J. BAYON. NEW-ORLEANS.

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 12, 1831.

MRS. PLUMER & MISS FISHER. "TITANIA. Wilt thou hear some music my of the country, its branches are issuing a circu sweet love? Bottom. I have a reasonable good lating medium in the form of small checks, pay ear for music; let us have the tongs and bones.' Mid nights dream. To the Editor of the Bee, 518,-1 observe that the dust-licking adulator of the Keans and Fishers (and of whomsoever he may deem a profitable idol) having been suffered to howl once unpunished hideousness of his note, and poured forth another ululation last night.—It is time his discord unfortunate auditors as have not "music in their souls' should be charitably prevented from exposing themselves by keeping time with his.

For howl the first-let it pass. The attributing my paragraph to the pen of another when he it to be mine—is in accordance with the notorious rectitude of the most honorable Gentleman. It is also perfectly in character with him to borrow the expressions of at other, fancy them his own—and burst forth into a vociferous lataration with the consciousness of his sarcastic severity .-- Let him keep taem, worthless as they are and, if he can do so in any case-let him make a good use of them.

As to howl the second, in which was introduced his old thema with variations, "Te Fisher laudamus" I cannot permit so exquisite a performance to languish in obscurity; it must be dragged forth to the light, how much soever it's author dread the searching of the blessed sun. As perfectly ignorant as 1 know him to be of everything relating to music (except perhaps "Bobbing Joan" -"Drops of brandy" -McLeod's real and every other sort of recling;") his ridiculous presumption in during to speak of it at all-can excite nothing but the most ineffable disgust .- But the creatures at his dirty work of borrowing again, "and has donned the tatters of that ancient cloak in which all earless canters that ever whined against the orplean science have arrayed themselves .- Thus accounted, he stands forth and prates of the thrillings of "nature," and the intricacies of art for sooth—he. whom God made incapable of the one, and education-(or rather the want of it-) of the oth-

He compares things between which there is raither similatinde nor analogy.-Who ever thought of Clara Fisher as a contatrice or musician but hi osciff. Who ever dreamed of compring Cowell to Macrealy-Tryon to Horn, Mrs. Graham to Mad. Feron-or Miss Fisher to Mrs. Piumer but my howler of the Courier? Mrs. P. is a regularly oducated scient fic musician a prima donna, and a good one. Endowed by sature with the voice and feeling, and perfect ed in execution by all the cultivation of her artshe has won golden opinious from those whose approbation is best worth having.

dies Fisher is an actiess of all work, who to France, none. by recling through the delicate elegancies of 'Crack,"—h-ping the deep-mouthed malice of the crook backed tyrent, and screeching forth the colic pangs of Gobleton Mowbray has become the favorite jut yet of the " Punch and Ju dy" portion of the theatrical world. By a pret ty personation of more judiciously chosen char acters she has become also deservedly popular with the more respectable and inshionable cir cles of society-bet never as resizer, solely o principally.

Among the "Punch and Judy," people she has won the adoration of the "Swaler." him "make maht hideous" with his currish poems to her praise as long as he will-but let lum not assail the truly maratorious-ner mum ble with his pointless fangs the r b of one, who is catifled to and will receive the protection of those who know her excellence—and think it but their duty as men to defend her, though it cost the duty as men to defend her, though it cost the

I expect a precious "volume of foul breath from my critical "howler," in reply—who has the modesty to qualify himself the "best writer in the city," but I expect it only to laugh at, or show that I am not uncharitably disposed towards him-and present him with his port ait painted by one Shakspear some

"The f of hath planted in his memory "An mmy of good words; and I do I now "A many fools that stand in better place

"Garmshed like him that for a trickey word Yours, L. T. "Defy the matter."

[COMMUNICATED.]

Mr. Later, There are none so capable of donations, as those who have most to give, This, which I on & Grant; Hyde & Goodrich: J H Field believe to be a generally received adage, has never been more fully exemplified, than in the case of the writer for the English part of the Courier, in his article of Monday last. He says, that he treats with "silent contempt" the writer over the signature of Thalia, and well may be do, according to the principle above laid down; for he has more of that same material to dispose of than any other individual in this community, if that their universally expressed opinion can be considered a proof of their conviction. With regard to the charge of falsity Thalia cannot condescend to bandy words with him of the courier. His regard for truth & honesty has been tested long since, and the result, of again laid before the public, would prove any thingbut solacing to the feelings of that writer, that is to say, if we could suppose he were not callous to feelings of eve-

Mubile May 9. It appears from the following circular, addressed to the Post Office at this place, that the Post master General has become sensible that the irregularties of the great southern mail during the past winter and spring, are attributable to other causes than the inclemency of the weather. As an act of justice, however, to the contractors letween New Orleans and Montgomery, we deem it proper to state that no part of the ceasure for the repeated failures that have taken place, applicable to them. But two or three have occurred during the entire season, and those under circumstances that homen means could (of contr.). The delinquencies are all to the cast of Montgomery.-Reg.

From the Wilmington Delaware Gazette. The following extract from the able report of the Bank Commissioners made to the Legislature of this State a few weeks since, is worthy the serious consideration of every reader. That [the U. S. Bank] institution is already asserting its dominion in almost every section of the country, its branches are issuing a circuable at places remote from that of their issue and circulation; and these checks are believed to form the greater part of the circulation of the branches in the interior of the state.

Its notes, too, enjoying a more extensive credit, in consequence of the assumed national character of the bank, and of their being receifrom his kennel—has become cuamoured of the vable for dulies and public lands in any part of the Union, without regard to the place of payment, are consequently held in circulation at should be silenced; at all events that such of his much greater distance from the place of redemption, than the notes of the local banks possbly

These circumstances operate to prevent that beautiful reflux which indicates a redundant issuc—tend to destroy the "only adequate securi ty against injurious and ruinous excesses." and improper management, to inundate the country (summer months. Apply to with irredeemable paper, or paper convertible in to specie only at remote places, and at great ex-pense. The injurious effect is the same in either case, differing only in degree.

It would probably be within the power of tha nstitution, by still further multiplying its branches, and by issues of notes or checks in the part of the Union payable in another, to sustain a circulation equal to the whole estimated currency of the United States; a large proportion of pressure, be practically irredeemable. safely it may be trusted to redeem its paper any at 30 levy street, by where when such redemption is practicable, by at 30 levy street, by THOMSON & GRANT. circulation of its paper, yet it must be remember ed that it is only in times of distress and difficulty that such redemptions are particularly valuable. And the impracticability of providing means at every office to meet the paper issued at others, as the demands of business may require has long been conceded. The power of filling up almost at the entir circulation of the country with paper in a sense, or to any extent irredecraable, and consequently subject to depreciation is one of the most seria import; and it will be fortunate indeed if it shall long be exercised, and motives of increat no

of Lake Ponchartrain, (lately become a port of entry by a law of the United States, under the denomination of port Pontchartrain,) the rail road from the city of New Orlean's passing through the centre of it, (the distance from the city is only a ten minutes ride on a locomotive carriage on the rail road,) has been lately hid off by the subscriber, and great pains tak in to as she now lays opposite the Custom-louse, being well found in every respect and cludes a front on the lake, of a mile and a half, can be sent to sea at a triffing expense for terms which is the length of its streets, on a straight line and has several public squares, market squares and promenades. The site of this town is beautiful in the extreme, and it possesses many and great advantages, as the whole of the commerce of the lakes with a great part of the coasting trade of the United States with New Orleans, must, it is believed by the best informed men, in a short time center there. Its advantages, not only as a place of commerce, but as a watering place for health and recreation to those who are desirous of retiring from the city will be very great. Its situation and the advantages it possesses, however, are so we I known that is deemed unnecessary to enlarge Jones master, coppered and copper fas- upon it, suffice it to say, that it must become a tened and having good accommodations, will part of the city of New Orleans, and be joined sail for the above port with the greatest despatch to it in a few years.
