory, and subscribe to it; which inventory, after it shall by the chapter be read, approved and subscribed, let the treasure, the jewels, ornaments, and other things before-named, which are not necessary for daily use, and which ought not to lie in the keeping of the officers, by their indentures, be laid up in places appointed for this purpose, according to our statutes.

C H A P. VII.

Concerning the Residence of the Dean.

Since nothing is more beneficial than the watchful eye of the governor, that all things may be rightly managed, we will and ordain that the dean shall always reside in his own church, except some lawful impediment does prevent him. We declare a lawful impediment to be the domestick service of the king or queen, which they call ordinary; the service of them who supply the places of dean, chaplain, almoner, or a tutor of the prince in the king's court. To these add, the king's extraordinary service enjoined and required, infirmity of body, care of the business of the church, violent detention, or lastly, the going to the parliament, or the convocation upon the account of the church, and the continuance there.

If thro' any of these impediments it shall chance that he be absent from our church, we will however that, in respect of his receiving the fruits and profits of the church, he shall be esteemed as present; provided that upon his return he prove before the chapter the cause of his absence.

But, if he shall happen to be absent for other causes, we will that he be look'd upon as absent, according to the time; and let him not expect the profits which they who are duly resident ought to receive. Moreover we grant leave to the dean to be absent from his church 100 days at one, or several times in a year, to mind his parochial concerns, and other benefices, if he hath any, and to dispatch his own other private businesses; for which times of his absence, he shall receive his emoluments the same as if he had been constantly resident.

C H A P. VIII.

Of Obedience to be yielded to the Dean.

Since St. Paul teacheth us that obedience is to be paid to such as bear rule over us, we will and command, that the canons as well as the petty canons and all other ministers of the church, and each of them do own the dean to be their head and governor: That they reverence him, and in all lawfull and honest things and commandments which concern our statutes, or do appertain to good government and the state of our church: That they obey, submit to, aid and assist the dean himself or his deputy, or in their absence, the senior canon according to admission.

C H A P. IX.

Concerning the Qualities, Election and Admission of the Canons.

We ordain, and it is our will, that as often as it shall happen that any canon of our church aforesaid shall depart, leave, or be expelled from our church, either by death, resignation, deprivation, tion, cession, or any other way, that then he shall be owned and accepted as a canon, whom we or our successors shall think fit to nominate and chuse, and by our letters patents under our great seal, and the seal of our successors, to present to our bishop of Gloucester. We will notwithstanding, that no one be admitted to be a canon who is not in priests orders, of good name, not only learned and skilful in the scriptures, but dignified with some title of learning, either a professor of divinity, or a batchelor of divinity, a doctor of law, or a master of arts, or at least a batchelor of law.

And we farther will, that no one be admitted a dean or canon of this church, who is a dean or canon of any other cathedral church, or college of our late foundation, or of our college of Windsor, or of St. Stephen at Westminster. Nevertheless, we grant leave to our own, and to our queen's domestick chaplains, whom they call ordinary; as also, to the dean of our chapel, our almoner, and to the tutor of the prince our son, that although they already have a dean or prebend's place in one of the aforesaid churches or colleges, they may however be admitted to another in this church, provided that in our aforesaid churches they may not have more than two canons places. Moreover we will that the dean, or his sub-dean, shall in the presence of the canons receive and admit a canon thus nominated and presented after the bishop hath given him institution.

C H A P. X.

Of a Canon's Oath.

Whoever shall be thus admitted as a canon, shall swear in the presence of the dean or his deputy, together with the other canons, in this form.

I N. who am nominated, elected and instituted a canon of this church of the holy and undivided Trinity in Gloucester, laying my hand upon the sacred gospel, do swear, that to my ability I will keep and cause to be kept all the lands, tenements, revenues, possessions, rights, liberties, privileges and all other things belonging to this church; and will myself most faithfully keep, and as much as in me lies, will cause to be kept by others, all and singular the statutes and ordinances of king Henry the Eighth our founder, so far forth as they are agreeable to the word of God, and the laws of this realm: Nor will I wittingly obstruct any thing that may be done for the benefit and reputation of this church, but will procure and augment its profit: And if I shall be called, chosen and designed to bear any office in this church aforesaid, I will not refuse to undertake it, and diligently to act therein, according to my ability. All and each of these things I will perform. So God help me and this holy gospel.

C H A P. XI.

Of the Residence of the Canons.

Forasmuch as it is not expedient that the members should be very remote from the head, it is our will that, as the dean, so the canons also shall keep themselves at home, and be always resident in our church, except some lawful impediment does prevent.

We declare the domestick service of the king or queen (which they call ordinary) the service of those who in the king's court serve as deans, chaplains, almoners or instructors of the prince in grammar; any employment enjoyn'd by the king; sickness, the care or the concerns of our church; any violent detention; and lastly, going and attending in the parliament or convocation; all these we call lawful impediments.

It therefore he is absent from our church for any of those impediments, it is our will that he be accounted as resident, in respect of his receiving any fruits and benefits from the said church; so that when he is returned, he makes good the alledged cause of his absence before the dean or the sub-dean, the canons also being then present.

Besides, we give leave to every one of the canons to be absent from our church in every year eighty days at one, or at several times, to visit their cures or other benefices, if they have any, and to mind their own private concerns. For the time of which absence they shall receive the same salary as a resident doth.

Furthermore, we ordain, and it is our will, that as often as any dean or canon travels within fifteen miles of our church to preach, if he be absent one whole day, he shall however receive the profits of that day, the same as if he had been at home: And if he goes to preach more than fifteen miles, and less than twenty-four miles from our church, he shall receive the same emoluments which they have who remain at home, though he be absent two full days.

And withal we decree, and it is our will, that the third part at least of the whole number of canons be always resident in our church: and except the third part do continue at home, we command that all they who shall be absent without a lawful impediment, shall lose their dividends, and also the money due to the corps of any prebend, so long as the third part of the canons, as has been said, shall nor be resident.

C H A P. XII.

Of Sermons to be preached in our Church.

Because the word of God is a lanthorn unto our feet, we ordain and will that the dean and our canons, and withal we beseech them by the mercies of God, be diligent in season and out of season, in sowing the word of God, as in other, so more especially in our cathedral church.

And we will that every canon shall every year make four sermons at least to the people in the church aforesaid, in English, either by himself or by others, and that upon the Lord's days; once between the nativity of Christ and the feast of the annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary; once between the feast of the blessed Virgin Mary and the nativity of John; once between the nativity of St. John and the feast of Michael; and once between the feast of Michael and the nativity of Christ; so that almost no one Lord's day in the whole year shall be without a sermon. But we will that the dean, either by himself or by his proxy, shall preach every year in our English tongue at Easter, upon Corpus Christi day, and at Christmas.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the Canons Table.

We ordain and will that all the resident canons shall live apart with their several families, and shall so dispose of the revenues which they shall receive by our liberality to good purposes, that they may not seem to have sought shifts and excuses for their covetousness, or to have been guilty of too much prodigality. But if any one be notoriously guilty of one of these vices, let him be rebuked by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean; or if occasion be, let him be punished by a fine as shall be thought reasonable.

Moreover, if there be any canon who hath not 40*l.* of a constant yearly rent, beside the salary of our church, all his payments being deducted, we will not that he be constrained to maintain his family apart, but ordain that he go to the table of the dean, or some canon or minor-canon within the circuit of our church.

But if there be more canons in this circumstance, they may maintain a common table of their own. All who thus living together at a common table, shall be esteemed but as one resident, and shall receive out of the common dividends, but so much as one of them who maintain their families apart. But we utterly forbid all others who have no common table amongst themselves, but go to another's table, to be partakers of the dividends, arising from the absence of the dean and other canons.

C H A P. XIV.

Of the Salary of the Dean and Canons.

We know that hospitality is very acceptable to God, which that the dean and canons may observe, we ordain and appoint that the dean shall every year receive for the corps of his deanery, by the hands of the treasurer, 27*l.* of lawful money of England. And that every canon shall yearly receive for the corps of his prebend, by the hands of the treasurer, 7*l.* 17*s.* and 8*d.* of lawful money of England.

We farther decree and will, That the dean for every day in which he shall be either in all the mattins, or at mass, or in the even-services, apparell'd with his proper attirements, and also for those days he shall be absent by the toleration of our statutes, he shall receive from our church 4*s.* of lawful money of England. And in like manner we ordain, that every canon, for every day in which he shall wear his proper ornaments, either in all the mattins, or at mass, or in the vespers, or in which he is absent by the permission of our statutes, shall receive from our church 8*d.* of lawful money of England.

We also will and ordain, That all the four most usual quarters of the year, that is, at the feast of Michael, the nativity of Christ, the annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary, and the feast of John Baptist, all and every salary be paid, as well to the dean and canons, as to all other officers and ministers; and also all those moneys which ought to be paid for their common table each month; and also all that money which every year doth arise out of the absence of the dean and canons, and which is to be divided amongst the residents.

Which money is thus to be collected: The precentor, for the time being, shall faithfully note those days in which the dean and canons are absent. From the dean shall be detained, for every day of his absence, 4*s.* and from each canon, for every day of his absence, shall be taken 8*d.* and let the treasurer detain it.

Let this sum, thus arising out of the absence of the dean and canons, be divided at the end of the year, in the feast of St. Michael, by a proportionable distribution between the resident dean and the resident canons. Now those we call residents, who for one and twenty days together are at divine service, according to the orders of our statutes, and do maintain their families apart. And it is our pleasure that the dean receive twice as much as a canon; that is, if a resident canon receives for his portion 8d. out of the dividends, the dean shall receive 16d.

C H A P. XV.

Of the Election of Officers.

The dean and prebendaries ought to remember that they are united together as one body. And we will and command that they being mindful of it, shall in common consult together in love and charity; yet so that the power of reprehending be left wholly to the dean, or in his absence, to the sub-dean, who may gently and mildly admonish even the resident canons, and may check and prudently reprove every one in their several places.

Therefore let the dean, or in his absence, the sub-dean, every year (the canons being convened upon the last day of November) chuse and establish the following officers, with the common consent of the chapter, out of the canons, that is, the sub-dean, the receiver and treasurer. And we will that such as shall refuse the office assigned them, without such an excuse as shall be approved of by the electors, shall be for ever expelled from our church.

And we will that all the canons, except such as are excused by our forenamed lawful impediments, do meet and be present in our foresaid church at this election of officers; otherwise, as many as shall be then absent, shall be utterly deprived of that whole sum of money which they should have received that year for the corps of their prebends.

C H A P. XVI.

Of the Office of the Sub-Dean.

We do decree, and will, that the sub-dean for the time being, whilst the dean is absent, or the deanery vacant, shall preside and have charge over the canons, and all the ministers and officers of our church, and keep them in order; that whatsoever things ought to be done by the dean being resident, belonging to the affairs or government of the church, whilst he is absent, or his office vacant, the sub-dean shall well and truly perform and execute: And whilst the dean is present, he shall be next to him, and respected above the rest, as well in the choir as elsewhere; and therefore in all affairs of our church, he ought to be more diligent and circumspect, that he may seem to be one and the same head with the dean. Moreover, we will that the dean's place being void, the sub-dean shall have the full and entire power of ruling and governing in our church in all things, and in like manner as is given and granted in our statutes to the dean himself, until a new dean shall be elected and substituted; and he in presence of those who elected him to this office, laying his hand upon the bible, shall swear that he will faithfully perform all these things.

C H A P. XVII.

Of the Office of a Receiver.

We ordain that whosoever is admitted into the office of a receiver, shall collect and receive all moneys and rents of lands and tenements, and all debts belonging to our church; and as soon as conveniently he can, he shall deliver them to the treasurer for the time being.

It shall be the charge of the receiver also to take care of all the goods of the said church, especially those abroad, and timely to look to the ruins and necessary reparations of the ditant.

To him also it shall belong to undertake and perform all such things as are before prescribed to him under the title of the office of dean, that is, the visitation of lands and tenements; and then laying his hand upon the holy evangelists in the presence of his electors, he shall bind himself by an oath, that he will faithfully and diligently perform all these things.

C H A P. XVIII.

Of the Treasurer's Office.

We appoint and ordain, That the treasurer for the time being shall duly pay, as well those salaries which every month are to be paid to the ministers and others belonging to the choir, for their diet and commons, as those which are to be paid quarterly, and those also which are to be paid at the end of the year for dividends. To him also it belongs, to take care that the buildings of the church be kept in good reparation; and with the advice of the dean, or in his absence, of the sub-dean, to mend and repair the houses of all the ministers of our church, except those of the dean and canons, as often as need shall require; and to provide whatsoever doth necessarily belong to the repairing and adorning of the church and choir.

He shall also provide materials and timber for building. He shall also look to the buildings of the dean and canons; which if they do not repair after notice given, the treasurer, out of their salaries, shall see that they be repaired.

Moreover, that the houses of the canons may be the better and more diligently kept in repair, we ordain, that a canon newly chosen may succeed in the house of one that's dead, or that hath resigned, or upon any account hath withdrawn; and that he have and enjoy it, with the gardens, stable, and other conveniences thereunto belonging. In fine, let him take care of the vestry, and let him diligently do his utmost to preserve the sacred vestments, the holy vessels and garments, and all muniments.

All which he shall swear that he will observe, laying his hands upon the holy evangelists, in the presence of them who did elect him.

C H A P. XIX.

Of the Quality, Election, and Admission of the Minor-Canons.

Because we have decreed that God shall be praised in this our church in hymns and psalms, and prayers for ever, we have ordained, and do appoint that those six priests whom we call minor-canons, as also the six laick-clerks, and also the deacon and sub-deacon (who shall read the gospel and the epistle) all whom we have constituted daily to celebrate the praise of God in our church, be, as much as may be, learned, of a good name, and honest conversation; and lastly, that they be men of judgment in singing, which shall be approved of by the judgment of those who do well understand the art of musick, in the same church. And they shall be chosen, when their places are vacant, by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean and chapter, and at their admission they shall take the following oath.

C H A P. XX.

The Oath of the Ministers.

I N. being chosen a minor-canon in the church of the holy and undivided Trinity in Gloucester, do swear, that so long as I shall continue in this church I will inviolably observe, to the utmost of my ability, as much as in me lyeth, all the orders and statutes made by the most potent king Henry the Eighth, founder of this church. And will pay due obedience and reverence to the dean and canons. And lastly, that I will carefully promote the good and honour of this church. So help me God, and the Holy Gospels.

Which oath we will that all ministers shall take at their admission.

C H A P. XXI.

Of the Residence of the Ministers.

We will and ordain that the residence of the minor-canons, and all other clerks doing service in our church, be perpetual; for it shall be lawful to no one to be absent from our church a whole day, or a whole night, without leave being first obtained, either from the dean, or in his absence, from the sub-dean. And whosoever shall do otherwise, he shall be punished by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean, at their discretion.

And if any of the ministers of the choir shall undecently stay away from our church for three months, the dean, or the sub-dean, being not fore-acquainted with it, we will that he be deprived of his salary for three months. And whosoever of the minor-canons shall be absent from the greater mass, or from matins, shall lose a penny; and whosoever shall be absent from the vespers, or the complin, shall forfeit a halfpenny; and whosoever shall be absent after the first or third, or sixth or ninth hour, shall be sconded a farthing; whosoever is not in the choir before the first psalm is finished, or before Kyrie election, in the mass, shall forfeit a farthing; whosoever shall refuse to do as the precentor requires him, shall forfeit two-pence.

But the punishment of the clerks shall be determined by the pleasure of the dean, or of the major part of the canons who are present, to whose sentence the clerks shall submit.

Let the money that is forfeited by those who are absent be equally divided amongst those who were not absent, at the end of every quarter. And according to the number of the days in which any one was present, he shall receive more of the dividends; he that was present fewer days shall receive the less.

However, that the minor-canons, and presbyters of our church, may be encouraged the more diligently to attend their charge, we do permit that they do enjoy one ecclesiastical benefice jointly with their office in the church; provided that the said benefice be not above twenty-four miles distant from the city of Gloucester. And whilst they continue in the service of our cathedral, we give them licence, and do dispence with their absence from such benefice; any act or statute of this realm to the contrary notwithstanding.

C H A P. XXII.

Of the Precentor and his Office.

We decree and ordain, that by the dean, or he being absent, by the sub-dean and the chapter, out of the minor canons, one elder than the rest, and more eminent, both for his behaviour and for his learning, shall be chosen precentor; whose office it shall be handsomely to direct the singing men in the church, and, as a guide, to lead them by his previous singing, that they make no discords whilst they sing; whom the rest shall obey.

As to the business of the choir, all the minor-canons and clerks, and others who shall sing in the church, ought readily to obey whatever he hath ordered them to read.

Beside, he shall faithfully observe the absence from divine service, as well of the dean and canons, as of all who serve in the choir; of which absence he shall give a true account every fortnight in the chapter-house, before the canons there present.

And if any of the minor-canons gives a reason of his absence, it shall prevail, if the dean, or in his absence, the sub-dean, allow of it.

He shall also see that the books for the service of the choir be carefully laid up. And, in fine, as oft as he shall be absent from our church, he shall substitute a deputy, who shall faithfully perform what he ought to have done.

All which, by a solemn oath, he shall promise that he will faithfully perform.

C H A P. XXIII.

Of the Sacrist and Sub-Sacrist.

We ordain and will, that one of the minor-canons, being a careful and honest man, shall be chosen by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean and chapter, who shall be called the sacrist, to whom shall be committed the care of the church, the altar, the chapels, the vestments, the books, the calices, the muniments, and other ornaments, which he shall receive from the treasurer, in the presence of the dean or sub-dean, and the canons then present; and he shall be bound by indentures, or some such way, to deliver them up. With the advice of the treasurer he shall also take care that there be no want of wine, water, or wax-candles, for the celebration of divine services in the church aforesaid, at times proper for their celebration.

The same sacrist shall also visit the sick in our church, and (as often as there is occasion, or time shall require it) he shall diligently and reverently administer the sacraments, as well to the sick as to those that are in health.

The offerings also in the church, if there be any, he shall take, and keep to be delivered up for the use of the church.

We will also that he have under him two honest and industrious men (to be nominated by the dean, or, in his absence, by the sub-dean and chapter) who shall be obedient to the commands of this sacrist, who shall lay up the vestments, light the candles, keep the altars, take care that the church be swept and kept clean, toll the bells, or see that they be tolled at times appointed by the dean or sub-dean.

Lastly, we will, that as well the sacrist as their sub-sacrist, when it shall happen that they are absent from our church, shall substitute others in their places, who, in their absence, shall faithfully execute their office.

Which sacrist, and his sub-sacrist, shall oblige themselves by oath to be faithful in their places.

C H A P. XXIV.

Of the Choristers and their Master.

We decree and ordain, that in our church aforesaid, by the election and designation of the dean, or in his absence, of the vice-dean and chapter, there be eight choristers, youths who have good voices and are inclined to singing, who may serve, minister and sing in our choir.

For the instruction of these youths, and training them up, as well in modest behaviour, as in skilfulness of singing, we will that by the dean, or in his absence by the sub-dean and chapter, beside the eight choristers before named, there shall be one chosen who is of a good life and reputation, skilful both in singing and in playing upon the organs, who shall diligently spend his time in instructing the boys in playing upon the organs, and at proper times in singing divine service. But if he be negligent, and careless in teaching them, let him be deposed from his office, after the third admonition. He shall also be bound by an oath faithfully to discharge his duty.

C H A P. XXV.

Of the School-Masters.

That piety and good learning may always spring, grow, flourish, and in due time prove fruitful in our church, to the glory of God, and the good and honour of the commonwealth, we will and ordain, that by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean and chapter, one be chosen who is skilful in Greek and Latin, of good fame, and a godly life, well qualified for teaching, who may train up in piety and good learning, those children who shall resort to our school to learn grammar. And let him have the first charge, and be the chief school-master. We also will that by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean, there be one other chosen, of good repute, and of a virtuous life, well skilled in the Latin tongue, and who hath a good faculty in teaching, who shall instruct the youths under the head master, in the first rudiments of grammar, and shall therefore be called the under-master, or usher. And we will that those instructors of youth do carefully and faithfully observe those rules and orders which the dean, or in his absence, the sub-dean and chapter, shall think fit to prescribe unto them.

But if they prove idle, negligent, or not fit to teach, let them be expelled, and deprived of their places, after a third admonition from the dean, or in his absence, from the sub-dean and chapter.

These shall be obliged by oath that they will faithfully perform all duties belonging to their places.

C H A P. XXVI.

Of the Poor and their Duty.

We ordain and will, that by the designation and election of us, or of our successors, by the letters of us or them, signed with our or their hands, there be in our church aforesaid, maintained out of the profits of our church, four poor men, oppressed with want and poverty, maimed in the wars, weakened with age, or any other ways disabled, and reduced to want and misery; whose office it shall be, as far as their infirmity will permit them, to be daily present in the church in the time of divine service, to give themselves to prayer; to serve, assist, and help the presbyters in their preparing themselves for prayers; to keep the body of the church and choir clean from all filth and nastiness; to assist, as much as they are able, the sub-sacrist in lighting the candles, and in tolling the bells; and lastly, to obey the dean and sub-dean in such things as belong to the decency of the church. But if they be found negligent in those offices, they shall be corrected according to the pleasure of the dean, or in his absence, of the sub-dean. And if any of them be absent, and reside not in our church, or at least in the houses thereunto adjoining, we will that according to the time of their absence they lose their salary. Yet we grant leave to the dean, or in his absence, to the sub-dean, to give them leave to be absent twenty days in a year, for some cause to be approved of by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean. And they shall give assurance that they will do their duties, by the like oath that other officers of our church do take.

C H A P. XXVII.

Of the inferior Officers of the Church.

Since no one can worthily serve in the offices of the church, and at the same time be intangled with worldly concerns, and that they who minister in our choir may not be obstructed in their duty, we ordain, that inferior officers shall be substituted.

We will therefore that the dean, or in his absence, the sub-dean, according to his discretion and prudence, do make choice of, and admit as a butler or manciple, an industrious man, one of a good repute and conversation, who, at seasonable hours, shall supply with bread and drink those who eat at the common table, and carefully see the buttery supplied; and (together with the cook, by the assistance of the steward) shall diligently take care to buy provisions for the table of the minor-canons and officers.

Moreover we will, that the dean, or in his absence the sub-dean, choose two door-keepers, who shall also do the office of virgerers, careful men, of a good life and reputation, who shall also faithfully keep the keys of the gates; and shall also keep the gates, and outward doors of the bounds of our church, and shall shut, keep, and open them at the command of the dean, or in his absence, of the sub-dean. But in the night time they shall not suffer them to lye open for any one, unless with the express command of the dean, or in his absence, of the sub-dean.

Lastly, the dean, or in his absence the sub-dean, shall choose a cook and an under-cook, men that are industrious, of good repute, and of an honest life, who shall diligently provide the meat and drink for the table of those who eat together.

And all these shall take the like oath as they take who serve in the choir.

C H A P. XXVIII.

Of the common Table of the Officers.

That they who live together, and praise God together in the choir, may also eat together, and praise God together at tables, we ordain and will, that as well the minor-canons and officers in the choir, as the teachers of the grammar-scholars, and all other inferior officers of our church, and the children who learn to sing, shall feed together in the common hall, if it may be conveniently done. In which hall the precentor, or in his absence the senior petty-canon, shall sit uppermost at the upper table; then the head school-master, and the minor-canon, and the matter of the choristers. In the second rank let the deacon, the six lay-clerks, the sub-deacon, and the under school-master sit.

In the third rank let the singing boys of the choir sit.

These having dined, let the sub-sacrist, the manciple, the door-keeper, the cook and the cantor sit down.

In the hall shall be the precentor, or if he be absent, the senior petty-canon, who shall rebuke such men as be of an ill behaviour. But in the first place they shall reprove the boys, and also their masters. And, that all things may be done quietly, in order, and with decency in the hall, upon the five and twentieth day of November, one shall yearly be chosen out of the priests of the church, by the consent of the major part of them who eat together in the first and second rank, who shall do the office of an yearly steward, who shall be steward for one whole year; who shall also provide wood, coal, salt, and other such like things as shall be thought necessary for a store, (as they call it) against the following year, to serve the common table.

He shall examine the accounts of the monthly steward (who shall be steward only for one month) every week; and in the end of every month, shall give an account to the major part of the commoners of the first and second rank, at the end of the year, of all their charges. Moreover, one out of the petty-canon and the commoners of the second rank (either by himself, or by some one else) shall every year in like manner, each month do the office of a monthly steward, whose advice the butler and the cook shall observe in buying the victuals, with whom he also shall go into the market, if it seem good, and with them he shall buy and provide meat. Nevertheless, we will and grant that it shall be lawful for the dean, or for the sub-dean in the dean's absence, to assign and cause to be paid to the clerks of our church who are married, and to any that are sick, a portion of money in lieu of their commons. And to the other presbyters and clerks, and also to the boys who learn musick, having their victuals freely given them from the church, we give leave, that a portion of money should be assigned and paid for their commons, provided that constantly every month they allow a competent sum of money to the common table of their companions, according to the order of the dean and chapter.

We ordain also, and appoint that the treasurer of our church, at the beginning of every month, do deliver and pay to the monthly steward for the table and commons of all of them who eat together, after this manner following: That is, for them who eat in the first rank, for each minor-canon, for the head master of the grammar-scholars, and for the master of the choristers, six shillings monthly. And shall pay for the commons of them who eat in the second rank, for each of the clerks, the deacon, the sub-deacon, and the lower master of the grammar-school, monthly, five shillings and eight-pence. Lastly, for the table of the choristers, monthly, three shillings and four-pence. Again, for the table and the commons of all those who sit down after the others are risen, for the sub-sacrist, the manciple, the door-keepers, and the cook, monthly, four shillings. Which monthly sums, by the monthly steward, with the advice of the yearly steward, shall be honestly and frugally disposed of; and at the end of each month, he shall give an account of the sum disposed of to the yearly steward, or some other prudent man of the first or second rank.

And that they may the more faithfully execute their offices, both the stewards shall be bound by an oath given to the college. Lastly, all the ministers of our church eating together, ought to observe and yield obedience to those orders, forms and statutes which by the dean and chapter shall hereafter be made therein.

C H A P. XXIX.

Of the Vestments of the Officers, called Liveries.

We decree and will, that the minor-canon, clerks and other officers of our church, and the choristers also, and four poor men, have their outward garments as near as may be, of the same colour, or the like; and they already named, shall receive yearly for the making of their outward garments, after the manner we here sit down: All the minor-canon and the upper school-master, four yards of cloth for their gowns, at 5s. per yard; and the matter of the choir shall have for his gown, three yards of cloth, price 5s. per yard.

The deacon, sub-deacon, all the clerks, the usher of the grammar school, shall receive for their cloaths three yards of cloth, at the rate of 4s. 6d. And the other officers, that is, the sub-sacrist, baker, door-keepers, and the cook, every one shall receive for himself three yards of cloth for his garments, at the price of 3s. 4d. Each of the choristers, and the sub-cook, for their garments, two yards and a half, price 3s. 4d. Which cloth being delivered to them, whosoever shall not take care that it be decently made up fit for him, and shall not wear it greatest part of the year, he shall be deemed unworthy of our gift; and therefore let him be constrained to refund to our church so much of his stipend as the cloth shall be valued. The dean, or in his absence, the sub-dean, ought every year to provide the cloth and livery garments, together with the receiver for the time being; and they shall deliver to every one their portions of cloth, before Christmas, that they may celebrate the birth-day of our Saviour Jesus Christ, with new cloaths and new souls: But the poor men shall always wear on the left shoulder of their gowns, a rose made of red silk; and when they walk either in the church or elsewhere abroad, they shall every where walk in the said gowns.

C H A P. XXX.

Of the Salaries of the Officers of the Church

We ordain and will, that out of the common stock of our church, beside their commons and liveries before assigned, certain stipends be paid quarterly to all the officers of our church, by the treasurer, by equal portions, in manner following: That is, to each minor-canon for his share, 5l. 2s. To the head school-master, 8l. 8s. 8d. To the matter of the choristers, 5l. 7s. To the usher, 59s. and 2d. To the sub-deacon, 59s. and 2d. To every clerk, 59s. and 2d. To the sacrist, 26s. and 8d. To the manciple, 58s. To the cook, 58s. To the door-keepers, 58s. To the choristers, 15s. To each of the four poor men, 6l. 3s. and 4d. To the sub-dean, 26s. and 8d. To the precentor, 26s. 8d. To the receiver, 5 marks. To the treasurer, 26s. 8d. To the steward, or clerk of the lands, 53s. and 4d. To the sub-cook, 26s. 8d. To the sub-sacrist, 33s. and 4d.

C H A P. XXXI.

Of the Celebration of Divine Service.

That prayers and supplication may decently and in good order be every day performed in our church, and that every day the praise of God may be made with joy and rejoicing: We decree and ordain, that the minor-canon and clerks, together with the deacon and sub-deacon, and the master of the choristers, do daily perform divine service in the choir of our church, according to the right and custom of other cathedral churches; but we will not oblige them to sing their services by night. Moreover, we will, that in all principal feasts, the dean, but in the greater double feasts, the sub-dean, and in other double feasts, the other canons, every one in his place shall officiate in celebrating the divine service. We ordain also, that no one of the canons, or of others ministering in the choir, shall come thither in time of divine service, except he be clothed with such ornaments as are proper for that place.

We will also, that the masters of the grammar school, upon festival days be in the choir, wearing habits fit for that place; whereof one shall have his place above the minor-canon, the other shall sit next below them. We will also, that as soon as I am departed out of this life, obsequies be made for my soul in my church at Gloucester, all the canons of our church, and other officers and poor men being called together and assisting: And that the day of our death be written in the statute-books, upon which same day anniversary obsequies and masses shall for ever be celebrated for us.

C H A P. XXXII.

Of the common Treasury, and keeping of the seal and Muniments.

We ordain and will, that one inward and more private room be set apart, and an outward one large enough, and adjoining to the inward one; which rooms shall be called the treasury.

In the outward room shall be placed a chest, and a coffer to keep the writings in; in which the books of the accounts of all the officers, servants, and of all others who are obliged to give up any accounts, ought to be kept and laid up. In those chests and coffers shall be laid up the court rolls, both by themselves and apart. All obligatory writings apart, and by themselves. The books concerning revenues, called the rentals: Inventories of the goods and lands apart, and by themselves. In this room let there be placed an iron chest, to keep the moneys put into the treasury, which may be needful for daily expence. In this room also let there be a counter-house, where the accounts of all farmers, bailiffs, officers, and of others, are to be examined and proved.

In the inward room we would have one strong iron chest placed, wherein let there be laid up the sum of 40l. which we would have to be taken out of what remains as overplus, in the end of every year, that that sum may always remain and be ready to serve the necessities of our church, if there shall any happen. And in this room let there be kept one small chest, in which let there be put and carefully kept the common seal of our church; by which common seal we command, that nothing be at any time sealed but what was first at large and plainly written in a certain register, register, and be publickly compared, and at large read over with the same register. And as often as the seal is put upon any writing, there shall never be required of any one above 13s. and 4d. for the signing of that writing. We will also, that in this room there shall be kept another chest, in which let these our statutes, ordinances and letters patents of the foundation and endowment of our church, and other writings and muniments of the manors, lands, tenements, revenues, possessions and rights and liberties which our church by any right hath, be deposited. But every chest, even the little one, shall have three locks, with so many keys of a different fashion: and of each of these chests, and of the little one, the dean shall keep one key, the sub-dean another, and the treasurer the third; and none of the chests, no not the little one, shall be open but when all the keepers of them, or their deputies are consenting and present. Finally, we forbid any one man to keep two keys with him at the same time; and as often as any one of the key-keepers goes forth from our said church, let him leave his key with some one canon that stays at home, and hath neither of the other keys.

C H A P. XXXIII.

Of the Accounts given up every Year.

We will, that within two months after the feast of Michael, all bailiffs, farmers, officers and servants, both foreign and domestick, do give in, and make a full and true account of all those things that do belong to their offices. And we farther ordain and decree, that at the same time also, both the receiver and the treasurer, do give a full and true account of all things belonging to their offices before the dean and the canons then present, and the auditor, whether he be present, or whether he substitutes another in his place, of what they have received, and of what they have laid out; what the church oweth, and what is due unto the church. And finally, let all the indentures of the goods of the church, which are in use, be shewed and renewed, that in all things the dean and canons may be satisfied in the state and condition of the church.

C H A P. XXXIV.

Of correcting Excesses.

That a good behaviour may be observed in our church, we ordain and will, that if any one of the petty-canons or other officers shall be guilty of any lesser fault, he shall be punished according to the discretion of the dean, or in his absence, of the sub-dean; but if he hath offended by any great fault, if it shall be thought fit, he shall be expelled by those by whom he was admitted. And if any one of the canons be in any fault or crime, whereby any notorious scandal may arise to our church, let him that is found guilty be admonished by the dean, or in his absence, by the sub-dean; but if he mend not his behaviour, being the third time admonished, let him be called before the bishop his visitor, and at his pleasure let him be punished: But we reserve the punishment of the poor men, as oft as they offend, to the discretion of the dean, or in his absence, of the sub-dean; and if they continue incorrigible, let them be expelled from the church by the dean, with the consent of the chapter, and let them lose all benefit from the church.

C H A P. XXXV.

Concerning Alms.

Beside our alms bestowed upon those four poor men, we have given also an annual sum of 40*l.* to our church, both for the relief of the poor and needy, and also toward the repairing of the high ways. We will that one half of that sum be distributed by the dean, or his receiver, when in his circuit he visits the lands, manors, and impropriate churches; in which churches let it be distributed to the poor, according to their need; lest they seem from hence to reap all and sow none. But let the dean or treasurer dispose of the foresaid sum, partly to the poor and needy nigh our church. The account of which distribution let it be shewn in the general account. The bishop, in his visitation, shall take notice of this money, after it be faithfully disposed of. Another sum of 20*l.* we have assigned for the repairing of bridges and the mending of highways, according to the discretion of the dean, or in his absence, of the sub-dean and chapter. But since the grammar-school, and almost all the buildings, in which we would that the minor canons and other officers of our church should lodge, are run to ruin, waste, out of repair, and unhand-some, we give leave that that sum of 20*l.* which we assign for the repairing of bridges, may be made use of to repair those buildings, making them more habitable, and to make them fit for those uses they shall be designed, for the space of three years. But when those three years are expired, after the date of these presents, we do ordain that the same sum shall be made use of to repair bridges and highways. The bishop also, in his visitation, shall take care that this be faithfully executed.

C H A P. XXXVI.

Of keeping Chapters.

We decree and will, that the dean, or in his absence, the sub-dean, with the resident canons, once at least in every fortnight, or oftener, as it shall seem expedient, shall keep a chapter in the chapter-house, and there piously and prudently confer about the affairs of our church. We also will, that in every year there shall be kept two chapters, one upon the last day of November, and the other upon the vespers of St. John Baptist; in which chapters we will, that whatsoever shall be ordained and appointed by the dean, and the canons present, shall be observed by all persons of our church, so far as they concern them, provided they do not contradict these our statutes.

C H A P. XXXVII.

Of the Visitation of the Church.

There's no work so piously begun, so prosperously continued, or so happily consummated, which is not soon destroyed, and utterly subverted by carelessness and negligence. There are no statutes so sacred, and firmly made, but in length of time they are exposed to oblivion and contempt, if there be not a constant care and zeal for religion. Which that it may never happen, or come to our church, we, trusting in the faith and diligence of the bishop of Gloucester for the time being, have constituted him to be the visitor of our cathedral of Gloucester, willing and commanding, that according to his christian faith, and earnest zeal for religion, he watch, and diligently take care that those statutes and ordinances which we have made for our church be inviolably observed; that the possessions, and the spiritual as well as temporal affairs may flourish in a prosperous state; that the rights, liberties, and privileges be preserved and defended.

And that these things may be so, we ordain and will, that the bishop himself, as often as he shall by the dean, or by two canons, be asked; and if not asked, yet once in every three years shall come in person to our church, except some very urgent necessity shall obstruct him, or else that he come by the proxy of his chancellor, that he there, in a convenient place, call together the dean, canons, minor-canons, clerks, and all other officers of our church. To which bishop, by virtue of this present statute, we grant a full power and authority to examine the dean, canons, minor-canons, and the other officers, concerning all the articles contained in our statutes, and concerning all other articles relating to the state, welfare and reputation of our college: And that he urge every one of them, by the oath they gave unto the church, to speak the truth concerning all faults and crimes whatsoever: And that the bishop punish them who shall be found and proved guilty, according to the nature of the fault and crime; and that he reform them. And that he do all things that may seem proper for the subduing of vice, and which are known to belong to the duty of a visitor. And we will and command all, as well the dean as the canons, and other officers of our church, that they obey the bishop in respect of the premises.

And we ordain, by virtue of the oath given to the church, that no one say or inform any thing against the dean or the canons, or any one of the officers of our church, but what he believes to be true, and is publickly reported so to be.

Moreover we will that the dean, at the common charges of the church, prepare and set before the bishop visiting, and attended with eight persons, two entertainments at most within the lodgings of our church. Farthermore, because we wish that these our statutes may last for ever, we will, that if any ambiguity, contention, or dissention shall hereafter arise between the dean and canons, or between the canons themselves, about the true and genuine meaning of our statutes, (all which we would have understood according to the plain grammatical sense) we will and ordain, that that statute, or any clause of the statute, concerning which the contention is risen, shall be referred to the archbishop of Canterbury; to whose interpretation we command all to submit without any delay or contradiction, provided it be not repugnant to our statutes. But we utterly forbid the visitor, and the interpreter of our statutes, and all other men, of what dignity or authority they shall be, to make any new statutes, or to dispense with any of the old.

And we do forbid the dean and canons of our church to receive any such statutes, under the penalty of perjury, and perpetual expulsion from our church.

Notwithstanding we reserve to ourself, and to our successors, a full power and authority to change and alter these statutes, and if it shall seem good, even to make new ones.

In witness of all and singular the premises, &c.

Of the Prayers in the Church.

We decree and ordain, that during my natural life these following prayers be every day used for us, for our royal consort, and for the prince our son, in the high mass, viz. Deus, in auxilium manu sunt corda Regum, &c. Suscipe, quæsumus Domine, &c. Præsta quæsumus, &c. Pro animabus autem Inviçtissimi Patris nostri Regis Henrici Septimi, & nobilissimæ matris nostræ Elizabethæ reginæ & charissimæ nuper conjugis nostræ Janæ hæc Orationes dicantur, Deus, cui proprium, &c. Intuere, quæsumus, &c. Prosit, quæsumus Domine, &c.

Prayers to be said by all in our Church in the Morning, as they are rising.

Libera nos, Salve nos, &c. with this prayer, Omnipotens, Sem-piternæ Deus, &c. with this psalm, De profundis, and with the following suffrages.

Prayers in the Evening.

As they are going to bed, let them say the hymn Salvator Mundi Deus, with the psalm De profundis, and with the suffrages following.

Prayers to be used in the School in the Morning.

As soon as the usher and all the scholars are come into the school, at six of the clock in the Morning, let them alternately repeat the psalm Domine in virtute tua lætabitur Rex, &c. 1. Kyrie Christe, Kyrie. 2. Pater noster, & ne nos, &c. 3. Ostende nobis Domine, &c. 4. Domine, salvum fac Regem, &c. 5. Esto ei Turris fortitudinis, &c. 6. Nihil perficiat Inimicus, &c. 7. Domine exaudi. 8. Quis Omnipotens Deus, &c. 9. Actiones nostras quæsumus Domine.

Prayers in the School, to be said in the Evening.

At five of the clock, the scholars being ready to go out of the school, shall alternately repeat the psalm Ecce nunc benedicite Dominum, &c. Kyrie, Christe, Kyrie, Pater noster, &c. Exurge Domine adjuva nos, &c. Domine Deus virtutum, &c. with this prayer, Tenebras nostras illumina, quæsumus Domine.

The Prayers of the Poor.

Let the poor men, who are maintained at the charges of our church, daily say in the morning, at the evening, and at noon-day, the Lord's Prayer, the Angel's Salutation, the Apostles Creed, the Ten Commandments of God, all of them in English, with the prayer translated into English, Quæsumus Omnipotens Deus.

We Nicholas Wigorn', George Cicestren', and Richard Cox archdeacon, do now present unto you the dean, canons, and all other officers of the said church of the sacred and undivided Trinity at Gloucester, by the command and authority of our dread sovereign the king, these his statutes to be diligently observed by you, in the thirty-sixth year of the reign of the same our Lord the king, and upon the fifth day of the month July.

NICHOLAUS WIGORN'.
GEORGIUS CICESTR'.
RIC. COX.

A Grant from Henry de Hamtonel, Abbat of Cirencester, to John de Latton.

TO all christian people who shall either see or hear this present deed, Henry, by divine permission, abbat of Cirencester, and the convent of that place, send health in our Lord. Know ye that we have granted to John de Latton and Isabel his wife, in form and under condition following, these several things hereafter specified, to receive every weck, so long as they shall jointly live; Fourteen white loaves and nine gallons of beer, whereof five gallons of the beer shall be such as the convent useth, and the other four gallons shall be of the chaplain's beer, and they shall receive one mess every day out of our kitchen, in like manner as our day officers do receive it from our house. Provided that if the said Isabel shall survive, that then and immediately from the death of the said John, one moiety of all above granted shall altogether cease. And in consideration of the aforesaid grant, the aforesaid John hath wholly released us and to our church, and hath quit claimed for himself and his heirs heirs for ever, all right and claim which he had or any way can have, with the reversion thereof, in all the lands and tenements, with all their appurtenances, which Walter father of the said John did hold by lease from us in Latton. And the said John and his heirs shall fully and intirely warrant the said lands and tenements to us and to our church, without any diminution whatsoever. And if it should happen, which we hope will never be, that the said John and Isabel shall any way be deficient in the said warranty, or should lay claim, or pretend any right to the said tenements, that from thenceforth the said abbat and convent shall be for ever discharged from the performance of every part of this grant, without any pretence whatsoever. In witness whereof the parties abovesaid have interchangeably set their seals to this indenture.

Given at Cirencester, at the feast of the purification of the blessed Virgin, in the thirty-third year of the reign of king Edward, son of king Henry.

NUMBER XXXI.

King Henry the Fourth's Grant to the Men, &c. of Cirencester.

THE king, to all unto whom these presents shall come, greeting. Know ye that of our special grace, and for the good and laudable and acceptable services which the men of the town of Ciceter have performed, in resisting the malicious attempts of Thomas late earl of Kent, and John late earl of Salisbury, and other traitors and rebels, who had traiterously taken up arms against us and our crown, contrary to their allegiance; we do give and grant to the men aforesaid, all the goods and chattels, in whole hands soever they may be found, which did belong to the said late earls, and the other traitors, and were found in the said town when the said earls and other traitors were there arretted by the men aforesaid; excepting all gold and silver, and money, and vessels of gold or silver, or gilded, and except all jewels of all kinds; to hold unto the said men of our gift. in witness whereof, &c.

Given at Westminster the twenty-eighth day of February, 1 H. 4.

The same Year, the King rewards them with another Concession.

THE king, to all unto whom these presents shall come, greeting. Know ye that of our especial grace, and for the good service which our beloved liege-people and commons of the town of Cirencester, as well men as women, have performed unto us, in the taking of the earls of Kent and Salisbury, and of others their followers, in the late rebellion, do grant unto the men four does in season, to be delivered unto them by our chief forester, for the time being, or his deputy, out of our forest of Bradon; and also one hoghead of wine, to be received every year out of the port of our town of Bristol, by the hand of our officer therein for the time being. We also grant unto the women aforesaid six bucks, to be delivered them in right season, by our chief forester aforesaid, or his deputy, out of the forest aforesaid; and also one hoghead of wine, to be delivered to them out of the port of our said town of Bristol, by the hands of our officer therein for the time being. This grant to continue during our pleasure. In witness whereof, &c.

An Ordination made by William King of England, concerning Derhurst.

WILLIAM king of the Englishmen, earl of Normandy, and Cænomannensium to the faithful believers in Christ of whatsoever nation. Our blessed saviour and merciful God, patient and full of pity, amongst other his precepts concerning mercy, saith, That all the things of this world are as nought, in communion with eternal happiness, and therefore commands us that we should out of what we now possess, lay up everlasting treasure in these words, Lay up to yourselves treasure in heaven, where neither rust nor moth can corrupt. We therefore being excited by that good precept, and by our wife Maud, with the prudent council of our nobles, and for the good of own soul, and the souls of all our children, do assign and confer the church of Deorherst, situated within the jurisdiction and county of the city of Gloster, with all its appurtenances, unto St. Dennys, who was the happy apostle of France, in as full manner as our did grant the same to our faithful subject Baldwin, then a monk of that saint, now the abbat of St. Edmondsbury; and in like manner as we our self did grant the same to him after we possess the kingdom. Let this monastery, and all belonging to it, be free from all earthly services. We also grant the same privilege to Tainton and its appurtenances, which the aforesaid king had given to the same saint, thereby to gain an eternal reward, decreeing that it be likewise free as this which we now give; that we and our children, by the prayers of that saint, and of his companions Rustious and Eleutherius, may be prosperous in this world, and obtain an eternal happy mansion hereafter. If any one shall detract from this our gift, let him be of what degree soever, let him by the vengeance of almighty God have the same fate with Dathan and Abiram, unless he repent and make satisfaction and amends to that saint, and to the brethren intituled to that monastery. This privilege was confirmed in the monastery of St. Swithin, in the city of Winchester, in the year of our Lord 1069, in the reign of king William the First, on the of Easter, after the celebration of mass: These witnesses agreeing thereunto.

I king William do corroborate this our grant and confirmation with the sign of the holy cross.

I Maud, queen of the said king, do acknowledge my content therein.

I Richard, son of the king, do approve the grant of my father and mother.

I Stigand, archbishop of Canterbury, do confirm it.

The King's Patent, making Derhurst which is an alien Priory to be denizen.

THE king to all, &c. greeting. Know ye, that whereas the priory of Derhurst in the county of Gloucester, is an alien priory of the order of St. Benedict, in which priory (said to be a monastery in the year 1006) St. Alphege at that time was a monk profess, who afterwards in the reign of king Ethelred our progenitor, heretofore king of England, was constituted archbishop of Canterbury, as in the legend of St. Alphege it does more fully appear. And whereas St. Edward, of pious and famous memory, heretofore king of England, our ancestor, out of his sincere and hearty devotion which he did bear to St. Dennis, did give and grant the said priory to the abbey of St. Dennis in France; from the time of which grant the priory has continued a perpetual and conventual priory and cell of that abbey, and so continues at present. And whereas the said priory, and convent of the said priory, and their preceding priors and convents have ever had, time out of mind, cloysters, dormitories, refectories, and a common seal, and other necessary and fitting conveniencies for a priory and convent, suitable to their revenues and decency of religion; and whereas the said priory and convent do to this day enjoy the same, as we are credibly informed: By virtue of which grant and donation, the abbat and convent of the abbey of St. Dennis, whenever the place of prior in the said priory did become void, did always present some religious person of the abbey of St. Dennis unto the said priory, who by virtue of that presentation was the right and lawful prior thereof; until of late, by reason of war begun between us and France, the said priory can have but slow and difficult access to the said abbey to procure a new presentation, wherefore wherefore at the humble request of our beloved in Christ Hugh the present prior of the said priory, and of the convent thereof, we are besought to take into our consideration, and to find a remedy whereby this evident danger in procuring a presentation from abroad may be hereafter best avoided. We therefore being inclined to favour their humble petition, do of our especial grace, after having fully and maturely considered the premises, grant unto the said Hugh the present prior of the said priory, and to the convent of the place, that they and their successors shall be denizens in the same manner and form, and as fully and intirely to all intents and purposes as any other English priors are held, deemed, and reputed; and that the said prior and convent shall hereafter have and hold the said priory as an English priory, together with all their manors, lands, tenements, and possessions of the said priory, with all their appurtenances; and shall have all and all sorts of liberties, immunities, and privileges, and shall use and enjoy the same as freely as any other religious men of the same order Ance Oriundi did use or enjoy the same yielding and paying tithes, subsidies, and dues, as other denizens of that order do throughout the kingdom of England. And moreover of our farther grace, we grant for us and our heirs, as much as in us lies, to the said prior and convent, and their successors, that when and how often the place of prior shall become void, whether by death, resignation, or acceptance of other perferment by the prior of the said priory, that then the said convent and monks of that place, in every such vacancy of the said priory, shall and may freely elect one of themselves to be prior, first obtaining a licence for the same from us and our successors. In witness whereof, &c.

Witness the king at Cheswick, the twenty-fourth day of February.

By writ under the priory seal of the same date, and by authority of parliament, and for 20l. paid into the Manaper.

The Charter of the most glorious King Kenulph, concerning the first Foundation of the Monastery at Winchelcombe.

IN the 811th year of the incarnation of our blessed Lord Jesus Christ the saviour of the world, who reigned in the heavens from all eternity, in the fourth year of the indiction, and in the sixteenth year of our reign by the grace of God, and on the ninth day of November. I Kenulph king of the Mercians, by God's favour and assistance, did begin an imperfect work at a place called antiently by the inhabitants Winchelcombe, in the province of the Wixes: It is now a noble church, and not inglorious in its first design. It was dedicated by Wulfred archbishop of Canterbury to the honour of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the blessed Mary his mother, who held him in her bosom, whom heaven and earth could not contain, where I intend to lay my body to rest in the Lord. It seemed good to me to invite all the great men of the kingdom of Mercia, all bishops, princes, earls, deputies, and my own kindred, as also Cuthred king of Kent, Sired king of the West Saxons, with all those who were members of our synod, to be present and witnesses at the dedication of the said church; which church I have built to the honour and glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, for the love of heaven, and for the expiation of my sins, and for procuring a blessing on my endowment, and to secure those privileges which the Roman bishops by authority of St. Peter the prince of apostles have indulged to me.

I Kenulph, by the favour of God, king of the Mercians, out of gratitude for their good will, who by the authority of the apostles have strengthened and confirmed the grants and decrees of my synods to the security of my endowment, by me granted to the monastery of Winchelcomb, and particularly for the confirmation of my endowment, made by the authority of pope Leo, and afterwards by pope Paschal, by the authority of his power, and farther confirmed in three synods of the men of Mercia, with their unanimous consent, whereby the grant of the endowments by me made for the good of myself and my heirs is corroborated; and also all my gifts, which with a free heart I gave to the great men of the kingdom of Mercia, and of other kingdoms, in gold, silver, and other utensils; and also in choice horses given to them, according to their ranks and qualities, and a pound of pure silver to those who had no lands, and a mark of gold to every priest, and one shilling to every one of the servants of God; and all these gifts were becoming our royal dignity, and were in number so many, and in value so great, that they are inestimable. All which I bestowed to procure that the endowment by me granted to the said monastery might be firm and irrecoverable, and might be settled for ever for the good of me and my heirs.

I Kenulph, king of the Mercians, have also obtained the banner of the holy cross on which Jesus Christ our Lord did suffer, that it might be a safeguard and protection of my soul, and of all my temporal affairs, and of all my heirs, against the designs of the wicked one. And if any person whatsoever, be he great or small, shall attempt by violence to do wrong to this holy banner, let him be excommunicated and accursed, and by God's just judgment let him be sever'd from any benefit thereof, unless he shall make amends to the said church by full satisfaction. And know ye, that all this is corroborated by the favour of the blessed trinity, and by the protection of angels, archangels, patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, confessors, virgins, and all saints. And I Kenulph, and all the great men who were present, and witnesses hereof, in our great synodical councils, do ordain and decree, that if any person who has forfeited his life, or is guilty of any other crime, open or secret, and shall escape to the bounds of my inheritance by me granted, and shall enter the church, and demand the holy banner of the cross, such person shall find entire safety and protection; and that no person presume to be so bold, or to entertain any wicked thoughts to embezzle any thing for fear, or to sell, give, or mortgage any of the lands of my endowment, unless for a certain time, and for the life only of one person. But let all things continue inviolable, and remain for ever as we firmly decreed the same in three general synods.

Witnesses of the truth hereof, and confirmed by them under the sign of the cross, as followeth:

I Kenulph, king of the Mercians, do establish this decree with the sign of the cross.

I Cuthred, king of Kent, do agree hereunto, and do affix the sign of the holy cross.

I Sired, king of the West Saxons, do confirm the same, and sign it with the holy cross.

I Wulfred, archbishop of Canterbury, do agree and subscribe.

NUMBER XXXV.

The Bull of Alexander the Third, Pope of Rome, confirming all the Churches, Towns, and Rents belonging to the Monastery of Winchelcombe, in the year 1175.

Alexander, bishop, servant of the servants of God, to our beloved sons Henry, abbat of the monastery of the blessed Mary, and St. Kenelme of Winchelcombe, and to the brethren there, both present and future, who have profess a regular life. Forasmuch as it behoveth the apostolical benediction to be a defence unto all such who have chosen a religious life, lest the inconsiderate rashness of any should divert them from their good resolutions, or should violate the band of holy religion, which God forbid.

We therefore do readily comply with the just desires of our well beloved sons in the Lord, and do take the said monastery in which you live in all godly obedience, into St. Peter's and our own protection, and by the authority of this present writing, we defend the same, ordaining that whatsoever possessions or goods the said monastery justly and canonically have or shall hereafter thro' the blessing of God, by just means obtain, by the grants of bishops, kings, or princes, or by the oblation of other good people, shall ever remain firm and inviolable to them and their successors; and we think fit herein to specify them in express terms. First, the scite of the place whereon the said monastery is built, with all its appurtenances; the church of Twining, with its appurtenances; the church of Sherburne, with its appurtenances; the church of Ennestone, with the chapel of Chawford, with all its appurtenances; the church of Alney, with all its appurtenances; the church of Bladinton, with all its appurtenances; the church of Staunton, with all its appurtenances; the church of Snowhill, with all its appurtenances; the church of St. Kenelme, with the chapel of St. Peter, with the chapel of Hailes, the chapel of Southley, the chapel of Aldrinton, the chapel of Diclesdon, the chapel of Prestecot, the chapel of Charlington, with all their appurtenances.

The town of Twining, with all the lands, orchards, meadows, pastures, waters, mills, and all their appurtenances; the town of Shirburne, with the men, lands, meadows, pastures, waters, mills, and all their appurtenances; the town of Enneston, with the men, lands, woods, meadows, pastures, mills, waters, and all their appurtenances; the town of Alney, with the men, lands, meadows, pastures, woods, and all appurtenances; the town of Bladinton, with the men, lands, meadows, pastures, mills, and all its appurtenances; the town of Snowhill, with the men, lands, pastures, and all its appurtenances; the town of Ethelmington, with the mills, men, lands, meadows, pastures, and all its appurtenances; the town of Newton, with all its appurtenances; the land in Wenric, with all its appurtenances; and the lordship which you have in Wincelcomb, and all the lands which you have in that town, either by gift or purchase, and the two mills in the same town; the lordship which you have in Cote, half an hide of land which Harold de Sudely gave in alms to the church; the commons of pasture between Wincelcomb and Sudely; one yard-land and three acres which you bought of Robert Ruffel, with its appurtenances; one yard-land which Radulph de Sudely gave in alms to your church, with its appurtenances; a hide of land which you have in Greton, two hides which you have in Aldrinton, the land which you have in Freolinton, two hides which you have in Hudicote, three houses in London, your salt-pits in Wiche, one house in Oxford.

Moreover we forbid you my son the abbat, and all your successors, to alienate any of the churches or possessions, or treasure of your monastery, without the consent of the major part or more discreet part of your chapter; but it shall be lawful for you and your successors to chuse priests, and present them to the bishop, for your parish churches, which if the bishop approves them, he may commit the cure of souls to them, who shall account to you for their temporal profits, and to the bishop concerning the souls of the people: And as to the corn of such lands which you shall keep in your own hands, let no man presume to demand any tithes thereof. We also decree, that the right of sepulture in those churches shall be free, and that no man oppose the burial of any person who shall desire to be buried there, except such person be either excommunicated or interdicted, reserving the dues of burial to such churches from whence the corps shall be brought; and tho' the whole nation should incur an interdict, yet it shall be lawful to you to celebrate divine service within your monastery, provided it be in a low voice, your doors shut, and no bells rung, and that you admit no excommunicated or interdicted person amongst you. And we do farther by these presents decree and straitly command, that no fee shall be exacted of your abbat for this our benediction hereby indulged.

It is moreover lawful for you to retain in your monastery, in order to their conversion, both clerks or lay-brethren, who are free and unmarried, without disturbance from any person whatsoever. And we farther forbid any of those brethren, after they have profest themselves monks, upon light occasions to quit the cloyster, without leave from the abbat; and whoever shall so depart without a certificate from the society, let none presume to receive him, unless it be in order for a stricter rule of life. But you shall receive from the bishop of your diocese, the crism, the holy oyl, consecration of your altars or churches, and the admission or promotion into holy orders of any of your clerks or monks, provided that the bishop be a true catholick, and in communion with the apostolical see, and shall confer the orders without any fee and reward, or any other ill meaning, otherwise it shall be lawful upon such occasion to go to any other bishop, who shall be first well certified by you, to receive from him what shall in any of those cases be desired.

After your decease, and so after the decease of any of your successors, no person shall be imposed as abbat, by any device or force, but who shall be elected by common consent of the brethren, or the major part of them, or the major part of the most discreet in the fear of God, and according to the rule of St. Benedict.

We further decree that no person whatsoever presume rashly to disturb the said monastery, or to deprive them of their possessions, or to retain any of them, or to diminish the same, or any ways to vex or molest them, but let all things be preserved whole and intire, and assigned to the several uses of them for whole convenience and maintenance they were at first intended, provided that it no ways doth infringe the authority of the apostolical see, nor the canonical jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese; whoever therefore, be he a person ecclesiastical or lay, knowing this our constitution and order, shall rashly endeavour to oppose the same, let him be admonished a second or third time, and if he makes not plenary satisfaction for his fault, let him be deprived of all power and honour, and let him expect that divine vengeance will attend him for the wickedness which he hath committed, and let him be debarred from the body and blood of our Lord and God, and redeemer Jesus Christ, and let him be liable to the severe account at the day of judgment; but on the other side, let all those who shall observe the rules and rights of this monastery, partake of the peace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that they may receive the blessing of their good works in this life, and eternal rewards of peace before the severe judge at the last day. Amen.

NUMBER XXXVI.

The Charter of Richard Bishop of Worcester, confirming the Appropriations of the several Churches already made to the Monastery of Winchcombe.

KNow all men by these presents, that we Richard by the divine permission, bishop of Worcester, in our personal visitation of our diocese, according to our accustomed right, have summoned our beloved sons in Christ, those religious persons the abbat and convent of the monastery at Winchcombe, to appear before us at a certain time and place, to shew by what right and title they hold and have the several churches, indowments, and pensions hereafter mentioned, to wit, the parochial churches of Wincelcomb, Rowell, Shirburne, Twining, Bladinton, which are appropriated and united to them and their monastery; and also their portions of tithes and annual pensions, to wit, 20s. from the church of Bladinton, 10s. from the church of Muckleton, within the parish of Quenington, the tithes of their demesns in Bladinton, the tithes of their demesns in Adelmington, the tithes of their demesns lands in Marston Sicca, the tithes of their demesns lands in Staunton and Snowhill; and also two parts in three of the greater tithes throughout the parish of Staunton aforesaid; and also the tithes of their demesns lands in Alney in the parish of Kynemarton; and also the tithes of their demesns lands in Charleton, Halling, Hasleton, and Yanworth, all within our diocese. And whereas the said religious persons did judicially appear before us at the appointed time and place, and did offer to shew their writings, titles, and claims, and prove that the above mentioned churches, their portions of tithes and pensions, did of right belong to them, and that they have held, possessed, and enjoyed the same from the time of their grants quietly and peaceably, and have often earnestly desired of us to admit them to prove in form before us their just right, and to pronounce judgment for their canonical possession of them, and that we would confirm the same, and dismiss them from our court, and from any farther examination. And we being willing to do full justice herein to the said religious persons, have therefore inspected, perused, and diligently examined their apostolical letters and bulls, and their other evidences and proofs, which had been judicially exhibited before us concerning the premisses, by which they did sufficiently make good their allegations; we therefore rightly proceeding, do by a definitive sentence in these words declare, That the said religious persons have a good right, title, and possession to the several churches, portions of tithes, pensions, and tithes aforesaid, and the said churches, portions of tithes, and pensions, and the several tithes and every one of them do of right belong to the said religious persons and to their monastery, in like manner and form as they claim the same, and so ought to continue to them for ever; and all the said churches, tithes, portions of tithes, and pensions, and every and singular of them so claimed by the said religious persons, we of our certain knowledge and legal authority do confirm unto them and their monastery, and do decree that those religious persons and monks were and are the rightful possessors of the said churches, tithes, portions of tithes, and pensions; and we will that they enjoy the same firm and ratify'd for ever, and we by our decree, dismiss the said religious persons as to all and singular the premisses, from farther attendance at our court, and from any farther examination. In testimony of all which, we have hereunto caused our seal to be affixed.

Given at our manor of Blockly, the sixteenth day of the month of November, in the year 1404, and in the fourth year of our translation to this see.
