A glance at affairs in Mexico.

Although the latest intelligence from Vera Cruz is calculated to create positive and speedy relief to the army under General Scott, we have little confidence in considering that our troops have remained inactive since they made their headquarters in the city of the Aztecs. All the information received from Mexico gives color to the opinion that the people of that country, who blindly and obstinately left upon a contemplation of the war, are utterly destitute of the resources, the union of feeling, and the moral fortitude necessary to carry it on. The defeat of the Mexican generals Contreras and Churubusco, followed by the storming of Chapultepec, the discomfiture at the Garita, and the final reduction of their capital, appears to have plunged them into profound discomfiture. Their immense army of 32,000 men, collected by SANTA ANNA with extreme labor, disciplined with diligent attention, and stationed with fortifications, that being strong by nature, were rendered seemingly impregnable by art, is dispersed and disorganized—a large portion slain, and the remainder scattered in all directions, without leaders, means or subsistence, future projects, or that sense of common interest and common danger which is now at length pressing together with tenfold force upon the few, even when severed by adverse fortune to retreat. The arrogant Chiefs of this disorganized host are wanderers and fugitives—one has fled to Queretaro, another to Jalisco, a third to Oaxaca, while many of the subordinate officers have turned robbers and marauders, and active bands of predatory banditti, infest the country and commit outrages upon the persons and property of their own defenceless compatriots.

With respect to the invincible "Napoleon of the Nation," the before SANTA ANNA—he who always boasts of being first in the fray, but is ever found foremost in the flight—if we may do the accounts from Vera Cruz deserve some hope that he has become disgusted with a contest in which he is compelled continually to receive hard blows, instead of exchanging peaceful pronunciamentos and getting up bloodless revolutions. He is said, perchance, that his native country of Jalapa is surrendered, that the ungovernable sons of Washington, to persecution more cruel than the "inhuman" Spaniards of Pennsylvania. The State Papers of both Iowa and Wisconsin, both sparse as to population, and the latter containing but 30,000 souls, and that scattered over a territory as large as Great Britain, have petitioned for admission into the Union, and have been received. Even Illinois, whose name appears at the head of the present article, is a native of Charleston, a city where many have assailed violently her chivalrous character, and which, in the opinion of the Carolinians, has long since lost the high position it once held as the second city in the United States. Among the Galaxy, the Lares and Penates of Carolina, Mr. Dimmock would never have held a second place. With a really able, in the style of composition, if they all have skill to touch the feelings in truthful, manly strains. Mr. Dimmock of Louisville, Kentucky, is a native of Carolina. She has indeed reproduced and felt what it was to commune with the universe. To her touch, the heart and affections respond—being both a part of nature and of the human heart. More limited in her subject "Moan" completes in her pen the description of childhood, the deep and unimpassioned feelings of womanhood, her confidence, her truth and her devotedness. We recognise nature in the utterances of the heart—the breathings of the inner spirit, than the gorgeous coloring of the visible world. "Amelie" had fitted nicely beautiful scenes, and seen so much of loveliness in those surrounding her, that beauty seems the stepmother; in which other breathed—and which gives a painting to every thing. Her poetical dress—"Moina" is expressive of her many passionate, for she has experienced adversities—the world has not ever been to her a paradise.

A native of South Carolina, and a daughter of a Huguenot Huguenot, of that State, Mrs. Bivins received every advantage that education could bestow; and at an early age exhibited a talent of a high order—and a very early age began to write in public. Her contributions to the periodical literature of her native State readily attracted attention, and when it happened that her self-reliance left her destitute for the support of herself and children, she resolved to make literature her profession. Her success has been unusually great, and she has attained a high position in the literature of the South and West.
