The American says—"M. Livingston was in his 72d year; and the last time we saw him, not many weeks ago, he talked with all the anticipations and apparent health of a youthful sportsman, about a trouting excursion he was contemplating to Long, Island. His summons has been short and sudden for more fearful journey."

M. Livingston had filled, during his life, many important and conspicuous public stations. We remember to have heard him, forty years ago, making a speech in the House of Representatives of the United-States (of which he was then a member from the city of New-York.) against submission to the principle of impressment of American seamen.

Bubsequently to this, M. Livingston filled, for a year or two, the highly responsible office of Mayor of the city of New-York.

Not long after filling that office, he removed to New-Orleans, and engaged actively in the profession of the law, to which he was bred. Some fourteen years ago, M. L. was elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the New-Orleans district, and afterwards a Senator from the State of Louisiana, the duties of which station he continued to discharge until, on the resignation of the incumbent in 1831, he was appointed Secretary of State.

His late mission as the diplomatic representative fresh in the memory of all our readers.

But the claims of M. Livingsron to grateful recollection do not rest upon the services rendered by him in official stations. His Codes of Law and Practice, founded on justice, tempered by he monity, and bear ing throughout the impress of their author's character for enlightened philanthropy, would serve, alone, teclothe his memory with honor and respect for ages woome.

In private life, his urbanity, kindness of heart, and liberal hospitality were such as to adorn the high sections which he occupied and to add grace to his more soild acquirements.—Nat. Intelligencer.

One would have supposed that the fall of Planters hotel last year, would have caused some circumspection in creeting buildings; but the example was lost. Yesterday a building intended for a private residence in Canal street below Carondelet, was blown down by a gust of wiad; and several of the mechanics then employed in raising the walls were seriously wounded—one of whom since died.

Considering the softness of the soil on which New Orleans is built, it is astonishing that greater strengtl is not given to buildings of two or more stories; by houses are now made like Hodge's rasors, 'for sale. Landlords will soon be obliged to insert in their tentants' lease, a prohibition that no dancing shall be allowed, and no lumber nor burden in the upper stories. One would have supposed that the fall of Planter

PARCE OF A ESS.—The Sandy Hill (N. Y.) Herald says that a court of special sessions was held in that town last week, for the trial of a man named Mills charged with forcibly taking hold of Mis Breyton with the intent to kins her! He plead guilty to the charge, and was fined two whole dollars! The price may now be considered as legally established, and chesp enough, in all conscience.

The Constitution frigate, commodore Elkiot; has been at Atheus, when she was visited by the King of Greece, and some of his superior chiefs, with mark eyes and accumenance full of expression, but unfortunately dragging after a wooden leg, made her appearance in the Sixth Court, at Paris, on a recent occasion. The name of the lady was Catharine Carbe Tellier, and her dismantled aspect was owing to a shot which carried off her leg, on the Sixth of July, 1830, while in the act of defending one of the barries-des, musket in hand. Madame Barbe Tellier received the cross of July, and a pension of 1,100 france; but these rewards were insufficient to restore her what she had lost.
