"LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE."

There can be no doubt that this letter is to be looked on as the official expression of the feeling of the Cabinet, though written in the name of the President of the Republic, as he would not have sent it off without first laying it before the council. Colonel Ney describes the satisfaction of the French troops at Rome, when this letter became known, as exceedingly great.

THE MEETING ON CONGO SQUARE.

The Whig Meeting of Ratification held on Saturday night on Congo Square, was the grandest political demonstration of the season. In numbers it surpassed, while it equalled in enthusiasm the vast gathering in the same place prior to the Presidential election. At an early hour of the evening, the Whigs of the several Municipalities began to crowd to the square, and long before the arrival of the various political associations, a large and respectable assemblage occupied the immense space around the stand. The square was splendidly illuminated, and a spacious platform in the centre had been erected for the officers and speakers, and decorated with the flag of the United States, and with the beautiful banners of the several clubs, as they filed in to swell the concourse. So numerous was the attendance that an organization of the meeting was called for and effected, before any of the Whig associations reached the ground. GEORGE CLARKE, Esq., was appointed President, and Messrs. L. E. NEE, of the First Municipality; CHARLES E. ROBINSON, of the Second Municipality; and Dr. ALPUENTE, of the Third Municipality, were chosen Vice-Presidents. Messrs. REYNES, HERNANDEZ and BURTARD acted as Secretaries.

The multitude having come to order, Judge D. P. JACKSON proceeded to address the meeting in his usual perspicuous, emphatic and eloquent style. During his speech, the Fillmore Rangers, Declouet Guards, Kenner Rangers, Kenner Reserve Guards, Declouet Rangers, and other auxiliary associations, arrived, and completely filled the square. Every Municipality was largely represented, but the generous and enthusiastic Third seemed absolutely to have sent its entire male population. Hundreds on hundreds of sturdy and hard working Whigs from that regenerated quarter of our city came pouring in, making the air resound with their joyous huzzas, and greeted in turn by the warm cheers of their brethren from the other Municipalities. When all the delegations had reached the spot, the scene was imposing beyond conception. It reminded us of those prodigious mass meetings of 1848, when the whole city appeared to concentrate its teeming numbers in some spacious locality, and the Whigs rushed to the gathering as if they had been invited to a banquet. Just such a meeting was the assemblage of Saturday, and it will be followed by just such a VICTORY.

When Judge JACKSON had concluded his spirited harangue, Col. HUNT appeared on the stand, and, in a masterly effort, reviewed the position of parties, the conduct of the Administration and its claims to the support of every patriot and statesman. His address was received with marked applause. CYRUS DARGY next ascended, and many times was he greeted with tumultuous bursts of approval and applause, as he eloquently urged the claims of Taylor and Fillmore upon the people of the State. His remarks were loudly cheered.

Speeches were made by Mr CASTERAS, Mr. PEA, Mr. [illegible] and the impression appeared to be universal, that the meeting was one of the most successful and enthusiastic ever held in this city. The proceedings were then closed in a procession that occupied more than ten squares, and headed by a band of music, of which the spirit stirring sounds were frequently reiterated as the procession passed
