

THE DAILY. PRINTED AND PUBLISHED DAILY, BY ESTATE PRINTER.

THE UNION IT MUST BE PRESERVED.

TUESDAY MORNING, JAN. 29, 1834.

FOR GOVERNOR:

B. DAWSON,

FOR MAYOR:

JOHN H. HOLLAND.

Our dear friends have arrived. Our papers are quite barren.

With regard to the exclusion of other matter, a circular addressed to "Collectors, Naval Officers and Surveyors from the Treasury, respecting the late reduction of duties, claiming the same important to import and export documents generally."

The Washington correspondent of the Richmond Examiner, writes, with confidence, that "Gen. Jackson means to put up the bank as far as he can afford him, and his friends are against it." U. S. Bank. The depositories of Government will never be restored during his administration.

The bank gets two-thirds of the majority of both houses. The bank will be beaten on this question in the house of representatives. Disgust the thing as it may, the question now is, whether the people or the bank are to rule?

It is expected that the legislatures of Pennsylvania and New Jersey will soon act on this subject. New York certainly will. I think that but for the President, the South would triumph, and perhaps no man in America but he could stand it. But truth will ultimately triumph, and this constitution be saved!

The report circulated, doubtless by the emissaries of the bank, respecting the failure of mercantile houses, daily refutes prediction. While the following from the Charles City Mercury, an opposition paper, compelled to correct one of the mis-statements of the day:

"A paragraph appeared in the Richmond Whig of the 11th indicating the failure of a respectable firm of the city of N. Y., who were authorized to contradict the statement; letters from New York having been received of a subsequent date, in which the original in question, in which no such statement is made, was rejected.

This does us in Congress the all-absorbing subject of the bank drag on heavily. Mr. Southard in the senate, and Mr. Binney in the house, have discharged "a great deal of work" as Col. Crockett would say, at the administration.—Mr. Calhoun succeeds the former gentleman, and is likewise to squint his venom off. Doubtless, Calhoun will not be sparing!

The New-York Standard, in the meanwhile, proposes that congress should cut short by enforcing the previous question, stop the taking up the appropriation bills, turn the bank over to the committee of ways and means, and go home. Let the committee be empowered to make a thorough investigation which they can do before the next session, and then the fate of the bank can be settled definitely. The long speech certainly signify nothing. Not a single opinion will be changed by them for the mind of every man in Congress made up."

The Legislature of Georgia, has incorporated companies to construct three important Rail Roads, one from Savannah to Marion, one from Macon to Forsyth, and from Augusta westward, branching to Athens, Madison in Marion county, and Battonton. The State takes no part in the stock, but employs several schisms to be conducted by individual enterprise and capital. The charters require the roads shall be completed within two years after the passage of the act, and shall be completed within six years thereafter.

Masonry has ceased to exist in Massachusetts as an incorporated institution. The grand lodge of that state has surrendered its charter. The memorial by which the act is made known; sets forth that in order to prevent misunderstanding between the legislature and the people, it is deemed necessary in state, that by dissolving itself of its corporate powers, the grand lodge has relinquished none of its masonic attributes or prerogatives. Those that claims to hold and exert the independent tribe of regular will and legal enactment, is not of legislation, but of the people. The tributes are intelligent men, and without willing to restore any gift of advancement derived from the government whenever it becomes an act of public jealousy, however undivided; yet nothing is further from their intentions or from their convictions of duty, than to sacrifice a private institution for social and benevolent purposes to appear popular excitement, of which that situation may have been the innocent occasion.

To the Editor of the Daily.—Sir—Request the publication of the following questions, on your paper, should you think proper to give them a place, they will in due time be followed by some additional developments. I am, Sir, Your Constant Reader.

New Orleans, Jan. 22, 1834.

Question.—To Andrew Jackson, President of the U. S. of America.—What information do you receive in England and transmit to it, of a correspondence, between certain persons of South Carolina, and individuals of high rank in England?

Answer.—To John C. Calhoun, Senator in Congress.—Were you or were you not privy to certain letters, supposed to be written by Dr. Cooper and the late Mr. Turnbull, to Lord Grey and Palmerston, on the subject of the late movements in South Carolina and the general secession of the Southern States from the Union?

MORE ANON.

To the Editor of the Daily.—Sir—

Mr. White's pretensions can never be satisfied by unlearned men, who have marked his public career, as entitling him to the popular voice in the approaching contest for government. He has had two important posts, namely those of preceding judge of our city court and member of congress, which situations, one would reasonably suppose, would have afforded him ample opportunities to display the astounding abilities which his friends so pertinaciously claim for him.

In the former capacity, his want of respect for legal requirements and want of notoriety, and many of his decisions and opinions stand as bad testimonials that his judgment was not as much as his education did complete.

He is in the national legislature he has done nothing to enhance his reputation. His famous speech "on the anti-slavery side"—is proof sufficient that his mind is not congenitally fitted for the pale cast of thought, more in the new than in the old. As to his consistency it is a point of vanity; the one he evidenced to an eminent degree, concluding the state with his non-nascent flourishes before it rises, and the other by his vote in express confirmation that he had indicated therein as his sentiment, and his constituents. This latter act should be sufficient to decide his political destiny. It should be his own confession.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a sense of abuse and invective. This will not do. Truth forces nothing from investigation, and if Mr. White be in the possession of the numerous qualities of the head and heart which his friends attribute to him, he can easier nothing than an inquiry which will elicit them without putting his enemies to the task of exposing him.

Now, Mr. Editor, is it for the friends of this gentleman to oppose and evict him. Can they point out one occasion upon which he distinguished himself otherwise than by rendering himself ridiculous? Is it vain that the question is evaded by attacks upon Judge Dewan. The people in canthus, among the claims of both gentlemen must be furnished with the facts upon which their relative claims are founded. Mr. White's friends are bound to expose and lay his pretensions before the people, and this is not to be done by the application of ill and ungentlemanly terms to his competitor, with a