were sent to Mexico, that they would be entitled to their discharge within a morth of their landing at Vera Cruz; and to have sent them I under such circumatenees, arques a degree of foily of which no other administration could have been gainly. The decision was made, tro, for positical purposes, and to manufacture roluical capital by the party making it. That General Scott did or could have made such a decision, is absolutely impossible. First, because he wanted the services of these sent to march apon the city of Mexico, and waild (we think) if he had possessed the power, have complete their advance with him, in defiance of the decision of the War Department; and secondly, he knows that according to the well-established principles of our government—established and acted upon for fifty years—no class of soldiers are entitled to their discharges in time

Thus we perceive that the New York and Washington papers are directly at issue—the one charging the Secretary of War with the entire responsibility of the discharge of the volunteers six weeks before the appiration of their term of service, and daring life most critical period of the War; the other re-affirming that let the discharge of the volunteers have been right or wrong, sound policy, or an egregious blunder, the accountability for the set lies at the door of General Scott.
