ENTERPRISE.

One of the city papers had something to say a day or two ago, touching the enterprise of New Orleans. Heaven save the mark! The enterprise of the road found by Palgrave in a book of marble, where it had been slumbering for twenty centuries, is not about analogous to that of New Orleans. We seem just as cold-blooded as that animal, and like it, periodically to wake up—if he ever does take a look around him—and we do once more for an unbroken repose. We are every quarter the hum and bustle of speculation heard, while every commercial convention is starting to wrest from us the trade we owe to the bounty of God, and to the skill and industry of man; while rival cities and magnificent burghs are seeking to arrest the creation of new channels for commerce, in order, partially at least, to neutralize the immense superiority of this, and to snatch from us a moiety of the products that are fed there by us to the West—we, supinely, look on at the future, and anticipate nothing in our imminent destiny, half and passive, like foolish you, and, like the hare and the tortoise, we shall be beaten by the tortoise, though unequal tortoise.

Take our enterprise, and these are its manifestations. The press has in vain endeavored to arouse the public mind and stimulate the energy and the ambition of capitalists. Vainly have we declaimed over Tehuantepec, Ship Canals, Florida Railroads, Mississippi Railroads, and a host of other schemes of internal improvement. We are raised up to a popular conception that considers the Continent—mere birds of passage, who visit New Orleans to profit by its commerce, but to build themselves to the city by any outlay of capital, or display of enterprise. What the state of things endures, a spectator may prove to demonstration. The merchants of the business in our midst must be content to undertakings having for their object the enlargement of trade, ere we can hope to see it.

In an article commenting upon the [illegible] of Mr. Burke's contributions to [illegible] Richmond Whig [illegible] gentleman's style to the [illegible] of the Louisville Gazette, edited by [illegible] Prentis, and immortalized by [illegible] sketches of the Pickwick club, [illegible] letter from the Gazette is quoted [illegible] Whig as a fortible illustration of the [illegible] of the junior editor of the Union.

Hole and Corner Suffrey.

A [illegible] contemporary has recently [illegible] a [illegible] of much wisdom in the vain and [illegible] of which he once could boast; [illegible] of his efforts to guard him intuitively [illegible] the sloughs on which his [illegible] seems to wallow with delight. With a Mr Ritpath's mannerism, who all on bats [illegible] quaintness, his sophomoric [illegible] to lead for most the tarnished [illegible] and point drawn from [illegible] on man—he is ever a graceful writer [illegible] perception, eagle-eye in discerning [illegible] weakness of an adversary, swift in attack, [illegible] in defence, ingenious in argument, and [illegible] in invocation. His co-laborer, on the [illegible] is heavy and verbose; in reasoning [illegible] weaver of words; in intellectual powers [illegible] admirably in the use of prohibited words, [illegible] terse in abuse alone, and utterly unacquainted [illegible] rules of truth. We freely admit [illegible] deteriorating influence of such a mind [illegible] we are that the journal has insensibly led [illegible] of editorials into sinister paths; and that the [illegible] which, when conducted solely by Mr. [illegible] seldom forfeited its dignity, or the respect [illegible] readers, has, since the accession of Mr. Ritchas, been undoubtedly the most defamatory [illegible] journal in the country. The [illegible] servitude of the Burke element in its columns [illegible] is a curious illustration of the triumph of [illegible] and brazen mediocrity over talent unconnected with firmness or purpose.

Pavilion Varieties.—This establishment [illegible] with a bill of entertainments that [illegible] to captivate the most fastidious. The [illegible] of performances embraces a grand Nautical Overture by Signor Gibici, a merry extravaganza by Mr. Bass, a grand divertissement of ballet; the laughable burlesta of the Day at the Fair; and the amusing and laughter [illegible] operatic travestie entitled Jenny Lind, [illegible] which Mrs C. Howard, who is said to be a [illegible] actress and admired vocalist, will [illegible] her first appearance. We bespeak for [illegible] occasion an audience that will pack the house from floor to dome.

France, with an army of 500,000 men, has been threatened, while England, with little more than 100,000, has 9,252.

BALTIMORE, 7th November.

NEW YORK MARKET.

On the 6th instant the cotton market of New York closed at a decline of one-fourth. Five hundred bales have changed hands.

Stocks are improving.

CONGRESS.

In the House of Representatives balloting is still going on for the Speakership. At the last trial Winthrop got one hundred votes, and Cobb sixty-three.

MISSISSIPPI ELECTIONS.—All the counties in the State, except Marion and Wayne, have been heard from, and the vote for Governor stands thus—For Quitman, 31,777—for Lea, whig, 22,645. Quitman's majority, 9,152. For Congress, Thompson, dem., beats Bradford, whig, in the First District, 2,289 votes; in the Second District the majority for Featherston, dem., over Harris, whig, is 1,058; in the Third District, Gray, whig, is beaten by McWillie, dem., 567 votes; in the Fourth District, Brown, dem., beats Winans, whig, 4,160 votes. The Senate will be composed of 20 Locofocos and 10 whigs—the lower House will consist of 62 Locos and 36 Whigs.

NEW YORK OFFICIAL.—The State canvassers counted the votes at Albany, on the 28th ult. The aggregate Whig vote is 1,616,816; the aggregate Locofoco vote, 1,613,927—difference in favor of the Whigs, 2,889; average Whig majority, 301. The Whig vote is less by 16,501 than that polled for Taylor; the Locofoco vote is less by 33,087 than that polled for Cass and Van Buren.

"A SNAG AS IS A SNAG."—The Louisville Courier states that on the night of the 13th ult., the steamer Hiram Powers, on her upward trip, with a woodboat in tow, struck a snag, barely missing her hull, passed through the cook-house, pantry and two state-rooms; carrying away the cooking-stove, pots, pans and dishes, and and finally emerged (with the second cook, who was caught sleeping in one of his diminutive rooms, through the hurricane roof, where it protruded forty feet beyond the deck. Two of the firemen were thrown overboard by the shock and drowned, but neither the cook nor the occupants of the state rooms were injured.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 28

THE STEAMER ST. PAUL.—The steamer St. Paul, sunk on the 17th inst., near Hat Island, has been raised and brought to the city.

MISS BREMER TO HER AMERICAN READERS.—Mr. Putnam has just issued in New York the first volume of his proposed edition of the Swedish novelist, being her tale of The Neighbors, translated by Mary Howitt. It will be seen by her American Preface, that he has most generously extended to her the privilege of a native author, so that she is directly interested in the sale of the work. Hear her sentiments concerning our country:

"Among the many agreeable things which have met me on my arrival in the United States of America, I count as one the proposal of Mr. Putnam to give a new edition of my works, on such favorable conditions but be agreeable to me, since they offer me the privilege of a native author. But if an author has a heart—and authors commonly have—the best reward, by far, is that can be offered to them, they will feel to be that of sympathizing minds, of cordial hearts and hands. And as I cannot but feel that Mr. Putnam's proposal proposes on some such basis, it is to me the sign of a tacit, to which I cannot but look with heartfelt joy, as well as with a feeling of wonder. For, strange indeed, and wonderful it seems, that a mere stranger, coming from shores far remote, should be received by the great nation as in a dear and loving home. Yet, if I had doubted that wonder, the first day of my arrival at New York would have convinced me of its reality, in seeing the doors opened to me, in a manner I never shall forget, nor ever be able fully to acknowledge, seeing as I, even here, at this moment, do, all the heaven—not a perfect home, I do—to me the more glorious thing, as, indeed, my visit to America is intended most particularly to me business, to its bustling hearths and its fireside. And yet, how few of those homes shall I be able to visit personally! And I should wish to go to them, now I express my thanks, my gratitude. My books must go for me; now I can part with them; for half at least of all other is known in his books.

"Let me, then, go, tell the homes of England, and father, a true wife and mother, dear to children, the spirit of freedom, and peace, and love, and that beautiful feeling of noble brotherhood which makes them colder happiness on their own countries according to their aims and wishes, there also would I fain be myself, to seek to enjoy, to shed tears of delight, that paradise which I have found on this poor earth. Tell them, as my books, that I am bring you in the homes of good and noble minds. I feel it as a joyful, but also sad, and must sigh and say to you: 'Would you were better?' Well! I cannot help that challenge. I may well see your faults, but you have outgrown my reach. For what, ever good there is in you, I have to thank the homes of Sweden. A new page is turned. And in the homes of the New World I shall learn a new lesson. Glorious are its earth, and rivers, and mountains—but the glory and chief blessings of the land of the setting sun will be found in the home—the new home—the home of true freedom, union, and beauty.

"The ancients looked forward to the land of the setting sun as to the land of promise, where the earth gave forth fruits for eternal life; and there is the home of the Hesperides a most have treasures and beauty of its own, and a calling not known to the Old World. Spiritual, indeed, does not repeat itself as earthly nature. Hesiod's golden age does not return once for all; and Solomon may say what he will, we will say that there are new things yet to be seen under the sun.

"I, then, as one who is bright in the clear sky—how dimly shining through the blackness of the cloud ture intended her to be. We believe in Europe that this people is to be found in the United States of America.

"FREDERIKA BREMER.

"NEWBURGH, on the Hudson, Oct., 1849."

BENTON AND ATCHISON.—Old Bullion having left Missouri, and taken up his abode in Washington, his colleague has sped a dart at him.—We find the following passage, which is bitter enough in all conscience:

"Does the Senator suppose that he has a monopoly of public and private talk? If so, he is greatly mistaken. In the article of abuse I read to-day, that he has no competitor in the State, and of this no better evidence can be furnished than his recent speeches, letters and publications. If I could descend to the small and mean business of his "private and public talk" on steamboats, in taverns and everywhere, it would fill a volume—and such a volume. No man opposed to him of any grade or condition escapes the venom of his tongue, and to his four colleagues he gives at least a full share. Admit, for the sake of argument, that all the Senator charges of my public and private talk to be truly reported, the veriest pettifogger in the land would not for a moment insist that he had proved a conspiracy 'to put him out of the way, and out of the way of him who made a dissolution of the Union.'

"Our old Senator ever-estimates his importance. Let him be withdrawn from the Senate, and his absence will scarcely be known to the nation.

"The cry of conspiracy is "a wolf-bowl" raised to draw off the attention of the people of Missouri from the true issue, viz: Your Senator deserts him, and sets their instruction at defiance. This he denominates "an appeal to the people, the whole people," and yet refuses to submit whether he is for or against certain measures, which it is material to know in the determination of his "appeal." Instructions to vote against the restriction of Slavery in the territories of the United States, and to sustain the principles of the Missouri Compromise, he calls a conspiracy to dissolve the Union.

"If he says that the State is to be carried against him by means of a he and a scarecrow, an abolition lie and a Wilmot Proviso scarecrow.

"If this be so, then he has adopted an ingenious and appropriate defence—a dissunion lie and a nullification scarecrow. The Senator further says that 'they (his colleagues) go beyond personal animosity, and use language which implies a desire not merely for political, but my personal degradation and destruction.

"For myself, I assure the honorable Senator that I desire neither his personal degradation or destruction, but I do desire to see him retained from further public service; and that he be permitted to retire and spend the remainder of his days in peace and quiet. Let him write "for the benefit of posterity" a history of his own life and times. Mr. Calhoun's Nullification, plots and treasonable conspiracies, will furnish a pleasing and inexhaustible theme for the execrable of his pen."

DISTURBING RUMOR.—A man named Perry Lyon, name unknown, yesterday before Recorder Scott, charging one Smith, engaged with having attacked [illegible] assis from him in broad daylight, at the [illegible] Warehouse street. A warrant was issued for his arrest.

A Laughable Circumstance.

It was amusing to see the different kinds of faces exhibited at the Locofoco convention last Monday. Some of the old Democrats who have been for years fighting under the Democratic banner, swore terribly when they found that their leaders were selling them to the Abolition party. Among others, a conical-looking old fellow, who had hezza'd for Jackson and Polk, delivered himself something in this wise:

"Well, really, are our leaders going to make us abandon the old Democratic platform, and compel us to fight under the black flag of Abolitionism? Gentlemen, I won't be sold—I'm a Democrat—I'm a freeman—I'd rather vote with the Federal Whigs than the Abolitionists. Why, the ticket our leaders want us to vote for reminds me of a coon story I once heard.

"An old coon," says he, "had selected a hollow stump and made it his nest for the winter, at great pains, with straw, leaves, &c. But one day on his return, he looked down into his nest from the top, and what should be in it but that other animal called the skunk.

"How came you in here?"

Skunk—"Because I am."

Coon—"Well, get out, then."

Skunk—"I shan't do it."

Coon—"But you will, it's my house."

Skunk—"I won't, for its mine."

Coon—"Well, who are you, then?"

Skunk—"Me—I'm a coon."

Coon—"You a coon! why you don't talk like a coon; you don't act like a coon; you don't look like a coon; and hang me you don't smell like a coon."

"Now," says the old Democrat, "the men on this ticket are not Democrats—some of them never voted the Democratic ticket—they don't talk like Democrats—they don't act like Democrats—they don't look like Democrats—and I'll be hanged if they don't smell like Abolitionists instead of Democrats. Shall I vote this ticket? No-sir-ee—I'll not touch it with a forty-foot pole," and the old Democrat departed amidst hearty bursts of laughter.—Tuscarawas Adv.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, Nov. 28.

Murder of Lieut. Harrison—News from Salt Lake—Trial of Pomeroy by the Mormons—Lieut. Harrison of the army, was murdered on the 14th or Nov., by a party of Tonkawa Indians, on the Colorado River. He belonged to the escort corps of Capt. Marcy, and was returning from Santa Fé. Mr. Marcy had arrived from Washin. Mr. Thomas Forsyth, who arrived lately from Salt Lake, passed many California emigrants during the month of Sept. Gen. Johnson was at Salt Lake when he left. Mr. Pomeroy of Lexington, had been tried by the Mormons for participating in the Mormon ware. A party of Mormons had arrived from California a few days before Forsyth left, bringing much gold. The Mormons generally express great hostility toward the U. States.

ALABAMA.—The Locofoco papers in Alabama appear excessively indignant at the election of Mr. CLEMENS as U. S. Senator. The Montgomery Advertiser speaks of the result in the following lugubrious strain:

Col. King and Gov. Fitzpatrick, two long-tried and faithful public servants, were tomahawked by an overwhelming majority of the party, yes, by two-thirds, and were thus, beyond all question, its candidates. An examination into each beam will show, that they received about every total more than three-fourths of their party. Neither King, at any one vote, more than 15 to 17 Democratic votes, out of the 70 present. So that, in the defeat of one of these nominees, the Democratic party itself has been overthrown, and that, too, by the coalition of the entire Whig party, four or five only excepted, with some sixteen or seventeen disaffected Democrats; and we trust that we may be like pardonable when we predict that it is a blow from which our party will, if ever, take years to recover. We have been in no house from our moorings; we have neither rudder, sail nor compass; the old and time-honored land-marks of our party have been cleared over and blotted out, and our glorious old ship lies at the mercy of a coalition.

MUSIC.—Mr. Giles, a gentleman of much taste and talent, is lecturing in New York on the agencies of Social Culture. From a report of his lecture on music, we extract the following:

Birds are the peculiar musicians of the animal world. But we must listen to their gushing song, not in the gas-lit lecture room, but on the sunny grass. No animal is entirely left out from the concerts of universal nature. Man sympathizes with the lower animals by the medium of music. The war-horse prances at the sounds that inspire his rider; a melody soothes the nerves of the savage, the elephant is charmed with the notes of the bird, the dog has joy in the shepherd's flute, the cow stands in placid rapture while the milk maid sings.

Music is interlaced with all our feelings, whether of joy or sorrow. Rightly used, it is the tried cure of the soul. The sailor pulls more cheerfully for his native shore, and even the slave when he sings feels more that he is a man. In this country we miss the lyric feeling which is common in other lands. Most of our songs are of the sentimental sentence. We hear none of those rural songs at the milking hour which in Europe clothe that hour with its most tender associations. The ploughman does not whistle as he drives his team afield. Our reapers send up no chorus nor make the harvest home merry with their song. Our beings, perhaps, we have in place of these—grave meditations and the manly thoughts of freemen.

Music in social intercourse is the grand quickener and sympathy. The piano is often as necessary to the success of the storied feelings of a company as was the harp of David to soothe the ruffled passions of Saul. Music, in all nations, is used as an antidote to the sense of danger, as well as a stimulus to the passions of combat, and while enbattled hosts march with measured tread to the field of death, music is the magic that lures them to their doom.

The music of ballads and songs is a powerful element in the history of nations. To many, song has been the only instrument, JEWELRY, WATCH-ES, DIAMONDS, SILVER and PLATED WARE, &c., at COST PRICE, FOR CASH ONLY. The Markets.

FRIDAY EVENING, Dec. 7, 1849

The market has been tolerably active since our last, as will be perceived on referring to our separate remarks at foot. Cotton has moved off freely at full prices. Sugar and Molasses have been in fair request, whilst in Breadstuffs and Provisions, the business has been rather moderate.

The steamship Niagara, with dates from Liverpool, to the 24th ult., is now due, and it is more than probable that her news will appear simultaneously with the present.

It continued to rain heavily last Saturday, but since then, the weather has been clear and pleasant.

COTTON—Arrived since the 30th ultimo, of Louisiana and Mississippi, 16,901 bales. Tennessee, 5,430. Alabama, 985. Mobile, 156. Florida, 2.6. Texas, 117. Total, 25,276 bales. Cleared in the same time, for Liverpool, 9,000 bales; for Havre, 9,476; Marseilles, 125; Bordeaux, 108; Barcelona, 867; N. York, 240; Boston, 222; Philadelphia, 600; Baltimore, 50; together, 20,811 bales, making an addition to stock of 15,535 bales, and leaving on hand, inclusive of all on shipboard not cleared this day, a total of 139,966 bales.

During the past week, the Cotton market has more fully sympathized with the upward movement of affairs on the other side. Shippers have come forward freely, and have paid advanced rates, thus placing the market in a healthier latitude than has been the case for some time past. The daily sales have been as follows: Saturday, 2,500 bales, Monday, 2,000, Tuesday 3,000, Wednesday 7,000, yesterday, 10,000, and 3,000 to day, making a total for the week, of 25,500 bales. Buyers for all quarters have anticipated in these operations, and prices close to-day at the rates current last week. Our quotations are accordingly amended.
